Foreword

THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS envisages an Organization actively working to achieve international peace and security, universally striving to advance justice and human rights, and strongly committed to promoting social progress and economic development.

Embarking upon a new era, the international community has grasped an exciting new challenge. The Security Council's historic meeting in January 1992, the first ever at the level of heads of State and Government, signalled a new international commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter. The presence of the United Nations in an increasing number of areas in the world reflects this new level of determination and international commitment.

We see a new and unique opportunity for progress. Among the peoples of the world, a new global awareness is beginning to take hold. Among States, there is a new sense of purpose and a recognition that new and urgent challenges require a united and determined international response. Expectations remain high, even as the United Nations struggles to adapt old machinery to its newly expanding responsibilities.

The changed international outlook is reflected in all aspects of the work of the Organization. The new spirit of cooperation is reflected in issues of peace and security, in matters of economic and social development, in the provision of humanitarian assistance, in the field of human rights, and elsewhere. In 1992, at the "Earth Summit" in Rio de Janeiro, the largest ever gathering of world leaders adopted a new plan of action, known as "Agenda 21", for sustainable development in the twenty-first century.

The United Nations, which now comprises an international community of 184 Member States, embodies humanity's highest aspirations for peace, progress and development. As a record of United Nations activities, the 1992 Yearbook of the United Nations is an indispensable guide and resource. It provides a uniquely valuable vantage point from which to assess our collective progress towards the goals of the United Nations Charter and the horizons of the twenty-first century.

HOW TO OBTAIN VOLUMES OF THE YEARBOOK	1277

About the 1992 edition of the Yearbook

This edition of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS, like the previous volumes, is intended to provide the general public and research community with the most comprehensive and up-to-date reference tool on the activities of the United Nations. The timely publication of the 1992 edition within 1993 reflects the continuing commitment by the Department of Public Information of the United Nations to ensure that the "peoples of the United Nations" receive, within a single volume, current and detailed accounts of the dynamic political dramas and substantive work of their Organization. The efforts to restore the Yearbook to a timely annual publication imply having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials for the preparation of the required articles, as not all final documents were available at the time of writing.

Structure and scope of articles

The book is subject-oriented and the issues are treated under seven broad themes: political and security questions, regional questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations.

Various chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications. At the end of each chapter or subchapter is a list of REFERENCES, linked by numerical indicators to the text and supplying additional sources of information on the issues concerned.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1992 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text. The texts of resolutions and decisions of a purely procedural nature are not reproduced, but are summarized and their numbers highlighted in bold type.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1992, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly. The document symbols of all reports cited appear in the REFERENCES.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given, wherever available, on contributions and expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund and cover the 1992 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topic. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1992 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the United Nations system.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1992 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities by the use of the table of contents, which highlights the broad subjects and subheadings; the SUBJECT INDEX, which locates individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each topic; and the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS, which provides a numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1992 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text. The Yearbook also contains five appendices. APPENDIX I comprises a list of Member States with dates of their admission to the United Nations; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations, including the members, officers and date and place of sessions of each body; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1992; and APPENDIX V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Parts One to Six of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1992 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/47/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-seventh session, beginning with A/47/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.I/- is a document of the First Committee. A/C.6/- a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space; A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1992/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1992 sessions, beginning with E/1992/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of, the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.I/- and E/C.2/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, its Economic and Social Committees; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development. E/C.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1992/I); and one for decisions, beginning with 200 (decision 1992/200).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals. e.g. resolution 2195(LIX) of the fifty-ninth session. The Council's decisions are not numbered. ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal 'for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONE" to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.92.II.A.2; E/F/R.92.II.E.7; E.92.X.1.

I. Introduction: An opportunity regained

1. As I came into the office of Secretary-General in January 1992, the first-ever meeting of the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government took place.

2. The summit represented an unprecedented recommitment, at the highest political level, to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations. It represented the start of a new phase in the history of the Organization. The power struggle of the cold-war decades and its underlying assumption that history is the unfolding of a struggle between two competing systems permeated international relations and made the original promise of the Organization extremely difficult to fulfil. In that situation, the world envisioned in the Charter seemed to be an aspiration for a distant future. The success of the majority of Member States in keeping that vision alive throughout those difficult years merits praise and admiration.

3. With the end of the bipolar era and the opening of a new chapter in history, States see the United Nations once again as an instrument capable of maintaining international peace and security, of advancing justice and human rights, and of achieving, in the words of the Charter, "social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom". The summit was a symbol of the unique point that has been reached in world affairs and in the history of the United Nations.

4. Thus, at the outset of my tenure as Secretary-General, it is possible to sense a new stirring of hope among the nations of the world and a recognition that an immense opportunity is here to be seized. Not since the end of the Second World War have the expectations of the world's peoples depended so much upon the capacity of the United Nations for widely supported and effective action.

5. As I write this report, one great reality stands out: never before in its history has the United Nations been so action-oriented, so actively engaged and so widely expected to respond to needs both immediate and pervasive. Clearly, it is in our power to bring about a renaissance-to create a new United Nations for a new international era.

6. The transition from the old to the new United Nations is neither easy nor risk-free. We are still absorbing the lessons of the end of the cold war. The bipolar competition, which carried an ever-present threat of nuclear devastation, provided a tenuous framework for international relations. New and more enduring structures must now be built. As we look towards days filled with promise, we must also be prepared to deal with uncertainty. The departure of one set of global problems has been followed by the emergence of a multitude of others.

7. In my view, the United Nations has not confronted a time of such significance since the period of its founding in 1945. The years between 1992 and the fiftieth anniversary in 1995 may well determine the course and contribution of the Organization for the next generation or more. Improvement is a never-ending task. Yet there is an expectation, which I wish to see fulfilled, that a fundamental renewal of the United Nations will be complete by the time it marks its first half-century of existence.

8. It is in this setting that, in accordance with Article 98 of the Charter, and eight months into my tenure as Secretary-General, I submit my first annual report on the work of the Organization. In these pages I seek to give my sense of the Organization and its changing role at a time when the world community is entering largely uncharted territory. We need a new spirit of commonality, commitment and intellectual creativity to transform a period of hope into an era of fulfilment.

9. In the second section of my report, I discuss the process of change that the United Nations is undergoing as an institution; the third section deals with the challenge of international cooperation for development; and the fourth section looks at the United Nations peace-keeping operations throughout the world. Finally, I return to the dominant theme of my report, which is that the current international situation requires an Organization capable of dealing comprehensively with the economic, social, environmental and political dimensions of human development. This requires the full application of the principles of democracy within the family of nations and within our Organization. I take this as my central priority as Secretary-General.

II. The United Nations as an institution

A. Expanding responsibilities

10. Each major turning-point in the course of this century has been reflected by changes in the community of States. The founding of the United Nations confirmed the centrality of the sovereign State as the primary entity of international relations. The end of the colonial era during the mid-century decades brought many new Member States into the United Nations. Today, the transition from one international era to another is symbolized by the wave of new Member States that have now taken their seats in the General Assembly: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan—all joining the Organization in the first eight months of 1992. Most of these new States represent people who have recently gained freedom. They embody a renewal of the fundamental concept of the State by which peoples find a unity and a voice in the international community.

11. In many of these lands, cold-war constraints served to suppress deep-rooted antagonisms. Ethnic, cultural, religious and linguistic diversities were held in check by political suppression or by the threat of outside intervention and dangerous escalation. Far fewer reasons for restraint exist today. A resurgence of open rivalry and strife is now taking place. As many new States find themselves free to pursue more open forms of economic policy that promise progress, the very achievement of statehood often involves the breakdown of old and predictable patterns of economic interaction.

12. Today, no State is immune to the revolutionary changes in the international system. Old assumptions, preconceptions and structures have been swept away in a torrent of change. While change brings renewal and a fresh dynamic, it can also bring disruption and violence. The task of adjusting the institutions of international relations will have to take place in a period of tumultuous upheaval. The process of adjustment will be painful and costly, yet we have an unrivalled opportunity to breathe new life into our vocabulary and institutions.

13. Present demands on the United Nations have no precedent in its history. The presence of the Organization is being more intensely felt world wide as it helps people in danger, need or despair. The United Nations is constantly at work: from Security Council meetings and consultations on an almost continuous basis to peace-keeping operations in four continents; from good offices and quiet diplomacy to essential humanitarian missions and responses to emergencies all over the world; from major economic and social conferences, such as the Earth Summit, to technical cooperation activities in practically every developing country.

14. The turning-point in the scale and scope of United Nations activities can be discerned after the year 1987. For the first time in many years, agreement on a wide range of issues became possible, effectively marking an end to the cold war. Yet this same point also can be seen to mark the beginning of shockwaves caused by the reawakening of old conflicts and the emergence of a number of new rivalries. A consequent increase in United Nations activities can be traced quite clearly after 1987.

15. Graphic illustrations of the expanding role of the United Nations are depicted in charts at the end of section V. In reviewing the work of the Organization over the course of the past five years, one cannot avoid the feeling of looking at a qualitatively different body. Some figures speak volumes about the changing international scene.

Expanding activities of the Security Council

16. The Security Council's workload today, when compared with that of the cold-war period, reveals a dramatic increase. The extent of change can be discerned in the sheer number of scheduled activities. In all of 1987, the Council met 49 times, whereas in the first seven months of 1992 alone there were 81 official meetings. The same drastically changed pattern is reflected in the number of consultations. In 1987, there were 360 bilateral consultations; in the first seven months of 1992, 598 took place. Similarly, in 1987 there were 43 consultations of the whole, yet the first seven months of 1992 produced 119. As a consequence of such expanded activity, 14 Security Council resolutions were adopted in all of 1987.

In the first seven months of 1992, there were 46. As for presidential statements, there were 9 in 1987, while in the first seven months of 1992 alone, 43 were issued (see figures 1 and 2).

Expanding role of peace-keeping

17. Between 1948 and 1987, the United Nations established 13 peace-keeping operations. Since 1988, 13 new peace-keeping operations have been organized in addition to 5 which have continued from the earlier period. Currently, the United Nations administers 12 peace-keeping operations in various regions of the world (see figures 5 and 6).

18. Nearly 40,000 authorized military personnel are serving under United Nations command in peace-keeping operations around the world. Peace-keeping operations approved at present are estimated to cost close to $3 billion in the current 12-month period, more than four times the previous highest annual figure-and this only if no new operations are required. The nature of peace-keeping operations is evolving rapidly and requires, in addition to military personnel, substantial numbers of civilians, including specialists in electoral procedures, health, finance, engineering and administration. Their work is crucial to post-conflict peace-building.

19. The reality of those remarkable increases is revealed in raw numbers. In 1987, there were 9,666 military personnel deployed. In mid-1992, the number deployed stood at 38,144. As for police personnel deployed, in 1987 there were 35; at present, 2,461 police are deployed; in 1987 there were 877 civilians employed in peace-keeping operations; as of August 1992, the number of international and local civilian personnel reached 9,461 (see figure 4).

Expanding mandates of the Secretariat

20. The responsibilities of the Organization's administrative body have expanded in a corresponding fashion, also vividly demonstrating the remarkable change from cold-war levels of activity to those at the present time. This year, to date, 75 diplomatic missions of fact-finding, representation and good offices have been undertaken on my behalf. In response to requests from the General Assembly, 189 reports have been submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly during its recent session. In 1987, the Secretary-General received only 87 such requests.

21. On the other hand, available resources have not paralleled the rapid expansion of United Nations activities. In 1987, the number of United Nations posts financed by the regular budget was 11,409. Today, in 1992, it has decreased to 10,100, despite the enormous increase in responsibilities entrusted to the Organization. The regular budget itself has not increased significantly, in real terms, since the mid-1980s (see figure 3).

22. I welcome those increased duties and responsibilities. They signal a recognition that the United Nations is the strongest hope for a better world. I welcome the added demands they place upon the Organization and accept the challenge they pose in requiring a search for greater efficiency in the conduct of its mandated activities. Under these circumstances, I have taken and will continue to take all reasonable measures to increase the efficiency, productivity and responsiveness of the Secretariat.

B. Streamlining the Secretariat

23. An effective response to the enormous responsibilities and opportunities inherent in this era will require the fullest possible cooperation between Member States, the Secretary-General and the staff of the Organization. For my part, to meet the new challenges and adapt the Organization to the evolving demands of the times, I have initiated the process of restructuring the Secretariat. My intention is to make the most effective use of resources at my disposal through a rationalization and streamlining of structures and procedures, as well as managerial improvements. A more effective and efficient Secretariat means clearer and more direct lines of responsibility, the capacity to deploy staff and resources where they are most needed and the ability to respond flexibly to new requests and changing mandates.

24. The General Assembly has before it the outcome of the first phase of that restructuring. A number of offices have been regrouped, related functions and activities have been consolidated and the redeployment of resources has been undertaken. Unnecessary bureaucratic layers have been reduced through the elimination of several high-level posts. Lines of responsibility have been more clearly defined by concentrating the decision-making process in seven key departments at Headquarters under eight Under-Secretaries-General. The needs of each component of the Secretariat are now being re-evaluated with a view, on the one hand, to eliminating any remaining duplication and redundancy and, on the other, to reinforcing those offices and departments with expanding mandates and responsibilities.

25. A greater integration of efforts in support of development was the main objective of the first phase of the restructuring in the economic and social area. This will be pursued and further refined in the second phase. The capacity of the Secretariat to provide a timely and coordinated response to complex emergencies and the delivery of humanitarian assistance has also been consolidated and strengthened.

26. In the political sector, the purpose is to strengthen the support provided to the Secretary-General in matters related to the maintenance of international peace and security and to enable the Secretariat to respond swiftly and efficiently to the mandates of the Security Council and the General Assembly. My aim is to develop an enhanced capacity for good offices, preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, research and analysis and early warning, as well as to strengthen the planning and managerial capability of the Secretariat in peace-keeping.

27. I believe that the Secretariat will be better able to provide more effective and integrated assistance to Member States with a streamlined structure comprising components with clearly delineated responsibilities and greater managerial accountability and better aware of the essential linkages among the various mandates of the Organization.

28. While the first phase of the reorganization was focused on offices at Headquarters, I am now extending the process of reform to other parts of the Organization, with special attention to the economic and social sectors. A primary objective will be a more effective Organization-wide distribution of responsibilities and balance between functions performed at Headquarters and those carried out by the regional commissions and other United Nations organs and programmes, based on a clear understanding of our priorities and the comparable advantage of each component. I am seeking broadly representative high-level advice on these complex issues from an independent panel of experts to help me ensure that the Organization as a whole provides Governments with advice and support adapted to their changing needs.

29. I firmly believe that the focus of the United Nations must remain in the "field", where economic, social and political decisions take effect. A unified United Nations presence at the country level, would, in my view, greatly enhance the impact of the organization and facilitate inter-agency coordination in support of national action. I intend to work further towards that end. The experience of the United Nations Interim Offices, which I have asked the United Nations Development Programme and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to establish in six countries of the former Soviet Union, will be drawn upon to further this integrated approach.

30. Strengthening linkages between global strategies and operational activities in the field is a major concern. Current intergovernmental discussions on the reform of operational activities and their governance can be of great significance in this regard. It is important that the restructuring should be supportive of this objective and lead not only to a more dynamic Organization, but also contribute to greater coherence and effectiveness for the entire United Nations system.

Administrative Committee on Coordination

31. As the highest body bringing together the executive heads of all the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) must be the guiding force to promote coherence in the work of the system. The firmest foundation for effective coordination, I am convinced, is a strong commitment on the part of all concerned to an international civil service whose conditions are administered in a truly common system and which shares clear common objectives and goals.

32. As we look towards the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, with various reforms under consideration, it is essential that the current system should be made to work to the full extent of its potential. In that respect, I am sure that the specialized agencies will want to ensure that their autonomy is consistent with the overall view which the world situation demands. Impressively, this was the attitude of the Directors-General of the specialized agencies and the heads of the Bretton Woods institutions and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), who make up the membership of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, at the meeting of that Committee, held at Geneva from 8 to 10 April 1992.

33. One reason why the problem of coordination has appeared intractable is the fact that the structure was devised in 1946 at San Francisco on the basis of a deliberate decision to organize international cooperation through the combined action of the United Nations, on the one hand, and a number of autonomously functioning specialized agencies, on the other. Functional autonomy is explicitly and implicitly recognized in the agreements concluded from that time onwards between the United Nations and the existing or future specialized agencies. The system with which we are operating has remained virtually unchanged over the last 46 years.

34. The need to improve coordination has been a continuing theme in the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the governing bodies of the organizations which make up the United Nations system. The many efforts made so far have brought modest and partial improvements.

35. The executive heads of the agencies of the United Nations family all believe that a fresh look is urgently required to enable the system to meet new challenges and objectives, including the ambitious goals recently set by the Rio de Janeiro Conference with respect to sustainable development and the environment. They are fully in agreement that, in the months to come, the problem of coordination must be tackled seriously at the level of both programmes and operational activities. The goal is to ensure that the services which the system provides to Governments are coherent, that its component parts draw on one another's resources rather than duplicating them, and that there is selectivity and coordination in coverage.

36. Alongside current efforts to revitalize central intergovernmental bodies, particularly the Economic and Social Council, reforms in the functioning of the Administrative Committee on Coordination itself are in order. Intergovernmental bodies need an effective and responsive ACC in a position to bring to bear on their work the wealth of experience and the wide range of analytical and operational capabilities available throughout the system, and able to support it with well-grounded policy options. In turn, the effectiveness of ACC depends in many ways on a better coordination of national and group positions in the various governing bodies of the system and on the capacity of the United Nations intergovernmental machinery to build a strong international consensus, based on a comprehensive approach to global, regional and national security, which can guide and harness the work of the various organizations of the system.

37. As its Chairman, I intend to give close personal attention to the work of ACC. Our objectives should include: better focused inter-agency consultations; enhanced system-wide arrangements for data exchange; clear agendas for common action supported by strong analysis and wide consultations; active direct contacts among executive heads outside formal meetings; and a streamlining and continuous assessment of existing consultative mechanisms and constant adaptation of them to meet evolving needs.

38. In agreement with the members of ACC, I have commissioned a comprehensive study by a high-level consultant of the functioning of this key body with a view to developing new approaches to system-wide collaboration and ensuring that the structures of inter-agency coordination are well adapted to the challenges ahead. Further steps will be taken when I have received the report and its recommendations.

C. Reinvigorating the International Civil Service

39. The restructuring process I have initiated must be accompanied by a deeper appreciation of and respect for the International Civil Service. My efforts at organizational reform within the Secretariat will be successful only if they are accompanied by strong political support to preserve the integrity, international character and independence of the staff of the Organization. Of all the tangible and intangible resources available to the Organization and to the Secretary-General, nothing matches the worth of its staff. They must be provided conditions of employment which ensure that the service will continue to attract the best qualified personnel from all parts of the world. At this time of unprecedented responsibilities and ever-expanding mandates, the Secretariat of the United Nations is stretched thinly across a widening range of activities. The confidence of the international community in the Organization's ability to respond swiftly, effectively and impartially rests largely on the performance of its staff.

40. Since I assumed office I have been repeatedly impressed by the dedication and versatility of the United Nations staff. In the course of less than a year they have responded to many hitherto unfamiliar tasks. Many have assumed new or additional functions or volunteered for mission service at short notice, often in hardship and dangerous situations-frequently compelled to leave their families behind for extended periods. They have done so willingly, in the interests of building a new society, ensuring the fairness of an electoral process or facilitating the delivery of humanitarian assistance. At Headquarters, staff members are responding on a 24-hour basis to the constant requirements of complex operations in many time zones, servicing double or triple the number of meetings, and producing increasing volumes of documentation with shorter and shorter deadlines. They are being called upon to undertake research and provide policy options in a rapidly changing world where long-established modes of thinking and acting are being constantly questioned or redefined. Others are managing, in a situation of financial uncertainty, complex operations involving tens of thousands of military and civilian personnel in the field.

41. In any institution restructuring and change are unsettling for the staff, and that is particularly so at a time when substantially increased demands are being made on them. I am fully aware of current concerns, and I am counting on the dedicated professionalism of my staff to cope with the demands of this period of transition. I want them to grasp the inherent possibilities of the expanding role of the Organization. I see here a unique opportunity to build a stronger, more self-reliant Secretariat, where the best traditions of public service are combined with modern management practices.

42. Once the current phases of restructuring have been completed, I intend to focus on the improvement of the conditions of service, including salaries, long-term recruitment policies, grade structure and career development opportunities. I should like to build an Organization based on competitive recruitment at all levels, with career development policies which will motivate and reward staff for creativity, versatility and mobility, and the comprehensive training necessary to adjust staff skills to changing requirements. It is totally unacceptable that some staff members receive national subsidies to support their emoluments, while others are subjected to a salary freeze owing to considerations of financial restraint. I intend to avoid politicization of the Secretariat, to resist outside pressures which favour a few at the expense of the majority, and to give proper recognition to the contributions and talents of many who may not have received equal attention in the past, including women in all parts of the Organization.

43. As I have said, I am committed to eliminating unnecessary bureaucratic levels, abolishing duplication and using the human and financial resources at my disposal in the most efficient and responsible manner possible. I believe that the staff have demonstrated that they share my aspirations and are rising to the challenge to make the Organization the most effective instrument possible for peace and development.

D. Securing financial stability

44. The Organization is being restructured to serve its ends anew. Yet amid the tumult of demands placed upon it, the United Nations cannot afford to become a victim of its own popularity, suffering from a crisis of expectations rather than, as in the past, from a lack of credibility in its capacity to command consensus. In carrying out its added responsibilities, the institutional innovation and political resilience of the Organization have been as striking as its financial insecurity. To ensure that the Organization is fully prepared to respond to the new requirements of international action, the United Nations will need the unstinting financial support of its Members.

45. The programme budget of the United Nations for the current biennium was adopted by the General Assembly by consensus. The same consensus prevailed for the adoption of the previous programme budget, as well as for the acceptance of all major budgets of recent peace-keeping operations. Such broad agreement of all Member States—major and other contributors to the financing of the Organization—represents a significant and welcome change from the not too distant past. A major step forward in this regard was General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, which established a new budgetary process for the United Nations.

46. A fundamental aspect of General Assembly resolution 41/213, calling for payment in full and on time by all Member States of their assessed contributions, however, has yet to be implemented. As of September 1992, only 52 Member States had paid in full their dues to the regular budget of the United Nations. Unpaid assessed contributions totalled $908.5 million. Unpaid contributions towards peace-keeping operations stood at $844.4 million. At the end of August 1992, I was able to pay the salaries of the regular staff of this Organization only by borrowing from peace-keeping funds with available cash. Perennial shortages, the absence of reserves, and a debilitating uncertainty over the immediate future are the main characteristics of the financial situation of the United Nations.

47. When putting into effect Article 17 of the Charter, which states that the General Assembly considers and approves the budget of the Organization, Member States have an opportunity to examine in depth the budget proposals of the Secretary-General. At that time, it is their privilege and their duty to question, sometimes to criticize and, in all cases, to analyse both the basic orientation and the detailed provisions of the various budgets of the Organization. After adoption, especially when such adoption occurs by consensus, it is the obligation of Member States to pay in full and on time their assessed contributions in order to ensure the financing of all activities of the Organization which Member States themselves consider and approve. The simple reason for the present deplorable financial situation of the Organization remains the fact that a number of Member States do not meet their obligations. Figure 3 below illustrates the dimension of what has become the perennial financial plight of the United Nations.

48. There are two main areas of concern: the ability of the Organization to function over the longer term; and the immediate requirements to respond to a crisis.

49. A number of proposals are before the General Assembly to remedy the financial situation of the United Nations in all its aspects. I urge that they be acted upon.

50. To deal with the cash-flow problems caused by the exceptionally high level of unpaid contributions, as well as with the problem of inadequate working capital reserves, it is proposed that:

(a) Interest be charged on the amounts of assessed contributions that are not paid on time;

(b) Certain financial regulations of the United Nations to permit the retention of budgetary surpluses be suspended;

(c) The Working Capital Fund be increased to a level of $250 million, with endorsement of the principle that the level of the Fund should be approximately 25 per cent of the annual assessment under the regular budget;

(d) A temporary peace-keeping reserve fund be established at a level of $50 million, in order to meet initial expenses of peace-keeping operations, pending receipt of assessed contributions;

(e) The Secretary-General be authorized to borrow commercially, should other sources of cash be inadequate.

51. The establishment of a United Nations peace endowment fund, with an initial target of $1 billion, has also been proposed. The fund would be created by a combination of assessed and voluntary contributions, with the latter being sought from Governments and the private sector, as well as individuals. Once the fund reached its target level, the proceeds from the investments of its principal would be used to finance the initial costs of authorized peace-keeping operations, other conflict resolution measures and related activities.

52. In addition to those proposals, other ideas include: a levy on arms sales that could be related to maintaining an arms register by the United Nations; a levy on international air travel, which depends upon the maintenance of peace; authorization for the United Nations to borrow from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, for peace and development are interdependent; general tax exemption for contributions made to the United Nations by foundations, businesses and individuals; and changes in the formula for calculating the scale of assessments for peace-keeping operations.

53. As such ideas are debated, a stark fact remains: the financial foundations of the Organization daily grow weaker, debilitating its political will and practical capacity to undertake new and essential activities. This state of affairs must not continue. Whatever decisions are taken on financing the Organization, there is one inescapable necessity: Member States must pay their assessed contributions in full and on time. Failure to do so puts them in breach of their obligations under the Charter.

54. In those circumstances and on the assumption that Member States will be ready to finance operations for peace in a manner commensurate with their present and welcome readiness to establish them, I recommend the following:

(a) Immediate establishment of a revolving peace-keeping reserve fund of $50 million;

(b) Agreement that one third of the estimated cost of each new peace-keeping operation be appropriated by the General Assembly as soon as the Security Council decides to establish the operation; that would give the Secretary-General the necessary commitment authority and assure an adequate cash flow; the balance of the costs would be appropriated after the General Assembly approved the operation's budget;

(c) Acknowledgement by Member States that, under exceptional circumstances, political and operational considerations may make it necessary for the Secretary-General to employ his authority to place contracts without competitive bidding.

55. Member States wish the Organization to be managed with the utmost efficiency and care. I am in full accord. As the present report indicates,

I have taken important steps to streamline the Secretariat in order to avoid duplication and overlap, while increasing its productivity. Additional changes and improvements will take place. As regards the United Nations system more widely, I continue to review the situation in consultation with my colleagues in the Administrative Committee on Coordination. The question of assuring financial security to the Organization over the long term is of such importance and complexity that public awareness and support must be heightened. I have therefore asked a select group of qualified persons of high international repute to examine this entire subject and to report thereon to me. I intend to present their advice, together with my comments, for the consideration of the General Assembly, in full recognition of the special responsibility that the Assembly has, under the Charter, for financial and budgetary matters.

III. Global partnership for development

56. The end of bipolarity has released vast political energies hitherto held mostly captive to ideological rivalry. The search is now on for institution building, less confrontational approaches to global issues and more productive outlets for the utilization of human, material and technological resources. The decades of cold war had imposed the pre-eminence of political over economic considerations. With the cold war behind us there is a distinct trend towards the economics of international relations shaping its politics.

57. In this context, the United Nations as an institution is uniquely placed to press for global solutions to global problems in the economic field, whether they pertain to aid, trade, technology transfer, commodity prices or debt relief. Collectively, the international community itself is better equipped today for dealing with the recurring man-made and natural disasters which demand compelling attention as the world comes to grips with the economic consequences of the end of the cold war. It is an opportune moment to 'evolve a set of global priorities in the short, intermediate and long term. It is also a propitious time to accelerate the implementation of economic targets agreed upon in a less conducive political climate.

58. Many hopeful areas of consensus are already visible to indicate an embryonic pattern of global partnership for development. Democratic structures, popular participation and observance of human rights are being widely recognized as sources of creativity in the process of development. Above all, a new vision of development is gradually emerging. Development is increasingly becoming a people-centred process whose ultimate goal must be the improvement of the human condition. Viewed thusly, development is a global goal, since the need to strike a balance between social equity and economic growth is near universal—even more so now than earlier because both the industrialized and the developing countries are faced with equally demanding tasks: poverty alleviation for many among the former and recovery from economic stagnation for many among the latter.

59. Most industrialized countries today need to sustain their levels of development and most developing countries need to attain higher levels of development. The ecological sustainability of development further strengthens the global linkages between the economic destinies of the developed and developing countries. As will be seen in paragraphs 75 to 79, the Earth Summit, held at Rio de Janeiro in June 1992, showed that this planet simply cannot be demarcated into separate zones of immunity from and vulnerability to ecological decay. The Rio spirit provided a vision of development that can be realized only through a global partnership.

60. As in the past, the United Nations continues to be an important source for putting forward new approaches and promoting consensus. Many ideas originating at the United Nations, and considered too radical at the time, were eventually adopted as viable policy options by the international community. Examples include concessional lending through the International Development Association, “adjustment with a human face” of the United Nations Children’s Fund, negative resource transfers and debt relief, where major conceptual advances were made at the United Nations. I believe that the current concerns for humanizing development will also become an accepted basis for infusing new life into the socio-economic sectors of the work of the Organization.

61. The United Nations still has a continuing obligation to put its weight behind those who are most seriously underprivileged and to address the root causes of the economic decline which still characterizes the situation of many countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America and is fast reaching crisis proportions in several of them. It is unacceptable that absolute poverty, hunger, disease, illiteracy and hopelessness should be the lot of one fifth of the world’s population.

62. The economic situation in Africa is of particular concern. Most Africans are poorer today than they were when their countries achieved independence in the late 1950s and 1960s. The continent as a whole accounts for 32 out of the world’s 47 least developed countries. Africa is the only low-income region in the world where the number of people living in poverty is, if the current trends continue, likely to increase by the year 2000. It is also the only region of the world whose total debt equals or exceeds its economic output. The freshly witnessed momentum for political pluralism in Africa can hardly withstand a continuing assault by desertification, famine and deprivation. Poverty is infertile soil for democracy. It breeds a search for survival that cannot be held back by national frontiers. The African countries need to become masters of their economic destiny in a more supportive global framework. In that respect, I was heartened by the fact that Member States responded positively to the call for help to combat the severe drought situation in Africa. The United Nations system must do its utmost to support the implementation of the New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s aimed at the accelerated transformation, integration, diversification and growth of African economies through the internalization of the development process and the enhancement of self-reliance.

63. In Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, the central challenge before the international community is to facilitate and assist in a smooth and peaceful management of change by countries of the region. The region needs support for the building and strengthening of democratic institutions, while meeting immediate emergency needs. Provision of humanitarian assistance with the active involvement of the United Nations system will have to be followed in the months ahead by the critical tasks of reconstructing war-torn zones and resettling displaced persons. In the longer run, the success of economic reforms in those countries will depend greatly on fiscal and monetary stability, the reshaping of industrial structures and the establishment of legal and economic institutions capable of coping with the market economy so that investment and capital formation can take place.

A. An integrated approach to development

64. Political progress and economic development are inseparable: both are equally important and must be pursued simultaneously. Political stability is needed to develop effective economic policies, but when economic conditions deteriorate too much, as events not only in developing countries but also in Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States have shown, divisive political strife may take root.

65. The Charter of the United Nations assigns to the Organization the major responsibility of promoting social and economic development, and the various agencies of the United Nations system do indeed make great contributions towards this end.

66. It is essential that the United Nations continue to serve as a forum for the analysis and conceptual formulation of socio-economic problems of particular concern to the developing countries and those in transition to more open economic and political systems. It is clear that the Organization's responsibilities and commitments in the political and security area should not be carried out at the expense of its responsibilities in the development field, and neither should be subordinated to the other. It is essential that they be pursued in an integrated, mutually supporting way.

67. There has never been a more evident need for an integrated approach to:

(a) The objectives of peace, democracy and human rights, and the requirements of development;

(b) The needs of development and the protection of the environment;

(c) The economic as well as the social dimensions of development;

(d) The interrelationships among trade, finance, investment and technology;

(e) The meeting of immediate needs for emergency and humanitarian assistance and setting the conditions for long-term development.

68. The United Nations is the only institution capable of comprehensively addressing global problems in their political, humanitarian and socio-economic dimensions. In the new climate of international relations, we must not miss the opportunity to develop the necessary international consensus and policy instruments—and also to adapt United Nations structures, and interactions within the United Nations system—to promote this integrated approach. We must have the necessary vision and political will.

69. The prospects for achieving these objectives will, of course, be brighter in a more robust global economy. In this respect, the past year has not been encouraging. The success stories in some parts of the world notwithstanding, world output as a whole declined in 1991 and there were too few signs of recovery in 1992.

70. In assisting the global economy back on the path of strong recovery, the United Nations is gradually considering a more integrated approach towards development. Conceptually, such an approach recognized linkages between the economic and social dimensions of development. Functionally, it implies mutual feedback among the trade, finance, investment and technology sectors. The aim here should be to ensure that the policy advice and the services which the Organization as a whole provides to Governments are coherent; and that target-bound results replace proliferation of activity.

71. The work of the United Nations should be rooted in sound analysis and understanding of development and global trends—relying on the fact-finding capabilities of the United Nations system. It should possess an “early warning” function, able to detect threats to security and well-being from energy crises to the burden of debt, from the risk of famine to the spread of disease.

72. Since taking office, I have participated in two major United Nations conferences in the economic and social development field: the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), held at Cartagena in February 1992, and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development—the Earth Summit—held at Rio de Janeiro in June 1992. In July 1992, I addressed the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council. These gatherings have already shown a new spirit of vitality and a readiness to break fresh ground in development cooperation.

Eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

73. At the eighth session of UNCTAD, participating Governments called upon countries at all stages of development to create a new partnership for development based on the recognition of sovereign equality, mutual interest and shared responsibilities. Central to this partnership is the need for strengthened multilateral cooperation to help translate the broad commitments undertaken by countries into sustained growth in the world economy and a reactivation of development throughout the developing world. I am convinced that it is only through such a partnership that the global community can erase the scourge of poverty and deprivation, provide international support for national reform programmes, encourage efficient use of precious global resources, and address economic and social problems through coherent and mutually reinforcing policies. The eighth session of the Conference was also remarkable for the willingness shown on all sides to use the occasion of the Conference to rethink the directions of the work of the organization and to start with a fresh agenda.

74. At the global level, the interrelationships between trade and development are the central focus of the contribution of UNCTAD. In the present economic context, a greater appreciation of the linkages between trade, foreign investment, and the globalization of economic activities and corporate operations is critical. The role of the United Nations in that respect and its contribution to development and poverty alleviation will be strengthened as a result of the reoriented work programme of the Conference stemming from its eighth session.

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

75. The Earth Summit held at Rio de Janeiro in June marked an important milestone in awakening the world to the need for a development process that does not jeopardize future generations.

76. The Rio Conference achieved consensus in more than one area: first, it secured a set of agreements between Governments which marks a significant advance in international cooperation on development and environment issues. Second, it marshalled political commitment to these arrangements at the highest level and placed the issue of sustainable development at the heart of the international agenda. Third, it opened new paths for communication and cooperation between official and non-official organizations working towards developmental and environmental goals. Fourth, it led to an enormous increase in public awareness of the issues that were tackled in the process—an awareness that ought to facilitate the adoption of policies and the allocation of additional resources to fulfil the task.

77. A comprehensive and far-reaching programme for sustainable development is Agenda 21, which constitutes the centrepiece of international cooperation and coordination activities within the United Nations system for many years to come. Its role in galvanizing international cooperation will be crucial. Building on the spirit of Rio, the implementation of Agenda 21 must be seen as an investment in our future. I call upon the donor community to ensure a flow of new resources which will serve the common interests of the whole world.

78. The adoption of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which launches a process of cooperation aimed at keeping greenhouse gases in the atmosphere within safe limits, was a major achievement. I urge Governments to ratify it as soon as possible.

79. The establishment of a high-level Commission on Sustainable Development in follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development will be crucial for achieving the vital environmental and developmental goals outlined in Agenda 21.

United Nations Environment Programs

80. This year marked the culmination of a number of major efforts by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP): the strengthening of its Earthwatch Programme; the publication of the State of the Environment 1972-1992; the completion of a comprehensive assessment of desertification; and the entry into force of provisions strengthening the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer. UNEP made important contributions to the entire preparatory process for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and in particular towards the negotiation of the Convention on Biological Diversity, which was adopted at Rio.

The 1992 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council

81. New approaches to the role of the United Nations system in enhancing international cooperation for development were discussed at the July meeting of the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council. I was pleased that members of the Council viewed the objectives of securing peace, development and justice as indivisible and equally essential. They also reiterated that international development cooperation and the eradication of poverty are inextricably linked with the preservation of peace. The two must be pursued with equal vigour.

82. The Economic and Social Council has adopted significant improvements in its methods of work, including a high-level policy segment and the identification of "coordination" and "operational activities" as the main areas of concentration. I have already recommended that the Security Council invite a reinvigorated and restructured Economic and Social Council to provide reports, in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter of the United Nations, on those economic and social developments that may, unless mitigated, threaten international peace and security. I urge Governments to pursue this recommendation.

83. During the high-level segment, I also suggested that the Economic and Social Council might introduce a flexible high-level inter-sessional mechanism in order to facilitate a timely response to evolving socio-economic realities. Through such a mechanism, the Council would, in a continuing dialogue with the organizations of the system, build and expand agreement on common ends and objectives and adapt the economic and social policy agendas to changing requirements. In the framework of an integrated approach to the objectives of the United Nations, such a mechanism would enable the Council to play a central monitoring and surveillance role within the United Nations. I will urge Member States represented in the high-level inter-sessional mechanism to send experts and representatives of stature, who have access to top decision makers and can speak for their Governments on issues of global concern.

84. I fully share the emphasis placed by the Council on the need for enhanced inter-agency cooperation and, in that context, a closer and improved relationship between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions. Through such a closer relationship, the United Nations would bring to bear its overall global responsibilities in the political, humanitarian and socio-economic sphere on the work and the policies of the Bretton Woods institutions. They in turn would lend their analytical and financial support to the achievement of the overall United Nations objectives.

85. The members of the Council expressed concern about levels of official development assistance. I fully share these concerns. There is also a need to take a critical look at its modalities; it is imperative that this assistance be used for fully productive purposes. In recent years, less than one tenth of official development assistance was directed to programmes in the critical human development areas, such as basic education, primary health care, supply of safe water, family planning and nutrition.

B. Action undertaken for development

Global economic cooperation

86. Data gathering and analysis, the review of global economic trends and policies, and the provision of analytical support to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in the economic and social fields are key elements of the continuing functions of the Secretariat, as is the substantive support required by these organs and by the Secretary-General in the exercise of overview functions in relation to the work of the United Nations system as a whole. Both the research and the technical cooperation activities undertaken by the Secretariat in New York have increased over the years and have expanded to cover a growing number of areas—science and technology, natural resources, energy, the environment, the role of transnational corporations, public administration and economic management. These activities were consolidated, in the first phase of the reorganization to which I have referred in the second section of this report, in a single Department of Economic and Social Development at Headquarters.

Regional cooperation

87. The United Nations regional commissions have assumed an ever greater role in support of Member States in their respective regions over the years. In April 1992, I addressed the Economic Commission for Europe at Geneva and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Beijing. In July, I appointed a new Executive Secretary for the Economic Commission for Africa. I will chair the Executive Secretaries Meeting at Addis Ababa in December 1992, at which representatives of the regional commissions will come together. At a time when regional cooperation holds, in many different ways, the key not only to conflict resolution but also to economic and social progress, these regional entities represent more than ever an important asset for the Organization.

88. The capacity of each region to harness its collective strength with respect to trade, investment and technological opportunity will undoubtedly be increasingly essential to their development. The commissions play a major role in this process.

Making better use of their potential, for the benefit of both their respective constituencies and the Organization as a whole, will be one of my principal objectives in the forthcoming phases of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors.

Social development

89. Traditionally, United Nations social development activities have concentrated primarily on the most vulnerable groups. In the emerging trend to view the social and economic dimensions of development in a more integrated way, the Organization is also beginning to take a closer look at specific phenomena affecting social cohesion. Once again there are much larger areas of mutually shared concerns among both the developed and the developing countries than have been hitherto recognized. The degrees of social cohesion and the levels of development do not necessarily coincide.

90. The demographic trends in some developed countries indicate that, in the future, a larger number of dependent people is likely to have to be supported by a smaller workforce. Among the developing countries, the very efforts at modernization are tugging at the traditions and institutions which held the social fabric together. As societies at different levels of development cope with increasing pressures on basic social structures, like the family unit, their exposure to the media becomes an additional factor for adaptation. Issues of cultural, religious, ethnic and linguistic diversity are so closely related today to the prospects of political stability and economic advancement that the involvement of the United Nations in the area of social development is acquiring a qualitatively different nature.

91. A particular emphasis in the Organization's work over the past year has been given to promoting the full participation of women in the development process by helping devise policies that facilitate their access to the basic tools of production, credit and technology and enable them to share in the decision-making process. Efforts have been made to address the problems of discrimination and poverty affecting both rural and urban women, and to bridge the gap between equality de jure and de facto by increasing the awareness of women's legal rights. Considerable progress has been registered in developing a draft declaration on the issue of violence against women. Preparations are already under way for the Fourth World Conference on Women to be held at Beijing in 1995 to review progress made in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.

92. The integration of vulnerable groups into the mainstream of development efforts is a valid goal in itself, but it also serves as a guarantee of social peace and political stability. The promotion of respect for minority rights and the designation of 1993 as the International Year of the World's Indigenous People will create the necessary impetus to address their concerns. In addition, the United Nations is fostering awareness in developed and developing countries of the need to integrate the elderly and persons with disabilities into a productive social life.

93. One major development in the last year has been the world-wide mobilization of support for the implementation of the commitments adopted by the World Summit for Children. The Declaration endorsed by the Summit, which has now been signed by some 140 heads of State or Government, sets goals, through which we can save the lives of some 50 million children by the decade's end and improve the lives of millions more. Over 130 countries have prepared or are in the process of developing national programmes of action detailing their strategies to achieve these goals. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) is mobilizing analytical and operational capacity from a wide range of United Nations organizations in support of these efforts, which are focused on a broad range of issues, including health, basic education, nutrition, water and sanitation, and the rights of women and children. Non-governmental organizations and the private sector have also been actively involved.

94. Operational activities constitute the practical means by which the mandates of the United Nations in the economic and social fields are put into action. I am committed to using the operational capabilities of the Organization to the fullest to transform into reality our vision of equitable and sustainable development.

95. The basic strengths of the United Nations in the economic and social field lie in its neutrality, impartiality and cultural sensitivity. The focus of development assistance must be continuously adjusted to changes in the world in which it operates. The extensive field network of the United Nations, with offices in the majority of developing countries, should enable the Organization to respond flexibly and rapidly to changing national priorities. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is working across all sectors to assist developing countries in strengthening national capacities for managing all phases of the development process from formulation, design and planning of policies and programming to execution and implementation.

96. The United Nations is increasingly involved in helping to continue the process of democratization and providing technical assistance for the electoral process in a number of countries. I am particularly pleased to respond to the requests for support in this process that I am receiving from Governments. In 1992, the United Nations has provided technical assistance for elections in Albania, the Congo, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guyana, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Rwanda and Togo, and most notably in Angola. The United Nations is assisting as well in preparations for referendums planned for Eritrea and Western Sahara.

97. Population growth in developing countries is a source of deep and justified concern. Numerous United Nations agencies under the aegis of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) are engaged in the promotion of family planning and other population policies. The collaborative work of UNDP, UNICEF, the World Health Organization and UNFPA in maternal and child health care and family planning in support of national population frameworks is promising. The International Conference on Population and Development to be held in 1994 will be an important occasion to review progress made in this critical area.

98. The symbiosis between drugs and many social and political ills is evident. In addition, the ploughing back of vast proceeds from illicit drug trafficking into international money markets is having increasingly destabilizing consequences for national economies. The question of drug control requires coordinated international effort and, indeed, international legislation. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme encourages Governments to consider drug problems in their totality and also in relation to other social, economic and developmental issues. It provides Governments with guidance and technical cooperation regarding all aspects of drug control, income substitution, law enforcement, treatment and rehabilitation, legislative and institutional reform at the national, subregional and regional levels. The connection between drug trafficking and crime and approaches to crime prevention and criminal justice are reflected in a strengthened United Nations crime programme.

99. The recent increase in emergencies has served to highlight the important contribution of the World Food Programme in providing assistance to affected populations. Over the last two years, the Programme has increased its resources by 50 per cent and is moving increasingly towards integrating food aid with national development strategies. In addition to the provision of food, its logistical support has become an indispensable part of the international response to large-scale relief operations. It is coordinating, within the United Nations system, the transport and logistic efforts for the drought emergency in southern Africa.

Human rights and development

100. The protection of vulnerable groups is only one aspect of the commitment of the United Nations to human rights in general. Human rights are an essential component of sustainable development. Sustainable development is not possible without respect for human rights. Human rights are meaningless in an environment of poverty and deprivation. The Charter of the United Nations places the promotion of human rights as one of our priority objectives, along with promoting development and preserving international peace and security. Achievements to date include the development of a significant body of international standards of universal applicability based on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the two International Human Rights Covenants, as well as a wide-ranging system supervising the compliance by States with their international human rights obligations. Particularly significant has been the work of the Centre for Human Rights at Geneva.

101. However, if standards and procedures exist for normal situations, the United Nations has not been able to act effectively to bring to an end massive human rights violations. Faced with the barbaric conduct which fills the news media today, the United Nations cannot stand idle or indifferent. The long-term credibility of our Organization as a whole will depend upon the success of our response to this challenge. I suggest that we explore ways of empowering the Secretary-General and expert human rights bodies to bring massive violations of human rights to the attention of the Security Council, together with recommendations for action.

102. Preventing violations before they occur is also of primary importance. The United Nations must be able to identify situations which could degenerate into violations and to take preventive measures. For example, we are studying those elements which have in the past helped to overcome situations of tension related to minorities. Our impartial intervention based on widely accepted standards could dissipate misunderstandings and help build a framework for living together. An impressive quantity of information on human rights is already available within the United Nations system submitted by Governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals to committees, commissions, the Secretary-General or various other bodies. The challenge is now to bring this information together in a focused way so as to understand complex situations better and thus be in a position to suggest appropriate action. The World Conference on Human Rights to be held at Vienna in 1993 will be important in this regard.

103. Our long-term objective must be to achieve respect for human rights in every country. Building human rights institutions and promoting the human rights culture necessary for the functioning of such institutions is crucial here in connection with the transition of many countries to democracy. In the recent past, we have learned of the importance of strengthening respect for the rule of law and human rights in general through training, education, information and furnishing of expert advice. Many aspects of country programmes in this area could be carried out within the broader development programmes of United Nations agencies or bilateral donors. At the same time, the manifestations of concern for human rights and democracy must go hand in hand with action on such issues as debt, terms of trade and access to development assistance.

104. In our efforts to build a culture of human rights, we must not forget the importance of human rights workers and non-governmental organizations, nor the courage shown by many who risk their lives and security for the rights of others. Those who work in the field understand that development provides the foundation for human rights advances, and that, equally, human rights are the key which unlocks the creative energies of people so central to economic progress.

C. An agenda for development

105. An integrated approach to this wide range of issues, in sum an agenda for development, can only be promoted through a stronger United Nations. It has to become:

(a) An organization which views its objectives in respect of economic and social cooperation and development with the same sense of responsibility and urgency as its commitments in the political and security area;

(b) An organization where the intergovernmental bodies promote policy coherence, and where the Economic and Social Council plays the central role envisaged for it in the Charter of the United Nations;

(c) An organization which takes full advantage of the central coordinating capacity available to it on economic, social and humanitarian issues, and of the intersectoral capabilities at its disposal in the regional commissions and in the various United Nations programmes and organs;

(d) An organization whose extensive operational capabilities—available through UNDP, the World Food Programme, UNICEF and UNFPA—are fully supportive of its policy objectives, and where economic and social research and policy analysis, operational activities, humanitarian assistance and the promotion of human rights support and reinforce each other.

106. The further phases of the reorganization of United Nations Secretariat structures in the economic and social field will be geared to those objectives.

107. At the level of the United Nations system, my goal is not only to strengthen the coordination of the contributions which the various organizations of the system are in a position to make, it is also—and perhaps more importantly—to ensure that the overall capacities of the system for research and policy analysis, finance for development and technical assistance are mobilized in a mutually reinforcing, concerted way.

108. I warmly welcome the proposal to convene a world summit for social development in 1995, which has now been endorsed by the Economic and Social Council. Consultations on the preparatory process have already begun. I am confident that the summit would provide leadership at the highest level for a shared world-wide commitment to put people at the centre of development and international cooperation. It would also surely act as a source of inspiration for new ideas and proposals towards the development of a more comprehensive approach to actions of the United Nations system in the social sphere.

109. Respect for human rights is clearly important in order to maintain international peace and security and to achieve social and economic development. In turn, without development, long-term enjoyment of human rights and democracy will prove illusory, and war, of course, is the antithesis of both. Good governance, democracy, participation, an independent judiciary, the rule of law, and civil peace create conditions necessary to economic progress. Increasingly, each area of our Organization sees the relevance of human rights in its own objectives and programmes. The Vienna World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 will bring together world leaders at the highest level. We look to this conference to reaffirm the need for the full implementation of economic, social and cultural rights, together with civil and political rights, and to reaffirm the link between development and the enjoyment of all human rights.

IV. Peace endeavours

A. An overview of United Nations activities

110. With the collective security role of the United Nations impaired in the post-Second World War era by the deep divisions between the two major nuclear nations, the United Nations created a new procedure to advance the cause of peace. "Peace-keeping" entered the international vocabulary with a fairly specific meaning: the employment of troops under United Nations command in non-violent operations, with the consent of parties to a conflict, for the purpose of maintaining stability in numerous areas of tension around the world.

111. The cold war confronted the international community with a singular threat to security; now, a widely varying array of resentments, ambitions, rivalries and hatreds masked for decades have come to the fore to threaten international harmony and shared purpose.

112. The nature of peace-keeping operations has evolved rapidly in recent years. The established principles and practices of peace-keeping have responded flexibly to new demands. The most notable feature of change in dealing with regional conflicts is that peace-keeping is no longer solely a military function. It is now almost always the case that operations undertaken by the United Nations must include civilian police, electoral personnel, human rights experts, information specialists and a significant number of political advisory staff. In Asia, Europe, Africa and in the western hemisphere new forms of conflict require a comprehensive approach.

113. Just as today no two conflicts are the same, so the design of cooperation and the division of labour in the service of peace, stability and renewal after conflict must be approached with flexibility and creativity adapted to each particular situation. In this regard, regional arrangements and agencies have new contributions to make.

114. Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nation envisages a clear role for regional arrangements and agencies as part of a structure for coping with international peace and security issues. In the past, regional arrangements were created because of the absence of a universal system for collective security; thus, their activities often worked at cross-purposes with the sense of solidarity required for the effectiveness of the world Organization. The cold war crippled the proper use of Chapter VIII and indeed, in that era regional arrangements worked on occasion against resolving disputes in the manner foreseen by the Charter. But in the post-cold-war period, regional organizations can play a crucial role, if their activities are undertaken in a manner consistent with the principles of Chapter VIII.

115. This is a critical moment to advance this concept and fulfil this opportunity. In many of the instances in which the United Nations has been active during 1992, regional organizations have played a part, particularly on the peacemaking side. My aim is to see that, in any new division of labour, the United Nations retains its primacy in the maintenance of international peace and security, while its burden is lightened, and its mission reinforced and underlined by the active involvement of appropriate regional arrangements and agencies. The exact modalities of this division of labour remain to be worked out, as regional organizations, no less than the United Nations itself, redefine their missions in the post-cold-war period.

116. The range of conflict we see today is immense. To provide a sense of this, the following review, based on events as of the end of August, surveys most, but not all, peace operations under way at present as represented on the map (see figure 6). The United Nations attaches equal importance to all these conflicts; when it comes to death and misery, no one situation takes priority over another.

Cyprus

117. The intensive efforts over the past year to reach agreement on the set of ideas on an overall framework agreement on Cyprus culminated in five weeks of meetings under my auspices with the leaders of the two communities. While these talks did not achieve the goal that one could have expected, a set of ideas has now been sufficiently developed to enable the two sides to reach an overall agreement. I share the Security Council's expectation, reflected in its resolution 771(1992), that when the talks resume on 26 October 1992, the two leaders will pursue direct and uninterrupted negotiations to reach an agreement.

Ethiopia and Eritrea

118. In order to promote democracy, I have been actively engaged in efforts to provide the Government of Ethiopia with assistance in the organization of regional elections. In the same vein, and as part of transitional assistance, I have been actively engaged in consultations aiming at the provision of United Nations assistance for the conduct of the planned referendum in Eritrea. A technical team visited Eritrea in August to collect information required for the involvement of the United Nations in the referendum process. Shortly, I shall assign two officers to Asmara to assist in the initial preparations and I shall report to the General Assembly in order to obtain a mandate for further action.

Haiti

119. Following the overthrow of President Aristide in September 1991, the Organization of American States (OAS) has taken the lead in restoring democracy in Haiti. The United Nations has supported OAS in that regard, and my mandate, by General Assembly resolution 46/7 of 11 October 1991, has been to provide the Secretary-General of that Organization with the support he might seek. I accepted his proposal to include a representative of the Secretary-General in a high-level mission of OAS to Haiti, which took place from 18 to 21 August. Nothing that the mission heard in Haiti during its visit indicates that the parties are closer to agreement than before. The Secretary-General of OAS has proposed to deploy to Haiti a first group of observers. In my view, the deployment of a mission, adequately staffed, with a well-defined mandate and the ability to visit the entire country, could play a useful role. I intend to continue to cooperate with OAS and to stand ready to help in any other way to solve the Haitian crisis.

Liberia

120. My representatives and I have been in regular contact with the leadership of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and with other leaders in the region. In this connection, I support the efforts of ECOWAS towards a peaceful settlement of the Liberian situation. At its fifteenth session, held at Dakar from 27 to 29 July 1992, the heads of State and Government of ECOWAS invited the United Nations to facilitate the verification and monitoring of the electoral process. Between May and July 1992, I sent two consultants to Liberia to evaluate the availability of population data and the situation of constituency maps and to provide support to the Electoral Commission of Liberia. I am continuing with my endeavours to assist in the organization and conduct of the planned election.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

121. At the request of the Security Council, I have been endeavouring to persuade the Government of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to comply with resolutions for the purpose of establishing responsibility for the terrorist acts against Pan American flight 103 and Union de transports aériens flight 772, and contributing to the elimination of international terrorism. In the context of Security Council resolution 731(1992), I have dispatched six United Nations missions to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya: on 26 January, 24 February, 27 February, 7 April, 11 May and 20 August. On each occasion, my envoy carried a letter from me to Colonel Muammar Qaddafi. These missions so far have not produced a full and effective response to the Council requests. This effort to achieve compliance with the resolutions of the Council will continue.

The Middle East

122. Developments of the past year have had stark consequences for the Palestinian people, including the 2.6 million refugees served by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). The aftermath of the Gulf crisis has continued to cause hardship for tens of thousands of Palestinians who lost jobs and employment opportunities in Kuwait and other Arab Gulf States. Their influx into camps and towns in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Lebanon and the occupied territories has further tightened the already overstretched financial resources of UNRWA.

123. New challenges are arising from the more positive developments of the past year in the Middle East, namely, the start of substantive discussions between Israel, its Arab neighbours and the Palestinians over the framework of a peace settlement. The situation calls for a spirit of compromise and a mutual building of confidence.

Republic of Moldova

124. The conflict which erupted between the Dniester region's separatists and the Government has been at the centre of the peaceful settlement efforts of the Republic of Moldova, Romania, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. Concerned about the escalation of violence, I sent a fact-finding mission to the area at the end of June. On 21 July, an agreement was signed by the Moldovan and Russian presidents, resulting in the consolidation of a cease-fire monitored by a trilateral peace-keeping force. Following the Republic of Moldova's request for a United Nations observer mission, I sent the fact-finding mission back to the Republic of Moldova from 25 to 29 August. The mission noted that the situation in the Republic of Moldova had greatly improved; the escalation of violence has been reversed; and the parties to the conflict have been cooperating in the implementation of most of the provisions of the 21 July Agreement, including mechanisms such as the trilateral peace-keeping force. However, the prevailing conditions remain fragile and could rapidly deteriorate if negotiations towards an overall settlement do not progress more quickly.

Mozambique

125. At the invitation of the Government of Mozambique, issued in June, the United Nations is participating as an observer in the Italian-mediated talks between the Government and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana, joining France, Portugal, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America. The talks have been going on in Rome since 1990, and the recent declaration by the two parties establishing an October deadline for the cease-fire augurs well for the peace process. I have made it clear that the United Nations stands ready to support the envisaged electoral process as necessary, including the provision of electoral specialists and other relevant assistance. An electoral mission left for Mozambique on 4 September; it was followed by a technical team on 6 September. The Organization's efforts with Mozambique will be important in the region as a whole and the measures required must be approached as a comprehensive package.

Nagorno-Karabakh

126. The four-and-a-half-year-long conflict in and around Nagorno-Karabakh has left some 3,000 dead and over half a million refugees and displaced persons. Concern over the deteriorating situation and the threat to regional peace and security led to two United Nations fact-finding missions being sent to the area, from 16 to 21 March and from 21 to 28 May, in support of the efforts of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) to achieve a peaceful settlement. A third mission was dispatched from 4 to 10 July to investigate Azerbaijani claims that Armenia had used chemical weapons, but found no evidence to that effect. Preliminary peace talks in Rome, sponsored by CSCE, were attended by a United Nations observer to look at arrangements for a cease-fire.

South Africa

127. Following the Boipatong massacre in June, I discussed the situation in South Africa with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, R. F. Botha, Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi and Mr. Nelson Mandela, respectively. During the course of my official visit at the end of June to Abuja (Nigeria) and my attendance at the summit meeting of the Organization of African Unity held at Dakar (Senegal), I continued talks with these leaders and, in addition, with the representative of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, Mr. Clarence Makwetu. I urged them to resume negotiations and reported on my discussions to the Security Council.

128. On 16 July 1992, after hearing statements by the principal representatives of the above-mentioned parties, all of whom were in attendance, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 765(1992), which invited the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative. I named Mr. Cyrus R. Vance, who visited South Africa immediately after the adoption of the resolution. Also, at the request of the parties, 10 United Nations observers witnessed mass action during the week commencing 3 August 1992. The United Nations observers worked in close cooperation with the National Peace Secretariat during that week to observe mass mobilization, demonstrations and political rallies.

129. Following the adoption of Security Council resolution 772(1992) on 17 August 1992, 50 United Nations observers have been deployed in order to address effectively the areas of concern noted in my report of 7 August 1992, in coordination with the structures set up by the National Peace Accord. The international community must continue to assist the people of South Africa as a whole in their effort to bring an effective end to the violence and create conditions for negotiations leading towards a peaceful transition to a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa.

Western Sahara

130. In my efforts to reactivate the implementation of the settlement plan, I have tried to overcome the obstacles to the holding of a referendum. The differences over the criteria for eligibility to vote persist. My special representative has continued efforts to break the deadlock in which the settlement plan has found itself since the beginning of this year. Since my report on the subject of 20 August 1992, my special representative has started negotiations with the two parties concerned in order to reach an agreement on the interpretation of the criteria relating to voter eligibility. The outcome of these negotiations will be reported to the Security Council.

B. An analysis of five conflicts

131. As the preceding list indicates, involvement by the United Nations has taken many forms, depending both on the nature of the situation itself and on the role which the United Nations has been called upon to perform. We have dispatched fact-finding missions and special representatives; observer teams have been deployed under United Nations auspices; there have been peace-keeping operations involving substantial numbers of United Nations troops and police; major humanitarian operations, sometimes involving millions of refugees and displaced persons, have been organized; and an active role in peace-building has brought involvement by the United Nations in the establishment of electoral machinery and participatory processes and even, in some cases, in providing advice and assistance on the writing of constitutions. The response has involved many agencies and has been multidisciplinary. The multiplicity of responses by the United Nations has therefore been as remarkable as the number and complexity of the situations with which we have been asked to deal.

132. To illustrate more fully the current range of challenges to United Nations peace operations, five conflicts warrant analysis: Cambodia, Yugoslavia, Somalia, Angola and El Salvador. These undertakings were all initiated, or have witnessed major developments, since I took office. All involve non-State parties whose cooperation is crucial for success. Each has a special character, yet all, in one way or another, require a comprehensive approach to peace-keeping or peace-building. The integrated approach described in section III of the present report applies not only to structural and developmental matters but to peace and security issues as well. In Asia, in Europe, in Africa and in the western hemisphere, new forms of conflict are giving rise to new forms of peace operations. The operations in Cambodia, Angola, Somalia, El Salvador and the former Yugoslavia, which I wish to highlight in this section, epitomize, in my view, the Organization's role in peace-keeping in the broader sense in which it now is coming to be understood.

133. Increasingly, United Nations peace-keeping forces are being established in situations where the success of the operation depends on the cooperation of non-governmental entities or irregular groups. This presents the Organization with a whole new set of problems, such as the lack of a unified or single chain of command, and difficulty in identifying the real source of authority and in establishing direct dialogue with the real as opposed to the formal leadership of these movements, factors which in turn may result in agreements not being honoured at lower levels. Frequently, these entities or groups, lacking international recognition, encounter obstacles in obtaining participation in peace conferences or intergovernmental consultations and have thus not always been parties to the political agreements underpinning the establishment of a peace-keeping force. It is also not uncommon for the leadership of these groups to be located in geographically remote areas lacking an established liaison with the United Nations Force Commander. Their very nature may lead them in turn to a generally mistrustful view of the outside world and of the intergovernmental community in particular, and to their being less susceptible to outside influence, while their often clandestine status sometimes makes it all the more difficult to obtain, where the need arises, reliable information about the locations, number of combatants or inventories of weapons.

Cambodia

134. As a result of the Agreements on a Comprehensive Political Settlement, concluded at the Paris Conference of October 1991, the United Nations has undertaken in Cambodia one of the most ambitious and complex peace-keeping operations of its history. The mandate entrusted to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) and its estimated cost, if not its size, are indeed unprecedented. On the military side, the operation involves performing the difficult tasks of supervision, monitoring and verification of the cease-fire, the withdrawal of foreign troops, and the regrouping, cantonment, disarming and subsequent demobilization of the armed forces of the four Cambodian factions. On the civilian side, it includes innovative responsibilities, such as the control and supervision of the activities of the existing administrative structures and police forces, as well as measures to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the investigation and redress of human rights violations.

135. The United Nations has also been given, for the first time, the responsibility of organizing and conducting free and fair elections, which are scheduled to take place in late April or early May 1993. The repatriation of some 360,000 refugees and displaced persons is a critical element of the overall settlement and is being carried out as an integral part of the operation, with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees acting as the lead agency. In addition, UNTAC is responsible for the coordination of a major programme of rehabilitation assistance launched during my visit to Phnom Penh last April. In other words, the United Nations is faced with the daunting task of nurturing national reconciliation, fostering the democratic process and building peace and stability in a country ravaged by two decades of war.

136. Since the establishment of the operation by the Security Council on 28 February 1992, over 18,000 United Nations military and civilian personnel have been deployed in the country. The presence of the United Nations is now felt in all the provinces and UNTAC has begun to carry out the various aspects of its wide-ranging mandate. In that connection, it is worth noting that, as of the end of August, more than 100,000 refugees and displaced persons had been successfully repatriated.

137. The progress of the operation has, however, been hampered by the refusal of one of the Cambodian parties to implement the second phase of the cease-fire, under which the armed forces of all the factions must be regrouped, cantoned and disarmed. After a careful consideration of the situation, I instructed my special representative to initiate Phase II on schedule on 13 June, so as to maintain the momentum of the operation. I took this decision with the conviction that the international community cannot allow the impressive diplomatic efforts, and the vast human and material resources it has devoted to the pursuit of peace and reconstruction in Cambodia to be negated by the unwillingness of one party to honour its obligations. At the end of July, the Security Council took a clear position on the matter and reiterated the firm commitment of the international community to the full implementation of the Paris Agreements.

138. Some 50,000 troops belonging to three of the Cambodian factions have now been regrouped and cantoned under the supervision of UNTAC. Various initiatives have been taken by my special representative and member countries of the Paris Conference, with a view to convincing the fourth Cambodian party to join the second phase of the cease-fire and extend the necessary cooperation to UNTAC.

139. It is my earnest hope that these efforts will soon reach fruition, for time is now of the essence. We are indeed reaching the stage where any further delay in the implementation of the second phase of the cease-fire would seriously impair the ability of UNTAC to carry out its mandate in accordance with the timetable set by the Security Council and would jeopardize the whole peace process. UNTAC will continue to work closely with the parties and the Supreme National Council of Cambodia to prevent such a predicament. The Cambodian people have endured enough suffering. They must be given the opportunity to determine freely their own political destiny and to enjoy the peace, stability and well-being to which they have aspired for so long.

The former Yugoslavia

140. The upheaval in the former Yugoslavia illustrates how the closing of the cold war opened a Pandora's box of causes and conflicts that had been kept down by the ideological struggle of that era. Old disputes, ambitions and hatreds have burst forth. In the years just past, such activities would have been regarded as points of loss or gain in the calculations of the bipolar Powers. Without the cold war structure to deal with them, it is left to us to provide the approaches and ultimately the answers. Territories of the former Yugoslavia, now the theatre of military operations, have recently been recognized by the international community and have taken their place in the General Assembly of the United Nations as Member States.

141. This is, then, a conflict with an international dimension. The future shape and security of one or more Member States—indeed their very existence—has come under threat. The unfolding of the crisis in the former Yugoslavia is also being watched closely by others who, in similar conditions of instability and new confrontations, could resort to war and destruction rather than choose the road of negotiation and dialogue. They must be led to understand and accept that the only route for change is one that is legal, peaceful, and contributes to a structure of international peace and security.

142. In response to this crisis, the United Nations has undertaken an intensive and extensive array of actions. The Security Council has expressed itself through a series of resolutions. My personal envoy, Mr. Cyrus R. Vance, has undertaken missions on behalf of the international community's effort to stop the fighting and find a peaceful solution. The United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) has been established and steps have been taken to aid refugees, deliver relief supplies to people afflicted by the fighting and to provide help for the huge number of persons displaced by this conflict.

143. It must be realized that the expectations of the international community—which has been shocked by the horror of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina—continue to exceed the resources and capacity of UNPROFOR. Under these circumstances, a wider international effort in support of the requirements of the Charter of the United Nations is warranted.

144. A Conference on the former Yugoslavia was held on 26 and 27 August in London under the co-chairmanship of Prime Minister John Major, in his capacity as President of the Council of Ministers of the European Community, and myself. The purpose of the Conference is to broaden and intensify the search for a solution to the crisis in the former Yugoslavia in all its aspects. The decisions taken at the London Conference have embodied a framework within which a comprehensive settlement may be achieved through continuous and uninterrupted effort. The Conference established a Steering Committee, and appointed as co-chairmen Mr. Cyrus Vance and Lord Owen; they will direct the six working groups and prepare the basis for a general settlement. An effective mechanism has thus been provided for dealing with the problem in all its aspects. It is my earnest hope that the political will evident at London translates itself in the future into tangible actions.

Somalia

145. Somalia poses a particularly difficult challenge to the United Nations. A means must be found of responding to the urgent and overwhelming needs of a population increasingly desperate in the face of widespread hunger, the absence of national administration, almost complete destruction of basic infrastructure and acute insecurity.

146. As in the former Yugoslavia, United Nations personnel in Somalia face the problem of having to deal with irregular forces and non-governmental groups. The breakdown of central authority has brought virtually the entire population of Somalia, some 6 million people, into the conflict in one way or another. A vicious circle of insecurity and hunger is at work in Somalia. Lack of security prevents the delivery of food, while food shortages contribute significantly to the level of violence and insecurity. Meanwhile, refugees from the senseless killing and famine have exported the problem to neighbouring States. There again, our humanitarian action is necessary to save lives and preserve the resources of Somalia's neighbours.

147. The effort to break this circle brings together a comprehensive programme of action covering humanitarian relief, the consolidation of cease-fires, the reduction of organized and unorganized violence and national reconciliation. Thus, action must be comprehensive and multifaceted. There will need to be measures to demobilize regular and irregular forces and to establish law and order, initially on a local basis. And equal consideration must be given to re-integrating the militia forces into civil society. A wide range of supporting intervention will be required to help re-establish local police forces: training, uniforms, communications and other equipment as well as advisory services. The programme of action will also have to include educational and vocational training programmes to provide people eventually with alternatives to armed action for their survival.

148. In short, the task involves nothing less than the reconstruction of an entire society and nation. For this task, it is necessary to broaden the scope of United Nations military involvement beyond the limited deployment, restricted to Mogadishu, which was previously considered sufficient. For the same purpose, the United Nations is working with the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on arrangements for convening a conference on national reconciliation and unity in Somalia.

Angola

149. The peace process in Angola remains one of the most remarkable and challenging developments in Africa. For three decades, the United Nations has been deeply committed to the quest for peace and to social development in Angola and the process has now entered its most critical phase. It has been over a year since the end of the war and multiparty elections are scheduled to take place at the end of September. We have been providing the services of the United Nations peace-keeping forces and in 1992 have also begun to assist in the electoral process in an endeavour to help bring about a permanent solution. The registration of eligible voters, despite the logistical difficulties, was a remarkable achievement.

150. I appointed a special representative in February 1992 and, with the recent expansion by the Security Council of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II, more than 500 United Nations observers-electoral, police and military—are assisting in the transition. A large technical assistance project related to the electoral process, involving cost-sharing arrangements with several countries, was prepared between November 1991 and March 1992. The project began in March 1992, followed more recently by the electoral component of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II. Both are now completely operational.

151. A sizeable effort is being made to feed the tens of thousands of demobilizing troops and to provide for their vocational training, as well as to help the returning refugees. Further, the Special Relief Programme for Angola continues and bilateral assistance has been mobilized with the help of the United Nations. On the military side, the cease-fire has been maintained, although there has recently been an increase in violent incidents throughout the country. Nevertheless, with the help of the Verification Mission, the joint monitoring machinery has so far managed to keep these under control. Notwithstanding all difficulties, both sides are to be congratulated on the progress they have achieved in implementing the Peace Accords. It is important now that they cooperate more closely with each other and with the United Nations, in order to establish a climate of confidence and ensure the success of elections.

El Salvador

152. Negotiations under the aegis of the United Nations culminated successfully at the beginning of the year and I had the pleasure of participating in the signature of the final peace agreement between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional as one of my first missions away from Headquarters. The Mexico agreement and others previously signed during the two-year negotiating process constitute a blueprint for the comprehensive, positive transformation of Salvadoran society, which was required to bring about national reconciliation. A new nation equipped with reformed institutions is to emerge after a period of transition, which is likely to last through the general elections in early 1994.

153. The Organization is playing a major and unprecedented role in this transition, in verifying the implementation of all agreements, including the nationwide monitoring of respect for human rights, which had begun last year. New verification mandates relate to the separation of forces and the cease-fire, the concentration of combatants, and the reintegration of the members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional into society, as well as those relating to the reduction and reform of the armed forces and the reform of the judiciary and the electoral system. A new civilian police is being created, as a substitution for previous security bodies controlled by the armed forces. The United Nations is playing a central role in coordinating international assistance in this project. The United Nations is also overseeing action in regard to land and other economic and social issues. An ad hoc commission composed of distinguished Salvadorans appointed by my predecessor is reviewing the entire officer corps of the armed forces to make binding recommendations regarding their future on the basis of their respect for human rights, professional competence and aptitude for service under the new, peacetime criteria for the functioning of that institution. The Commission on the Truth, composed of three eminent non-Salvadorans, also designated by my predecessor, is investigating serious acts of violence that have occurred since 1980 and "whose impact on society urgently demands that the public should know the truth".

154. The implementation of this complex series of agreements was to have been carried out in accordance with an intricate calendar painstakingly negotiated by the parties. While the cease-fire is being respected, considerable problems have arisen in respect of the implementation of other agreements, to the point where adherence to the calendar, already twice revised, may be in question. The United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador is working closely with the parties to make certain that, through continued dialogue, differences can be smoothly resolved.

155. These five conflicts reveal the paradox of present-day conflict: each is unique, requiring a specific response, yet all require a comprehensive approach that takes into account the wide range of substantive issues and calls for a coordinated and multidimensional international effort.

C. Conflicts and humanitarian assistance

156. Natural disasters continue to cause massive destruction and suffering, requiring relief aid. Increasingly, however, there is a need to assist people suffering from man-made devastation and warfare. The international community has thus been called upon to respond to massive new demands involving the provision of urgent humanitarian assistance in conditions of violent civil conflict. The magnitude and complexities of the crises make these efforts especially difficult. To the extent possible, humanitarian action is being integrated with efforts to resolve the underlying causes of the crisis.

157. The difficulty of providing humanitarian assistance to the needy has nowhere been more painfully exhibited than in Somalia and the former Yugoslavia. At the onset of the crisis, my predecessor designated the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as the lead agency for providing assistance to the refugees and displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia. The role of that organization has since vastly expanded. Even after repeated attempts by the international community, assured mechanisms for providing assistance to the needy are still not available. In Somalia, where the entire social infrastructure has collapsed, relief personnel from the United Nations and other organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations have been repeatedly subject to assault. The World Food Programme has carried the principal responsibility, with its logistical support, of providing food aid and helping transport non-food aid items along with UNICEF under these difficult circumstances. Both in the case of Somalia and in the former Yugoslavia there have been instances where the provision of relief assistance was deliberately prevented, thus perpetuating the misery of innocent victims held in ransom by the parties to the conflict.

158. Humanitarian assistance must be provided regardless of whether or not there is an immediate political solution. However, the secu-

ity and protection of staff and the safe and effective delivery of relief materials are major concerns with regard to humanitarian efforts in conflict situations. Indeed, the situations in Somalia and the former Yugoslavia have demonstrated that it may not be a question of the capacity to deliver, but rather the security conditions pertaining to distribution of relief supplies, which determines whether humanitarian assistance can be provided. Volatile security situations have in several cases led to the suspension of operations. In other cases, relief operations have continued, but at considerable hazard for those involved. United Nations and other humanitarian relief workers are often exposed to great dangers and many are risking their lives on a daily basis. I greatly admire the courage and humanitarian commitment of these dedicated colleagues. I am, however, very conscious of the heavy responsibility I bear in exposing them to fatal danger. Each situation is unique, requiring caution, as well as imagination and flexibility of approach. In finding viable solutions, I shall need the full cooperation of all parties concerned.

159. In cases of man-made emergencies, essential humanitarian assistance must be accompanied by measures to address the root causes through peacemaking and peace-building efforts. Providing succour to the victims of conflict through effective relief programmes can positively assist peacemaking efforts. Corridors of peace and zones of tranquillity for relief delivery can reinforce peacemaking processes. By expanding or broadening such concepts—with the consent of the parties—momentum can be generated for political dialogue and peace efforts. In insisting on close cooperation, I see a dynamic link between peacemaking, peace-keeping and humanitarian assistance, constituting the essence of humanitarian diplomacy.

160. The mechanisms for refugee assistance that emerged in the light of experience in the post-war period have served us well. But with ever-increasing numbers of internally displaced persons—in fact exceeding the number of refugees—there is a need to bring clarity to institutional mandates. This problem has been addressed on an ad hoc basis, but it is now timely to devise a clear United Nations system-wide approach to it.

161. A well-coordinated and coherent United Nations system response to emergencies requires close cooperation among the key operational organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the regional and subregional organizations, and the non-governmental organizations, working together as a team dedicated to the achievement of a shared objective. I am making every effort to ensure that this cooperation and collaboration is achieved, both at the policy level and in the field. This requires changes in attitude, and a broad global rather than institutional approach to addressing problems of coordination. I am pleased to say that, even in this short time, considerable progress has been achieved. This is reflected in the newly established inter-agency process for carrying out needs assessment, the preparation of consolidated appeals, the mobilization of resources and follow-up.

162. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/182, the Central Emergency Revolving Fund has been established for use in “start-up” emergency operations. Its ultimate success will depend on the cooperation of the operational organizations and the international community. The former must ensure that funds advanced are replenished promptly in accordance with the established guidelines, while the response of the latter to consolidated appeals for emergency assistance will be of critical importance.

163. Disaster preparedness and mitigation constitute major objectives for the United Nations. These are also the focus of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. The cooperation and involvement of development organizations will be vital to the realization of these objectives. Indeed, enhancement of the preparedness capacity of developing countries is perhaps one of the most important elements of humanitarian response to major natural disasters.

164. The capacity of the system to provide effective and timely assistance is largely dependent upon the resources available to it. I was pleased to see that the international community responded positively to the $854 million appeal for assistance to the drought-stricken countries of southern Africa when it pledged almost $600 million at the Pledging Conference in June. In contrast, however, most operational organizations continue to face serious financial difficulties, in view of less generous responses to appeals for assistance. My appeal for emergency humanitarian assistance for Afghanistan is a case in point, where less than one third of the $180 million sought has so far been pledged. I call upon the international community to look once again with solidarity upon those less fortunate and to redouble its financial commitments for the benefit of humanitarian programmes in all parts of the world.

V. Conclusion: Democratization and development

165. The challenge to the United Nations is comprehensive: to become at last an effective collective instrument of global peace and security, to foster responsible relations within the community of States, to ensure the respect of the rights of all peoples for self-determination, to achieve international cooperation in the solution of economic, social, intellectual, ecological and humanitarian problems.

166. The old international order has been swept away by a tidal wave of democratization. Thirst for democracy has been a major cause of change, and it will continue to be a force for the construction of a better world. The United Nations must foster, through its peace-building measures, the process of democratization in situations characterized by long-standing conflicts, both within and among nations.

167. I am committed, as Secretary-General, to reform the Organization to ensure that each of its organs employs its fullest capabilities in the balanced and harmonious fashion envisioned by the Charter of the United Nations. The pace of reform must be increased if the United Nations is to keep ahead of the acceleration of history that characterizes this age. All organs of the United Nations must be accorded and play their full and proper role so that the trust of all nations and peoples will be retained and deserved.

168. In that regard, the United Nations is of particular significance to the developing countries. It is not only a forum where their voices can be heard; it also provides a means of consensus-building aimed at securing the socio-economic underpinnings of political freedom. The United Nations has a crucial responsibility to monitor economic and social trends that may become sources of political tensions, violence and repression. Stark poverty, economic deprivation, political denial, and social alienation provide little nourishment for the growth of democracy. The United Nations must push for a global partnership to promote the integration of the developing countries, and those in transition, into the world economy. International financial and developmental agencies are a powerful instrument for realizing a people-centred vision of development that goes beyond the statistics of economic performance among the industrialized and the developing countries. The promotion of universal political participation and world-wide economic recovery are not distant goals; they are the foundations of a healthy and effective movement for democracy.

169. Democracy within the family of nations means the application of its principles within the world Organization itself. I am committed to a broad dialogue between the Member States and the Secretary-General. Preserving the moral authority of the United Nations requires the fullest consultation, participation and engagement of all States, large and small, in the work of the United Nations. That in turn requires the empowerment of people in civil society, providing help where it is needed by supporting indigenous communities, non-governmental organizations, citizens' groups and the private sector.

170. Here then, in 1992, a better world is within our reach. It is the time to move forward deliberately and conscientiously towards the realization of the vast potential of this unique Organization and to bring new life to the world of the Charter.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The United Nations continued in 1992 to safeguard international peace and security. During the year, a record number of 12 peace-keeping operations were deployed in various regions of the world, with nearly 40,000 authorized military personnel serving under United Nations command.

For the first time ever, the Security Council held a summit at the level of heads of State and Government to consider its responsibility in the maintenance of international peace and security. It adopted conclusions concerning the commitment to collective security, peacemaking and peace-keeping, and disarmament, arms control and weapons of mass destruction. The Secretary-General responded to the summit with "An Agenda for Peace", outlining concepts and measures of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping, to which he added the concept of post-conflict peace-building. The Council examined "An Agenda for Peace" in detail throughout the year, as did the General Assembly at its 1992 regular session.

The Assembly's consideration of that item resulted in the adoption of resolution 47/120, which dealt with the peaceful settlement of disputes, preventive diplomacy and confidence-building measures, including fact-finding, an early-warning mechanism and humanitarian assistance.

On the basis of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, the Assembly, by resolution 47/71, adopted a series of recommendations and conclusions on peace-keeping matters, such as personnel, material and technical resources and financing.

Both the Council and the Assembly condemned the rising number of attacks against United Nations staff serving in various peace-keeping operations. The Assembly put forward a number of recommendations to help protect peace-keeping personnel better.

The Security Council, in January, urged the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to respond to requests in connection with two aerial incidents—the bombing in December 1988 of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie in southern Scotland and the crash in September 1989 of Union de transports aériens flight 772 over the Ténéré desert in the Niger—in which Libyan nationals were alleged to have been involved. In March 1992, the Council imposed an air and arms embargo against the Jamahiriya.

Maintenance of international security and strengthening of the international security system

Heads of State and Government Security Council summit

For the first time in its history, the Security Council on 31 January met at the level of heads of State and Government. The meeting, convened at the initiative of the United Kingdom in its capacity as Council President for January, was attended by 13 heads of State or Government (Austria, Belgium, Cape Verde, China, Ecuador, France, India, Japan, Morocco, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela) and 2 Foreign Ministers (Hungary and Zimbabwe) of the Council's 15 members. In a statement by the President at the conclusion of the day-long meeting, the Council asked the Secretary-General to recommend ways to strengthen and make more efficient the United Nations capacity for preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping, within the framework and provisions of the United Nations Charter. The Council also reaffirmed its commitment to the Charter's collective security system to deal with threats to peace and reverse acts of aggression.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following statements by the Secretary-General and all the Council members, the Council's action came in the form of a statement by the Council President on behalf of the members:(1)

Meeting number. SC 3046.

"The Security Council met at the Headquarters of the United Nations in New York on 31 January 1992, for the first time at the level of heads of State and Government. The members of the Council considered, within the framework of their commitment to the United Nations Charter, 'The responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security'.

"The members of the Security Council consider that their meeting is a timely recognition of the fact that there are new favourable international circumstances under which the Security Council has begun to fulfil more effectively its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security.

"A time of change

"This meeting takes place at a time of momentous change. The ending of the cold war has raised hopes for a safer, more equitable and more humane world. Rapid progress has been made, in many regions of the world, towards democracy and responsive forms of government, as well as towards achieving the purposes set out in the Charter. The completion of the dismantling of apartheid in South Africa would constitute a major contribution to these purposes and positive trends, including to the encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

"Last year, under the authority of the United Nations, the international community succeeded in enabling Kuwait to regain its sovereignty and territorial integrity, which it had lost as a result of Iraqi aggression. The resolutions adopted by the Security Council remain essential to the restoration of peace and stability in the region and must be fully implemented. At the same time the members of the Council are concerned by the humanitarian situation of the innocent civilian population of Iraq.

"The members of the Council support the Middle East peace process, facilitated by the Russian Federation and the United States, and hope that it will be brought to a successful conclusion on the basis of Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

"They welcome the role the United Nations has been able to play under the Charter in progress towards settling long-standing regional disputes, and will work for further progress towards their resolution. They applaud the valuable contribution being made by United Nations peace-keeping forces now operating in Asia, Africa, Latin America and Europe.

"The members of the Council note that United Nations peace-keeping tasks have increased and broadened considerably in recent years. Election monitoring, human rights verification and the repatriation of refugees have, in the settlement of some regional conflicts, at the request or with the agreement of the parties concerned, been integral parts of the Security Council's effort to maintain international peace and security. They welcome these developments.

"The members of the Council also recognize that change, however welcome, has brought new risks for stability and security. Some of the most acute problems result from changes to State structures. The members of the Council will encourage all efforts to help achieve peace, stability and cooperation during these changes.

"The international community therefore faces new challenges in the search for peace. All Member States expect the United Nations to play a central role at this crucial stage. The members of the Council stress the importance of strengthening and improving the United Nations to increase its effectiveness. They are determined to assume fully their responsibilities within the United Nations Organization in the framework of the Charter.

"The absence of war and military conflicts amongst States does not in itself ensure international peace and security. The non-military sources of instability in the economic, social, humanitarian and ecological fields have become threats to peace and security. The United Nations membership as a whole, working through the appropriate bodies, needs to give the highest priority to the solution of these matters.

"Commitment to collective security

"The members of the Council pledge their commitment to international law and to the United Nations Charter. All disputes between States should be peacefully resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

"The members of the Council reaffirm their commitment to the collective security system of the Charter to deal with threats to peace and to reverse acts of aggression.

"The members of the Council express their deep concern over acts of international terrorism and emphasize the need for the international community to deal effectively with all such acts.

"Peacemaking and peace-keeping

"To strengthen the effectiveness of these commitments, and in order that the Security Council should have the means to discharge its primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, the members of the Council have decided on the following approach.

"They invite the Secretary-General to prepare, for circulation to the Members of the United Nations by 1 July 1992, his analysis and recommendations on ways of strengthening and making more efficient within the framework and provisions of the Charter the capacity of the United Nations for preventive diplomacy, for peacemaking and for peace-keeping.

"The Secretary-General's analysis and recommendations could cover the role of the United Nations in identifying potential crises and areas of instability as well as the contribution to be made by regional organizations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter in helping the work of the Council. They could also cover the need for adequate resources, both material and financial. The Secretary-General might draw on lessons learned in recent United Nations peace-keeping missions to recommend ways of making more effective Secretariat planning and operations. He could also consider how greater use might be made of his good offices, and of his other functions under the United Nations Charter.

"Disarmament, arms control and weapons of mass destruction

"The members of the Council, while fully conscious of the responsibilities of other organs of the United Nations in the fields of disarmament, arms control and non-proliferation, reaffirm the crucial contribution which progress in these areas can make to the maintenance of international peace and security. They express their commitment to take concrete steps to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in these areas.

"The members of the Council underline the need for all Member States to fulfil their obligations in relation to arms control and disarmament; to prevent the proliferation in all its aspects of all weapons of mass destruction; to avoid excessive and destabilizing accumulations and transfers of arms; and to resolve peacefully in accordance with the Charter any problems concerning these matters threatening or disrupting the maintenance of regional and global stability. They emphasize the importance of the early ratification and implementation by the States concerned of all international and regional arms control arrangements, especially the START and CFE Treaties.

"The proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction constitutes a threat to international peace and security. The members of the Council commit themselves to working to prevent the spread of technology related to the research for or production of such weapons and to take appropriate action to that end.

"On nuclear proliferation, they note the importance of the decision of many countries to adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and emphasize the integral role in the implementation of that Treaty of fully effective IAEA safeguards, as well as the importance of effective export controls. The members of the Council will take appropriate measures in the case of any violations notified to them by IAEA.

"On chemical weapons, they support the efforts of the Geneva Conference with a view to reaching agreement on the conclusion, by the end of 1992, of a universal convention, including a verification regime, to prohibit chemical weapons.

"On conventional armaments, they note the General Assembly's vote in favour of a United Nations register of arms transfers as a first step, and in this connection recognize the importance of all States providing all the information called for in the General Assembly's resolution.

"In conclusion, the members of the Security Council affirm their determination to build on the initiative of their meeting in order to secure positive advances in promoting international peace and security. They agree that the United Nations Secretary-General has a crucial role to play. The members of the Council express their deep appreciation to the outgoing Secretary-General, His Excellency Mr. Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, for his outstanding contribution to the work of the United Nations, culminating in the signature of the El Salvador peace agreement. They welcome the new Secretary-General, His Excellency Dr. Boutros Boutros-Ghali, and note with satisfaction his intention to strengthen and improve the functioning of the United Nations. They pledge their full support to him, and undertake to work closely with him and his staff in fulfilment of their shared objectives, including a more efficient and effective United Nations system.

"The members of the Council agree that the world now has the best chance of achieving international peace and security since the foundation of the United Nations. They undertake to work in close cooperation with other United Nations Member States in their own efforts to achieve this, as well as to address urgently all the other problems, in particular those of economic and social development, requiring the collective response of the international community. They recognize that peace and prosperity are indivisible and that lasting peace and stability require effective international cooperation for the eradication of poverty and the promotion of a better life for all in larger freedom."

"An Agenda for Peace": preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1992,(2) the Secretary-General responded to the request of the Security Council summit in January, outlining an agenda for peace: preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping, to which he added the concept of post-conflict peace-building.

In the previous few years, the Secretary-General said, the immense ideological barrier that for decades had given rise to distrust and hostility collapsed. Even as issues between States north and south grew more acute, the improvement between States east and west afforded new possibilities to meet successfully threats to common security.

The global transition was marked by uniquely contradictory trends. Regional and continental associations of States were evolving ways to deepen cooperation and ease some of the contentious characteristics of sovereign and nationalistic rivalries. At the same time, new assertions of nationalism and sovereignty sprang up, and the cohesion of States was threatened by ethnic, religious, social, cultural or linguistic strife.

While the concept of peace was easy to grasp, that of international security was more complex, with a pattern of contradictions that had arisen. As major nuclear Powers had begun to negotiate arms reductions agreements, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction threatened to increase and conventional arms continued to be amassed in many parts of the world.

The Secretary-General emphasized that since 31 May 1990, and with the end of the cold war, there had been no vetoes in the Security Council and demands on the United Nations had surged. Its security arm had emerged as a central instrument for the prevention and resolution of conflicts and for the preservation of peace. The aims of the United Nations must be to identify at the earliest possible stage situations that could produce conflict, and to try through diplomacy to remove the sources of danger before violence resulted. Where conflict erupted, the United Nations should engage in peacemaking aimed at resolving the issues that had led to conflict, and preserve peace through peace-keeping. The Organization must stand ready to assist in peace-building in its differing contexts and, in the largest sense, to address the deepest causes of conflict: economic despair, social injustice and political oppression.

The Secretary-General defined preventive diplomacy as action to prevent disputes from arising between parties, to prevent existing disputes from escalating into conflicts, and to limit the spread of the latter when they occurred. Peacemaking was action to bring hostile parties to agreement, essentially through such peaceful means as those foreseen in Chapter VI of the Charter. Peace-keeping was the deployment of a United Nations presence in the field, with the consent of the parties concerned, normally involving United Nations military and/or police personnel and frequently civilians as well. Post-conflict peace-building was defined as action to identify and support structures which strengthened and solidified peace to avoid a relapse into conflict. Preventive diplomacy sought to resolve disputes before violence broke out; peacemaking and peace-keeping were required to halt conflicts and preserve peace once it was attained. If successful, they strengthened the opportunity for post-conflict peace-building, which could prevent the recurrence of violence among nations and peoples.

Preventive diplomacy. Preventive diplomacy could be performed by the Secretary-General personally or through senior staff or specialized agencies and programmes, by the Security Council or the General Assembly, and by regional organizations in cooperation with the United Nations. It required measures to create confidence; it needed early warning based on information gathering and fact-finding; it might also involve preventive deployment and, in some situations, demilitarized zones.

Peacemaking. Under peacemaking, the report discussed greater reliance on the International Court of Justice; amelioration through assistance; sanctions and special economic problems; use of military force; and the utilization of peace-enforcement units.

When peacemaking required the imposition of sanctions under Article 41 of the Charter, it was important that States confronted with special economic problems not only had the right to consult the Security Council under Article 50, but also had the realistic possibility of having their difficulties addressed. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council devise a set of measures involving financial institutions and other components of the United Nations system that could be put in place to insulate States from such difficulties, as a matter of equity and a means of encouraging States to cooperate with Council decisions.

Peace-keeping. Peace-keeping could rightly be called the invention of the United Nations, having brought stability to numerous areas of conflict around the world. In view of the volume and unpredictability of peace-keeping contributions, the Secretary-General strongly supported proposals in some States that their peace-keeping contributions be financed from defence, rather than foreign affairs, budgets. He recommended such action to others and urged the General Assembly to encourage that approach. He again requested all States to indicate what military personnel they were in principle prepared to make available. He recommended that arrangements be reviewed and improved for training civilian, police or military peace-keeping personnel and that the strength and capability of military staff serving in the Secretariat be augmented to meet new and heavier requirements.

Post-conflict peace-building. In the aftermath of international war, post-conflict peace-building might take the form of concrete cooperative projects linking two or more countries in a mutually beneficial undertaking. That could not only contribute to economic and social development but also enhance the confidence fundamental to peace. The concept of peace-building as the construction of a new environment should be viewed as the counterpart of preventive diplomacy, which sought to avoid the breakdown of peaceful conditions. Preventive diplomacy was to avoid a crisis; post-conflict peace-building was to prevent a recurrence.

Cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations. Regional arrangements or organizations in many cases possessed a potential that should be utilized in preventive diplomacy, peace-keeping, peacemaking and post-conflict confidence-building. Under the Charter, the Security Council had and would continue to have primary responsibility for maintaining international security, but regional action as a matter of decentralization, delegation and cooperation with United Nations efforts could contribute to a deeper sense of participation, consensus and democratization in international affairs.

Agenda for peace. Concluding with "An Agenda for Peace", the Secretary-General stressed that the Security Council must never again lose the collegiality that was essential to its proper functioning. A genuine sense of consensus deriving from shared interests must govern its work, not the threat of the veto or the power of any group of nations. The Secretary-General recommended that the heads of State and Government of members of the Council meet in alternate years, just before the start of the general debate in the General Assembly, and that the Council meet at the Foreign Minister level whenever the situation warranted such meetings.

The Secretary-General cautioned against unilateralism and isolationism and stressed that democracy required respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms as set forth in the Charter. He stated that democracy within the family of nations required fullest consultation, participation and engagement of all States in the work of the Organization and that the principles of the Charter must be applied consistently, not selectively. Swift and impartial reaction of the Organization presupposed an efficient and independent international civil service and an assured financial basis.

In addition, involvement of non-governmental organizations, academic institutions, parliamentarians, business and professional communities, the media and the public at large would help strengthen the Organization's ability to reflect the concerns of its widest constituency.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June-December)

The Security Council took note of the Secretary-General's agenda for peace on 30 June. Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members:(3)

Meeting number. SC 3089.

"The Security Council has noted with interest and appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on ways of strengthening and making more efficient within the framework and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations the capacity of the United Nations for preventive diplomacy, for peacemaking and for peace-keeping, prepared pursuant to the statement adopted on 31 January 1992 at the conclusion of the meeting held for the first time by the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government. It is grateful to the Secretary-General for his report, which is a comprehensive reflection on the ongoing process of strengthening the Organization. In this connection, the Council welcomes the efforts made by the Secretary-General.

"In reading the report, the Security Council has noted a set of interesting proposals addressed to the various organs of the United Nations and to Member States and regional organizations. The Council therefore trusts that all organs and entities, in particular the General Assembly, will devote particular attention to the report and will study and evaluate the elements of the report that concern them.

"Within the scope of its competence, the Security Council will, for its part, examine in depth and with due priority the recommendations of the Secretary-General.

"The Security Council also takes this opportunity to reiterate its readiness to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the strengthening of the Organization in accordance with the provisions of the Charter."

In a statement issued on 25 September following a meeting with the Secretary-General,(4) the live permanent members of the Council addressed a number of regional conflicts and noted with appreciation the Secretary-General's agenda for peace.

The Council began its in-depth examination of "An Agenda for Peace" on 29 October. Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members:(5)

Meeting number. SC 3128.

"Pursuant to the President's statement of 30 June 1992, the Security Council has begun to examine the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace'.

"This examination of 'An Agenda for Peace' by the Security Council will be coordinated with the discussions carried out in the General Assembly. The Council welcomes in this regard the contact already established between the Presidents of the two organs and invites its President to continue and intensify such contacts.

"The Security Council intends to examine the proposals of the Secretary-General which concern it or are addressed to it. For this purpose, the members of the Council have decided to hold a meeting at least once a month on the report, such meetings being prepared for, as necessary, by a working group.

"One objective of this examination is to arrive at conclusions which would be considered during a special meeting of the Security Council. The Council will determine the date of this meeting, bearing in mind the progress of the work at the present session of the General Assembly, but it hopes to hold the meeting by next spring at the latest.

"The Security Council has followed with close interest the views expressed by Member States in the General Assembly during the general debate as well as during the discussion on item 10 of the agenda of the General Assembly. It has also noted the report of the special session of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations. It has now identified the Secretary-General's proposals which concern it or are addressed to it.

"Without prejudice to the further examination of other proposals of the Secretary-General, and taking into account the greatly increased number and complexity of peace-keeping operations authorized by the Council during recent months, the Council believes that two suggestions contained in 'An Agenda for Peace' should be considered at this moment:

"The Security Council, in accordance with the recommendations contained in paragraph 51 of the Secretary-General's report, encourages Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their willingness to provide forces or capabilities to the United Nations for peace-keeping operations and the type of units or capabilities that might be available at short notice, subject to overriding national defence requirements and the approval of the Governments providing them. It further encourages the Secretariat and those Member States which have indicated such willingness to enter into direct dialogue so as to enable the Secretary-General to know with greater precision what forces or capabilities might be made available to the United Nations for particular peace-keeping operations, and on what time-scale;

"The Security Council shares the view of the Secretary-General in paragraph 52 of his report concerning the need for an augmentation of the strength and capability of military staff serving in the Secretariat and of civilian staff dealing more generally with peace-keeping matters in the Secretariat. The Council suggests to the Secretary-General that he report to it, as well as to the General Assembly, on this subject as soon as possible. The Secretary-General might consider in his report the establishment in the Secretariat of an enhanced peace-keeping planning staff and an operations centre in order to deal with the growing complexity of initial planning and control of peace-keeping operations in the field. The Council further suggests to Member States that they consider making available to the Secretariat appropriately experienced military or civilian staff, for a fixed period of time, to help with work on peace-keeping operations.

"Moreover, the Security Council intends to study those paragraphs which are addressed to it, including paragraph 41 concerning the special economic problems which may concern other States when sanctions are imposed on a State, paragraphs 64 and 65 concerning the role of regional organizations, and paragraph 25 concerning resort by the United Nations to fact-finding.”

Following consultations, the President made a statement on 30 November on behalf of the Council members:(6)

“The members of the Security Council had continued the examination of the Secretary-General’s report entitled ‘An Agenda for Peace’.

“The members of the Security Council welcome and support the proposals in paragraph 25 of ‘An Agenda for Peace’ on fact-finding. They are of the view that an increased resort to fact-finding as a tool of preventive diplomacy, in accordance with the Charter and General Assembly Declaration on Fact-finding (resolution 46/59), particularly its guidelines, can result in the best possible understanding of the objective facts of a situation which will enable the Secretary-General to meet his responsibilities under Article 99 of the Charter and facilitate Security Council deliberations. They agree that various forms of fact-finding can be employed according to the requirements of a situation, and that a request by a State for the dispatch of a fact-finding mission to its territory should be considered without undue delay. They encourage all Member States in a position to do so to provide the Secretary-General with the detailed information needed on issues of concern, so as to facilitate effective preventive diplomacy.

“The members of the Security Council, being aware of the increased responsibilities of the United Nations in the area of preventive diplomacy, invite the Secretary-General to consider the appropriate measures necessary to strengthen the capacity of the Secretariat for information gathering and in-depth analysis. They also invite the Member States and the Secretary-General to consider the secondment of experts to help in this regard. They urge the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to ensure the availability at short notice of eminent persons who might share, with senior officials of the Secretariat, the burden of fact-finding missions. They note the positive role of regional organizations and arrangements in fact-finding within their areas of competence and welcome its intensification and close coordination with fact-finding efforts by the United Nations.

“Bearing in mind the Declaration on Fact-finding and the Secretary-General’s recommendations in ‘An Agenda for Peace’, the members of the Security Council for their part will facilitate and encourage every appropriate use of fact-finding missions on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

“In this context, the members of the Security Council note and endorse the Secretary-General’s view that in some cases a fact-finding mission can help defuse a dispute or situation, indicating to those concerned that the United Nations and in particular the Security Council is actively seized of the matter as a present or potential threat to international peace and security. Such action in the early stages of a potential dispute can be particularly effective. They welcome the Secretary-General’s readiness to make full use of his powers under Article 99 of the Charter to draw the attention of the Security Council to any matter which in his opinion may threaten international peace and security. They note with satisfaction the recent greater use of fact-finding missions, as exemplified by the missions to Moldova, Nagorno-Karabakh, Georgia, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan.

“The members of the Security Council intend to continue their work on the Secretary-General’s report as indicated in the President’s statement of 29 October 1992.”

The Security Council again considered “An Agenda for Peace” on 30 December. Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members:(7)

Meeting number. SC 3154.

“In pursuance of the President’s statement of 29 October 1992 in connection with the Secretary-General’s report entitled ‘An Agenda for Peace’, according to which ‘the Security Council intends to study those paragraphs which are addressed to it, including paragraph 41 concerning the special economic problems which may concern other States when sanctions are imposed on a State’, the Security Council examined the question of special economic problems of States as a result of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter.

“The Security Council shares the observation made by the Secretary-General in paragraph 41 of his report that when such sanctions are imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter, it is important that States confronted with special economic problems have the right to consult the Security Council regarding such problems, as provided in Article 50. The Council agrees that appropriate consideration should be given to their situation.

“The Security Council notes the Secretary-General’s recommendation that the Council devise a set of measures, involving the financial institutions and other components of the United Nations system, that can be put in place to insulate States from such difficulties.

“The Security Council, while noting that this matter is being considered in other forums of the United Nations, expresses its determination to consider this matter further and invites the Secretary-General to consult the heads of the international financial institutions, other components of the United Nations system and Member States of the United Nations, and to report to the Security Council as early as possible.

“The Security Council intends to continue its work on the Secretary-General’s report as indicated in the President’s statement of 29 October 1992.”

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly on 18 December adopted resolution 47/120 without vote.

An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters

The General Assembly,

Recalling the statement of 31 January 1992, adopted at the conclusion of the first meeting held by the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government, in which the Secretary-General was invited to prepare, for circulation to the States Members of the United Nations by 1 July 1992, an "analysis and recommendations on ways of strengthening and making more efficient within the framework and provisions of the Charter the capacity of the United Nations for preventive diplomacy, for peacemaking and for peace-keeping",

Welcoming the timely presentation of the forward-looking report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in response to the summit meeting of the Security Council, as a set of recommendations that deserve close examination by the international community,

Recognizing the need to maintain the increased interest in and momentum for revitalization of the Organization to meet the challenges of the new phase of international relations in order to fulfil the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Stressing that the implementation of the concepts and proposals contained in "An Agenda for Peace" should be in strict conformity with the provisions of the Charter, in particular its purposes and principles,

Recalling also its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, the annex to which contains the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and its resolution 43/51 of 5 December 1988, the annex to which contains the Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field,

Emphasizing that international peace and security must be seen in an integrated manner and that the efforts of the Organization to build peace, justice, stability and security must encompass not only military matters, but also, through its various organs within their respective areas of competence, relevant political, economic, social, humanitarian, environmental and developmental aspects,

Stressing the need for international action to strengthen the socio-economic development of Member States as one of the means of enhancing international peace and security and, in this regard, recognizing the need to complement "An Agenda for Peace" with "An Agenda for Development",

Acknowledging that timely application of preventive diplomacy is the most desirable and efficient means of easing tensions before they result in conflict,

Recognizing that preventive diplomacy may require such measures as confidence-building, early-warning, fact-finding and other measures in which consultations with Member States, discretion, confidentiality, objectivity and transparency should be combined as appropriate,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations in the field of preventive diplomacy, through, inter alia, allocating appropriate staff resources and financial resources for preventive diplomacy, in order to assist Member States to resolve their differences in a peaceful manner,

Reaffirming the fundamental importance of a sound and secure financial basis for the United Nations in order, inter alia, to enable the Organization to play an effective role in preventive diplomacy,

Emphasizing the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements and organizations for preventive diplomacy within their respective areas of competence,

Emphasizing also that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States is crucial to any common endeavour to promote international peace and security,

Recalling further other resolutions adopted by the Assembly during its forty-seventh session concerning various aspects of "An Agenda for Peace",

Emphasizing the need for all organs and bodies of the United Nations, as appropriate, to intensify their efforts to strengthen the role of the Organization in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building and to continue the discussion of the report of the Secretary-General with a view to adequate action being taken,

Stressing the need for adequate protection of personnel involved in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and humanitarian operations, in accordance with relevant norms and principles of international law,

Noting the definition of preventive diplomacy provided by the Secretary-General in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace",

I

Peaceful settlement of disputes

Emphasizing the need to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Invites Member States to seek solutions to their disputes at an early stage through such peaceful means as provided for in the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Decides to explore ways and means for a full utilization of the provisions of the Charter whereby the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which is deemed likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations;

3. Encourages the Security Council to utilize fully the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter on procedures and methods for peaceful settlement of disputes and to call upon the parties concerned to settle their disputes peacefully;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General and the Security Council to engage at an early stage in close and continuous consultation in order to develop, on a case-by-case basis, an appropriate strategy for the peaceful settlement of specific disputes, including the participation of other organs, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, as well as regional arrangements and organizations as appropriate, and invites the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on such consultations;

II

Early-warning, collection of information and analysis

Recognizing the need to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations for early-warning, collection of information and analysis,

1. Encourages the Secretary-General to set up an adequate early-warning mechanism for situations which are likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, in close cooperation with Member States and United Nations agencies, as well as regional arrangements and organizations, as appropriate, making use of the information available to these organizations and/or received from Member States, and to keep Member States informed of the mechanism established;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity of the Secretariat for the collection of information and analysis to serve better the early-warning needs of the Organization and, to that end, encourages the Secretary-General to ensure that staff members receive proper training in all aspects of preventive diplomacy, including the collection and analysis of information;

3. Invites Member States and regional arrangements and organizations to provide timely early-warning information, on a confidential basis when appropriate, to the Secretary-General;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue, in accordance with Article 99 of the Charter of the United Nations, to bring to the attention of the Security Council, at his discretion, any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security, together with his recommendations thereon;

5. Invites Member States to support the efforts of the Secretary-General in preventive diplomacy, including by providing assistance he may require;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, to notify the General Assembly, as appropriate, of any situation which is potentially dangerous or might lead to international friction or dispute;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of Member States concerned, at an early stage, any matter which in his opinion may adversely affect relations between States;

III

Fact-finding

Recalling the statements made by the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council, on 29 October and 30 November 1992, and its own resolutions 1967(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, 2104(XX) of 20 December 1965, 2182(XXI) of 12 December 1966 and 2329(XXII) of 18 December 1967 on the question of methods of fact-finding,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 46/59 of 9 December 1991, the annex to which contains the Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security, particularly its guidelines;

2. Recommends to the Secretary-General that he should continue to utilize the services of eminent and qualified experts in fact-finding and other missions, selected on as wide a geographical basis as possible, taking into account candidates with the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity;

3. Invites Member States to submit names of suitable individuals whom the Secretary-General might wish to use at his discretion in fact-finding and other missions;

4. Recommends that a request by a Member State for the dispatch of a fact-finding mission to its territory should be considered expeditiously;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to dispatch fact-finding and other missions in a timely manner in order to assist him in the proper discharge of his functions under the Charter of the United Nations;

IV

Confidence-building measures

Recognizing that the application of appropriate confidence-building measures, consistent with national security needs, would promote mutual confidence and good faith, which are essential to reducing the likelihood of conflicts between States and enhancing prospects for the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Recalling its resolutions 43/78 H of 7 December 1988 and 45/62 F of 4 December 1990, as well as its resolution 47/54 D of 9 December 1992 on the implementation of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures,

Recognizing that confidence-building measures may encompass both military and non-military matters, including political, economic and social matters,

Stressing the need to encourage Member States, and regional arrangements and organizations where relevant and in a manner consistent with their mandates, to play a leading role in developing confidence-building measures appropriate to the region concerned and to coordinate their efforts in this regard with the United Nations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Invites Member States and regional arrangements and organizations to inform the Secretary-General through appropriate channels about their experiences in confidence-building measures in their respective regions;

2. Supports the intention of the Secretary-General to consult on a regular basis with Member States and regional arrangements and organizations on further confidence-building measures;

3. Encourages the Secretary-General to consult with parties to existing or potential disputes, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, and with other interested Member States and regional arrangements and organizations, as appropriate, on the possibility of initiating confidence-building measures in their respective regions and to keep Member States informed thereon in consultation with the parties concerned;

4. Commends such confidence-building measures as the promotion of openness and restraint in the production, procurement and deployment of armaments, the systematic exchange of military missions, the possible formation of regional risk reduction centres, arrangements for the free flow of information and the monitoring of regional arms control and disarmament agreements;

Humanitarian assistance

Recalling its resolution 45/100 of 14 December 1990 on humanitarian assistance to victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations and its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Welcoming the increasing role of the United Nations system in providing humanitarian assistance,

Noting that, in certain circumstances, programmes of impartially-provided humanitarian assistance and peace-keeping operations can be mutually supportive,

1. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen the capacity of the Organization in order to ensure coordinated planning and execution of humanitarian assistance programmes, drawing upon the specialized skills and resources of all parts of the United Nations system, as well as those of non-governmental organizations, as appropriate;

2. Also encourages the Secretary-General to continue to address the question of coordination, when necessary, between humanitarian assistance programmes and peace-keeping or related operations, preserving the non-political, neutral and impartial character of humanitarian action;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of appropriate organs of the United Nations any situation requiring urgent humanitarian assistance in order to prevent its deterioration, which might lead to international friction or dispute;

V I

Resources and logistical aspects of preventive diplomacy

Recognizing the need for adequate resources in support of the United Nations efforts in preventive diplomacy,

1. Invites Member States to provide political and practical support to the Secretary-General in his efforts for the peaceful settlement of disputes, including early-warning, fact-finding, good offices and mediation;

2. Also invites Member States, on a voluntary basis, to provide the Secretary-General with any necessary additional expertise and logistical resources that he might require for the successful execution of these functions of increasing importance;

V II

The role of the General Assembly in preventive diplomacy

Emphasizing that, together with the Security Council and the Secretary-General, it has an important role in preventive diplomacy,

Recognizing that, having an important role in preventive diplomacy, it has to work in close cooperation and coordination with the Security Council and the Secretary-General in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and consistent with their respective mandates and responsibilities,

Decides to explore ways and means to support the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace" to promote the utilization of the General Assembly, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, by Member States so as to bring greater influence to bear in pre-empting or containing any situation which is potentially dangerous or might lead to international friction or dispute;

V III

Future work

Bearing in mind that owing to time constraints it could not examine all the proposals contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace",

1. Decides to continue early in 1993 its examination of other recommendations on preventive diplomacy and related matters contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", including preventive deployment, demilitarized zones and the International Court of Justice, as well as implementation of the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, in conformity with the Charter and taking into account the relevant developments and practices in the competent organs of the United Nations;

2. Also decides to discuss and consider other proposals contained in "An Agenda for Peace".

General Assembly resolution 47/120

18 December 1992 Meeting 91 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/47/L.50); agenda item 10.

Maintenance of international security

On 9 December, following the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/60 B by recorded vote.

Maintenance of international security

The General Assembly,

Noting that, with the end of the era of the cold war and of bipolar confrontation, the United Nations faces new tasks in the areas of maintaining international peace and security and achieving social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Aspiring to promote a greater convergence of views among Member States as to the priorities of the United Nations in shaping a more stable international order,

Noting with appreciation that the Secretary-General submitted ideas and proposals in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular dealing with the strengthening and enhancement of the effectiveness, within the framework and in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, of the United Nations potential in the area of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building,

Noting also the ideas and proposals of the Secretary-General contained in his report entitled "New dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold war era",

1. Decides to continue consideration of the question of maintenance of international security, taking into account new international realities and new tasks before the United Nations in the area of strengthening collective efforts to maintain international peace and security;

2. Invites all Member States to provide their views on further consideration of the question of maintenance of international security, taking into account, inter alia, appropriate provisions of the reports of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace" and "New dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold war era", and requests the Secretary-General to submit a relevant report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "Maintenance of international security".

9 December 1992 Meeting 81 79-0-84 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/47/699) by recorded vote (56-0-67), 20 November (meeting 37); 31-nation draft (A/C.1/47/L.47/Rev.1); agenda item 69.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 1st Committee 3-30, 37; plenary 81.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Belarus, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominica, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Micronesia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Slovenia, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Zaire.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Introducing the text, the Russian Federation said its main thrust was to give impetus to the First Committee's consideration of the item relating to security in the light of the new tasks facing the United Nations in an era when cold war and bipolar confrontation had ended. Another reason for its importance was the decision to merge consideration in the First Committee of the items on disarmament and international security.

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

In December 1992, the General Assembly reaffirmed the validity of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security(8) and urged States to take further immediate steps to promote and use the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter.

The Secretary-General, in October 1992,(9) transmitted replies from two Member States to a 1991 Assembly invitation(10) to submit their views on the implementation of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, in accordance with the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/60 A by recorded vote.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2734(XXV) of 16 December 1970 on the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, as well as all its resolutions on the review of the implementation of the Declaration,

Bearing in mind the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,

Expressing its firm belief that disarmament, the relaxation of international tension, respect for international law and for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, especially the principles of the sovereign equality of States and the peaceful settlement of disputes and the injunction to refrain from the use or threat of use of force in international relations, respect for the right to self-determination and national independence, economic and social development, the eradication of all forms of domination and respect for basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the need for preserving the environment, are closely related and provide the basis for an enduring and stable universal peace and security,

Welcoming the recent positive changes in the international landscape, characterized by the end of the cold war, the relaxation of tensions on the global level and the emergence of a new spirit governing relations among nations,

Welcoming also the wide-ranging dialogue between the Russian Federation and the United States of America, with its positive effects on world developments, and expressing its hope that these developments will lead to the renunciation of strategic doctrines based on the use of nuclear weapons and to the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, thereby making a real contribution to global security,

Expressing the hope that the positive trends that started in Europe, where a new system of security and cooperation is being built through the process of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, will continue and will encourage similar trends in other parts of the world,

Expressing at the same time its serious concern over the persistence of tensions and conflicts and the emergence of new threats to international peace and security and its support for all efforts towards a peaceful and just resolution of hotbeds of crisis in the world, including further military disengagement,

Stressing the need for the strengthening of international security through disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament leading to the elimination of all nuclear weapons, and restraints on the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race,

Stressing also the growing importance of the relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

Recognizing that peace and security are dependent on socio-economic factors as well as on political and military elements,

Also recognizing that the right and responsibility for making the world safe for all should be shared by all,

Stressing further that the United Nations is the fundamental instrument for regulating international relations and resolving global problems for the maintenance and effective promotion of peace and security, disarmament and social and economic development,

1. Reaffirms the continuing validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Reaffirms also that all States must respect, in their international relations, the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Emphasizes that, until an enduring and stable universal peace based on a comprehensive, viable and readily implementable structure of international security is established, peace, the achievement of disarmament and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means continue to be the first and foremost task of the international community;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from the use or threat of use of force, aggression, intervention, interference, all forms of terrorism, suppression, foreign occupation or measures of political and economic coercion that violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

5. Recognizes, among other things, the validity of the concepts of confidence-building measures, particularly in regions of high tension, balanced security at lower levels of armaments and armed forces, as well as the elimination of destabilizing military capabilities and imbalances;

6. Calls for regional dialogues, where appropriate, to promote security and economic, environmental, social and cultural cooperation, taking into account the particular characteristics of each region;

7. Stresses the importance of global and regional approaches to disarmament, which should be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

8. Reaffirms the fundamental role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security, and expresses the hope that it will continue to address all threats to international peace and security in accordance with the Charter;

9. Urges all States to take further immediate steps aimed at promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter, as well as halting effectively the arms race with the aim of achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

10. Stresses also the urgent need for more balanced development of the world economy and for redressing the current asymmetry and inequality in economic and technological development between the developed and developing countries, which are basic prerequisites for the strengthening of international peace and security;

11. Considers that respect for and promotion of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the recognition of the inalienable right of peoples to self-determination and independence, will strengthen international peace and security, and reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under foreign occupation and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

12. Reaffirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity, and stresses its belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of this goal;

13. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, particularly in the light of recent positive developments in the global political and security climate, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the basis of the replies received;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Science and peace

The General Assembly's Special Political Committee considered the question of science and peace on 20 October 1992,(11) in accordance with a 1990 Assembly resolution.(12) Acting on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly, by decision 47/423 of 14 December 1992, deferred consideration of the item until its 1993 session.

Introducing the draft decision in Committee, Costa Rica, on behalf of the sponsors, said it would prefer that consideration of the item be postponed to comply with the Secretary-General's guidelines on rationalization of work, since the item could be combined with that on education and information for disarmament which was to be considered a new in 1993. In addition, a greater number of pertinent reports would be available following the June 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and subsequent adoption of Agenda 21 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

Previously, the Assembly had adopted a resolution on the topic in 1988,(13) in the framework of follow-up activities to the 1986 International Year of Peace.(14)

Review of peace-keeping operations

In 1992, a record number of 12 United Nations peace-keeping operations were under way. In addition to a significant increase in the number of such operations, the scope of the Organization's peace-keeping responsibilities expanded from monitoring cease-fires and supervising elections to providing humanitarian relief and assistance.

In mid-1992, nearly 40,000 military personnel were serving under United Nations command, as were 9,461 international and local civilian personnel. Peace-keeping operations approved were estimated to cost in excess of $2.5 billion in 1992.

Peace-keeping forces continued in 1992 to operate in Cyprus, Lebanon and the Golan Heights between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, as did two long-standing military observer missions, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in the Middle East (see PART TWO, Chapter V) and the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan. In addition, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II), expanded in 1991, was active to verify the peace accords between the Angolan Government and the guerrilla forces in the country (see PART TWO, Chapter I), and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, established in 1991, continued to verify the cease-fire and cessation of hostilities there (see PART FOUR, Chapter I). Also established in 1991 and active in 1992 were the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

In February 1992, the Security Council created the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), which was deployed in March on the territory of the former Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). Peace-keeping forces started operating in March under the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) (see PART TWO, Chapter III), preceded by the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia, and in April with the United Nations Operation in Somalia (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

In 1992, the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations held six meetings in New York between 24 April and 1 June.⁽¹⁾ To examine the substance of its mandate, it established an open-ended working group, which submitted conclusions and recommendations for the Committee's approval and transmittal to the General Assembly. The recommendations concerned ways to improve the organization and effectiveness of peace-keeping operations, including transferring certain functions of the Secretariat's Field Operations Division to the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, strengthening the Military Adviser's Office and designating a central body for liaison with Member States. A number of suggestions were also made regarding standardization of operating procedures and unit types and delegating administrative authority to force commanders and special representatives.

As the basis for its discussions, the Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General⁽²⁾ containing further observations and suggestions on peace-keeping, as requested by the Assembly in 1991.⁽³⁾ As at 24 April 1992, replies were received from seven Governments, one responding on behalf of the European Community and another, the Nordic countries. Also before the Committee was a draft working document prepared by its Bureau based on submissions of States to the Secretary-General and containing a list of specific items and elements for possible consideration by the Committee.

In addition to its annual session, the Special Committee and its open-ended working group met between 17 and 25 August to discuss the Secretary-General's agenda for peace⁽⁴⁾ (see above) and to prepare a special report⁽⁵⁾ on the topic. Delegations were unanimous in welcoming and appreciating "An Agenda for Peace", which they deemed a valuable and timely contribution aimed at strengthening the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1991 Assembly resolution,⁽³⁾ submitted in October 1992 a report⁽⁶⁾ containing information from 21 States concerning peace-keeping training and similar activities, and another report on the feasibility, including costs, of establishing an annual peace-keeping fellowship programme for national peace-keeping trainers, to be administered by the Secretariat.⁽⁷⁾

The information received showed that peace-keeping training took place generally in the context of participation in a particular peace-keeping operation. Four Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden) were an exception to that, with their joint training programmes. Several countries had specialized courses for different categories of personnel, notably military observers. With the duration of training from a few days to two months, the content varied accordingly. A number of programmes included refresher training of basic military skills, and some courses covered the full range of subjects listed in the training guidelines issued by the United Nations Secretariat in 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, following the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/71 without vote.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 46/48 of 9 December 1991,

Welcoming the progress made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations during its recent sessions,

Convinced that peace-keeping operations are enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing that the peacemaking activities of the Secretary-General and of organs of the United Nations, which are actions to bring hostile parties to agreement, essentially through such peaceful means as those foreseen in Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations, constitute an essential function of the United Nations and are among the important means for the prevention, containment and resolution of disputes and for maintaining international peace and security,

Taking into account that increasing activities in the field of United Nations peace-keeping require both increasing and better managed human, financial and material resources for the Organization,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations and its peace-keeping operations and of the heavy burden on the troop contributors, especially those from developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization and, in particular, his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace",

Taking note also of the useful exchange of views on "An Agenda for Peace" during the inter-sessional meetings of the Special Committee devoted to that report and of the role of the Special Committee in carrying out further analysis and consideration, in particular as regards peace-keeping operations,

Recalling its debate on agenda item 10 during the forty-seventh session, and in particular the views expressed by Member States on "An Agenda for Peace",

Recalling also that in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 29 October 1992, on the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", the Council expressed support for, inter alia, the suggestions contained in paragraphs 51 and 52 of the report,

Having examined the reports of the Special Committee,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

Resources

2. Notes that only a small number of Member States have to date responded to the questionnaire issued by the Secretary-General on 21 May 1990 pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/49 of 8 December 1989 to identify those personnel, material and technical resources and services which Member States would be ready, in principle, to contribute to United Nations peace-keeping operations, and urges Member States that have not yet replied to do so;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of improving the formulation of his questionnaire of 21 May 1990 and to recirculate the questionnaire on a regular basis;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to consider circulating a separate questionnaire on civil police and civilian experts whom Member States would be ready to contribute to United Nations peace-keeping operations;

5. Urges Member States to transmit promptly to the Secretary-General their replies to those questionnaires;

6. Recommends that the guidelines in the current questionnaire be developed and used subsequently in the "Notes for Guidance" in order to achieve a standard organization for type units;

7. Calls upon the Secretariat to consult with and assist Member States in completing the questionnaires, with a view to ensuring commonality of approach and understanding;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to promote, based on the questionnaires, the establishment on a voluntary basis among Member States of a pool of resources, including military units, military observers, civil police, key staff personnel and humanitarian matériel, that might be made readily available to United Nations peace-keeping operations, subject to national approval;

9. Encourages Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their willingness to provide forces or capabilities to the United Nations for peace-keeping operations and the type of units or capabilities that might be available at short notice, subject to overriding national defence requirements and the approval of the Governments providing them;

10. Encourages the Secretariat and those Member States which have indicated such willingness to enter into direct dialogue so as to enable the Secretary-General to know with greater precision what forces or capabilities might be made available to the United Nations for particular peace-keeping operations and on what time-scale;

11. Stresses the need for the United Nations to be given resources commensurate with its growing responsibilities in the area of peace-keeping, particularly with reference to the resources needed for the start-up phases of such operations;

Finances

12. Recalls that the financing of peace-keeping operations is the collective responsibility of all Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, and reiterates its call upon all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and encourages those States which can do so to make voluntary contributions that are acceptable to the Secretary-General;

13. Reiterates the need to maintain the accepted principles and guidelines on the financing of all United Nations peace-keeping operations;

14. Stresses the need to delegate increased financial and administrative authority to Force Commanders, or Special Representatives for multi-component missions, in order to increase the missions' capacity to adjust to new situations and specific requirements;

15. Encourages consideration in the appropriate forums of the establishment of a reserve fund or other appropriate arrangement to improve the start-up financing of peace-keeping operations;

16. Also stresses the importance of the need to reimburse the outstanding dues of troop-contributing States;

17. Considers it important that, in establishing future peace-keeping operations, financial questions should continue to be studied seriously, particularly at the planning stage, in order to ensure the most cost-effective and efficient conduct of such operations and strict control of their expenditures;

18. Also considers it important to contain financial expenditures of peace-keeping operations by determining, during initial planning, the levels of personnel, materials and technical equipment required, by early definition of the sequence of each operation, and by improved estimating, during the planning stage, of operational costs;

19. Acknowledges the competence of the General Assembly for the appropriation and apportionment of the costs of United Nations peace-keeping operations, and also acknowledges the importance of the Security Council members being informed of the cost implications of such operations;

20. Emphasizes the importance of making, from the standpoint of sources of financing, a clear distinction between peace-keeping operations themselves, and the provision to States and parties to a conflict, at their request, of other assistance from the specialized agencies and departments of the United Nations not an integral part of the operation;

21. Considers that in view of the critical financial situation of the United Nations, as described in the report of the Secretary-General, the issue of supplementing diversified financial resources, on terms acceptable to the Secretary-General, to the assessed contributions should be further studied in all the appropriate forums;

22. Recognizes the need for an augmentation of the strength and capability of military staff serving in the Secretariat and of civilian staff dealing more generally with peace-keeping matters in the Secretariat;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on this subject as soon as possible; in that report he might consider the establishment in the Secretariat of an enhanced peace-keeping planning staff and an operations centre in order to deal with the growing complexity of initial planning and control of peace-keeping operations in the field;

24. Urges Governments of host countries to take all necessary measures to create conditions that will permit United Nations forces to be kept to a minimum, and equally urges them to provide, in accordance with their capacity, the greatest possible logistic and material support for these operations;

Organization and effectiveness

25. Invites the Secretary-General, as Chief Administrative Officer, to consider the necessary strengthening and reform of the Secretariat units dealing with peace-keeping operations, so that they can deal effectively and efficiently with the planning, launching, ongoing management and termination of peace-keeping operations;

26. welcomes the creation of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations and invites the Secretary-General to consider the creation of a unified, integrated structure within the Department to establish clear lines of responsibility and accountability, which are essential for the effective and efficient management of peace-keeping operations; in that regard, it requests the Secretary-General to consider whether relevant parts of the Field Operations Division should be transferred to that Department;

27. Also welcomes, in the light of the increasing use of civilian police in peace-keeping operations, the decision of the Secretary-General to appoint a Senior Police Adviser;

28. Requests the Secretariat to consider, in due course, the utility of training guidelines for civilian specialized units, including civilian police;

29. Encourages all Member States to organize national or regional training programmes, to include cross-cultural education and relevant international humanitarian law in such programmes and to promote cooperation with other national and regional peace-keeping training programmes;

30. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility, including costs, of establishing an annual peace-keeping fellowship programme for national peace-keeping trainers to be administered by the Secretariat, and the information he has gathered on national peace-keeping training and similar activities, and requests him to issue a regularly updated list based upon national submissions;

31. Invites the Secretary-General to institute proper arrangements and procedures for providing additional personnel on a short-term basis in order to ensure that the Secretariat can respond effectively and efficiently to fluctuations in its workload, particularly when new operations are planned and launched;

32. Reiterates its invitation to the Secretary-General to consider identifying a focal point for contacts by Member States seeking information on all facets, including operational and administrative matters, of ongoing and planned peace-keeping operations;

33. Also invites the Secretary-General to review, with a view to streamlining procedures and enhancing effectiveness, the applicable United Nations financial and administrative regulations concerning peace-keeping operations;

34. Further invites the Secretary-General to consider means whereby Special Representatives/Force Commanders and other key personnel are identified at the earliest possible time;

35. Recommends that the Secretary-General conduct a study on how to prevent duplication of responsibilities of civilian and military staff personnel in the field, especially in the areas of supply, communication and transportation, and how to improve their interaction and cooperation in fulfilling the tasks assigned to them;

36. Invites the Secretary-General immediately to envisage the adoption of all necessary arrangements to define logistics doctrine and standard operational procedures combining civilian and military aspects in order to achieve the greatest possible efficiency and cost-effectiveness, and urges Member States to cooperate with the Secretary-General in this exercise;

37. Encourages the Secretary-General to invite Member States to provide qualified military and civilian personnel to assist the Secretariat in the planning and management of peace-keeping operations;

38. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for reporting on peace-keeping operations and requests him to report periodically on the performance of all peace-keeping operations;

39. Requests the Secretary-General to consider establishing a training programme for key staff personnel of peace-keeping operations with a view to creating a pool of trained personnel with knowledge of the United Nations system and its working procedures;

40. Requests the Secretariat immediately to make all necessary arrangements for the reissue of The Blue Helmets in 1995;

41. Recommends that the Secretariat continue the existing practice of informal consultations with contributing States more directly interested, as appropriate, and that, especially for particularly large or complex operations, these informal consultations be held on a more frequent and regular basis, with a view to providing effective follow-up and support to the operation from its initial stage to its termination;

Development of peace-keeping

42. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on ways of strengthening the capacity of the United Nations for preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping within the framework and provisions of the Charter, as requested by the Security Council at its meeting held at the level of heads of State and Government on 31 January 1992;

43. Considers that the concept of preventive peace-keeping, that is, the deployment of peace-keeping operations as a deterrent to a possible aggressor, requires development and clarification as a helpful tool for the United Nations in its pursuit of preventive diplomacy;

44. Believes that the Secretary-General should have the means to dispatch his own missions, with the consent of the parties concerned, where necessary in cooperation with regional organizations, and to evaluate the situation and develop his peacemaking activities as appropriate;

45. Also believes that the Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/59 of 9 December 1991, is a valuable contribution to the Organization's preventive functions;

46. Encourages Member States to provide the Secretary-General with full and up-to-date information concerning tensions that could escalate into an international conflict;

47. Believes, in this connection, that the closest attention needs to be paid to the issue of applying the preventive potential of the United Nations more broadly and considers that the responsibilities of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General in this regard should be strengthened in accordance with the framework and provisions of the Charter;

48. Recognizes the importance of according special consideration to mechanisms and means of deterring a potential aggressor and procedures for a prompt and effective response to acts of aggression and threats to international peace and security, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

49. Stresses that the parties to a conflict have an obligation to respect the international status of United Nations operations and to refrain from encouraging or taking actions capable of disrupting or impeding United Nations personnel in the performance of their peacekeeping, peacemaking or humanitarian functions, in accordance with the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and status-of-forces agreements;

50. Urges all Governments of host countries and parties to a conflict to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of United Nations personnel and to prevent any attempts on the life and health of those personnel;

51. Considers that, in the light of the ever-expanding role of peace-keeping operations, it is important that the United Nations, from planning through implementation of each operation, and on an ongoing basis, assess the risks to the safety and security of its units and personnel and take all necessary measures, including the elaboration of appropriate guidelines and procedures, to ensure the highest possible levels of that safety and security;

52. Encourages all regional and subregional organizations to promote the maintenance of peace, security and stability in their respective regions and, where applicable, work in cooperation with the United Nations, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, contributing to peace-keeping operations there;

53. Emphasizes that any deployment of peace-keeping operations should be accompanied, as appropriate, by an intensification of coordinated political efforts by the States concerned, by regional organizations and by the United Nations itself as part of the political process for a peaceful settlement of the crisis situation or conflict in accordance with Chapters VI and VIII of the Charter;

54. Believes that consideration might be given over the next few years to the elaboration of a universally acceptable text for a declaration on United Nations peace-keeping operations, which would include the main organizational and practical aspects involved and would contain recommendations on ways of enhancing the effectiveness of such operations;

55. Takes note of the establishment of an informal working group, open to all Member States, on "An Agenda for Peace";

56. Recommends that, should any of the proposals contained in the present resolution result in budgetary implications for the biennium 1992-1993, such additional costs should be accommodated within the appropriation level approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/186 A of 20 December 1991;

57. Decides that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, should continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects;

58. Encourages the Special Committee to consider holding an inter-sessional meeting to consider at the earliest opportunity the recommendations relating to peace-keeping contained in "An Agenda for Peace";

59. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

60. Invites Member States to submit any further observations and suggestions on peace-keeping operations to the Secretary-General by 1 March 1993, outlining proposals on specific items in order to allow for more detailed consideration by the Special Committee, with particular emphasis on practical proposals to make these operations more effective;

61. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources, a compilation of the above-mentioned observations and suggestions and to submit it to the Special Committee by 30 March 1993;

62. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

General Assembly resolution 47/71

14 December 1992 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/47/613) without vote, 20 November (meeting 22); 6-nation draft (A/SPC/47/L.7); agenda item 75.

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations were dealt with in resolution 47/218. By resolution 47/217, the Assembly decided to establish a peace-keeping reserve fund.

Protection of peace-keeping personnel

In "An Agenda for Peace"(4) (see above), the Secretary-General noted an unconscionable increase in fatalities among United Nations peace-keeping personnel. In view of the pressing need for adequate protection to those engaged in life-endangering circumstances, he recommended that the Security Council, unless it elected immediately to withdraw the United Nations presence to preserve the credibility of the Organization, consider what action should be taken towards those who put United Nations personnel in danger. Before deployment took place, the Council should keep open the option of considering in advance collective measures, possibly including those under Chapter VII of the Charter when a threat to international peace and security was also involved, to come into effect should the purpose of the United Nations operation systematically be frustrated and hostilities occur.

After consultations held on 2 December, the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of the Council members:(8)

"The members of the Security Council wish to express their deep concern and outrage about the increasing number of attacks against United Nations personnel serving in various peace-keeping operations.

"A number of serious incidents affecting military and civilian personnel serving with UNAVEM II, UNTAC and UNPROFOR have occurred during the last few days.

"On 29 November in Uige, northern Angola, a Brazilian police observer with UNAVEM II was killed as a result of an outbreak of hostilities between UNITA and government forces, during which the UNAVEM camp was caught in the cross-fire. The members of the Council convey their deep sympathy and condolences to the Government of Brazil and to the bereaved family.

"The situation in UNPROFOR, which has already suffered over 300 casualties, 20 of them fatal, remains deeply troubling. On 30 November, two Spanish UNPROFOR soldiers in Bosnia and Herzegovina were seriously injured in a mine attack and a Danish UNPROFOR soldier was abducted by armed men today.

"On 1 December, two British UNTAC military observers and four naval observers, two from the Philippines, one from New Zealand and one from the United Kingdom, on patrol in Kompong Thom province were illegally detained by forces belonging to the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea (NADK). An UNTAC helicopter, sent to assist in the discussions for their release, was fired upon, and a French military observer on board was injured. Moreover, today, six UNTAC civilian police monitors, three Indonesians, two Tunisians and one Nepalese, were injured in two land-mine incidents in Siem Reap province.

"The members of the Council condemn these attacks on the safety and security of United Nations personnel and demand that all parties concerned take all necessary measures to prevent their recurrence. The members of the Council consider the abduction and detention of United Nations peace-keeping personnel as totally unacceptable and demand the immediate and unconditional release of the UNTAC and UNPROFOR personnel concerned."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, in accordance with the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/72 without vote.

Protection of peace-keeping personnel

The General Assembly,

Acknowledging the vital importance of the involvement of United Nations personnel in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping, peace-building and humanitarian operations,

Noting with grave concern the growing number of fatalities and injuries among United Nations peace-keeping and other personnel resulting from deliberate hostile actions in areas of deployment,

Bearing in mind the concern of the Secretary-General over the safety of peace-keeping personnel expressed in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace",

Recalling its resolution 46/48 of 9 December 1991 and other relevant resolutions, as well as the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations,

Having examined the special report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations,

Noting relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Pays tribute to the courage, commitment and idealism of peace-keeping and other United Nations personnel in the field, who often work in difficult and dangerous circumstances;

2. Resolutely condemns any hostile actions against United Nations personnel, including deliberate attacks against United Nations peace-keeping operations, which have resulted in a disturbing number of casualties;

3. Strongly demands that host countries and all parties to a conflict take all measures possible to ensure the safety of peace-keeping and other United Nations personnel;

4. Reminds Governments of host countries of their responsibility for the safety of peace-keeping and other United Nations personnel on their territory;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to conclude, if possible at the earliest stage of a peace-keeping operation, a status-of-forces agreement with the parties concerned, emphasizing their obligations to respect the international status of United Nations operations in accordance with the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in planning future peace-keeping operations and in making recommendations for their deployment, to give particular attention to adequate protection for peace-keeping and other United Nations personnel;

7. Recommends that, in appropriate cases, the Security Council might make it clear to the parties when authorizing a new peace-keeping operation that it is prepared to take further steps in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations should the purpose of the operation systematically be frustrated by provocative attacks against United Nations personnel;

8. Also recommends that the Security Council continue, in collaboration with the Secretary-General, to collect and, where appropriate, to disseminate reliable information about attacks on the safety of peace-keeping and other United Nations personnel;

9. Requests the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to study other measures to ensure the safety of peace-keeping and other United Nations personnel and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to address the question of the safety of United Nations personnel in his periodic reports on ongoing peace-keeping operations.

Regional aspects of international peace and security

Strengthening of security in the Mediterranean region

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1991,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1992 a report(2) on the strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region, containing a summary of the debate on the question during the 1991 Assembly session. Also included were replies from five Governments submitted in response to his request for their views.

The Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Security and Cooperation in the Mediterranean (Malaga, Spain, 15-20 June), in its final document,(3) recommended, among other things, that Governments concerned convene as soon as possible an intergovernmental conference on security and cooperation in the Mediterranean, which would draw on the procedures and general experience of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The European Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community, in a declaration on the relations between Europe and the Maghreb (Lisbon, Portugal, 25 June),(4) reaffirmed its solidarity with the Maghreb countries and its firm determination to continue contributing to the stability and prosperity of the Mediterranean region on the basis of an approach favouring partnership. It considered that its relations and those of its member States with the Maghreb countries must be founded on a common commitment to respect for international law and human rights, the establishment of democratic institutional systems, and tolerance and coexistence between cultures and religions.

The final document of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Jakarta, Indonesia, 1-6 September)(5) reaffirmed the non-aligned countries' support for the efforts to transform the Mediterranean area into a region of peace, security and cooperation and, in that context, welcomed the 1989 Treaty between Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco and Tunisia instituting the Arab Maghreb Union.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/58 without vote.

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including its resolution 46/42 of 6 December 1991,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in strengthening and promoting peace, security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region,

Recognizing the efforts realized so far and the determination of the Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations with a view to resolving the problems existing in the Mediterranean region and eliminating the causes of tension and the consequent threat to peace and security,

Recognising also the indivisible character of security in the Mediterranean and that the enhancement of cooperation among Mediterranean countries with a view to promoting the economic and social development of all peoples of the region will contribute significantly to stability, peace and security in the region,

Recognizing further that prospects for closer Euro-Mediterranean cooperation in all spheres can be enhanced by positive developments worldwide, particularly in Europe,

Expressing satisfaction at the growing awareness of the need for joint efforts by all Mediterranean countries so as to strengthen economic, social, cultural and environmental cooperation in the Mediterranean region,

Reaffirming the responsibility of all States to contribute to the stability and prosperity of the Mediterranean region and their commitment to respect the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern at the persistent tension and continuing military activities in parts of the Mediterranean that hinder efforts to strengthen security and cooperation in the region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Reaffirm that security in the Mediterranean is closely linked to European security as well as to international peace and security;

2. Expresses satisfaction at the continuing efforts by Mediterranean countries to contribute actively to the elimination of all causes of tension in the region and to the promotion of just and lasting solutions to the persistent problems of the region through peaceful means, thus ensuring the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and respecting the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all countries of the Mediterranean and the right of peoples to self-determination, and therefore calls for full adherence to the principles of non-interference, non-intervention, non-use of force or threat of use of force and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. welcomes the efforts by the Mediterranean countries in the continuation of initiatives and negotiations as well as the adoption of measures that will promote confidence- and security-building as well as disarmament in the Mediterranean region, and encourages them to pursue these efforts further;

4. Recognises that the elimination of the economic and social disparities in levels of development as well as other obstacles in the Mediterranean area will contribute to enhancing peace, security and cooperation among Mediterranean countries;

5. Takes note of the conclusions of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992, specifically paragraphs 36 to 39, Chapter III, of the Final Document on political issues concerning the Mediterranean;

6. Recalls the decisions taken by the Second Ministerial Meeting of the Western Mediterranean Countries, held at Algiers in October 1991, and the decision concerning the forthcoming summit meeting of the Western Mediterranean countries to be held at Tunis;

7. Takes note of the "Helsinki Document 1992—The Challenges of change", adopted in July 1992, whereby the heads of State or Government of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe agreed, inter alia, to widen their cooperation and enlarge their dialogue with the non-participating Mediterranean States as a means to promote social and economic development, thereby enhancing stability in the region, in order to narrow the prosperity gap between Europe and its Mediterranean neighbours and protect the Mediterranean ecosystems;

8. Takes note also of the Declaration of the European Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community on relations between Europe and the Maghreb, issued at Lisbon on 25 June 1992;

9. welcomes in this context the decision to convene a Mediterranean seminar of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe under the auspices of the Committee of Senior Officials to consider various topics, including the environment, demographic trends or economic development and other areas of bilateral and multilateral cooperation between States participating in the Conference and non-participating Mediterranean States, reflecting the general framework of principles of cooperation in the Mediterranean region as provided for in the Final Act and other documents of the Conference;

10. Takes note further of the conclusions and recommendations of the first Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Security and Cooperation in the Mediterranean, held at Malaga, Spain, from 15 to 20 June 1992, which, inter alia, launched a pragmatic process of cooperation that would gradually gain in strength and coverage, generate a positive and irreversible momentum and facilitate the settlement of disputes;

11. Encourages the continued widespread support among Mediterranean countries for the convening of a conference on security and cooperation in the Mediterranean, as well as the ongoing regional consultations to create the appropriate conditions for its convening;

12. Notes the adoption by the Economic Commission for Europe of its decision G(47), entitled "Economic cooperation in the Mediterranean in the light of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe", and, in this context, calls upon the Executive Secretaries of the relevant United Nations regional commissions as well as other United Nations bodies concerned to strengthen their cooperation on matters that are of common interest to the Mediterranean countries and that will have a positive impact on the region as a whole, in particular in the economic, social, humanitarian and environmental spheres;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region".

South Atlantic zone of peace

The General Assembly in 1986(6) had declared the South Atlantic a zone of peace and cooperation. In subsequent resolutions, the Assembly reaffirmed the determination of the States of the zone to enhance and accelerate their cooperation in political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other spheres.

In response to the latest such resolution, adopted in 1991,(7) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1992 a report, with later addenda,(8) containing replies from five Governments and the United Nations Development Programme expressing their views on the implementation of the 1986 declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/74 by recorded vote.

Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/11 of 27 October 1986, in which it solemnly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region situated between Africa and South America, the "Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic",

Recalling also its subsequent resolutions on the matter, including resolutions 45/36 of 27 November 1990 and 46/19 of 25 November 1991, in which it reaffirmed the determination of the States of the zone to enhance and accelerate their cooperation in the political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other spheres,

Reaffirming that the questions of peace and security and those of development are interrelated and inseparable, and considering that cooperation among all States, in particular those of the region, for peace and development is essential to promote the objectives of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic,

Aware of the importance that the States of the zone attach to the preservation of the region's environment and recognizing the threat that pollution from any source poses to the marine and coastal environment, its ecological balance and its resources,

Noting the concern expressed on the use of fishing methods and practices that cause the over-exploitation of living marine resources, especially of highly migratory and straddling fish stocks, and that it has an adverse impact on the conservation and management of living resources of the marine environment, both within and beyond the exclusive economic zones,

1. Reaffirms the purpose and objective of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic;

2. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General, in accordance with its resolution 46/19;

3. Welcomes the recent initiatives aimed at the full entry into force of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and stresses the relevance of such initiatives for the advancement of the objectives and principles of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic;

4. Affirms the importance of the South Atlantic to global maritime and commercial transactions and its determination to preserve the region for all activities protected by relevant international law, including the freedom of navigation in the high seas;

5. Stresses the importance for the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic of the results of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, particularly the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and the programmes set forth in Agenda 21, as well as the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity, in the conviction that their implementation will strengthen the basis for cooperation within the zone and for the benefit of the international community as a whole;

6. Notes with interest the hope expressed by the countries of the zone to welcome in the near future a non-racial democratic South Africa into the community of South Atlantic States and, in that connection, urges all parties concerned in South Africa to cooperate with a view to ending the continuing violence and thereby create an atmosphere conducive to negotiations leading to the establishment of a non-racial democratic and united South Africa;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for its support of the Peace Plan for Liberia of the Economic Community of West African States, most recently through the adoption of Security Council resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, and hopes that the continuing efforts made at the subregional and international levels aimed at a peaceful resolution of the Liberian conflict will, within the shortest possible time, lead to national reconciliation, reconstruction and development;

8. Calls upon the parties to the Peace Accords for Angola to respect all the commitments undertaken in accordance with these accords, in particular with regard to the confinement of their troops and weapons, demobilization and the formation of the unified national armed force, and to refrain from any act that might heighten tension, impair the conduct of the electoral process and threaten the territorial integrity of the country;

9. Also calls upon the international community to increase humanitarian assistance to both Angola and Liberia;

10. Takes note with satisfaction of the initiative of the Government of Namibia to host a meeting of the Ministers of Trade and Industry of the countries of the zone at Windhoek in the first half of 1993;

11. Requests the relevant organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to render all ap-appropriate assistance which States of the zone may seek in their joint efforts to implement the declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of resolution 41/11 and other subsequent resolutions on the matter under review and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by Member States;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic".

Aerial incidents and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Charges of air terrorism

The Security Council met on 21 January 1992 to consider December 1991 charges⁽¹⁾ by France, the United Kingdom and the United States that nationals and possibly officials of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were involved in two aerial incidents: the bombing on 21 December 1988 of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie in southern Scotland and the crash on 19 September 1989 of Union de transports aériens (UTA) flight 772 over the Ténéré desert in the Niger.

In a joint declaration of November 1991,⁽²⁾ the United Kingdom and the United States had demanded that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya surrender for trial those nationals charged with bombing Pan Am flight 103, disclose all it knew of the crime, allow full access to witnesses and evidence, and pay appropriate compensation. France, placing presumptions of guilt for the attack on UTA flight 772 on several Libyan nationals, called on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to produce all the material evidence in its possession, facilitate contacts and meetings for the assembly of witnesses, and authorize Libyan officials to respond to requests made by the examining magistrate.⁽³⁾

Also in November 1991, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya challenged the United States and the United Kingdom to produce convincing material and tangible evidence for their accusations, declared its readiness to cooperate fully with any impartial international judicial authority, and reserved its right to defend itself in accordance with Article 51 of the United Nations Charter.⁽⁴⁾ It affirmed that its policy was incompatible with all forms of terrorism, declared that it would not permit the use of its territory or citizens for terrorist operations, and declared that all applications by France, the United Kingdom and the United States would receive every attention, inasmuch as the competent Libyan authorities would investigate them.⁽⁵⁾

By a letter of 8 January,⁽⁶⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya affirmed that submission of the matter to the Security Council had no basis either in the Charter or in international law, which did not stipulate that the Council had the power to consider judicial cases involving individuals. It offered to enter into dialogue with the three countries, urged them to provide Libyan judges investigating the incidents with the records of the investigation, and invited the parties to reach agreement through international judicial authorities, including the International Court of Justice (ICJ).

Also before the Council were two January communications from the Jamahiriya, one transmitting a letter addressed to the United Kingdom and the United States and the other a resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States (LAS) on 16 January. By the first,⁽⁷⁾ the Jamahiriya called for implementation of article 14 of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civilian Aviation⁽⁸⁾ to which all three States were parties. Under article 14, paragraph 1, any dispute between two or more contracting States that could not be settled through negotiation should be submitted to arbitration. The LAS Council again called for the establishment of a United Nations-LAS joint commission and urged the Security Council to resolve the conflict by negotiation, mediation and judicial settlement in accordance with Article 33 of the Charter.⁽⁹⁾

At their request, Canada, the Congo, Iran, Iraq, Italy, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, the Sudan and Yemen were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. At Morocco's request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Council extended an invitation to the League of Arab States, under rule 39.^b

Following statements, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 731(1992).

The Security Council,

Deeply disturbed by the world-wide persistence of acts of international terrorism in all its forms, including those in which States are directly or indirectly involved, which endanger or take innocent lives, have a deleterious effect on international relations and jeopardize the security of States,

Deeply concerned by all illegal activities directed against international civil aviation, and affirming the right of all States, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and relevant principles of international law, to protect their nationals from acts of international terrorism that constitute threats to international peace and security,

Reaffirming its resolution 286(1970) of 9 September 1970, in which it called on States to take all possible legal steps to prevent any interference with international civil air travel,

Reaffirming also its resolution 635(1989) of 14 June 1989, in which it condemned all acts of unlawful interference against the security of civil aviation and called upon all States to cooperate in devising and implementing measures to prevent all acts of terrorism, including those involving explosives,

Recalling the statement made on 30 December 1988 by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the members of the Council strongly condemning the destruction of Pan American flight 103 and calling on all States to assist in the apprehension and prosecution of those responsible for this criminal act,

Deeply concerned over the results of investigations, which implicate officials of the Libyan Government and which are contained in Security Council documents that include the requests addressed to the Libyan authorities by France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, in connection with the legal procedures related to the attacks carried out against Pan American flight 103 and Union de transports aériens flight 772,

Determined to eliminate international terrorism,

1. Condemns the destruction of Pan American flight 103 and Union de transports aériens flight 772 and the resultant loss of hundreds of lives;

2. Strongly deplores the fact that the Libyan Government has not yet responded effectively to the above requests to cooperate fully in establishing responsibility for the terrorist acts referred to above against Pan American flight 103 and Union de transports aériens flight 772;

3. Urges the Libyan Government immediately to provide a full and effective response to those requests so as to contribute to the elimination of international terrorism;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the cooperation of the Libyan Government to provide a full and effective response to those requests;

5. Urges all States individually and collectively to encourage the Libyan Government to respond fully and effectively to those requests;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

21 January 1992 Meeting 3033 Adopted unanimously

3-nation draft (S/234221).

Sponsors: France, United Kingdom, United States.

In a statement before the Council, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that an ostensibly arduous four-year investigation by the United Kingdom and the United States into the Lockerbie incident had found no supporting evidence, and no proof had been made available as to the alleged responsibility of Libyan nationals. Its own judicial authorities had appointed two magistrates who initiated an investigation; they contacted investigating authorities in Scotland, the United States and France, but had been unable to make any significant progress owing to the authorities' refusal to hand over the files or submit evidence in their possession. The Libyan authorities had expressed readiness to receive investigators to participate in the investigation.

Asserting that the problem involved Libyan nationals but had nothing to do with the State, the Jamahiriya said the matter was a legal issue and the Council was not the competent forum to consider the question, as under Article 36 of the Charter legal disputes should be referred to ICJ. To treat the dispute as a political rather than a legal matter would constitute a flagrant violation of Article 27 of the Charter.

Summing up its position, the Jamahiriya stated that it condemned terrorism in all its forms, including State-sponsored terrorism, and reconfirmed its determination to put an end to that dangerous phenomenon. It strongly condemned the destruction of the two airliners and expressed willingness to cooperate with the judicial authorities in the countries concerned. It requested that the United Kingdom and the United States be invited to enter promptly into negotiations with it on proceedings leading to arbitration; if no agreement was reached in arbitration, the matter would be brought before ICJ.

In the view of the United States, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had sought to evade its responsibilities and to procrastinate. Resolution 731(1992) provided for the accused to be turned over to the judicial authorities of the Governments that were competent under international law to try them—requests the Jamahiriya had refused to respond to. No State could seek to hide support for international terrorism behind traditional principles of international law and State practice. France hoped that the unanimous reaction of the international community, as expressed in the resolution, would induce the Libyan authorities to respond quickly to the requests of the judicial authorities conducting the investigation into both attacks, which had claimed 441 victims.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of the Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 731(1992), the Secretary-General submitted two reports, on 11 February(11) and on 3 March(12)

He had sent Under-Secretary-General Vasiliy Safronchuk as his Special Envoy to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 25 January to deliver to the Libyan leader, Colonel Muammar Qaddafi, a personal message, together with the text of the Council resolution and related records.

During the meeting with the Special Envoy, Colonel Qaddafi reiterated his readiness to cooperate with the Secretary-General. He explained that following receipt of the charges against two Libyan nationals said to be involved in the downing of Pan Am flight 103, Libyan authorities had immediately started legal proceedings against them. The Libyan judges would require further information from the United Kingdom and the United States. He stressed that no action could be taken that contravened the Libyan legal system and suggested that the Secretary-General invite to the Jamahiriya judges from the three countries concerned, as well as representatives of the LAS, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), to observe a possible trial.

The Permanent Representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the United Nations met with the Secretary-General on 11 February; his Government was ready to cooperate fully with the Security Council and the Secretary-General and proposed that a mechanism be created for implementing resolution 731(1992).

The Secretary-General's March report dealt mainly with suggestions by France, the United Kingdom and the United States and a response from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya concerning a possible handing over of the two suspects and subsequent judicial procedures. During two further meetings with the Special Envoy, the Libyan leader pointed out that constitutional obstacles prevented the handing over of the suspects for trial in a foreign country, a point that was reiterated in a 2 March letter from the Secretary of the People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the Secretary-General. That letter and another of 27 February were annexed to the report. In the 27 February letter, the Secretary proposed a mechanism for implementing resolution 731(1992): he agreed to the requests of France that a magistrate go to the Jamahiriya to investigate the case in a manner he deemed fit and that he be provided with a copy of the minutes of the investigation carried out by the Libyan judge and condemned terrorism in all its forms. He also discussed the question of compensation.

Air and arms embargo

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council, on 31 March, again considered the charges by France, the United Kingdom and the United States against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in connection with the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 and UTA flight 772, together with the February(11) and March(12) reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 731(1992) (see above).

The Council President drew attention to four letters addressed to him or the Secretary-General. By the first,(13) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a 6 February memorandum by the International Progress Organization, stating that resolution 731(1992) was not in conformity with Article 33 of the Charter regarding the peaceful settlement of disputes, which required that parties first seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration or judicial settlement. The memorandum suggested applying the procedures of the 1971 Montreal Convention.(8) Portugal transmitted a 17 February statement(14) by the European Community welcoming the unanimous adoption of resolution 731(1992) and underlining the great importance of Libyan compliance with it.

By a letter of 18 March,(15) the Jamahiriya asserted that it had actively and positively cooperated with regard to that resolution. It asked the Council to urge France, the United Kingdom and the United States to hand over their dossiers so that the Libyan judges could complete their investigation. It maintained that the issue was a legal one and should thus be left to ICJ. Jordan transmitted a 22 March resolution by the LAS Council,(16) by which the League renewed its call to the Council to resolve the conflict in accordance with Article 33 of the Charter, and urged the Council to avoid the adoption of economic, military or diplomatic measures that might increase the complications and have an adverse effect on the region, and to await a decision by ICJ.

At their request, Iraq, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania and Uganda were invited to participate in the discussion without a right to vote, in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. At Morocco's request, (17) an invitation to OIC was extended under rules 39.^b

Following statements, the Council adopted resolution 748(1992).

Reaffirming its resolution 731(1992) of 21 January 1992, Noting the reports of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned that the Libyan Government has still not provided a full and effective response to the requests in its resolution 731(1992) of 21 January 1992,

Convinced that the suppression of acts of international terrorism, including those in which States are directly or indirectly involved, is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling that, in the statement issued on 31 January 1992 on the occasion of the meeting of the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government, the members of the Council expressed their deep concern over acts of international terrorism, and emphasized the need for the international community to deal effectively with all such acts,

Reaffirming that, in accordance with the principle in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations, every State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in terrorist acts in another State or acquiescing in organized activities within its territory directed towards the commission of such acts, when such acts involve a threat or use of force,

Determining, in this context, that the failure by the Libyan Government to demonstrate by concrete actions its renunciation of terrorism and in particular its continued failure to respond fully and effectively to the requests in resolution 731(1992) constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to eliminate international terrorism,

Recalling the right of States, under Article 50 of the Charter, to consult the Security Council where they find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Decides that the Libyan Government must now comply without any further delay with paragraph 3 of resolution 731(1992) regarding the requests contained in documents S/23306, S/23308 and S/23309;

2. Decides also that the Libyan Government must commit itself definitively to cease all forms of terrorist action and all assistance to terrorist groups and that it must promptly, by concrete actions, demonstrate its renunciation of terrorism;

3. Decides that on 15 April 1992 all States shall adopt the measures set out below, which shall apply until the Security Council decides that the Libyan Government has complied with paragraphs 1 and 2 above;

4. Decides also that all States shall:

(a) Deny permission to any aircraft to take off from, land in or overfly their territory if it is destined to land in or has taken off from the territory of Libya, unless the particular flight has been approved on grounds of significant humanitarian need by the Committee established by paragraph 9 below;

(b) Prohibit, by their nationals or from their territory, the supply of any aircraft or aircraft components to Libya, the provision of engineering and maintenance servicing of Libyan aircraft or aircraft components, the certification of airworthiness for Libyan aircraft, the payment of new claims against existing insurance contracts and the provision of new direct insurance for Libyan aircraft;

5. Decides further that all States shall:

(a) Prohibit any provision to Libya by their nationals or from their territory of arms and related material of all types, including the sale or transfer of weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary police equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, as well as the provision of any types of equipment, supplies and grants of licensing arrangements, for the manufacture or maintenance of the aforementioned;

(b) Prohibit any provision to Libya by their nationals or from their territory of technical advice, assistance or training related to the provision, manufacture, maintenance, or use of the items in (a) above;

(c) Withdraw any of their officials or agents present in Libya to advise the Libyan authorities on military matters;

6. Decides that all States shall:

(a) Significantly reduce the number and the level of the staff at Libyan diplomatic missions and consular posts and restrict or control the movement within their territory of all such staff who remain; in the case of Libyan missions to international organizations, the host State may, as it deems necessary, consult the organization concerned on the measures required to implement this subparagraph;

(b) Prevent the operation of all Libyan Arab Airlines offices

(c) Take all appropriate steps to deny entry to or expel Libyan nationals who have been denied entry to or expelled from other States because of their involvement in terrorist activities;

7. Calls upon all States, including States not members of the United Nations, and all international organizations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to 15 April 1992;

8. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General by 15 May 1992 on the measures they have instituted for meeting the obligations set out in paragraphs 3 to 7 above;

9. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To examine the reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 8 above;

(b) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 above;

(c) To consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 above and, in that context, to make recommendations to the Council on ways to increase their effectiveness;

(d) To recommend appropriate measures in response to violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 above and provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

(e) To consider and to decide upon expeditiously any application by States for the approval of flights on grounds of significant humanitarian need in accordance with paragraph 4 above;

(f) To give special attention to any communications in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter from any neighbouring or other State with special economic problems that might arise from the carrying out of the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 above;

10. calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee in the fulfilment of its task, including supplying such information as may be sought by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for this purpose;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to continue his role as set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 731(1992);

13. Decides that the Security Council shall, every 120 days or sooner should the situation so require, review the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 above in the light of the compliance by the Libyan Government with paragraphs 1 and 2 above taking into account, as appropriate, any reports provided by the Secretary-General on his role as set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 731(1992);

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

31 March 1992 Meeting 3063 10-0-5

3-nation draft (S/23762).

Sponsors: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Ecuador, France, Hungary, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Cape Verde, China, India, Morocco, Zimbabwe.

Speaking before the Council, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the dispute was of a purely legal nature and should be solved by legal means. On the basis of the 1971 Montreal Convention,(8) it had taken concrete measures and had requested arbitration. The other parties had not cooperated with Libyan judicial authorities, refusing to turn over their files on the case and the evidence in their possession.

With regard to resolution 731(1992) adopted in January, the Jamahiriya said not only was it based on incomplete investigations, but there was no justification for it, since it made no mention of the Libyan point of view and ignored Article 33 of the Charter. In addition, the procedure followed by the Council in adopting that resolution did not take into account Article 27 of the Charter, which stipulated that when decisions were adopted under Chapter VI, a party to a dispute should abstain from voting; that was applicable to France, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that it had no objection to surrendering the two suspects to the United Nations in Tripoli in order to facilitate investigations, or to the Secretary-General's undertaking to set up a legal committee to carry out a comprehensive investigation. If the Secretary-General were then to confirm the seriousness of the accusations, it would not object to surrendering the two suspects under his personal supervision to a third party. It further agreed with France's proposal to send a judge to the Jamahiriya to investigate and expressed readiness to have the Secretary-General or his deputy engage in fact-finding on its territory in order to disprove or confirm allegations of its purported implication in terrorist acts.

In the view of the United States, the evidence revealing Libyan involvement in the terrorist acts against the two airliners indicated a serious breach of international peace and security and fully justified measures pursuant to Chapter VII of the Charter. The means chosen were appropriate and the sanctions measured, precise and limited—a multilateral, non-violent and peaceful response to violent and brutal acts.

Given the nature of Libyan involvement with terrorism and the means it had employed, the United Kingdom considered entirely appropriate the arms ban and action against Libyan overseas missions and Libyan Arab Airlines offices. The sanctions would not be brought into force until 15 April, which would allow time for the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to take steps in order to avoid their imposition completely. For France, the sanctions were balanced and appropriate, as the three areas they applied to—arms, aviation, and diplomatic and consular personnel—could be used to support international terrorism.

Report and communications. The Secretary-General submitted a report on 22 May with later addenda,(18) on the implementation of resolution 748(1992). As at 13 August, 82 States reported on the measures they had instituted to comply with the resolution. Later in the year, another five reported on their compliance.(19)

During the year, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya informed the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General on many occasions(20) of the negative effects resulting from the aerial embargo imposed in resolution 748(1992). It also renounced terrorism on several occasions and affirmed its acceptance of as well as its readiness to cooperate in implementing Security Council resolution 731(1992).

France transmitted a 16 April letter(21) from the judge in charge of investigating the bombing of UTA flight 772, stating that the Libyan documents on the enquiry into the air attack submitted to him were inconsistent and some of them even showed anomalies; therefore, they had no probative value.

Responding on 26 April,(22) the Counsellor and Investigating Judge of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that the Libyan authorities had instituted an enquiry after establishing the three subjects' identities and informing them of the charges brought against them. They had also discussed with them in detail the indictment brought by the French examining magistrate and the suspicions against them. With regard to the fourth suspect, they presented evidence, by means of official documents, to establish his true name and that he had died more than a year earlier. The Counsellor declared that the Libyan authorities were prepared to cooperate fully with the French magistrate in order to bring the truth to light.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States, in a 27 November declaration,(23) condemned the Jamahiriya's failure to comply with the Security Council's requirements; demanded prompt, complete and unequivocal compliance; expressed determination to intensify their efforts to make the Council sanctions more effective; and called on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to end its defiance of the international community.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 8 December,(24) appealed to the Secretary-General to use his best endeavours to have resolution 748(1992) rescinded, in view of the steps it had taken to implement resolution 731(1992) and the proposals it had put forward regarding the legal prosecution of the two Libyan nationals suspected of being connected with the downing of Pan Am flight 103.

Following adoption of a resolution by the Basic People's Congresses (the Libyan legislative authority) to the effect that they did not object to the two suspects being brought before a just and fair tribunal, the Jamahiriya declared that it had no objection to them appearing of their own accord before United States or British courts and that it was prepared to enter into negotiations, under the Secretary-General's auspices, regarding a trial held in a neutral country.

With regard to UTA flight 772, the Jamahiriya stated that the French and Libyan investigating magistrates had met on a number of occasions, and the French magistrate had examined the records of the Libyan investigation. It was agreed that he should go to the Jamahiriya to complete his investigations, and contacts continued to renew arrangements for such a visit. The Jamahiriya said it had also cooperated with France in respect of its other requests as set forth in December 1991,(3) namely, that the Jamahiriya produce all the material evidence in its possession and facilitate access to all documents that might be useful in establishing the truth; facilitate the necessary contacts for the assembly of witnesses; and authorize the Libyan officials to respond to any request by the examining magistrate for judicial information.

The Jamahiriya also summed up its action taken against terrorism, namely: it had severed relations with all groups and organizations suspected of involvement in terrorist acts; it did not permit its territory, nationals or institutions to be used for such acts and was prepared to impose severe penalties on those proved to have been involved; it had cooperated with the United Kingdom to help trace those elements and organizations accused by the latter of being involved in terrorist acts; and it had facilitated talks between French and Libyan judicial authorities to determine responsibility in the case of the bombing of UTA flight 772.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August and December)

Following consultations held on 12 August and 9 December, the President made identical statements on behalf of the Council members:(25)

"The members of the Security Council held informal consultations on 12 August 1992 (9 December 1992) pursuant to paragraph 13 of resolution 748(1992), by which the Council decided to review every 120 days or sooner, should the situation so require, the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

"After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for modification of the measures of sanctions established in paragraphs 3 to 7 of resolution 748(1992)."

Incident at Venezuela's Embassy in Tripoli

At the request of Venezuela,(26) the Security Council considered on 2 April 1992 the destruction of Venezuela's Embassy in Tripoli. Venezuela reported to the President of the Council(27) that that day a mob of students and people from the street broke into the Embassy shouting slogans against Venezuela because of its vote in the Council in favour of resolution 748(1992) and then ransacked and destroyed the premises. Neither the four Libyan guards assigned to protect the Embassy nor the police of Tripoli intervened to stop the looting and arson.

Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of members of the Council.(28)

Meeting number. SC 3064.

"The Security Council strongly condemns the violent attacks on and destruction of the premises of the Embassy of Venezuela in Tripoli that took place today. The fact that these intolerable and extremely grave events have been directed not only against the Government of Venezuela but also against and in reaction to Security Council resolution 748(1992) underlines the seriousness of the situation.

"The Council demands that the Government of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya take all necessary measures to honour its international legal obligations to ensure the security of the personnel and to protect the property of the Embassy of Venezuela and of all other diplomatic and consular premises or personnel present in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, including those of the United Nations and related organizations, from acts of violence and terrorism.

"The Council further demands that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya pay to the Government of Venezuela immediate and full compensation for the damage caused.

"Any suggestion that those acts of violence were not directed against the Government of Venezuela but against and in reaction to resolution 748(1992) is extremely serious and totally unacceptable."

On 5 April,(29) Venezuela informed the Council that, on that day, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had apologized for the damage to the Embassy, condemned the act and indicated that it would provide compensation.

Chapter II

Disarmament

Throughout 1992, the world moved further away from the environment of the cold war. The change in the international climate and agreements on major arms reductions by the former Soviet Union and the United States had placed disarmament in a significantly different perspective. Rather than being directed at achieving a balance of power between two military alliances, arms control and disarmament were seen more in the broader context of international peace and security. Moreover, arms limitation and disarmament efforts were being woven into the larger fabric of preventive diplomacy, conflict management and peace-building. In that context, the United Nations assumed a new role in international security, arms control and disarmament.

Nuclear disarmament negotiations between the Russian Federation and the United States gained new momentum in 1992. On 1 October, the United States Senate consented to ratification of the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START). The Russian Parliament, on 4 November, also approved the Treaty, with the proviso that ratification would not be completed until Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine had joined the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the Russian Federation had reached accords with them on all aspects of their nuclear forces. A protocol to the START Treaty was signed at Lisbon on 23 May by Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States, under which the four States of the former USSR agreed that, as successor States, they would assume the obligations of the former USSR under START.

On 17 June, at a Washington, D.C., summit meeting, President George Bush of the United States and President Boris Yeltsin of the Russian Federation agreed in principle to further far-reaching reductions in their strategic arms. By the end of 1992, a draft treaty—to be known as START II—was ready for signature by the two parties. Another significant development affecting nuclear disarmament took place on 24 September, when the United States Congress for the first time imposed limitations on nuclear testing and called for the negotiation of a multilateral comprehensive nuclear-test ban by the United States, to be concluded on or before 30 September 1996.

The Conference on Disarmament, a 39-nation multilateral negotiating body, completed, after more than a decade of negotiations, the text of the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction. The landmark agreement would ban chemical weapons and ensure the destruction of declared stocks under a comprehensive verification regime allowing for on-site inspections, by a new international organization, of any facility suspected of non-compliance. It was the first disarmament agreement negotiated within a multilateral framework that provided for eliminating an entire category of weapons of mass destruction. The General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention, to open it for signature in Paris on 13 January 1993 and called on all States to become parties to it at the earliest possible date (resolution 47/39).

The Disarmament Commission, a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, dealt with objective information on military matters; nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons; a regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security; and the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields. In 1992, the Commission successfully concluded the agenda item on objective information on military matters by adopting a set of guidelines and recommendations on the subject, which were subsequently endorsed by the Assembly (resolution 47/54 B).

UN role in disarmament

United Nations machinery

In 1992, the United Nations continued its disarmament efforts mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary organ of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

The existing disarmament machinery, which was agreed on at the Assembly's tenth special session in 1978, its first special session devoted to disarmament, remained essentially the same.(1) In an October report, New Dimensions of Arms Regulation and Disarmament in the Post-Cold War Era,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, referring to the disarmament machinery, stated that the United Nations framework in which disarmament had been pursued was created during the cold war. He recommended reassessing the machinery to meet the new realities and priorities and stressed the need for a coordinated system which would allow the international community to address major disarmament problems promptly, flexibly and efficiently. In addition, the Secretary-General supported a greater role and involvement of the Security Council in disarmament matters.

As a result of widespread interest in examining the existing disarmament machinery, the Assembly, by decision 47/422, decided to reconvene the First Committee in March 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 47/422 without vote.

Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session

At its 81st plenary meeting, on 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, decided:

(a) To reconvene meetings of the First Committee for five working days, from 8 to 12 March 1993 in New York, with the purpose of reassessing the multilateral arms control and disarmament machinery, in particular the respective roles of the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament and their interrelationship, as well as the role of the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat, including ways and means to enhance the functioning and efficiency of the said machinery, bearing in mind the competence of the Security Council in those matters. The aim of the meetings is to conduct the aforementioned reassessment with a view to reaching concrete, agreed recommendations for appropriate action. With respect to the Conference on Disarmament, it is understood that the primary responsibility for making recommendations on its future rests with that body;

(b) To invite Member States to provide their views on the report of the Secretary-General entitled "New dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold war era" no later than 31 January 1993, and to request the Secretary-General to submit a compilation of those views to the General Assembly for consideration at the reconvened meetings of the First Committee;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to transmit his report entitled "New dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold war era" to the Conference on Disarmament; and the Conference on Disarmament to transmit to the Chairman of the First Committee the results of its consideration of that report by 15 February 1993, as well as a report on the status of its ongoing review of its agenda, composition and methods of work by 20 February 1993;

(d) To request the Chairman of the First Committee, with the assistance of the other officers of the Committee, and the Secretariat, to coordinate the above actions.

General Assembly decision 47/422

9 December 1992 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/47/693) without vote, 25 November (meeting 40); draft by Chairman (A/C.1/47/L.53), orally revised; agenda item 63. Financial implications. ACABQ, A/47/7/Add.11; 5th Committee, A/47/761; S-G, A/C.1/47/L.55, A/C.5/47/63.

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, at its 1992 session (New York, 20 April-11 May) held eight plenary meetings under the chairmanship of André Erdős (Hungary). (3) It also held an organizational session on 8 December to elect its officers and consider the provisional agenda for its 1993 session.

The Commission's agenda included items on objective information on military matters; nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons; regional disarmament within the context of global security; and the role of science and technology in international security, disarmament and related fields. All of those items were carried over from the Commission's 1991 session.(4)

The Commission had established a Committee of the Whole and four working groups to deal with its agenda items. Working Group I dealt with objective information on military matters and adopted guidelines and recommendations on the subject which were annexed to the Commission's report to the General Assembly (see resolution 47/54 B). In Working Group II, discussions continued on nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons on the basis of four subjects resented by the Chairman of the Group in 1991.(5) Working Group III continued consideration of a regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security based on its Chairman's paper presented in 1991.(6) Discussion focused on the first two of the five topics in the paper: the relationship between regional disarmament and global security and arms limitation and disarmament; and principles and guidelines. Two papers presented by the Chairman were annexed to the Commission's report. Working Group IV continued to debate the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields, focusing on four aspects of the item identified in 1991.(7)

Sweden proposed the inclusion of a new item in the agenda of the 1993 session entitled "General guidelines for non-proliferation, with special emphasis on weapons of mass destruction".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/54 A without vote.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the annual report of the Disarmament Commission,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Noting the support for the proposal to include a new item in the agenda of the 1993 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission, entitled "General guidelines for non-proliferation, with special emphasis on weapons of mass destruction",

Also noting the support for consideration of the inclusion of a new item in the agenda of the 1994 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission, entitled "International arms transfer, with particular reference to resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991",

Recognizing the need to improve further the effective functioning of the Disarmament Commission, and bearing in mind the experience of the 1992 substantive session, when the agenda item on objective information on military matters was successfully concluded,

Recalling its resolution 46/38 A of 6 December 1991,

1. Takes note of the annual report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Commends the Disarmament Commission for its adoption by consensus of a set of guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, which were recommended to the General Assembly for consideration, pursuant to the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";^a

3. Notes with satisfaction that the Disarmament Commission has successfully implemented its reform programme and has made considerable progress on other substantive items on its agenda;

4. Recalls the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items on its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

6. Stresses the importance for the Disarmament Commission to work on the basis of a relevant agenda of disarmament topics, thereby enabling the Commission to concentrate its efforts and thus optimize its progress on specific subjects in accordance with resolution 37/78 H;

7. Recommends that the Disarmament Commission, at its 1992 organizational session, adopt the following items for consideration at its 1993 substantive session:

- (1) Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons;
- (2) Regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security;
- (3) The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields;

8. Also requests that the Disarmament Commission, at the aforementioned organizational meeting, consider the following matters:

(a) The objective of moving the agenda of the Disarmament Commission to a three-item phased approach with one item in the first year of consideration, one item in its middle year and one item in its concluding year, with the result that, in principle, one item is added and one item is concluded, respectively, at each substantive session;

(b) That, in furtherance of the foregoing, the 1993 substantive session should be considered as a transitional year and therefore should consider whether:

- (i) Two items on the current agenda, namely, those items referred to in paragraph 7 (2) and (3) above, respectively, should be concluded;
- (ii) One item, namely, that referred to in paragraph 7(i) above, should be held over for conclusion at the next substantive session in 1994;
- (iii) One new item should be included in the substantive agenda;

9. Further requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1993 and to submit a substantive report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services to that end;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

9 December 1992 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/47/693) without vote, 20 November (meeting 37); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/47/L.4), amended by 23 nations (A/C.1/47/L.48), orally revised; agenda item 63 (a).

Sponsors of draft: Armenia, Brazil, Cameroon, Egypt, Finland, Hungary, Malaysia, Nepal, Netherlands, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Sweden, Uruguay.

Sponsors of amendments: Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Guatemala, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Mauritius, Mongolia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Philippines, Portugal, Spain.

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a 39-member multilateral negotiating body, met three times in 1992 at Geneva (21 January-27 March, 11 May-26 June, 20 July-3 September).(8) It held 30 formal plenary meetings and 16 informal meetings during which it considered: a nuclear-test ban; cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; chemical weapons; prevention of an arms race in outer space; security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

In 1992, intensive efforts were made to conclude, as a priority task, the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction (see below under "Major trends and developments"). Accordingly, Conference negotiations concentrated on the activities of the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons. The Committee completed the negotiations and transmitted the draft text of the Convention to the Conference for its consideration.(9)

As far as the other items were concerned, no significant substantive progress was made. The Conference re-established ad hoc committees on security assurances to non-nuclear weapon States, radiological weapons, chemical weapons and the prevention of an arms race in outer space. (Details of those questions are discussed elsewhere in this chapter.)

At its plenary meetings, the Conference continued to consider the comprehensive programme of disarmament. Informal consultations were held, but as there had been no significant changes in the positions of delegations, they were inconclusive. It was agreed that the organizational frame work for dealing with the item would be considered in 1993.

The Conference also held four informal open-ended consultations on its improved and effective functioning under the chairmanship of Ahmad Kamal (Pakistan). General agreement emerged on ways to improve its function in the areas of report writing, reduction of plenary meetings, organization of work of ad hoc committees, tenure of presidency, avoidance of duplication in documentation, and agenda and membership. As to the latter issue, the President of the Conference conducted open-ended consultations on 8 December(10) during which he noted a trend in favour of expanding the Conference by some 20 members. However, differing views were held concerning the criteria for selecting candidates. A wide majority of delegations supported or were prepared to support changes in the agenda. The President was to report to the Conference in 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/54 E without vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community, has the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Considering, in this respect, that the present international climate should give additional impetus to multilateral negotiations with the aim of reaching concrete agreements,

Welcoming the conclusion of negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, which has reaffirmed the need for and the importance of the Conference as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community,

Noting with satisfaction the results achieved so far on the subject of the improved and effective functioning of the Conference on Disarmament, including the decision to carry out consultations on the issues of the membership and agenda of the Conference, and the decision of the Conference to continue the process at its 1993 session,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Welcomes the determination of the Conference on Disarmament to fulfil that role in the light of the evolving international situation with a view to making early substantive progress on priority items of its agenda;

3. Encourages the ongoing review of the agenda, membership and methods of work of the Conference on Disarmament;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

9 December 1992 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/47/693) without vote, 12 November (meeting 31); draft by Belgium, as President of Conference on Disarmament (A/C.1/47/L.28/Rev.1); agenda item 63 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 1st Committee 3-21, 28, 31; plenary 81.

The Security Council and disarmament

On 31 January 1992, the Security Council met for the first time ever at the level of heads of State and Government (see Chapter I of this section). In a statement made on behalf of all Council members,(11) the Council's President stated that the proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction constituted a threat to international peace and security. Specific concerns were expressed regarding the danger of further proliferation of nuclear and chemical weapons, as well as of conventional weapons, and the danger of the spread of military technology.

At the conclusion of a meeting held in Washington, D.C., on 28 and 29 May, the five permanent members of the Security Council adopted interim guidelines related to weapons of mass destruction,⁽¹²⁾ by which they undertook not to assist any non-nuclear-weapon State in developing or acquiring nuclear weapons; to notify the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) of the export to a non-nuclear-weapon State of any nuclear materials and to place them under IAEA safeguards; to exercise restraint in the transfer of sensitive nuclear facilities, technology and weapons-usable materials, equipment or facilities; not to assist any recipient whatsoever in developing or acquiring chemical weapons, or to export material or technology that could be used for manufacturing chemical weapons; and to observe similar restrictions concerning biological weapons. In addition, they agreed on other restrictions regarding the export of items that might be used in manufacturing weapons of mass destruction.

In his October report, New Dimensions of Arms Regulation and Disarmament in the Post-cold War Era,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he supported greater Security Council involvement in disarmament matters, in particular the enforcement of non-proliferation. He recalled that under the Charter (see APPENDIX II), the Military Staff Committee was to provide assistance to the Council on all questions relating, inter alia, to the regulation of armaments and possible disarmament.

Disarmament agreements

Parties and signatories

In October 1992, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements,⁽¹³⁾ based on information received from the depositaries of those instruments. It listed the parties to and signatories of those agreements as at 31 July 1992.

As at 31 December 1992, the following numbers of States had become parties to the multilateral agreements covered in the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which they were initially signed or opened for signature).⁽¹⁴⁾

(Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (1925): 131 parties
The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 41 parties
Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963): 119 parties

Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1967): (15) 91 parties

Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) (1967): 33 parties

Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968): (16) 156 parties

Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Seabed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (1971): (17) 87 parties

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1972): (18) 124 parties

Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (1977): (19) 57 parties

Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1979): (20) 8 parties

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (1981): 35 parties

South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) (1985): 13 parties

Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (1990): 29 parties

Treaty on Open Skies (1992): 2 parties

Major trends and developments

The year 1992 was marked by unprecedented achievements in arms limitation and disarmament, reflecting the broad trends of international politics at a time of global transition towards new solutions to security problems. The adversarial relationship between East and West was a thing of the past. In Europe, determined efforts were made to strengthen institutions for cooperation and peace so as to give new impetus to the realization of a community of free and democratic States. Events in other parts of the world showed that, in spite of widespread turmoil and civil strife, the main trend was towards political and economic liberalization and new approaches to peace and security.

Those broad trends were reflected and analysed in three basic post-cold war documents of 1992 dealing with matters of international security and disarmament: a statement adopted by the Security Council at its Summit Meeting on 31 January (see Chapter I of this section);(1) a report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council on preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping, known as An Agenda for Peace (see Chapter I of this section);(2) and a subsequent report of the Secretary-General, New Dimensions of Arms Regulation and Disarmament in the Post-Cold War Era.(3) The three documents together provided, for the first time since 1978, when the General Assembly adopted the Final Document of the first special session on disarmament,(4) a comprehensive statement on strengthening international peace and security and on the contribution that arms limitation and disarmament could make to achieve that goal.

In his October report, New Dimensions of Arms Regulation and Disarmament in the Post-Cold War Era,(3) the Secretary-General discussed three concepts as the foundation of an enhanced international effort in disarmament and arms regulation: integration (disarmament in the new international environment), globalization (enhancing the multilateral approach), and revitalization (building on past achievements). The Secretary-General concluded that, with the development of the disarmament process, an entirely new set of problems—post-disarmament issues—were being encountered, namely the conversion of military capacities to peaceful uses, the safe destruction of weapons and technical and financial facilities to make the transition in a balanced manner.

Chemical weapons

After more than a decade of negotiations, the Conference on Disarmament adopted the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction in 1992. It was the first disarmament agreement negotiated within a multilateral framework that provided for eliminating an entire category of weapons of mass destruction.

Conference on Disarmament consideration. The Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, re-established by the Conference on Disarmament on 21 January, held 32 meetings between 24 January and 26 August under its mandate to continue negotiations on a multilateral convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction, with a view to achieving final agreement during 1992.(5) Representatives of 45 States not members of the

The negotiating framework established by the Committee was designed to concentrate on the main outstanding issues. It set up a working group on verification in the chemical industry, and friends of the Chair conducted consultations on legal and organizational issues; economic and technological development; technical issues; old and abandoned chemical weapons; the seat of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (see below, under “Convention on chemical weapons”); the composition and decision-making process of the Executive Council of the organization; and the destruction of chemical weapons and chemical weapons production facilities. The Chairman of the Committee conducted negotiations on challenge inspection procedures, and an editing and drafting group was established.

On 3 September,(6) the Conference on Disarmament adopted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee(7) and its appendix containing the draft convention and a text on establishing a preparatory commission for the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (see below, under “Convention on chemical weapons”). The report also incorporated statements of members on their positions regarding the Convention as a whole and on specific provisions. The Conference agreed by consensus to transmit the draft Convention to the General Assembly.

The issue of export controls for chemical substances and equipment with a potential for use as chemical weapons constituted a difficult problem in the negotiations on the Convention. Developing States in particular had requested that all control mechanisms, which in their view were discriminatory, be abolished for States parties to the Convention, specifically an export control regime established by the Australia Group (Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States). In an attempt to help address those concerns, members of the Australia Group underlined, in an August statement,(8) their readiness to review, in the light of the implementation of the Convention, measures taken by them to prevent the spread of chemical substances and equipment for purposes contrary to the objectives of the Convention, with the aim of removing such measures for the benefit of States parties to the Convention acting in full compliance with their obligations under it.

Other action. Progress was registered in bilateral consultations (Washington, D.C., 17 June 1992) between Presidents George Bush of the United States and Boris Yeltsin of the Russian Federation regarding chemical weapons. In their joint statement of 17 June,(9) they stressed their continuing commitment to the global elimination of chemical weapons. The two parties underscored their support for a joint memorandum signed in Wyoming (United States) in 1989(10) on phased confidence-building measures in the area of chemical weapons destruction, and agreed to implement the new cooperative provisions for detailed data exchange and inspections included in it. They also agreed to update the bilateral chemical weapons destruction Agreement of 1990(11) and to bring it into force promptly. In addition, both States entered into the Agreement concerning the Safe and Secure Transportation, Storage and Destruction of Weapons and the Prevention of Weapons Proliferation, which, among other things, provided for assistance to the Russian Federation in destroying nuclear, chemical and other weapons; transporting and storing such weapons safely and securely in connection with their destruction; and establishing additional verification measures against the proliferation of such weapons that posed a risk of proliferation.(9) To accomplish the objectives regarding chemical weapons, both States signed the Agreement concerning the Safe, Secure and Ecologically Sound Destruction of Chemical Weapons, in Washington, D.C., on 30 July 1992.(12) Its main objective was to assist the Russian Federation to destroy chemical weapons in accordance with existing or future agreements between the two States.

On 29 May 1992, the five permanent members of the Security Council adopted, in Washington, D.C., interim guidelines related to weapons of mass destruction.(13) As to chemical weapons, they declared that they would observe and consult on the following guidelines: to not assist, directly or indirectly, in the development, acquisition, manufacture, testing, stockpiling or deployment of chemical weapons by any recipient whatsoever; and to not export equipment, materials, services or technology which could be used in the manufacture of chemical weapons except when satisfied, for example, by recipient country guarantees or confirmation by the recipient, that such exports would not contribute to the development or acquisition of chemical weapons.

A chemical weapons regional seminar (Sydney, Australia, 21-23 June), sponsored by Australia and attended by countries of South-East Asia and the South Pacific, considered progress towards eliminating chemical weapons and preventing their development.(14)

Notes by the Secretary-General. Allegations of the use of chemical Weapons were reported in January by Mozambique(15) and in June by Azerbaijan.(16) The Secretary-General nominated experts to conduct missions to both countries to investigate the allegations. By notes of 12 June(17) and 24 July,(18) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the reports of the experts on the investigations in Mozambique and Azerbaijan, respectively. (For details of the reports on Mozambique and Azerbaijan, see PART TWO, Chapters I and III, respectively.)

Convention on chemical weapons

The Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction(7) consisted of a preamble, 24 articles and three annexes. The Convention was to enter into force 180 days after the date of the deposit of the sixty-fifth instrument of ratification, but in no case earlier than two years after its opening for signature in January 1993.

The Convention established the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, with its headquarters at The Hague (Netherlands), to ensure the implementation of the Convention's provisions, including those for international verification of compliance with it, and to provide a forum for consultation and cooperation among States parties. The Organization comprised a Conference of the States Parties, the principal decision-making body; a 41-member Executive Council comprising representatives of five regional groups, to act as the executive organ of the Organization and to supervise its activities; and a Technical Secretariat, headed by a Director-General, to conduct the organization's practical work. The principal component of the Secretariat was its inspectorate, responsible for carrying out the Convention's verification provisions. A Preparatory Commission for the Organization was established to prepare for the implementation of the Convention and the first session of the Conference of the States Parties.

The Convention's articles dealt with the general obligations of States parties; definitions and criteria; declarations; chemical weapons; chemical weapons production facilities; activities not prohibited under the Convention; national implementation measures; the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons; consultations, cooperation and fact-finding; assistance and protection against chemical weapons; economic and technological development; measures to redress a situation and to ensure compliance, including sanctions; the Convention's relation to other international agreements; settlement of disputes; amendments; duration and withdrawal; status of the annexes (see below); signature; ratification; accession; entry into force; reservations; depositary; and authentic texts.

Three annexes-Annex on chemicals, Annex on Implementation and Verification and Annex on the Protection of Confidential Information—formed an integral part of the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/39 without vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling the long-standing determination of the international community to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons, and their destruction, as well as the continuing support for measures to uphold the authority of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, as expressed by consensus in many previous resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolution 46/35 C of 6 December 1991, in which the Assembly strongly urged the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of the highest priority, to resolve outstanding issues so as to achieve a final agreement on a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction during its 1992 session,

Bearing in mind the Final Declaration of the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States,^a held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, in which participating States stressed their determination to prevent any recourse to chemical weapons by completely eliminating them,

Determined to make progress towards general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, including the prohibition and elimination of all types of weapons of mass destruction,

Convinced, therefore, of the urgent necessity of a total ban on chemical weapons, so as to abolish an entire category of weapons of mass destruction, and thus to eliminate the risk to mankind of renewed use of these inhumane weapons,

Welcoming the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by the Conference on Disarmament and contained in its report, the result of many years of intensive negotiations, which constitutes an historic achievement in the field of arms control and disarmament,

Also convinced that the Convention, particularly as adherence to it approaches universality, will contribute to the maintenance of international peace and improve the security of all States and that it therefore merits the strong support of the entire international community,

Further convinced that the implementation of the Convention should promote expanded international trade, technological development and economic cooperation in the chemical sector, in order to enhance the economic and technological development of all States parties,

Determined to ensure the efficient and cost-effective implementation of the Convention,

Recalling the support for the prohibition of chemical weapons expressed in the declaration by representatives of the world's chemical industry at the Government-Industry Conference against Chemical Weapons, held at Canberra from 18 to 22 September 1989,^b

Bearing in mind the relevant references to the Convention in the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^c

Welcoming the invitation of the President of the French Republic to participate in a ceremony to sign the Convention in Paris on 13 January 1993,

1. Commends the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction as contained in the report of the Conference on Disarmament;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention, to open it for signature in Paris on 13 January 1993;

3. Calls upon all States to sign and, thereafter, according to their respective constitutional processes, to become parties to the Convention at the earliest possible date, thus contributing to its rapid entry into force and to the early achievement of universal adherence;

4. Also calls upon all States to ensure the effective implementation of this unprecedented, global, comprehensive and verifiable multilateral disarmament agreement, thereby enhancing cooperative multilateralism as a basis for international peace and security;

5. Also request the Secretary-General to provide such services as may be requested by the signatory States to initiate the work of the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the status of signatures and ratifications of the Convention.

Non-proliferation

In 1992, there were some positive developments concerning nuclear non-proliferation, such as the accession of the remaining two nuclear-weapon States, China and France, to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT),(19) which had entered into force on 5 March 1970, and the preparations for a conference, to be held in 1995, to review the Treaty's operation and decide on its extension. However, there were still States with significant nuclear programmes that were not parties to NPT, some of which were alleged to have nuclear weapons, and some parties to the Treaty had programmes that were not under IAEA safeguards. In addition, there were differences of view among nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States regarding the Treaty's future.

The United Nations continued to investigate incidents of the proliferation of weapons which were prohibited under international law in general or on the basis of treaty obligations. Thus, the United Nations Special Commission and IAEA inspectors carried out inspections in Iraq on the basis of a 1991 Security Council resolution regarding nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and missiles.(20) (See PART TWO, Chapter III.)

Although no specific item concerning non-proliferation in all its aspects appeared on the agendas of either the Disarmament Commission or the Conference on Disarmament, the issue was discussed in both bodies in the context of a number of agenda items.

Communications. A number of bilateral and unilateral declarations were transmitted to the Secretary-General in 1992 by States on their policies regarding the proliferation of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, conventional weapons, and science and technology with military applications: by Argentina on 28 April,(21) Argentina and Brazil on 18 February,(22) the Russian Federation on 28 and 29 January,(23) and Sweden on 27 April.(24)

The Second Meeting of the Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 30 and 31 January) in its Declaration on Non-Proliferation and Arms Transfers, stressed the Ministers' readiness to support international cooperation to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the control of missile technology. It also stated that build-ups of conventional weapons beyond defence needs posed a threat to international peace and security.

On 20 July,(26) the United States transmitted to the Conference on Disarmament a statement of 13 July by the United States President on a non-proliferation initiative. The initiative included a decision not to produce plutonium and highly enriched uranium for nuclear explosive purposes and a number of proposals to strengthen international actions against those contributing to the spread of weapons of mass destruction and the missiles that deliver them.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

Accessions

In 1992, the remaining two nuclear-weapon States, China and France, acceded to NPT, as did Azerbaijan, Estonia, Latvia, Myanmar, Namibia, Niger, Slovenia and Uzbekistan, bringing the total number of States parties to 156 at year's end.(27)

Preparations for the 1995

Review Conference on NPT

Following the entry into force on 5 March 1970 of NPT,(19) quinquennial review conferences were held in 1975,(28) 1980,(29) 1985(30) and 1990,(31) as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty.

On 22 October, the States parties to NPT formed a preparatory committee for a conference, to be held in 1995, to review the operation of the Treaty and decide on its extension. The Treaty called for holding a conference 25 years after its entry into force to decide whether it should continue in force indefinitely or be extended for an additional fixed period or periods. The preparatory committee was scheduled to hold its first meeting in May 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 A by recorded vote.

Preparatory Committee for the 1995 Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2373(XXII) of 12 June 1968, the annex to which contains the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Noting the provisions of article X, paragraph 2, of that Treaty, requiring the holding of a conference twenty-five years after the entry into force of the Treaty, to decide whether the Treaty shall continue in force indefinitely or shall be extended for an additional fixed period or periods,

Noting also the provisions of article VIII, paragraph 3, concerning the convening of review conferences, which provides for quinquennial review conferences,

Noting further that the last review conference took place in 1990,

Recalling that the Treaty entered into force on 5 March 1970,

Recalling also its decision 46/413 of 6 December 1991, by which it took note of the intent of the parties to form a preparatory committee in 1993 for the conference called for in article X, paragraph 2, of the Treaty,

1. Take note of the decision of the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, following appropriate consultations, to form a preparatory committee for a conference to review the operation of the Treaty and to decide on its extension, as called for in article X, paragraph 2, and also as provided for in article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty;

2. Notes that the Preparatory Committee will be open to all the parties to the Treaty and, if the Preparatory Committee so decides at the outset of its first session, to States not parties, as observers, and will hold its first meeting in New York from 10 to 14 May 1993;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the 1995 Conference and its Preparatory Committee.

Against: None.

*Later advised the Secretariat that it had intended to abstain.

Regional non-proliferation accords

Two regional nuclear non-proliferation treaties were in existence in 1992: the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga).

During the year, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines became party to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, bringing the total number of parties to 33 at year's end. On 24 August 1992, France ratified Additional Protocol I of the Treaty concerning the Treaty's application to territories in the region for which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility. France had been the only one of four States to which the Protocol was open that had not ratified it prior to 1992. (Other States having ratified the Protocol were the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States.) The General Assembly, by resolution 47/61, welcomed France's ratification of the Protocol. (For details on amendments to the Treaty adopted in 1992, see below under "Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament".)

There were no new parties to the Treaty of Rarotonga in 1992; the number of parties remained at 13.

Strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1992, the Conference on Disarmament(6) considered effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons—also known as negative security assurances. On 21 January,(32) it re-established an ad hoc committee on the subject, which held three formal meetings between 22 June and 3 August.

In its conclusions and recommendations,(33) the Ad Hoc Committee noted that difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests of nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States persisted and that the complex nature of the issues involved continued to prevent agreement on a common formula. Recognizing the importance of the question and the need to take a fresh look at it to enable the Committee to fulfil its mandate as soon as possible, it was agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee should be re-established at the beginning of the 1993 session of the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/50 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Also convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognising that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing also that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament,^a submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session,^b the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the decision contained in paragraph 47, chapter II, of the Final Document adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^c as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul from 4 to 8 August 1991,^d calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990 and 46/32 of 6 December 1991,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

^aThe Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Regional disarmament

In 1992, a number of developments took place at the regional level, confirming once again that the regional approach to disarmament was a key element in the achievement of international peace and security. (For further information on regional developments in the nuclear field, see below under "Nuclear disarmament".)

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his June 1992 report on preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping, known as An Agenda for Peace,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, in discussing essential measures for reducing the likelihood of conflict between States, asked all regional organizations to consider further confidence-building measures which might be applied in their areas. In that connection, he indicated that he would undertake periodic consultations on confidence-building measures with parties to potential, current or past disputes and with regional organizations, offering such advisory assistance as the Secretariat could provide. He emphasized that regional arrangements and organizations had an important role in early warning and invited regional organizations that had not yet sought United Nations observer status to do so and to be linked with the Organization's security mechanisms.

Subsequently, in his October report, New Dimensions of Arms Regulation and Disarmament in the Post-Cold War Era,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General addressed the subject of regional disarmament in the new international environment, stressing that arms limitation could have a significant role in peace-keeping and peace-building operations.

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1992, the Disarmament Commission⁽³⁴⁾ considered the item entitled "regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security", which was discussed by a working group of the Commission from 22 April to 8 May and in a number of informal consultations. In addition to the papers of the 1991 session,⁽³⁵⁾ the Group had before it new documents submitted by Cuba⁽³⁶⁾ and South Africa.⁽³⁷⁾ The group based its deliberations on a paper presented by its Chairman to the Commission's 1991 session,⁽³⁵⁾ while also taking new proposals into consideration. Discussions focused on two of the five topics in the Chairman's 1991 paper: the relationship between regional disarmament and global security and arms limitation and disarmament; and principles and guidelines. Following extensive consideration of the topics, the Chairman presented two papers for consideration by the Group, which were annexed to the Commission's report. Further consideration of the item was scheduled for the Commission's 1993 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 G without vote.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/116 U and 44/117 B of 15 December 1989, 45/58 M of 4 December 1990 and 46/36 F of 6 December 1991,

Considering that the regional approach to disarmament is one of the most important means by which States can contribute to the strengthening of international security, arms limitation and disarmament,

Recognizing that the regional and global approaches complement each other and can be pursued simultaneously in the promotion of regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that disarmament can be carried out only in a climate of confidence based on mutual respect and aimed at ensuring better relations founded on justice, solidarity and cooperation,

Noting that the consumption of resources for potentially destructive purposes is in stark contrast to the need for social and economic development and that reduction in military expenditure following, inter alia, the conclusion of regional disarmament agreements could entail benefits in both the social and economic fields,

Considering that regional disarmament measures should be aimed at establishing a military balance at the lowest level while not diminishing the security of each State and at eliminating as a matter of priority the capability for large-scale offensive action and surprise attacks,

Noting also that disarmament measures in one region should not lead to increased arms transfers to other regions or extend the military imbalances and/or tensions from one area to other areas,

Considering also that confidence-building and transparency measures are essential elements in the implementation of regional disarmament,

Persuaded that verification measures are important to ensure compliance with regional agreements on arms control and disarmament,

1. Reaffirms that the regional approach to disarmament is one of the essential elements in the global efforts to strengthen international peace and security, arms limitation and disarmament;

2. Is convinced of the importance and effectiveness of regional disarmament measures taken at the initiative of States of the region and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to the security and stability of all States, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in compliance with international law and existing treaties;

3. Affirms that comprehensive political and peaceful settlement of regional conflicts and disputes can contribute to the reduction of tension and the promotion of regional peace, security and stability as well as of arms limitation and disarmament;

4. Stresses the importance of confidence-building measures, including objective information on military matters, in ensuring the success of this process;

5. Affirms also that multifaceted cooperation among States in the region, especially encompassing political, economic, social and cultural fields, can be conducive to the strengthening of regional security and stability;

6. Note with satisfaction the important progress made in various regions of the world through the adoption of arms limitation, peace, security and cooperation agreements, including those related to the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction, and encourages States in the regions concerned to continue implementing these agreements;

7. Recognizes the useful role played by the regional centres of the United Nations;

8. Encourages States of the same region to examine the possibility of creating, on their own initiative, regional mechanisms and/or institutions for the establishment of measures in the framework of an effort of regional disarmament or for the prevention and the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts with the assistance, if requested, of the United Nations;

9. Believes that regional initiatives should enjoy the support of all States of the region concerned and the respect of those outside that region;

10. Invites and encourages all States to conclude, whenever possible, agreements on arms limitation and confidence-building measures at the regional level, including those conducive to avoiding the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990 and 46/36 I of 6 December 1991 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation at regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of smaller States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures, at regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(38) the Secretary-General in October submitted a report on regional confidence-building measures,(39) in which he stated that, on 28 May, he had established the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa under United Nations auspices to develop confidence-building measures and encourage arms limitation and development in Central Africa. He had also appointed a permanent Secretary of the Committee, which held a ministerial-level meeting (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 27-31 July) to elect its officers and adopt its rules of procedure and programme of work. The programme of work comprised the classification of confidence-building and security measures according to priority in such areas as preventive diplomacy, peace-building, peacemaking and peace-keeping, training of peace-keeping personnel and compliance and verification. The Secretary-General noted that discussions held during the Committee's meeting and its programme of work had paved the way for effective collaboration between the United Nations and the member States of the Economic Community of Central African States to promote and consolidate peace in the subregion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/53 F by recorded vote.

Regional confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the United Nations and its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with its Charter,

Bearing in mind the guidelines for general and complete disarmament adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 43/78 H and 43/85 of 7 December 1988, 44/21 of 15 November 1989, 45/58 M of 4 December 1990 and 46/37 B of 6 December 1991,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to regional disarmament and to international security, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the establishment by the Secretary-General on 28 May 1992 of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, the purpose of which is to encourage arms limitation, disarmament, non-proliferation and development in the subregion,

Bearing in mind also the appointment by the Secretary-General of a permanent Secretary of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional confidence-building measures, which deals chiefly with the organizational meeting of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, held at Yaoundé from 27 to 31 July 1992 under the auspices of the United Nations;

2. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and sub-regional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and non-proliferation measures at regional and subregional levels in Central Africa;

3. Welcomes the programme of work including confidence-building measures adopted by the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States at the organizational meeting of the Standing Advisory Committee;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance to the Central African States in implementing the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Regional confidence-building measures".

Asia

North-East Asia

In North-East Asia, the safeguards agreement between IAEA and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea entered into force on 10 April 1992. During the year, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, which were parties to NPT and had also signed the basic IAEA safeguards agreement, were engaged in the process of implementing two bilateral accords: the Agreement on Reconciliation, Non-aggression and Exchanges and Cooperation between the South and the North; and the Joint Declaration of the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula,⁽⁴⁰⁾ both of which entered into force in February 1992. The Agreement established a South-North Joint Military Commission with a mandate to negotiate confidence-building measures and, ultimately, a reduction in armaments. The Joint Declaration banned nuclear weapons from the peninsula as well as nuclear reprocessing and uranium enrichment facilities. As part of the Agreement, the two parties were negotiating, through a Joint Nuclear Control Commission, a bilateral inspection regime to complement IAEA inspections.

As a result of inspection activities conducted under the IAEA safeguards agreement, inconsistencies between the information provided by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and IAEA findings began to emerge in July 1992.⁽⁴¹⁾ In a meeting at Vienna (30 November and 1 December), IAEA officials advised the Minister of Atomic Energy of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of the Agency's concerns. Subsequently, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea objected to an IAEA request to revisit a site, emphasizing that the location was on a military site not relevant to the country's nuclear activities. The IAEA Director-General stated that the Agency had no interest in military, non-nuclear aspects of any site to be visited, but that a site could not be exempted from visits or inspections on the basis of its military character if, as was the case in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Agency had reason to believe such access to be relevant to the implementation of the safeguards agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/53 B without vote.

Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in South-East Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the United Nations and its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with its Charter,

Recalling also the Ten Principles adopted by the Asian-African Conference, held at Bandung on 25 April 1955, the Declaration of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, signed at Bangkok in August 1967, and the Singapore Declaration of 1992 adopted by the Association of South-East Asian Nations at its fourth summit meeting, held at Singapore on 27 and 28 January 1992,^a

Noting that the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in South-East Asia, signed at Bali on 24 February 1976, which came into force on 15 July 1976 in respect of the Republic of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Republic of the Philippines, the Republic of Singapore and the Kingdom of Thailand, and on 7 January 1984 in respect of Brunei Darussalam, was registered with the United Nations on 20 October 1976,

Noting also that Papua New Guinea acceded to the Treaty on 5 July 1989 and that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam and the Lao People's Democratic Republic acceded to the Treaty on 22 July 1992,

Noting further that the purpose of the Treaty is to promote perpetual peace, everlasting amity and cooperation among the peoples of South-East Asia, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including, inter alia, mutual respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all nations, non-interference in the internal affairs of all nations, peaceful settlement of differences and disputes and renunciation of the threat or use of force,

Aware that the Treaty includes provisions for the peaceful settlement of disputes which are in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the Treaty provides a strong foundation for regional confidence-building and for regional cooperation and that it is consistent with the call by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", for a closer relationship between the United Nations and regional associations,

Endorses the purposes and principles of the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in South-East Asia and its provisions for the peaceful settlement of regional disputes and for regional cooperation in order to achieve peace, amity and friendship among the peoples of South-East Asia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, which are consistent with the current climate of enhancing regional and international cooperation.

Europe

The 29 parties to the 1990 Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE)(42) met in 1992 and signed the Final Document of the Extraordinary Conference of the States Parties to the CFE Treaty (Oslo, Norway, 5 June).(27) The document stated in part that the understandings, notifications, confirmations and commitments contained or referred to in the Final Document and its Annexes A and B, together with the deposit of instruments of verification by all the States parties, were deemed as fulfilling the requirements for the Treaty's entry into force. Annex A contained understandings and changes to Treaty wording made necessary by the dissolution of the USSR. Annex B contained notifications, confirmations and commitments and made some further necessary adjustments.

On 10 July, at the CSCE summit (Helsinki, Finland, 9 and 10 July), the States parties to the Treaty decided to put the Treaty provisionally into force as from 17 July to allow more time for ratification by a number of States. It entered into force formally on 9 November, after all 29 States had ratified it. Shortly after its entry into force, the process of inspecting each party's baseline data began. The Concluding Act of the Negotiation on Personnel Strength of CFE, a politically binding agreement setting out limits on personnel levels decided on by each party and providing for exchanges of information on such forces, was signed on 10 July to be implemented concurrently with the application of the CFE Treaty.

Also at the CSCE meeting at Helsinki, the Heads of State or Government of the 52 participating States adopted the Helsinki Document 1992—The Challenges of Change,(43) reflecting their decision to establish a new CSCE Forum for Security Cooperation at Vienna, with a strengthened conflict-prevention centre, as an integral part of CSCE. (For further details on the CSCE Forum, see below under "Transparency, confidence-building and the Arms Register".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 I without vote.

Confidence- and security-building measures and conventional disarmament in Europe

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,

Stressing that confidence-building and disarmament measures have a positive impact on international security,

Noting the work accomplished in 1992 by the Disarmament Commission on its agenda items entitled "Objective information on military matters" and "Regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security",

Recalling its resolutions 43/75 P of 7 December 1988, 44/116 I of 15 December 1989, 45/58 I of 4 December 1990 and 46/36 G of 6 December 1991,

Reaffirming the great importance of increasing security and stability in Europe through the establishment of a stable, secure and verifiable balance of conventional armed forces at lower levels, as well as through increased openness and predictability of military activities,

Considering that, along with the new political situation in Europe, the positive results of the negotiations on confidence- and security-building measures, as well as those on conventional armaments and forces, both within the framework of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, have considerably increased confidence and security in Europe, thereby contributing to international peace and security,

Welcoming the new measures agreed upon in these fields among the States signatories of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe and among the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Expressing the hope that the implementation of these decisions will contribute to the prevention or settlement of crises in Europe, including those due to acts of aggression or the use of military force in some parts of the continent,

1. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the process of disarmament and the strengthening of confidence and security in Europe:

2. welcomes in particular:

(a) The decision of the States signatories of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe to implement this Treaty, as well as the recent Concluding Act of the Negotiations on Personnel Strength of Conventional Armed Forces in Europe;

(b) The signature of the Treaty on Open Skies with the adoption of the Declaration on the Treaty on Open Skies;

(c) The adoption, by the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, of a new significant set of confidence- and security-building measures;

(d) The decision of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, at the Helsinki summit meeting in July 1992, to establish a CSCE Forum for Security Cooperation with a mandate to start new negotiations on arms control, disarmament, and confidence- and security-building; to enhance regular consultation and to intensify cooperation among them on matters related to security, and to further the process of reducing the risk of conflict;

3. Invites all States to consider the possibility of taking appropriate measures with a view to reducing the risk of confrontation and strengthening security, taking due account of their specific regional conditions.

Transparency, confidence-building and the arms register

In 1992, transparency-the systematic provision of information under formal or informal international arrangements—was for the first time on the disarmament agendas of the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament. The sharing of information about military matters sought to enhance confidence, predictability, restraint and, as a result, stability.

Transparency

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In response to 1991 General Assembly requests concerning transparency in armaments,(44) the Conference on Disarmament,(6) at the start of its 1992 session, discussed appropriate organizational arrangements to meet those requests. On 26 May, the Conference decided to add to its 1992 agenda an item entitled “transparency in armaments”.(45) It held five meetings between 9 and 26 June to address interrelated aspects of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of arms, including military holdings and procurement through national production; the elaboration of non-discriminatory practical means to increase openness and transparency in the field; and the problems and the elaboration of practical means to increase openness and transparency related to transfer of high technology with military applications and weapons of mass destruction.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an August report with later addenda,(46) the Secretary-General presented information provided by 23 Member States concerning the implementation of a 1991 General Assembly resolution on transparency in armaments.(44)

Register of Conventional Arms

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in a 1991 resolution,(44) by which it established the Register of Conventional Arms, the Secretary-General in August submitted a report,(47) which dealt with expanding the Register's scope by adding further categories of equipment and including data on military holdings and procurement through national production. The report elaborated the technical procedures for standardized reporting of data on international transfers of seven categories of conventional arms identified in the Register, namely, battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships and missiles and missile launchers. In addition, the report described the manner in which Member States might communicate to the United Nations background information regarding their military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies. It also dealt with the resource implications of developing, upgrading and maintaining the Register and the resource requirements for the initial operation and storage of the Register's data, as well as its subsequent operation. It discussed the needs of the computerized database of the Office for Disarmament Affairs which would be used to process information submitted by Governments for inclusion in the Register.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 L without vote.

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 L of 9 December 1991 entitled “Transparency in armaments”,

Continuing to take the view that an enhanced level of transparency in armaments contributes greatly to confidence-building and security among States and that the establishment of the Register of Conventional Arms, contained in the annex to resolution 46/36 L, constitutes an important step forward in the promotion of transparency in military matters,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's report on the technical procedures and adjustments to the annex to resolution 46/36 L necessary for the effective operation of the Register and on the modalities for its early expansion,

Welcoming also the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters as adopted by consensus in the Disarmament Commission,

Welcoming further the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its agenda item entitled "Transparency in armaments",

1. Declares its determination to ensure the effective operation of the Register of Conventional Arms as provided for in paragraphs 7, 9 and 10 of its resolution 46/36 L;

2. Endorses the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report on the technical procedures and adjustments to the annex to the above-mentioned resolution necessary for the effective operation of the Register;

3. Notes the suggestions offered in the report as a first step in the consideration of modalities for early expansion of the Register;

4. Calls upon all Member States to provide the requested data and information to the Secretary-General by 30 April annually, beginning in 1993;

5. Encourages Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their national arms import and export policies, legislation and administrative procedures, both as regards authorization of arms transfers and prevention of illicit transfers, in conformity with paragraph 18 of its resolution 46/36 L;

6. Reaffirms its request to the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development with the assistance of a group of governmental experts convened in 1994 on the basis of equitable geographical representation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are made available for the United Nations Secretariat to operate and maintain the Register;

8. Encourages the Conference on Disarmament to continue its work undertaken in response to the requests contained in paragraphs 12 to 15 of resolution 46/36 L;

9. Also request the Secretary-General to report on progress made in implementing the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Transparency in armaments".

Information on military matters

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1992, the Disarmament Commission(34) completed its work on objective information on military matters, which had been on its agenda since 1990.(48) The subject was pursued in a working group, which, on 8 May, adopted by consensus guidelines and recommendations on the subject consisting of objectives, principles, scope, mechanisms and recommendations, which were subsequently considered by the Commission itself and submitted to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/54 B without vote.

Guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/75 G of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 E of 15 December 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission, containing the text, adopted by the Commission at its 1992 session, of the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters,

Expressing its appreciation for the work accomplished by the Disarmament Commission in finalizing the text of the guidelines and recommendations,

Reaffirming its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military matters can help to relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States on a global, regional or subregional level and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements,

Appealing to all States to consider the widest possible use of objective information on military matters,

Noting with satisfaction the encouraging results of specific measures agreed upon and implemented in certain regions,

1. Endorse the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters as adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1992 substantive session;

2. Recommends the guidelines and recommendations to all States for implementation, fully taking into account specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned;

3. Invites all States to provide relevant information to the Secretary-General regarding their implementation of the guidelines and recommendations not later than 31 May 1994;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the guidelines and recommendations, on the basis of national reports on accumulated relevant experience, to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Implementation of the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters".

Confidence-building measures

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1990 request of the General Assembly,(49) the Secretary-General presented in September(50) information received from four Governments on implementation of the guidelines for confidence-building measures adopted by the Disarmament Commission in May 1988(51) and endorsed later that year by the Assembly.(52)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/54 D without vote.

Implementation of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/62 F, adopted without a vote on 4 December 1990,

Reconfirming its support for the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level as endorsed in resolution 43/78 H, adopted without a vote on 7 December 1988, welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on experience reported by Member States with the implementation of confidence-building measures,

Noting with satisfaction the encouraging results of specific confidence-building measures agreed upon and implemented in some regions and, in particular, of measures creating confidence by contributing to disarmament and arms control and by promoting constraint in the military field,

Realizing with deep concern that at the same time tensions in other regions rise and that in some places violent armed conflicts have erupted,

Considering that confidence-building measures, especially when applied in a comprehensive manner, can be conducive to achieving structures of security based on cooperation and openness and thus contribute to the wider objective of the renunciation of the threat or use of force,

Welcoming recent progress in the promotion of transparency in the military field as a cornerstone for confidence-building through the finalization in the Disarmament Commission at its 1992 session of its work on the agenda item entitled "Objective information on military matters" and through the inclusion of the item entitled "Transparency in armaments" in the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament.

Bearing in mind that confidence-building measures pursued at the regional level can contribute to the development of global security,

Pointing to the ongoing elaboration and implementation of confidence- and security-building measures within the framework of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe with a view to building on the foundations already laid for cooperative security in Europe,

Aware that there are situations peculiar to specific regions that have a bearing on the nature of the confidence-building measures feasible in those regions,

1. Stresses the need for the development of confidence-building measures as a concrete and continuous process to help to prevent the use of armed force as a means of resolving political conflicts;

2. Recommends the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures to all States for implementation, taking fully into account the specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement and cooperation of the States of the region concerned;

3. Also recommends to all States and regions that have started to implement confidence-building measures to pursue further and strengthen this process;

4. Appeals to all States to consider the widest possible use of confidence-building measures in their international relations, including bilateral, regional and global negotiations, as an important step towards prevention of conflict and, in times of political tension and crisis, as an instrument for peaceful settlement of conflicts;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to pursue actively its work on the agenda item entitled "Transparency in armaments", which includes consideration and elaboration of universal and non-discriminatory practical means to increase openness and transparency in military matters;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to collect relevant information from all Member States;

7. Appeals to all Member States that have not yet done so to make their contribution to the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda for its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Implementation of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures".

Security and cooperation in Europe

The representatives of the 52 participating States of CSCE, meeting at Helsinki, unanimously adopted, on 10 July, the Helsinki Document 1992—The Challenges of Change.(43) The Helsinki Document comprised the Helsinki Summit

Declaration and various decisions, including one on strengthening CSCE institutions and structures and one on establishing a CSCE Forum for Security Cooperation.

The CSCE members decided at the summit meeting to start a new negotiation on arms control, disarmament and confidence- and security-building, enhance regular consultation and intensify cooperation among themselves on matters related to security and further the process of reducing the risk of conflict. To carry out those tasks, they decided to establish a CSCE Forum for Security Cooperation, with a strengthened Conflict Prevention Centre, which opened at Vienna on 22 September.

In 1992, CSCE members also adopted a specific document on confidence- and security-building, known as the Vienna Document 1992, which integrated new measures on the subject with those adopted previously.

Treaty on Open Skies

The Treaty on Open Skies was completed early in 1992 and signed at Helsinki on 24 March.⁽⁵³⁾ The Treaty established a regime for conducting observation flights by States parties over the territories of other States parties, and set forth their rights and obligations in relation to such flights. The Treaty was open to Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Georgia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Poland, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan and all members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) (Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States). By 31 December, the Treaty had been signed by Belarus, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Georgia, Hungary, Kyrgyzstan, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, Ukraine and the 16 NATO members, bringing to 26 the number of signatory States. Under article XVII of the Treaty, for six months after the Treaty's entry into force, any other State participating in CSCE could apply for accession. Six months after the Treaty's entry into force, the Open Skies Consultative Commission could consider the accession of any State which, in the judgement of the Commission, was able and willing to contribute to the objectives of the Treaty.

Verification

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1992,⁽⁵⁵⁾ submitted a report on verification in which he described action taken by the United Nations Secretariat in implementing recommendations made in 1990 by a group of governmental experts.⁽⁵⁶⁾ Among the group's recommendations was the development of a United Nations data bank of published materials and data provided on a voluntary basis by Member States on all aspects of verification and compliance. The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs had established a modest data collection including chapters on the history of negotiations and treaty compliance, information on various procedures for verification and monitoring, data on techniques and instrumentation for verification and monitoring and bibliographic information and data. In addition, he noted that there were plans to compile lists of experts on verification and addresses of institutions, organizations, companies and individuals that could provide expertise, technologies and advice on aspects of verification. Such lists would be stored in a computerized database in the Office for Disarmament Affairs. The report also contained replies from six Governments on action taken to implement the group's recommendations.

Developments also took place in 1992 in the area of biological weapon verification. Following the Third (1991) Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,⁽⁵⁷⁾ an Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts, open to all States parties to the Convention, met at Geneva from 30 March to 10 April and from 23 November to 4 December to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint, with a view to strengthening the Convention. The Group's two sessions, which were attended by representatives of some 50 States parties, were devoted to examining the ability to differentiate between prohibited and permitted activities, the ability of the potential verification measures to resolve ambiguities about compliance, and the technologies of verification measures and their material, manpower and equipment requirements.

In the Final Document of the Third Review Conference, additional measures to strengthen the Convention's authority and enhance confidence in the implementation of its provisions had been endorsed. The States parties were then invited to make available information on their activities relevant to the Convention's provisions on the basis of the annex to the Final Document on confidence-building measures. Of 125 States parties (as of 31 July 1992), 36 provided information on the question in 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/45 without vote.

Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 O of 16 December 1985, 41/86 Q of 4 December 1986, 42/42 F of 30 November 1987, 43/81 B of 7 December 1988 and 45/65 of 4 December 1990,

Noting that the critical importance of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is universally recognized,

Stressing that the issue of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is a matter of concern to all nations,

Recognizing that the United Nations, in accordance with its role and responsibilities established under the Charter, can make a significant contribution in the field of verification, in particular of multilateral agreements,

Affirming its continued support for the sixteen principles of verification drawn up by the Disarmament Commission,^a

Noting that recent developments in international relations have underscored the continuing importance of effective verification of existing and future arms limitation and disarmament agreements, and that some of these developments have significant effects on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification, which require careful and ongoing examination,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to the statement of 31 January 1992 adopted at the conclusion of the first meeting held by the Security Council at the level of Heads of State and Government, containing his analysis and recommendations on ways of strengthening and making more efficient, within the framework and provisions of the Charter, the capacity of the United Nations for preventive diplomacy, peace-making, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building,

Taking note also of the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted on 27 September 1991, and the activities of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts on verification,

Welcoming the conclusion of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, which contains an unprecedented regime of verification,

Recalling that in resolution 45/65 it requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on actions taken by Member States and by the United Nations Secretariat to implement the recommendations contained in the concluding chapter of the report of the Group of Qualified Governmental Experts to Undertake a Study on the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Verification,^b

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on actions to implement the recommendations in the in-depth study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification;

2. Encourages Member States to continue to give active consideration to the recommendations contained in the concluding chapter of the study and to assist the Secretary-General in their implementation where appropriate;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification and in view of significant developments in international relations since that study, to seek the views of Member States on:

(a) Additional actions that might be taken to implement the recommendations contained in the study;

(b) How the verification of arms limitation and disarmament agreements can facilitate United Nations activities with respect to preventive diplomacy, peace-making, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building;

(c) Additional actions with respect to the role of the United Nations in the field of verification, including further studies by the United Nations on this subject;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification".

Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament

Unilateral and bilateral action

In 1992, international attention continued to focus on nuclear-arms limitation, nuclear disarmament and prevention of nuclear war. Positive developments in the nuclear field and especially the radical reductions of the nuclear arsenals of the two major nuclear Powers enabled the General Assembly to adopt in 1992, for the first time, a consensus resolution on bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations (resolution 47/52 K).

Reductions and limitations of the nuclear arsenals of the former USSR and the United States took place under the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START signed by the Presidents of those countries.⁽⁵⁸⁾ In late 1991, the nuclear arsenal of the former USSR passed into the jurisdiction of four newly formed States—Belarus, Kazakhstan, Russian Federation and Ukraine. To address the questions raised by the new situation, those States and the United States signed a Protocol to the 1991 START Treaty on 23 May at Lisbon, Portugal,⁽²⁷⁾ under which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and Ukraine were to assume the obligations of the former USSR under the Treaty. As at 31 December, the START Treaty and the Lisbon Protocol had been ratified by Kazakhstan (2 July). On 1 October, the United States Senate consented to ratification and on 4 November, the Russian Federation approved the Treaty. Both States attached a number of conditions, among them the completion of implementation arrangements among the four former Soviet republics and adherence to NPT by Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine. The Treaty was to enter into force upon the exchange of instruments of ratification by all five parties.

In 1992, President George Bush of the United States and President Boris Yeltsin of the Russian Federation signed, on 17 June in Washington, D.C., a Joint Understanding(9) by which they agreed to substantial further reductions in strategic offensive arms and to convert the provisions of the Joint Understanding into a formal treaty, to be known as START II. According to the Joint Understanding, the reductions would be implemented in two phases, the first of which would be completed within seven years of the entry into force of the START Treaty and the second by 2003, or by 2000 if the United States could contribute to financing the elimination of the Russian Federation's strategic offensive arms. The first phase included the provision that each side would reduce and limit its strategic forces to an aggregate number of warheads between 3,800 and 4,250. Under the second phase, the sides would reduce their overall totals to 3,000 to 3,500 warheads. START II was to enter into force upon the exchange of instruments of ratification, but not prior to the entry into force of START I.

Also in 1992, unilateral moratoriums on nuclear weapons testing were declared or extended by three States. On 8 April, France decided to suspend its testing of nuclear weapons until the end of 1992. On 24 September, the United States Congress decided that no underground test of nuclear weapons might be conducted after 30 September 1992 and before 1 July 1993; the legislation placed limits on the number of tests to be permitted annually after 1 July 1993 and prohibited testing after 30 September 1996 unless a foreign State conducted a nuclear test after that date. In addition, the Russian Federation decided to extend its one-year unilateral moratorium, which had been declared in October 1991,(59) to 1 July 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 K without vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,
Recalling its previous resolutions,

Recognizing the fundamental changes that have taken place with respect to international security, which have permitted agreements on deep reductions in the nuclear armaments of the States possessing the largest inventories of such weapons,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of international tension and to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Stressing the importance of strengthening international peace and security through disarmament,

Emphasizing that nuclear disarmament remains one of the principal tasks of our times, stressing also that it is the responsibility of all States to adopt and implement measures towards the attainment of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Appreciating a number of positive developments in the field of nuclear disarmament, in particular the intermediate-range nuclear forces agreement and the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms,

Noting that there are still significant nuclear arsenals and that the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons, rests with the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the largest nuclear arsenals,

Welcoming the steps that have already been taken by those States to begin the process of reducing the number of nuclear weapons and removing such weapons from a deployed status,

Noting also the new climate of relations between the United States of America and States of the former Soviet Union, which permits them to intensify their cooperative efforts to ensure the safety, security and environmentally sound destruction of nuclear weapons,

Urging that further cooperation be undertaken to accelerate the implementation of agreements and unilateral decisions relating to nuclear disarmament and nuclear-arms reductions,

Welcoming also the reductions made by other nuclear-weapon States in some of their nuclear-weapon programmes, and encouraging all nuclear-weapon States to consider appropriate measures relating to nuclear disarmament,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament should facilitate and complement each other,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the continued implementation of the treaty that was concluded between the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles, in particular at the completion by the parties of the destruction of all their declared missiles subject to elimination under the treaty;

2. Welcomes the signing of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms in Moscow on 31 July 1991, and the accompanying protocol that was signed in Lisbon on 23 May 1992, and urges the parties to take the steps necessary to bring this Treaty and the accompanying protocol into force at the earliest possible date;

3. Also welcomes the unilateral decisions announced by the President of the United States of America and similar unilateral steps announced by the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and subsequently by the President of the Russian Federation to reduce significantly the size and nature of nuclear deployments worldwide, to eliminate certain nuclear weapons and to enhance stability;

4. Further welcomes the Joint Understanding on Further Reductions in Strategic Offensive Arms between the United States of America and the Russian Federation that was announced in Washington on 17 June 1992, and urges that the early conversion of this Joint Understanding into a formal treaty be completed;

5. Encourages the United States of America, the Russian Federation, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine to continue their cooperative efforts aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and strategic offensive arms on the basis of existing agreements, and welcomes the contributions that other States are making to such cooperation as well;

6. Further encourages and supports the Russian Federation and the United States of America in their efforts to reduce their nuclear armaments and to continue to give these efforts the highest priority in order to contribute to the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons;

7. Invites the Russian Federation and the United States of America to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their discussions and in the implementation of their strategic offensive arms agreements and unilateral decisions.

9 December 1992 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/47/691) without vote 13 November (meeting 33); draft by Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia (for Non-Aligned Movement), Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States (A/C.1/47/L.36); agenda item 61(d).

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 1st Committee 3-21, 27, 33; plenary 81.

Also on 9 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/53 E by recorded vote.

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the new trends that have led to an improvement in the international security environment,

Welcoming also the announcements of the significant measures, including unilateral steps, taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America, which could signal the cessation and reversal of the nuclear-arms race,

Welcoming further the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed on 31 July 1991, and the signing of a protocol to this Treaty in which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America have undertaken to give effect to the Treaty, welcoming the Joint Understanding of 17 June 1992 between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on further reductions in their strategic offensive arms, and expressing the hope that it will be followed by an agreement at an early date in this regard,

Welcoming in addition the moratoria on nuclear-weapon tests currently observed by France, the Russian Federation and the United States of America,

Convinced of the urgency of further negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of existing nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute an effective step to prevent the qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that it would at the same time reinforce the favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Convinced also that the undertakings derived from the freeze can be effectively verified,

Welcoming the unilateral steps taken by the nuclear-weapon States for the cessation of the production of highly enriched uranium for nuclear weapons and for the shutting down of reactors producing weapons-grade plutonium,

Noting with concern that all nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any collective action in response to the call made in the relevant resolutions on the question of a nuclear-arms freeze,

Convinced further that the current international situation is most conducive to nuclear disarmament,

1. Urges the Russian Federation and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to reach agreement on an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree, through a joint declaration, to a comprehensive nuclear-arms freeze, whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

- (i) A comprehensive test ban on nuclear weapons and on their delivery vehicles;
- (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate and effective measures and procedures of verification;

3. Requests once again the nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report, or separate reports, to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-eighth session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Nuclear-arms freeze".

9 December 1992 Meeting 81 121-19-27 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/47/692) by recorded vote (92-18-28), 13 November (meeting 33); 6-nation draft (A/C.1/47/L.41); agenda item 62 (c). Sponsors: Bolivia, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Myanmar.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 1st Committee 3-21, 28, 33; plenary 81.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Republic of Moldova, Romania, San Marino, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Armenia, Australia, Austria, China, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Malta, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Samoa, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Sweden, Zaire.

Multilateral action

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1992, the Disarmament Commission(34) re-established its Working Group II to continue consideration of the item entitled "Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons", which it began to consider in 1991.(58) The Group held nine meetings between 22 April and 7 May, and decided to base its work on the following topics: the relationship between the process of nuclear disarmament and international peace and security; review of the steps taken in the process of nuclear disarmament; strengthening the process of nuclear disarmament, necessary conditions and mechanisms required for it; and the role of the United Nations system. New papers on the item were submitted to the Commission by China,(60) Portugal on behalf of the member States of the European Community (EC)(61) and Ireland.(62) A number of other working papers were submitted to the Working Group. The Working Group annexed to its report a list of elements identified and elaborated under the four subjects discussed.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(6) considered the topic of nuclear-war prevention during three informal meetings between 21 May and 25 June. As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire) for an ad hoc committee that would consider all relevant proposals, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war.

The Conference considered the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament" in four informal meetings held between 12 March and 23 July. The President of the Conference prepared a list of topics to facilitate a structured and orderly discussion. The Conference was again unable to agree on the establishment of an ad hoc committee under the item.

Report of the Secretary-General.. In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1989,(63) the Secretary-General in September submitted a report containing information received from three Member States(64) on technological developments relating to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Seabed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,(65) and verification and compliance with the Treaty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 C by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 D of 6 December 1991 and previous resolutions, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1992 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for all three parts of its 1992 session contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling also the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Welcoming the significant progress in reducing nuclear-weapon arsenals as evidenced by substantive bilateral agreements between the Russian Federation and the United States of America and unilateral undertakings by France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America towards the reduction in some of their nuclear-weapons programmes or of the numbers of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems as well as regarding the disposition of fissile material,

Welcoming also the recent decision by the United States of America not to produce plutonium or highly enriched uranium for nuclear explosive purposes,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would also be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering also that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

1. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes".

Also on 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/53 C by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the existence and use of nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to the survival of mankind,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament is the only ultimate guarantee against the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that a multilateral agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should strengthen international security and contribute to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the agreement reached between the Russian Federation and the United States of America in June 1992 to reduce their warhead stockpiles to a maximum of 3,000 for the Russian Federation and 3,500 for the United States of America by the year 2003,

Conscious that the recent steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1992 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 46/37 D of 6 December 1991,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to this Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Convinced that this Convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to this Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

Article 2

This Convention shall be of unlimited duration.

Article 3

1. This Convention shall be open to all States for signature. Any State that does not sign the Convention before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may accede to it at any time.

2. This Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the five nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of the entry into force of this Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 4

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Government of the signatory and acceding States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at _____ on the _____ day of _____ one thousand nine hundred and _____

Nuclear-test ban and other nuclear questions

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. At its 1992 session, the Conference on Disarmament(6) was unable to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban because of continued differences among member States concerning the Committee's mandate. None the less, the Conference agreed to intensify consultations with a view to re-establishing the Committee at the beginning of its 1993 session.

On 26 May, France, the only nuclear-weapon State that had not thus far participated in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban, announced its decision to join the Ad Hoc Committee when it was re-established.

Under the item, Norway presented to the Conference the full report of an expert study on questions related to a comprehensive test-ban treaty(66) and a summary of the study,(67) which was commissioned and published by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Norway.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held two sessions at Geneva in 1992 (thirty-third session, 2-13 March;(68) and thirty-fourth session, 27 July-7 August(69)). It had conducted, as agreed in 1987,(70) the main phase of its second major technical test, a large-scale international experiment on the exchange and analysis of seismic data (GSETT-2). In a report to the Conference,(71) the Group noted GSETT-2 had demonstrated that communication means and associated protocols were available which permitted extensive data exchange within a global seismic monitoring system.

On 18 August, the Conference adopted the dates of the Group's next session (15-26 February 1993) and, as suggested by the Group, the President, with the agreement of the Conference, extended an invitation to IAEA to participate in the session.

Notes by the Secretary-General. By a July note,(72) prepared in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(73) the Secretary-General transmitted a quarterly report (January-March 1992) by Australia on presumed underground nuclear explosions, which referred to a nuclear explosion in Nevada (United States) on 26 March with an estimated yield of 40 to, 150 kilotonnes. In an October note,(74), the Secretary-General presented the annual register of information provided on nuclear explosions, covering the period 15 September 1991-14 September 1992 and reporting the same explosion. No other nuclear explosive testing during the period was reported to the Secretary-General for consolidation in the register.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/47 by recorded vote.

Comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling previous resolutions that identify the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests and a comprehensive test ban as one of the priority objectives in the field of disarmament,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Welcoming the improved relationship between the Russian Federation and the United States of America and their consequent announcements of significant measures, including unilateral steps, which could signal the reversal of the nuclear-arms race,

Welcoming also the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed on 31 July 1991, and the signing of a protocol to this Treaty in which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America undertake to give effect to the Treaty,

Welcoming further the Joint Understanding of 17 June 1992 between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on further reductions in their strategic offensive arms,

Welcoming the decision taken by France to suspend its testing of nuclear weapons for 1992,

Endorsing the call made by France and by the Russian Federation on the other nuclear Powers to suspend their nuclear tests,

Welcoming also in addition the recent decision of the United States of America to implement a testing moratorium accompanied by a plan for achieving a multilateral, comprehensive ban on the testing of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming further the decision of the Russian Federation to extend its earlier-announced nuclear-testing moratorium,

Convinced that an end to nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting the concerns expressed about the environmental and health risks associated with underground nuclear testing, as brought out in the Expert Study on Questions Related to a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty in CD/1167 of 14 August 1992, which noted, inter alia, the environmental benefits and economic savings to be derived from a complete ban on nuclear testing,

Convinced also that the most effective way to achieve an end to nuclear testing is through the conclusion, at an early date, of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States,

Taking into account the undertakings by the original parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time, and also noting the reiteration of this commitment in the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the work being undertaken within the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, and in this context welcoming the results of the second technical test concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data, which will permit the system to be redesigned in the light of this experience, Recalling that the Amendment Conference of States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water was held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991.

Expressing its disappointment that the Conference on Disarmament was unable to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear test ban", despite the improved political climate,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of priority which would constitute an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation, and which would contribute to the process of nuclear disarmament;

2. Urges, therefore, all States to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all nuclear-test explosions for all time;

3. urges:

(a) The nuclear-weapon States to agree promptly to appropriate verifiable and militarily significant interim measures, with a view to concluding a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) Those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

4. Reaffirms the particular responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, and in this context urges the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban in 1993;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in this context, to intensify its substantive work begun in 1990 on specific and interrelated test-ban issues, including structure and scope and verification and compliance, taking also into account all relevant proposals and future initiatives;

6. Urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take into account the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including the experience gained from the technical test concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data, and other relevant initiatives;

(b) To continue efforts to establish, with the widest possible participation, an international seismic monitoring network with a view to developing further a system for the effective monitoring and verification of compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(c) To investigate other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including on-site inspections, satellite monitoring and an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

7. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on progress made, including its recommendations on how the objectives of the Ad Hoc Committee on item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear test ban", should be carried forward most effectively towards achieving a comprehensive test-ban treaty;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

Follow-up to Amendment Conference of States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty

Following the 1991 Amendment Conference⁽⁷⁵⁾ of the States parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water 1963) (also known as the partial test-ban Treaty),⁽⁷⁶⁾ the President of that Conference conducted consultations. In October 1992, an understanding was reached by a majority of the parties that a special meeting of States parties would be held in the second quarter of 1993 to review the developments on the issue of nuclear testing, with a view to examining the feasibility of resuming the work of the Amendment Conference later that year, but no consensus was reached on that point. The United States and the United Kingdom continued to oppose plans to reconvene the Conference, as they had done at the Conference itself.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/46 by recorded vote.

Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/106 of 15 December 1989, 45/50 of 4 December 1990 and 46/28 of 6 December 1991,

Reiterating its conviction that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is the highest-priority measure for the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and for the achievement of the objective of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the central role of the United Nations in the field of nuclear disarmament and in particular in the cessation of all nuclear-test explosions, as well as the persistent efforts of non-governmental organizations in the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Conscious of the growing environmental concerns throughout the world and of the past and potential negative effects of nuclear testing on the environment,

Recalling its resolution 1910(XVIII) of 27 November 1963, in which it noted with approval the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed on 5 August 1963, and requested the Conference of the Eighteen-Nation Committee on Disarmament^a to continue with a sense of urgency its negotiations to achieve the objectives set forth in the preamble to the Treaty,

Recalling also that more than one third of the parties to the Treaty requested the Depositary Governments to convene a conference to consider an amendment that would convert the Treaty into a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Recalling further that a substantive session of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water was held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991,

Reiterating its conviction that the Amendment Conference will facilitate the attainment of the objectives set forth in the Treaty and thus serve to strengthen it,

^a The Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Noting with satisfaction the unilateral nuclear-test moratoria announced by several nuclear-weapon States,

Recalling its recommendation that arrangements be made to ensure that intensive efforts continue, under the auspices of the Amendment Conference, until a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is achieved,

Recalling also the decision adopted by the Amendment Conference to the effect that, since further work needed to be undertaken on certain aspects of a comprehensive test-ban treaty, especially those with regard to verification of compliance and possible sanctions against non-compliance, the President of the Conference should conduct consultations with a view to achieving progress on those issues and to resuming the work of the Conference at an appropriate time,

Welcoming the ongoing consultations being conducted by the President of the Amendment Conference,

1. Notes the ongoing consultations being conducted by the President of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the special meeting of States parties of a brief duration to be held in New York in the second quarter of 1993 to review the developments on the issue of nuclear testing, with a view to examining the feasibility of resuming the work of the Amendment Conference later that year;

2. Calls upon all parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to participate in, and to contribute to the success of, the Amendment Conference for the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban at an early date, as an indispensable measure towards implementation of their undertakings in the preamble to the Treaty;

3. Urges all States, especially those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so, to adhere to the Treaty;

4. Recommends that arrangements should be made to ensure the fullest possible participation of non-governmental organizations in the Amendment Conference;

5. Reiterates its conviction that, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the nuclear-weapon States should suspend all nuclear-test explosions through an agreed moratorium or unilateral moratoria;

6. Stresses once again the importance of ensuring adequate coordination among the various negotiating forums dealing with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water".

Separate recorded votes on those paragraphs were also requested in the Assembly where paragraph 1 was adopted by 113 to 2, with 43 abstentions, and paragraph 2, by 112 to 2, with 43 abstentions.

New types of weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(6) considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: radiological weapons", re-establishing the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons(77) with a view to reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons. The Ad Hoc Committee held four meetings between 17 March and 27 July and a number of informal consultations.

The Ad Hoc Committee re-established contact group A to continue to consider the prohibition of radiological weapons in the "traditional" sense and contact group B on the prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities. The reports of the two groups were annexed to the Committee's report.(78) The Ad Hoc Committee concluded that its work had contributed further to clarifying the different approaches to the two subjects under consideration. It recommended that the Conference re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee in 1993 and give it guidance on reviewing the organization of its work with the aim of fulfilling its mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 B without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 E of 6 December 1991,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1992 session that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Recognizes that in 1992 the Ad Hoc Committee made a further contribution to the clarification of different approaches that continue to exist with regard to both of the important subjects under consideration;

3. Takes note also of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1993 session and that it should be given guidance on reviewing the organization of its work with the aim of fulfilling its mandate;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its substantive negotiation on the subject with a view to the prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end and drawing upon the annexes to the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

Nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace

Africa

Since 1964, when the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU),⁽⁷⁹⁾ the General Assembly had annually called for its implementation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1991,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1992 a report on the nuclear capabilities of South Africa⁽⁸¹⁾ containing the text of a resolution on the subject adopted on 25 September by the IAEA General Conference. It also contained a report by the IAEA Director General to the General Conference on the completeness of the inventory of South Africa's nuclear installations and material.

Expert group meeting. In accordance with an Assembly resolution of 1991,⁽⁸²⁾ the Secretary-General, by an October note,⁽⁸³⁾ submitted the report of the second meeting of the Group of Experts to Examine the Modalities and Elements for the Preparation and Implementation of a Convention or Treaty on the Denuclearization of Africa (Lomé, Togo, 28-30 April). The Group of Experts considered the relationship of such a convention with other international agreements and similar zones and various clauses of the future instrument. They agreed to recommend to the OAU Council of Ministers that formulation of a convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa begin and that it request the Assembly to consider providing assistance to OAU to enable it to conclude that task. The experts had held their first meeting in 1991.⁽⁸⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/76 without vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964, in which they solemnly declare their readiness to undertake, through an international agreement to be concluded under United Nations auspices, not to manufacture or acquire control of atomic weapons,

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as all its previous resolutions on the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa,

Calling upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Bearing in mind also the provisions of resolutions CM/Res.1342(LIV) and CM/Res.1395(LVI)/Rev.1 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-fourth and fifty-sixth ordinary sessions, held at Abuja from 27 May to 1 June 1991 and at Dakar from 22 to 28 June 1992,^a respectively,

Noting the accession by South Africa to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 10 July 1991,

Noting also that the Government of South Africa has concluded a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency and committed itself to early and full implementation of the agreement,

Recalling resolution GC(XXXVI)/RES/577 on South Africa's nuclear capabilities, adopted on 25 September 1992 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Stressing that the full disclosure of South Africa's nuclear installations and materials is essential to the peace and security of the region and to the success of efforts exerted towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone for Africa.

Having considered the report of the Second Meeting of the Group of Experts to Examine the Modalities and Elements for the Preparation and Implementation of a Convention or Treaty on the Denuclearization of Africa, set up jointly by the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations, held at Lomé from 28 to 30 April 1992,

Convinced that the evolution of the international situation is conducive to the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa of 1964, as well as the relevant provisions of the Declaration on Security, Disarmament and Development of 1968 of the Organization of African Unity,

1. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

2. strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

3. Takes note of the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the implementation of the safeguards agreement between the Government of South Africa and the Agency, including the verification of the completeness of the inventory of South Africa's nuclear installations and material;

4. Calls upon South Africa to continue to comply fully with the implementation of its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency;

5. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which he has rendered effective assistance to the Organization of African Unity in organizing the meetings of the above-mentioned Group of Experts;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to take appropriate action to enable the Group of Experts designated by the United Nations in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity to meet during 1993 at Harare, in order to draw up a draft treaty or convention on the denuclearization of Africa, and to submit the report of the Group of Experts to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the progress made by the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency in ensuring the full implementation of the safeguards agreement with South Africa;

8. Urges all Member States to assist and cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Director General to this end.

Latin America

On 22 September,(85) Mexico, the depositary State of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, transmitted to the Secretary-General amendments to the Treaty adopted by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 26 August), as proposed by Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Mexico. The amendments were intended to enhance the implementation of a number of articles relating to verification and to enable the full entry into force of the Treaty. A commentary on the amendments was submitted to the Conference on Disarmament by Argentina, Brazil and Chile.(86) Following the adoption of the amendments, Brazil made a declaration,(87) also on behalf of Argentina and Chile, indicating that, as soon as the three countries had completed the procedures for ratifying the text of the Treaty as amended, they would waive all the requirements set forth in paragraph 1 of article 28 of the Treaty that still remained to be met. (According to paragraph 2 of article 28 of the Treaty, all signatory States had the right to waive, wholly or in part, the requirements laid down in paragraph 1 of that article.)

The item on the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco had been on the General Assembly's agenda since 1979. Because France had deposited its instrument of ratification of Additional Protocol I on 24 August 1992 (see under "Non-proliferation"), thus giving full force to the Protocol, and because of the adoption of the amendments to the Treaty, a new item was included on the Assembly's agenda at the request of Mexico,(88) entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/61 without vote.

Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 1911(XVIII) of 27 November 1963 it expressed the hope that the States of Latin America would take appropriate measures to conclude a treaty that would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it voiced its confidence that, once such a treaty was concluded, all States, and particularly the nuclear-weapon States, would lend it their full cooperation for the effective realization of its peaceful aims,

Considering that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965 it established the principle of an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations between nuclear-weapon States and those which do not possess such weapons,

Recalling that the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was opened for signature at Mexico City on 14 February 1967,

Recalling also that in its preamble the Treaty of Tlatelolco states that military denuclearized zones are not an end in themselves but rather a means for achieving general and complete disarmament at a later stage,

Recalling further that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty of Tlatelolco as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that the Treaty of Tlatelolco is open for signature to all the sovereign States of Latin America and the Caribbean and that it contains two additional protocols that are open for signature, respectively, to the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for territories located within the zone of application of the Treaty and to the nuclear-weapon States,

Bearing in mind also that, with the adherence in 1992 of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, the Treaty of Tlatelolco is in force for twenty-four sovereign States of the region,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of France deposited its instrument of ratification of Additional Protocol I on 24 August 1992, thus giving full force to that Protocol,

Recalling that since 1974 Additional Protocol II has been in force for the five nuclear-weapon States,

Mindful that international conditions are more propitious for the consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty of Tlatelolco,

Also noting with satisfaction the holding of the fourth meeting of the signatories of the Treaty of Tlatelolco and the seventh special session of the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean, at Mexico City on 26 August 1992,

Welcoming the adoption on that occasion of resolution 290(VII), in which the General Conference approved and opened for signature a set of amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco with the aim of enabling the full entry into force of that instrument,

Noting that the Government of Cuba has declared that, in pursuit of regional unity, it would be ready to sign the Treaty of Tlatelolco once all the States of the region have assumed the undertakings of that Treaty,

1. welcomes the concrete steps taken by several countries this year, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), for the consolidation of the regime of military denuclearization established by that Treaty, including the adoption by acclamation on 26 August 1992 of the amendments to it;

2. Welcomes in particular the ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco by France, thus giving full force to the additional protocols of that Treaty;

3. Notes with satisfaction the declaration of the Governments of Argentina, Brazil and Chile to the effect that as soon as the three countries have completed the procedures for ratifying the text of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, as amended, they will waive all the requirements set forth in paragraph 1 of article 28 of the Treaty that still remain to be met;

4. Urges all Latin American and Caribbean States to take speedily the necessary measures to attain the full entry into force of the Treaty of Tlatelolco and, in particular, the States in respect of which the Treaty is open for signature and ratification immediately to carry out the corresponding formalities so that they may become parties to that international instrument, thus contributing to the consolidation of the regime established by that Treaty;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Middle East

As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(89) the Secretary-General reported in September(90) that he had held consultations with concerned parties to explore further the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. In the light of the ongoing peace initiative on the Middle East, launched at Madrid (Spain) in October 1991,(91) the Secretary-General stated that it would be premature for him to take any further action relating to the question at present.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/48 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989, 45/52 of 4 December 1990 and 46/30 of 6 December 1991 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing also the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 46/30,

1. Urge all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of resolution GC(XXXVI)/RES/601 of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency concerning the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East;

4. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

5. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

6. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

7. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue further consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 46/30, and taking into account the evolving situation in the region, and to seek from those States their views on the measures outlined in chapters III and IV of the study annexed to his report^a or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

Israeli nuclear armament

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1991,(92) the Secretary-General in October submitted a report containing the text of a resolution adopted on 25 September by the IAEA General Conference on the application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East and a report of the IAEA Director General on the same subject.(93)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/55 by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is resolution 46/39 of 6 December 1991,

Recalling its resolution 44/108 of 15 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it called for placing all nuclear facilities in the region under International Atomic Energy

Agency safeguards, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Recalling also that the Security Council, in its resolution 487(1981), called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Taking note of relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the latest of which is resolution GC(XXXVI)/RES/601 of 25 September 1992,

Taking into consideration section D, chapter II, of the Final Document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^a and in particular its paragraph 52, which relates to Israel's nuclear capabilities,

Deeply alarmed by the information with regard to the continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel,

Concerned at the cooperation between Israel and South Africa in the military nuclear fields,

1. Deplores Israel's refusal to renounce possession of nuclear weapons;

2. Urges Israel to accede to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

3. Reaffirms that Israel should promptly apply Security Council resolution 487(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, requested it to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to refrain from attacking or threatening to attack nuclear facilities;

4. Calls upon all States and organizations not to cooperate with or give assistance to Israel with the aim of enhancing its nuclear-weapons capability;

5. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the Secretary-General of any steps Israel may take to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

South Asia

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(94) the Secretary-General in July submitted a report summarizing the views of one Government (United Kingdom) on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.(95)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/49 by recorded vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX.) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986, 42/29 of 30 November 1987, 43/66 of 7 December 1988, 44/109 of 15 December 1989, 45/53 of 4 December 1990 and 46/31 of 6 December 1991 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note with appreciation of the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes, reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the recent proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Taking note of the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Taking note also of the proposal to hold consultations among five nations with a view to ensuring nuclear non-proliferation in the region,

Considering that the eventual participation of other States as appropriate in this process could be useful,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note further of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to that objective;

3. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary cooperation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

Activities of the Committee on the Indian Ocean. At its 1992 session (New York, 18-22 May),⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean continued to consider various aspects of holding a United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean—a necessary step for achieving the implementation of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.⁽⁹⁷⁾

The Ad Hoc Committee, acting as the preparatory body for the Conference, mainly dealt with the implementation of a 1991 General Assembly resolution⁽⁹⁸⁾ by which the Assembly had decided to convene the first of three stages of the Conference in 1993, or as soon as possible, at Colombo, Sri Lanka. In addition, the Assembly had called for the participation in the Conference of the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean. Following consultations with three of the permanent members of the Security Council—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—and with some of the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean, the Chairman informed the Committee on 18 May that those States would not find it possible to participate in a conference based on the 1971 Declaration, as they believed that the Declaration had been overtaken by positive developments in international political relations. Their position was that there was no longer rivalry between the great Powers in the Indian Ocean. The Committee, therefore, felt that it might not be possible to hold the Conference. It was of the view that the Assembly might wish to consider new, alternative approaches to establishing a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/59 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolution 46/49 of 9 December 1991 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the report on the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Recalling further paragraphs 15 and 16, chapter III, of the Final Document adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^a

Affirming the importance of the establishment of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace to achieve the goals contained in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and as considered at the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, Welcoming the positive developments in international political relations, which offer opportunities for enhance-ing peace, security and cooperation, and expressing the hope that the new spirit of international cooperation will be reflected in the establishment of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean and in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to that end,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean,

Noting with appreciation the offer made by the Government of Sri Lanka to host the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo,

Noting also that it may not be possible to convene the first stage of the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean in accordance with resolution 46/49, and urging that consideration be given to the timing of such a conference at Colombo at the appropriate time,

Desirous of continuing its efforts for the establishment of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean,

Considering the need for new alternative approaches for the establishment of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to consider new alternative approaches leading to the achievement of the goals contained in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and as considered at the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979, taking into account the changing international situation;

3. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to address the complex ramifications of the issues involved and differing perceptions on these issues as well as the future role of the Ad Hoc Committee and to make recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

4. Decides to convene, as early as possible thereafter, the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo with the participation of the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean;

5. Calls upon the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to participate in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold a session during 1993, with a duration of not more than ten working days;

7. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace".

General Assembly resolution 47/59

Conventional armaments and advanced technology

Efforts to curb the conventional arms race and prevent the development of more sophisticated weapons and weapons systems continued in 1992, with attention focusing on the control of exports and imports of arms, including illicit traffic; transfers of weapons, with special emphasis on the transfer of high technology with military applications; and restriction of the use of inhumane weapons.

International arms transfers

Report of the Secretary-General.. Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly request,(99) the Secretary-General submitted information received from 14 Member States concerning their national legislation and regulations on arms exports, imports and procurement and their administrative procedures regarding the authorization of arms transfers and prevention of illicit arms trade.(100) The report also contained information on seizures of arms and military equipment destined for destabilizing activities. Information provided by one other Member State (Sweden) was provided separately.(46)

On 9 December 1992, the Assembly, by decision 47/419, welcomed the information provided by Member States contained in the Secretary-General's report and invited those that had not yet done so to convey to him their views on the subject. It decided to include the item "International arms transfers" on its 1993 agenda.

Science and technology

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(101) the Secretary-General provided information received from 13 Member States on the transfer of high technology with military applications.(102) One other Member State (Denmark) provided information on the subject separately.(100)

By a note of 20 October,(103) the Secretariat informed Member States that, pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,(104) which recommended that the United Nations collect and disseminate information on technological developments in the area of science and technology for disarmament, information had been received from Member States and was available in the reference library of the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission(34) established a working group to consider the agenda item on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and related fields. The Working Group met from 22 April to 8 May and held 10 meetings in addition to informal consultations. It continued a structured debate on four aspects of the item, including scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security; science and technology for disarmament; the role of science and technology in other related fields; and the transfer of high technology with military applications. It was suggested that it might be necessary to further focus the Group's work in order to develop concrete recommendations.

Before the Commission were working papers submitted in 1991(105) and papers submitted in 1992 by Brazil(106) on the international transfer of sensitive technologies; Canada(107) on science and technology for verification purposes; Colombia(108) on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security and the role of science and technology in other related fields; and Portugal, on behalf of the member States of EC,(109) on the role of science and technology in the context of implementing disarmament agreements.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,(110) the Secretary-General in August submitted a report describing activities undertaken by the Disarmament Commission and the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs to develop a method to assess emerging new technologies.(111) He noted that the Office for Disarmament Affairs was setting up an informal network of experts on science and technology and that the subject was under discussion in the Disarmament Commission. In the light of those activities, he considered that it would be premature for any further action to be taken to develop a framework for technological assessment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/43 by recorded vote.

Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it unanimously stressed the importance of both qualitative and quantitative measures in the process of disarmament,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting with concern the potential in technological advances for application to military purposes, which could lead to more sophisticated weapons and new weapon systems,

Stressing the interests of the international community in the subject and the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on the security environment and on the process of arms limitation and disarmament and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Emphasizing that the proposal contained in its resolution 43/77 A of 7 December 1988 is without prejudice to research and development efforts being undertaken for peaceful purposes,

Noting the results of the United Nations conference on New Trends in Science and Technology: Implications for International Peace and Security, held at Sendai, Japan, from 16 to 19 April 1990,^a and recognizing, in this regard, the need for the scientific and policy communities to work together in dealing with the complex implications of technological change,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security";^a

2. Takes note also of the interim report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of resolution 45/60 of 4 December 1990;

3. Fully agrees that:

(a) The international community needs to position itself better to follow the nature and direction of technological change;

(b) The United Nations can serve as a catalyst and a clearing-house for ideas to this purpose;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to follow scientific and technological developments in order to make an assessment of emerging "new technologies" and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a framework for technology assessment guided, inter alia, by the criteria suggested in his report;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security".

Also on 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/44 without vote.

The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/61 of 4 December 1990 and 46/38 D of 6 December 1991,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission on its 1992 substantive session, in particular on the work of Working Group IV on agenda item 7, entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields",

Taking note also of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1992 substantive session, in particular on the work on the agenda item entitled "Transparency in armaments", which includes, in response to resolution 46/36 L of 9 December 1991, inter alia, the subject of the elaboration of practical means to increase openness and transparency related to the transfer of high technology with military applications,

Recognizing that progress in the application of science and technology contributes substantially to the implementation of arms control and disarmament agreements, inter alia, in the fields of weapons disposal, military conversion and verification,

Recognizing also that norms or guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account legitimate requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that they do not deny access to high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes,

Noting the interest of the international community in cooperation in the fields of disarmament-related science and technology and the transfer of high technology with military applications,

1. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to intensify its work on agenda item 7 and to submit as soon as possible specific recommendations on this matter to the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to pursue constructively in response to resolution 46/36 L its work on the agenda item entitled "Transparency in armaments", which includes consideration of the elaboration of practical means to increase openness and transparency related to the transfer of high technology with military applications;

3. Invites Member States to undertake additional efforts to apply science and technology for disarmament-related purposes and to make disarmament-related technologies available to interested States;

4. Also invites Member States to widen multilateral dialogue, bearing in mind the proposal for seeking universally acceptable international norms or guidelines that would regulate international transfers of high technology with military applications;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields".

Conventional disarmament on a regional scale

In response to a 1991 General Assembly decision,(112) the Secretary-General submitted a report with later addenda presenting the views of four Member States and the United Kingdom on behalf of the member States of EC on conventional disarmament on a regional scale.(113)

On 9 December, the Assembly adopted decision 47/420, by which it welcomed the Secretary-General's report and invited Member States which had not done so to convey their views on the matter to him and decided to include the item in its 1993 agenda.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocol

The number of States parties stood at 35, as at 31 December,(114) to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons).(115) In 1992, Germany and Greece ratified the Convention and Niger acceded to it. Slovenia became a successor State to the Convention. The Convention and Protocols entered into force in 1983.(116)

In the First Committee, a representative of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) stressed the urgent need to encourage universal ratification of the Convention and to give serious thought to its applicability to non-international armed conflicts, since the majority of ongoing conflicts involved both internal and international elements. ICRC was studying the problems of the potential use of blinding laser weapons and would publish, in 1993, reports of meetings of experts on the subject. It suggested that measures to strengthen the Convention and the eventual adoption of new protocols could be undertaken at a review conference, as provided for in the Convention. Ireland, the Netherlands and Sweden expressed support for that position and suggested that consultations should be carried out with a view to convening a review conference, as 1993 would mark the tenth anniversary of the Convention's entry into force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/56 without vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982, 38/66 of 15 December 1983, 39/56 of 12 December 1984, 40/84 of 12 December 1985, 41/50 of 3 December 1986, 42/30 of 30 November 1987, 43/67 of 7 December 1988, 45/64 of 4 December 1990 and 46/40 of 6 December 1991,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,^a

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Also notes with satisfaction that, consequent upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, as well as successor States to take appropriate action so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

4. Stresses that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols;

5. Notes, taking into account the nature of the Convention, the potential of the International Committee of the Red Cross to consider questions pursuant to the Convention:

6. Requests the Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The question of preventing an arms race in outer space continued to be considered within and outside the United Nations.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1992, the Conference on Disarmament(6) considered the item in the Ad Hoc Committee on outer space,(117) Which held 13 meetings between 10 March and 11 August. The Committee functioned under the same non-negotiating mandate as it had done in 1991.

The Committee adopted the same programme of work as in 1991, which included examining and identifying issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, existing agreements and proposals and future initiatives.

Many delegations expressed their regret that the Committee's mandate remained the same, and that no substantive changes had been made in the programme of work. The Group of 21 would have preferred the Committee to work under a negotiating mandate, because it believed such a mandate would help to concentrate efforts on concrete proposals.

Although a large number of members—principally non-aligned—thought it would be desirable to undertake negotiations immediately, the United States remained opposed to such a move.

Open-ended consultations conducted by the Friends of the Chair, focusing on terminological issues, verification of anti-satellites and confidence-building measures in space activities, were inconclusive.

In its report to the Conference,(118) the Committee noted that there had been continued general recognition of the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space, as well as of the significant role that the legal regime applicable to outer space was playing and the need to consolidate and reinforce it and enhance its effectiveness. The importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral, and of the presentations in the Committee relating to confidence-building measures and to greater transparency and openness were also recognized. It recommended that in 1993 the Conference re-establish the Committee with an adequate mandate and that the work done by the Friends of the Chair be continued.

In addition to the documents of previous sessions, the Conference had before it compendiums of plenary statements and working papers on outer space from the 1991 session of the Conference, submitted by Canada,(119) and several working papers.

Bilateral negotiations

In parallel with multilateral efforts, the Russian Federation and the United States held bilateral negotiations on ballistic missile defence. In a joint statement issued by Presidents Yeltsin and Bush on 17 June in Washington, D.C.,(9) they noted that they were continuing their discussion of the potential benefits of a global protection system against ballistic missiles. They agreed that they should work together with allies and other interested States in developing a concept for such a system as part of an overall strategy with regard to the proliferation of ballistic missiles and weapons of mass destruction. In addition, the United States and the Russian Federation signed the Agreement on Cooperation in Outer Space, which provided a broad framework for cooperation related to space activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/51 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming further paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling also its resolutions on this issue and paragraph 45, section D, chapter II, of the Final Document adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^a and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing the grave danger for international peace and security of an arms race in outer space and of developments contributing to it,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness.

"Noting that bilateral negotiations, begun in 1985 between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, have continued with the declared objective of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Welcomes the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space at the 1992 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral body on disarmament, to continue to examine and identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from these efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its resolution 45/55 B of 4 December 1990 which, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, building upon areas of convergence and taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1992 session of the Conference and at the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1993 session and to continue building upon areas of convergence with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the uses of outer space;

10. Urges the Russian Federation and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit with a view to reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Economic aspects of disarmament

Disarmament and development

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(120) the Secretary-General in September(121) reported on United Nations activities concerning the relationship between disarmament and development, particularly with regard to the implementation of priorities for the period 1990-1993, as determined by a high-level intra-Secretariat task force in 1990.(122) The task force had been established pursuant to the Final Document adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development.(123) The Secretary-General described international meetings in which the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs had participated, namely, the Conference on International Cooperation in Peaceful Use of Military Industrial Technology (Beijing, China, 22-26 October 1991); a one-day workshop on linking financial flows to military expenditures (Washington, D.C., 28 January 1992); the International Conference on Conversion: Opportunities for Development and Environment (Dortmund, Germany, 24-27 February); and the International Conference on Aerospace Complex Conversion (Moscow, 12-16 October).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 F without vote.

Relationship between disarmament and development The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Bearing in mind the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^a

Stressing the growing importance of the symbiotic relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and actions undertaken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Disarmament as an investment process

By an August 1992 note,(124) the Secretary-General transmitted, as requested by the General Assembly in 1990,(125) a research report on the economic aspects of disarmament, particularly disarmament as an investment process, prepared by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR). The report contained an executive summary setting forth 12 economic principles for disarmament which summed up the main conclusions of the research. It presented an overview of the problem, considering, in particular, defence spending and disarmament, and also dealt with key issues such as basic data, an economic approach to defence spending, military research and development, arms exports, arms limitation, development and economic adjustment and problems of conversion. The study's conclusions addressed the issue of the "peace dividend"—an investment process in which current costs were incurred in the expectation of future benefits—and the role of public policies designed to optimize it. They also examined different methods for analysing and forecasting the economic effects of disarmament and for evaluating public policies which might accompany conversion and transition processes.

The report concluded that disarmament had major economic consequences involving costs as well as benefits. On the cost side, it required a fundamental reallocation of resources from military to civilian production that was likely to result in major potential problems of unemployment or underemployment of labour, capital and other resources. As a result, the economic dividends of disarmament were likely to be small in the short term. In the long term, however, disarmament led to significant and worthwhile benefits through the production of civil goods and services as resources were reallocated to the civilian sector. Thus, in its economic aspects, disarmament was like an investment process involving short-run costs and long-run benefits.

An appendix to the report noted that the subject of defence economics, which involved the application of economic principles to defence, disarmament and peace, was a relatively new specialized field within economics. It provided a number of examples of items that could be included in a research agenda on the economic aspects of disarmament.

By resolution 47/54 F, the Assembly welcomed the UNIDIR report (see below).

Reduction of military budgets

In a July report with later addenda,(126) the Secretary-General presented information received from 32 Member States on their military expenditures, as requested by the General Assembly in 1985.(127) Annexed to the report was an instrument for standardized international reporting of military expenditures and general guidelines for its use.

By decision 47/418 of 9 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Disarmament and the environment

Convention to prohibit the hostile use of environmental modification techniques

As at 31 December,(114) there were 57 States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, referred to as the ENMOD Convention, adopted by the General Assembly in 1976(128) and in force since 1978.(129) In 1992, Dominica became a successor State and Mauritius acceded to the Convention.

Second Review Conference

In its Final Declaration, the First Review Conference of the ENMOD Convention (Geneva, 1984)(130) requested the Secretary-General to solicit the views of States parties concerning a second review conference if none was held before 1994. In 1991,(131) the General Assembly noted that a majority of States parties to the Convention had expressed their wish to convene the Second Review Conference in September 1992.

The Preparatory Committee for the Review Conference, with 35 States parties participating, met at Geneva from 6 to 8 April. It set the Conference's date and venue and recommended draft rules of procedure and a provisional agenda.(132)

The Second Review Conference (Geneva, 14-18 September 1992) was attended by 40 of the 55

States parties at that time, four signatories, six observer States and two non-governmental organizations (NGOs), as well as representatives of ICRC, the League of Arab States, the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment, the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED). (For further details on UNCED, see PART THREE, Chapter VIII.)

The general debate, during which 26 States parties explained their positions, revealed the persistence of differences concerning the scope of the Convention.

On 18 September, the Conference adopted by consensus its Final Document,(133) which contained a Final Declaration. A number of proposals that were submitted but did not receive general acceptance were annexed to the Final Document.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 E without vote.

Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/72 of 10 December 1976, in which it referred the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques to all States for their consideration, signature and ratification and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Recalling also its resolution 46/36 A of 6 December 1991, in which it noted that a majority of States parties to the Convention had expressed their wish to convene the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention in September 1992,

Welcoming the fact that States parties to the Convention met at Geneva from 14 to 18 September 1992 to review the operation of the Convention, with a view to ensuring that its purposes and provisions were being realized,

Having considered the Final Document of the Second Review Conference,

Noting with satisfaction that the Review Conference confirmed that the obligations assumed under article I of the Convention had been faithfully observed by the States parties,

Noting also that the Review Conference recognized the continuing importance of the Convention and its objectives and the common interest of mankind in maintaining its effectiveness in prohibiting the use of environmental modification techniques as a means of war,

Emphasizing that in its Final Declaration the Second Review Conference reaffirmed its belief that universal adherence to the Convention would enhance international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that the States parties to the Convention reaffirmed their strong common interest in preventing the use of environmental modification techniques for military or any other hostile purposes, their strong support for the Convention, their continued dedication to its principles and objectives and their commitment to implement effectively its provisions,

1. Notes the assessment by the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques that the Convention has been effective in preventing military or any other hostile use of any environmental modification techniques between States parties and that its provisions need to be kept under continuing review and examination in order to ensure their global effectiveness;

2. Welcomes the reaffirmation by the Review Conference of support for article II of the Convention and for the definition therein of the term "environmental modification techniques", which States parties to the Convention agree that, taken together with the Understandings relating to articles I and II, covers military or any other hostile use of any environmental modification techniques having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects as the means of destruction, damage or injury to any State party by another State party;

3. Notes with satisfaction the confirmation by the Review Conference that the military or any other hostile use of herbicides as an environmental modification technique in the meaning of article II is a method of warfare prohibited by article I if such use of herbicides upsets the ecological balance of a region, thus causing widespread, long-lasting or severe effects as the means of destruction, damage or injury to any other State party;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from military or any other hostile use of any environmental modification techniques;

5. Urges all States that have not already done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention as early as possible, and urges successor States to take appropriate action, so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

6. Welcomes the reaffirmation of the undertaking, under article V, of all States parties to consult one another and to cooperate in solving any problems which may arise in relation to the objectives of, or in the application of the provisions of, the Convention;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to assist States parties in promoting the universality of the Convention, including through the provision of appropriate advice on procedures.

Protection of the environment in times of armed conflict

On 25 November, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/37, by which it urged States to ensure compliance with international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict and to incorporate the provisions of such law into their military manuals and ensure their effective dissemination. (For further details on military conflicts and the environment, see PART FIVE, Chapter II.)

Radioactive wastes

In 1992, the Conference on Disarmament re-established the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons,⁽⁷⁷⁾ with a view to reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons, the draft articles of which dealt with the dumping of radioactive waste. (For further details, see under "Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 D without vote.

Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolutions CM/Res.1153(XLVIII) of 1988^a and CM/Res.1225(L) of 1989,^b adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa,

Welcoming resolution GC(XXXIII)/RES/509 on the dumping of nuclear wastes, adopted on 29 September 1989 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-third regular session,

Welcoming also resolution GC(XXXIV)/RES/530 establishing a Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste, adopted on 21 September 1990 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-fourth regular session,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,^c inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Recalling resolution CM/Res.1356(LIV) of 1991,^d adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, on the Bamako Convention on the Ban on the Import of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and on the Control of Their Transboundary Movements within Africa,

Aware of the potential hazards underlying any use of radioactive wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and its implications for regional and international security, and in particular for the security of developing countries,

^dA/46/390.

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Aware also of the consideration in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1992 session of the question of dumping of radioactive wastes,

Gravely concerned at the recently reported efforts to dump harmful wastes in Somalia,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 K of 6 December 1991, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session the progress recorded in the ongoing negotiations on this subject,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to a future convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons;

2. Expresses grave concern regarding any use of nuclear wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and have grave implications for the national security of all States;

3. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures with a view to preventing any dumping of nuclear or radioactive wastes that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to take into account, in the ongoing negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, radioactive wastes as part of the scope of such a convention;

5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify efforts towards an early conclusion of such a convention and to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session the progress recorded in the ongoing negotiations on this subject;

6. Takes note of resolution CM/Res.1356(LIV) of 1991, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, on the Bamako Convention the Ban on the Import of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and on the Control of Their Transboundary Movements within Africa;

7. Express the hope that the effective implementation of the International Atomic Energy Agency Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste will enhance the protection of all States from the dumping of radioactive wastes on their territories;

8. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to continue keeping the subject under active review, including the desirability of concluding a legally binding instrument in this field;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes".

Information and studies

World Disarmament Campaign

In 1992, the General Assembly decided that the World Disarmament Campaign-launched by the General Assembly in 1982(1) to sensitize public opinion to the dangers of the arms race-and its Voluntary Trust Fund would be known in future as the United Nations Disarmament Information

Programme and the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, respectively. Delegations felt the change would lay the basis for broader support and would more accurately reflect the work being done.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In October,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, in his annual report on implementing the Campaign's objectives, informed the Assembly of activities carried out by the United Nations system in the areas of training (see below), special events and publicity. The Office for Disarmament Affairs organized two regional meetings for Asia and the Pacific: a conference on disarmament issues (Hiroshima, Japan, 15-18 June), which focused on non-proliferation and confidence-building measures, and a conference on disarmament and security issues (Shanghai, China, 17-19 August). The Department of Public Information continued to inform the public of United Nations activities in the disarmament area by providing radio and television coverage, answering public inquiries, arranging briefings for NGOs and organizing events at Headquarters and at information centres around the world.

In July, the Secretary-General, reporting on the annual meeting of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters (twenty-third session, New York, 22-26 June),⁽³⁾ noted that a new approach had been taken in implementing the Campaign's programme of activities consisting of an information programme that promoted the role of arms control and disarmament in preventive diplomacy. Some members of the Board felt that the name "World Disarmament Campaign" no longer reflected the realities of the present.

Financing

The tenth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was convened in New York on 30 October 1992, with 72 delegations participating.⁽⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/53 D without vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Recalling also its various resolutions on the subject, including resolution 46/37 A of 6 December 1991,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General of 8 October 1992 on the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, and of 31 July 1992 on the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the Tenth United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign, held on 30 October 1992,

Noting with appreciation the contributions that Member States have already made to the Campaign,

1. welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 8 October 1992 on the World Disarmament Campaign;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the resources available to him in disseminating as widely as possible information on arms limitation and disarmament to elected officials, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes, and in carrying out an active seminar and conference programme;

3. Notes with appreciation the contributions to the efforts of the Campaign by the United Nations information centres and the regional centres for disarmament;

4. Decides that the World Disarmament Campaign shall be known hereafter as the "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme" and the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund as the "Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme";

5. Recommends that the Programme should further focus its efforts:

(a) To inform, to educate and to generate public understanding of the importance of and support for multi-lateral action, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner;

(b) To facilitate unimpeded access to and an exchange of information on ideas between the public sector and public interest groups and organizations, and to provide an independent source of balanced and factual information that takes into account a range of views to help further an informed debate on arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(c) To organize meetings to facilitate exchanges of views and information between governmental and non-governmental sectors and between governmental and other experts in order to facilitate the search for common ground;

6. Invites all Member States to contribute to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

7. Commends the Secretary-General for supporting the efforts of universities, other academic institutions and non-governmental organizations active in the educational field in widening the world-wide availability of disarmament education, and invites him to continue to support and cooperate with, without cost to the regular budget of the United Nations, educational institutions and non-governmental organizations engaged in such efforts;

8. Decides that at its forty-eighth session there should be an eleventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States that have not yet announced any voluntary contributions will do so, bearing in mind the objectives of the Third Disarmament Decade and the need to ensure its success;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report covering both the implementation of the activities of the Programme by the United Nations system during 1993 and the activities of the Programme contemplated by the system for 1994;

10. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme".

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In September,(5) the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the activities of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament covering Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean for the period August 1991 to July 1992.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, as agreed by the Assembly in 1985,(6) was established in 1986 at Lomé, Togo.(7) The Centre focused on disseminating information on disarmament and peace and security, organizing seminars and conferences and undertaking studies. It held an international conference on the role of the media in the peaceful resolution of conflicts in Africa at Lomé from 25 to 27 May. The Centre continued to publish its quarterly newsletter, African Peace Bulletin.

As decided by the Assembly in 1986,(8) the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October of that year.(9) The Secretary-General noted that the Centre had widened and strengthened its contacts and cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations, academic and other institutions and other United Nations bodies. It continued to serve as a resource centre for students and researchers, in addition to distributing United Nations publications and making videos and films on disarmament available to universities, schools and institutions. In February, the Centre published a book, Peace and Security in Latin America and the Caribbean in the Nineties.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, established in 1987(10) and inaugurated on 30 January 1989 at Kathmandu, Nepal, focused on disseminating information on United Nations activities concerning arms limitation and disarmament, answering public inquiries and organizing a yearly meeting. In 1992, the Centre organized a major regional meeting, for the third consecutive year, on non-proliferation and other disarmament issues in the region (Kathmandu, 27-29 January).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted decision 47/421, by which it requested the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on the activities of the regional centres. It also decided to include in the provisional agenda for its 1993 session the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly:(11) United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean".

In the Committee, on 13 November, Bangladesh, Bolivia, China, Costa Rica, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, France, Indonesia, Iran, Mauritania (on behalf of the Group of African States), Mongolia, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Togo, Uruguay (on behalf of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States) and Viet Nam submitted a draft on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean⁽¹²⁾ by which, among other things, the Assembly would have decided that the administrative costs of the regional centres should be financed from within the existing resources of the regular budget. On the same date, the sponsors requested that no action be taken on the draft.

Disarmament Week

Disarmament Week, an annual event commencing on United Nations Day, 24 October, to foster the objectives of disarmament, was marked on 27 October at United Nations Headquarters by a special meeting of the General Assembly's First Committee. Statements were made by the Assembly President, the Chairman of the First Committee and the Secretary-General.

In a July report on the Week,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted replies received from four Member States, as well as from the United Nations system and NGOs, on activities undertaken by them to promote the Week's objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/54 C without vote.

Disarmament Week

The General Assembly,

Noting the momentous developments of unprecedented magnitude that have taken place in international relations recently, and welcoming the important achievements of late in the areas of arms limitation and disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction the increasing role and prestige of the United Nations as a focal point for coordinating and harmonizing the efforts of States,

Emphasizing anew the need for and the importance of world public opinion in support of disarmament efforts in all their aspects,

Also noting with satisfaction the broad and active support by Governments and international and national organizations of the decision taken by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding the proclamation of the week starting 24 October, the day of the founding of the United Nations, as a week devoted to fostering the objectives of disarmament,

Recalling the recommendations concerning the World Disarmament Campaign contained in annex V to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in particular the recommendation that Disarmament Week should continue to be widely observed,

Noting the support for the further observance of Disarmament Week expressed by Member States at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,^a

Recognizing the significance of the annual observance of Disarmament Week, including by the United Nations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up measures undertaken by Governments and non-governmental organizations in holding Disarmament Week;

2. Commends all States and international and national governmental and non-governmental organizations for their active support for and participation in Disarmament Week;

3. Invites all States that so desire, in carrying out appropriate measures at the local level on the occasion of Disarmament Week, to take into account the elements of the model programme for Disarmament Week prepared by the Secretary-General;

4. Invites Governments and international and national non-governmental organizations to continue to take an active part in Disarmament Week and to inform the Secretary-General of the activities undertaken;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to use the United Nations information organs as widely as possible to promote better understanding among the world public of disarmament problems and the objectives of Disarmament Week;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session, the year of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, the item entitled "Disarmament Week",

Disarmament studies and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which met in New York from 22 to 26 June,⁽³⁾ discussed current developments and trends in international affairs and their bearing on the role of the United Nations in international security and disarmament. It identified issues it believed required prompt attention, including non-proliferation, nuclear disarmament, conventional disarmament, safe disposal of weapons, transparency, verification and conversion. The Board recommended preventing the disarmament debate from becoming a North-South issue; curbing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems while not impeding the transfer of technology for peaceful purposes; moving from the limited nature of existing technology regimes to a more universal approach, with the United Nations providing the appropriate forum for such discussions; and reassessing the relevance and effectiveness of the multilateral disarmament machinery, in particular reviewing the agendas and membership/formats of the Conference on Disarmament, the First Committee and the Disarmament Commission in the light of new developments in international security.

During the year, the Advisory Board continued to act as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR. In that capacity, it considered and approved the report of the UNIDIR Director on the Institute's activities for 1991-1992 (see below) and the research programme and proposed annual budget for 1993. The UNIDIR Director apprised the Board of UNIDIR's programme for 1994. The Board recommended a subvention from the regular United Nations budget of $220,000 for 1993 to assure the independence of the Institute. In October, (14) the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, noting that in 1991 the Assembly had approved a subvention of $440,000 for the 1992-1993 biennium. (15)

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the UNIDIR Director's report, covering the period from July 1991 to June 1992, (16) describing UNIDIR's completed and ongoing research projects. Publication of the UNIDIR Newsletter continued, as did its fellowship programme enabling scholars from developing countries to undertake research on disarmament. UNIDIR also continued to publish studies on national concepts of security of individual States and update its computerized information and documentation database service. Among the Institute's research projects were disarmament problems related to outer space; non-military aspects of security; verification; international law, disarmament and security issues; regional approaches to disarmament, security and stability; and nuclear disarmament. During the year, UNIDIR, in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of China and the Chinese People's Association for Peace and Disarmament, held a Conference of Asian and Pacific Institutes (Beijing, 23-25 March).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/54 F by recorded vote.

United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research
The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 34/83 M of 11 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on the basis of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming its resolution 39/148 H of 17 December 1984, in which it approved the Statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, renewed the invitations to Governments to consider making voluntary contributions to the Institute and requested the Secretary-General to continue to give the Institute administrative and other support,

Recalling also its resolution 42/42 J of 30 November 1987, in which it took note with appreciation of the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies and noted that the establishment of the Institute offered new opportunities regarding research in the field of disarmament,

Recalling further its resolution 45/62 G of 4 December 1990, in which it requested the Institute to prepare, with the assistance of independent experts, a research report on the economic aspects of disarmament and to report to the General Assembly, through the Secretary-General, at its forty-seventh session,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to have access to independent and in-depth research on disarmament, in particular on emerging problems and the foreseeable consequences of disarmament,

Noting in this regard the importance of research on the economic aspects of disarmament,

Having considered the annual report of the Director of the Institute and the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters acting in its capacity as Board of Trustees of the Institute,

1. Welcomes the research report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "Economic aspects of disarmament: disarmament as an investment process", as transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly;

2. Commends the report to the attention of Member States and encourages them to give active consideration, in particular, to the economic principles for disarmament contained in the executive summary of the report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give the report the widest possible circulation.

UN disarmament studies programme

In 1992, a study on defensive security concepts was completed, and another, on confidence-building measures in outer space, was in progress.

In response to a General Assembly request of December 1990,(17) the Secretary-General appointed a group of 11 experts to assist him in carrying out a study on defensive security concepts and policies. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Group of Experts,(18) which held its first session in 1991(19) and its second and third in 1992 (New York, 13-24 January; 6-17 July). The study attempted to determine the general elements in defensive security concepts and policies that could contribute to strengthening international peace and security. The study noted that defensive security was defined as a condition of peace and security attained step by step and sustained through effective and concrete measures in the political and military fields under which friendly relations among States were established and maintained; disputes were settled in a peaceful and equitable manner and the resort to force was consequently excluded; and the capacity for launching a surprise attack and initiating large-scale offensive action was eliminated through verifiable arms control and disarmament, confidence- and security-building measures and restructuring armed forces towards a defensive orientation. The study recommended, for consideration by Member States, measures that might help to create a condition in which defensive security prevailed. Those measures were outlined in an Assembly resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/52 H without vote.

Study on defensive security concepts and policies
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/58 O of 4 December 1990, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to undertake a study on defensive security concepts and policies,

Noting with satisfaction positive developments in the world, reflecting a trend towards reducing the significance of military power in ensuring national policy aims,

Realizing that threats to international peace and security caused by recurring acts of aggression underline the need for intensified efforts towards elaborating a broad range of peaceful means for the prevention of conflicts, including confidence-building measures,

Noting that defensive security concepts as well as initiatives on preventive diplomacy contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Considering the importance of the development of an international dialogue on defensive security policies for the promotion of security and stability in the world,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing the study on defensive security concepts and policies,

1. Takes note of the study on defensive security concepts and policies;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the group of experts who assisted in the preparation of the study;
3. Calls upon all Member States to familiarize themselves with the study and its conclusions and recommendations;
4. Recalls that, in its resolution 45/58 O, it invited Member States to initiate or intensify the dialogue on defensive security concepts and policies at the bilateral level, particularly at the regional level and, where appropriate, at the multilateral level, and notes that the study concluded that:

"To this end, Member States could:

"(a) Express their views on the concept and objective of 'defensive security', as defined in the present study;

"(b) Examine their current situation with respect to the political and military aspects of 'defensive security';

"(c) Determine to what extent their international relations, their security commitments and their regional situation might enable them to consider taking measures, on the basis of reciprocity, to achieve a situation of 'defensive security' at the bilateral, regional or multilateral level. The States that share common security interests at a regional or other level might consider undertaking consultations among themselves;

"(d) Consider, individually or jointly, problems relating to the resources needed to fulfil collective security commitments consistent with the Charter of the United Nations;

"(e) Keep the Secretary-General informed of progress or initiatives in the field of 'defensive security'";

5. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution.

Fellowship, training and advisory services programme

In October,(20) the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, stating that, because of the recent expansion in the membership of the United Nations, the number of fellowships to be awarded yearly had been increased from 25 to 30. The increase was effected within existing resources, primarily by reducing the duration of the programme from 18 to 12 weeks. Twenty-nine participants took part in the programme, which started on 10 August at Geneva and concluded on 28 October in New York. The programme included lectures; speaking, drafting and simulation exercises; preparation of individual research papers; attending the Conference on Disarmament and the General Assembly; study visits to IAEA headquarters at Vienna; and, at the invitation of the States concerned, visits to offices and institutions in Czechoslovakia, Finland, Germany, Japan and Sweden.

The training and advisory services programme was established in 1985(21) with a view to making such services available regionally. However, in 1992, no regional workshops were held.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/53 A without vote.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985, 41/60 H of 3 December 1986, 42/39 I of 30 November 1987, 43/76 F of 7 December 1988, 44/117 E of 15 December

1989, 45/59 A of 4 December 1990 and 46/37 E of 6 December 1991,

Noting also with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Czechoslovakia, Finland, Germany, Japan and Sweden for inviting the 1992 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Notes with satisfaction that, within the framework of the programme, the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat organized regional disarmament workshops for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Indonesia, Mexico and Nigeria for their support of the regional disarmament workshops, and to the Governments of New Zealand and Norway for making financial contributions;

5. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the Geneva-based programme within existing resources and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Chapter III

Peaceful uses of outer space

International Space Year, designed to promote international cooperation in space, was commemorated in 1992 through a programme of activities carried out by the United Nations and international organizations focusing on space technology and the environment.

During the year, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees continued their consideration of matters of international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space. The Committee held its thirty-fifth session (New York, 15-26 June). The General Assembly, in December, endorsed the Committee's recommendations and the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1993 (resolution 47/67). Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, on which the Committee reached consensus in 1992, were adopted by the Assembly in resolution 47/68.

The prevention of an arms race in outer space was considered by an ad hoc committee of the Conference on Disarmament (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

Science, technology and law

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-ninth session in 1992 (New York, 25 February-5 March).(1) It continued to discuss the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, the coordination of space activities within the United Nations system and follow-up to the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82).(2) The Subcommittee also considered matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; questions relating to space transportation; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine; space activities related to the Earth environment; planetary exploration; and astronomy.

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution.(3) the Subcommittee re-established the Working Group of the Whole to evaluate implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 (see below).

A special session of the Subcommittee, sponsored by the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) of the International Council of Scientific Unions and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF), was held on 24 February 1992 to celebrate International Space Year (see below). The theme selected for special attention at the Subcommittee's 1992 session was space technology and protection of the Earth's environment.

The Subcommittee's recommendations were acted on by the Committee on outer space in June.(4)

International Space Year

The General Assembly, in 1989,(5) had endorsed the initiative of international scientific organizations and bodies to designate 1992 as International Space Year (ISY). It had also endorsed the recommendation of the Committee on outer space that international cooperation be promoted through the Year for the benefit and in the interests of all States and that the training and education capabilities of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications be utilized to bring about a meaningful role for the United Nations.

The focus of international ISY activities(6) was the use of space technology for studying and monitoring the environment, specifically the management of the resources of the Earth and its environment, long-term education programmes and public education. A number of conferences, seminars and workshops were held in support of ISY. The United Nations programme was to be complementary to the activities of international organizations such as COSPAR, IAF, the International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing and the Space Agency Forum for International Space Year.

In accordance with a 1991 Assembly resolution,(3) the Committee on outer space held a special commemorative meeting on 15 June 1992, which included a panel discussion on new approaches to international cooperation in space in a changing world. The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee's special session on 24 February, open to all Member States, included a panel discussion on space flight and global unification and a symposium on space technology and the Earth's environment, organized by COSPAR and IAF.

Among other activities organized by the United Nations were an essay competition and the issuance of a commemorative stamp.

In December,(7) the Secretariat presented a final report on United Nations ISY activities. The report stated that those activities had encouraged all countries, particularly developing ones, to participate in the applications of space technology and to undertake programmes contributing to the understanding, management and safeguarding of the environment.

The Committee on outer space noted the wide variety of national and international activities for ISY. It expressed appreciation to Austria, China, Greece, Japan, Sweden and the United States, as well as to the European Space Agency (ESA), for their voluntary contributions to ISY and urged others to support further scientific and technical activities in cooperation with the United Nations. It also recommended that the United Nations encourage the continuation of activities initiated for ISY and the involvement of more nations.

The Committee recommended that at its 1993 session Member States discuss the proposal that a third UNISPACE conference be organized in 1995, preferably in a developing country, in order to consolidate the momentum of ISY and to evolve follow-up actions and mechanisms for broadening the scope of international cooperation and increasing the participation of all developing countries in space activities.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

In 1992, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, noting that the General Assembly in 1991(3) had again emphasized the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of UNISPACE-82, endorsed by the Assembly in 1982,(8) reconvened the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, which held a series of meetings between 27 February and 4 March 1992.

In the report on its sixth session, annexed to the Subcommittee's report,(1) the Working Group put forward several recommendations, which were subsequently endorsed by the Committee and by the Assembly in resolution 47/67. Among its proposals were that: the organization of seminars and workshops on advanced applications of space science and technology and on new systems development should continue, taking the recent evolution of related technologies, applications and developmental priorities into account for the benefit of planners, administrators and users in developing countries; the emphasis of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications should remain on long-term, project-oriented on-the-job training in space technology and specific applications areas and, in order to facilitate the indigenous research-and-development capabilities of developing countries, there should be a sufficient number of trainees to create national core groups of experts; the United Nations should continue making efforts to arrange funding and other support for creating regional centres for space science and technology education, and should endeavour to encourage regional cooperation and strengthen its cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations; countries with relevant capabilities should be encouraged to provide developing countries with financial and technical assistance for developing low-cost community receivers and power sources for communication satellites.

Other recommendations included: specific studies, including those in the areas of communications, broadcasting and forest and ocean resources management and development, should be carried out to demonstrate the potentials of space technology; the United Nations should promote better access to and experience in space-related subjects by arranging for experts to prepare an integrated national plan of action for an appropriate space applications programme; efforts were to be intensified to stimulate the growth of indigenous nuclei and an autonomous technological base in space technology in developing countries and to promote greater exchange of actual experiences with space applications.

In an August 1992 report,(9) the Secretary-General provided information on progress made in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. He noted that, as requested by the Assembly in 1991,(3) United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, particularly the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, had extensive space-related programmes. Details of those programmes were covered in the Secretary-General's annual report on coordination of outer space activities in the United Nations system (see below).

In response to 1991 requests of the Working Group of the Whole, the Secretariat prepared and submitted in 1992 to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee reports and studies on: applications of space technology for integrated land and water resources management for rural development;(10) applications of space technology to the study of desertification in developing countries;(11) activities of Member States in the context of international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space;(12) and an analytical review of international activities, in particular those of the United Nations, undertaken to implement UNISPACE-82 recommendations.(13)

The Committee on outer space, in endorsing the recommendations of the Working Group, noted that they called for preparation of further studies and reports of relevance to the UNISPACE-82 recommendations. In support of those recommendations, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications (see below) conducted training courses, seminars and workshops and provided technical advisory services.

The Secretariat continued its efforts to strengthen regional mechanisms of cooperation, among other things, by conducting consultations with regional commissions and countries on the establishment of regional centres for space science and technology education. Offers to host such centres had come from 21 countries. In that context, experts from Canada and Spain as well as from the United Nations undertook in May 1992 an evaluation mission to Latin America. Such missions to other regions were to be carried out as soon as funding sources were identified.

Budget allocations for implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations

The Committee on outer space, noting the Subcommittee's view that the respective budgetary allocations had been meagre in past years and remained the same for the current year, requested the General Assembly to make an adequate allocation to the Programme on Space Applications for full implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.

Following a request by Austria on behalf of the Working Group on International Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space of the Assembly's Special Political Committee, the Committee Chairman, by a letter of 30 October,(14) drew the attention of the Chairman of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee to the relevant paragraph in the report of the Committee on outer space.

The Working Group of the Whole of the Subcommittee also recommended that, in formulating cooperative programmes and projects, intensive participation of international and regional financial institutions be encouraged and that, in that connection, the Secretariat continue to report annually on arrangements within the United Nations system and with regional and international organizations for full utilization of available resources and for securing additional financial support from other sources.

The General Assembly, on 23 December 1992, by resolution 47/219, section XXIII, took note of the letter from the Chairman of the Special Political Committee regarding a budgetary allocation for the Programme on Space Applications.

UN Programme on Space Applications

In 1992, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, under its mandate given by the General Assembly in 1982,(8) focused on developing indigenous capability in space science and technology, providing fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services to Member States; organizing regional and international training courses, conferences and meetings; assisting in the development of information systems; and promoting greater cooperation in space science and technology.

In a December 1992 report to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, the United Nations Expert on Space Applications(15) indicated that the Programme helped develop indigenous capability through the establishment and operation of centres for space science and technology education at the regional level,(16) providing in-depth education, research and applications programmes in satellite meteorology and remote sensing for environmental monitoring and natural resources management. The centres were to contribute to sustainable development of natural resources and provide a supplementary input for biodiversity conservation and other related environmental programmes.

The Programme received 19 long-term fellowship offers for 1992/93: 2 from Austria in microwave technology; 10 from Brazil in remote sensing; 2 from China in geodesy, photogrammetry and remote sensing; and 5 from ESA in satellite meteorology, space antennas, remote-sensing information and instrumentation, and communications systems.

The Programme, in collaboration with ESA, completed a survey on the remote-sensing data needs of those African countries covered by ESA's two ground-based receiving stations (Maspalomas, Canary Islands, Spain; Fucino, Italy) and selected a number of projects that could benefit from the data available in ESA's archives or being acquired by the two receiving stations. ESA provided data acquired by satellites to Guinea, Morocco, Nigeria and Tunisia in support of development programmes in irrigation, roads, water resources, land use, forestry and agriculture.

The United Nations was working with all parties associated with the Cotopaxi ground station in Ecuador to determine if the station was beneficial to the region; to analyse the cooperation and support that countries concerned could offer; and to define the technical and economic assistance that could be provided from the United Nations and other sources.

In 1992, the Programme conducted three training courses, four workshops and an international conference. In cooperation with Ecuador and Japan, it organized a workshop on space technology for resource development and environmental management for participants from the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean region, hosted by the Centro de Levantamientos Integrados de Recursos Naturales por Sensores Remotos (CLIRSEN) (Quito, 9-13 March).(7) The workshop exposed managers and planners to the possibilities of using data from current and future Earth observation systems in their decision-making, familiarized them with the functions of the CLIRSEN-Cotopaxi satellite station and discussed possible regional cooperation programmes for the 22 countries within the coverage of the station.

The second United Nations training course on remote-sensing education for educators (Stockholm and Kiruna, 11 May-12 June), organized in cooperation with Sweden and hosted by Stockholm University and the Swedish Space Corporation, was attended by 27 educators from 23 developing countries in Africa, South-East Asia and Latin America.(18)

A United Nations/United States international conference (Boulder, Colorado, 17-20 August)(19) examined issues facing developing countries in their efforts to contribute to the development and utilization of remote-sensing technology and that technology's role in resource management, environmental assessment and global-change studies. The conference, with 155 participants, also discussed the accessibility and availability of data sources and the role of remote sensing in meeting the needs of developing countries.

Participants from developing and Eastern European countries received education and practical training at the fourth United Nations training course on remote-sensing applications to geological sciences, organized jointly with Germany (Potsdam and Berlin, 28 September-16 October).(20) Participants from Africa and the Middle East were given education and practical training at a United Nations/ESA course on the use of remote-sensing systems in hydrological and agrometeorological applications (Nairobi, Kenya, 12-30 October).(21)

The second United Nations/ESA/The Planetary Society workshop on basic space science, organized with Costa Rica and Colombia and hosted by the University of the Costa Rica, the International Centre for Physics and the University of the Andes, was held at San José (2-7 November and Santa Fé de Bogotá (9-13 November).(22) A United Nations workshop on space communications for development, organized in cooperation with and hosted by the Republic of Korea (Seoul, 24-28 November),(23) provided participants with information on the current state and future trends of satellite communication technology and its contribution to economic and social development in the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific region.

The Programme also promoted greater cooperation in space science and technology by organizing, with the International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing, a workshop on remote-sensing data analysis methods and applications (Washington, D.C., 6 and 7 August) and, with IAF, COSPAR and the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, a symposium on space technology in developing countries (Washington, D.C., 28-30 August).

The Programme designed a number of activities to mark United Nations participation in ISY and provided technical advisory services in support of Chile's plans to host in 1993 the Second Space Conference of the Americas.

The General Assembly in 1991 had approved appropriations of $345,900 under the regular United Nations budget for implementation of Programme activities during 1992-1993. In addition, the Programme received voluntary contributions in cash and kind from Member States and their institutions, as well as from regional and international governmental and non-governmental organizations.

Both the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and the Committee on outer space expressed concern over the limited financial resources available for the Programme and appealed for further voluntary contributions.

The Assembly, in resolution 47/67, endorsed the Programme for 1993, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications,(24) and urged all States to make voluntary contributions to enhance the Programme's effectiveness.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, in accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(3) continued consideration of matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites.(1) It reviewed national and cooperative programmes in remote sensing and received information on programmes in developed and developing countries based on bilateral, regional and international cooperation, including technical assistance.

The Subcommittee noted the continuing programmes for remote-sensing satellites of China, France, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United States and ESA and the planned systems of Brazil and Canada. It also noted the activities of FAO for mapping, assessment and management of renewable natural resources for the benefit of developing countries and those of UNESCO in the area of education and training, particularly for oceanography.

The Subcommittee reiterated that remote-sensing activities should take into account the need to provide appropriate and non-discriminatory assistance to developing countries. It emphasized the importance of making remote-sensing data and analysed information openly available, affordable and timely and recognized the continuing need for free access to data from meteorological satellites.

The Subcommittee suggested that international cooperation be encouraged through coordination of the operations of ground stations and regular meetings between satellite operators and users. It also noted the importance of compatibility and complementarity of existing and future remote-sensing systems, of sharing experiences and technologies, of cooperation through international and regional remote-sensing centres and of joint work on collaborative projects.

The Committee on outer space recognized the importance of those international efforts and encouraged all countries and agencies to continue the free distribution of meteorological information.

Nuclear power sources in outer space

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁾ the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1992 reconvened its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space. The Group met from 26 February to 5 March. Its report was annexed to the Subcommittee's report.⁽¹⁾

Among other matters, the Working Group discussed revised draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, consideration of which took place in the Legal Subcommittee (see below). Revised working papers reflected discussions on the subject in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and its Working Group.

The Subcommittee agreed that Member States should be invited to report to the Secretary-General on national and international research concerning the safety of nuclear-powered satellites, that the problem of collision of nuclear power sources with space debris be studied further and that it be informed of the results. In that regard, the Subcommittee noted a paper submitted by the Russian Federation containing preliminary results of studies on the question.

The Committee on outer space endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendations.

Space transportation

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in space transportation systems, including expendable launchers, reusable space shuttles, space stations and research on aerospace planes, and their implications for future activities in space. In particular, it noted the progress in the various programmes in operation or planned by China, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, the United States and ESA. The Subcommittee stressed the importance of international cooperation in space transportation to provide all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.

The Committee on outer space endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendation that it continue consideration of the item at its next session.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

In considering the question of the utilization of the geostationary orbit—in which communications and other satellites are positioned some 36,000 kilometres above the equator—the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in satellite communications, including progress in making satellite communications more accessible and affordable and increasing the communications capacity of the geostationary orbit and the electromagnetic spectrum.

In elaborating their views on the question of equitable access to the geostationary orbit, some delegations considered that its saturation should be avoided, that a special regime was required to ensure equitable access and that account should be taken in particular of the characteristics of the equatorial countries. Others considered that use of the orbit was affected by space debris, which should be minimized, and that satellites should be moved before the end of their useful lives into disposal orbits beyond the geostationary belt of orbit.

The Subcommittee took note of studies and research on the use of multiple, low-orbiting satellites for low-cost satellite communications.

The Committee on outer space expressed its appreciation to the ITU for its thirty-first annual progress report on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space.⁽²⁵⁾ Some delegations stressed the important technical scope of ITU's work, while drawing attention to the Committee's competence in preparing policy decisions referring to the geostationary orbit.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Space and Earth environment

In 1991,⁽³⁾ the General Assembly had recommended that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment, as well as to the problem of collisions with space debris and other aspects of space debris. In response to the Assembly's request, 17 Member States provided information to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee on their research on space debris.⁽²⁶⁾

The Subcommittee agreed that information on national research on space debris should continue to be provided to it, and that there was a need for further research and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris as well as for the development of improved monitoring technology. It also noted the importance of international cooperation in addressing those issues.

The Committee on outer space noted the importance of satellite remote sensing for monitoring the Earth's environment and, in particular, for studying and monitoring global change. It agreed that the Secretariat should prepare, for its 1993 session, an analytical report on the role the Committee could play in view of the decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

Spin-off benefits of space technology

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(3) the Committee on outer space reviewed the status of spin-off benefits of space technology and noted working papers submitted by China and the Russian Federation on their achievements in that area.

The Committee agreed that spin-offs of space technology were yielding substantial benefits, which provided new techniques for industrial measurement and control, image and data processing, non-destructive testing, temperature control and vacuum systems, computer systems, special materials and chemicals, food safety, water treatment and refrigeration.

The Committee agreed on the need to strengthen and enhance international cooperation in spin-off benefits through providing greater access, with particular attention to those benefits which addressed the needs of developing countries. It recommended that the United Nations Programme on Space Applications consider including the subject each year in its training courses, seminars or expert meetings, and reiterated its recommendation that space agencies consider making budgetary allocations to promote spin-off benefits in various countries.

Coordination in the UN system

The fourteenth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, convened by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (Paris, 5-7 October 1992),(27) reviewed activities requiring coordination and discussed matters of mutual interest relating to programming of activities, including those in connection with the implementation of UNISPACE-82 recommendations, follow-up to ISY and UNCED, and remote sensing.

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee noted that the General Assembly, in 1991,(3) had reaffirmed that all United Nations organs and organizations and other intergovernmental bodies working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters should cooperate in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.

Following consideration of the report of the 1991 Inter-Agency Meeting, (28) the Subcommittee noted the information on progress achieved in coordinating United Nations space activities. It also expressed appreciation for the Secretary-General's October 1991 report on coordination of outer space activities in the United Nations system,(29) which summarized the major activities and programmes planned by individual organizations for 1992 and 1993 in an integrated form in the areas of remote sensing, communications, meteorology and hydrology, space science, use of space technology for maritime communications and air navigation, ISY, and other activities in space science and technology and its applications.

In December 1992,(30) the Secretary-General submitted a report outlining major United Nations system activities and programmes planned for 1993, 1994 and future years.

The Committee on outer space noted that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee had stressed the necessity of ensuring continuous and effective consultations and coordination in outer space activities. It found the reports submitted by the specialized agencies and other international organizations helpful in enabling it and its subsidiary bodies to fulfil their roles as focal point for international cooperation, especially with respect to the practical applications of space science and technology in developing countries.

Other questions

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered various other space-related questions, such as life sciences, including space medicine; progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; and matters relating to planetary exploration and to astronomy. The Committee noted that a number of special presentations on those items had been made to the Subcommittee by specialists from various countries.

In the area of life sciences, the Subcommittee took note of a working paper by the Russian Federation on space biology and medicine and a Secretariat study on applications of biomedical technology.(31) The Subcommittee noted the research programmes in Canada, Germany, the Russian Federation and the United States, the important advances in medical knowledge resulting from studies of human physiology under the microgravity conditions of space flight and the growing promise of space technologies in public health.

In relation to the Earth environment, the Subcommittee noted the progress made in the international geosphere-biosphere programme and the important contributions of satellite remote sensing for monitoring, preventing and reversing land degradation, and of meteorological and atmospheric research satellites for studying global climate change, including the greenhouse effect and ozone layer degradation. It noted the need for further research of environmental phenomena.

The Subcommittee welcomed the annual reports of various organizations in and outside the United Nations system⁽³²⁾ and the preliminary version of the thirty-first report of ITU on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space.⁽²⁵⁾ It expressed appreciation to COSPAR for its report on the progress of space research in 1990-1991⁽³³⁾ and to IAF for its report on highlights in space technology and applications during 1991.⁽³⁴⁾

The Committee on outer space expressed appreciation to those organizations that had submitted reports and requested that it continue to be kept informed. It also noted the participation in its work and that of its Subcommittees of various organizations.

The Committee recommended that the Secretariat invite Member States to submit annual reports on their space activities, including information on space programmes and spin-off benefits of space activities. Pursuant to that recommendation, the Secretariat in December submitted such information from 14 Member States.⁽³⁵⁾

Space law

The Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space, at its thirty-first session (New York, 23 March-10 April),⁽³⁶⁾ continued to consider draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; and legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all States.

The Committee on outer space took note with appreciation of the Subcommittee's report on the work of its 1992 session.⁽⁴⁾

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in spacecraft

The Legal Subcommittee continued in 1992, through its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, to elaborate draft principles relevant to the use of such power sources. In addition to working papers presented previously, the Subcommittee had before it the eleventh revision of the draft principles submitted by Canada and Germany, reflecting the discussions in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee.

Following informal consultations, the Committee on outer space reached consensus, on the basis of a text by the Chairman, on the draft set of principles and recommended that it be adopted by the General Assembly. It further recommended that the Legal Subcommittee consider the question of the early review and possible revision of the principles.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 47/68 without vote.

Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer space on the work of its thirty-fifth session and the text of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space as approved by the Committee and annexed to its report,

Recognizing that for some missions in outer space nuclear power sources are particularly suited or even essential owing to their compactness, long life and other attributes,

Recognizing also that the use of nuclear power sources in outer space should focus on those applications which take advantage of the particular properties of nuclear power sources,

Recognizing further that the use of nuclear power sources in outer space should be based on a thorough safety assessment, including probabilistic risk analysis, with particular emphasis on reducing the risk of accidental exposure of the public to harmful radiation or radioactive material,

Recognizing the need, in this respect, for a set of principles containing goals and guidelines to ensure the safe use of nuclear power sources in outer space,

Affirming that this set of Principles applies to nuclear power sources in outer space devoted to the generation of electric power on board space objects for non-propulsive purposes, which have characteristics generally comparable to those of systems used and missions performed at the time of the adoption of the Principles. Recognizing that this set of Principles will require future revision in view of emerging nuclear power applications and of evolving international recommendations on radiological protection, Adopts the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space as set forth below.

Applicability of international law

Activities involving the use of nuclear power sources in outer space shall be carried out in accordance with international law, including in particular the Charter of the United Nations and the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.

Principle 2 use of terms

1. For the purpose of these Principles, the terms "launching State" and "State launching" mean the State which exercises jurisdiction and control over a space object with nuclear power sources on board at a given point in time relevant to the principle concerned.

2. For the purpose of principle 9, the definition of the term "launching State" as contained in that principle is applicable.

3. For the purposes of principle 3, the terms "foreseeable" and "all possible" describe a class of events or circumstances whose overall probability of occurrence is such that it is considered to encompass only credible possibilities for purposes of safety analysis. The term "general concept of defence-in-depth" when applied to nuclear power sources in outer space refers to the use of design features and mission operations in place of or in addition to active systems, to prevent or mitigate the consequences of system malfunctions. Redundant safety systems are not necessarily required for each individual component to achieve this purpose. Given the special requirements of space use and of varied missions, no particular set of systems or features can be specified as essential to achieve this objective. For the purposes of paragraph 2 (d) of principle 3, the term "made critical" does not include actions such as zero-power testing which are fundamental to ensuring system safety.

Guidelines and criteria for safe use

In order to minimize the quantity of radioactive material in space and the risks involved, the use of nuclear power sources in outer space shall be restricted to those space missions which cannot be operated by non-nuclear energy sources in a reasonable way.

1. General goals for radiation protection and nuclear safety

(a) States launching space objects with nuclear power sources on board shall endeavour to protect individuals, populations and the biosphere against radiological hazards. The design and use of space objects with nuclear power sources on board shall ensure, with a high degree of confidence, that the hazards, in foreseeable operational or accidental circumstances, are kept below acceptable levels as defined in paragraphs 1 (b) and (c).

Such design and use shall also ensure with high reliability that radioactive material does not cause a significant contamination of outer space.

(b) During the normal operation of space objects with nuclear power sources on board, including re-entry from the sufficiently high orbit as defined in paragraph 2 (b), the appropriate radiation protection objective for the public recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection shall be observed. During such normal operation there shall be no significant radiation exposure.

(c) To limit exposure in accidents, the design and construction of the nuclear power source systems shall take into account relevant and generally accepted international radiological protection guidelines.

Except in cases of low-probability accidents with potentially serious radiological consequences, the design for the nuclear power source systems shall, with a high degree of confidence, restrict radiation exposure to a limited geographical region and to individuals to the principal limit of 1 mSv in a year. It is permissible to use a subsidiary dose limit of 5 mSv in a year for some years, provided that the average annual effective dose equivalent over a lifetime does not exceed the principal limit of 1 mSv in a year.

The probability of accidents with potentially serious radiological consequences referred to above shall be kept extremely small by virtue of the design of the system.

Future modifications of the guidelines referred to in this paragraph shall be applied as soon as practicable.

(d) Systems important for safety shall be designed, constructed and operated in accordance with the general concept of defence-in-depth. Pursuant to this concept, foreseeable safety-related failures or malfunctions must be capable of being corrected or counteracted by an action or a procedure, possibly automatic.

The reliability of systems important for safety shall be ensured, inter alia, by redundancy, physical separation, functional isolation and adequate independence of their components.

Other measures shall also be taken to raise the level of safety.

2. Nuclear reactors

(a) Nuclear reactors may be operated:

- (i) On interplanetary missions;
- (ii) In sufficiently high orbits as defined in paragraph 2 (b);
- (iii) In low-Earth orbits if they are stored in sufficiently high orbits after the operational part of their mission.

(b) The sufficiently high orbit is one in which the orbital lifetime is long enough to allow for a sufficient decay of the fission products to approximately the activity of the actinides. The sufficiently high orbit must be such that the risks to existing and future outer space missions and of collision with other space objects are kept to a minimum. The necessity for the parts of a destroyed reactor also to attain the required decay time before re-entering the Earth's atmosphere shall be considered in determining the sufficiently high orbit altitude.

(c) Nuclear reactors shall use only highly enriched uranium 235 as fuel. The design shall take into account the radioactive decay of the fission and activation products.

(d) Nuclear reactors shall not be made critical before they have reached their operating orbit or interplanetary trajectory.

(e) The design and construction of the nuclear reactor shall ensure that it can not become critical before reaching the operating orbit during all possible events, including rocket explosion, re-entry, impact on ground or water, submersion in water or water intruding into the core.

(f) In order to reduce significantly the possibility of failures in satellites with nuclear reactors on board during operations in an orbit with a lifetime less than in the sufficiently high orbit (including operations for transfer into the sufficiently high orbit), there shall be a highly reliable operational system to ensure an effective and controlled disposal of the reactor.

3. Radioisotope generators

(a) Radioisotope generators may be used for interplanetary missions and other missions leaving the gravity field of the Earth. They may also be used in Earth orbit if, after conclusion of the operational part of their mission, they are stored in a high orbit. In any case ultimate disposal is necessary.

(b) Radioisotope generators shall be protected by a containment system that is designed and constructed to withstand the heat and aerodynamic forces of re-entry in the upper atmosphere under foreseeable orbital conditions, including highly elliptical or hyperbolic orbits where relevant. Upon impact, the containment system and the physical form of the isotope shall ensure that no radioactive material is scattered into the environment so that the impact area can be completely cleared of radioactivity by a recovery operation.

Safety assessment

1. A launching State as defined in principle 2, paragraph 1, at the time of launch shall, prior to the launch, through cooperative arrangements, where relevant, with those which have designed, constructed or manufactured the nuclear power source, or will operate the space object, or from whose territory or facility such an object will be launched, ensure that a thorough and comprehensive safety assessment is conducted. This assessment shall cover as well all relevant phases of the mission and shall deal with all systems involved, including the means of launching, the space platform, the nuclear power source and its equipment and the means of control and communication between ground and space.

2. This assessment shall respect the guidelines and criteria for safe use contained in principle 3.

3. Pursuant to article XI of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the results of this safety assessment, together with, to the extent feasible, an indication of the approximate intended time-frame of the launch, shall be made publicly available prior to each launch, and the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be informed on how States may obtain such results of the safety assessment as soon as possible prior to each launch.

Notification of re-entry

1. Any State launching a space object with nuclear power sources on board shall in a timely fashion inform States concerned in the event this space object is malfunctioning with a risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to the Earth. The information shall be in accordance with the following format:

(a) System parameters:

(i) Name of launching State or States, including the address of the authority which may be contacted for additional information or assistance in case of accident;

(ii) International designation;

(iii) Date and territory or location of launch;

(iv) Information required for best prediction of orbit lifetime, trajectory and impact region;

(v) General function of spacecraft;

(b) Information on the radiological risk of nuclear power source(s):

(i) Type of nuclear power source: radioisotopic/reactor;

(ii) The probable physical form, amount and general radiological characteristics of the fuel and contaminated and/or activated components likely to reach the ground. The term "fuel" refers to the nuclear material used as the source of heat or power.

This information shall also be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. The information, in accordance with the format above, shall be provided by the launching State as soon as the malfunction has become known. It shall be updated as frequently as practicable and the frequency of dissemination of the updated information shall increase as the anticipated time of re-entry into the dense layers of the Earth's atmosphere approaches so that the international community will be informed of the situation and will have sufficient time to plan for any national response activities deemed necessary.

3. The updated information shall also be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations with the same frequency.

Principle 6

Consultations

States providing information in accordance with principle 5 shall, as far as reasonably practicable, respond promptly to requests for further information or consultations sought by other States.

Principle 7

Assistance to States

1. Upon the notification of an expected re-entry into the Earth's atmosphere of a space object containing a nuclear power source on board and its components, all States possessing space monitoring and tracking facilities, in the spirit of international cooperation, shall communicate the relevant information that they may have available on the malfunctioning space object with a nuclear power source on board to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the State concerned as promptly as possible to allow States that might be affected to assess the situation and take any precautionary measures deemed necessary.

2. After re-entry into the Earth's atmosphere of a space object containing a nuclear power source on board and its components:

(a) The launching State shall promptly offer and, if requested by the affected State, provide promptly the necessary assistance to eliminate actual and possible harmful effects, including assistance to identify the location of the area of impact of the nuclear power source on the Earth's surface, to detect the re-entered material and to carry out retrieval or clean-up operations;

(b) All States, other than the launching State, with relevant technical capabilities and international organizations with such technical capabilities shall, to the extent possible, provide necessary assistance upon request by an affected State.

In providing the assistance in accordance with subparagraphs (a) and (b) above, the special needs of developing countries shall be taken into account.

Responsibility

In accordance with article VI of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, States shall bear international responsibility for national activities involving the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, whether such activities are carried on by governmental agencies or by non-governmental entities, and for assuring that such national activities are carried out in conformity with that Treaty and the recommendations contained in these Principles. When activities in outer space involving the use of nuclear power sources are carried on by an international organization, responsibility for compliance with the aforesaid Treaty and the recommendations contained in these Principles shall be borne both by the international organization and by the States participating in it.

Liability and compensation

1. In accordance with article VII of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, and the provisions of the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, each State which launches or procures the launching of a space object and each State from whose territory or facility a space object is launched shall be internationally liable for damage caused by such space objects or their component parts. This fully applies to the case of such a space object carrying a nuclear power source on board. Whenever two or more States jointly launch such a space object, they shall be jointly and severally liable for any damage caused, in accordance with article V of the above-mentioned Convention.

2. The compensation that such States shall be liable to pay under the aforesaid Convention for damage shall be determined in accordance with international law and the principles of justice and equity, in order to provide such reparation in respect of the damage as will restore the person, natural or juridical, State or international organization on whose behalf a claim is presented to the condition which would have existed if the damage had not occurred.

3. For the purposes of this principle, compensation shall include reimbursement of the duly substantiated expenses for search, recovery and clean-up operations, including expenses for assistance received from third parties.

Settlement of disputes

Any dispute resulting from the application of these Principles shall be resolved through negotiations or other established procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

Principle 11

Review and revision

These Principles shall be reopened for revision by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space no later than two years after their adoption.

General Assembly resolution 47/68

14 December 1992 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/47/610) without vote, 30 October (meeting 8); draft by Austria, for Working Group (A/SPC/47-L.6); agenda item 72.

Meeting numbers GA 47th session: SPC 5-8; plenary 85.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee, through its working group, continued consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure its rational and equitable use without prejudice to the role of ITU. In addition to working papers submitted at previous sessions, the Subcommittee also had before it a working paper presented by the Russian Federation, which the Committee on outer space agreed could be a suitable basis, among others, for future discussion.

The Committee also noted the deliberations of the Legal Subcommittee and the exchange of views that had taken place on the basis of a "working non-paper" introduced by members of the Group of 77,(37) a revised version of which was to be submitted to the Subcommittee in 1993.

Exploration of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee re-established its working group to continue consideration of the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. In accordance with a 1991 request,(37) the Chairman of the working group submitted a background paper summarizing in an analytical manner views and information contained in replies of Member States to requests from the Secretary-General in 1988 and 1989, respectively, on priority subjects under the item and on international agreements they had entered into relevant to the principle.

In addition, the group had before it a 1991 working paper and a new working paper by Nigeria. The group's discussion of the provisions of the 1991 paper, on principles regarding international cooperation in the exploration and utilization of outer space for peaceful purposes, was set out in the report of the Chairman of the group, annexed to the Subcommittee's report.(36)

The Committee on outer space noted the constructive work carried out by the Subcommittee and the working group, the discussion based on the 1991 working paper, and the positive reaction of the co-sponsors (Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Uruguay, Venezuela) to comments made by other delegations, which would be taken into account in future discussions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly, following the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 47/67 without vote.

International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/45 of 9 December 1991,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and of the importance of international cooperation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international cooperation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Gravely concerned about the extension of an arms race into outer space,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Aware of the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socio-economic advancement of mankind, in particular that of the people of developing countries,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, on the basis of the deliberations of its two subcommittees, had endorsed the text of the draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space,

Considering that space debris is an issue of concern to all nations,

Noting the progress achieved in the further development of peaceful space exploration and application as well as in various national and cooperative space projects, which contribute to international cooperation in this field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-fifth session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties;

3. Notes that, at its thirty-first session, the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in its working groups, continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in resolution 46/45;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Legal Subcommittee, at its thirty-second session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Consider, through its working group, the question of early review and possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space;

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union

(c) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries;

5. Notes that deliberations on the question of the geostationary orbit were undertaken by the Legal Subcommittee, as reflected in its report, on the basis of recent proposals which might provide a new and enhanced basis for future work;

6. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee concerning the organization of work in the Legal Subcommittee;

7. Notes that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, at its twenty-ninth session, continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/45;

8. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its thirtieth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:

(i) United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the coordination of space activities within the United Nations system;

(ii) Implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

(iii) Matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites including, inter alia applications for developing countries;

(iv) Use of nuclear power sources in outer space; Consider the following items:

(i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;

(ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; examination of its utilization and applications, including, inter alia, in the field of space communications, as well as other questions relating to space communications developments, taking particular account of the needs and interests of developing countries;

(iii) Matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine;

(iv) Progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth's environment, in particular progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme;

(v) Matters relating to planetary exploration;

(vi) Matters relating to astronomy;

(vii) The theme fixed for special attention at the 1993 session of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee: "Space-based communication: the expansion of current services and increased understanding of new systems and the services they will make possible"; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation, in liaison with Member States, should be invited to arrange a symposium, with as wide a participation as possible, to be held during the first week of the Subcommittee's session, to complement discussions within the Subcommittee on the special theme;

9. Considers, in the context of paragraph 8 (a) (ii) above, that it is particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:

(a) All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;

(b) Data banks at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of coordination;

(c) The United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres at the regional level, linked, whenever possible, to institutions implementing space programmes; necessary funding for the development of such centres should be made available through financial institutions;

(d) The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or post-graduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability of opportunities for such exposure on other bilateral and multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;

10. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee should reconvene, at its thirtieth session, the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to continue its work;

11. Also endorses the recommendations of the Working Group of the Whole of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, as endorsed by the Committee and as contained in the report of the Working Group of the Whole;

12. Decides that, during the thirtieth session of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space should be reconvened, and invites Member States to report to the Secretary-General on a regular basis with regard to national and international research concerning the safety of nuclear-powered satellites;

13. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1993, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert on Space Applications, and urges all States to make voluntary contributions to this Programme in order to enhance its effectiveness;

14. Emphasizes the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space as early as possible;

15. Reaffirms its approval of the recommendation of the Conference regarding the establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms of cooperation and their promotion and creation through the United Nations system;

16. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments that have made or expressed their intention to make contributions towards carrying out the recommendations of the Conference;

17. Invites all Governments to take effective action for the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

18. Requests all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters to cooperate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

20. Recommends that Member States might discuss, during the next sessions of the Committee under its agenda item "Other matters", the possibility of holding a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in the future;

21. Also recommends that the United Nations should actively encourage the continuation of activities initiated for International Space Year 1992 and promote broader involvement in those activities by more nations;

22. Notes with interest the plans of the Government of Chile to host the second Space Conference of the Americas, at Santiago, in 1993;

23. Recommends that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

24. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including nuclear power sources, with space debris, and other aspects of space debris, and calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, and that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in order to allow it to follow this area more closely;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to provide information on national research on space debris to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee;

26. Also considers that space debris could be an appropriate subject for in-depth discussion by the Committee in the future;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for the next session of the Committee, an analytical report on the role that the Committee could play in view of the decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and invites Member States to submit their views in time for inclusion in that report;

28. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and uses of outer space for peaceful purposes;

29. Takes note of the views expressed during the thirty-fifth session of the Committee and during the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly concerning ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes;

30. Requests the Committee to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

31. Also requests the Committee to continue to consider, at its thirty-sixth session, its agenda item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

32. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their cooperation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

33. Further requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Spacecraft launchings

During 1992, eight countries (Czechoslovakia, France, India, Japan, Russian Federation, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States)(1) provided information to the United Nations on the launchings of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution(2) and article IV of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,(3) which had entered into force in 1976.

Convention on registration of launchings

As at 31 December 1992, there were 36 States parties to the Convention on registration. In 1979, ESA had declared its acceptance of the rights and obligations of the Convention. No new accessions took place during 1992.

Chapter IV

Other political questions

In 1992, questions relating to information, the effects of atomic radiation and Antarctica were again on the General Assembly's agenda. Promotion of communication and the free flow of information, and United Nations public information policies and activities were the subjects of two Assembly resolutions. The Assembly requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue its work on the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources and noted with satisfaction the Committee's increasing cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme. The Assembly also underlined the significance of Antarctica for international peace and security, environment, global climate conditions, economy and scientific research, reiterated its concern over Antarctic environmental degradation, and appealed again for the exclusion of South Africa from the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties pending the attainment of a non-racial democratic government in that country.

Thirteen new States were admitted to United Nations membership, bringing the number of Members to 179. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was barred from participating in the work of the Assembly until its admission to the United Nations as a new State. Boutros Boutros-Ghali of Egypt entered into a live-year term of office as Secretary-General of the United Nations on 1 January 1992.

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations continued to focus on publicizing the Organization's work and goals and enhancing the information and communication capabilities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC).

Information policies and activities were reviewed at the fourteenth session of the General Assembly's Committee on Information (New York, 30 March-16 April 1992).(1) Its recommendations were considered by the Special Political Committee in November and acted on by the General Assembly in December. On 14 December, the Assembly also decided to increase the membership of the Committee on Information from 79 to 81 and appointed the Republic of Korea and Senegal as members (decision 47/424).

Mass communication

At its 1992 session, the Committee on Information elaborated on the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order, examined United Nations public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations, and evaluated the efforts made and progress achieved by the United Nations system in the field of information and communication.

The Committee had before it three reports of the Secretary-General, submitted in response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution.(2) The Secretary-General outlined JUNC activities,(3) reviewed implementation of a system-wide information programme for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED)(4) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) and described the allocation of resources and host government assistance to United Nations information centres (UNICs).(5)

The Committee decided that preparation of a report on ways and means to further the development of communication infrastructures in developing countries, also requested by the Assembly in 1991,(2) should be deferred until after 1 January 1993, following submission of additional observations and suggestions by Member States.

UNESCO activities. UNESCO again pursued in 1992 its strategy for the development of communication and the free flow of information, agreed on at its General Conference in 1989. As part of a continuing effort to support freedom of the press, called for in a 1991 Conference resolution,(6) UNESCO extended its cooperation to the Convention for a Democratic South Africa and organized a round table on the independent and pluralistic media for a democratic post-apartheid South Africa (Windhoek, Namibia, 14-17 August 1992). This meeting, whose participants came from Angola, Namibia, South Africa, Zambia and Zimbabwe, was the first major follow-up to the

May 1991 Declaration of Windhoek.⁽⁷⁾ It made a number of proposals aimed at creating an environment conducive to promoting media independence and pluralism in southern Africa.

UNESCO was continuing to provide assistance to the Pan African News Agency for its restructuring as a commercial enterprise with mixed government and private-sector shares, maintaining an independent editorial stance.

In conjunction with DPI, UNESCO organized a seminar on promoting independent and pluralistic Asian media (Alma Ata, Kazakhstan, 5-9 October 1992). The seminar adopted a Declaration,⁽⁸⁾ which incorporated specific project proposals regarding media legislation and training programmes, as well as measures to ensure the free flow of information and safety of journalists and to encourage the development of public service broadcasting and independent professional associations. The Declaration maintained that those projects, while identified as relating to the specific needs of Central Asian media, had region-wide applications.

UNESCO was ensuring follow-up to its seminars mainly through its International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC), which continued to support projects aimed at meeting the needs of developing countries in the fields of communication, information and mass media infrastructures. Thirteen new IPDC projects were launched in 1992.

At its thirteenth session (Paris, 17-24 February),⁽⁹⁾ the IPDC Intergovernmental Council paid particular attention to follow-up to the Declaration of Windhoek⁽⁷⁾ on promoting an independent and pluralistic African press. It reviewed the activities of the Intergovernmental Council on Communication and Information in Africa, established at IPDC's initiative, and noted that UNESCO had submitted to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) a regional project of $1,750,000 on the development of the independent press in Africa. In response to the Declaration's request for IPDC's detailed research into a variety of press-related topics, the Council recommended that the UNESCO Director-General report in 1993 on the possibility of allotting part of the IPDC Special Account to initial studies and evaluation.

The Council approved 34 projects totalling $2,534,000 for financing under the IPDC Special Account and two projects amounting to $505,000 to be financed under funds-in-trust arrangements. It also decided to seek special funding for the development of the independent press in Africa, estimated at $5,898,000, and additional funding for the establishment and operation of a State Information Service data bank in Egypt.

Among projects approved for Africa were the creation of an African regional film and television institute (phase II) and a radio and television training institute for the Portuguese-speaking countries, the organization of a television programme festival/contest, a broadcasting training programme in Namibia and the development of national media services in Guinea-Bissau and the Niger. Asia and the Pacific received allocations for developing training capabilities of its broadcasting organizations, a Pacific press development project, a workshop on media education in South Asia (phase II), the computerization of the "ASIAVISION News Exchange", the upgrading of a farmers' newspaper in China, the training of mass-communication field investigators in India, the development of provincial radio services in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, staff development in educational mass-media production in Malaysia, video-production development in Tonga and renovation of the printing industry in Mongolia.

Projects in Latin America and the Caribbean included assistance to the Ibero-American and Caribbean television network, training programmes in Chile and the Dominican Republic, technical equipment for the FIDES news agency in Bolivia, a radio production centre for the Colombian coast and the development of communication policies and strategies for the improvement of basic education in Ecuador.

In Europe, a funds-in-trust allocation was made for the computerization of a press editorial department in Romania.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/73 A.

Information in service of humanity

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Urges that all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethnical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources of and their free access to information, recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process", should:

(a) Cooperate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

(b) Ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) Provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) Enhance regional efforts and cooperation among developing countries, as well as cooperation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communication capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communication technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) Aim, in addition to bilateral cooperation, at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and their media, public, private or other, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

- (i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;
- (ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;
- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communication technology available on the open market;
- (f) Provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation, which should support both public and private media.

UN public information

DPI activities

In response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(2) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1992(10) a report on questions relating to information, which focused on special activities and products of DPI.

The report stated that, in accordance with the 1991 resolution, DPI continued in 1992 its cooperation with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries and other news agencies of and in developing countries by providing them with daily news items on a variety of issues. It disseminated information about United Nations activities pertaining to international peace and security, particularly the Secretary-General's June 1992 report on an agenda for peace (see PART ONE, Chapter I) and the 1991 Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security.(11) It also sponsored the 1992 annual non-governmental organizations (NGOs) conference, on regional conflicts (New York, 9-11 September), and provided radio coverage of the International Conference on Yugoslavia (London, 26-28 August) (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

During the year, DPI issued a number of booklets and press kits, periodically updated its Information Notes on ongoing peace-keeping missions and introduced a new radio segment entitled "The Blue Helmets" into its weekly news programmes. It pursued its programme of activities within the framework of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000) (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) and continued its collaboration with the Division for the Advancement of Women. As part of a world-wide educational campaign to increase awareness of women's role in society, it produced an illustrated book, Women: Challenges to the Year 2000, in English, French and Spanish.

DPI prepared a programme to promote the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights and developed a special promotional campaign for the International Year for the World's Indigenous People (1993). As to activities on economic and social development, DPI organized the press launch in 1992 of the World Economic Survey and the World Investment Report and coordinated the production of an exhibit and provided press release coverage of the International Congress and Exhibition on Disability and a related United Nations expert meeting (Vancouver, Canada, 25-29 April). A multimedia information programme of DPI on environment and development was aimed in 1992 at preparing and servicing UNCED.

DPI pursued its activities pertaining to African economic recovery and development, based on the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted in 1991,(12) through continuing publication of its quarterly periodical Africa Recovery and by producing a special media package on the Africa crisis. It also produced a number of briefing papers and pamphlets on environment and development, the economic repercussions of a free South Africa, southern Africa and the issue of African debt relief.

As part of its programme on the question of Palestine, mandated by the Assembly in 1991,(13) DPI sponsored encounters for Irish journalists (Dublin, Ireland, 5 May 1992) and European journalists (Lisbon, Portugal, 16 and 17 September). The programme included a variety of other projects, such as fact-finding missions for journalists to the Middle East and publication of special materials.

In 1992, DPI began using a totally computerized telecommunications system that connected it with nearly 150 official addresses throughout the world, including UNICs and other United Nations field offices. As at September 1992, 54 UNICs had been computerized and the number of those having access to electronic mail had increased to 29.

DPI's annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries was held in New York (8 September-16 October). Since 1981, 209 participants from more than 115 countries had been trained under the programme.

In April 1992, DPI conducted a comprehensive survey of UNIC activities, focused on enhancing public awareness of United Nations priority themes, cooperation with other field offices and providing services to local media and NGOs. Efforts were under way to develop a data bank of activities of UNICs. DPI was actively integrating certain UNICs with UNDP field offices, in an effort to present a unified image of the United Nations.

The report also described DPI activities in connection with the World Disarmament Campaign (see PART ONE, Chapter II), the international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking in narcotics (see PART THREE, Chapter XVI) and against apartheid, as well as United Nations publications during 1992, including the UN Chronicle, the Yearbook of the United Nations and Development Forum.

In conformity with Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/40 of 30 July 1992, which emphasized the importance of a unified United Nations presence in the Commonwealth of Independent States in order to ensure practical and effective dialogue between the Organization and its new Member States, the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly(14) of his March 1992 decision to set up integrated United Nations/UNDP interim offices in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. Following joint missions to assess requirements for such offices, host country agreements were signed with all six countries. Subsequently, he decided to initiate action for the creation of an interim office in Georgia.

In May,(15) the Governing Council of UNDP agreed to finance its share of the cost of establishing those offices during 1992-1993. In December,(16) the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on the financial requirements for the seven interim offices, estimated at $934,600 for the share of the United Nations during the biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/219, section XVIII.

Revised estimates under section 31 (Public Information): establishment of seven United Nations interim offices

1. Takes note of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to re-submit a complete report on the establishment and operation of the seven United Nations interim offices, including staffing, project implementation and an integrated budget with full sources of financing, at its resumed forty-seventh session, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the competent United Nations bodies regarding operational activities and public information activities and taking into account the views expressed by the Member States in the Fifth Committee on this issue during the forty-seventh session;

General Assembly resolution 47/219, section XVIII

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/835) without vote. 17 December (meeting 47); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 104. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 45, 47, plenary 94.

Coordination in the UN system

The inter-agency Joint United Nations Information Committee, which coordinated information activities in the United Nations system, held its eighteenth session in 1992 (Rome, Italy, 7-9 July).(17) Its discussions focused on the work programme and funding of the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service, issues related to Development Forum, and project proposals for inter-agency information programmes on upcoming events, such as the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women and the observance of the United Nations fiftieth anniversary, also in 1995.

The Committee also reviewed its participation in UNCED, considered the arrangements to complete the Agenda for a Small Planet IV series of television documentaries produced by participants from both developed and developing countries, and agreed to co-sponsor another series (Agenda V), to be produced by 1995 and focusing on issues relating to women and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Pursuant to the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly on 14 December adopted without vote resolution 47/73 B.

United Nations public information policies and activities

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Reaffirming the primary role of the General Assembly in elaborating, coordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information,

Also reaffirming that the Secretary-General should ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened and improved, keeping in view the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the priority areas defined by the General Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information,

1. Decides to consolidate the role of the Committee on Information as its main subsidiary body mandated to make recommendations relating to the work of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in respect of United Nations public information policies and activities, to implement the following recommendations in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, and in this regard to ensure that the Department of Public Information:

(a) Continues to disseminate information about the activities of the United Nations in coordination with the information services of other relevant agencies in accordance with the United Nations medium-term plan, the programme budget and their relevant revisions, pertaining, inter alia to:

- (i) International peace and security;
- (ii) Disarmament;
- (iii) Peace-keeping operations and peacemaking;

- (iv) Decolonization and the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories in the light of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism;
- (v) The promotion and protection of human rights and in that context the World Conference on Human Rights, to be held in 1993;
- (vi) The elimination of all forms of racial discrimination;
- (vii) The advancement of the status of women and their role in society;
- (viii) The promotion of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;
- (ix) Problems of economic and social development, as well as international economic cooperation aimed at resolving external debt problems;
- (x) The least developed countries;
- (xi) The environment and development;
- (xii) The elimination of foreign occupation;
- (xiii) The campaign against terrorism in all its forms in line with General Assembly resolution 40/61 of 9 December 1985;
- (xiv) International efforts against drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking;
- (xv) Crime prevention and criminal justice;
- (xvi) Support for the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and for the tremendous efforts of the African countries aimed at recovery and development, as well as the positive response by the international community to alleviate the serious economic situation prevailing in Africa;
- (xvii) International efforts towards the total eradication of apartheid and support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa and, where necessary, the role of the United Nations in this context;
- (xviii) United Nations activities pertaining to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine in particular, also including current developments in that region and the ongoing peace process;
- (b) Provides the necessary level of information support for the activities of the United Nations in situations requiring immediate and special response;
- (c) Continues its efforts at promoting an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations system among the peoples of the world and at strengthening the positive image of the system as a whole;
- (d) Continues its efforts to ensure timely production and dissemination of its mandated publications, in particular the UN Chronicle, the Yearbook of the United Nations, Development Forum and Africa Recovery, and continues to maintain consistent editorial independence and accuracy in reporting all the material that it produces, taking necessary measures to ensure that its output contains adequate, objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur;
- (e) Submits a report on continuous and major publications to the Committee on Information at its fifteenth session, providing the following details:
 - (i) The list of publications and their circulation figures;
 - (ii) Their cost;

- (iii) The original language versions and the languages into which the publications were translated;
 - (iv) Target audiences, including, where possible, the intended end-use of the specific products;
 - (f) Continues its briefings, assistance and orientation programmes for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries focused on United Nations-related issues;
 - (g) Provides, on the basis of its activities, information to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization about new forms of cooperation, at the regional and subregional levels, for the training of media professionals and for the improvement of the information and communication infrastructures of developing countries;
 - (h) Continues its policies of cooperation with all agencies of the United Nations system, in particular with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;
 - (i) Continues its policies of cooperation with news agencies in and of the developing countries, in particular the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries;
3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the increasing demands now placed on the Department of Public Information in relation to media coverage of United Nations activities, to provide at the fifteenth session of the Committee on Information an assessment regarding:
- (a) Any measures considered appropriate to ensure that the working facilities provided for the media are fully adequate to meet present and future needs and, in this context, to consult with the Bureau of the Committee, spokespersons of the regional groups, the Group of Seventy-seven and China, in relation to the implementation of any significant measures in this regard;
 - (b) The consideration of a greater framework of coordination within the Department of Public Information in relation to the provision of facilities and services for the media, such as the work of the Executive Media Service and the provision of accreditation services;
4. Requests, in this context, the Secretary-General to direct the Publications Board to develop criteria and review all publications and proposals for publications to ensure, inter alia, that each publication fulfils an identifiable mandate and need, is timely, does not duplicate other publications inside or outside the United Nations system, and is cost-effective, and that before the publication is printed, it satisfies the criteria on the basis of which it was authorized, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information;
5. Reaffirms the importance attached by Member States to the role of United Nations information centres in effectively and comprehensively disseminating information about United Nations activities and the optimization of the resources allocated to the Department of Public Information;
6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to submit a detailed and comprehensive report on his plan of integrating United Nations information centres with other United Nations offices, while maintaining the functional autonomy of the United Nations information centres and emphasizing that they should be fully operational, as provided for in relevant resolutions, to the Committee on Information at its fifteenth session for its consideration of the different options available in this regard; in this context, consultations should take place on this matter through the informal mechanism composed of the Bureau of the Committee on Information and the spokespersons of regional groups, the Group of Seventy-seven and China, as was established in paragraph 1 (s) of General Assembly resolution 46/73 B of 11 December 1991;

7. Reaffirms the role of the General Assembly in relation to the opening of new United Nations information centres and invites the Secretary-General, as well, to make such recommendations as he may judge necessary regarding the establishment and location of new United Nations information centres;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to study ways and means of redressing differences in the allocation of resources, in particular the differences of support, in relation to the financing of United Nations information centres in various countries and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its fifteenth session;

9. Notes the substantial contribution by the Government of Poland and requests the Secretary-General to finalize, in consultation with the Polish authorities, arrangements for a United Nations information component in Warsaw;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to implement fully its recommendations contained in resolution 46/73 B, including paragraphs 1 (l) and (m), regarding the establishment of a United Nations information centre in Sana'a, as well as the reactivation of the United Nations information centre in Tehran and the enhancing of the information centres in Dar es Salaam, Dhaka and Bujumbura;

11. Encourages enhanced cooperation between the Department of Public Information and the University for Peace in Costa Rica as a focal point of promoting United Nations activities and disseminating United Nations information materials;

12. Takes note of the requests by Bulgaria, Gabon and Haiti for information components;

13. Calls upon the Secretary-General to enhance the efficiency of and ensure full programme delivery of all segments currently produced by all regional radio units in the Department of Public Information;

14. Encourages the Department of Public Information to take into account, especially in the area of electronic media production, the various standards and systems used around the world, bearing in mind the need for harmonization and efficiency;

15. Calls upon the Secretary-General, as of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly, to make every effort as a matter of particular urgency to create conditions and to make them more conducive to achieving parity by appropriate utilization of existing equipment in the press coverage of meetings in English and French;

16. Decides, as of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly, on the publication in the Arabic and Spanish languages, after each annual session of the General Assembly, of the press release containing the resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly and the results of the voting, through reallocation of resources from the budget of the Department of Public Information;

17. Invites Member States to submit to the Secretary-General, by 1 January 1993, observations and suggestions on ways and means of furthering the development of communications infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with a view to consolidating recent experience in the field of international cooperation aimed at enabling them to develop their own information and communication capacities, freely and independently, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its fifteenth session;

18. Decides on procedural grounds to refer to the Economic and Social Council, for its consideration, resolution 4.3 adopted on 6 November 1991 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-sixth session and contained in the relevant note by the Secretary-General;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its fifteenth session in 1993 on the results of the implementation of a system-wide information programme for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its fifteenth session in 1993 and to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session in 1993 on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the present resolution as well as in resolution 46/73 B;

21. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-first session at Vienna (15-19 June 1992). (1) It took note of a 1991 General Assembly request (2) that it continue its review of problems arising from radiation doses and effects, and welcomed the Assembly's reference to its scientific authority and independence of judgement.

The Committee examined documents prepared by the secretariat on subjects selected for further study and focused its technical discussions on natural, medical, occupational and man-made environmental radiation exposures; radiation effects on the environment and on the developing human brain; epidemiological study of radiation carcinogenesis; late deterministic effects of radiation in children; mechanisms of radiation oncogenesis; dose and dose-rate influence on stochastic radiation effects; hereditary effects of radiation; stimulatory and adaptive response to radiation in cells and organisms; and perception of radiation risks. The Committee made suggestions for the further development of those topics, in particular pointing out additional information to be considered.

In an effort to collect data on radiation exposures in countries worldwide for a more thorough analysis of the issue, the Committee invited States to respond to the secretariat's questionnaires and expressed the hope that Member States as well as the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency would continue to assist by providing relevant information on the subjects of interest for future studies. The Committee stated its intention to conclude the evaluations of sources, effects and risks of ionizing radiation and radiation exposures, along with its reviews of biological subjects, in 1993 and to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1992, the General Assembly, in accordance with the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/66.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 46/44 of 9 December 1991, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

Bearing in mind the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit, as soon as the relevant studies are completed, shorter reports with supporting scientific documents on the specialized topics mentioned by the Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty-seven years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific cooperation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important coordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Also requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

Antarctica

Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly request,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1992 a report(2) evaluating the response to the Assembly's call on the 1959 Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to deposit with him information covering all aspects of Antarctica.

On 12 May 1992, Germany on behalf of the States parties to the Treaty (Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay (italic indicates consultative status)) transmitted to the Secretary-General the final report of the Sixteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Bonn, 7-18 October 1991), containing comprehensive information about different aspects of Antarctica. Matters discussed by the Meeting included inspections and environmental monitoring under the Antarctic Treaty; the impact of waste disposal and marine pollution on the Antarctic environment; issues related to Antarctica's specially protected areas, including new land and marine sites of special scientific interest; and promotion of international scientific and logistic cooperation in Antarctica.

The Meeting reviewed reports from a number of international bodies and conventions—such as the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources, the Convention for the Conservation of Antarctic Seals, the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research (SCAR), the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the International Hydrographic Organization—and stressed the absolute priority of the earliest possible ratification and entry into force of the Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty.

In a declaration on the thirtieth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty, the Contracting Parties reaffirmed that the Treaty's objective was to ensure, in the interest of all mankind, that Antarctica continued to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and should not become the scene or object of international discord.

In addition, the Meeting adopted a series of recommendations concerning the establishment of new sites of special scientific interest, specially protected areas, areas protection and management. The Meeting recommended that an informal meeting of the Consultative Parties be convened with a view to making proposals to the Seventeenth Consultative Meeting regarding a comprehensive regulation of tourist and non-governmental activities in Antarctica.

The Meeting also discussed a proposal to establish an Antarctic Treaty secretariat; as no consensus was reached, the question was to be considered further at the next Consultative Meeting.

Concluding his report, the Secretary-General remarked that international cooperation on Antarctica had been achieved at the level of Governments, some United Nations agencies and programmes, and relevant international and non-governmental organizations. The documents submitted appeared to reflect that the existing Antarctic Treaty system continued to foster international cooperation, to adapt to changing environmental priorities and to elaborate new mechanisms in line with innovative scientific research; they also indicated interest in renewed global efforts in line with increased public awareness, particularly with regard to Antarctic ecosystems and growing worldwide environmental concerns.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, pursuant to the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/57 by roll-call vote.

Question of Antarctica

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983, 39/152 of 17 December 1984, 40/156 A and B of 16 December 1985, 41/88 A and B of 4 December 1986, 42/46 A and B of 30 November 1987, 43/83 A and B of 7 December 1988, 44/124 A and B of 15 December 1989, 45/78 A and B of 12 December 1990 and 46/41 A and B of 6 December 1991,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the final documents adopted by the second meeting of States of the Zone of Peace and Cooperation of the South Atlantic, held at Abuja from 25 to 29 June 1990, the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul from 4 to 8 August 1991, the meeting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government, held at Harare from 16 to 22 October 1991 and the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,

Recalling further the Declaration on South Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-eighth ordinary session, held at Dakar from 29 June to 1 July 1992,

Taking into account the debates on this item held since its thirty-eighth session,

Reaffirming the principle that the international community is entitled to information covering all aspects of Antarctica and that the United Nations should be made the repository for all such information in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 41/88 A, 42/46 B, 43/83 A, 44/124 B, 45/78 A and 46/41 A,

Welcoming the decision of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to submit to the Secretary-General the final report of the Sixteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting, which took place at Bonn from 7 to 18 October 1991,

Conscious of the particular significance of Antarctica to the international community in terms, inter alia, of international peace and security, environment, its effects on global climate conditions, economy and scientific research,

Conscious also of the interrelationship between Antarctica and the physical, chemical and biological processes that regulate the total Earth system,

Welcoming also the increasing recognition of the significant impact that Antarctica exerts on the global environment and ecosystems and of the need for a comprehensive agreement to be negotiated by the international community on the protection and conservation of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems,

Reiterating the concern over the environmental degradation of Antarctica and its impact on the global environment,

Welcoming further the recognition by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, of the value of Antarctica as an area for the conduct of scientific research, in particular research essential to understanding the global environment,

Welcoming the increasing support, including by some Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, for the establishment of Antarctica as a nature reserve or world park to ensure the protection and conservation of its environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems for the benefit of all mankind, welcoming also the ongoing trend in acknowledging the need for internationally coordinated scientific research stations in Antarctica in order to minimize unnecessary duplication and logistical support facilities,

Welcoming further the increasing awareness of an interest in Antarctica shown by the international community, and convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Reaffirming that the management and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international cooperation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Convinced of the need for concerted international cooperation in order to protect and safeguard Antarctica and its dependent ecosystems from external environmental disturbances for future generations,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the report of the Sixteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting and on the participation of the apartheid minority regime of South Africa in meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the state of the environment in Antarctica, and requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities of publishing, as official documents of the United Nations, extracts of data received from the various organizations in the preparation of future annual reports, within existing resources;

3. While noting the cooperation of some United Nations specialized agencies and programmes at the Sixteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting, expresses its regret that, despite the numerous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General or his representative has not been invited to the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, and urges once again the Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to their future meetings;

4. Bearing in mind that the Antarctic Treaty is, by its terms, intended to further the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, with which South Africa has yet to comply fully, culls upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to prevent South Africa from participating fully in their meetings pending the attainment of a non-racial democratic government in that country;

5. While welcoming the decision of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to provide information regarding the Sixteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting, encourages the Parties to provide to the Secretary-General, on a continuing basis, more information and documents covering all aspects of Antarctica, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on his evaluations thereof to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

6. Welcomes the commitment made by the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties under chapter 17 of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as provided for in article III of the Antarctic Treaty, to continue:

(a) To ensure that data and information resulting from scientific research activities conducted in Antarctica are freely available to the international community;

(b) To enhance access of the international scientific community and specialized agencies of the United Nations to such data and information, including the encouragement of periodic seminars and symposia;

7. Urges the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to build on the agreements achieved at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, particularly as noted in paragraph 6 of the present resolution, and, in this connection, actively to explore the possibility of organizing an annual seminar/symposium covering issues relating to the environment, commencing in 1993, with international participation as wide as possible, including that of international organizations such as the United Nations;

8. Also urges the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to establish monitoring and implementation mechanisms to ensure compliance with the provisions of the 1991 Madrid Protocol, on Environmental Protection;

9. Welcoming the ban on prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica for the next fifty years by Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties in accordance with the Madrid Protocol, reiterates its call for the ban to be made permanent;

10. Also reiterates its call that any move at drawing up an international convention to establish a nature reserve or world park in Antarctica and its dependent and associated ecosystems must be negotiated with the full participation of the international community;

11. While welcoming the concrete steps taken by the Secretariat through the publication on Antarctica by the Department of Public Information, reaffirm the need to promote further public awareness of the importance of Antarctica to the ecosystem, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide relevant materials on Antarctica through the Department of Public Information within existing resources;

12. Encourages the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to increase the level of cooperation and collaboration with a view to reducing the number of scientific stations in Antarctica;

13. Urges the international community to ensure that all activities in Antarctica are carried out exclusively for the purpose of peaceful scientific investigation and that all such activities will ensure the maintenance of international peace and security and the protection of the Antarctic environment and are for the benefit of all mankind;

14. Urges all States Members of the United Nations to cooperate with the Secretary-General on matters pertaining to Antarctica and to continue consultations on all aspects relating to the continent;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

Antarctica and the environment

In November 1992,(3) in response to a 1991

General Assembly resolution,(1) the Secretary-General reported on the state of the environment in Antarctica. The report, which took into account information from Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, considered Antarctica's role in the global environmental system and questions relating to protection of the Antarctic environment; it emphasized that human activities had already had a major effect on the balance of the Antarctic marine ecosystem and that commercial exploitation of the continent's mineral resources might lead to irreversible damage.

According to June 1992 reports from the United Nations Environment Programme, increased levels of ultraviolet radiation resulting from ozone depletion had been shown to have a detrimental impact on the productivity of flora and fauna in Antarctica. Studies of the Antarctic ecosystems revealed a growing need for comprehensive environmental monitoring and international cooperation concerning waste disposal, contamination by oil and other toxic substances, construction and operation of facilities, science programmes, recreational activities and those affecting designated protected areas, as recommended by the Sixteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (see above) and by SCAR. The report also outlined SCAR's proposals on collection, storage and dissemination of environmental data.

Recognizing the significance of Antarctica in a global context, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) called on States conducting scientific research in Antarctica to make the results available to the international community and to enhance the community's access to such information.

Participation of South Africa

In a report of October 1992,(4) the Secretary-General responded to a 1991 resolution(5) in which the General Assembly noted with regret the continuing participation of the apartheid regime of South Africa in meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties and appealed again to those Parties to exclude South Africa from their meetings. On 28 May 1992, the Secretary-General received a note from Germany, on behalf of the parties to the Treaty, declaring that a 1987 note from Australia(6) continued to reflect their position.

Yugoslavia and UN membership

In September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, ruled that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations and, therefore, should not participate in the work of the Assembly and should apply for membership.

In response to the creation of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, announced on 27 April 1992 by Serbia and Montenegro, Austria communicated on 5 May its view that there was no legal basis for the Federal Republic to continue automatically the existence of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and, therefore, the Yugoslav membership in the United Nations.(29)

Also in May, Canada(30) and the United States(31) stated that Yugoslavia's participation in the activities of United Nations bodies was without prejudice to the eventual determination of the Republic's status.

Replying on 5 June to a letter of 27 May by Slovenia,(32) which demanded prompt termination of the Yugoslav membership in international organizations, Yugoslavia pointed out that Serbia and Montenegro had not seceded from the former Socialist Federal Republic, thus continuing its legal personality as members of the new State.(33)

On 29 June,(34) Belgium, France and the United Kingdom communicated to the Security Council a declaration by the European Community on the former Yugoslavia, stating, inter alia, that the Community did not recognize the new entity comprising Serbia and Montenegro as the successor State of the former Yugoslavia.

(For details of the Yugoslavia question, see PART TWO, Chapter IV.)

On 19 September 1992, the Security Council adopted resolution 777(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Considering that the State formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has ceased to exist,

Recalling in particular resolution 757(1992) which notes that "the claim by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations has not been generally accepted",

1. Considers that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cannot continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations; and therefore recommends to the General Assembly that it decide that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should apply for membership in the United Nations and that it shall not participate in the work of the General Assembly;

2. Decides to consider the matter again before the end of the main part of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Cape Verde, Ecuador, France, Hungary, Japan, Morocco, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, India, Zimbabwe.

In a statement prior to the vote, the Russian Federation emphasized that the resolution in no way affected Yugoslavia's participation in the work of United Nations bodies other than the General Assembly, particularly the Security Council, nor the functioning of its Permanent Mission, the issuance of documents or the keeping of the name-plate with the name Yugoslavia in the Assembly Hall and the rooms in which the Assembly's organs met. After the vote, China made a statement to the same effect, adding that the Council's decision was only a transitional arrangement.

On 9 December,(35) the Council President informed the President of the Assembly that the Council members agreed to keep the subject-matter of the 19 September resolution under continuous review and to consider it again at a later date.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/1 by recorded vote.

Recommendation of the Security Council of 19 September 1992

The General Assembly,

Having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 19 September 1992 that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should apply for membership in the United Nations and that it shall not participate in the work of the General Assembly,

1. Considers that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cannot continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations; and therefore decides that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should apply for membership in the United Nations and that it shall not participate in the work of the General Assembly;

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, the United Kingdom said it was neither punitive nor designed to undermine the peace process, but a measure that had to be taken in view of the unjustified claim by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to represent the continuity of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The situation was without precedent and had clearly not been foreseen by the authors of the Charter. That the Council had decided to consider the matter again before the end of the year should be a helpful incentive to all the parties and an effective means to support the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in their task.

Yugoslavia voiced certainty that it satisfied the conditions for membership; it had been a founding member of the Organization and had always lived up to its principles. It stressed that in a resolution adopted on the same date as the Assembly resolution, the Yugoslav Federal Assembly had expressed grave concern regarding Yugoslavia's membership.

On 25 September,(36) Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, referring to the General Assembly resolution, argued that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was not a Member of the United Nations and that the flag and the name-plaque of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia did not represent the new State; they requested a legal explanatory statement concerning those questions. Responding on 28 September,(37) Yugoslavia stated that there were no legal grounds for requests to remove the name-plate and flag. The Security Council's recommendation and the Assembly's decision as well as the ensuing debates dealt exclusively with Yugoslavia's non-participation in the work of the Assembly.

In his reply of 29 September to Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia,(38) the United Nations Legal Counsel explained that, while it was clear that representatives of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could no longer participate in the work of the Assembly, its subsidiary organs, or conferences and meetings convened by it, the Assembly resolution neither terminated nor suspended Yugoslavia's membership in the Organization. Consequently, the seat and name-plate remained as before, but in Assembly bodies representatives of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia could not sit behind the sign "Yugoslavia". The Counsel also stated that the Secretariat would continue to fly the flag of the old Yugoslavia as the last flag of Yugoslavia used at the United Nations. The admission of a new Yugoslavia under Article 4 of the Charter would terminate the situation created by the Assembly resolution.

Institutional machinery

Security Council

In 1992, the Security Council held 129 meetings and adopted 74 resolutions.

Agenda

The Security Council considered 26 topics under 52 agenda items during 1992. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

On 15 September,(39) the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter, of 44 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.(40) He listed 142 other matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized.

By decision 47/404 of 21 October, the Assembly took note of those matters.

Membership

In December 1992, the General Assembly acted on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council.

The item was first considered by the Assembly in 1979,(41) when it was introduced on the grounds that United Nations membership had grown to 152, compared to 113 in 1963, when the Council membership was increased from 11 to 15.(42)

In September 1992, the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Jakarta, Indonesia), in its Jakarta Message,(43) called for a review of the membership of the Council, aimed at reflecting the increased membership of the United Nations and promoting a more equitable and balanced representation of its Members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/62 without vote.

Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the increasingly crucial role of the Security Council in maintaining international peace and security,

Recognizing also the changed international situation and the substantial increase in the membership of the United Nations, the total membership having reached one hundred and seventy-nine,

Acting in accordance with the principles and objectives of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the principle of sovereign equality of all Members of the United Nations,

Mindful of Article 23 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Realizing the need to continue the process of revitalization and restructuring of certain organs of the United Nations,

Recalling the statements made on the subject at the forty-seventh session, as well as the statement on the same subject contained in the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to submit, not later than 30 June 1993, written comments on a possible review of the membership of the Security Council;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, for its consideration, a report containing comments made by Member States on the subject;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council".

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: plenary 69, 84.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two sessions during 1992, to resume and conclude its forty-sixth (1991) regular session and to hold the major part of its forty-seventh session. The forty-sixth session resumed on 4 and 14 February, 2 and 19 March, 13 April, 6 and 22 May, 29 and 31 July, 24 and 25 August and 14 September 1992.

The forty-seventh session opened on 15 September and continued until its suspension on 23 December.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting on 8 October 1992, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General indicating that credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's forty-seventh session had been submitted by 131 Member States. The Legal Counsel explained that the memorandum related solely to Member States that had submitted formal credentials. The Counsel further informed that, subsequent to the memorandum, additional credentials in due form had been received in respect of the representatives of Latvia.

On 9 December, at its second meeting, the Committee examined a further memorandum from the Secretary-General, reporting that, since the first meeting, formal credentials had been received from 29 other Member States. In addition, information concerning the appointment of their representatives to the forty-seventh session had been communicated to the Secretary-General by 15 Member States, by means of a facsimile communication, letter or note verbale. The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of all those Member States, including those that had communicated by facsimile, letter or note verbale, on the understanding that the latter would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee, acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Chairman, adopted a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received. The Committee also recommended to the Assembly two draft resolutions approving its first(44) and second(45) reports. The Assembly took no action on either report.

Organization of the 1992 session

On 18 September 1992, by decision 47/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee as set forth in its first report,(46) adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the 1992 session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; the closing date of the session; the schedule of meetings; the general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; meeting records; concluding statements; resolutions; questions related to the programme budget; documentation; observances and commemorative meetings; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs.

Subsidiary organs

By decisions 47/403 A, B and C, adopted on 15, 18 and 30 September, respectively, on the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences(47) and the General Committee,(46) the General Assembly authorized the following subsidiary organs to hold meetings during its 1992 session: Committee for Programme and Coordination; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Special Committee against Apartheid; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund; Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa; and Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research. The Assembly, acting on an oral proposal of its President, also authorized meetings of the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations.

Agenda

At its resumed forty-sixth session, on 4 February 1992, the General Assembly included in the agenda a sub-item on the appointment of members of the International Civil Service Commission and an additional item on financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia; it also reopened consideration of the item on special economic and disaster relief assistance, at the request of Samoa(48) (decision 46/402 B). By the same decision, on 2 March, the Assembly included in the agenda an item on financing of the United Nations Protection Force. On 13 April and 6 May, respectively, the Assembly reopened consideration of the item on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and of the sub-item on human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms (decision 46/402 C).

The Assembly took further action on the agenda of its resumed session by decision 46/402 D. On 29 July, it reopened consideration of the items on financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and on the United Nations common system, the latter at the request of the United States.(49) An item on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina was included on 24 August, on the recommendation of the General Committee.(50) On 14 September, the Assembly, on a proposal of the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, revised the wording of agenda item 100 of the provisional agenda of the forty-seventh session to read "Activities of those foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa".

Also on 14 September, the Assembly included in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh session items on the question of Cyprus (decision 46/474), the consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait (decision 46/475) and the current financial crisis of the United Nations (decision 46/476).

By decision 47/402, acting on the recommendations of the General Committee,(51) the Assembly, on 18 and 25 September, 6 and 15 October, 20 and 23 November and 17 December, adopted the agenda of its forty-seventh session, which initially had 144 items, and allocated them to the appropriate Main Committee. At the Secretary-General's request,(52) the Assembly included in the agenda an item on financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia. On the recommendations of the General Committee, it further included items on: emergency assistance to Pakistan; programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991; emergency assistance to the Philippines; the situation of human rights in Estonia and Latvia; international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua; request for an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice; and convening of an international conference on Somalia.

On 23 December, by decision 47/467, the Assembly retained 41 items or sub-items on the agenda of its forty-seventh session.

By decision 47/402, the Assembly, on 18 September, on the General Committee's recommendation,(46) included in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth (1993) session the questions of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India and of East Timor. On 14 December, by decision 47/425, it included an item on the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations.

Deferring consideration of the item on implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations, the Assembly, by decision 47/466 of 23 December, included it in the provisional agenda of its 1993 session. Also to be included was the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), consideration of which was deferred by decision 47/408 of 10 November. The item on science and peace was also deferred until the 1993 session (decision 47/423 of 14 December), as was the item on the Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the United States Administration in April 1986 (decision 47/463 of 23 December).

Commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1995

On 13 April 1992, the General Assembly decided to establish a Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations and to entrust it with considering and recommending to the Assembly at its 1992 session proposals for suitable activities in connection with the observance of the anniversary (decision 46/472).

The Committee held two meetings, on 22 October and 30 November 1992, to consider various programmes and activities related to the commemoration of the anniversary.(53) By decision 47/417 of 8 December, the Assembly took note of the Committee's activities and decided that it should continue its work.

Cooperation with other organizations

League of Arab States

In response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1992 a report(2) on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States.

According to the report, the secretariats of both organizations continued to maintain close contact on matters of mutual concern. The report reviewed follow-up action on proposals agreed to at previous meetings and summarized the activities of 23 United Nations bodies and organizations which cooperated with the League in six sectoral areas—international peace and security; food and agriculture; labour, trade, industry and environment; social affairs; education, science, culture and information; and communications—in accordance with a decision taken at a joint meeting at Geneva in July 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/12 by recorded vote.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling the decision of the Council of the League of Arab States that it considers the League as a regional organization within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to cooperate in every possible way with the United Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to Lebanon and to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Welcoming the peace process concerning the Middle East, which commenced in the convening of the conference at Madrid in 1991, with a view to achieving a comprehensive and just settlement of the Middle East conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to economic development, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Also convinced of the need for more efficient and coordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

Recognizing the need for closer cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman in November 1980,

Having heard the statement by the Permanent Observer for the League of Arab States to the United Nations on 29 October 1992 concerning cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up actions and procedures on the recommendations in the political, social, cultural and administrative fields adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as on the recommendations relating to political matters contained in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the continued efforts of the League of Arab States to promote multilateral cooperation among Arab States and requests the United Nations system to continue to lend its support;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, held at Tunis in 1983, at Amman in 1985 and at Geneva in 1988;

4. Expresses its appreciation also to the Secretary-General for his efforts to implement Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and commends the League of Arab States and its Tripartite High Committee for their endeavours to promote the peace process and reconstruction efforts in Lebanon;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen cooperation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in order to achieve a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict;

6. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify further their cooperation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, economic development, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate the follow-up action to facilitate the implementation of the proposals of a multilateral nature adopted at the Tunis meeting in 1983, and to take appropriate action regarding the proposals adopted at previous meetings, including the following:

(a) Promotion of contacts and consultations between the counterpart programmes of the United Nations system;

(b) Setting up joint sectoral inter-agency working groups;

9. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and among themselves, as well as with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding cooperation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and improve the mechanism of consultation with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects and programmes, in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To associate whenever possible with organizations and institutions of the League of Arab States in the execution and implementation of development projects in the Arab region;

(d) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 May 1993, of the progress of their cooperation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the previous meetings between the two organizations;

10. Decides that, in order to intensify cooperation and for the purpose of review and appraisal of progress as well as to prepare comprehensive periodic reports, a general meeting between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States should take place once every two years, and inter-agency sectoral meetings should be organized annually on areas of priority and wide importance in the development of the Arab States;

11. Recommends that the next general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations should be held during 1993, in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the first general meeting of cooperation between the two organizations, and also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the executive heads of the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States for the success of the meeting and the realization of its objectives;

12. Also recommends that the United Nations and the other organizations of the United Nations system should utilize Arab expertise to the extent possible in projects undertaken in the Arab region;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to encourage periodic consultation between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States to review and strengthen coordination mechanisms with a view to accelerating implementation and follow-up action of multilateral projects, proposals and recommendations adopted by the meetings between the two organizations;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

Organization of the Islamic Conference

Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(3) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1992 a report(4) on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). He reported that, during the year, the United Nations Department of Political Affairs had held regular consultations with the General Secretariat of OIC and the Office of the Permanent Observer for OIC to the United Nations, and that representatives of OIC had participated in meetings of the Security Council and the Assembly.

The report further described follow-up action in seven priority areas of cooperation: development of science and technology; development of trade; technical cooperation among Islamic countries; assistance to refugees; food security and agriculture; education and eradication of illiteracy; and investment mechanisms and joint ventures. The Secretary-General also summarized the activities of 16 United Nations bodies and organizations which cooperated with OIC in the field of economic, social and cultural development.

In response to the 1991 Assembly resolution,(3) a United Nations/OIC technical working group held a meeting on basic education and training for human resources development (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 17 and 18 May 1992). The group agreed on the need for continued cooperation between the two organizations in that area and noted that the situation regarding human resources development in Islamic countries remained a matter of grave concern. It concluded that, to meet the challenges of the future, Islamic countries should expand access to all sectors of education, improve and diversify its quality and meet the learning needs of all citizens. The group further set out subject areas for future action—including girls' and women's education with particular emphasis on literacy and skill-training programmes, introduction of science and technology in primary education, and literacy and skill-training for adults in non-formal education—and decided to prepare terms of reference for eventual pilot projects in those areas in OIC member States, to be considered at its 1993 meeting in Paris.

In an addendum to the report,(5) the Secretary-General described the November 1991 general meeting between the secretariats of both organizations, which had reviewed the progress achieved in implementing a two-year plan of action in the seven priority areas of cooperation and considered the report of an April 1991 sectoral meeting on basic education and training for human resources development.(6)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November 1992, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/18.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to cooperate more closely in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and economic and technical development,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations that encourage activities through regional cooperation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of cooperation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions,

Noting with satisfaction the meeting of the working group on Human Resources Development: Basic Education and Training, held at Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, on 17 and 18 May 1992,

Noting also the encouraging progress made in the seven priority areas of cooperation as well as in the identification of other areas of cooperation,

Convinced that the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the determination of both organizations to strengthen further the existing cooperation by developing specific proposals in the designated priority areas of cooperation,

Recognizing the ongoing need for closer cooperation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions in the implementation of the proposals adopted at the coordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the two organizations,

Taking into account the meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions, held at Geneva from 27 to 29 October 1992,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985, 41/3 of 16 October 1986, 42/4 of 15 October 1987, 43/2 of 17 October 1988, 44/8 of 18 October 1989, 45/9 of 25 October 1990 and 46/13 of 28 October 1991,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recalls the conclusions and recommendations of the sectoral meeting on Human Resources Development: Basic Education and Training, held at Rabat in April 1991;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue cooperation in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and economic and technical development;

5. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their cooperation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating cooperation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meetings of the focal points for cooperation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

6. Welcomes the follow-up action of the sectoral meeting on Human Resources Development: Basic Education and Training by the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions;

7. Recommends that a general meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions be organized in 1993 at a date and place to be determined through consultations with the concerned organizations;

8. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, especially the lead agencies, to provide increased technical and other forms of assistance to the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions in order to enhance cooperation;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

10. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to hold consultations on a regular basis between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference focusing on the implementation of programmes, projects and follow-up action;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, to continue encouraging the convening of sectoral meetings in the priority areas of cooperation, namely areas of environment, disaster relief and science and technology, as recommended by the 1989 and 1990 meetings of the focal points of the two organizations, including follow-up to the sectoral meetings;

12. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms of coordination between the two organizations;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the state of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe

Inclusion of an item on coordination of the activities of the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) in the General Assembly's agenda was requested by Czechoslovakia in August 1992.(7) In the accompanying explanatory memorandum, Czechoslovakia, the Chairman-in-office of the Council of CSCE, stated that interaction between the United Nations and CSCE had acquired a new dimension after the CSCE summit (Helsinki, Finland, 9 and 10 July). At the summit, the heads of State or Government of CSCE had declared their understanding of the Conference as a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter.

The declaration adopted at the summit contained a number of decisions on various aspects of cooperation, including strengthening of institutions and structures; the establishment of a high commissioner on national minorities; early warning, conflict prevention and crisis management; relations with international organizations and with non-participating States; the creation of a CSCE forum for security cooperation; regional and trans-frontier cooperation; environmental cooperation; support for recently admitted participating States; and security and cooperation in the Mediterranean.(8)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October 1992, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/10.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe
The General Assembly,

Welcoming the declaration by the heads of State or Government of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of their understanding that the Conference is a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and as such provides an important link between European and global security,

Recalling the documents of the Conference, in particular the Final Act, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, the Charter of Paris for a New Europe, the Prague Document on Further Development of the Institutions and Structures of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Vienna Document 1992 on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and the Helsinki Document 1992,

Noting the role that the Conference plays in promoting democratic values and institutions and human rights, the development of the capabilities of the Conference in early warning, conflict prevention, conflict management and security cooperation, including peace-keeping and initiatives in the Conference for further enhancing mechanisms for the peaceful settlement of disputes, and other developments in the Conference process,

Noting also that the new tasks before the Conference require enhanced coordination and cooperation with international organizations, in particular the United Nations,

1. Stresses the need for enhanced cooperation and coordination between the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Conference;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe".

Observer status for the International Organization for Migration

The Geneva-based International Organization for Migration (IOM), created in 1951 as the inter-governmental Committee for European Migration, promotes technical cooperation and serves as a mechanism for coordination and discussion of migration-related issues and activities for the benefit of Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. In 1991, the General Assembly had issued a standing invitation to the organization to attend the coordination meetings convened by the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs.(9)

In view of the fact that IOM was already cooperating with many parts of the United Nations system, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Commission on Human Rights, its Governing Council requested the IOM Chairman to undertake consultations with the goal of obtaining observer status for the organization in the deliberations of the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October 1992, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/4.

Observer status for the International Organization for Migration in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Noting the desire of the International Organization for Migration to intensify its cooperation with the United Nations,

1. Decides to invite the International Organization for Migration to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

PART TWO

Regional questions

Chapter I

Africa

The United Nations continued its efforts in 1992 to build a non-racial, democratic society in South Africa. The peace process was hampered, however, by delays in negotiations and the escalation of political violence. To enhance the peace process, the Security Council authorized the deployment of United Nations observers who, by the end of October, were present in all regions of the country.

The United Nations also faced severe challenges in Angola, Liberia, Mozambique and Somalia. The Security Council expanded the mandate of the second United Nations Angola Verification Mission to include observation of the first-ever multiparty elections held in September, within the framework of implementation of the Peace Accords ("Acordos de Paz para Angola"). Civil war continued to rage in Liberia, in spite of the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States to enforce a cease-fire. In order to help establish peace and stability in that country, the Council in November imposed a complete arms embargo against all parties to the conflict. After extended negotiations, the Government of Mozambique and its main rival, the Resistência Nacional Mozambicana, signed a General Peace Agreement in October. The Council in December authorized the establishment of a United Nations Operation in Mozambique for the purpose of implementing the Agreement. In Somalia, United Nations observers and security personnel were deployed to break the cycle of violence and food insecurity, which threatened the lives of a large part of the population. In view of the deteriorating situation, the Council in December decided to endorse action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations in order to establish a secure environment for relief operations. In response to that decision, the President of the United States directed the execution of Operation Restore Hope on 4 December, with the first elements of the Unified Task Force arriving at Mogadishu on 9 December.

United Nations involvement was requested to verify a referendum by which the people of Eritrea in 1993 would determine their political future. The General Assembly, in December 1992, authorized the establishment of a United Nations Observer Mission for that purpose.

The Secretary-General continued to exercise his good offices towards finding a solution to the question of the island of Mayotte. The Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island and urged France to accelerate negotiations with a view to ensuring the return of the island to the Comoros.

At a meeting in April, organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) adopted recommendations for a new joint action programme. The Assembly requested the United Nations to continue supporting OAU in its efforts to promote a peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts and to collaborate with it in implementing the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.

South Africa and apartheid

Important developments continued to occur in South Africa as the country moved towards a more democratic and non-racial society. With the creation of a negotiating framework in December 1991, the political process reached a new stage.

In February 1992, following a victory by the Conservative Party in a parliamentary by-election, President F. W. de Klerk called on the white electorate to vote through a referendum on the constitutional reforms introduced over the previous two years. On 17 March, 68.7 per cent of the more than 2.8 million white voters voted "yes" in response to the question as to whether they supported the continuation of the reform process aimed at a new constitution through negotiations.

However, negotiations were hampered by repeated set-backs and delays, due in part to the persistent political violence, which reached new heights in June with the massacre of 40 people, including women and children, in Boipatong township near Johannesburg. In August, 348 persons died in political violence, bringing the total of victims killed since the signing of the National Peace Accord in September 1991 to more than 3,400. Twenty-eight persons were killed and nearly 200 wounded when, on 7 September, Ciskei forces opened fire on demonstrators marching on Bisho, capital of the homeland.

Following adoption by the Security Council of resolution 765(1992) in July, the Secretary-General appointed Cyrus R. Vance (United States) as his Special Representative for South Africa, who arrived in South Africa on 21 July for a 10-day mission.

At the request of the parties, 10 United Nations observers witnessed mass action during the week commencing 3 August. An additional 40 observers were deployed in accordance with Council resolution 772(1992), adopted in August.

Activities of the Special Committee against Apartheid. In its annual report covering the period September 1991 to September 1992,⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid reviewed, as in previous years, political, economic, military and other developments relating to the process towards peaceful elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society in South Africa, based on a new constitution, negotiated and agreed on within a broad-based and democratically representative forum. It continued to monitor and analyse the response of the international community to those developments, in accordance with its mandate and the guidelines set by the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa.⁽²⁾ In that context, it continued to monitor all factors threatening to derail the negotiating process and issued early warnings when warranted.

During the period under review, the Special Committee focused its attention on the persisting political violence in the country and the grave socio-economic inequalities. It welcomed the commitment of the international community to encourage a transition to a democratic non-racial South Africa, but cautioned against removing restrictions which would undermine political leverage on the regime. It advocated a phased application of pressure against South Africa in line with positive developments there and underlined the need for increased assistance for the disadvantaged sector of the South African population. At the same time, it welcomed all positive measures taken by the South African authorities towards the creation of an appropriate climate for negotiations.

The Committee responded to developments by issuing statements and organizing encounters with the media, as well as meetings or briefings with Governments and South Africans representing different segments of society. On various occasions, the Committee Chairman met with the leaders of the national liberation movements to discuss developments and promotion of the peace process.

The Committee, together with the United Nations Centre against Apartheid, organized a seminar on South Africa's socio-economic problems and the future role of the United Nations system in helping to address them (Windhoek, Namibia, 22-24 May), which discussed measures for economic growth; the redistribution of opportunity, input, income and services; human resources development needs; and resource needs for the socio-economic restructuring of a new South Africa.

On 29 and 30 June, the Committee held consultations in New York with United States and Canadian anti-apartheid movements and other concerned non-governmental organizations (NGOs), in order to give them an opportunity to develop a new approach to their work in South Africa during the period of transition and beyond, and to help identify relevant issues and programmes of action.

On 14 and 15 July, the British Anti-Apartheid Movement, in conjunction with the Committee, organized an international hearing on political violence in South Africa and the implementation of the September 1991 National Peace Accord. The concluding statement of the hearing called for an international intervention in South Africa through the establishment of appropriate mechanisms, to ensure not only effective monitoring but also the means to end the violence.

The Committee financed a conference on educational assistance to disadvantaged South Africans, organized by the Centre Against Apartheid under the auspices of the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (New York, 8 and 9 September).

As in previous years, it observed the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa (9 August) and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).

In its conclusions, the Committee said that any delay in bringing about a political settlement could be disastrous and the economic price of such a delay was also growing rapidly. South Africa urgently needed an interim government of national unity to prepare elections for a constitution-making body and to administer the country until a new government was elected on the basis of an agreed democratic and non-racial constitution.

Apartheid would be eradicated only with the adoption of a new constitution and the installation of a new government resulting from a free and fair election. The Committee said it could therefore not support the view that apartheid was a closed page in the history of South Africa. Old legislative and executive structures were in place and the majority of the population had not been able to exercise the right to vote. While many apartheid laws had been dismantled, the legacy of apartheid, with its glaring socio-economic disparities, continued to threaten the process of democratization and would take long years to overcome.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly reaffirm its determination to support the South African people in their legitimate struggle for the total elimination of apartheid through peaceful means and in their efforts to build a non-racial and democratic society; reaffirm the principles and goals envisaged in the 1989 consensus Declaration on Apartheid; reiterate its conviction that broad-based negotiations resulting in a new non-racial and democratic constitution would lead to the total elimination of apartheid; reiterate its strong support for the negotiation process; and note that while positive measures had been taken towards creating a better climate for negotiations, including the repeal of key apartheid laws, the revision of major security legislation and the release of remaining political prisoners, serious obstacles remained to achieving a climate conducive to free political activity.

The Committee further recommended that the Assembly welcome Security Council resolutions 765(1992) and 772(1992), its 10 September statement on the spiralling cycle of violence, the Secretary-General's report on the mission to South Africa of his Special Representative, the recommendations in his 7 August report, and the measures taken by the Secretary-General to assist the process in South Africa in strengthening the structures set up under the National Peace Accord, including the deployment of United Nations observers.

Among other recommendations were that the Assembly: urge the South African authorities to exercise fully and impartially their primary responsibility to end the violence, protect lives, security and property of all South Africans, and bring to justice those responsible for acts of violence; urge them to respect and protect the right of South Africans to demonstrate peacefully; call on the signatories to the National Peace Accord to recommit themselves to the process of peaceful change; note with satisfaction the release of prisoners held for their political beliefs or activities, and the agreements reflected in the record of understanding issued on 26 September; urge the resumption of broad-based negotiations on transitional arrangements and basic principles for reaching agreement on a new constitution and for its speedy entering into force; call on the international community to support the process in South Africa through a phased application of appropriate measures; urge the international community to respect the measures imposed by the Security Council for the purpose of bringing an early end to apartheid; appeal for an increase in humanitarian and legal assistance to apartheid victims; appeal to the international community to help create stable conditions for a rapid and peaceful attainment of a new South Africa based on a negotiated, democratic and non-racial constitution by providing material, financial and other assistance; request the Secretary-General to continue ensuring the coordination of United Nations activities; authorize the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to mobilize international support for eliminating apartheid; and appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue cooperating with the Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/116 B without vote.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recognizing the important role that the Special Committee has had in mobilizing international support for the elimination of apartheid and in the adoption by consensus, on 14 December 1989, of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on its work, under its mandate, in support of the peaceful eradication of apartheid and of the process of a negotiated transition of South Africa to a democratic non-racial society;

2. Commends the Special Committee for the holding in Windhoek, from 22 to 24 May 1992, of the Seminar on South Africa's Socio-Economic Problems: Future Role of the United Nations System in Helping to Address Them, and for its full support of the holding of the Follow-up Conference on International Educational Assistance to Disadvantaged South Africans, held in New York on 8 and 9 September 1992, under the auspices of the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and its Advisory Committee;

3. Authorizes the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to mobilize international support for the elimination of apartheid through the early establishment in South Africa of a society based on an agreed democratic and non-racial constitution as envisaged in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, and to this end:

(a) To continue to monitor the complex developments in South Africa, and to collect, analyse and disseminate factual information in this regard;

(b) To facilitate a peaceful and stable transition in South Africa by promoting international assistance to help South Africans overcome the negative social and economic consequences of the policies of apartheid by, inter alia, following up on the Windhoek Seminar through sectoral seminars on well-defined and specific topics with the participation of experts in the relevant fields and in cooperation with relevant bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, institutions and non-governmental organizations;

(c) To undertake liaison and consultations with Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, foundations and institutions, as well as other relevant groups, both inside and outside South Africa;

4. Appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue their cooperation with the Special Committee, and requests all relevant components of the United Nations system to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee and the Centre against Apartheid in their activities in support of the ongoing process of the peaceful elimination of apartheid in South Africa;

5. Decides that the special allocation of 450,000 United States dollars to the Special Committee for 1993 from the regular budget of the United Nations should be used towards the cost of special projects aimed at promoting the process towards the elimination of apartheid through the establishment of a new society in South Africa based on a democratic and non-racial constitution, with particular emphasis on issues of human rights and constitution-building, human resources development, institutional capacity-building, health, housing and other socio-economic priority areas;

6. Also decides to continue to authorize adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania to maintain offices in New York so that they may participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee and in deliberations relating to the situation in South Africa in other relevant United Nations bodies.

18 December 1992 Meeting 91 Adopted without vote

Draft by Nigeria (A/47/L.29); agenda item 33.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/47/798; S-G, A/C.5/47/74.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 47; plenary 62-66, 88, 91.

Report of the Secretary-General. In November 1992, in response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(3) the Secretary-General presented a third progress report(4) on implementation of the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa.(2)

The report, which analysed the progress since September 1991 towards dismantling apartheid, was based on written submissions by the Government, political parties and movements and other organizations, supplemented by official statements and press releases. It dealt specifically with the release of all political prisoners and detainees, as called for by the Declaration; the removal of all troops from the townships; the repeal of legislation designed to circumscribe political activity; and the cessation of all political trials and executions. It considered other elements conducive to free political discussion and to the negotiation process, such as the creation of an atmosphere free of violence, and freedom of assembly and of the press. It dealt with matters that enhanced or obstructed the process of ending apartheid, and with the application of the guidelines for the negotiation process, as set out in the Declaration. Finally, it reviewed implementation by the international community of the programme of action put forward in the Declaration.

On a number of occasions during the year, the Secretary-General discussed with South Africa's Minister for Foreign Affairs and its Permanent Representative to the United Nations developments relating to the situation in the country, in particular the negotiation process under way. He also met with Nelson Mandela, President of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), Clarence Makwetu, President of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC), and Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, President of the Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP). In addition, he was represented in an observer capacity at the two sessions of the Convention for a Democratic South Africa (CODESA I and II). His Special Representative, Cyrus R. Vance, visited the country in July and Virendra Dayal, Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, visited it in September to hold follow-up discussions with the relevant parties in connection with the implementation of Council resolution 772(1992) (see below).

The Secretary-General observed that the Boipatong massacre, the tragedy at Bisho and other incidents of violence (see below) called attention to the imperative need to put an end to the violence and facilitate a peaceful transition to a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa. The role of the international community in establishing such a country could be complementary only to that of the various political groups in South Africa, whose participation, good will and political courage were essential. Responsibility for achieving a just and long-lasting agreement through negotiation must rest with the South Africans themselves.

The United Nations, for its part, would continue to seek creative ways to assist the people of South Africa as a whole in attaining the goals they had set for themselves and to which the Assembly had committed itself in its 1989 Declaration. The Organization stood ready to provide a concerted system-wide response to address the economic and social disparities resulting from institutionalized racism. It was active, through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), its trust funds for southern Africa and the specialized agencies, in facilitating the return of South African exiles and the reintegration of former political prisoners, and in providing educational and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans.

Annexed to the report were the declaration of intent adopted by the participants at CODESA I (see below) and the joint statement and record of understanding agreed on by President de Klerk and the ANC President following a September 1992 meeting (see below).

Negotiation process

The second plenary session of the Convention for a Democratic South Africa (CODESA II) took place on 15 and 16 May 1992, with the participation of the Government of South Africa, ANC, IFP, the Governments of the so-called "independent homelands" and a number of political parties, such as the Democratic Party and the Solidarity Party. The same 19 participants had attended the first plenary session (CODESA I) in December 1991, at which they had adopted a declaration of intent committing themselves to bring about an undivided South Africa free from apartheid and to some fundamental constitutional principles. The Conservative Party, the Azanian People's Organization and PAC did not take part in the talks; PAC described the forum as undemocratic.

Five working groups established by CODESA I submitted their reports to CODESA II. They indicated that consensus had been reached on the following issues: the transition to democracy would involve two preliminary phases, with a multiparty Transitional Executive Council preparing the country for elections and an assembly elected by proportional representation and universal suffrage elaborating and adopting a new constitution; all parties agreed "in principle" to the reincorporation of "independent homelands" and the restoration of South African citizenship to their residents; all security forces should be placed under the control of the transitional governmental structures and held accountable to the public; all parties needed to recommit themselves to the letter and spirit of the National Peace Accord;⁽⁵⁾ and the international community should be called upon for assistance to facilitate implementation of the Accord.

CODESA II, however, was unable to reach agreement on a number of issues related to the constitution-making process. This deadlock prevented consideration of the reports of the other working groups, since ANC would not accept a partial agreement. As the differences could not be resolved, CODESA II reached an impasse.

Following the collapse of the talks, ANC, together with its political allies—the Congress of South African Trade Unions and the South African Communist Party—announced a four-phase mass action plan embodying demands for an interim government and an elected constituent assembly. The first phase of the mass action began on 16 June and continued until the end of the month, the first deadline set by ANC for a break in the deadlock at CODESA and the creation of an interim government. Following the failure to do so, the second phase was set in motion on 1 July. During the month, mass action remained mostly regional, but simultaneous national actions, such as marches and sit-ins, targeted specific government institutions.

The third phase of the mass action plan started with a general strike on 3 and 4 August, when millions of South Africans stayed away from work, followed on 5 August by demonstrations and marches. The fourth phase began after the general strike; its aim was for the Government to relinquish power or at least accept demands for a representative constituent assembly and introduce legislation for the establishment of a transitional executive authority to oversee elections.

Although formal constitutional negotiations were suspended, contacts between ANC and the Government resumed at the end of July, with talks focusing on the issues of political prisoners. The deadlock, however, could not be broken, as ANC considered that the Government had not answered satisfactorily the 14 demands it had set in June 1992 as preconditions to negotiations. Those demands focused on creating an elected constitutional assembly, setting up an interim government, ending all covert operations, disbanding all special forces and detachments made up of foreign nationals, suspending and prosecuting all members of the security forces involved in the violence, ending repression in the homelands, phasing out hostels, installing fences around hostels and guarding and searching them permanently, banning all dangerous weapons, setting up an international commission of inquiry into the Boipatong massacre (see below) and other acts of violence, repealing all repressive legislation and releasing all political prisoners.

The ANC National Executive Committee, meeting on 3 September, reiterated its decision not to resume negotiations until its demands were met, underlining in particular the need to deal with the violence and to release political prisoners. It acknowledged, however, that some progress had been achieved during the informal talks, noting that the Government had indicated its support for adequate deadlock-breaking mechanisms and precise time-frames.

At the beginning of September, the Government convened a multiparty conference, to which it invited all political parties and organizations and government institutions interested in the concept of regional government in a new order. ANC declined to attend.

A meeting between Mr. Mandela and President de Klerk on 26 September resulted in a record of understanding⁽⁶⁾ on such issues as the release of remaining political prisoners, the constitution-making process, the carrying and display of dangerous weapons at public occasions, and the fencing and policing of a number of hostels. Agreement was also reached on the need for a democratic constituent assembly/constitution-making body and constitutional continuity during the transitional period.

On 30 September, ANC announced that its National Executive Committee had decided to return to negotiations. IFP leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi, however, stated that his party was not willing to resume negotiations on the basis of the agreements reached between ANC and the Government, a position in which he was joined by the leaders of Bophuthatswana and Ciskei.

Exploratory talks resumed in August between the Government and PAC. The latter announced that substantive issues such as violence, election of a constituent assembly, the role of the international community, the transitional authority and voter registration would be discussed in October in a neighbouring country presided over by a neutral chairman. PAC reiterated that it was not opposed to negotiations, but wanted them to be conducted within a democratic forum which should write a new constitution. The convening of a constituent assembly and an alternative forum for negotiations would be a major issue on the agenda. The South African Minister of Constitutional Affairs confirmed that talks would include demands for a sovereign constitutional assembly.

PAC informed the Government that it would not join an "interim government" which in its view co-opted the liberation movements and was based on the principle of full political responsibility without full political power. It supported a transitional authority which impacted directly on the transition to a new order. Some of its duties would be to supervise elections and control the electronic media and security forces.

Meanwhile, President de Klerk outlined draft legislation that he was to table at the resumed session of Parliament in October. That legislation would enable him to appoint blacks to his Cabinet and suspend all Parliamentary by-elections, as well as transfer the functions of "own affairs" departments to general affairs and rearrange the functions of self-governing states.

The Government and PAC held bilateral discussions in Gaborone, Botswana, in early November and agreed to meet again in South Africa on 9 December to discuss the convening of a multiparty forum. Arrangements for further meetings, however, were cancelled in reaction to the position taken by the PAC political leadership with regard to reports that its armed wing, the Azanian People's Liberation Army (APLA), claimed responsibility for recent armed attacks at King William's Town and Queens Town and that APLA planned a campaign of attacks on "soft targets".

Further political developments included the emergence in October of a loose coalition of the Conservative Party and other groups on the right, and the leaders of Bophuthatswana, Ciskei and KwaZulu, under the name of Concerned South Africans Group, which was aimed at galvanizing opposition to what its members perceived as an alliance between ANC and the Government. Other organizations and entities across the entire political spectrum were also pursuing contacts with one another.

Bilateral talks between the parties focused on the regional structure of a new South Africa, the devolution of powers and power-sharing, and the corresponding constitutional provisions.

At CODESA II, there was wide agreement in principle on the reincorporation of the homelands into South Africa, their participation in transitional arrangements, provisions for testing the will of their people regarding their reincorporation, and the "restoration" of South African citizenship to those who chose reincorporation.

The leader of Ciskei subsequently indicated his outright opposition to reincorporation, which was also rejected by Bophuthatswana. On 1 December, Chief Buthelezi presented a new draft constitution for a "federal state of Natal/KwaZulu", which was ratified the same day by the KwaZulu Legislative Assembly.

During bilateral talks in the first week of December, the Government and ANC appeared to make considerable progress in narrowing differences. The talks took place against the background of the Government's proposed timetable for the transition, which envisaged that a fully representative government of national unity was to be in place no later than the first half of 1994, and the November 1992 meeting of the ANC National Executive Committee which considered the establishment of interim governmental structures. Continuation of those talks was expected shortly and both parties emphasized that their positions were to be considered as proposals and that they were determined not to exclude other parties from the process.

At a meeting on 10 December, President de Klerk, Chief Buthelezi and the leaders of Bophuthatswana and Ciskei discussed the resumption of multiparty talks. Following an agreement reached between ANC and IFP at the 24 November meeting of the National Peace Committee, preparations started for a meeting between Chief Buthelezi and Mr. Mandela.

Violence

In spite of the National Peace Accord signed in September 1991 between 23 parties, including the South African Government, ANC and IFP, political violence continued to wreak havoc in black townships, with some 300 persons dying each month, according to the non-governmental South African Human Rights Commission. The violence reached unprecedented and dramatic levels during the period covered by the annual report of the Special Committee against Apartheid.⁽¹⁾ Whereas the majority of those killed seemed to have been ordinary residents of black townships, a degree of political affiliation could be identified for up to half of the fatal victims; of those, about 84 per cent appeared to be linked to ANC, while some 16 per cent were assumed to be affiliated with IFP.

On the night of 17 June 1992, armed men attacked residents in the township of Boipatong, near Johannesburg, killing at least 40 men, women and children. Numerous witnesses alleged that the attackers, who apparently came from a nearby hostel, were supporters of IFP and were assisted by members of the police. The Government and the police immediately denied being implicated in the incident. Relations between the Government and ANC were further strained after a visit to Boipatong by President de Klerk on 20 June, when angry demonstrators forced the President to leave the area. Following his departure, unprovoked firing was reported to have led to several casualties, including three members of PAC.

On 23 June, the ANC National Executive Committee held an emergency meeting, at the end of which it decided to suspend talks with the Government, as well as its participation in CODESA negotiations, while reaffirming its commitment to a negotiated resolution of the conflict. Accusing the Government of fomenting violence, ANC put forward 14 demands as preconditions for negotiations (see above). Responding on 2 July, President de Klerk denied allegations that the Government was sponsoring the violence and reiterated the warning that mass mobilization would inevitably lead to further violence.

At the end of June, Justice Richard Goldstone, Chairman of the Commission of Inquiry regarding the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation (Goldstone Commission), established under the terms of the National Peace Accord, had three British experts evaluate the investigation by the South African police into the Boipatong massacre. The experts found no evidence of police collusion, but described the police as suffering from serious organizational problems; according to their report, inadequate command and control in particular had allowed the massacre to be perpetrated unhindered, and it appeared that the police lacked effective intelligence and contingency planning. The investigation had been conducted in an unstructured and inadequate manner, which undermined evidence-gathering. Hostility and non-cooperation from the township residents, which had also impeded the investigation, could partly be attributed to insufficient awareness by the police of working on community relations and to their perceived bias in favour of hostel-dwellers. According to the Special Committee against Apartheid, these severe conclusions by foreign experts brought to South Africa with the authorities' approval had significant political impact.

In addition, disclosures by a prominent South African pathologist, Dr. Jonathan Gluckman, increased pressure on the authorities to investigate police actions further. In a report published by the South African press in July, Dr. Gluckman expressed his conviction that in 90 per cent of the 200 cases of deaths in police custody for which he had performed post-mortems, the prisoners had been killed by the police. He also stated that he had discussed the deaths with high-ranking officials, but no action had been taken. Reacting to his report, the Minister of Law and Order announced that he had ordered a full investigation into all deaths which had occurred in detention over the past two years. Twelve deaths in custody, however, were reported again during August, bringing the total of such deaths for 1992 to 86.

The Security Council convened on 15 and 16 July to consider the question of South Africa, in particular the escalating violence and the breakdown of negotiations (see below). The Council, by resolution 765(1992), condemned the violence, urged the South African authorities to take immediate measures to end it and called on all the parties to cooperate to that end. It also authorized the Secretary-General to dispatch urgently a Special Representative to hold discussions with the parties in South Africa, in order to recommend measures for ending the violence and creating conditions for negotiations.

Based on the findings of Cyrus Vance, his Special Representative for South Africa, the Secretary-General on 7 August issued a report to the Council. Among the recommendations in the report was that the Goldstone Commission should undertake a series of investigations into the functioning and operations of the South African army and police, the Umkhonto we Sizwe, APLA, the KwaZulu police and various independent security firms. It was also recommended that the United Nations make available observers.

Responding to increased pressure on the Government to investigate police actions and reform the police force radically, the Minister of Law and Order announced on 27 August initiatives, such as the setting up of a body to investigate crimes allegedly committed by police, the resignation or early retirement of 18 of the 55 South African police generals and the rectification of the discriminatory practices which had previously prevented black police from being promoted. ANC described the measures as a face-lift, not a substantial change, pointing out that many of the police generals suspected of wrongdoing were not included in the list of those to resign or retire. PAC, on 28 August, said the purging of 13 generals would not cleanse a morally corrupt police force; a genuine new credible police could be brought about only by a democratic majority government.

On 1 October, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) announced that the Government had agreed to allow ICRC representatives access to South African police stations.

On 7 September, Ciskei forces opened fire on ANC demonstrators marching on Bisho, capital of the homeland, leading to the killing of at least 28 participants. ANC strongly condemned what it described as unprovoked killing of unarmed demonstrators and put responsibility for the massacre on Brigadier Oupa Gqozo and the South African authorities. Mr. Mandela called for Gqozo's resignation and for an independent inquiry into the shooting. Church leaders, for their part, urged Brigadier Gqozo to submit himself to a referendum.

The shooting dampened hopes for negotiations further. President de Klerk condemned both the Ciskei authorities for breaches of the National Peace Accord and ANC for having stepped up its mass action campaign. At the same time, he acknowledged that it was not possible to negotiate constitutional issues before the question of violence had been dealt with satisfactorily and proposed that a high-level meeting be held between the Government and ANC to discuss the issue. He also announced his intention to invite all homeland leaders to an urgent discussion on the control of their security forces.

A high-level meeting between Mr. Mandela and President de Klerk on 26 September resulted in a record of understanding on certain outstanding issues and, on 30 September, ANC announced its decision to return to negotiations (see above).

The Goldstone Commission, in its second interim report issued in April 1992, stated that it had not received evidence of a third force orchestrating violence and that both ANC and IFP were guilty of many incidents that had resulted in the deaths of and injuries to large numbers of people. However, it criticized the Government's failure to take sufficiently firm steps to prevent criminal conduct by members of the security forces and to punish the perpetrators.

In a September report,⁽⁷⁾ the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination charged that mercenary groups had been responsible for acts of repression against liberation movement leaders and for massacres carried out in suburbs inhabited by the Black majority. Investigating commissions had established that mercenaries participated in implementing apartheid policies and were entrusted with the most violent actions.

In the view of PAC, the major source of violence in the country was the regime, and violence would continue until all mercenaries, such as the Buffalo Battalion and the Koevoet, were expelled from the country under international supervision and all death squads were disbanded. While some anti-apartheid organizations welcomed President de Klerk's announcement on 14 July that the particularly discredited Battalions 31 and 32 and the Koevoet unit of the security forces would be disbanded, they called for wider measures, in particular for prompt implementation of the recommendations of Justice Goldstone, such as a total ban on the carrying of dangerous weapons.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 15 and 16 July, the Security Council, at the request of Madagascar for the Group of African States,⁽⁸⁾ convened to consider the question of South Africa, in particular the escalating violence.

The Council invited Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Barbados, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, Germany, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Lesotho, Malaysia, Namibia, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, Portugal, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Uganda, Ukraine, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire and Zambia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a An invitation under rule 39^b was extended to the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, at his request, and, at the request of Zimbabwe, to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU)⁽⁹⁾ and the Presidents of PAC⁽¹⁰⁾ and ANC.⁽¹¹⁾

At South Africa's request,⁽¹²⁾ the Council invited seven participants in CODESA (Mangosuthu Buthelezi, Lucas M. Mangope, Brigadier Oupa Gqozo, Dr. J. N. Reddy, E. Joosab, Kenneth M. Andrew, E. E. Ngobeni) under rule 39. At India's request,⁽¹³⁾ it invited Bantu Holomisa, Essop Pahad, Philip Mahlangu and Manguenzi Zitha, also under rule 39.

On 16 July, the Council adopted resolution 765(1992) unanimously.

Recalling its resolutions 392(1976), 473(1980), 554(1984) and 556(1984),

Gravely concerned by the escalating violence in South Africa, which is causing a heavy loss of human life, and by its consequences for the peaceful negotiations aimed at creating a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa,

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

^bRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Concerned that the continuation of this situation would seriously jeopardize peace and security in the region,

Recalling the consensus Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa adopted by the General Assembly at its sixteenth special session on 14 December 1989 which called for negotiations in South Africa to take place in a climate free of violence,

Emphasizing the responsibility of the South African authorities to take all necessary measures to stop immediately the violence and protect the life and property of all South Africans,

Emphasizing also the need for all parties to cooperate in combating violence and to exercise restraint,

Concerned at the break in the negotiating process and determined to help the people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for a non-racial, democratic society,

1. Condemns the escalating violence in South Africa and in particular the massacre at Boipatong township on 17 June 1992, as well as subsequent incidents of violence including the shooting of unarmed protesters;

2. Strongly urges the South African authorities to take immediate measures to bring an effective end to the ongoing violence and to bring those responsible to justice;

3. Calls upon all the parties to cooperate in combating violence and to ensure the effective implementation of the National Peace Accord;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to appoint, as a matter of urgency, a Special Representative in order to recommend, after, inter alia, discussion with the parties, measures which would assist in bringing an effective end to the violence and in creating conditions for negotiations leading towards a peaceful transition to a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa, and to submit a report to the Security Council as early as possible;

5. Urges all parties to cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in carrying out his mandate and to remove the obstacles to the resumption of negotiations;

6. Underlines, in this regard, the importance of all parties cooperating in the resumption of the negotiating process as speedily as possible;

7. Urges the international community to maintain the existing measures imposed by the Security Council for the purpose of bringing an early end to apartheid in South Africa;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa is established.

Security Council resolution 7651(1992)

16 July 1992 Meeting 3096 Adopted unanimously

meeting numbers. SC 3095, 3096.

Addressing the Council, the ANC President, Nelson Mandela, urged the appointment of a United Nations Special Representative on South Africa to investigate the situation there and help the Council decide on measures to end the violence, which, he said, was organized and directed against the democratic movement. Like the system of apartheid itself, the violence was a direct challenge to the authority of the Council.

The PAC President, Clarence Makwetu, invited the United Nations to send a commission to South Africa to help identify solutions for ending the violence. He called on the Council to empower the Secretary-General to identify a neutral venue for and supervise discussions on democratic elections to a constituent assembly which would then draw up a new constitution.

IFP leader Buthelezi refuted allegations that the Government and his party were responsible for the violence at Boipatong, saying that IFP members were among the victims.

South Africa's Foreign Minister said the Government accepted responsibility for maintaining order but the other parties to the National Peace Accord were not absolved from their commitments. Negotiation was the only alternative to the violence, the causes of which were complex and multidimensional.

The Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid emphasized that the continuing violence put in jeopardy the peaceful negotiation process and transition to a non-racial democracy. The violence and the deadlock in the political negotiations were the two critical questions the Council had to address. The blame for the violence rested primarily with the Government, which had failed in its moral responsibility for its citizens and the State. The Government had to bear full responsibility for the conduct of its agencies, which invariably resulted in inadequate police investigations, sham trials and unwarranted acquittals of perpetrators of violence, ineffective jail sentences and bails and police cover-ups. The regime had created an impediment to the negotiations which raised questions as to its sincerity and long-term commitment to a non-racial democracy in the country.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). In response to the 16 July Council resolution, the Secretary-General appointed former United States Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance as his Special Representative for South Africa. A report on his mission, together with the Secretary-General's observations, was submitted to the Council on 7 August.(14)

Accompanied by Virendra Dayal, former Chef de Cabinet, the Special Representative visited South Africa from 21 to 31 July. The delegation met with President de Klerk and members of his Cabinet, as well as with the major political parties and participants in CODESA. It also held discussions with delegations from Bophuthatswana, Ciskei, Transkei and Venda, and with members of Parliament, prominent individuals, among them Justice Goldstone, scholars, lawyers, trade unionists, leaders of the business community, and representatives of the media, churches, civic groups and NGOs.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General said he was impressed by the open and responsive manner in which the United Nations had been received by all sectors of society; he viewed it as further evidence of a transformation towards a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa.

However, the violence must be brought under control and conditions established to ensure the success of the negotiating process. The unanimous adoption of Security Council resolution 765(1992) had heightened expectations that the continuous involvement of the Council in the new phase of South Africa's evolution would be marked by understanding and a readiness to contribute constructively to the process of peaceful change.

On the basis of these observations, the Secretary-General recommended that the international community support the efforts of the Goldstone Commission, whose recommendations should be fully and speedily implemented. Among them were those relating to a total ban on the public display of dangerous weapons and the security of hostels, which needed to be acted on with utmost urgency. Also, the Commission's code of conduct for mass demonstrations could do much to control violence, and the leaders of the major political parties should take firm steps to stop their supporters from participating in acts of violence.

In order to remedy the lack of political trust, the Secretary-General recommended that the Goldstone Commission investigate the functioning and operations of certain agencies, among them the army and police, the Umkontho we Sizwe, APLA, the KwaZulu police and certain private "security firms". Any further investigations and prosecutions required pursuant to the Commission's reports should be undertaken promptly by the competent government departments, and the Commission's reports should be made available to all signatories of the National Peace Accord within 24 hours of submission to the State President.

The mechanisms foreseen under the Accord needed to be greatly strengthened, and both the National Peace Committee and the National Peace Secretariat needed to be more substantially and consistently supported by the highest political levels. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the United Nations make available some 30 observers to serve in close association with the National Peace Secretariat, in order to further the purposes of the Accord. The experience gained by the dispatch of 10 United Nations observers to cover the current mass demonstrations could help define their tasks and methods of functioning and, as necessary, their number could be supplemented by other international organizations, such as the Commonwealth, the European Community (EC) and OAU. In addition, there was a need for the establishment of operations centres at the major "flashpoints" to defuse incipient problems; those offices or centres, staffed on a 24-hour basis, should have direct access to law enforcement agencies and should have a standing group composed of representatives of the Government, ANC, IFP and other concerned parties.

The Secretary-General urged the Government to ensure the early appointment of the Justices of Peace and the establishment of special criminal courts envisaged in the National Peace Accord. The effects of apartheid could be remedied only by rapid progress towards the creation of a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa that was the goal of the negotiations and the objective not only of CODESA but of the international community as a whole.

The conducting of the negotiations was uniquely the responsibility of the South Africans themselves; the Secretary-General was heartened by statements that the major parties were determined to return to the negotiating table as early as possible. Actions such as the immediate release of all remaining political prisoners could contribute greatly to improving the political climate and creating trust.

For all its shortcomings, the CODESA process must be pursued and improved. Those who had not joined in that process needed to be encouraged to do so. CODESA proceedings needed to be better coordinated and made more transparent. A highest-level machinery needed to be established to help resolve deadlocks, and the appointment of an eminent and impartial person to provide cohesion might be considered.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August/September)

The Security Council met on 17 August in accordance with the understanding reached at prior consultations. The Council adopted resolution 772(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,
Reaffirming its resolution 765(1992) of 16 July 1992,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the question of South Africa,

Determined to help the people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for a non-racial, democratic society,

Cognizant of the expectations of the people of South Africa that the United Nations will assist with regard to the removal of all obstacles to the resumption of the process of negotiations,

Bearing in mind the areas of concern relevant to the question of violence in South Africa, including the issues of the hostels, dangerous weapons, the role of the security forces and other armed formations, the investigation and prosecution of criminal conduct, mass demonstrations and the conduct of political parties,

Further bearing in mind the need to strengthen and reinforce the indigenous mechanisms set up under the National Peace Accord, so as to enhance their capacity in the building of peace, both in the present and in the future.

Determined to assist the people of South Africa to end violence, the continuation of which would seriously jeopardize peace and security in the region,

Underlining, in this regard, the importance of all parties cooperating in the resumption of the negotiating process as speedily as possible,

1. Welcomes with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 7 August 1992;
2. Expresses its appreciation to all relevant parties in South Africa for the cooperation they extended to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;
3. Calls upon the South African Government and all parties in South Africa to implement urgently the relevant recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in his report;
4. Authorizes the Secretary-General to deploy, as a matter of urgency, United Nations observers in South Africa, in such a manner and in such numbers as he determines necessary to address effectively the areas of concern noted in his report, in coordination with the structures set up under the National Peace Accord;
5. Invites the Secretary-General to assist in the strengthening of the structures set up under the National Peace Accord in consultation with the relevant parties;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council quarterly, or more frequently if necessary, on the implementation of the present resolution;
7. Calls on the Government of South Africa, parties and organizations, and the structures set up under the National Peace Accord, to extend their full cooperation to the United Nations observers to enable them to carry out their tasks effectively;
8. Invites international organizations such as the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and the European Community to consider deploying their own observers in South Africa in coordination with the United Nations and the structures set up under the National Peace Accord;
9. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa is established.

Security Council resolution 772(1992)

17 August 1992 Meeting 3107 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24444).

After consultations held on 10 September, the President of the Security Council made the following statement to the media on behalf of the Council:(15)

"The members of the Security Council deplore the killing of 28 demonstrators and the wounding of nearly 200 others by security elements in South Africa on 7 September 1992. They reiterate their grave concern at the continued escalation of the violence in South Africa. They emphasize once again the responsibility of the South African authorities for the maintenance of law and order and call on them to take all measures to end the violence and to protect the right of all South Africans to engage in peaceful political activity without fear of intimidation or violence. They urge all parties in South Africa to cooperate in combating violence and to exercise maximum restraint in order to help break the spiralling cycle of violence.

"The members of the Security Council emphasize the need to put an end to the violence and create conditions for negotiations leading to the establishment of a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa. They note in this regard that the Security Council, in its resolution 772(1992) of 17 August 1992, authorized the Secretary-General to deploy United Nations observers in South Africa, in coordination with the structures set up under the National Peace Accord, to provide a framework and basis for putting an end to violence in the country. They welcome the Secretary-General's decision to deploy an advance party of 13 United Nations observers in South Africa on 11 September 1992 as part of the complement of 50 observers to be deployed within one month.

"The members of the Council call upon the Government of South Africa, parties and organizations, and the structures set up under the National Peace Accord, to extend their full cooperation to the United Nations observers to enable them to carry out their tasks effectively. They reiterate their call to other relevant regional and intergovernmental organizations to consider deploying their own observers in South Africa in coordination with the United Nations and the structures set up under the National Peace Accord in order to facilitate the peace process."

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In December,(16) the Secretary-General reported to the Council on the findings of his Special Envoys, designated following consultations with the Government of South Africa and the parties after adoption of resolution 772(1992). Virendra Dayal, former United Nations Under-Secretary-General, visited South Africa from 16 to 27 September, and Tom Vraalsen, Assistant Secretary-General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Norway and former Permanent Representative of Norway to the United Nations, was there from 22 November to 9 December. Their findings covered the status of negotiations and implementation of the National Peace Accord; the return of refugees; political violence and measures to reduce it; investigations into the security forces and other armed formations; the status of Battalions 31, 32 and Koevoet; prosecutions of criminal activity and efforts at police reform; the question of hostels; and the carrying and display of dangerous weapons. The Secretary-General also supplied information about the activities of the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa (see below), as well as his own contacts and consultations.

On the basis of those consultations and the reports of his Special Envoys, the Secretary-General noted that there had been distinct progress since his 7 August report. Recent developments gave cause for guarded optimism about the prospect for progress towards a negotiated settlement; there was substantial agreement to expedite arrangements for multiparty negotiations. Those trends should be encouraged by the international community and it was essential that the Council stay actively seized of the situation, as the goal of a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa must remain a priority of the Organization.

With respect to the CODESA process, the Secretary-General said the principle of inclusiveness must be recognized as essential for a transition to democratic rule through free elections and new constitutional arrangements. It was imperative that all parties refrain from unilateral actions or public statements that rendered the process more difficult. All parties must recognize that continued uncertainty over the country's future could only lead to further violence, instability and economic decline.

While the Government had primary responsibility for maintaining law and order, all political leaders must take immediate action to curb the violence. In that context, the Secretary-General urged all parties to attend the planned meeting of signatories to the National Peace Accord in order to examine ways of putting an end to violence. Those in a position to influence the authorities of the homelands should strongly urge the repeal of repressive legislation and restraint of their security forces.

Following the 26 September meeting between President de Klerk and Mr. Mandela, a government-ANC joint committee made considerable progress regarding political prisoners and, by 15 November, the agreed date for their release, 536 cases had been disposed of by the committee. Some cases submitted by ANC had yet to be resolved, however. The Government stated that it would issue a proclamation to prohibit, country-wide, the carrying and display of dangerous weapons at all public occasions, subject to exemptions based on guidelines being prepared by the Goldstone Commission. The Secretary-General urged the Government to take steps to expedite the full implementation of the agreements on those issues and said that further consideration might be given to ways of cutting off illegal weapons supplies, over which all parties had expressed deep concern.

The Secretary-General expressed his intention to continue supporting the work of the Goldstone Commission and welcomed the Government's and ANC's assurance of cooperation with it. He urged all parties to cooperate with the Commission's forthcoming investigation into the security forces and other armed formations. He also urged expansion of the programmes for exchange of information and expertise between South Africa and other countries to help build community confidence in and develop the human resources of the South African police; police officers from various countries should be invited to advise South African police on the conduct of investigations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly on 18 September decided that the item on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa would be considered directly in plenary meeting, on the understanding that representatives of OAU and of national liberation movements recognized by it would be permitted to participate in the plenary discussions and that organizations and individuals with special interest in the item would be heard by the Special Political Committee.

In accordance with that decision, the special Political Committee on 6 November heard seven persons representing the following organizations: (17) PAC, the Lutheran Office for World Community, the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, the Sub-Committee on Southern Africa of the Non-Governmental Organizations Committee on Human Rights, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee and ANC. By decision 47/410 of 17 November, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report.

Following discussion of the agenda item, the Assembly on 18 December adopted resolution 47/116 A without vote.

International efforts towards the total eradication of apartheid and support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern-Africa, adopted by consensus on 14 December 1989, which, inter alia, called for negotiations in a climate free of violence,

Reaffirming the Declaration and the need for the full implementation of its provisions,

Also recalling its decision 45/457 B of 13 September 1991 and its resolution 46/79 A of 13 December 1991,

Welcoming the initiative of the Organization of African Unity to place before the Security Council the question of violence in South Africa and welcoming Security Council resolutions 765(1992) of 16 July 1992 and 772(1992) of 17 August 1992 and especially the decision to deploy United Nations observers to further the purposes of the National Peace Accord signed on 14 September 1991,

Welcoming also the deployment of observers from the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and the European Community in South Africa in response to Security Council resolution 772(1992),

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 August 1992 on the mission of his Special Representative to South Africa,

Also taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, and the third progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Declaration, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the coordinated approach by the United Nations system on questions relating to South Africa,

Welcoming the safeguards agreement of 16 September 1991 between the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Government of South Africa and the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 4 September 1992 on the completeness of the inventory of South Africa's nuclear installations and material, under the terms of the safeguards agreement,

Reiterating its conviction that broad-based negotiations, initially undertaken by the Convention for a Democratic South Africa, resulting in a new non-racial and democratic constitution and its early entry into force will lead to the total elimination of apartheid through peaceful means,

Noting that while positive measures have been undertaken by the South African authorities, including the repeal of key apartheid laws and the revision of major security legislation, important obstacles to achieving a climate conducive to free political activity remain,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community, as envisaged in the Declaration, to help the South African people in their legitimate struggle for the total elimination of apartheid through peaceful means,

Gravely concerned that continued and escalating violence threatens to undermine the process of peaceful change, through negotiations, to a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa,

Deeply concerned at revelations of illegal covert activities carried out by military intelligence with a view to undermining a major party to the political process of peaceful change in South Africa,

Noting with concern that, despite the signing of the National Peace Accord, the tragic bloodshed in South Africa has not ended,

Bearing in mind the need to strengthen and reinforce the mechanisms set up in South Africa under the National Peace Accord and emphasizing the need for all parties to cooperate in combating violence and to exercise restraint,

Encouraging the efforts of all parties, including ongoing talks among them, aimed at facilitating the resumption of substantive broad-based negotiations towards a new constitution and arrangements on the transition to a democratic order,

Taking note with satisfaction of recent agreements between parties aimed at removing many obstacles to resuming broad-based negotiations and also noting with satisfaction the release of prisoners held for their political beliefs or activities,

Noting with concern the remaining effects of the acts of destabilization that were committed by South Africa against the neighbouring African States,

1. Strongly urges the South African authorities to exercise fully and impartially the primary responsibility of government to bring to an end the ongoing violence, to protect the lives, security and property of all South Africans in all of South Africa, and to bring to justice those responsible for acts of violence;

2. Calls upon all parties to refrain from acts of violence and to cooperate in combating violence;

3. Strongly urges the South African authorities to assume the full responsibility to respect and protect the right of South Africans to demonstrate peacefully in public in order to convey their views effectively;

4. Urgently calls upon all signatories to the National Peace Accord to recommit themselves to the process of peaceful change by fully and effectively implementing its provisions and by cooperating with each other to that end;

5. Calls upon all other parties to contribute to the achievement of the aims of the National Peace Accord;

6. Takes note with approval of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and calls upon the Government of South Africa and all parties in South Africa to implement urgently those recommendations;

7. Commends the Secretary-General for those measures taken to address areas of concern noted in his report and particularly to assist in strengthening the structures set up under the National Peace Accord, including the deployment of United Nations observers in South Africa, and urges the Secretary-General to continue to address all the areas of concern noted in his report which fall within the purview of the United Nations;

8. Welcomes the deployment in South Africa of the observers of the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and the European Community;

9. Strongly urges the Government of South Africa, as well as the other parties and movements, to lend their full cooperation to the Commission of Inquiry regarding the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation (Goldstone Commission) and to permit the Commission urgently and fully to carry out investigations into the functioning and operations of security forces and armed formations, as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to respond positively and appropriately, as envisaged in his report, to requests for assistance from the Goldstone Commission in the context of the National Peace Accord;

11. Urges the representatives of the people of South Africa to resume, without further delay, broad-based negotiations on transitional arrangements and basic principles for a process of reaching agreement on a new democratic and non-racial constitution and for its speedy entry into force;

12. Calls upon the international community to support the vulnerable and critical process still under way in South Africa through a phased application of appropriate measures with regard to the South African authorities, as warranted by ongoing developments, and, within the context of the need to respond appropriately to them, to review existing restrictive measures as warranted by positive developments, such as agreement by the parties on transitional arrangements and agreement on a new, non-racial and democratic constitution;

13. Calls upon all Governments to observe fully the mandatory arms embargo, requests the Security Council to continue to monitor effectively its strict implementation and urges States to adhere to the provisions of other Council resolutions on the import of arms from South Africa and the export of equipment and technology destined for military or police purposes in that country;

14. Appeals to the international community to increase humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid, returning refugees and exiles and released political prisoners;

15. Calls upon the international community to assist disadvantaged South African democratic anti-apartheid organizations and individuals in the academic, scientific and cultural fields;

16. Also calls upon the international community to assist the non-racial sports bodies, which have been endorsed by representative anti-apartheid sports organizations in South Africa, in redressing the continuing structural inequalities in sports;

17. Appeals to the international community to help create stable conditions for the rapid and peaceful attainment of a new South Africa, based on an agreed, democratic and non-racial constitution, by providing and increasing its material, financial and other assistance to South Africans in their efforts to address the serious socio-economic problems of the disadvantaged people of South Africa, particularly in the areas of education, employment, health and housing;

18. Also appeals to the international community to render all possible assistance to States neighbouring South Africa to enable them to recover from the effects of destabilization and thereby to contribute to the stability and prosperity of the subregion;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the parties concerned, to undertake preliminary examination of the assistance that the United Nations might provide in the electoral process leading to a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the coordination of activities of the United Nations and its agencies with regard to South Africa, and, as appropriate, inside that country, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on measures taken to facilitate the peaceful elimination of apartheid and the transition of South Africa to a non-racial and democratic society as envisaged in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa.

UN Observer Mission in South Africa

The terms of reference of the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa (UNOMSA) were set out in Security Council resolution 772(1992) of 17 August, as well as in a report of the Secretary-General dated 7 August(14) (see above). Following consultations, the Secretary-General announced on 9 September his decision to deploy a mission of up to 50 United Nations observers in South Africa in implementation of the Council resolution.

Angela King, Director, Staff Administration and Training Division, Office of Human Resources Management, was appointed Chief of UNOMSA and took up her post on 23 September. The headquarters of UNOMSA was at Johannesburg, with a regional office at Durban. By the end of October, UNOMSA observers were deployed in all 11 regions of South Africa, and by the end of November, all 50 observers were deployed. UNOMSA observers were joined by observers from the Commonwealth, EC and OAU. As at 22 December, they numbered 17, 14 and 11, respectively. UNOMSA's deployment was weighted towards the Witwatersrand/Vaal and Natal/KwaZulu regions, where 70 per cent of the political violence occurred.

UNOMSA personnel observed demonstrations, marches and other forms of mass action, noting the conduct of all parties, and endeavoured to obtain information indicating the degree to which the parties' actions were consistent with the principles of the National Peace Accord and the Goldstone Commission guidelines for marches and political gatherings. Observers supplemented their field observations by establishing and maintaining informal contacts at all levels with established government structures, political parties and organizations, as well as community-based "alternative structures" such as civic associations and other groups.

The functions of the structures established under the National Peace Accord, with which UNOMSA was requested to cooperate, were varied but interrelated. The National Peace Committee was charged with the resolution of disputes concerning interpretation and alleged transgression of the code of conduct for political parties and organizations and with the promotion of social and economic reconstruction and development. The National Peace Secretariat had the responsibility to establish and coordinate the work of regional and local dispute resolution committees.

In its role of strengthening peace structures, UNOMSA initiated through the National Peace Secretariat courtesy calls and visits to homelands other than Bophuthatswana, Ciskei and KwaZulu, which were visited separately. Fact-finding trips were made to QwaQwa, Lebowa and KaNgwane. The UNOMSA observer team based at Pretoria. (Northern Transvaal) made frequent visits to KwaNdebele.

In a December report,(18) the Secretary-General estimated net requirements of UNOMSA for the period from mid-September 1992 to 31 December 1993 at $13,121,300. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in an oral report before the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, recommended approval of the Secretary-General's estimates. It trusted that the staffing of UNOMSA would be kept under constant review and that the Secretary-General would pursue his efforts with the host Government to obtain premises at no cost.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/219, section XIX, without vote.

United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa [The General Assembly ...]

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Approves an appropriation of 13,121,300 dollars required under section 2 (Peace-keeping operations and special missions) of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 for the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa, from mid-September 1992 to 31 December 1993, on the understanding that these requirements would be treated outside the procedures related to the contingency fund and without prejudice to the future mode of financing;

3. Also approves an appropriation of 1,673,200 dollars under section 36 (Staff assessment) of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, offset by the same amount under income section 1 (Income from staff assessment);

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Advisory Committee, at its spring session of 1993, a performance report on the Mission, including actual expenditures from its inception and revised requirements for 1993, taking into account the developments in the region;

General Assembly resolution 47/219, section XIX

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/835) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 104.

Other aspects

Political prisoners and exiles

Among factors hindering the establishment of a climate of free political activity was the issue of political prisoners and the return of exiles. While some 1,000 political prisoners were released in 1991, such action virtually ceased at the beginning of 1992. In September 1992, the Human Rights Commission listed 395 political prisoners. More than a year after the deadline agreed in the Pretoria Minute for the release of all political prisoners, therefore, the issue had not been entirely resolved.

In his 7 August 1992 report to the Security Council,(14) the Secretary-General recommended the immediate release of all remaining political prisoners. The South African Government, reacting to the recommendation and in preparation for a meeting on 26 September between the State President and Mr. Mandela, proposed a blanket amnesty for all crimes committed by both the security forces and anti-apartheid guerrillas before October 1990, a proposal which included the release of over 400 remaining political prisoners. ANC rejected the proposal on the grounds that it equated acts of apartheid opponents with those carried out to maintain the system and that amnesty could only be put in place after investigation of State-committed atrocities by a non-racial, democratically elected government.

PAC, on 28 September, said it would not recognize legislation by which the Government would indemnify its own crimes.

Substantial progress was made with regard to the return of political exiles. By the end of August 1992, more than 5,200 exiles had returned to South Africa under the auspices of the programme by UNHCR, and the National Coordinating Committee for the Repatriation of Exiles, for its part, had brought back an additional 7,000.

Another 5,000 refugees had applied to return. UNHCR's mandate in the country was extended for another year in order to address problems of reintegration and facilitate the return of exiles. UNHCR reached agreement with the Government on the involvement of the United Nations Children's Fund in reintegration, focusing on the needs of women and children. A mission of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) recommended that consideration be given to establishing a modest UNDP presence in the country, within UNHCR, to assist with the rehabilitation aspects of resettling returnees.

Women and children under apartheid

On 30 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/15 by recorded vote.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1991/20 of 30 May 1991,

Reaffirming the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/79 of 13 December 1991,

Alarmed by the grave socio-economic deprivation to which the majority of the people, especially the women and children, are subjected as a direct consequence of apartheid,

Deeply concerned about the alleged State complicity in politically motivated violence that has to date claimed thousands of lives and has left hundreds of thousands homeless, the majority of whom are women and children,

Noting the positive changes initiated by the South African authorities aimed at dismantling apartheid, which were the result of the relentless struggle waged by the people of South Africa as well as the pressure exerted by the international community,

Noting with satisfaction the signing of the National Peace Accord in September 1991 and the convening of the Convention for a Democratic South Africa in December 1991, and expressing the hope that this will constitute a major contribution towards the final ending of violence in South Africa,

Welcoming the holding of the Convention for a Democratic South Africa as an attempt to resolve the problems of South Africa by peaceful means as envisaged in the Declaration on Apartheid,

Recognizing that the equality of women and men cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle towards a united, non-racist, non-sexist and democratic South Africa,

Aware of the attention given by the United Nations, and, in particular, the Centre against Apartheid and the Division for the Advancement of Women, to the issue of assisting South African women to participate fully in the process of establishing a non-racist democracy in their country;

1. Commends those women both inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression and who have remained steadfast in their opposition to apartheid;

2. Demands the immediate unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees, among whom are women and children, in accordance with the undertaking of the South African authorities;

3. Urges those involved in the Convention for a Democratic South Africa to place high on their agenda issues concerning women such as freedom, justice and equality, development and the environment;

4. Also urges the South African authorities to ratify the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, at the earliest possible opportunity;

5. Appeals to all countries and United Nations bodies, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 46/79 and in consultation with liberation movements, to increase their support for educational, health, vocational training and employment opportunities for women and children living under apartheid;

6. Requests the Centre against Apartheid to widen and strengthen its cooperation with the Division for the Advancement of Women, with a view to creating specific programmes of assistance to South African women to enable them to participate fully in the process of transition of their country towards a non-racist democracy;

7. Appeals to the international community to give its full and concerted support to the vulnerable and critical process now under way in South Africa through a phased application of appropriate pressures on the South African authorities as warranted by developments, and to provide assistance to the opponents of apartheid and the disadvantaged sectors of society in order to ensure the rapid and peaceful attainment of the objectives of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

8. Decides to remain seized of the issue of women and children living under apartheid;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/15

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 33-1-18 (recorded vote)

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) by recorded vote (33-1-17), 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1992/24); agenda item 18.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Colombia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Guinea, India, Jamaica, Kuwait, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Economic and social conditions

A year after the repeal of the major apartheid laws, the impact of political changes had yet to be felt by the majority of South Africans, whose living conditions were deteriorating rapidly. Political uncertainty and violence were contributing factors. Recession, described as the worst since 1945, accentuated the structural incapacity of the country's economy to generate employment. The number of unemployed was estimated to range from 1.9 million to 5.4 million. Forecasts of a 2 per cent growth rate in 1992 had to be revised following a negative growth rate of 0.5 per cent in 1991, and it was envisaged that South Africa's economy could register a contraction of 1 per cent in 1992.

Business confidence remained low, reflecting the unfavourable investment climate. Real gross domestic fixed investment, which declined by 8.5 per cent in 1991, was expected to fall by a further 6 per cent during 1992. Consumer spending also remained under pressure.

Hopes of a major export-led recovery in South Africa were dampened by the slower than expected recovery in world markets and the poor performance of commodity prices, especially for gold, platinum and ferroalloys. Little progress was achieved in countering the high rate of inflation, estimated at 14 per cent, compared to 15.3 per cent in 1991. Food prices increased by 28.8 per cent during the year ending March 1992, and a growing number of South Africans—estimated at 2.5 million—could not afford to pay for their basic nutritional needs. Government relief programmes were not sufficient to check the spread of poverty.

In spite of increased allocations to social, health and educational services for blacks, important disparities remained, as black education continued to be affected by a severe shortage of basic materials and qualified teachers and most medical facilities were still de facto segregated. Little progress was also achieved in addressing the redistribution of land.

Many organizations and parties joined the call for a unitary, non-racial education system. In February, the Government announced further reforms, whereby most white schools would opt for a new, semi-private status. The trend towards privatization was denounced as a new attempt to keep black children out of white schools. ANC called for a moratorium on any restructuring of the health sector until a forum with all the key players was established to develop a new health policy.

The issue of housing was the focus of intense debates, and although the Government devoted more funds to reducing the housing backlog, they were not expected to be sufficient to cover housing needs. A May report of the South African Housing Advisory Board called for a complete overhaul and rationalization of existing subsidy schemes and the merging of white and black local authorities.

There was a growing awareness among the major political parties that no political compromise would be viable without simultaneous agreement on the course to be followed to generate new growth while addressing the most urgent socio-economic needs of the majority of the population. At its first policy conference (Johannesburg, May 1992), ANC adopted a comprehensive set of guidelines on economic policy which, according to the Special Committee against Apartheid, reflected a more pragmatic approach and indicated a general shift regarding the question of public ownership and nationalization. While generally welcomed by the business sector, the guidelines drew some criticism for the proposed principle of "national treatment" to be applied to foreign investors who could be blocked from investing in certain strategic areas and would have limits placed on their local borrowing facilities.

On 31 March, the largest labour federations, including the Congress of South African Trade Unions and the National Council of Trade Unions, and key business representatives reached agreement on the setting up of a national economic forum where various economic policy options could be debated. The new Finance Minister expressed support for the initiative. However, failure to adopt in July a joint charter for peace, democracy and economic reconstruction, to help prevent further industrial unrest, soured relations between business and labour.

The Special Committee expressed full support for a negotiating forum which would seek an accord between government, business and labour and help reset economic priorities and correct socio-economic imbalances engendered by decades of apartheid. Those inequalities continued to plague the majority of the South African population.

Apartheid in sports

South Africa's participation in the Olympic Games at Barcelona, Spain, in September 1992 signalled the end of its isolation in sports. Consequently, its sports and cultural links with the rest of the world increased significantly.

In a November report to the General Assembly,(19) the Commission against Apartheid in Sports, established under the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports,(20) acknowledged that there was a strong movement towards the integration of sports in South Africa. However, it noted that blacks and other disadvantaged groups were not fully integrated in sports in general and that there were sports in which they did not participate due to remaining patterns of apartheid. The Commission urged the international community to provide assistance to the disadvantaged sectors of the South African population to help them overcome the legacy of apartheid.

As of the time of the Commission's report, there were 28 States signatories and 55 States parties to the Convention, which was adopted by the Assembly in 1985(20) and entered into force in 1988.

The Commission, which monitored implementation of the Convention by States parties, recommended that the Assembly urge them to observe all the Convention's provisions until apartheid was abolished, that it call on States, organizations and individuals to provide moral and material support to non-racial sports organizations in South Africa, and that it invite the Special Committee against Apartheid to consider using its good offices to promote fund-raising for the purpose of supporting racial integration of sports in the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/116 G by recorded vote.

Support for the work of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the boycott of apartheid in sports and, in particular, 32/105 M of 14 December 1977, by which it adopted the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports, 40/64 G of 10 December 1985, the annex to which contains the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, and 45/176 G of 19 December 1990,

Having considered the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports and the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports and endorses its recommendations;
2. Urges Governments and the international sporting community to assist the non-racial sports movement in South Africa to redress the structural inequalities in sports that are among the legacies of apartheid.

In resolution 47/116 A, the Assembly called on the international community to assist the non-racial sports bodies in redressing the continuing structural inequalities in sports.

Relations with South Africa

South Africa's isolation continued to lessen as more States decided to establish diplomatic ties with Pretoria and a number of countries lifted restrictive measures. However, following the deadlock at CODESA II in May 1992 and the massacre at Boipatong in June, a number of States and cities which had been preparing to lift their sanctions put such plans on hold.

In accordance with a decision by the Commonwealth heads of Government in October 1991(21) to lift sanctions in phases, following progress made towards negotiations on a new constitution, some Commonwealth countries lifted all people-to-people sanctions, including consular and visa restrictions, cultural, scientific and sports boycotts, bans on airlinks and restrictions on tourism promotion.

The State Department of the United States issued a statement allowing the use of United States export-import facilities in trade with South Africa. Before the stalemate at CODESA II, the Mayor of New York announced that sanctions imposed by the city in 1985 would be lifted in phases following the establishment of an interim government in South Africa. While the ANC President agreed with that course of action, PAC informed the Mayor that such a decision would harm the victims of apartheid as the regime had reneged on a number of issues and therefore could not be trusted. PAC emphasized that sanctions could be lifted only after adoption of a new constitution by a democratically elected constituent assembly.

An important aspect of South Africa's increased diplomatic activity was the extensive travelling of the State President in 1992. Politically, the most significant trip was his visit to Abuja, Nigeria, in April. The President of Kenya, Daniel arap Moi, became in June the first African head of State to visit South Africa in 21 years, and the decision of Côte d'Ivoire to open an embassy at Pretoria made Abidjan the first African capital to exchange ambassadors with Pretoria since Malawi did so more than 25 years before. Lesotho followed by establishing ties at the ambassadorial level. South Africa had consular offices/trade missions or representative offices in some 20 other African States.

Most Western countries had maintained diplomatic relations with South Africa even during the years of isolation. In Eastern Europe, diplomatic relations existed with Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. Diplomatic ties were also opened with Japan, Singapore, Taiwan and Thailand. In the Middle East, where Israel remained South Africa's long-standing ally, contacts were established with Bahrain, Dubai (the United Arab Emirates), Iran and Lebanon. Moreover, a large number of countries established interest sections in other embassies at Pretoria.

Non-governmental and other organizations, on the other hand, continued to call for application of pressure on South Africa, while pursuing their efforts to provide support to the anti-apartheid opposition and monitor the political situation in the country. When EC decided to lift the oil embargo in April, the EC Anti-Apartheid Movement strongly protested the decision.

Economic relations

Trade and finance

The years 1991 and 1992 saw a rapid reintegration of South Africa into the mainstream of world trade, the Special Committee against Apartheid noted in its annual report.(1) Especially in the early months of 1992 before the breakdown in political negotiations, potential local and foreign investors showed interest in the South African economy.

With a number of countries relaxing restrictive measures on trade as well as exploring the possibilities of establishing business operations in South Africa and the region as a whole, a significant list of trade missions held talks with the South African Government and business officials. A trade agreement was signed with Italy on economic and industrial cooperation, the first such agreement with a major European Power. As France lifted coal sanctions, major collaboration agreements with French companies were reportedly negotiated, including deals in the hotel and transport field. South Africa offered the Russian Federation a 140 million rand (R) revolving credit link to facilitate expanding trade between the two countries. The Barlows Equipment Co. of South Africa was contracted to supply mining equipment for a diamond venture in Angola, the biggest trade deal between the two countries.

Trade between South Africa and the rest of Africa grew significantly during the period under review. The reform process in South Africa prompted the formation of the Southern Africa Development Community (SADC), to replace the Southern African Development Coordination Conference, set up in 1980 to reduce dependence on South Africa. The new SADC was set to expand its role, which included a tighter unity in economic policies, regional security, foreign affairs and security issues. Meanwhile, South Africa's main trading partners remained Germany, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States; while trade with Africa was estimated at R 10 billion in 1991, South Africa's total visible trade was R 114 billion.

Despite depressed base and precious metals prices, South Africa's major export commodities, South African exports performed well during the first quarter of 1992, with a gain of 7 per cent in January and February. The biggest contributors to that growth were jewellery and precious stones (mainly diamonds), which rose by 79 per cent during the first quarter. Exports of manufactured products also increased. Total exports of goods and services exceeded total imports, resulting in sustained favourable performance of the current account of the balance of payments. The account surplus, which reached R 7.4 billion, or 2.5 per cent of gross domestic product, in 1991, declined, however, to an annualized R 4.5 billion in the first quarter of 1992 and R 6 billion in the second.

As economic sanctions were lifted, international banks and investors re-established business relations with South Africa, improving significantly the capital account of the balance of payments. In the first quarter of 1992, the total net outflow of capital declined to R 21 million, but increased in the second quarter to R 1.9 billion, in reaction to adverse political developments.

Following South Africa's re-entry into world capital markets in September 1991, it raised several bond issues with European banks. The return of South African borrowers to international financial markets generated a great deal of controversy, and ANC appealed to major financial institutions in Europe and the Far East to keep financial sanctions in place.

While traders clearly manifested their interest in South Africa, the hope for significant foreign investment remained unfulfilled. In a move to encourage such investments, the Minister of Finance announced in June 1992 that foreign companies and individuals would no longer pay tax on interest accrued on their investment in South Africa. ANC, meanwhile, maintained that the most important way to promote foreign investment remained the establishment of a climate of political stability, economic growth and transparent and consistent economic policies.

To stimulate tourism and trade links further, South Africa announced a liberalization of its international aviation policy, including a possible relaxation of tariff control measures.

While Japan had announced during the latter part of 1991 that it was lifting its economic, financial and trade sanctions, several countries followed suit in 1992. In January, EC members lifted their last economic sanctions against South Africa—on imports of gold coins and iron and steel products—and, on 6 April, EC announced its decision to lift the oil embargo, in effect since 1985, and declared that restrictive measures in the cultural, scientific and sporting fields were formally lifted. However, the embargo on imports and exports of arms and sensitive goods for the armed forces, along with measures affecting military and nuclear cooperation, remained in effect.

The Republic of Korea lifted economic sanctions imposed since 1978, opening the way for investment by Korean companies and increased trade between the two countries. However, the ban on sales of arms and petroleum remained in place. Mexico decided to lift its trade sanctions and move towards establishing diplomatic relations with South Africa.

Singapore announced in March 1992 the lifting of its trade and investment sanctions, but decided to maintain the ban on arms sales and loans to the South African authorities and public enterprises.

Oil embargo

The Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1986,(22) continued in 1992 collecting data and considering information on alleged violations and port calls in South Africa of ships with the capability of carrying oil and petroleum products. In pursuance of its mandate, the Group maintained contact with Governments, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and the shipping industry, following up cases of alleged violations.

During 1992, the Group queried 78 cases of alleged violations that occurred mainly during the 12 months since its previous report of October 1991.(21) There were 71 cases involving tankers with a total dead-weight capacity of over 16.8 million tons, with an additional seven cases involving combination carriers with a total dead-weight capacity of over 700,000 tons. Most of the cases involved oil-producing States.

Since 1987, the Group had removed a number cases of alleged violations from further consideration on the basis of one or more of the following criteria: when the certificate of discharge confirmed the delivery of oil to ports other than those in South Africa; when there was no oil-loading facility in the port concerned; and when it was certified that the ship in question was not capable of transporting oil or petroleum products.

In the conclusions to its annual report to the Assembly issued in November,(23) the Group considered it essential that oil-exporting States maintained their policies and regulations banning the export of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, particularly the restrictions on the final destination of those products. A premature lifting of the oil embargo would be counter-productive and harmful to the negotiating process.

The Group recommended that the Assembly call on States to maintain and enforce existing measures prohibiting the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, to apply strictly the oil embargo or comparable policies, and to discourage ships capable of carrying oil or petroleum products in their national registries or owned/managed by companies or individuals under their jurisdiction from engaging in activities that violated the embargo; and request States to cooperate fully with the Group, particularly in its investigation into the circumstances of alleged violations of the embargo or of port calls of ships capable of carrying oil and petroleum products, including the removal of legal impediments to such cooperation.

In April, the Chairman of the Group issued a statement expressing regret about the 6 April decision of EC to lift the ban on the export of oil to South Africa, since an agreement on transitional arrangements or on a new non-racial democratic constitution had not been achieved. The strategy of pressure and encouragement, which the Group had consistently supported, should be maintained and lifted only when the conditions set forth in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa(2) were met.

An addendum to the Group's report contained a list of ships and companies reported to have been involved in supplying oil to South Africa between 1987 and 1991; a summary of communications between Governments and the Group concerning alleged violations reported between 1987 and 1991; a summary of cases of alleged violations reported in 1992; and surveys of unclarified tanker calls at South African ports reported in 1991 and 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/116 D by recorded vote.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Recalling its resolutions on the oil embargo against South Africa, in particular resolution 46/79 E of 13 December 1991,

Recognizing the importance of the oil embargo as a major contribution to the pressure exerted on South Africa towards the eradication of apartheid through negotiations, as well as the importance of maintaining pressure until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, such as the adoption of a non-racial and democratic constitution for a free South Africa,

Noting that the most effective way to enforce the oil embargo against South Africa remains the adoption by the Security Council of a mandatory embargo,

Taking note with appreciation of the draft model law for the effective enforcement of the oil embargo against South Africa, contained in the report of the Intergovernmental Group to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, and welcoming its consideration by Member States,

Concerned that the oil embargo against South Africa is still being violated and that South Africa, because of loopholes in the embargo such as lack of effective legislation, has been able to acquire oil and petroleum products,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would contribute to the efforts of the international community to bring about a negotiated settlement and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa and endorses its recommendations;

2. Requests all States to adopt, if they have not already done so, and otherwise to maintain and enforce effective measures prohibiting the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly, and in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate to each country, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the apply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibilities for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent South African companies from acquiring holdings in oil companies outside South Africa;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to South Africa in the oil sector, including finance, technology, equipment or personnel;

(f) To prohibit the transport of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(g) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered in their territory or owned by their nationals, that have violated the oil embargo, and to discourage such ships from calling at South African ports;

(h) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo, and to publicize cases of successful prosecutions in conformity with their national laws;

(i) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo, including ways and means to prevent such violations, and to take concerted measures against violators;

(i) To discourage ships within their jurisdiction from engaging in activities that give rise to violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, taking into account legislative and other measures already adopted;

3. Authorizes the Intergovernmental Group to take action to promote public awareness of the oil embargo against South Africa, including, when necessary, sending missions and participating in relevant conferences and meetings;

4. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Requests all States to extend their cooperation to the Intergovernmental Group with all necessary assistance for the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational corporations

In a March 1992 report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations (TNCs),⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General examined the role of TNCs in the South African economy in the 1990s, the role of sanctions and the reaction of the international community to the repeal of key apartheid legislation. In another March report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General updated the lists of TNCs with equity interests in South Africa and those which had disinvested. (For details, see PART THREE, Chapter V.)

By resolution 1992/34, the Economic and Social Council invited TNCs, among others, to give their full support to the demise of the apartheid system. The Council requested the Secretary-General to continue examining possible contributions of TNCs to the construction of a united and non-racial South Africa.

Military and nuclear collaboration

South Africa's defence budget for 1992-1993 was estimated at R 9.7 billion, representing less than 10 per cent of total government spending. Although declining, at 4.3 per cent of gross national product (GNP), military expenditure was still above the targeted 3.6 per cent of GNP.

As part of the ongoing restructuring and privatization of the South African arms industry, the South African Arms Corporation reorganized its manufacturing subsidiaries into the Denel Group, whose management indicated that the aim was conversion from predominantly military production (85 per cent) to the manufacture for mainly civilian markets, an endeavour to which the United States had reportedly offered its assistance. The Atlas Aircraft Corporation, now under the name SIMERA, was reorganized in a similar manner.

The United States Administration was reported to have opposed South Africa's efforts to build and launch space satellites. Houwteq, a Denel subsidiary, was said to be developing a satellite and launching capability that could be ready within five years. Some evidence also suggested that South Africa had already developed various components for satellites.

In its report, the Special Committee against Apartheid supplied information about reported imports and exports of arms and equipment to and from South Africa. Among the Committee's actions in that regard was a letter of 1 April to Chile from the Acting Chairman, expressing concern at South Africa's participation in the FIDAE '92 air exhibition at Chilean Los Cerrillos Air Force base near Santiago. On 6 April, the Acting Chairman addressed letters to Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Russian Federation concerning the participation of companies in their respective countries with the South African companies Atlas and Kentron in promoting jet fighters and related technology at the Aviation Africa '92 Aerospace Trade Fair at Johannesburg. The Russian Federation, by a 24 April letter, stated that neither fighter aircraft nor any other military technology connected with such aircraft was exhibited at the show. Czechoslovakia, by a letter of 30 April, said it complied and would continue to do so with the 1991 General Assembly resolution on military collaboration with South Africa,⁽²⁶⁾ as well as with the obligatory military embargo imposed by the Security Council in 1977.⁽²⁷⁾ Even though informal contacts might happen, no licences for arms or military technology exports to South Africa were given by the Council of State Defence.

By a letter of 9 September, the Acting Chairman expressed concern about reports that the South African Air Force had decided to purchase approximately 40 Brazilian EMB 312 aircraft. On 16 October, Brazil responded that the Brazilian firm EMBRAER had considered the possibility of selling Tucano aircraft to South Africa, but that such transaction was only to be carried out on condition that the aircraft could be used for exclusive use as pilot trainers and without any possibility of conversion for military use; however, in international bidding, the contract for the supply of trainer aircraft was not awarded to EMBRAER. Brazil carefully monitored EMBRAER's efforts at the South African market and there was no question of circumventing the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council.

Following its accession to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons(28) and the safeguards agreement signed in September 1991 with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA),(29) South Africa resumed its participation in the proceedings of the policy-making organs of IAEA. By a resolution on South Africa's nuclear capability, adopted on 25 September 1992, the General Conference of IAEA requested South Africa to continue to cooperate with IAEA in implementing the safeguards agreement. The Conference also requested the IAEA Director General to assist African States in their efforts towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa.

The Director General, in a September 1992 report to the General Conference, stated that no evidence had been found that the list of nuclear facilities and locations provided by South Africa under the safeguards agreement was incomplete, and IAEA was not in possession of any other information suggesting the existence of any undeclared facilities or nuclear material. The General Conference resolution and the Director General's report were annexed to the Secretary-General's October 1992 report(30) on South Africa's nuclear capability (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/116 E by recorded vote.

Military and other collaboration with South Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, its resolutions 45/176 B and C of 19 December 1990 and 46/79 B and C of 13 December 1991, as well as the resolutions of the Security Council on the arms embargo and military collaboration with South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the report of the Security Council Committee established by Council resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 concerning the question of South Africa on its activities during the period 1980-1989,

Noting with appreciation the resolve and effectiveness of the Security Council in its handling of questions relating to the preservation of international peace and security,

Noting that the monitoring and enforcement mechanism of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council on South Africa in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 would benefit from further strengthening,

Reiterating that the full implementation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa is an essential element of international action towards the eradication of apartheid,

Convinced that sanctions and other restrictive measures have had a significant impact on recent developments in South Africa and that the phased application of appropriate pressure remains an effective and necessary instrument in the process towards the peaceful end to apartheid,

Taking note of the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 4 September 1992 on the completeness of the inventory of South Africa's nuclear installations and material, under the terms of the safeguards agreement,

Expressing serious concern about the continued violations of the mandatory arms embargo, particularly by those countries which surreptitiously trade in arms with South Africa,

Expressing concern that South Africa's external military relations, especially in the area of military technology and, in particular, in the production and testing of missiles, continue unabated, as mentioned in the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Gravely concerned about the practice carried out by certain oil-producing States whereby oil is exchanged for South African arms,,

1. Deplores the actions of those States which, directly or indirectly, continue to violate the mandatory arms embargo and collaborate with South Africa in the military, nuclear, intelligence and technology fields, and calls upon those States to terminate forthwith any, illegal acts and honour their obligations under Security Council resolution 418(1977);

2. Urges all States to adopt strict legislation relating to the implementation of the arms embargo and to prohibit the supply to South Africa of nuclear and military products, as well as computer and communications equipment, technological skills and services, including military intelligence, destined for use by the military, police and security agencies of that country, until free and fair elections have been held and a democratic government has been established;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider immediate steps to ensure the full implementation and the effective monitoring of the arms embargo imposed by the Council in its resolutions 418(1977) and 558(1984) of 13 December 1984, to implement the recommendations of the Committee established under Council resolution 421(1977) concerning appropriate measures in response to violations of the mandatory arms embargo and to provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

4. Calls upon all States to maintain existing financial measures and, in particular, urges Governments and private financial institutions, as well as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, not to extend new loans and credits to South Africa, whether to the public or private sector, until agreement has been reached on a non-racial democratic constitution or until specific recommendations are made on this matter by the transitional authorities to be established by the Convention for a Democratic South Africa;

5. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the issue of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa under constant review and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Israel-South Africa relations

The Special Committee, in the second part of its report, prepared in response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,⁽³¹⁾ dealt exclusively with relations between South Africa and Israel, especially in the military and nuclear fields. The Committee viewed the ongoing collaboration from the standpoint of its effect on concerted international efforts aimed at total eradication of apartheid and support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa.

The Committee drew attention to various reports in newspapers and publications in Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States that military and nuclear cooperation was continuing. According to the Committee, South Africa was one of Israel's major arms customers. The ongoing cooperation, which violated the mandatory arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in 1977,⁽³²⁾ was a matter of great concern to the international community, the Committee said.

The Committee called for effective action, particularly by the Security Council, to end that violation. It recommended that the Assembly call on Israel to cease its collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, and that it authorize the Committee to continue monitoring relations between the two countries.

With respect to other aspects of the collaboration between them, the Special Committee noted that a November 1991 visit to Israel by President de Klerk had resulted in a February 1992 tour to South Africa by an Israeli delegation, which included representatives of the Ministries of Finance, Industry and Commerce, Agriculture and Tourism. The Committee quoted the magazine Israeli Foreign Affairs, which reported on 20 February that Israel had trained most of IFP's intelligence operatives, including an assistant to the party leader.

According to statistics available, Israeli exports to South Africa amounted to $98 million in 1991, with imports to Israel from there estimated at $235 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/116 F by recorded vote.

Relations between South Africa and Israel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the relations between South Africa and Israel and, in particular, its resolution 46/79 D of 13 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between South Africa and Israel, and the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability,^a

Noting with concern that the military relations between South Africa and Israel, especially in the area of military technology and in particular the collaboration in the production and testing of nuclear missiles, continue unabated,

1. Strongly deplores the collaboration of Israel with the South African regime in the military and nuclear fields;

2. Reiterates its demand that Israel desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider taking appropriate measures against Israel for its violation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to monitor the relations between South Africa and Israel and keep them under constant review and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Aid programmes and inter-agency cooperation

In a November 1992 report,(33) submitted in accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(3) the Secretary-General described current or planned activities of the United Nations system for the successful repatriation of South African refugees and exiles, the reintegration of political exiles and released political prisoners, and assistance to the disadvantaged sectors of South African society. Guidelines for a coordinated United Nations approach to questions relating to South Africa had been adopted by the Administrative Committee on Coordination in 1991.(34) To facilitate future coordination of United Nations efforts, a seminar was held on South Africa's socio-economic problems and the role of the United Nations system in helping to address them (Windhoek, 22-24 May 1992), at which 20 United Nations offices and organizations or agencies were represented. The seminar discussed the identification of priority needs, assessment of United Nations assistance in response to the needs of South Africans in the context of a new national economic development policy, an institutional framework for the delivery of assistance and the mobilization of financial resources for such assistance.

At the conclusion of the seminar, the participants approved the following observations made by the Chairman of the Special Committee: the socio-economic needs of the disadvantaged population should urgently be addressed, with resources commensurate to the seriousness of the situation; education, health, housing and job creation—areas in which the impact of apartheid was particularly devastating—were among the top priorities; South Africa's economic and social sectors required a profound restructuring if genuine development was to benefit the whole population; grass-roots organizations needed to be consulted with regard to technical cooperation in general and activities geared to the disadvantaged communities in particular; there was a need for a comprehensive national programme of redress, with strong elements of affirmative action, to tackle glaring socio-economic imbalances; there was a need for a new integrated development strategy which would promote growth and redistribution simultaneously; need for assistance had been expressed in the form of technical advice, human resources development, institutional capacity-building, relief operations, programmes and projects affecting structures, and policy formulation in areas such as industrial development, technological innovation, investment codes and subregional economic cooperation and integration; and domestic resources would have to be mobilized as a first step, but significant external financing would be required in meeting the priority needs of the population. Seminar participants were of the view that the dialogue should continue in a follow-up meeting on specific issues arising out of the seminar's discussions. It was agreed that a follow-up meeting would require concerted preparations also in South Africa.

Among other activities were a round table on independent and pluralistic media in South Africa (Windhoek, 14-17 August) under the auspices of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and a new two-year programme by the World Bank's Economic Development Institute for training South Africans in the management of urban development projects and in the fundamentals of economic policy.

Taking note of the report, the Assembly, in resolution 47/116 A, called on the international community to assist disadvantaged South African democratic anti-apartheid organizations and individuals in the academic, scientific and cultural fields.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

Five grants totalling $1,550,000 were made in 1992 from the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established in 1965(35) to provide assistance to persons persecuted under the country's repressive and discriminatory legislation and relief to South African refugees. In addition, the Fund's Committee of Trustees extended three grants totalling $900,000.

According to an October 1992 report of the Secretary-General,(36) the Fund had received, since his report of October 1991,(37) $4,594,938 in voluntary contributions from 29 Member States. Total income of the Fund since its inception was $47,987,616 and the total amount of grants was $45,970,974, including those approved in 1992. The report said pledges from 15 Governments, totalling $87,091, were outstanding as at 30 September 1992.

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(38) the Fund's Committee of Trustees provided assistance for the reintegration of former political prisoners and newly released prisoners into South African society, as well as assistance to voluntary agencies, mostly inside South Africa, that rendered humanitarian and legal assistance to victims of apartheid. The Committee also supported work in the legal field aimed at ensuring effective implementation of legislation, repealing major apartheid laws, redressing continuing adverse effects of those laws and encouraging increased public confidence in the rule of law. Due to the changing circumstances in the country, the Committee decided to channel its assistance henceforth exclusively through appropriate NGOs inside South Africa. The Committee's report was annexed to that of the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/116 C without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 46/79 F, adopted without a vote on 13 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 2 of its resolution 46/79 F, relating to the reintegration of released political prisoners into South African society,

Welcoming the announcement on 26 September 1992 of the Record of Understanding reached between the African National Congress of South Africa and the Government of South Africa, which contained agreement on the release of remaining political prisoners, and the voluntary repatriation of political exiles and refugees as a result of the agreement reached between the South African authorities and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Noting with concern that continuing political violence and other developments in South Africa are having an adverse impact on the negotiating process and on the functioning of the framework provided by the National Peace Accord signed on 14 September 1991,

Recognizing the work being carried out by broad-based, impartial voluntary organizations inside South Africa in providing legal and humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination and noting with satisfaction the working relationship that the Trust Fund has established with those South African organizations,

Strongly convinced that continued, direct and substantial contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the extensive needs for humanitarian, legal and relief assistance during the critical transition to a non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Supports continued and substantial humanitarian, legal and educational assistance by the international community in order to alleviate the plight of those persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa, and to facilitate the reintegration of released political prisoners and returning exiles into South African society;

3. Supports assistance by the Trust Fund for work in the legal field aimed at ensuring effective implementation of legislation repealing major apartheid laws, redressing the continuing adverse effects of those laws and encouraging increased public confidence in the rule of law;

4. Endorses the decision of the Trust Fund to channel its assistance through appropriate non-governmental organizations inside South Africa;

5. Expenses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid in South Africa;

6. Appeals for generous contributions to the Trust Fund;

7. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa;

8. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination.

General Assembly resolution 47/116 C

37-nation draft (A/47/L.27 & Add.1); agenda item 33.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: plenary 62-66, 88, 91.

In resolution 47/116 A, the Assembly appealed to the international community to increase humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid, returning refugees and exiles and released political prisoners.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarship awards under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa reached 2,108 in 1991/92, compared to 1,278 in 1990/91, according to an October 1992 report of the Secretary-General.(39) The Programme was administered by the Secretary-General in consultation with an Advisory Committee and financed from a Trust Fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals. Under the 1992 Programme, scholarship assistance was granted to 1,787 students from South Africa and, for a transitional period ending 31 December 1992, to 321 students from Namibia. New awards were granted only to students from South Africa. Originally, the Programme was established by integrating earlier special programmes to assist persons from Namibia, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Territories under Portuguese administration in Africa.(40)

For the period from 1 September 1991 to 31 August 1992, a total of $5,289,542 in contributions was received from 27 countries. In addition, pledges for 1992 amounted to $133,743. The 1992 contributions and pledges, totalling $5,423,285, represented a decrease of $485,535 compared to the previous year.

During the period under review, the Programme initiated a number of new projects in cooperation with scholarship agencies, educational institutions, foundations, and governmental and intergovernmental agencies. Those new projects resulted in the involvement of the Programme in more forms of training than it could have arranged on its own, and at a lower cost per award, especially in North America and Europe. At the same time, the Programme was able to grant awards to an increasing number of students from inside South Africa. Overall, those co-sponsorship arrangements proved to be beneficial to all involved—the students, the Programme and the cooperating agencies.

In accordance with recommendations of a 1989 evaluation report, the Programme continued to secure a larger intake of students from South Africa and to show greater concern for the returnability and employability of graduates, which were considered essential criteria of selection for awards. In order to help match graduates with jobs and employers, contacts were established with South African-based NGOs. Efforts were made to help strengthen black and other universities through exchange programmes for black graduates and junior faculty.

The Advisory Committee on the Programme held two meetings during the period under review, at which it considered several aspects relating to the Programme's development. In accordance with a 1991 Assembly resolution,(41) it-organized jointly with the Programme a Follow-up Conference on International Educational Assistance to Disadvantaged South Africans (New York, 8 and 9 September), which was serviced by the Centre against Apartheid. The Conference, which was attended by 133 experts, representatives of major bilateral and multilateral donors, relevant inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and observers, focused attention on the requirements for effective international educational assistance to disadvantaged South Africans during the transition to a post-apartheid society.

In four workshops at the Conference, the following points emerged that were of direct interest to the Programme: the establishment of linkages between training institutions and industry in South Africa would ensure that the institutions produced the skills necessary to meet the demands of the South African economy; there should be a linkage between scholarship awards and job opportunities; there was a need to strengthen historically disadvantaged institutions and develop their research and analytical capacities; international support could be helpful in research and networking among South African NGOs involved in providing and channelling educational assistance; the United Nations could serve as an information focal point and as catalyst for cooperation in education, particularly by improving coordination between donors and recipients, and could facilitate communication between South African institutions, aid agencies and the international community. Areas of priority for United Nations technical assistance were generally defined as capacity-building of black universities and the NGO sector, tertiary student financial assistance and basic adult education.

In the conclusions to his report, the Secretary-General stated that it was increasingly recognized that a large trained cadre of black South Africans, especially at the high and mid-management level in priority areas, would play a critical role in facilitating a transition to a non-racial and democratic South Africa. In view of the urgent need to contribute effectively to human resources development, the Secretary-General appealed for generous financial and other support to the Programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/117 without vote.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 46/80 of 13 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing an account of the work of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the administration of the Programme for the period from 1 September 1991 to 31 August 1992,

Noting with satisfaction that the recommendations of the evaluation of the Programme undertaken in 1989 as endorsed by the Advisory Committee continue to be implemented,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered by the Programme to the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

Also noting with satisfaction that educational and technical assistance for southern Africa has become a growing concern of the international community,

Fully recognizing the need to provide continuing educational opportunities and counselling to students from South Africa in a wide variety of professional, cultural and linguistic disciplines, as well as opportunities for vocational and technical training and for advanced studies at graduate and postgraduate levels in priority fields of study, as often as possible at educational and training institutions within South Africa,

Strongly convinced that the development of the Programme is essential in order to meet the increasing demand for educational and training assistance to disadvantaged students from South Africa,

Noting that, in order to address the priority needs of disadvantaged South Africans, the Programme is continuing to allocate greater resources for the purpose of institution-building in South Africa, in particular by strengthening the historically black and other institutions of higher learning, especially through a graduate student and junior faculty enhancement programme abroad in the field of educational management and other short-term specialized training courses with built-in returnability and employability of participants,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their continued efforts to develop the Programme so that it can best meet the needs evolving from changing circumstances in South Africa, to promote generous contributions to the Programme and to enhance cooperation with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance to South Africa;

3. Welcomes the main thrust of the proceedings of the Follow-up Conference on International Educational Assistance to Disadvantaged South Africans, held in New York on 8 and 9 September 1992, organized by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and its Advisory Committee, with special regard to the need for:

(a) Establishing linkages between training and educational activities and industry in South Africa;

(b) Supporting and strengthening the historically black and other universities through exchange programmes for graduates and junior faculty;

(c) Continuing to provide educational assistance at the tertiary level in South Africa and to strengthen the institutional technical and financial capacity as well as the decision-making of non-governmental organizations, community-based organizations and educational institutions that serve the needs and interests of disadvantaged South Africans;

4. Notes with satisfaction the training activities of the Programme designed to address priority needs in the areas of education and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans;

5. welcomes the expanding educational and training activities of the Programme inside South Africa and its close cooperation with South African non-governmental organizations and educational institutions;

6. Emphasizes that the international community has an important role in assisting the people of South Africa in bridging the economic and social disparities in South Africa during the transitional period, particularly in the field of education;

7. Calls upon non-governmental educational institutions, private organizations and individuals concerned to assist the Programme in facilitating the returnability and job placement of its graduates;

8. Appeals to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, international professional associations and individuals to use their influence and leverage inside South Africa to assist graduates of the Programme in obtaining access to job opportunities so that they can effectively contribute their professional competence and expertise towards the political, economic and social development of South Africa during the period of transition and beyond;

9. Considers that, under the changing circumstances in South Africa, the Programme should continue to have, in addition to its educational and training programmes abroad, the necessary flexibility and means to expand, in an appropriate manner, educational and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans within the country itself;

10. Expresses its appreciation to all those who have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

11. Appeals to all States, institutions, organizations and individuals to offer greater financial and other assistance to the Programme to enable it to carry out its programme of activities.

Other States

Angola

After 16 years of civil war, both parties to the conflict in Angola—the Government and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA)—showed willingness to continue the peace process begun in May 1991 with the signing of the Peace Accords.⁽¹⁾ The first-ever multiparty elections in the country were held on 29 and 30 September 1992. The four-month electoral process, organized and directed by the National Electoral Council, was observed by the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II) and supported by technical assistance from UNDP.

On 17 October, the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Angola certified the elections as generally free and fair. Results of the elections gave 49.57 per cent of the vote to Angolan President José Eduardo dos Santos, head of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA), and 40.07 per cent to Jonas Malheiro Savimbi, President of UNITA. The remainder of the vote was divided among nine other candidates. Under Angolan electoral rules, a candidate would be declared the winner with more than 50 per cent of the vote; if no candidate obtained a majority, the two top contenders would compete in a run-off.

In the parliamentary elections, the governing MPLA party received 53.74 per cent, while UNITA got 34.1 per cent.

An ad hoc Commission of the Security Council was sent to Angola from 11 to 14 October to support implementation of the Peace Accords, after reports reached the Council that one of the parties to the Accords was contesting the validity of the elections. During its meetings with, among others, the Angolan and UNITA Presidents, South Africa's Foreign Minister, the Special Representative and officials of the National Electoral Council, the Commission underscored the importance of full implementation of the Accords, including upholding the integrity of the electoral process. It noted with grave concern the increasing violence and level of tension, and appealed to the people of Angola and all parties to safeguard the peace they had achieved after years of devastating war.

On 31 October, heavy fighting broke out in many parts of the country between government and UNITA forces. A cease-fire was achieved on 2 November, but sporadic fighting continued. The Security Council, on 22 December, urged both parties to resume the direct talks begun in the southern Angolan town of Namibe on 26 November and to demonstrate their commitment with regard to confinement of troops, collection of weapons, demobilization, formation of the national armed forces and restoration of a central administration throughout the country.

UNAVEM II

Communication and report of the Secretary-General (February/March). By a 6 February 1992 letter to the President of the Security Council,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that plans were being drawn up, in response to a request from the Government of Angola, for United Nations technical assistance to help prepare for and conduct presidential and legislative elections scheduled for September 1992, and for United Nations observers to follow the electoral procedure until its completion. An agreement on technical assistance had been signed with the Government and, with regard to observation of the elections, the Secretary-General announced that he would soon present to the Council the necessary operational plan and recommend that the Council authorize the addition of that function to the mandate already entrusted to him in connection with implementation of the Peace Accords.

The Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Margaret Joan Anstee, Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna, as his Special Representative for Angola and Chief of UNAVEM II, established in May 1991.⁽³⁾ As stated in a 7 February 1992 letter of the President,⁽⁴⁾ the Security Council members welcomed Ms. Anstee's appointment.

In a March report,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the terms of reference and an operational plan for UNAVEM II, whose mandate was to verify the impartiality of the Angolan electoral authorities in all aspects and stages of the electoral process; the complete freedom of organization, movement, assembly and expression for all political parties and forces, as well as individuals and groups, without hindrance or intimidation; that all political parties and forces had access to State radio and television; that the electoral rolls were properly drawn; and that qualified voters were not denied registration and the right to vote. Other activities to be monitored included registration of voters, the organization of the poll, the electoral campaign, the poll itself and the counting, computing and announcement of the results.

Much had been achieved in implementing the peace process, the Secretary-General said, but the timetable for putting the Accords into effect could not be delayed further. All the parties and forces had to join in making renewed commitments until the goal of free and fair elections in September 1992 was achieved.

To ensure the success of the electoral process, the Secretary-General called for the establishment of a unified civilian police force, as well as the formation of joint military police units within the new national army, an extension of the Government's administration and restoration of security throughout the country. An early national consensus on the essential elements for organizing the elections was necessary, such as agreement on the polling date, establishment of a workable national electoral council, minimum voting age and a comprehensive budget allocated by the Government.

The Secretary-General recommended an enlargement of UNAVEM's mandate, strength and composition; the efforts to be undertaken, above all by the Angolan people themselves, in organizing their first free and fair elections-an essential precondition for peace and political stability-deserved the support not only of the United Nations, but of all those concerned with the future of Angola.

Details of the staffing requirements, as well as cost estimates for the expansion of UNAVEM II from 15 March to 31 October 1992, were provided in an addendum to the report.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council met on 24 March to consider the Secretary-General's report. Angola and Portugal were invited to participate in the discussion in accordance with the Charter and rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 747(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 which decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II) as proposed by the Secretary-General in line with the "Acordos de Paz para Angola",

Welcoming the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to implement fully the mandate entrusted to UNAVEM II,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts made so far by the Government of the People's Republic of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola to maintain the cease-fire and expressing concern over the delays and gaps in the completion of some major tasks arising from the "Acordos de Paz",

Stressing again the importance it attaches to the fulfilment by the parties in good faith of all obligations contained in the "Acordos de Paz",

Welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative for Angola who will be in charge of all current and projected activities of the United Nations in connection with the "Acordos de Paz" and will also be the Chief of UNAVEM II.

Taking into account the further report of the Secretary-General dated 31 October 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 March 1992 and the addendum dated 20 March 1992,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 March 1992 and the recommendations contained therein concerning the operational plan for United Nations observation of the elections and the enlargement of UNAVEM II;

2. Calls upon the Angolan parties to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and with UNAVEM II, including in the discharge of its expanded mandate;

3. Underlines the necessity recalled in paragraph 18 of the report of the Secretary-General that the United Nations electoral mission will have the explicit agreement of the two parties to the "Acordos de Paz";

4. Decides to enlarge the mandate of UNAVEM II to include the mission provided for in paragraph 22 of the report of the Secretary-General for the remainder of its existing mandate period;

5. Urges the Angolan parties to comply scrupulously with the provisions of the "Acordos de Paz" and with the agreed deadlines; and to this end, to proceed without delay with the demobilization of their troops, formation of a unified national armed force, effective operation of joint police monitoring units, extension of the central administration and other major tasks;

6. Calls upon the Angolan authorities and parties to finalize political, legal, organizational and budgetary preparations for free and fair multi-party elections to be held in September 1992 and to make available as soon as possible all available resources for the electoral process;

7. Encourages all States to contribute voluntarily and requests the United Nations programmes and specialized agencies to provide the assistance and support necessary to prepare for free and fair multi-party elections in Angola;

8. Urges the parties to establish as soon as possible a precise timetable for the electoral process in Angola so that elections can take place at the date fixed and requests the Secretary-General to extend his cooperation to this end;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of developments and to submit a further report to the Council within three months of the adoption of this resolution.

Security Council resolution 747(1992)

24 March 1992 Meeting 3062 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23743), orally revised.

Communication and report of the Secretary-General (May and June). By a 14 May letter to the Security Council President,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported that his Special Representative had informed him that noticeable progress had been made with regard to police monitoring, as foreseen in the Peace Accords. Three joint (government and UNITA) police monitoring groups had been established in each of 18 Angolan provinces.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

The Special Representative held it necessary to expand UNAVEM II's police strength in each province from four police officers to six; she also believed it to be important to expand the tasks assigned to the UNAVEM II police contingent and to include in the Mission's electoral tasks the monitoring of rallies during the political campaign and observation of the registration process and polling stations at the time of the elections. Accordingly, the Secretary-General recommended an increase in the police strength of UNAVEM II from 90 to 126 officers, at a cost of $1.175 million. The Council members expressed agreement with the recommendation, as stated in a 20 May letter of the President.(7)

In accordance with the 24 March Council resolution, the Secretary-General submitted in June a further report on UNAVEM II.(8) He observed that a great deal had been achieved in implementing the peace process, but much needed to be done, mainly by the Government and UNITA, if the goal of free and fair multiparty elections was to be achieved by the end of September. The Secretary-General remarked that the parties were being actively assisted by the three observers-Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States-as well as by the international community and UNAVEM II.

In recent weeks, the attention of the Angolan people and their leaders had increasingly turned towards the election process and away from the major unfinished tasks of the Peace Accords, namely, the confinement of troops and weapons, demobilization, and the formation of new armed forces and police. The Secretary-General stressed that the Government and UNITA must make progress on those vital tasks if the peace process was to succeed and endure; they must work together to reduce and bring under control the current brinkmanship, since the political and security atmosphere throughout the country remained tense and could derail the peace process if not contained. It was the Angolan parties' responsibility to organize and supervise the Accords, while the United Nations was only to observe and verify the peace process and the elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

In connection with the Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's report and following consultations with its members, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement on 7 July:(9)

Meeting number. SC 3092.

"The Security Council has considered carefully the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II), and notes the efforts of the Angolan parties to implement commitments agreed to in the "Acordos de Paz para Angola". It commends the efforts of the Angolans to move their country towards free and fair multi-party elections on 29 and 30 September 1992 in accordance with the established timetable. There is no viable alternative to this. The Security Council calls on all interested parties to cooperate fully with the electoral process to ensure that elections are free and fair.

"The Council re-emphasizes the observation of the Secretary-General in his report that Angola being a sovereign and independent country, the organization and supervision of all tasks under the Peace Accords is the responsibility of the Angolan parties themselves. Nevertheless, the Council, which has mandated United Nations observation and verification of the peace process, at the request of the Angolan parties, remains seriously concerned at some constraints holding back the process at the moment.

"The maintenance of peace since May 1991, and the commitment by all parties to the electoral process, are encouraging. Nevertheless, the Council reaffirms the importance it attaches to the fulfilment by the parties in good faith of all obligations contained in the "Acordos de Paz para Angola". In this connection, it strongly appeals to the Government and UNITA to overcome rapidly the delays and inadequacies described in the report, and increase the momentum of progress on the issues of confinement of troops and weapons, demobilization and the formation of the new armed forces and police.

"The Council also expresses its concern at the political and security situation in Angola, which requires the greatest restraint. Violent incidents, mutual accusations and hostile propaganda should be terminated and give way to tolerance, cooperation and reconciliation. It is imperative to agree, without delay, on a brief and clear Code of Electoral Conduct and to ensure that everybody is allowed freedom of movement and speech. And the ability to register to vote without fear in all areas of the country. The Council calls on the Government and all parties to work closely with the Special Representative and all United Nations specialized agencies engaged in the electoral process to ensure that voter registration is conducted in accordance with established procedures and completed in a timely manner.

"The Security Council calls on both parties to devote all available resources to preparation for the elections in order that their commitment to elections on 29 and 30 September 1992 may be met and welcomes with appreciation commitments by donor countries to provide all support for all vital tasks relating to the final three months of the peace process. Since the logistical difficulties are major constraints on the process, the Council strongly appeals to the Member States concerned to provide the promised assistance expeditiously and urges Member States as well as the United Nations agencies to display flexibility and pragmatism in this cooperation to ensure that a successful conclusion of the Angolan operation leads to stability and prosperity in Angola.

"The Security Council calls on all parties to take all necessary measures to ensure the security and safety of UNAVEM staff and property.

"The Security Council will continue to keep the situation in Angola under close review and looks forward to a further report by the Secretary-General at the beginning of the electoral campaign."

Report of the Secretary-General (September). In a September report, (10) the Secretary-General said the Angolan people must protect their achievements, such as maintaining the cease-fire and registering the majority of the adult population for the elections, by making determined efforts to demobilize the remaining government and UNITA troops, collect and centralize storage of weapons, form the new Angolan armed forces, disband the armies belonging to the parties before the voting and ensure correct operation of the police. If government and UNITA leaders maintained without reservation their determination to make the peace process succeed and prevent their country from returning to violence, anarchy and poverty, they could lay the groundwork for a prosperous democratic future.

The Secretary-General considered it essential that all political parties pledge to respect the results of the elections. He appealed to the Government and UNITA to ensure that their representatives and the media under their control did not present inaccurate, distorted or inflammatory reports during the upcoming weeks, and appealed to the Angolan and UNITA Presidents to continue honouring their commitments under the Peace Accords.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 18 September, following consultations on the Secretary-General's report, the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of the Council members:(11)

Meeting number. SC 3115.

"The Security Council has noted with appreciation the further report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II), which it has studied carefully.

"It reaffirms the importance it attaches to the full implementation of the 'Acordos de Paz para Angola', culminating in free and fair multiparty elections on 29 and 30 September 1992. It congratulates the Angolans on their success in maintaining the cease-fire and in registering the great majority of the population to vote in the elections. It is convinced of the irreversibility of this process.

"At the same time, the Council calls on the Angolan parties to take urgent and determined steps to complete certain essential measures. These include the demobilization of the remaining government and UNITA troops, the collection and centralized storage of weapons, and the rapid completion of the formation of the new National Angolan Armed Forces. It is also essential that the police should operate as a neutral, national force.

"The Council is also concerned at the recent deterioration of the political and security situation in Angola. It endorses the Secretary-General's appeal to President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi to exercise leadership at this critical juncture and to ensure that their followers act with restraint and tolerance. The Council is encouraged by the reports of positive decisions reached by the two leaders at their meeting on 7 September 1992 and urges them to implement these without delay. Of particular importance is their reported agreement in principle to the formation of a government of national reconciliation after the elections.

"The Council calls upon the Angolan electoral authorities to ensure that all registered persons are given the opportunity to exercise their vote and to extend polling hours on the second day, if this should prove necessary. The Council also underlines the importance of adequate logistical planning and support and urges the donor community to move speedily to provide the remaining requirements identified in the Secretary-General's report.

"The Council is concerned that doubts have recently been expressed in Angola about UNAVEM's effectiveness and impartiality and welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General as expressed in paragraph 9 of his report to investigate thoroughly all matters raised in this regard. It expresses strong support for the Secretary-General and his Special Representative and commends UNAVEM II personnel who are tackling their challenging tasks with courage, impartiality and dedication. It urges the Angolan parties to continue to cooperate closely with the United Nations and to take all necessary steps to ensure the security of United Nations personnel and property.

"The Council takes note of a reported agreement between the Government and UNITA that the United Nations should be asked to extend UNAVEM's presence in Angola during the period of transition after the elections. It will be prepared to consider such a request if it is based on wide support in Angola and if it proposes for UNAVEM a mandate which is clearly defined in scope and time.

"The Security Council will continue to keep the situation in Angola under close review and looks forward to a further report by the Secretary-General after the elections."

Further developments (September/October). By a 22 September letter to the Secretary-General,(12) Angola's Minister of External Relations requested an extension of UNAVEM II presence until 31 December 1992, in view of the possibility of a second round of voting in the presidential elections due to the large number of candidates.

The Secretary-General, on 29 October,(13) recommended extension of UNAVEM II for an interim period until 30 November. He restated that difficulties had arisen since the September elections, including the lack of agreement between the two parties to the Peace Accords on arrangements for the holding of a second round of the presidential elections. Both parties, however, had declared their wish that UNAVEM II play a role in organizing and verifying that round.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 6 October, following an oral report by the Secretary-General on UNAVEM II and after consultations with the Security Council members, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:(14)

Meeting number. SC 3120.

"The Security Council has followed closely the electoral process which took place in Angola on 29 and 30 September 1992 in accordance with resolution 696(1991), which it adopted on 30 May 1991 following the peace agreements. The Council is gratified that the presidential and parliamentary elections were held throughout the country in a calm atmosphere and with the participation of a large number of voters. It also wishes to express once again its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and its gratitude for the outstanding efforts that she has made, together with all the personnel of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II), to ensure the implementation of that resolution and in particular the smooth conduct of the electoral process.

"The Council expresses its concern at the reports it has received, according to which one of the parties to the peace agreements is contesting the validity of the elections. It is also concerned that certain Generals belonging to the same party have announced their intention of withdrawing from the new Angolan Armed Forces.

"The Council calls upon all the parties to respect the obligations they have assumed within the framework of the peace agreements, and in particular the obligation to respect the final election results. Any challenge must be settled through the mechanisms established for that purpose.

"The Security Council has decided to send to Angola as quickly as possible an ad hoc commission, composed of members of the Council, to support the implementation of the peace agreements, in close cooperation with the Social Representative of the Secretary-General. The membership of this Commission will be established in the near future following consultations among the members of the Council."

On 8 October,(15) the President announced that during consultations the Council members had agreed that the ad hoc Commission should comprise Cape Verde, Morocco, the Russian Federation and the United States.

On 19 October, the President, on behalf of the Council members, issued a statement to the media:(16)

"The members of the Security Council heard on 19 October an oral report of the members of the ad hoc Commission of the Council which was dispatched to Angola from 11 to 14 October 1992.

"They expressed gratitude to the members of this Commission and welcomed its contribution to reducing the tension in Angola and to finding a solution to the difficulties that arose after the elections of 29 and 30 September 1992.

"The members of the Security Council once again called upon the parties to abide scrupulously by all the commitments entered into within the framework of the peace agreements, in particular with regard to the demobilization of their troops and formation of the United Armed Forces, and to refrain from any action that could increase the tension.

"The members of the Security Council noted with satisfaction that in her public announcement of 17 October 1992 the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Angola certified that, with all deficiencies taken into account, the elections held on 29 and 30 September 1992 can be considered to have been generally free and fair.

"They also noted with satisfaction that the leaders of the two parties to the peace agreements agreed to start a dialogue with a view to the completion of the presidential elections.

"The members of the Security Council look forward to the recommendations of the Secretary-General on the contribution of the United Nations to ensuring the completion of the presidential elections. They are ready to act without delay on the basis of these recommendations.

On 27 October, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:(17)

Meeting number. SC 3126.

"The Security Council has taken note of the letter dated 27 October 1992 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council concerning the situation in Angola. It expresses its serious concern at the deterioration of the political situation and the rising tension in that country.

"It once again calls on the parties to the Peace Accords to respect all the commitments undertaken in accordance with these accords, in particular with regard to the confinement of their troops and weapons, demobilisation and the formation of the unified national Armed Force. It also calls on the parties to refrain from any act that might heighten tension, impair the conduct of the electoral process and threaten the territorial integrity of Angola.

"The Security Council calls on UNITA and the other parties in the electoral process in Angola to respect the results of the elections held on 29 and 30 September 1992, which the Special Representative of the Secretary-General certified as generally free and fair. It urges the leaders of two parties to the Peace Accords to engage in a dialogue without delay so as to enable the second round of the presidential elections to be held. The Security Council will hold responsible any party which refuses to take part in such a dialogue, thereby jeopardizing the entire process.

"The Security Council strongly condemns the attacks and baseless accusations made by Vorgan radio of UNITA against the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II). It calls for the immediate cessation of these attacks and accusations, and reiterates its full support for the Social Representative and for UNAVEM II.

"The Security Council reiterates its readiness to act without delay on the basis of recommendations that the Secretary-General might make concerning the contribution of the United Nations to the completion of the electoral process."

On 30 October, the Council met to consider the Secretary-General's 29 October letter requesting extension of UNAVEM II until 30 November.(13) With the consent of the Council, the President invited Angola, Brazil, Portugal and South Africa to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 785(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and 747(1992) of 24 March 1992,

Recalling also the statement made on its behalf by the President of the Security Council on 27 October 1992,

Taking note of the letter of the Secretary-General dated 29 October 1992, in which he recommends an extension of the existing mandate of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II) for an interim period,

Deeply concerned at the deterioration of the political situation and the rising tension in Angola,

Deeply concerned also at the reports of the recent resumption of hostilities by UNITA in Luanda and Huambo,

Affirming that any party which fails to abide by all the commitments entered into under the "Acordos de Paz para Angola" will be rejected by the international community, and that the results of use of force will not be accepted,

1. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General to extend the existing mandate of UNAVEM II for an interim period, until 30 November 1992;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it by that date a detailed report on the situation in Angola together with long-term recommendations, accompanied by the financial implications thereof, on the mandate and strength of UNAVEM II;

3. Strongly condemns any such resumption of hostilities and urgently demands that such acts cease forthwith;

4. Calls it all States to refrain from any action which directly or indirectly could jeopardize the implementation of the "Acordos de Paz" and increase the tension in the country;

5. Reiterates full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNAVEM II, and its strong condemnation of the attacks and baseless accusations made by UNITA's radio station, Vorgan, against the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNAVEM II;

6. Supports the statement by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General certifying that the elections held on 29 and 30 September 1992 were generally free and fair and calls upon UNITA and the other parties to the electoral process in Angola to respect the results of the elections;

7. Calls upon the parties to the "Acordos de Paz" to abide by all the commitments entered into under the Accords, in particular with regard to the confinement of their troops and collection of their weapons, demobilization and the formation of the unified national armed force, and to refrain from any act that might heighten tension, jeopardize the continued conduct of the electoral process and threaten the territorial integrity of Angola;

8. Urges the leaders of the two parties to engage in a dialogue without delay so as to enable the second round of the presidential elections to be held promptly;

9. Reaffirms that it will hold responsible any party which refuses to take part in such a dialogue, thereby jeopardizing the entire process, and reiterates its readiness to consider all appropriate measures under the Charter of the United Nations to secure implementation of the "Acordos de Paz";

10. Decides to remain seized of the question.

Security Council resolution 785(1992)

30 October 1992 Meeting 3130 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24738), orally revised.

Speaking before the Council, Angola expressed concern for the irresponsible attitude of UNITA in refusing to accept the results of the elections, an attitude that clearly violated the Peace Accords, demonstrated a lack of respect for the principles of democracy and perpetuated the suffering of the Angolan people. Strong measures were needed to force UNITA to accept the results and implement the Accords. Angola also expressed concern about information that South African forces were fighting alongside UNITA; if proved as a fact, that would have dangerous implications for the entire region.

South Africa categorically refuted the allegations and stated that it would not support any party that opted for a violent solution or perpetrated aggression in Angola. Military action there was not an option, and it had done its best to bring that home to the Angolan leaders; a democratic process was absolutely essential to solve the problems in Angola.

Report of the Secretary-General (November). In November,(18) the Secretary-General reported that the situation in Angola had deteriorated and a successful completion of the peace process and the establishment of multiparty democracy seemed farther off than at any time since the signing of the Peace Accords in May 1991. The cease-fire of 2 November 1992 was barely holding and both sides had undertaken preparations for renewed war. The situation was a cruel set-back for the Angolan people and a major disappointment for the international community. One of the root causes was the incomplete fulfilment of key provisions of the Accords, foremost among them the less than effective demobilization and storage of weapons, the delay in creating unified armed forces, the failure to re-establish effective central administration in many parts of the country and the dilatoriness in setting up a neutral police force.

Both sides, however, had also reiterated their commitment to peace and dialogue and had expressed the wish for assistance from the international community in that regard. Both had agreed on the need for an enlarged UNAVEM presence in order to create conditions in which a second round of presidential elections could take place and the peace process could be successfully concluded.

The Secretary-General stated that unless both sides could convince him of their genuine adherence to and fulfilment of the Peace Accords, he would not be prepared to recommend an enlargement of UNAVEM's mandate and strength. It would be necessary for the parties to agree on a clear timetable and on formal evaluation at regular intervals of the fulfilment of their commitments, and there had to be evidence of a genuine commitment to national reconciliation, which could not be achieved without the full participation of UNITA, whose legitimate concerns had to be addressed.

In view of the fact that it was not possible to assess at the time whether his own efforts and those of Member States would succeed in persuading the Government and UNITA to reactivate the peace process, the Secretary-General said he was not in a position to make long-term recommendations on the mandate and strength of UNAVEM II, as the Council had requested in its October resolution. He recommended another extension within the existing mandate, until 31 January 1993, by which time he would submit a further report with recommendations on the future United Nations involvement in the Angolan peace process. The cost of the two-month extension was estimated at some $12.4 million, to be borne by Member States.

Meanwhile, the Secretary-General proposed urgent steps to restore the strength of UNAVEM II to its authorized levels in order to demonstrate the international community's continuing commitment to the peace process and to improve the security of UNAVEM's personnel in the field, as well as to strengthen their ability to consolidate the cease-fire.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 30 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 793(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, 747(1992) of 24 March 1992 and 785(1992) of 30 October 1992,

Taking note of the further report of the Secretary-General of 25 November 1992,

Deeply concerned by deterioration in the political and military situation in Angola and especially by the troop movements which have taken place and by the hostilities which occurred on 31 October and 1 November 1992,

Welcoming and supporting the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative aimed at resolving the present crisis,

Disturbed by the continuing non-implementation of major aspects of the "Acordos de Paz para Angola",

Reiterating its support for the statement by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General that the elections held on 29 and 30 September 1992 were generally free and fair and taking note of the acceptance by UNITA of the results of the elections,

Noting the intention of the Secretary-General to continue, in this as in other peace-keeping operations, to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources,

1. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General to extend the existing mandate of UNAVEM II for a further period of two months until 31 January 1993;

2. Appeals to the troop- and police-contributing States to lend cooperation to UNAVEM II in order to restore as soon as possible its mandated strength;

3. Welcomes the joint declaration of the Government of Angola and UNITA made in Namibe on 26 November 1992 and urges them to take immediate and effective actions in accordance with the declaration;

4. Demands that the two parties scrupulously observe the cease-fire, immediately stop all military confrontations, and in particular offensive troop movements, and create all the conditions necessary for the completion of the peace process;

5. Urges the two parties to demonstrate their adherence to, and fulfilment without exception of, the "Acordos de Paz" in particular with regard to the confinement of their troops and collection of their weapons, demobilization and the formation of the unified national armed force and to refrain from any action which might heighten tension or jeopardize the return to normalcy;

6. Strongly appeals to the two parties to engage in a continuous and meaningful dialogue aimed at national reconciliation and at the participation of all parties in the democratic process and to agree on a clear timetable for the fulfilment of their commitments in accordance with the "Acordos de Paz";

7. Reaffirms that it will hold responsible any party which refuses to take part in such a dialogue, thereby jeopardizing the entire process, and reiterates its readiness to consider all appropriate measures under the Charter of the United Nations to secure implementation of the "Acordos de Paz";

8. Calls on all States to refrain from any action which directly or indirectly could jeopardize the implementation of the "Acordos de Paz" and increase the tension in the country;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it by 31 January 1993 a further report on the situation in Angola together with his longer-term recommendations for the further role of the United Nations in the peace process, which should be clearly defined in scope and time and based on a wide degree of support in Angola;

10. Decides to remain seized of the question.

Security Council resolution 793(1992)

30 November 1992 Meeting 3144 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24863), orally revised.

Communication of the Secretary-General (December). By a letter of 18 December, (19) the Secretary-General informed the Council about the situation in Angola following adoption of the 30 November resolution. Since then, he reported, there had been little or no progress in putting the peace process back on track and, unless there was rapid improvement, it was difficult to believe that by the end of January 1993 conditions would exist for recommending an enlarged United Nations presence, which both sides to the conflict requested.

The progress begun on 26 November—when senior representatives of both sides met under UNAVEM auspices at Namibe, southern Angola—received an almost immediate set-back when, on 29 November, UNITA forces took the northern cities of Uige and Negage, the latter being the site of an important airbase. A United Nations police observer died in the crossfire. Since then, all attempts to restore a dialogue had failed. UNITA forces were largely, but not entirely, withdrawn from Uige and Negage on 4 December, after strenuous efforts by UNAVEM II. However, they continued to occupy up to two thirds of the municipalities in Angola, which the government administration had had to leave or from which it had been expelled. There was disturbing evidence that both sides were continuing preparations for a resumption of war on a large scale, a possibility of which the Government's public statements spoke openly.

On the political front, the formation of a Government of National Unity, headed by Marcolino Moco, formerly Secretary-General of the governing party, was announced on 2 December. Of the 27 posts of ministers and state secretaries which made up the new Government, the post of Minister of Cultural Affairs was offered to UNITA, together with four vice-ministerial posts in defence, agriculture, public works and social assistance. One ministerial post and six lesser positions were offered to other parties which had won seats in the new Assembly.

At a meeting of the Permanent Committee of its Political Commission (8 and 9 December), UNITA decided to take up its seats in the Assembly and nominate persons to the posts offered by the Government. It also decided to return its Generals to the structures of the new Angolan Armed Forces, from which they had withdrawn shortly after the September elections.

The hopes that a political dialogue could be resumed and agreement reached on a programme of action to complete implementation of the Peace Accords were not fulfilled, however. Recriminations continued between the two sides on a variety of issues: the situation at Uige and Negage; UNITA's refusal to withdraw its troops and its resistance to restoring government administration in municipalities which it had seized since the elections; the release of persons held by each side, in particular UNITA personalities living "under government protection" at Luanda; the exchange of bodies of those killed in recent fighting; and mutual accusations of preparations for war.

A further obstacle to progress was UNITA's legitimate concern about the security of its members at Luanda and other government-controlled parts of the country; that was a matter for which both sides would like the United Nations to assume responsibility. While it would be difficult for the United Nations to do so directly, a number of ideas were offered to both sides and, if certain conditions were fulfilled, the Secretary-General would be ready to seek the Council's authority to make some United Nations military personnel available, on a temporary basis, to facilitate the return to Luanda of Dr. Savimbi and the UNITA members of the new Government and of the elected Assembly. His Special Representative had been instructed to try to engage the two sides in discussions of practical arrangements acceptable to both.

Both sides had recently conveyed to the Special Representative their ideas about the role they would like the United Nations to play in the future. Both agreed in principle on the need to enlarge UNAVEM II's mandate and increase its strength on the ground, including the provision of armed troops. However, there were differences on the extent to which UNAVEM II should exercise good offices or mediatory function and to which it should be involved in the organization and conduct of the second round of presidential elections.

The Secretary-General said he was ready to recommend a larger mandate and strength for UNAVEM II; however, he could do that only if both sides demonstrated their continuing commitment to the Peace Accords by agreeing on a realistic plan of action to get the implementation process back on track.

In order to make a determined effort to move forward, the Secretary-General suggested to President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi a meeting under his auspices at Geneva during the last week of December. While President dos Santos stated his willingness to meet Dr. Savimbi at Luanda, the latter expressed readiness to attend a meeting at Geneva as proposed. The Secretary-General urged President dos Santos to take into account the critical situation in the country and the danger that, unless both sides showed willingness and ability to work together, the international community would no longer feel justified in committing scarce resources to a continuation of the United Nations operation in Angola on its current scale.

In bringing the situation to the Council's attention, the Secretary-General said he would value its support, perhaps in the form of an appeal to both leaders to accept the invitation to a joint meeting at Geneva or another United Nations location, such as Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 22 December to consider the Secretary-General's letter and in accordance with the understanding reached in prior consultations. The President invited Angola to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

Following consultations among Council members, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council;(20)

Meeting number. SC 3152.

"The Security Council has taken note of the letter dated 18 December 1992 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council concerning the situation in Angola. It expresses serious concern at the lack of progress in implementing the 'Acordos de Paz para Angola' and at the continuation of the dangerous political and security situation in the country.

"The Security Council reiterates its strong appeal to the two parties to engage in a continuous and meaningful dialogue aimed at national reconciliation and at the participation of all parties in the democratic process, and to agree on a clear timetable and programme of action to complete the implementation of the 'Acordos de Paz'. The Security Council urges that the military forces of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) be immediately withdrawn from Uige and Negage and that the government administration be fully restored there and that the two parties resume the direct talks started in Namibe on 26 November 1992. It again urges both parties to demonstrate their commitment to the 'Acordos de Paz', in particular with regard to confinement of their troops and collection of their weapons, demobilization, formation of the national armed forces and restoration of the central administration throughout the country.

"The Security Council also considers it essential that both parties agree without delay on security and other arrangements which would allow all ministers and other high-ranking officials to occupy the posts which have been offered by the Government and for all deputies to assume their functions in the National Assembly.

"The Security Council also considers it imperative that both parties agree on a realistic plan of action for full implementation of the 'Acordos de Paz', and to facilitate a continuing United Nations presence in Angola. It underlines the need for the two sides to produce early evidence of their willingness and ability to work together to implement the 'Acordos de Paz', so that the international community would feel encouraged to continue to commit its scarce resources to the continuation of the United Nations operation in Angola on its present scale.

"The Security Council fully supports the action of the Secretary-General aimed at resolving the present crisis and appeals to President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi to accept the Secretary-General's invitation to attend, under his auspices, a joint meeting at an agreed location, to confirm that real progress has been made in the reactivation of the Bicesse Accords with a view to their full implementation and that agreement has been reached on a continuing United Nations presence in Angola."

Financing of UNAVEM II

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In June 1992,(21) the Secretary-General submitted a report on the financing of UNAVEM II, which included the operational plan for United Nations observations of the elections and the enlargement of UNAVEM II; the status of assessed and voluntary contributions; and revised cost estimates resulting from the enlarged mandate.

The Secretary-General recommended additional appropriations of $19,428,680 gross ($18,351,500 net) for the operation of UNAVEM II from 1 January to 31 October 1992., bringing the total appropriation for the period to $62,305,400 gross ($60,413,500 net). Assessed contributions due from Member States as at 31 May 1992 amounted to $18,236,300, of which $741,700 was for UNAVEM and $17,494,600 for UNAVEM II.

ACABQ recommendations. In a July 1992 report,(22) the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) said it had carefully examined the cost estimates of UNAVEM II and supplementary information provided to it. The Secretary-General's report was difficult to analyse as it did not contain up-to-date information on budget performance, which would have been useful in determining future requirements. ACABQ believed that initial appropriations for the period 1 January to 31 October 1992 should have been compared with the requirements of the original mandate on the basis of actual expenditure, substantiating projected savings or additional requirements and justifying any change with supplementary information. It put forward a number of recommendations for economies to be made and finally recommended that the General Assembly appropriate, over the initial appropriation of $42.9 million gross ($42 million net), an additional $15 million gross ($14 million net) for the period 1 January to 31 October 1992, including $2.9 million authorized under a 1991 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.(23) On that basis, total resources for UNAVEM II for the period ending 31 October 1992 would be $57.9 million gross ($56 million net). Additional requirements could be reported to the Assembly at its 1992 regular session or, if necessary, the Secretary-General could avail himself of the commitment authority (with the prior concurrence of ACABQ) granted under a 1991 Assembly resolution on financing UNAVEM II.(24)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 31 July 1992, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/195 B without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II

The General Assembly,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, Council resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission 11) and Council resolution 747(1992) of 24 March 1992, by which the Council decided to enlarge the mandate to include an Electoral Division for the purpose of observing and verifying the Angolan electoral process for the remainder of the existing mandate period, that is, until 31 October 1992,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Verification Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations;

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II in full and on time;

3. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the Verification Mission an additional amount of 15 million United States dollars gross (14 million dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 2.9 million dollars authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, under the terms of General Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991, for the operation of the Verification Mission for the period from 1 January to 31 October 1992;

4. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts indicated in paragraph 3 above among Member States in accordance with the composition of the groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/195 A of 20 December 1991, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

5. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 4 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of one million dollars approved for the Verification Mission;

6. Decides to consider the contributions of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to the Verification Mission in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-seventh session;

7. Decides also that the vehicles transferred to the Verification Mission from the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara should be of no cost to the Verification Mission;

8. Decides further that, should additional requirements arise, the Secretary-General could continue to avail himself, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, of the commitment authority granted under General Assembly resolution 46/195 A;

9. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 6 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions to be determined;

10. Invites voluntary contributions to the Verification Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Angolan peace process, including the elections, are administered in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandates.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In December,(25) the Secretary-General requested the Assembly to provide for the maintenance of UNAVEM II for the period beyond 30 November 1992 at a rate not exceeding $5,999,625 gross ($5,739,350 net) per month, with the prior concurrence of ACABQ, pending a decision of the Security Council to extend the Mission's mandate and a further report of the Secretary-General on the future involvement of the United Nations in the Angolan peace process.

As at 31 October, outstanding assessments of $23,432,000 were due from Member States for UNAVEM ($699,400) and UNAVEM II ($22,732,600). Expenditures for the period from 1 January to 31 October totalled $59,137,100 gross ($57,322,400 net). Recorded expenditures for the period from 3 January 1989 to 31 May 1991 showed a revised unencumbered balance of $2,492,300 gross ($2,397,900 net), consisting of $931,000 gross ($896,300 net) for the mandate period from 3

January 1989 to 2 August 1991 (UNAVEM) and $6,900 gross ($2,000 net) for the mandate period from 1 June to 31 December 1991 (UNAVEM II).

In order to meet the operating cash requirements of UNAVEM II, loans amounting to $9.7 million had been made to the Special Account for UNAVEM from the Special Account for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

Cost estimates for UNAVEM II operations from 1 November 1992 to 31 October 1993 amounted to $71,995,500 gross ($68,872,200 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 18 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the agenda of its forty-seventh (1992) session an item on the financing of UNAVEM II.

On 16 December, the Fifth Committee, on a proposal of its Chairman, decided, owing to a lack of time to consider the Secretary-General's December report, to recommend to the Assembly that it authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to the amount of $25,258,800 gross ($24,218,000 net) for the maintenance of UNAVEM II until 28 February 1993. That amount was to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in resolution 47/41 on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia. That commitment authorization would be considered as part of the appropriation to be decided on at the resumed forty-seventh session.

The Assembly acted on the Committee's recommendations on 22 December by adopting decision 47/450 A.

Comorian island of Mayotte

The question of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—remained on the General Assembly's agenda in 1992. The Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975, following a referendum in 1974. France, the former colonial Power, had since continued to administer the island of Mayotte.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September 1992 report,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General said he had addressed letters to the Comoros and France, drawing their attention to a 1991 General Assembly resolution on the question of Mayotte⁽²⁷⁾ and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information. A similar communication was sent to the Secretary-General of OAU. Under the 1991 resolution, the Assembly had requested the United Nations Secretary-General to make available his good offices in the search for a negotiated solution to the problem.

France, in its response, pointed out that Mayotte's special status acquired under the December 1976 law proclaiming Mayotte a territorial collectivity of the French Republic did not close the door to any future development. France was willing to seek conditions for a solution to the problem, subject to the requirements of its own national law and those of international law. It remained prepared to contribute to a just and lasting solution consonant with its Constitution and the wishes of the people concerned. Accordingly, a continuing and constructive dialogue was being maintained at the highest level with the Comoros, as evidenced by the visit to France of the Comorian President in February 1992.

The Comoros said the United Nations recognized the independence of the Comorian State—comprising the four islands of Grande-Comore, Anjouan, Mohéli and Mayotte—and considered it as a single entity. Notwithstanding resolutions to that effect by the United Nations and other organizations, including OAU and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, France continued to maintain its presence and its administration on Mayotte, on the grounds that the population of Mayotte had voted by a two-thirds majority against independence. Under agreements reached between the two parties, France had undertaken to respect the Comoros' unity and territorial integrity.

In 1989, all the country's political factions had reaffirmed unanimously that Mayotte belonged to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros and demanded that it be reincorporated into that nation. The political will demonstrated by both the French and the Comorian Governments must be supported by the international community so that a dialogue could begin quickly towards a just and lasting solution to the Comorian claim.

The OAU Secretary-General again quoted a resolution adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU in June 1991, reaffirming the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte and appealing to the French Government to meet the legitimate demands of the Government of the Comoros. The resolution also appealed to all OAU member States and the international community to condemn any initiative by France to make the Comorian island of Mayotte participate in events as a separate entity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 October 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/9 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985, 41/30 of 3 November 1986, 42/17 of 11 November 1987, 43/14 of 26 October 1988, 44/9 of 18 October 1989, 45/11 of 1 November 1990 and 46/9 of 16 October 1991, in which, inter alia, it affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced also that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind also the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Recalling the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

Eritrea

The right of the Eritrean people to determine their political future by an internationally supervised referendum was formally recognized in July 1991 by the Conference on Peace and Democracy (Addis Ababa), which assembled all the political parties and relevant social actors in Ethiopia.

By a letter of 19 May 1992, the Referendum Commissioner of Eritrea invited the Secretary-General to send a United Nations delegation to observe and verify the freeness, fairness and impartiality of the referendum, from its beginning in July 1992 to its completion in April 1993. The Secretary-General, by a letter of 11 June 1992, informed the President of the General Assembly that in view of the need for further information and the limited time remaining before the start of the referendum process in July, he was dispatching a technical team to gather information for the preparation of a report on the details of a potential United Nations involvement in the Eritrean referendum. Both communications, as well as a December 1991 letter from the President of the Transitional Government of Ethiopia expressing support for the referendum, were transmitted to the Assembly President on 29 October 1992(28) by the Chairman of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

A technical team, led by the Director of the Electoral Assistance Unit of the Department of Political Affairs of the United Nations, visited Eritrea in June for talks with the Referendum Commission, members of the provisional Government and representatives of political, social and religious organizations. During those meetings, the team detected uniform and strong support for the presence of an observation mission and a desire to have a free and fair referendum process.

On the basis of experience gained in other electoral exercises and comments received from the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, the team made a number of technical suggestions aimed at improving some operational and legal aspects of the organization of the referendum. It provided the Referendum Commission with detailed information on the characteristics and procedures of a United Nations observation mission, including standard agreements related to the mission's status and terms of reference; complete agreement was reached on those points.

Based on the fact that the referendum and the notion of its international supervision were supported by the agreements reached in July 1991 at Addis Ababa and that there had been a historical involvement of the United Nations with Eritrea, the Secretary-General, in an October 1992 report,(29) recommended the establishment of a United Nations Observer Mission to Verify the Referendum in Eritrea (UNOVER), with the terms of reference to verify: the impartiality of the referendum authorities and organs, including the Referendum Commission, in all aspects and stages of the referendum process; that there existed complete freedom of organization, movement, assembly and expression without hindrance and intimidation; that there was equal access to media facilities and fairness in allocation of both timing and length of broadcasts; and that the referendum rolls were properly drawn up and qualified voters were not denied identification and registration cards or the right to vote. UNOVER was further to report to the referendum authorities on complaints, irregularities and interferences, requesting them to take action if necessary, and to observe all activities related to registration of voters, organization of the poll, the referendum campaign, the poll itself, and the counting, computation and announcement of the results.

In carrying out its mandate, UNOVER was expected to gather factual information about the conduct of the referendum and, in particular, the decision of the electorate; to recognize that the ultimate judgement about the referendum process would be made by the electorate themselves and that its role was to take note of their decision; to recognize the independent character of the Referendum Commission and establish a relationship with it on that basis; and, in its observer capacity, to make constructive contributions to ensure the referendum's success at every stage of the process.

Concerning the structure of UNOVER, the Secretary-General suggested an Office of the Chief of the Mission at Asmara, to provide overall political direction, maintain contact with the provisional Government and the Referendum Commission, and deal with political and electoral matters; regional offices at Asmara, Keren and Mendefera; and mobile teams at Asmara and Keren. Given the peaceful situation in Eritrea and the lack of evidence of political tensions or conflictual positions in relation to the referendum, as well as the organization of the referendum effort already carried out by the Commission, the Secretary-General deemed a total of 21 international staff, supported by local personnel, sufficient to fulfil the verification functions. During the polling itself, 60 observation teams of two persons each would be fielded, with additional observers drawn from UNDP and other United Nations agency personnel at Asmara and in neighbouring countries, as well as from Member States and NGOs.

Three main phases of the referendum process were foreseen: the registration of voters, the referendum campaign, and the poll itself, scheduled for April 1993.

In putting forward his recommendations, the Secretary-General said he conceived of the referendum as not only an important step towards establishing democracy but also an integral part of consolidating peace in the country and contributing to the stability of the region.

In an annex to the report, the Secretary-General provided detailed cost estimates for UNOVER. In a November report to the Third Committee,(30) he estimated requirements for UNOVER at $2,807,000, or $181,000 less than his original estimates. In a later report,(31) estimated requirements were again revised downward to $2,577,000, due to the delay in the estimated start of the mission from mid-November to mid-December 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/114 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General concerning a request to the United Nations to observe the referendum process in Eritrea

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General concerning a request to the United Nations to observe the referendum process in Eritrea,

Recalling that the authorities directly concerned have registered their commitment to respect the results of the referendum in Eritrea,

Taking into account that the authorities directly concerned have requested the involvement of the United Nations to verify the referendum in Eritrea,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the recommendations contained therein for the establishment of a United Nations observer mission to verify the referendum scheduled to take place in Eritrea in April 1993;

2. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Observer Mission to Verify the Referendum in Eritrea, which will have terms of reference as provided for in paragraph 7 of the report of the Secretary-General, and to appoint, as a matter of urgency, a Special Representative for the referendum, who will head the Observer Mission;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange, as soon as possible, for the deployment of the Observer Mission so that it may commence its verification functions;

4. Calls upon the authorities directly concerned to extend their fullest cooperation to the Observer Mission in order to facilitate the accomplishment of its task, as requested by the United Nations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Liberia

The civil war in Liberia—an armed struggle for political power whose main protagonists were the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) of Charles Taylor and the United Liberation Movement of Liberia (ULIMO), inspired by the memory of the former President of Liberia who was killed in that war—continued to rage in 1992. The immediate origins of the three-year war could be traced to the complete breakdown of law and order and civil authority that accompanied the overthrow in 1990 of the regime headed by President Samuel Doe. The war caused severe casualties and major displacement of the population, both internally and in terms of refugees in countries bordering Liberia. The rupture of the system of civil administration, the cessation of most forms of social services and the disruption of economic activities resulted in considerable dependence on humanitarian assistance from the United Nations and NGOs.

Since the outbreak of hostilities, the members of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), both individually and within the framework of the Community, had taken many initiatives aimed at a peaceful settlement of the conflict. Among them, the fourth Yamoussoukro (Côte d'Ivoire) meeting in October 1991 and a meeting at Geneva in April 1992 marked a significant evolution in ECOWAS efforts to establish peace. All the warring factions in Liberia accepted the proposed modalities for a peace plan, including the encampment and disarmament of all their armed troops by 14 January 1992 under the supervision of the Economic Community Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) and the organization of free, democratic elections under the supervision of foreign observers. A request for United Nations assistance in the preparation and conduct of the elections, in accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution,⁽³²⁾ was made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Interim Government of National Unity of the Republic of Liberia in a letter of 11 February 1992.⁽³³⁾

The peace plan, however, was blocked by many obstacles owing to numerous violations by NPFL and, despite many appeals for a cease-fire, the fighting continued, especially with the appearance of ULIMO.

At their fifteenth summit meeting (Dakar, Senegal, 27-29 July), the heads of State or Government of ECOWAS reaffirmed their commitment to work for compliance with the final communiqué of 30 October 1991 (known as the Yamoussoukro IV Accord or Yamoussoukro IV Agreement), adopted by the ECOWAS Committee of Five. A one-month deadline was set for the encampment and disarmament operations; should those measures not be implemented in that time, new ones would be devised to make the factions comply.

Following the summit, Benin, succeeding Senegal as Chairman of ECOWAS, took a series of actions officially to inform the protagonists, including NPFL and ULIMO, of the decisions taken and to make them understand the need to accept and scrupulously observe the peace plan and the Yamoussoukro IV Agreement. The Chairman also approached the Secretary-General for support by the international community and the Security Council with respect to any measures ECOWAS might adopt to restore peace.

In conformity with the Dakar decisions, the first joint summit of the Standing Mediation Committee and the Committee of Five, which had been established to resolve the Liberian conflict, was held (Cotonou, Benin, 20 October 1992). Following the meeting, a new appeal was issued to the warring parties to observe a cease-fire as of midnight on 21 October. ECOMOG was made responsible for supervising compliance with the cease-fire and a 15-day deadline was established for complete implementation of the Yamoussoukro IV Agreement. A follow-up committee (Committee of Nine) was established, composed of Benin, Burkina Faso, Faso Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria, Senegal and Togo. It was mandated to evaluate, five days before expiration of the 15-day deadline, the extent to which the parties had implemented the Cotonou decisions; if the situation was unchanged, the Committee was mandated to implement fully the decision with respect to sanctions against the warring factions that had not complied with the Agreement. The sanctions were intended to blockade all land, sea and air points of entry into Liberia in order to prevent the delivery of war materiel those parties and the export of products from the zones they controlled.

Despite the measures adopted at Cotonou, ECO-MOG, the intervention force of ECOWAS, was the target of armed attacks by NPFL that claimed many victims in its ranks. Under those circumstances, a meeting of heads of State or Government of the Committee of Nine was held (Abuja, Nigeria, 7 November), at which a fresh appeal for an immediate cease-fire as of midnight on 10 November was issued. The meeting invited the Secretary-General to name a special representative to work with ECOWAS to implement the peace plan.

As the deadline set for implementation of the Yamoussoukro IV Agreement had expired, the heads of State or Government considered that their decision on sanctions had entered into force against all the warring factions as of 5 November.

The final communiques of the 7 April(34) and 21 June(35) meetings of the ECOWAS Committee of Five were transmitted to the Secretary-General by Senegal, then Chairman of ECOWAS. Benin transmitted to the Security Council the ECOWAS final communique and decisions of 20 October,(36) the final communique of the 7 November summit of the Committee of Nine(37) and the Yamoussoukro IV Agreement.(38)

By a letter of 28 October,(39) Benin informed the Council of the decision taken on 20 October at Cotonou to send a ministerial mission of ECOWAS to the Council to report on the latest developments in the crisis in Liberia, to request United Nations assistance in connection with the application of sanctions and to request the presence of observers to facilitate the verification and monitoring of the electoral process. Benin also asked for an emergency meeting of the Council on 4 November, when the ministerial mission was expected to be in New York.

On 19 November, the Security Council imposed a complete embargo on the delivery of weapons and military equipment to Liberia, and, on 20 November, Trevor Gordon-Somers (Jamaica) was named Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia.

The Assembly, in resolution 47/154, called for international aid to help resettle Liberian refugees.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 May, following consultations, the President, on behalf of the Security Council, made the following statement:(40)

Meeting number. SC 3071.

"The members of the Security Council recalled the statement made by the President of the Council on behalf of the Council on 22 January 1991 concerning the situation in Liberia.

"The members of the Security Council noted with appreciation the final communiqué of the Informal Consultative Group Meeting of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) Committee of Five on Liberia issued at Geneva on 7 April 1992.

"The members of the Security Council commend ECOWAS and its various organs, in particular the Committee of Five, for their untiring efforts to bring the Liberian conflict to a speedy conclusion.

"In this connection the members of the Security Council believe that the Yamoussoukro Accord of 30 October 1991 offers the best possible framework for a peaceful resolution of the Liberian conflict by creating the necessary conditions for free and fair elections in-Liberia.

"The members of the Security Council renew their call to all parties to the conflict in Liberia to respect and implement the various accords of the peace process in the framework of the ECOWAS Committee of Five, including refraining from actions which endanger the security of the neighbouring States.

"The members of the Security Council commend the efforts of the Member States, the Secretary-General and humanitarian organizations in providing humanitarian assistance to the victims of the civil war in Liberia and in this regard reaffirm their support for increased assistance."

At the request of Liberia,(41) the Council met again on 19 November to consider the situation in Liberia. Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mauritius, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Togo were invited to participate without the right to vote in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

On that date, the Council adopted resolution 788(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling the statements by the President of the Council on its behalf on 22 January 1991 and 7 May 1992 on the situation in Liberia,

Reaffirming its belief that the Yamoussoukro IV Accord of 30 October 1991 offers the best possible framework for a peaceful resolution of the Liberian conflict by creating the necessary conditions for free and fair elections in Liberia,

Taking into account the decision of the joint meeting of the Standing Mediation Committee and the Committee of Five of 20 October 1992 held at Cotonou, Benin, and the final communiqué of the first meeting of the Monitoring Committee of Nine on the Liberian conflict issued at Abuja, Nigeria, on 7 November 1992,

Regretting that parties to the conflict in Liberia have not respected or implemented the various accords to date, especially the Yamoussoukro IV Accord,

Determining that the deterioration of the situation in Liberia constitutes a threat to international peace and security, particularly in West Africa as a whole,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that the deterioration of the situation hinders the creation of conditions conducive to the holding of free and fair elections in accordance with the Yamoussoukro IV Accord,

Welcoming the continued commitment of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to and the efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Liberian conflict,

Further welcoming the endorsement and support by the Organization of African Unity of these efforts,

Noting the request of 29 July 1992 from ECOWAS for the United Nations to dispatch an observer group to Liberia to verify and monitor the electoral process,

Taking note of the invitation of ECOWAS of 20 October 1992, in Cotonou, Benin, for the Secretary-General to consider, if necessary, the dispatch of a group to observe the encampment and disarmament of the warring parties,

Recognizing the need for increased humanitarian assistance,

Taking into account the request made by the Permanent Representative of Benin on behalf of ECOWAS,

Taking also into account the letter of the Foreign Minister of Liberia endorsing the request made by the Permanent Representative of Benin on behalf of ECOWAS,

Convinced that it is vital to find a peaceful, just and lasting solution to the conflict in Liberia,

1. Commends ECOWAS for its efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia;

2. Reaffirms its belief that the Yamoussoukro IV Accord offers the best possible framework for a peaceful resolution of the Liberian conflict by creating the necessary conditions for free and fair elections in Liberia, and calls upon ECOWAS to continue its efforts to assist in the peaceful implementation of this Accord;

3. Condemns the violation of the cease-fire of 28 November 1990 by any party to the conflict;

4. Condemns the continuing armed attacks against the peace-keeping forces of ECOWAS in Liberia by one of the parties to the conflict;

5. Calls upon all parties to the conflict and all others concerned to respect strictly the provisions of international humanitarian law;

6. Calls upon all parties to the conflict to respect and implement the cease-fire and the various accords of the peace process, including the Yamoussoukro IV Accord of 30 October 1991, and the final communiqué of the Informal Consultative Group Meeting of ECOWAS Committee of Five on Liberia, issued at Geneva on 7 April 1992, to which they themselves have agreed;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to dispatch urgently a Special Representative to Liberia to evaluate the situation, and to report to the Security Council as soon as possible with any recommendations he may wish to make;

8. Decides, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that all States shall, for the purposes of establishing peace and stability in Liberia, immediately implement a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia until the Security Council decides otherwise;

9. Decides within the same framework that the embargo imposed by paragraph 8 shall not apply to weapons and military equipment destined for the sole use of the peace-keeping forces of ECOWAS in Liberia, subject to any review that may be required in conformity with the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Requests all States to respect the measures established by ECOWAS to bring about a peaceful solution to the conflict in Liberia;

11. Calls on Member States to exercise self-restraint in their relations with all parties to the Liberian conflict and to refrain from taking any action that would be inimical to the peace process;

12. Commends the efforts of Member States, the United Nations system and humanitarian organizations in providing humanitarian assistance to the victims of the conflict in Liberia, and in this regard reaffirms its support for increased humanitarian assistance;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of this resolution as soon as possible;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 788(1992)

19 November 1992 Meeting 3138 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24827).

By a letter of 20 November,(42) the Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to appoint Trevor Gordon-Somers as Special Representative for Liberia. The Council welcomed the Secretary-General's decision on 23 November.(43)

Mozambique

After ongoing negotiations since the signing of a partial cease-fire agreement on 1 December 1990, the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO) signed on 4 October 1992 in Rome a General Peace Agreement, which consisted of the Agreement itself and seven protocols: I (basic principles); II (criteria and arrangements for the formation and recognition of political parties); III (principles of the Electoral Act); IV (military questions); V (guarantees); VI (cease-fire); and VII (donors' conference).

The Agreement, which came into force on 15 October, further specified that four other documents formed integral parts of it, namely: a joint communiqué of 10 July 1990 by which both parties affirmed their readiness to dedicate themselves fully to the search for a working basis from which to end the war and create conditions for a lasting peace and for normalizing the life of all Mozambican citizens; an agreement of 1 December 1990 on a partial cease-fire; a declaration of 16 July 1992 by the Government and RENAMO on guiding principles for humanitarian assistance; and a joint declaration signed on 7 August by which both sides committed themselves to guarantee conditions permitting complete political freedom, in accordance with internationally recognized principles of democracy; to guarantee the personal safety of all Mozambican citizens and all members of political parties; to accept the role of the international community, particularly the United Nations, in monitoring and guaranteeing implementation of the General Peace Agreement, particularly the cease-fire and the electoral process; and fully to respect the principles of protocol I, under which the Government was to refrain from any action contrary to the provisions of the protocols or from adopting and applying laws inconsistent with them, while RENAMO was to refrain from armed combat and was instead to conduct its political struggle in conformity with the laws in force, within the framework of existing State institutions and in accordance with the conditions and guarantees established in the General Peace Agreement. The parties were further committed to safeguard political rights, establish constitutional guarantees and incorporate the protocols and guarantees, as well as the Agreement, in Mozambican law.

The General Peace Agreement was annexed to a letter of 4 October from the President of Mozambique to the Secretary-General,⁽⁴⁴⁾ requesting the United Nations to chair the following commissions: the Supervision and Control Commission of the implementation of the Agreement, as provided for in protocol I; the Cease-fire Commission provided for in protocol VI; and the Reintegration Commission, provided for in protocol IV. At the same time, he requested that the Security Council be informed of the need to send a United Nations team to Mozambique to monitor the Agreement until the holding of general elections which, in principle, were to take place one year after the signing of the Agreement. According to protocol IV, the United Nations was expected to start its functions of verifying and monitoring the cease-fire upon entry into force of the Agreement. The 7 August joint declaration was transmitted by Mozambique on 10 August.⁽⁴⁵⁾

After the Security Council on 13 October welcomed the signing of the General Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General appointed Aldo Ajello (Italy) as interim Special Representative to assist the parties in setting up the joint machinery required for the military and other arrangements to be taken under the Agreement. The Special Representative and the head of the United Nations military observer team arrived in Maputo on 14 October, along with the first observers. On 4 November, the Special Representative appointed a Supervisory and Monitoring Commission, which on the same date appointed its three main subsidiary commissions: the Cease-fire Commission, the Reintegration Commission and the Joint Commission for the Formation of the Mozambican Defence Forces.

The Supervisory and Monitoring Commission was to guarantee implementation of the General Peace Agreement, assume responsibility for authentic interpretation of it and settle any disputes that might arise between the parties. The other commissions were responsible for supervising the cease-fire and demobilization; economic and social reintegration of demobilized military personnel; and the formation of new unified armed forces.

All four commissions were composed of government and RENAMO delegates. In addition, they included representatives of: France, Italy, Portugal, the United Kingdom, the United States and OAU (Supervisory and Monitoring Commission); Botswana, Egypt, France, Italy, Nigeria, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States (Cease-fire Commission); Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, the United States and the European Community (EC) (Reintegration Commission); and France, Portugal and United Kingdom (Joint Commission for the Formation of the Mozambican Defence Forces, the only Commission not chaired by the United Nations).

Immediately after the signing of the Agreement, the Secretary-General dispatched a humanitarian assistance mission to Mozambique to assess existing United Nations operations and devise a more effective response to the intended expansion of humanitarian activities. As a result of the war and continuing drought, the internally displaced population in Mozambique totalled some 3 to 4 million. About 3 million Mozambicans living in accessible areas were receiving humanitarian assistance. The signing of the Agreement created access to additional affected areas, many of which were controlled by RENAMO. As a consequence, nearly 270,000 additional beneficiaries were being provided with humanitarian assistance by the United Nations and ICRC, under the terms of a 15 July declaration on the principles of humanitarian assistance. Indications were that the number of additional beneficiaries might reach 500,000.

While 1.4 million of the estimated 1.8 million Mozambican refugees living in neighbouring countries were receiving assistance, drought was reported to have caused many other Mozambicans to seek refuge there. The expected returnee population could thus be estimated at no less than 1.8 million.

On 16 December 1992, the Security Council authorized a United Nations Operation in Mozambique until 31 October 1993. Its estimated 8,000 military and civilian personnel were to monitor withdrawal of foreign forces and help administer the electoral process and humanitarian assistance.

As agreed in protocol VII, a conference of donor countries and organizations to finance the electoral process, emergency programmes and programmes for the reintegration of displaced persons, refugees and demobilized soldiers was convened by Italy (Rome, 15 and 16 December). An appropriate share of the funds provided was to be placed at the disposal of political parties for the financing of their activities. An announcement of the conference and its conclusions were submitted by Italy, by letters of 12 November⁽⁴⁶⁾ and 30 December⁽⁴⁷⁾ respectively.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). In October⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the status of the peace process, summarized the principal features of the General Peace Agreement, including the role proposed for the United Nations in monitoring it, and outlined an immediate plan of action. In essence, the Organization was asked to undertake certain specific functions in relation to the cease-fire, the elections and humanitarian assistance.

With regard to the cease-fire, the United Nations was asked to provide chairmen for the Cease-fire Commission and the Reintegration Commission; the former was also to verify the existence of other armed groups, including irregulars, and to authorize security arrangements for vital public and private infrastructures.

It would not be possible for the United Nations to establish more than a token presence in Mozambique by 15 October, the Secretary-General said. The viability of the cease-fire in its early stages would therefore depend on the political will and strict compliance by the two parties with the agreed modalities. In that context, he noted that the parties had not yet reached agreement on locations for the assembly areas for the separation and concentration of forces.

The Secretary-General stated his intention, subject to the approval of the Security Council, to appoint immediately an interim Special Representative in overall charge of United Nations activities in support of the Agreement, including monitoring its implementation and the specific tasks related to the military arrangements and the elections. As soon as appointed, the Special Representative was to assist the parties in setting up the joint machinery to be chaired by the United Nations and in finalizing modalities and conditions for the military arrangements. He was also to coordinate humanitarian and other related United Nations efforts, taking steps, as a priority matter, to ensure access for relief workers to all those in need of humanitarian assistance. In those initial tasks, he was to be supported by a team of up to 25 military observers and administrative support staff. The military personnel, drawn from existing peace-keeping missions, were to establish a presence at Maputo, Beira and Nampula to carry out limited verification of the cease-fire arrangements; establish liaison with both parties in those regions and provide them with technical advice on the modalities for implementing the Agreement; facilitate the build-up of the mission; and carry out reconnaissance and other required activities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 13 October, the Security Council met to consider the Secretary-General's report. The Council invited Mozambique to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37 of its provisional rules of procedure.^a Following a statement by Mozambique, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 782(1992).

The Security Council,

Welcoming the signature, on 4 October 1992 in Rome, of a General Peace Agreement between the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO),

Considering that the signature of the Agreement constitutes an important contribution to the restoration of peace and security in the region,

Taking note of the Joint Declaration dated 7 August 1992 of the President of the Republic of Mozambique and the President of RENAMO, in which the parties accept the role of the United Nations in monitoring and guaranteeing the implementation of the General Peace Agreement,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 October 1992 and of the request of the President of Mozambique,

1. Approves the appointment by the Secretary-General of an interim Special Representative, and the dispatch to Mozambique of a team of up to 25 military observers as recommended in paragraph 16 of the above-mentioned report;

2. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a United Nations Operation in Mozambique, including in particular a detailed estimate of the cost of this operation;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 782(1992)

13 October 1992 Meeting 3123 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24650), orally revised.

On 27 October, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽⁴⁹⁾

Meeting number. SC 3125

"The Security Council has taken note of the letter dated 23 October 1992 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council concerning the situation in Mozambique. It expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General and to his interim Special Representative for their efforts to ensure that the United Nations contributes to the implementation of the General Peace Agreement in accordance with the provisions of this Agreement.

"The Council remains deeply concerned by the reports of major violations of the cease-fire in several regions of Mozambique. It calls upon the parties to halt such violations immediately and scrupulously to respect the cease-fire and all the commitments entered into under the General Peace Agreement. It also urges the parties to cooperate fully with the interim Special Representative, and in particular to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of United Nations staff in Mozambique.

"The Council wishes to reiterate its firm commitment to work towards a lasting peace in Mozambique. In this regard, it urges the parties to respect fully the cease-fire, which is a necessary condition for the speedy establishment and successful deployment of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique."

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In December,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Secretary-General recommended the deployment of a United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) to provide an impartial and supportive structure to help both parties break the cycle of violence and to assist in the rebuilding and development of a peaceful society.

In accordance with the General Peace Agreement, the mandate of ONUMOZ would be to facilitate impartial implementation of the Agreement, in particular by chairing the Supervisory and Monitoring Commission and its subordinate commissions; to monitor and verify the cease-fire, the separation and concentration of forces, their demobilization and the collection, storage and destruction of weapons; to monitor and verify the complete withdrawal of foreign forces as well as the disbanding of private and irregular armed groups; to authorize security arrangements for vital infrastructures; and to provide security for United Nations and other international activities in support of the peace process. ONUMOZ would also provide technical assistance for and monitor the entire electoral process, coordinate humanitarian assistance operations, in particular those relating to refugees, internally displaced persons, demobilized military personnel and the affected local population, and chair the Humanitarian Assistance Committee.

ONUMOZ's verification function was to be carried out mainly by military observer teams at the 49 assembly areas in three military regions and elsewhere in the field. They would work with, but would remain separate from, the monitoring groups composed of representatives of the two parties at each location. They would observe the manner in which those groups were carrying out their functions in order to verify that the joint monitoring machinery was working effectively. They would respond to requests for assistance and would use their good offices to resolve any problems that might arise within the monitoring groups, conducting their own investigations and patrolling the assembly areas. Teams would also be deployed at airports, ports and other critical areas, including RENAMO headquarters.

The military aspects of the United Nations operation would be inescapably linked with the humanitarian efforts. Approximately 110,000 soldiers were to be disarmed, demobilized and reintegrated into civil society; they would need food and other support and the relief programmes for the assembled soldiers and civilian populations would need to be closely coordinated.

With the withdrawal of foreign troops having started after the Agreement's entry into force and in view of roaming groups of heavily armed irregulars, the Secretary-General saw an imperative need to continue ensuring the security of the transport corridors and other key routes and to protect humanitarian convoys using them; there seemed to be no alternative but for ONUMOZ to assume that responsibility and deploy live logistically self-sufficient infantry battalions for that purpose. In addition, three engineer companies were needed to assist in demining and road repair.

While the Agreement did not provide for a specific role for United Nations civilian police, the Secretary-General considered its presence desirable in order to inspire confidence that violation of civil liberties, human rights and political freedom would be avoided. A police component of up to 128 police officers could be deployed in the regions and provincial capitals; it could work in close cooperation with and provide technical advice to the National Police Affairs Commission.

With regard to elections as foreseen in the Agreement, the Secretary-General felt it was important that they should not take place until the military aspects of the Agreement were fully implemented. However, the peace process should not be drawn out indefinitely and the highest priority was to be given to timely implementation of the cease-fire, the assembly, disarmament and demobilization of troops and the formation of new armed forces.

ONUMOZ's electoral component was to verify the impartiality of the National Elections Commission and its organs; that political parties and alliances enjoyed complete freedom of organization, movement, assembly and expression and that they had fair access to State mass media; and that the electoral rolls were properly drawn up and that qualified voters were not denied identification and registration cards or the right to vote. In addition, ONUMOZ was to report to the electoral authorities on complaints, irregularities and interferences reported or observed, and, if necessary, to request action to resolve and rectify them, as well as to conduct its own investigation; to observe all activities related to voter registration, the electoral campaign, the organization of the poll and the poll itself, as well as the counting, computation and announcement of the results; to participate in the electoral education campaign; and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the electoral process.

With regard to coordination of the humanitarian aspects of the Agreement, the Secretary-General recommended that a United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance be established as an integral part of ONUMOZ, with regional and provincial suboffices, replacing the current office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for Emergency Relief Operations.

Summing up his observations, the Secretary-General said the difficulties for ONUMOZ derived from the size of the country, its devastated infrastructure, the disruption of its economy by war and drought, and the limited capacity of the Government to cope with the new tasks arising from the General Peace Agreement and the complexity of the processes enshrined in it. An additional dimension was the critical importance of the Mozambican corridors for much of southern Africa. To achieve within one year the assembly, disarmament and demobilization of the two sides' troops, the formation of new armed forces, the resettlement of 5 to 6 million refugees and displaced persons, the provision of humanitarian relief to all parts of the country, and the organization and conduct of elections would require a huge and cooperative effort by the Government, RENAMO and the international community, with the United Nations in the lead. Very substantial resources were needed for that purpose. However, United Nations efforts could only support those of the parties. Also, it would not be possible to create the conditions for a successful election unless the military situation had been brought fully under control.

The Secretary-General recommended the deployment of: a military component, including 354 military observers and 5 infantry battalions composed of up to 850 personnel each; a civilian technical unit to support the logistic tasks relating to the demobilization programme in the assembly areas; 128 police officers to monitor civil liberties and provide technical advice to the National Police Affairs Commission, subject to the parties' concurrence; an Electoral Division consisting of up to 148 international electoral officers and support staff, followed by up to 1,200 international observers for the elections themselves; and 16 international Professional staff for the coordination and monitoring of humanitarian assistance.

In an addendum to the report, the Secretary-General estimated that $331.8 million would be required for ONUMOZ from its inception to 31 October 1993, the cost to be borne by Member States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report on 16 December. In accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure," Mozambique was invited to participate without the right to vote.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 797(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 782(1992) of 13 October 1992,

Recalling also the statement of the President of the Security Council of 27 October 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 December 1992,

Stressing the importance it attaches to the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique and to the fulfilment by the parties in good faith of the obligations contained therein,

Noting the efforts made so far by the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana to maintain the cease-fire, and expressing concern over the delays in initiating some of the major tasks arising from the General Peace Agreement,

Welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of an interim Special Representative for Mozambique who will be in overall charge of United Nations activities in support of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique as well as the dispatch to Mozambique of a team of twenty-five military observers, as approved by resolution 782(1992) of 13 October 1992,

Noting the intention of the Secretary-General, in this as in other peace-keeping operations, to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 December 1992 and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Decides to establish a United Nations Operation in Mozambique as proposed by the Secretary-General and in line with the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, and requests the Secretary-General in planning and executing the deployment of the Operation to seek economies through, inter alia, phased deployment and to report regularly on what is achieved in this regard;

3. Further decides that the United Nations Operation in Mozambique is established for a period until 31 October 1993 in order to accomplish the objectives described in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Calls upon the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana to cooperate fully with the interim Special Representative of the Secretary-General and with the United Nations Operation in Mozambique and to respect scrupulously the cease-fire and all the commitments entered into under the Agreement, and stresses that the full respect of these commitments constitutes a necessary condition for the fulfilment by the United Nations Operation in Mozambique of its mandate;

5. Demands that all parties and others concerned in Mozambique take all measures necessary to ensure the safety of United Nations and all other personnel deployed pursuant to this and prior resolutions;

6. Endorses the approach in paragraphs 30 and 51 of the Secretary-General's report as regards the timetable for the electoral process, and invites the Secretary-General to consult closely with all the parties on the precise timing of and preparations for the presidential and legislative elections as well as on a precise timetable for the implementation of the other major aspects of the Agreement and to report back to the Council on this as soon as possible, and in any event not later than 31 March 1993;

7. Calls upon the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana to finalize, in close coordination with the interim Special Representative, as soon as possible organizational and logistical preparations for the demobilization process;

8. Encourages Member States to respond positively to requests made to them by the Secretary-General to contribute personnel and equipment to the United Nations Operation in Mozambique;

9. Further encourages Member States to contribute voluntarily to United Nations activities in support of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, and requests United Nations programmes and specialized agencies to provide appropriate assistance and support for the implementation of the major tasks arising from the Agreement;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of developments and to submit a further report to the Council by 31 March 1993;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 797(1992)

16 December 1992 Meeting 3149 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24941).

Alleged use of chemical weapons

By a communiqué of 23 January 1992,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Government of Mozambique charged that following a military operation on 16 January against a RENAMO stronghold in the region of Ngungue, Estompene, 5 kilometres from the border with South Africa, its forces were subjected to an attack with a chemical weapon. As a result, some soldiers died, while others were rendered paralysed, were mentally affected, or lost sight and hearing abilities. In submitting its charges, the Government urgently appealed to the international community for assistance in its efforts to determine the nature of the weapon involved, as well as the treatment of the injured persons.

After requesting further information and clarifications from the Government and having been informed of the preliminary results of an investigation carried out at the Government's request by experts from the National Defence Research Establishment of Sweden from 5 to 11 February, the Secretary-General reached the conclusion that an investigation was warranted, although the passage of a considerable amount of time since the incident was feared to have substantially diminished the possibility of determining which chemical agents, if any, might have been involved. The Government of Mozambique, on 13 March, reiterated its strong wish to have a United Nations investigation team in Maputo at the Secretary-General's earliest convenience.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General, under his own authority, appointed in March a mission of three qualified experts, from Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom, to carry out an investigation. The President of the Security Council was informed of the decision in a letter of 26 March. The mission was coordinated by the Director, Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Department for Political Affairs.

The mission arrived at Maputo on 23 March. In the course of their investigation, the experts were able to go to the location identified by the authorities of Mozambique as the site of the incident, where they collected various types of samples which were later analysed independently at laboratories in Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. After concluding their investigation on 27 March, the experts submitted a joint report to the Secretary-General. They said the effect of the attack on the troops was consistent with the use of an atropine-like chemical warfare agent and also with severe heat stress. In the absence of analytical data, it could not be concluded that a chemical warfare agent had been used and, due to the considerable delay between the attack and the investigation, it might not be possible to detect traces of the agent if a chemical warfare agent had been used.

In transmitting the experts' report to the Security Council,⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that they determined that the government forces had sustained casualties not entirely explicable by the kind of weapons so far in use in the conflict in Mozambique. From the material available, it was not possible to determine whether or not a chemical weapon had been used. However, the mere possibility that such weapons might be used in the continuing armed conflict pointed to the urgency of finding a peaceful settlement.

Somalia

Since the ousting of President Mohammed Siad Barre—Somalia's leader for 21 years—in January 1991, the country had been embroiled in a clan-based civil war. Since November 1991, heavy fighting had persisted in Mogadishu (Mogadiscio), the capital, between the factions of Ali Mahdi Mohamed, appointed Interim President on the basis of the 1991 Djibouti Accords, and General Mohamed Farah Aidid. The Djibouti Accords were the result of two conferences on Somali national reconciliation, held in June and July 1991 in response to an appeal by the President of Djibouti. The conferences brought together all the major political factions in Somalia, with the exception of the Somali National Movement.

The conflict in Mogadishu arose mainly because General Aidid, rejecting the Accords, did not recognize Mr. Mohamed as Interim President.

During the fighting, areas inhabited by civilians were subjected to persistent direct fire, including from artillery and mortar units. At the same time, independent military operations by some of the heavily armed elements which controlled parts of the city, including the seaport and airport, increased. While some of those elements declared alliance with one or the other of the two protagonists in Mogadishu, others were not controlled by either of them.

The fighting resulted in widespread death and destruction, forced hundreds of thousands of civilians to flee the city, caused dire need of emergency humanitarian assistance and brought about a grave threat of widespread famine. It seriously impeded United Nations efforts to deliver humanitarian assistance to the affected population in and around Mogadishu, and threatened stability in the Horn of Africa. Throughout the country, almost 4.5 million of the 6 million Somalis were estimated to be threatened by severe malnutrition and related disease, with at least 1.5 million immediately at risk and 300,000 estimated to have died since November 1991 (for details, see PART THREE, Chapter III). Some 700,000 Somalis had sought refuge in neighbouring countries and another 300,000 were exiled elsewhere (for details, see PART THREE, Chapter XV).

On 23 January, the Security Council urged all parties to the conflict to cease hostilities and decided that all States should immediately implement a complete embargo on deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia. A cease-fire agreed to by the two factions in Mogadishu came into effect on 3 March. After about a month of relative calm, fighting resumed between some units belonging to the two factions. The leaders of both factions moved quickly to stop the fighting and re-establish the cease-fire. However, some sporadic shooting and incidents of apparent banditry by armed elements not under the control of either faction were reported.

On 17 March, the Council supported the Secretary-General's decision to dispatch a United Nations technical team to Somalia to prepare a plan for a cease-fire monitoring mechanism. The Council also requested the team to develop a high-priority plan for the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

On 12 April, representatives of the two factions met face to face for the first time at United Nations offices at Mogadishu to discuss the formation of a joint committee for relief assistance, under the chairmanship of the Coordinator for Humanitarian Assistance. Similarly, the chiefs of staff of both factions met in connection with the monitoring of the cease-fire and the agreements reached on ensuring unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance.

On 24 April, the Council established a United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM) and requested the immediate deployment of 50 United Nations observers to monitor the cease-fire in Mogadishu. The Secretary-General on 28 April appointed Ambassador Mohamed Sahnoun (Algeria) as his Special Representative for Somalia. On 4 May, Mr. Sahnoun took up residence in Mogadishu, where he established the headquarters of UNOSOM. Following Mr. Sahnoun's resignation at the end of October, the Secretary-General appointed Ambassador Ismat Kittani (Iraq) as his new Special Representative.

On 27 July, the Council approved an enlargement of UNOSOM and urged all parties, movements and factions to facilitate United Nations efforts to provide urgent humanitarian assistance. On 28 August, the Council authorized an increase in UNOSOM's strength and, on 3 December, it authorized the use of all necessary means to establish as soon as possible a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 11 January 1992, Omer Arteh Qhalib, appointed interim Prime Minister for Somalia in the context of arrangements agreed on by all the Somali political parties that had participated in the Somali national reconciliation conference held at Djibouti in July 1991, requested the Charge d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Somalia to the United Nations to present the deteriorating situation in the country to the Security Council. By a letter of 20 January,⁽⁵³⁾ the Chargé d'affaires, noting that the civil war situation in Somalia was worsening by the day, expressed support of Mr. Arteh's appeal to the Council to convene immediately to consider the resulting human dilemma.

The Council met on 23 January. Somalia was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 733(1992).

The Security Council,

Considering the request by Somalia for the Security Council to consider the situation in Somalia,

Having heard the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia and commending the initiative taken by him in the humanitarian field,

Gravely alarmed at the rapid deterioration of the situation in Somalia and the heavy loss of human life and widespread material damage resulting from the conflict in the country and aware of its consequences on the stability and peace in the region,

Concerned that the continuation of this situation constitutes, as stated in the report of the Secretary-General, a threat to international peace and security,

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations.

Expressing its appreciation to the international and regional organizations that have provided assistance to the populations affected by the conflict and deploring that personnel of these organizations have lost their lives in the exercise of their humanitarian tasks,

Taking note of the appeals addressed to the parties by the Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference on 16 December 1991, the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity on 18 December 1991 and the League of Arab States on 5 January 1992,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia and expresses its concern with the situation prevailing in that country;

2. Requests the Secretary-General immediately to undertake the necessary actions to increase humanitarian assistance of the United Nations and its specialized agencies to the affected population in all parts of Somalia in liaison with the other international humanitarian organizations and to this end to appoint a coordinator to oversee the effective delivery of this assistance;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, immediately to contact all parties involved in the conflict, to seek their commitment to the cessation of hostilities to permit the humanitarian assistance to be distributed, to promote a cease-fire and compliance therewith, and to assist in the process of a political settlement of the conflict in Somalia;

4. Strongly urges all parties to the conflict immediately to cease hostilities and agree to a cease-fire and to promote the process of reconciliation and of political settlement in Somalia;

5. Decides, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that all States shall, for the purposes of establishing peace and stability in Somalia, immediately implement a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia until the Security Council decides otherwise;

6. Calls on all States to refrain from any action which might contribute to increasing tension and to impeding or delaying a peaceful and negotiated outcome to the conflict in Somalia, which would permit all Somalis to decide upon and to construct their future in peace;

7. Calls upon all parties to cooperate with the Secretary-General to this end and to facilitate the delivery by the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other humanitarian organizations of humanitarian assistance to all those in need of it, under the supervision of the coordinator;

8. Urges all parties to take all the necessary measures to ensure the safety of personnel sent to provide humanitarian assistance, to assist them in their tasks and to ensure full respect for the rules and principles of international law regarding the protection of civilian populations;

9. Calls upon all States and international organizations to contribute to the efforts of humanitarian assistance to the population in Somalia;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council as soon as possible on this matter;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 733(1992)

23 January 1992 Meeting 3039 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23461).

By a letter of 30 January,(54) Somalia expressed gratification at the unanimous adoption of resolution 733(1992), which it hoped would diminish human suffering and bring about a holding cease-fire, national reconciliation and lasting peace. In an annex to the letter, Somalia highlighted the political situation in the country.

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In March,(55) the Secretary-General described his efforts, in cooperation with the Secretaries-General of OAU and the League of Arab States (LAS), to secure the commitment of all parties involved in the conflict in Somalia to a cessation of hostilities in order to permit distribution of humanitarian assistance, promotion of a cease-fire, compliance with it and promotion of a political settlement.

On 31 January, the Secretary-General invited LAS, OAU, the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), Interim President Mohamed and General Aidid, then Chairman of the United Somali Congress, to send representatives to New York for consultations. The talks, held from 12 to 14 February, succeeded in the two Somali factions committing themselves to an immediate cessation of hostilities and maintenance of a cease-fire in Mogadishu. They signed pledges to that effect in the presence of representatives of the United Nations, LAS, OAU and OIC. They also agreed to a visit to Mogadishu, before the end of February, of a high-level delegation from those organizations to arrange a cease-fire agreement.

The joint delegation, led by Under-Secretary-General James O. C. Jonah, arrived at Mogadishu on 29 February. It held separate talks with Interim President Mohamed and General Aidid. On 3 March, after four days of intensive negotiations, both signed an agreement on the implementation of a cease-fire.

The signing of the agreement, the text of which was annexed to the Secretary-General's report, opened the way for the dispatch of a United Nations technical team to Mogadishu to work out with military officials of the two main factions a possible monitoring mechanism aimed at stabilizing the cease-fire and to look into possible mechanisms to ensure unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance.

In the light of the immediate threat posed by severe food shortages to large portions of the country's population, the Secretary-General said, the relief programme should not necessarily depend on implementation of a cease-fire, and the consequences of obstructing the work of international monitors or of any United Nations observer mission should be made unmistakably clear to the leaders of the two factions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council convened on 17 March to consider the Secretary-General's report on the situation in Somalia. Italy, Kenya, Nigeria and Somalia, at their request, were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a At Morocco's request, an invitation was also extended to the Permanent Observers of LAS(56) and OIC,(57) under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^b

Following statements, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 746(1992).

The Security Council,

Considering the request by Somalia for the Security Council to consider the situation in Somalia,

Reaffirming its resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia,

Taking note of the signing of the cease-fire agreements in Mogadiscio on 3 March 1992, including agreements for the implementation of measures aimed at stabilizing the cease-fire through a United Nations monitoring mission,

Deeply regretting that the factions have not yet abided by their commitment to implement the cease-fire and thus have still not permitted the unimpeded provision and distribution of humanitarian assistance to the people in need in Somalia,

Deeply disturbed by the magnitude of the human suffering caused by the conflict and concerned that the continuation of the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that the factors described in paragraph 76 of the Secretary-General's report must be taken into account,

Cognizant of the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the context of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining the importance which it attaches to the international, regional and non-governmental organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, continuing to provide humanitarian and other relief assistance to the people of Somalia under difficult circumstances,

Expressing its appreciation to the regional organizations, including the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, for their cooperation with the United Nations in the effort to resolve the Somali problem,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges the Somali factions to honour their commitment under the cease-fire agreements of 3 March 1992;

3. Urges all the Somali factions to cooperate with the Secretary-General and to facilitate the delivery by the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other humanitarian organizations of humanitarian assistance to all those in need of it, under the supervision of the coordinator mentioned in resolution 733(1992);

4. requests the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in Somalia and to use all the resources at his disposal, including those of the relevant United Nations agencies, to address urgently the critical needs of the affected population in Somalia;

5. Appeals to all Member States and to all humanitarian organizations to contribute to and to cooperate with these humanitarian relief efforts;

6. Strongly supports the Secretary-General's decision urgently to dispatch a technical team to Somalia, accompanied by the coordinator, in order to work within the framework and objectives outlined in paragraphs 73 and 74 of his report and to submit expeditiously a report to the Security Council on this matter;

7. Requests that the technical team also develop a high priority plan to establish mechanisms to ensure the unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance;

8. Calls on all parties, movements and factions in Mogadiscio in particular, and in Somalia in general, to respect fully the security and safety of the technical team and the personnel of the humanitarian organizations and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadiscio and other parts of Somalia;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue, in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, his consultations with all Somali parties, movements and factions towards the convening of a conference for national reconciliation and unity in Somalia;

10. Calls upon all Somali parties, movements and factions to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the implementation of this resolution;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 746(1992)

17 March 1992 Meeting 3060 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23722), orally revised.

In Somalia's view, expressed in a letter of 26 March(58) the resolution carried all the necessary elements for resolving the country's problem. Annexed to the letter were suggestions by Somalia for action within the resolution's context.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In April,(59) the Secretary-General informed the Council that on 20 March he appointed David Bassiouni as Coordinator to oversee the delivery of United Nations humanitarian assistance to the affected population in all parts of Somalia, in liaison with other international humanitarian organizations. On the same date, he appointed a 15-member technical team led by Robert Gallagher and including representatives of LAS, OAU and OIC. The team was in Somalia from 23 March to 1 April. It visited Mogadishu, Kismayo and Hargeisa and met with the authorities and clan leaders from the north-east as well as the south-west of the country. The team obtained the signatures of Interim President Mohamed and General Aidid to agreements on mechanisms for monitoring the cease-fire and on arrangements for equitable and effective distribution of humanitarian assistance. Under those agreements, the United Nations would deploy observers to monitor the cease-fire and deploy security personnel to protect its staff and safeguard its humanitarian and relief activities, providing security for equipment and escorting deliveries of supplies. The team also reached agreements with the various authorities and clan leaders for the delivery of humanitarian assistance through the collaborative efforts of the United Nations, ICRC and NGOs.

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

The Secretary-General observed that the crisis in the country had regional consequences, as evidenced by the flow of Somali refugees to neighbouring countries, and there were grave concerns about the destabilizing effects it could have on the Horn of Africa. In the country, there was hardly any governmental infrastructure that could be relied on. Banditry was widespread and there was wide proliferation of weapons. The port and international airport of Mogadishu were in the control of groups not under the command of either major faction.

The tragic situation with its extraordinary complexities so far had eluded conventional solutions. The threat of dramatic food shortages among particularly vulnerable groups was becoming increasingly acute. The lack of clean water and primary health care services and control of communicable diseases was exacerbating the crisis. Owing to the efforts of NGOs, supported in part by United Nations agencies, some basic health, water and disease-control services were provided, but those efforts needed to be intensified. Access to the main ports and acceptance of the principle of "corridors" and "zones of peace" would enable the provision of more assistance.

The prevailing crisis posed a paradox which must be addressed: without security, relief assistance programmes would continue to be severely constrained; yet without such programmes, prospects for security were at best precarious. Therefore, the Secretary-General emphasized the necessity for the provision of humanitarian assistance even before the full complement of United Nations security personnel and cease-fire modalities were in place.

To monitor the cease-fire and the delivery of humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of UNOSOM.

Command of UNOSOM in the field would be entrusted to a Commanding Officer with the rank of Brigadier-General, to be appointed by the Secretary-General after consultation with the two parties and with the consent of the Security Council. The military personnel would be contributed by Member States at the Secretary-General's request, after consultation with the parties and with the Council's approval.

As an addendum to his report, the Secretary-General submitted a consolidated inter-agency 90-day plan of action for emergency humanitarian assistance to Somalia. The plan was to form the basis for immediate action to deliver food and non-food relief assistance to an estimated 1.5 million people most immediately at risk. In addition, it targeted assistance for a further 3.5 million who were in need of food, seeds, and basic health and water services. The latter group included many thousands of soldiers and other armed groups who were to be reintegrated into civilian life through disarmament and demobilization programmes.

Implementation of the plan, as well as the continuity of expanded humanitarian relief and recovery efforts, required that United Nations agencies expanded their presence throughout the country, under the United Nations Coordinator for Humanitarian Assistance in Somalia, based at Mogadishu.

In another addendum, the Secretary-General provided preliminary cost estimates for UNOSOM—consisting of 550 military and security personnel and 79 civilians—in the amount $23.1 million for an initial six-month period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 24 April, the Security Council reconvened to consider the situation in Somalia. The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Somalia, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 751(1992).

The Security Council,

Considering the request by Somalia for the Security Council to consider the situation in Somalia.

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and 746(1992) of 17 March 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia,

Taking note of the signing of the cease-fire agreements in Mogadishu on 3 March 1992, including agreements for the implementation of measures aimed at stabilizing the cease-fire through a United Nations monitoring mission,

Taking note also of the signing of letters of agreement in Mogadishu, Hargeisa and Kismayo on the mechanism for monitoring the cease-fire and arrangements for the equitable and effective distribution of humanitarian assistance in and around Mogadishu,

Deeply disturbed by the magnitude of the human suffering caused by the conflict and concerned that the continuation of the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Cognizant of the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the context of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining the importance which it attaches to the international, regional and non-governmental organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, continuing to provide humanitarian and other relief assistance to the people of Somalia under difficult circumstances,

Expressing its appreciation to the regional organizations, including the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, for their cooperation with the United Nations in the effort to resolve the Somali problem,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 April 1992;

2. Decides to establish under its authority, and in support of the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 7 below, a United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM);

3. Requests the Secretary-General immediately to deploy a unit of 50 United Nations Observers to monitor the cease-fire in Mogadishu in accordance with paragraphs 24 to 26 of the Secretary-General's report;

4. Agrees, in principle, also to establish under the overall direction of the Secretary-General's Special Representative a United Nations security force to be deployed as soon as possible to perform the functions described in paragraphs 27-29 of the Secretary-General's report;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the parties in Mogadishu regarding the proposed United Nations security force and, in light of those consultations, to submit his further recommendations to the Security Council for its decision as soon as possible;

6. Welcomes the intention expressed by the Secretary-General in paragraph 64 of his report to appoint a Special Representative for Somalia to provide overall direction of United Nations activities in Somalia and to assist him in his endeavours to reach a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Somalia;

7. Requests the Secretary-General as part of his continuing mission in Somalia to facilitate an immediate and effective cessation of hostilities and the maintenance of a cease-fire throughout the country in order to promote the process of reconciliation and political settlement in Somalia and to provide urgent humanitarian assistance;

8. welcomes the cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of the Islamic Conference in resolving the problem in Somalia;

9. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia immediately to cease hostilities and to maintain a cease-fire throughout the country in order to promote the process of reconciliation and political settlement in Somalia;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue as a matter of priority his consultations with all Somali parties, movements and factions towards the convening of a conference on national reconciliation and unity in

Somalia in close cooperation with the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

11. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations;

(a) to seek from all States information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the embargo imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992);

(b) to consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the embargo, and in that context to make recommendations to the Council on ways of increasing the effectiveness of the embargo;

(c) to recommend appropriate measures in response to violations of the general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia and provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

12. Notes with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to ensure delivery of humanitarian assistance to Somalia, particularly to Mogadishu;

13. Calls upon the international community to support, with financial and other resources, the implementation of the 90-day Plan of Action for Emergency Humanitarian Assistance to Somalia;

14. Urges all parties concerned in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia and reiterates its call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of the humanitarian organizations and the guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia;

15. Calls upon all Somali parties, movements and factions to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the implementation of this resolution;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 751(1992)

24 April 1992 Meeting 3069 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23834), orally revised.

By a letter of 24 April,(60) the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Mohammed Sahnoun (Algeria) as his Special Representative for Somalia. On 28 April,(61) the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members welcomed his decision.

By a letter of 15 May,(62) Somalia said it was particularly grateful that a Special Representative had been appointed in accordance with the Council's resolution. In an annex, Somalia again put forward suggestions for solving the crisis.

Communication and report of the Secretary-General (June/July). By a letter of 23 June,(63)

the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that both principal factions in Mogadishu had agreed to the immediate deployment of 50 uniformed and unarmed United Nations observers, which the Council had requested in its 24 April resolution. It was anticipated, the Secretary-General said, that an advance party under the command of the Chief Military Observer would arrive in Mogadishu on 5 July, with the other observers due to arrive by 10 July.

On 22 July,⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Council on the activities of his Special Representative, the monitoring of the cease-fire, humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation, national reconciliation efforts and regional activities supporting them, as well as the status of the arms embargo.

In his concluding observations, he noted that Somalia was fragmented along clan and family lines, without any recognized channels for political action. The activities of independent armed groups, factions and individuals, which possessed an enormous quantity of arms, were possibly the biggest and most serious threat to both the Somalis and the expatriates working for United Nations agencies and NGOs.

The complexity of the situation and its inherent dangers, combined with the almost total absence of central, regional or local government, posed enormous operational difficulties for establishing a large-scale and effective United Nations presence. However, the threat of mass starvation and potential renewal of hostilities required an immediate and comprehensive response. United Nations efforts needed to be enlarged to help bring about an effective cease-fire throughout the country, while at the same time promoting national reconciliation. That would require the establishment of a United Nations presence in all regions, as well as the adoption of an innovative and comprehensive approach dealing with all aspects of the situation-humanitarian relief and recovery, cessation of hostilities and security, the peace process and national reconciliation—in a consolidated framework. To that effect, the Secretary-General proposed the establishment of four operational zones: the north-west (Berbera), the north-east (Bossasso), the central rangelands and Mogadishu, and the south (Kismayo).

As the security situation in Mogadishu continued to be precarious, with widespread looting and banditry and increased attacks on United Nations and NGO personnel, the Secretary-General said he had requested his Special Representative to pursue his consultations for the deployment of a security force there.

Conditions in most of the other regions of Somalia also called for immediate action; therefore, the Secretary-General intended to dispatch a technical team to Somalia to examine the possible monitoring of cease-fire arrangements in parts of the country other than Mogadishu; the possible deployment of military observers in the south-west region on Somalia's border with Kenya; the feasibility of an arms-for-food exchange programme; the need for security forces to escort and protect humanitarian aid activities and personnel in other parts of the country; and a possible role for the United Nations in helping re-establish local police forces.

All political leaders and elders in Somalia requested United Nations assistance in disarming the population and demobilizing the irregular forces. Such a programme had begun in some areas, such as Mogadishu-north and parts of the north-west and the north-east, on the initiative of the local leaders themselves. Some leaders preferred the arms to be destroyed, while others suggested that they be retained for the new regular forces. The Special Representative, with the help of the technical team, was to develop a plan in that regard for application in all four zones. The Secretary-General also considered it important that the international community continue to enforce the arms embargo as provided for in the Council's January resolution.

The conflict in Somalia could be resolved only by the people of Somalia themselves in a process of national reconciliation, the Secretary-General stated. The convening of a conference towards that end called for sustained efforts and demanded patience and understanding of the regional environment. Important progress on that matter had been made during the Special Representative's consultations with Somali leaders and elders, during which alternative venues were discussed.

The Special Representative had already shown that his personal intervention could help defuse potential local crises. Qualified UNOSOM personnel would accordingly be located in each of the zones to assist in mediation and conciliation and in arranging for consultative conferences as needed. In the two months since the establishment of UNOSOM, significant developments had taken place which must be consolidated and built upon, as there was the risk of a renewal of hostilities. The desperate and complex situation in the country required energetic and sustained efforts on the part of the international community to break the cycle of violence and hunger. The new, comprehensive approach described was intended as a catalyst for achieving the vital objective of national reconciliation and the construction of a peaceful, stable and democratic Somalia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 27 July, the Security Council met again to consider the situation in Somalia. The President, with the Council's consent, invited Somalia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 767(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Considering the request by Somalia for the Security Council to consider the situation in Somalia,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, 746(1992) of 17 March 1992 and 751(1992) of 24 April 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia,

Considering the letter of the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council informing him that all the parties in Mogadishu have agreed to the deployment of the fifty military observers, and that the advance party of the observers arrived in Mogadishu on 5 July 1992 and that the rest of the observers arrived in the mission area on 23 July 1992,

Deeply concerned about the availability of arms and ammunition in the hands of civilians and the proliferation of armed banditry throughout Somalia,

Alarmed by the sporadic outbreak of hostilities in several parts of Somalia leading to continued loss of life and destruction of property, and putting at risk the personnel of the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and other international humanitarian organizations, as well as disrupting their operations,

Deeply disturbed by the magnitude of the human suffering caused by the conflict and concerned that the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Gravely alarmed by the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Somalia and underlining the urgent need for quick delivery of humanitarian assistance in the whole country,

Recognizing that the provision of humanitarian assistance in Somalia is an important element in the effort of the Council to restore international peace and security in the area,

Responding to the urgent calls by the parties in Somalia for the international community to take measures in Somalia to ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance in Somalia,

Noting the Secretary-General's proposals for a comprehensive decentralized zonal approach in the United Nations involvement in Somalia,

Cognizant that the success of such an approach requires the cooperation of all parties, movements and factions in Somalia,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 July 1992;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make full use of all available means and arrangements, including the mounting of an urgent airlift operation, with a view to facilitating the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations in accelerating the provision of humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia, threatened by mass starvation;

3. Urges all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia and reiterates its call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of the humanitarian organizations and the guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia;

4. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to cooperate with the United Nations with a view to the urgent deployment of the United Nations security personnel called for in paragraphs 4 and 5 of its resolution 751(1992), and otherwise assist in the general stabilization of the situation in Somalia. In the absence of such cooperation, the Security Council does not exclude other measures to deliver humanitarian assistance to Somalia;

5. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to provide adequate financial and other resources for humanitarian efforts in Somalia;

6. Encourages the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, to ensure delivery of humanitarian assistance to all regions of Somalia;

7. Appeals to all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to extend full cooperation to the military observers and to take measures to ensure their security;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, as part of his continuing efforts in Somalia, to promote an immediate and effective cessation of hostilities and the maintenance of a cease-fire throughout the country in order to facilitate the urgent delivery of humanitarian assistance and the process of reconciliation and political settlement in Somalia;

9. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia immediately to cease hostilities and to maintain a cease-fire throughout the country;

10. Stresses the need for the observance and strict monitoring of the general and complete embargo of all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia, as decided in paragraph 5 of its resolution 733(1992);

11. Welcomes the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference in resolving the situation in Somalia;

12. Approves the Secretary-General's proposal to establish four operational zones in Somalia as part of the consolidated United Nations Operation in Somalia;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that his Special Representative for Somalia is provided with all the necessary support services to enable him to effectively carry out his mandate;

14. Strongly supports the Secretary-General's decision urgently to dispatch a technical team to Somalia, under the overall direction of the Special Representative, in order to work within the framework and objectives outlined in paragraph 64 of his report and to submit expeditiously a report to the Security Council on this matter;

15. Affirms that all officials of the United Nations and all experts on mission for the United Nations in Somalia enjoy the privileges and immunities provided for in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 1946 and in any other relevant instruments and that all parties, movements and factions in Somalia are required to allow them full freedom of movement and all necessary facilities;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue urgently his consultations with all parties, movements and factions in Somalia towards the convening of a conference on national reconciliation and unity in Somalia in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

17. calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the implementation of this resolution;

18. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 767(1992)

27 July 1992 Meeting 3101 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24347), orally revised.

On 12 August,(65) the Secretary-General reported to the Council that the two principal factions in Mogadishu had agreed to the deployment of a 500-strong United Nations security force in the Somali capital as part of UNOSOM; he intended to deploy the force as soon as possible. By a letter of 14 August,(66) the Council President informed the Secretary-General of the Council's agreement to the deployment.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). In an August report,(67) the Secretary-General described the steps planned or taken to mitigate the widespread starvation in the areas of Somalia most seriously affected by internal strife and drought. The report was based on the findings of a technical team led by Peter Hansen, former Assistant Secretary-General of the United Nations, which had visited various places in Somalia from 6 to 15 August, meeting with leaders and representatives of various factions and movements, as well as with elders. The team leader also held consultations with Kenyan authorities on issues of particular concern to them.

According to the report, United Nations agencies and ICRC, as well as NGOs, continued implementing the 90-day plan submitted in April (see above) and to extend their humanitarian activities. Since March, a joint World Food Programme (WFP)/United Nations Children's Fund airlift had transported over 1,300 metric tons of supplementary foods and medical supplies from Nairobi to Mogadishu, Kismayo, Boroma and Baidoa. Since the beginning of the year, WFP had delivered 36,500 metric tons of food, mainly to Mogadishu, while ICRC had delivered 83,000 metric tons to various parts of the country. Bilateral donors, such as France and Saudi Arabia, also shipped food and other assistance.

The delivery of humanitarian assistance, however, was fraught with difficulties because of the vicious cycle of insecurity and hunger. Lack of security prevented the delivery of food, while food shortages contributed significantly to violence and insecurity. The crisis was further compounded by drought in the south and the devastation of agriculture, livestock and fisheries by the civil war.

To break the cycle of violence and food insecurity, the Secretary-General proposed a comprehensive programme of action covering humanitarian relief, cessation of hostilities, reduction of violence and national reconciliation. He reiterated the belief that "food for arms" could be an important component of efforts to improve security conditions through a disarmament and demobilization programme. The programme of action would have to include educational and vocational training and its basic thrust must be to provide alternatives for survival other than possession of arms. Equal consideration must be given to the reintegration of militia forces into society.

A stronger United Nations role in securing access, transport and distribution of relief supplies must be paralleled by an effort to involve Somali entities fully in all aspects of the process, the Secretary-General stressed. He suggested that air-lift operations be substantially expanded and primarily directed to central and southern Somalia. He further proposed an emergency relief programme to halt massive displacements and refugee flows caused by the civil war and starvation. A particularly serious situation existed along the Kenyan border, where some 280,000 Somali refugees were located, with 2,000 more arriving daily. The "preventive zone" concept reflected in an updated consolidated inter-agency appeal of 15 July needed to be put into effect immediately and UNHCR was ready to take the lead in that matter. The first phase of the programme would be the establishment of an operation to deliver food and seeds from Kenya to a preventive zone on the Somali side of the border. The programme was intended to reduce significantly cross-border movements of people in search of food and to contribute to a decrease in friction that was growing in the border area.

The Secretary-General noted that the main problem was not the delivery of humanitarian relief supplies to Somali ports and airports but the protection of the transport convoys. The technical team confirmed the Secretary-General's earlier recommendation that such protection should be provided by United Nations security personnel. An agreement for the earliest possible deployment in Mogadishu of a 500-strong security force had been reached on 12 August, and a similar agreement was obtained for the deployment of security units in two other parts of the country.

The technical team also evaluated the possible extension of UNOSOM's cease-fire activities at Mogadishu to other parts of Somalia. The Secretary-General reported that the 50 military observers who completed their deployment in Mogadishu on 23 July were able to play a valuable role in helping both sides there maintain the cease-fire. On 2 August, UNOSOM was able to arrange the first meeting of a joint cease-fire monitoring committee, chaired by the Chief Military Observer.

The Secretary-General recommended the deployment of four additional United Nations security units, each with a strength of up to 750, for the protection of the humanitarian convoys and distribution centres throughout Somalia. He reiterated an earlier proposal that UNOSOM establish four operational zones to cover all parts of the country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August and October)

On 28 August, the Security Council met to consider the Secretary-General's report. Somalia was invited to participate without the right to vote. The Council unanimously adopted resolution 775(1992).

The Security Council,

Considering the request by Somalia for the Security Council to consider the situation in Somalia,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, 746(1992) of 17 March 1992, 751(1992) of 24 April 1992 and 767(1992) of 27 July 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia,

Deeply concerned about the availability of arms and ammunition and the proliferation of armed banditry throughout Somalia,

Alarmed by the continued sporadic outbreak of hostilities in several parts of Somalia leading to continued loss of life and destruction of property, and putting at risk the personnel of the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and other international humanitarian organizations, as well as disrupting their operations,

Deeply disturbed by the magnitude of the human suffering caused by the conflict and concerned that the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Gravely alarmed by the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Somalia and underlining the urgent need for quick delivery of humanitarian assistance in the whole country,

Reaffirming that the provision of humanitarian assistance in Somalia is an important element in the effort of the Council to restore international peace and security in the area,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts by the United Nations organizations as well as the International Committee of the Red Cross, non-governmental organizations and States to provide humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia,

Welcoming in particular the initiatives to provide relief through airlift operations,

Convinced that no durable progress will be achieved in the absence of an overall political solution in Somalia,

Taking note in particular of paragraph 24 of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 24 August 1992 on the findings of the technical team and the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained therein;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to establish four zone headquarters as proposed in paragraph 31 of the Secretary-General's report;

3. Authorizes the increase in strength of the United Nations Operation in Somalia and the subsequent deployment as recommended in paragraph 37 of the Secretary-General's report;

4. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to increase substantially the airlift operation to areas of priority attention;

5. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to cooperate with the United Nations with a view to the urgent deployment of the United Nations security personnel called for in paragraphs 4 and 5 of its resolution 751(1992) and as recommended in paragraph 37 of the Secretary-General's report;

6. Welcomes also the material and logistical support from a number of States and urges that the airlift operation be effectively coordinated by the United Nations as described in paragraphs 17 to 21 of the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Urges all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia and reiterates its call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of these organizations and the guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia;

8. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to provide adequate financial and other resources for humanitarian efforts in Somalia;

9. Encourages ongoing efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations including the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to ensure delivery of humanitarian assistance to all regions of Somalia and underlines the importance of coordination between these efforts;

10. Requests also the Secretary-General to continue, in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, his efforts to seek a comprehensive political solution to the crisis in Somalia;

11. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia immediately to cease hostilities and to maintain a cease-fire throughout the country;

12. Stresses the need for the observance and strict monitoring of the general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia, as decided in paragraph 5 of its resolution 733(1992);

13. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the implementation of this resolution;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 775(1992)

28 August 1992 Meeting 3110 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24497), orally corrected.

Following consultations on 16 October, the President, on behalf of the Council members, made a statement to the media:(68)

"The Security Council heard today a communication from Mr. Sahnoun, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Somalia. On this occasion, the members of the Security Council reiterated their full support for the action of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative. They also expressed the wish that the appeal recently made in Geneva for an increase in the humanitarian assistance to Somalia should be heeded.

"The members of the Council expressed their deep concern over the information communicated to them by Mr. Sahnoun, particularly regarding the difficulties he is encountering in the delivery of humanitarian assistance. In this regard, the rapid deployment of UNOSOM personnel is essential. The members of the Council consider that persons hampering the deployment of UNOSOM would be responsible for aggravating an already unprecedented humanitarian disaster."

Communications (November). With the situation in Somalia deteriorating by the day, the Secretary-General outlined in a 24 November letter to the Council⁽⁶⁹⁾ the difficulties UNOSOM faced in implementing its mandate, such as the absence of a government or governing authority capable of maintaining law and order; the failure of the various factions to cooperate with UNOSOM; the extortion of large sums of cash from donor agencies and organizations to allow them to operate; the hijacking of vehicles, looting of relief convoys and warehouses; and the detention of expatriate personnel.

Unless problems relating to security and protection of relief supplies were effectively addressed, United Nations agencies and NGOs would not be able to provide the relief assistance urgently needed. The Secretary-General stated that he was giving urgent consideration to that state of affairs and did not exclude the possibility that it might become necessary to review the basic premises and principles of the United Nations effort in Somalia.

The Security Council members discussed the letter during informal consultations on 25 November. They expressed the view that the situation was intolerable and voiced doubts as to whether the methods employed by the United Nations would be capable of bringing the situation under control. Strong support was expressed for the Secretary-General's view that the time had come to move into Chapter VII of the Charter. The Council members therefore welcomed the Secretary-General's reference to a re-examination of basic premises and principles and asked him to come forward with specific recommendations on how the United Nations could remedy the situation.

On 29 November,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Secretary-General outlined five options for creating the conditions for uninterrupted delivery of supplies. The first was to continue and intensify efforts to deploy UNOSOM in accordance with its existing mandate, under which force was to be used only in self-defence. Without any central authority with which UNOSOM could effectively negotiate, however, continuation of the current course would be an inadequate response. Under the second option, the use of international military personnel would be abandoned and humanitarian agencies would negotiate arrangements with the various factions and clan leaders for distribution of relief assistance; the experience of recent months, when agencies without military protection had felt obliged to pay protection money to the various factions and clans, showed that this could lead to less and less aid reaching vulnerable groups and lawless trading in aid could become the foundation of Somalia's economy.

The third option would be for UNOSOM to mount a show of force to discourage attacks on relief efforts, which would be a major military undertaking and give rise to difficult questions with regard to organization, command and control. The fourth option was a country-wide enforcement operation by a group of Member States under the authority of the Security Council. In that context, the Secretary-General noted an offer by the United States to organize and lead such an operation. The fifth option was country-wide enforcement action under United Nations command and control, along the lines of peace-keeping operations, or some other arrangement on which the Council might decide.

In view of the prevailing situation, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council take a very early decision to adjust its approach to the crisis; the Council's focus should be on creating conditions in which relief supplies could be delivered to those in need. Experience showed that that could not be achieved by a United Nations operation based on the accepted principles of peace-keeping.

The Secretary-General concluded that there was no alternative but to resort to the enforcement provisions under Chapter VII of the Charter, with parallel action to promote national reconciliation in order to remove the main factors that created the human emergency. Such forceful action should preferably be under United Nations command and control; if that was not feasible, an alternative would be an operation undertaken by Member States with Security Council authorization. In either case, the objectives of the operation must be precisely defined and limited in time, in order to prepare the way for a return to peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building.

Canada and Pakistan, by letters of 27 November⁽⁷¹⁾ and 3 December,⁽⁷²⁾ respectively, voiced their expectation that as troop contributors they would be consulted by the Council and the Secretariat on any measures that might affect UNOSOM's mandate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 3 December, the Security Council met to consider the deteriorating situation in Somalia. As at previous meetings, the President invited Somalia to participate without the right to vote.

The Council adopted resolution 794(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,
Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, 746(1992) of 17 March 1992, 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, 767(1992) of 27 July 1992 and 775(1992) of 28 August 1992,

Recognizing the unique character of the present situation in Somalia and mindful of its deteriorating, complex and extraordinary nature, requiring an immediate and exceptional response,

Determining that the magnitude of the human tragedy caused by the conflict in Somalia, further exacerbated by the obstacles being created to the distribution of humanitarian assistance, constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Gravely alarmed by the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Somalia and underlining the urgent need for the quick delivery of humanitarian assistance in the whole country,

Noting the efforts of the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity, and in particular the proposal made by its Chairman at the forty-seventh regular session of the General Assembly for the organization of an international conference on Somalia, and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and other regional agencies and arrangements to promote reconciliation and political settlement in Somalia and to address the humanitarian needs of the people of that country,

Commending the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations and of non-governmental organizations and of States to ensure delivery of humanitarian assistance in Somalia,

Responding to the urgent calls from Somalia for the international community to take measures to ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance in Somalia,

Expressing grave alarm at continuing reports of widespread violations of international humanitarian law occurring in Somalia, including reports of violence and threats of violence against personnel participating lawfully in impartial humanitarian relief activities; deliberate attacks on non-combatants, relief consignments and vehicles, and medical and relief facilities; and impeding the delivery of food and medical supplies essential for the survival of the civilian population,

Dismayed by the continuation of conditions that impede the delivery of humanitarian supplies to destinations within Somalia, and in particular reports of looting of relief supplies destined for starving people, attacks on aircraft and ships bringing in humanitarian relief supplies, and attacks on the Pakistani UNOSOM contingent in Mogadishu,

Taking note with appreciation of the letters of the Secretary-General of 24 November 1992 and of 29 November 1992,

Sharing the Secretary-General's assessment that the situation in Somalia is intolerable and that it has become necessary to review the basic premises and principles of the United Nations effort in Somalia, and that UNOSOM's existing course would not in present circumstances be an adequate response to the tragedy in Somalia,

Determined to establish as soon as possible the necessary conditions for the delivery of humanitarian assistance wherever needed in Somalia, in conformity with resolutions 751(1992) and 767(1992),

Noting the offer by Member States aimed at establishing a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia as soon as possible,

Determined further to restore peace, stability and law and order with a view to facilitating the process of a political settlement under the auspices of the United Nations, aimed at national reconciliation in Somalia, and encouraging the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue and intensify their work at the national and regional levels to promote these objectives,

Recognizing that the people of Somalia bear ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation and the reconstruction of their own country,

1. Reaffirms its demand that all parties, movements and factions in Somalia immediately cease hostilities, maintain a cease-fire throughout the country, and cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General as well as with the military forces to be established pursuant to the authorization given in paragraph 10 below in order to promote the process of relief distribution, reconciliation and political settlement in Somalia;

2. Demands that all parties, movements and factions in Somalia take all measures necessary to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia;

3. Also demands that all parties, movements and factions in Somalia take all measures necessary to ensure the safety of United Nations and all other personnel engaged in the delivery of humanitarian assistance, including the military forces to be established pursuant to the authorization given in paragraph 10 below;

4. Further demands that all parties, movements and factions in Somalia immediately cease and desist from all breaches of international humanitarian law including from actions such as those described above;

5. Strongly condemns all violations of international humanitarian law occurring in Somalia, including in particular the deliberate impeding of the delivery of food and medical supplies essential for the survival of the civilian population, and affirms that those who commit or order the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

6. Decides that the operations and the further deployment of the 3,500 personnel of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM) authorized by paragraph 3 of resolution 775(1992) should proceed at the discretion of the Secretary-General in the light of his assessment of conditions on the ground; and requests him to keep the Council informed and to make such recommendations as may be appropriate for the fulfilment of its mandate where conditions permit;

7. Endorses the recommendation by the Secretary-General in his letter of 29 November 1992 that action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations should be taken in order to establish a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia as soon as possible:

8. Welcomes the offer by a Member State described in the Secretary-General's letter to the Council of 29 November 1992 concerning the establishment of an operation to create such a secure environment;

9. Welcomes also offers by other Member States to participate in that operation;

10. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, authorises the Secretary-General and Member States cooperating to implement the offer referred to in paragraph 8 above to use all necessary means to establish as soon as possible a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia;

11. Calls on all Member States which are in a position to do so to provide military forces and to make additional contributions, in cash or in kind, in accordance with paragraph 10 above and requests the Secretary-General to establish a fund through which the contributions, where appropriate, could be channelled to the States or operations concerned;

12. Authorizes the Secretary-General and the Member States concerned to make the necessary arrangements for the unified command and control of the forces involved, which will reflect the offer referred to in paragraph 8 above;

13. Requests the Secretary-General and the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above to establish appropriate mechanisms for coordination between the United Nations and their military forces;

14. Decides to appoint an ad hoc commission composed of members of the Security Council to report to the Council on the implementation of this resolution;

15. Invites the Secretary-General to attach a small UNOSOM liaison staff to the Field Headquarters of the unified command;

16. Acting under Chapters VII and VIII of the Charter, calls upon States, nationally or through regional agencies or arrangements, to use such measures as may be necessary to ensure strict implementation of paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992);

17. Requests all States, in particular those in the region, to provide appropriate support for the actions undertaken by States, nationally or through regional agencies or arrangements, pursuant to this and other relevant resolutions;

18. Requests the Secretary-General and, as appropriate, the States concerned to report to the Council on a regular basis, the first such report to be made no later than fifteen days after the adoption of this resolution, on the implementation of this resolution and the attainment of the objective of establishing a secure environment so as to enable the Council to make the necessary decision for a prompt transition to continued peacekeeping operations;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a plan to the Council initially within fifteen days after the adoption of this resolution to ensure that UNOSOM will be able to fulfil its mandate upon the withdrawal of the unified command;

20. Invites the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue their efforts to achieve a political settlement in Somalia;

21. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 794(1992)

3 December 1992 Meeting 3145 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24880).

Further developments. In response to the Council resolution of 3 December, the President of the United States directed the execution of Operation Restore Hope on 4 December. The United States central command was given the mission of conducting joint and combined military operations in Somalia, under United Nations auspices, to secure major airports and seaports, key installations and food distribution points, to provide open passage of relief supplies and security for convoys, and to assist the United Nations and NGOs in providing humanitarian relief.

The first elements of the Unified Task Force (UNITAF), led by United States marines, arrived at Mogadishu on 9 December. United States forces were to number eventually 28,000, augmented by over 17,000 troops from 20 other countries. A report on Operation Restore Hope was annexed to a 17 December letter from the United States to the Security Council President.(73)

Phase I of Operation Restore Hope was completed on 16 December, with the airfield and port facilities at Mogadishu and the airfields at Baidoa and Bale Dogle secured. Phase II was completed on 28 December with the securing of all eight major relief centres, including Bardera, Belet Weyne, Gialalassi, Kismayo and Oddur. On 31 December, United States and Italian forces secured the coastal city of Marka. Coalition forces continued to expand security operations in Mogadishu and the other major relief centres.(74)

Parallel with the establishment of a secure environment, efforts to achieve a political settlement continued, the Secretary-General reported on 19 December to the Security Council.(75) Accordingly, he invited 12 political Somali movements to participate in an informal preparatory meeting for a conference on national reconciliation, to be held at Addis Ababa in January 1993. In order to create conditions for the process of national reconciliation, the Secretary-General considered it necessary to establish or consolidate agreements with the leaders of all the organized factions for effective cease-fires; those agreements were to include provisions for the concentration of all the heavy weapons at designated locations, where they could be brought under international control, exercised initially by UNITAF and thereafter by UNOSOM. In that context, he noted that the leaders of the two principal factions in Mogadishu had recently agreed to a new cease-fire and to the concentration of their weapons. In addition, the Secretary-General felt it was necessary to disarm the lawless gangs that had been the principal threat to humanitarian operations.

During discussions with United States authorities, it was suggested that the mandate of UNOSOM be enlarged in conceptual and other terms, once UNOSOM took over from UNITAF, and that it cover the whole territory of Somalia. The United States envisaged that the mandate, concept of operations, level of armament and rules of engagement of the new UNOSOM would be little different from those of UNITAF; that approach of a peace-enforcement operation, the first such operation under United Nations command, would require, in the Secretary-General's view, a further decision by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and would be analogous to the fifth option for which he had expressed preference in his 29 November letter (see above).

The question that would have to be addressed was whether such an operation would be feasible and how many Member States would be ready to participate in it. Progress in the peace process had to be taken into account in deciding how and when UNITAF should be replaced by a new UNOSOM. Another consideration was the fact that the international community faced a long haul in helping the Somali people to put their country on its feet again. To that effect, an integrated approach containing all the elements of post-conflict peace-building was needed, such as restoration of security, political reconciliation, re-creation of institutions, return of refugees, rehabilitation and reconstruction.

For all those reasons, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council defer a decision until the situation on the ground became clearer.

On 23 December,(76) Somalia expressed support for the Secretary-General's request to the Council to defer any new decisions until he had obtained the views of all factions. It encouraged his efforts to continue translating his conceptual framework into concrete plans for presentation to the Somali factions in the near future, perhaps during the informal meeting scheduled for January 1993. Among other measures, it suggested that the Council mandate the Secretary-General to put together an international peace-keeping force, under United Nations command, with the capacity to enforce peace, and that the United States ensure that the United Nations eventually took over responsibility from the Unified Military Command. It further appealed to Member States to provide resources for a successful transition and national reconciliation process.

Somalia stressed that international presence and assistance should be available to all parts of Somalia. Speedy implementation of programmes to rehabilitate basic social and economic services and basic infrastructure, restore local civil administration, resettle displaced persons and repatriate refugees could be a catalyst for peace and stability that would minimize the need for forceful measures.

Composition of UNOSOM

By a letter of 22 June,(77) the Secretary-General proposed that the military elements of UNOSOM be composed of contingents from Austria, Bangladesh, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Fiji, Finland, Indonesia, Jordan, Morocco and Zimbabwe. On 25 June,(78) the President of the Security Council reported that Council members agreed with the proposal.

On 23 June,(79) the Secretary-General proposed that Brigadier-General Imtiaz Shaheen (Pakistan) be appointed as Chief Military Observer of UNOSOM.

In pursuance of resolution 775(1992) of 28 August, by which the Security Council authorized an increase in the strength of UNOSOM, the Secretary-General undertook consultations with Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Germany, Nigeria, Sweden and Switzerland. By a letter of 1 September,(80) he sought the Council's approval of the list of prospective troop contributors. The Council gave its approval on 8 September.(81).

Also on 1 September,(82) the Secretary-General requested the Council to authorize an increase in UNOSOM strength to cover the logistic support units; consequently, the total strength of UNOSOM should be 4,219 all ranks (3,500 security personnel, including the unit of 500 already authorized for Mogadishu, and 719 for the logistic units). The Council members expressed their agreement in a letter of 8 September.(83)

On 21 October,(84) the Secretary-General informed the Council that, of the countries listed in his 1 September letter, Belgium, Canada and Egypt each pledged to provide one battalion to UNOSOM and Australia agreed to provide personnel for the logistical unit. As Norway and New Zealand had also offered logistic personnel, the Secretary-General sought the Council's agreement that they be added to the list of troop contributors. On 26 October,(85) the Council President conveyed to the Secretary-General the Council members' agreement.

On 19 November,(86) the Secretary-General requested the addition of Ireland to the list of troop-contributing countries. The Council gave its consent on 24 November.(87)

On 1 December,(88) Egypt stated its agreement to participate in UNOSOM.

Financing of UNOSOM

Initial commitments

In order to provide for the immediate requirements for the deployment of 50 United Nations observers, requested by Security Council resolution 751(1992) of 24 April, the Chairman of ACABQ informed the Secretary-General, by a letter of 20 May, that ACABQ concurred with his proposal to enter into commitments for UNOSOM of up to $7,410,000 under the terms of a 1991 General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1992-1993,⁽²³⁾ until an appropriation for UNOSOM was made available by the Assembly. That amount included the cost of the March 1992 technical survey mission. Resources from the Trust Fund in Support of United Nations Peacemaking and Peace-keeping Activities were utilized, to the extent possible, to meet UNOSOM's cash flow requirements.

By a letter of 14 September, ACABQ further concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal to enter into additional commitments of $10 million under the terms of the 1991 Assembly resolution, in order to provide for the most urgent requirements of UNOSOM, following the Security Council's authorization of an increase in troop strength to 4,219, all ranks. As a result, $17,410,000 was thus authorized.

Cost estimates of UNOSOM

In a November report,⁽⁸⁹⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the total cost of UNOSOM for the period 1 May 1992 to 31 October 1993, including the pre-implementation phase, at $208,122,700 gross ($204,585,700 net). Details of expenditure were contained in annexes to the report. The Secretary-General also outlined the operational plan for UNOSOM. He appealed to Member States to make advances, on a voluntary basis, to meet the initial expenses of UNOSOM, pending formal action by the General Assembly. He noted that the Government of the United States had offered to airlift military personnel, as a voluntary contribution-in-kind.

ACABQ, also in November,⁽⁹⁰⁾ recommended appropriation of $6,953,100 gross ($6,741,600 net) for the six months from 1 May to 31 October 1992 and $102,698,900 gross ($101,171,200 net) for the period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993, adding that commitment authorization and appropriation for the period after 30 April 1993 should be subject to action by the Security Council concerning a continuation of UNOSOM's mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 September,⁽⁹¹⁾ the Secretary-General requested inclusion in the agenda of the 1992 regular session of the General Assembly an additional item on the financing of UNOSOM.

On 1 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/41 A without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, by which the Council, inter alia, decided to establish under its authority a United Nations Operation in Somalia, requested the Secretary-General to deploy military observers to monitor the cease-fire in Mogadishu and agreed, in principle, to the deployment of a United Nations security force under the overall direction of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to provide security and to escort deliveries of humanitarian supplies,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 767(1992) of 27 July 1992, by which the Council, inter alia, approved the establishment of four operational zones in Somalia as part of the consolidated Operation in Somalia and Council resolution 775(1992) of 28 August 1992, by which the Council, inter alia, authorized the increase in the strength of the Operation in Somalia,

Recognizing that the costs of the Operation in Somalia are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Operation in Somalia, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Operation in Somalia with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to establish firm internal control on all financial transactions, including detailed and up-to-date recording and close monitoring by certifying officers and supervisory staff in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 38 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Operation in Somalia in full and on time;

4. Affirms that it is important that the question of the duration of the mandate of the Operation in Somalia should be resolved as soon as possible;

5. Notes, in this context, the intention of the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Security Council on the situation in Somalia within the next six months;

6. Decides, at this stage, to appropriate, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 42 of the report of the Advisory Committee, a total amount of 109,652,000 United States dollars gross (107,912,800 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 17,410,000 dollars authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, for the period from 1 May 1992 to 30 April 1993, and requests the Secretary-

General to establish a Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Somalia in accordance with paragraph 23 of his report;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 6,953,100 dollars gross (6,741,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1992 and the amount of 102,698,900 dollars gross (101,171,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 211,500 dollars for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1992 and 1,527,700 dollars for the period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993 approved for the Operation in Somalia;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Operation in Somalia, if necessary and pending the appropriation by the General Assembly, at a rate not to exceed 14 million dollars gross (13.7 million dollars net) per month for the initial months beginning 1 May 1993, should the Security Council decide to continue the operation beyond 30 April 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for the period beyond 30 April 1993, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

10. Decides to consider the contributions of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to the Operation in Somalia in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-seventh session;

11. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 10 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Operation in Somalia in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Request the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Operation in Somalia are administered under the authority of his Special Representative in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandates, and to include in his report on the financial performance of the Operation in Somalia information on the arrangement made in this regard;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia".

General Assembly resolution 47/41

1 December 1992 Meeting 76 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/734) without vote, 27 November (meeting 33); draft by Netherlands (A/C.5/47/L.3); agenda item 145. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 31, 33; plenary 76.

Humanitarian assistance

In order to accelerate relief efforts and pave the way for eventual recovery of the Somali society, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs in September led a high-level inter-agency mission to the country. A major outcome of the mission was the drafting of a 100-day Action Programme for Accelerated Humanitarian Assistance for the period ending December 1992. Its eight components included massive infusion of food aid (some 50,000 tons per month), provision of basic health services, clean water, sanitation and shelter materials, prevention of further refugee flows and civil society rehabilitation. Funding requirements were estimated at $82.7 million.

The Programme was reviewed twice, at the first (Geneva, 12 and 13 October) and second (Addis Ababa, 3-5 December) United Nations coordination meetings on humanitarian assistance to Somalia. The latter, in its final conclusions, noted that the Programme had failed to generate sufficient resources. It proposed that food be monetarized to stimulate the economy and encourage local production. Emphasis was laid on resettling displaced farmer families and on a massive rehabilitation programme, including accelerated mine clearing. One of the conclusions of the meeting was that the 100-day Programme should be followed by a new plan for 1993, and a third meeting was planned for early that year.

(For details of humanitarian and emergency assistance to Somalia, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Proposed international conference on Somalia

By a letter of 10 December 1992,(92) Senegal requested inclusion in the General Assembly's agenda of an additional item on the convening of an international conference on Somalia. An aide-mémoire annexed to the letter stated that the proposal for such a conference had been made on 30 September by the Senegalese President, as Chairman of OAU, during the general debate of the Assembly. The proposal had been welcomed by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of OIC during their special session (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 1 and 2 December), as well as by most regional groups and by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries' working group on Somalia. The conference should fall within the framework of the action currently being undertaken by the Security Council, the Secretary-General and humanitarian organizations; it could provide, subsequent to the initial stages defined by the Council and the Secretary-

General, an appropriate framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Somali crisis.

Supporting Senegal's request, Morocco transmitted on 14 December(93) a draft resolution adopted by the Group of African States on the convening of a conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/167 without vote.

Convening of an international conference on Somalia
The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the tragic situation in Somalia,

Taking into account the statement made in the General Assembly by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on 30 September 1992 and especially his proposal to convene an international conference on Somalia,

Taking note of relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 794(1992) of 3 December 1992,

Taking note also of the outcome of the Second Coordination Meeting on Somalia, held at Addis Ababa from 3 to 5 December 1992,

Realizing that lasting peace, stability and unity in the country can be achieved through a process of national reconciliation culminating in a final, comprehensive, politically negotiated settlement among all the political entities and segments of the Somali people,

Deeply convinced that a final negotiated settlement of the Somali conflict is an ultimate responsibility of the Somalis themselves,

Recognizing that the idea of convening an international conference on Somalia has gained widespread acceptance and is viewed as part of the important initiatives currently being undertaken by the Secretary-General, the Security Council and the international community to contribute to creating the conditions necessary for national reconciliation, peace and stability and for reconstruction of the national economy of Somalia,

Welcoming in this regard the efforts being exerted by the Security Council, the Secretary-General and the international community,

Welcoming also the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the League of Arab States, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Standing Committee of the States of the Horn of Africa on Somalia,

Stressing the need to coordinate the efforts being made by the international community towards the restoration of national unity and peace and the reconstruction of the national economy of Somalia,

1. Affirms the need for a comprehensive and lasting solution to the Somali crisis;

2. welcomes the idea of convening an international peace conference on Somalia under the auspices of the United Nations and in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the League of Arab States, the Standing Committee of the States of the Horn of Africa on Somalia and governmental and non-governmental organizations, which would contribute to the establishment of peace and security in the subregion;

3. Recognizes that the restoration of much-needed peace and stability in Somalia must be governed, inter alia, by the following considerations: strict observance of a cease-fire, full cooperation with United Nations peace-keeping forces, national reconciliation, assistance for refugees, displaced persons and returnees, a constitution that guarantees democracy, freedom and justice, and free and fair elections;

4. welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the League of Arab States, the Standing Committee of the States of the Horn of Africa on Somalia and with the support of other governmental and non-governmental organizations, aimed at national reconciliation in Somalia, and emphasizes the need to consider the practical modalities for convening an international conference on Somalia as soon as possible;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly during its current session on this matter.

General Assembly resolution 47/167

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity was described by the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(1) in a September

1992 report.(2) In 1991, the Assembly had called on the Secretaries-General of both organizations to work in close cooperation, in particular regarding the follow-up to and review of implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.(3)

The report gave an overview of consultations and exchange of information between the two organizations and of cooperation in the field of economic and social development as well as in other areas.

In order to evaluate progress achieved in implementing the proposals and recommendations for cooperation agreed on in 1990 and 1991, and to adopt new joint action, a meeting was held between organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and OAU (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 2-4 April 1992).

The meeting called for cooperation in popularizing the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community, signed in 1991, by, among other measures, establishing national committees for that purpose, organizing meetings and disseminating the Treaty in African languages with the help of specialized agencies. The meeting also called on the agencies to continue to assist OAU in preparing the protocols of the Economic Community.

With regard to refugees, returnees and displaced persons, the meeting focused on a number of priority issues, including root causes, durable solutions, emergency preparedness and response, collaborative, integrated and coordinated approaches to humanitarian assistance, the humanitarian dimension of the New Agenda and follow-up to the 1988 International Conference on Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa.

The meeting identified human rights abuses, conflicts and adverse socio-economic conditions as the main root causes of the problems of refugees and internally displaced persons in Africa. Special mention was made of Rwanda and Somalia where OAU and the United Nations system had worked closely. The meeting appealed to the United Nations system to provide increased resources to African countries to enable them to cope more effectively with those problems. It urged OAU members to ratify the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, adopted in 1981, as well as the 1969 OAU Convention on Refugees; appealed to those members concerned to adopt legal measures to enable the smooth and safe reintegration of refugees; called for integration of returnee programmes into national development plans; called on OAU and UNHCR to organize seminars to educate the public on the root causes of asylum-seeking on the continent; and urged OAU, UNHCR and others to finalize as soon as possible the plan of action for Rwandese refugees.

The meeting also discussed follow-up and monitoring of implementation of the New Agenda, at the national and international levels. It suggested that OAU participate fully in all meetings of the proposed United Nations inter-agency task force to monitor implementation of a system-wide plan of action for African economic recovery and development and that it be invited to address high-level inter-agency machinery.

The meeting agreed that OAU should continue contacts with various United Nations agencies with a view to reviewing specific sectoral activities and that sectoral meetings should be organized as and when required. It also recommended that the OAU specialized agencies be invited to participate in implementation of New Agenda-related activities.

The meeting noted that OAU could provide political support to United Nations efforts in getting additional resources to be used in activities aimed at African economic recovery and development. It requested OAU to ensure that the New Agenda was placed on the agenda of subsequent meetings between OAU and the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/148 without vote.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its resolutions on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolutions 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988, 44/17 of 1 November 1989, 45/13 of 7 November 1990 and 46/20 of 26 November 1991,

Recalling also the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretaries-General of the two organizations,

Taking note of the resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-sixth ordinary session, held at Dakar from 22 to 28 June 1992, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-eighth ordinary session, held at Dakar from 29 June to 1 July 1992,

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 30 September 1992,

Noting in particular the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts in Africa and the harmonious continuation of the democratization process,

Noting with satisfaction the support and assistance of the United Nations for the democratization process in Africa,

Also noting the efforts of the United Nations to contribute to resolving conflicts in Africa,

Further noting with satisfaction decision AHG/Dec.1 (XXVIII) adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, with a view to setting up machinery for the prevention, settlement and management of conflicts in Africa,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer cooperation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity, in particular in the political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Also mindful of political developments in South Africa and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the people of South Africa and to their national liberation movements in their legitimate struggle to eradicate apartheid, and to the independent States of southern Africa that are victims of the system of apartheid,

Deeply concerned that, despite the policies of reform being implemented by African countries, their economic situation remains critical and African recovery and development continue to be severely hindered by the collapse of commodity prices, the heavy debt burden and the paucity of funding possibilities, as well as by the devastating drought affecting certain regions of the continent,

Considering that the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 did not live up to expectations,

Welcoming the adoption in 1991 of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s while regretting that the machinery for its implementation has not yet begun operating,

Aware of the efforts under way by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and, in particular, the adoption by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on 3 June 1991 at Abuja of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community,

Recalling further that in its resolution 46/20 it, inter alia urged the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support for the establishment of an African economic community,

Deeply concerned about the gravity of the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help refugees and, subsequently, African countries of asylum,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen that cooperation and to implement the relevant resolutions;

2. Notes with appreciation the increasing and continued participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral cooperation and economic integration among African States and requests United Nations organizations to continue to support those efforts;

4. Requests the United Nations to continue to support the Organization of African Unity in its efforts to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts and peacefully to manage change in Africa;

5. Urges the United Nations to provide cooperation and assistance, as appropriate, to the Organization of African Unity should the latter decide to launch a peace-keeping operation;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to cooperate closely with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity on the question of decolonization;

7. Reiterates the determination of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, to continue its efforts for the early eradication of racial discrimination and apartheid, taking into consideration the democratic process emerging in South Africa, and to provide the appropriate assistance to that end;

8. Calls upon the United Nations organs—in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid—to continue to involve the Organization of African Unity closely in all their activities concerning Africa;

9. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide the necessary and appropriate economic, financial and technical assistance to refugees, as well as to African countries of asylum;

10. Notes that the economic, technical and development assistance provided to Africa by the organizations of the United Nations system must continue, and emphasizes the current need for those organizations to accord priority to Africa in this field;

11. Reaffirms that the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s will necessitate the full participation of the international community, in particular of the Governments, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and emphasizes the urgency of the need to adopt appropriate measures to ensure its implementation in accordance with General Assembly decisions;

12. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to work in close coordination and cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, in particular on follow-up to and review and evaluation of the implementation of the New Agenda;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to invite the representative of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to participate in the meetings of all United Nations organizations, commissions, committees and working groups on follow-up to and monitoring and assessment of the New Agenda;

14. Calls upon the Secretary-General to adopt appropriate measures, in consultation with the international organizations and financial institutions concerned, as well as with donor countries, to assist in the mobilization of the resources needed to support the efforts of the African States to implement, at the national and regional levels, Agenda 21 and other relevant decisions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

15. Urges the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to extend their support and cooperation to the member States and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity for the effective organizational arrangement and smooth functioning of the African Economic Community;

16. Also urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide support as appropriate to the establishment of the African Economic Community, and to assist in economic integration and cooperation in Africa, in particular by providing financial and technical assistance to African regional and subregional organizations, as well as to African organizations for drought and desertification control;

17. Notes with appreciation the assistance provided by the United Nations and its organizations to the African countries in the context of the democratization process, as well as in organizing and holding pluralistic, free and fair elections, and encourages the provision, in the future, of such assistance to countries that request it;

18. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to mobilize international support for special programmes of economic assistance to African States facing grave economic difficulties or victims of the policies of apartheid, and requests him to continue to keep the Organization of African Unity informed periodically of measures taken by the United Nations agencies and by the international community to help implement these programmes;

19. Endorses the agreement reached between the organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity on the convening of a meeting between the secretariats of those organizations, to be held in 1993, to review and evaluate the progress made in implementing the proposals and recommendations agreed upon in April 1991 and 1992 on cooperation between them in 1992-1993 and to adopt new and effective joint action;

20. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to support the efforts of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with a view to holding sectoral meetings in the priority areas of cooperation, particularly the establishment of the African Economic Community and the strengthening of the African regional and subregional organizations;

21. requests the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to ensure that the representatives of their secretariats continue to hold regular close consultations, particularly on the follow-up to the present resolution;

22. Culls upon the relevant organs of the United Nations to ensure the effective, fair and equitable representation of Africa at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional field operations;

23. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations information network continues to disseminate information so as to increase public awareness of the situation prevailing in southern Africa, as well as of the social and economic problems and needs of African States and of their regional and subregional institutions;

24. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and organizations of the United Nations system.

Chapter II

Americas

United Nations efforts to help resolve the remaining protracted conflicts in Central America bore fruit in 1992 with respect to El Salvador. A final peace agreement was concluded in January between the Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, the opposition movement in the country, formally bringing the 12-year armed conflict between them to an end in December.

In the light of this development and given the undergirding joint course of action adopted by the Central American States in the Managua Agenda for the progressive transformation of the subregion into one of peace, democracy and development, the Security Council terminated the United Nations Observer Group in Central America. The Council enlarged and extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, however, to enable it to verify compliance with all of the agreements concluded between the parties during their negotiations for a comprehensive settlement of their conflict. It subsequently extended the Mission's mandate a second time, to 31 May 1993.

During the year, the General Assembly adopted several resolutions relating to the Americas. It urged the Governments of Central America to continue their efforts to consolidate a firm and lasting peace in the subregion and reiterated the importance of stepping up the negotiating process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, the opposition movement, on the basis of the Mexico City and Querétaro Agreements of 1991. In a resolution concerning the need to end the economic embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba, the Assembly called for the repeal of laws whose extraterritorial effects affected States' sovereignty and freedom of trade and navigation. It condemned anew the attempted illegal replacement of the constitutional President of Haiti. It requested continued consultations between the United Nations and the Organization of American States with a view to signing a cooperation agreement in 1993.

In a related action, the Assembly sought continued international support for Nicaragua to overcome the aftermath of war and of recent natural disasters in the country, as well as to stimulate reconstruction and development.

Central America situation

The Central American States of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama pressed forward in 1992 with their programme for the consolidation of peace in Central America and for the economic integration and development of the subregion. They held a summit at Managua, Nicaragua, on 4 and 5 June 1992,⁽¹⁾ the twelfth since they first gathered at Esquipulas, Guatemala, in 1986,⁽²⁾ in search of a peaceful resolution of their differences.

The six countries adopted a detailed agenda, referred to as the Managua Agenda, covering a wide range of issues in the political, social and economic domains. A number of them related to the establishment of the Preparatory Commission for the implementation of the Tegucigalpa Protocol, so as to bring into operation the Central American Integration System;⁽³⁾ the renewal of the mandate of the Security Commission, established by the 1990 Security Commission Agreement,⁽⁴⁾ to include a deeper scrutiny into the questions of arms trafficking and confidence-building; the continuance of policies to advance national reconciliation, with emphasis on the role of the national commissions set up for the purpose; and improvement of the democratic institutions and mechanisms for guaranteeing human rights. Also on the Agenda were appeals to the international community in general for increased support for democracy and peace in Central America, and to the European Economic Community in particular for specific assistance in the trade, energy and finance sectors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/118.

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983, 562(1985) of 10 May 1985, 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, 650(1990) of

27 March 1990, 653(1990) of 20 April 1990, 654(1990) of 4 May 1990, 656(1990) of 8 June 1990, 714(1991) of 30 September 1991, 719(1991) of 6 November 1991, 729(1992) of 14 January 1992, 784(1992) of 30 October 1992 and 791(1992) of 30 November 1992, and its resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983, 39/4 of 26 October 1984, 41/37 of 18 November 1986, 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988, 44/10 of 23 October 1989, 44/44 of 7 December 1989, 45/15 of 20 November 1990 and 46/109 of 17 December 1991,

Bearing in mind the importance of the commitments assumed by the Central American Presidents under the agreement signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 at the Esquipulas II summit meeting; the declarations adopted at Alajuela, Costa Rica, on 16 January 1988 and at Costa del Sol, El Salvador, on 14 February 1989; the agreements concluded at Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989, at San Isidro de Coronado, Costa Rica, on 12 December 1989, at Montelimar, Nicaragua, on 3 April 1990, at Antigua, Guatemala, on 17 June 1990, at Puntarenas, Costa Rica, on 17 December 1990, and at Tegucigalpa on 13 December 1991; and the Managua Agenda of 5 June 1992,

Aware that the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, is the outcome of the decision by Central Americans to take up fully the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for Central America,

Convinced of the political will that inspires the peoples of Central America to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and justice, as well as the commitment to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Recognizing the importance of all aspects of the peace-keeping operations that have been carried out in Central America, pursuant to the decisions of the Security Council and with the support of the Secretary-General, and the need to preserve and enhance the results obtained,

Reaffirming the belief that peace is one, undivided and indivisible, and thus inseparable from freedom, democracy and development, and that these goals are essential for consolidating the transformations which will guarantee sustained, participatory and equitable development in Central America, as well as the need to re-define the manner in which the Central American economies are linked to the rest of the world,

Considering that, at the Puntarenas summit meeting, the Presidents declared Central America to be a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and that in the Tegucigalpa Declaration they established the Central American Integration System, the fundamental objective of which is to ensure the integration of Central America and its establishment as a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development,,

Also considering the importance of the decisions concerning human and social development adopted by the Central American Presidents at Tegucigalpa in December 1991, as well as the significance of the Managua Agenda, adopted by the Presidents in Nicaragua in June 1992, when they also evaluated the results of the last eleven summit meetings and adopted a joint course of action for follow-up and consolidation of the agreements concluded,

Further considering the commitments that have been entered into during the negotiations on security, verification, and control and limitation of arms and military personnel, within the Security Commission established under the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, for the purpose of achieving a stable and lasting peace in Central America,

Convinced that the Peace Agreement reached on 16 January 1992 at Mexico City between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional reflects that country's profound aspiration for peace and justice, and that scrupulous compliance therewith will not only permit an end to the armed conflict through political means but also lay the foundation for major political, legal, economic and social changes that must involve all sectors of the country in the consolidation of a democratic and cohesive society,

Noting with satisfaction that both parties have scrupulously observed the cease-fire, overcoming delays and difficulties in the process of implementing the peace agreements in El Salvador, and, through the mediation of the Secretary-General and his representatives, have adopted agreements leading to the final cessation of the armed conflict on 15 December 1992,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador of 23 November 1992,

Convinced of the importance of continued talks between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, under the auspices of the National Reconciliation Commission of Guatemala and in the presence of the Representative of the Secretary-General, in order to end the internal armed confrontation at the earliest opportunity and to bring about national reconciliation, with full respect for the human rights of all Guatemalans,

Emphasizing the importance of the end of the armed conflict in Nicaragua and the need to consolidate peace in that country, as well as the urgent need for the international community and the United Nations system to continue providing Nicaragua with the support required to promote rehabilitation and economic and social reconstruction, for the purpose of strengthening democracy and overcoming the aftermath of the war and the adverse consequences of recent natural disasters,

Recognizing the valuable and effective contribution of the United Nations and of various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms to the process of democratization, pacification and development in Central America, as well as the importance for the progressive transformation of Central America into a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development of both the political dialogue and the economic cooperation set in motion by the Ministerial Conference on Political Dialogue and Economic Cooperation between the European Community and the Central American countries and the joint initiatives of the industrialized countries (Group of Twenty-four) and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three) in Latin America, through a partnership for democracy and development in Central America,

Bearing in mind that there remain in Central America major obstacles to the full exercise of peace, freedom, democracy and development, the final overcoming of which requires a global frame of reference that would enable the international community to focus its support on efforts towards collective affirmation and democratic progress being made by the Central American countries,

1. Commends the effort made by the Central American countries to achieve peace through the implementation of the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987, as well as of the agreements adopted at subsequent summit meetings;

2. Expresses its strongest support for these agreements and urges the Governments to continue their efforts to consolidate firm and lasting peace in Central America, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to consolidate peace, democracy and development;

3. Reaffirm the decision of the Presidents of the Central American countries to declare Central America a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and encourages the initiatives of the Central American countries to consolidate Governments which base their development on democracy, peace, cooperation and strict respect for human rights;

4. Welcomes the agreements reached by the Security Commission of the Central American countries in the creation of a new security model based on coordination, communication and prevention, confidence-building between the States of the region, as well as the progress made on security, verification, and control and limitation of arms and military personnel;

5. Expresses its satisfaction at the steps taken to implement the vital Peace Agreement between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, and at the flexibility shown by both parties in overcoming obstacles and differences and in maintaining the close linkage between the implementation of the various commitments assumed by them, in order to ensure the full and scrupulous implementation of all the agreements;

6. Welcomes with particular satisfaction the holding of the National Reconciliation Ceremony on 15 December 1992, which brought to an end definitively the armed confrontation in El Salvador, and urges all sectors of Salvadorian society to continue to act with the greatest responsibility and spirit of détente and national reconciliation in order to ensure implementation of the commitments still to be fulfilled, thus making it possible to complete successfully the pacification process and develop normal living conditions throughout the country, particularly in the areas most affected by the armed conflict;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the effective and timely mediation of the Secretary-General and his representatives and extends its support to them so that they can continue to take all necessary steps to contribute to the successful implementation of all the peace agreements in El Salvador;

8. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, which make up the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, as well as to the Government of the United States of America, for their constant support and contribution to the efforts to reach the Peace Agreement and implement the commitments which are laid down in it, and urges them to continue to support them until the full implementation of these agreements, which reflect the will and aspirations of the Salvadorian people, is brought about;

9. Reiterates the importance of stepping up the negotiating process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca in order to achieve the goals laid down in the agreements signed at Mexico City on 26 April 1991 and at Querétaro, Mexico, on 25 July 1991, and urges scrupulous implementation of the agreed procedures and progress towards the adoption of commitments on all the issues set forth in the agreements signed at Mexico City, particularly the signing of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights which they have been considering, in order to achieve, in the near future, national reconciliation and a firm and lasting peace with the continued support of the international community and the United Nations; expresses appreciation, likewise, to the Secretary-General and his Representative for the support that they are giving to the negotiating process and encourages them to continue to provide it;

10. Supports the efforts that the Government of Nicaragua is making to consolidate peace and endorses the provision concerning exceptional circumstances so that the international community and funding agencies will provide their support for rehabilitation, economic and social reconstruction and the strengthening of reconciliation and democracy in that country;

11. Stresses the importance that the continuity and outcome of the political dialogue and economic cooperation between the European Community and its member States, the States of Central America and Panama and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three), as well as the initiative of the industrialized countries (Group of Twenty-four), through the Partnership for Democracy and Development in Central America, have for the efforts of the Central American countries to achieve peace and to consolidate democracy and economic development;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and the organizations of the United Nations system to provide, as appropriate and from within existing resources, the necessary technical and financial support to the Central American Governments, and calls upon the international community to increase its support for peace, freedom, democracy and development in Central America by providing resources for their consolidation, so that the region's material limitations do not diminish or reverse the progress made;

13. Reiterates the importance that the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, which the General Assembly welcomed in its resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988, has for the implementation of this resolution, in particular because it provides the underpinning for the implementation of the Central American Economic Plan of Action;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development";

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Observer Group in Central America

Based on a recommendation by the Secretary-General, the Security Council terminated, with effect from 17 January 1992, the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA), established in 1989(5) to verify compliance with the security undertakings agreed upon by live Central American countries in 1987.(6) Its mandate had been last extended in November 1991(7) and review of its operations since then was undertaken by the Secretary-General early in January 1992, in the light of recent positive developments in Central America and in keeping with the widely held view that a given peace-keeping operation should be set up for a specific task and period and then be disbanded.

Report of the Secretary-General. Following his review of ONUCA, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 14 January 1992(8) that the only notable incident in which ONUCA played a role took place on 19 December 1991. When it provided helicopter support to help recover the bodies of nine Honduran military personnel who had died when their helicopter, which had strayed into El Salvador, had been mistaken for an aircraft of that country's armed force and shot down by the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN).

More significantly, major progress had been achieved in the negotiations on a comprehensive settlement of the armed conflict in El Salvador between the Government and FMLN. The parties had concluded further agreements that, together with those concluded earlier, would put a definitive end to the conflict. Having formally recorded this fact in the New York Act of 31 December 1991, the parties were set to sign a final Peace Agreement in Mexico City on 16 January 1992.(9)

In view of these developments, the Secretary-General recommended the termination of ONUCA and proposed redeployment of some of its personnel and equipment to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) by 1 February. In so doing, he paid tribute to the Chief Military Observer, Brigadier-General Victor Suanzes Pardo (Spain), and to all other military and civilian personnel who had served with ONUCA.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 January 1992, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 730(1992).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 719(1991) of 6 November 1991,

Recalling also its resolution 729(1992) of 14 January 1992,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 14 January 1992;

2. Decides, in accordance with the recommendation in paragraph 7 of the report, to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America with effect from 17 January 1992.

Security Council resolution 730(1992)

16 January 1992 Meeting 3031 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23427).

Financing

In October 1992,(10) the Secretary-General provided information covering the status, as at 30 September, of contributions assessed on Member States for the financing of ONUCA from its inception on 7 November 1989 to 30 April 1992, the date to which its mandate had last been extended; the resources made available to it, the operating costs and the resultant unutilized balance in the ONUCA Special Account; and the disposition of ONUCA personnel and assets.

Of a total assessment of $94,961,864 apportioned among Member States, $82,223,800 had been received, leaving a balance due of $12,738,064.

Resources made available for the period 7 November 1989 to 30 April 1992 amounted to $115,726,900 gross ($112,817,400 net), including appropriations of $114,163,900 gross ($111,254,400 net) and voluntary contributions in kind from Germany and Venezuela valued at $1,563,000; interest and miscellaneous income totalled $4,313,685. Deducting operating costs for the same period of $89,357,172 gross ($87,139,662 net) and $17,337,700 gross ($17,106,600 net) in credits to Member States against their assessed contributions left a net unencumbered balance of $12,884,823. However, owing to the outstanding assessed contributions of $12,738,064, the ONUCA Special Account showed a net unutilized balance of $146,759.

On 24 January 1992, 131 military observers were transferred to ONUSAL. Twenty-nine (of 45) international and 53 (of 81) local staff were retained to supervise the closing of ONUCA, all of whom, except for one of the international staff, were phased out over three and a half months; 16 international staff were reassigned or returned to their parent duty stations. On 31 January, 28 local staff were terminated. The assignment of one international staff member was extended until 30 September to settle financial obligations at United Nations Headquarters. Also transferred to ONUSAL was equipment with a depreciated value of $3,561,547.

El Salvador situation

The complex negotiations that began in 1990 to end the armed conflict in El Salvador culminated in the signing of the Peace Agreement by the Government of El Salvador and FMLN in Mexico City on 16 January 1992.(9)

That event was preceded by the signing, at midnight on 31 December 1991, of the New York Act, concluded in negotiations between the parties at United Nations Headquarters through the good offices of outgoing Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar. By the Act, the parties declared that they had reached definitive agreements which, combined with the 1990 San José Agreement on Human Rights(11) and 1991 Mexico(12) and New York(13) Agreements, completed the negotiations on all substantive items called for by the 1990 Caracas Agenda(14) and by the Compressed Negotiations that formed an integral part of the 1991 New York Agreement. The parties agreed that the process of ending the armed conflict was to begin formally on 1 February 1992 and be completed by 31 October. They further agreed to finalize, by 14 January at the latest, the timetable for implementing the agreements and the procedure for dismantling the military structure of FMLN and the reintegration of its members into El Salvador's civil, political and institutional life.

On 13 January, following an intensive final round of negotiations at Headquarters under the leadership of the Secretary-General's Personal Representative for the Central American Peace Process, Alvaro de Soto, the parties signed New York Act II, recording their agreement on all other outstanding issues.

The texts of the Acts were transmitted by El Salvador to the Secretary-General on 27 January.(15)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following consultations of the Security Council members on 3 January 1992, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:(16)

"The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the briefing provided by the Secretary-General on the agreement signed late in the night of 31 December by the Government of El Salvador and the FMLN which, when implemented, will put a definite end to the Salvadorian armed conflict. The members of the Council warmly welcomed the agreement, which is of vital importance for the normalization of the situation in El Salvador and in the region as a whole. They place on record their thanks and appreciation for the enormous contribution of Señor Pérez de Cuéllar and his Personal Representative, Alvaro de Soto, their collaborators, and all the Governments, especially those of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, that have assisted Señor Pérez de Cuéllar in his efforts.

"The members of the Council urge the parties to show maximum flexibility in resolving the pending issues in the negotiations at United Nations Headquarters starting this weekend. They also urge the parties to exercise maximum restraint and to take no action in the coming days which would be contrary to the agreement reached in New York and to the excellent spirit in which these talks took place.

"They welcomed the Secretary-General's intention, stated today, to submit a written report and proposals early next week with a view to Council action both regarding verification of cease-fire arrangements and the monitoring of the maintenance of public order pending the establishment of the new National Civil Police. This will require the approval by the Council of new tasks for ONUSAL. The members of the Council stand ready to deal expeditiously with any recommendations that the Secretary-General may make."

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report of 30 November 1992,(17) Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali attributed the success that led to the Salvadorian Peace Agreement primarily to the determination of El Salvador's President, Alfredo F. Cristiani, and the FMLN leadership to achieve a negotiated solution to the conflict. He expressed appreciation to his predecessor, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, who helped to ensure that success, as well as to Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela—referred to as the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General—for their support during the negotiations.

The Secretary-General described the Peace Agreement as a comprehensive package of inter-related undertakings by the parties, aimed not only at the cessation of the 12-year civil war in El Salvador, but also at tackling the root causes of the conflict by promoting democratization, respect for human rights and reconciliation among Salvadorians. Those endeavours would lay the groundwork for general elections in 1994.

The Agreement(9) provided for the reform of the armed forces of El Salvador (FAES) in terms of doctrine, structure, professional training and size; the replacement of the existing security bodies and intelligence services; the creation of a new National Civil Police under exclusive civilian control and of a new National Public Security Academy; the reform of the judicial system, including the creation of an Office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights; amendments to the Electoral Code and appointment of a Supreme Electoral Tribunal to prepare for the 1994 elections; economic and social development, the minimum commitments for which included agrarian reform, legal settlement of the land-tenure situation in the conflict zones and a national reconstruction plan; and legislative and other action to guarantee political participation by FMLN.

The Agreement further specified the interlocking steps to be carried out by the Government and FMLN for ending the armed conflict and for dismantling the FMLN structure, as well as the related verification tasks to be performed by ONUSAL. It called for United Nations verification of compliance, not only with the Peace Agreement, but also with the 1990 San José and 1991 Mexico and New York Agreements. It set forth an implementation timetable, with the stipulation that any adjustments required should be decided by ONUSAL in consultation with the parties. This was followed by a final declaration expressing the parties' firm determination to fulfil in good faith all the undertakings outlined by the Agreement and to cooperate with ONUSAL.

UN Observer Mission in El Salvador

The mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, established by the Security Council in May 1991,(18) was extended thrice in 1992: on 14 January, when it was also enlarged, on 30 October and on 30 November. The extensions, for periods ending, respectively, on 31 October and 30 November 1992 and on 31 May 1993, were based on the Secretary-General's reports on all operational aspects of ONUSAL before the expiry of each mandate period.

Report of the Secretary-General (January). On 10 January 1992,(19) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the agreements referred to in the New York Act included two in particular that, subject to the Council's approval, would require an immediate and substantial increase in the strength of ONUSAL if it was to fulfil the verification and monitoring functions desired by the parties. One agreement related to the cessation of the armed confrontation to begin on 1 February, which envisaged that ONUSAL would verify all the aspects of the cease-fire and the separation of forces; the other, relating to the creation of a new National Civil Police, envisaged that ONUSAL would monitor the maintenance of public order until that new body was in place. Those functions, together with the time-frames involved, were described in detail.

The Secretary-General thus proposed increasing ONUSAL's strength by adding to the existing Human Rights Division two other divisions under the overall control of the Chief of Mission: a Military Division and a Police Division. The Military Division would have a core strength of 244 military observers through 31 October (when the process of ending the armed hostilities was to be completed), with another 128 to be deployed in connection with the 30-day (1 February-2 March) implementation of the separation of forces. It would be headquartered in San Salvador and would maintain four regional offices colocated with the current regional offices of the Human Rights Division.

The Police Division would require a core strength of 631 police observers until 31 December, to be deployed in all departments of El Salvador. It would likewise be headquartered in San Salvador and would have four regional offices colocated in the existing ONUSAL regional offices. It would set up sub-offices that would correspond to National Police deployment.

ONUSAL additionally required 95 civilian staff to provide administrative, transport, communication and procurement support; premises and accommodation, transport and air operations; communication and miscellaneous equipment; and supplies and services.

It was the Secretary-General's intention to meet most of these requirements by the transfer of personnel and equipment from ONUCA, whose termination was imminent (see above, under "UN Observer Group in Central America").

On 13 January,(20) the Secretary-General gave a preliminary estimate of approximately $58.9 million as the cost of ONUSAL for the 10-month period from 1 January to 31 October 1992, should the Council decide to expand the ONUSAL mandate as recommended. That amount was to be considered an expense of the Organization, to be borne by Member States in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The assessments to be levied on Member States were to be credited to the ONUSAL Special Account.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 14 January 1992, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 729(1992).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989,

Recalling also its resolution 714(1991) of 30 September 1991, as well as the statement made by the President of the Council on behalf of the members of the Council on 3 January 1992 following the signature of the Act of New York on 31 December 1991,

Recalling further its resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991 by which it established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Welcoming the conclusion of agreements between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, which are to be signed in Mexico City on 16 January 1992 and which, when implemented, will put a definitive end to the Salvadorian armed conflict, and will open the way for national reconciliation,

Calling upon both parties to continue to exercise maximum moderation and restraint and to take no action which would be contrary to or adversely affect the agreements to be signed in Mexico City,

Expressing its conviction that a peaceful settlement in El Salvador will make a decisive contribution to the Central American peace process,

Welcoming the intention of the Secretary-General to convey shortly to the Council his recommendation on the termination of the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General contained in document S/23402;

2. Decides, on the basis of the Secretary-General's report and in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, to enlarge the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador to include the verification and monitoring of the implementation of all the agreements once these are signed in Mexico City between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, in particular the Agreement on the Cessation of the Armed Conflict and the Agreement on the Establishment of a National Civil Police;

3. Also decides that the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, enlarged in accordance with this resolution, will be extended to 31 October 1992 and that it will be reviewed at that time on the basis of recommendations to be presented by the Secretary-General;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to increase the strength of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador as recommended in his report;

5. Calls upon both parties to respect scrupulously and to implement in good faith the commitments assumed by them under the agreements which are to be signed in Mexico City, and to cooperate fully with the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in its task of verifying the implementation of these agreements;

6. Reaffirms its support for the Secretary-General's continuing mission of good offices with regard to the Central American peace process, and in particular for his observations in paragraphs 17, 18 and 19 of the report regarding his intention to continue, as was foreseen in the Geneva Agreement of 4 April 1990 concerning the process which is to end definitively the armed conflict, to rely on the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, as well as other States and groups of States, to support him in the exercise of his responsibilities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council fully informed of developments relating to the implementation of this resolution and to report on the operations of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador before the expiry of the new mandate period.

Security Council resolution 729(1992)

14 January 1992 Meeting 3030 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23411)

On 17 January,(21) the Council agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal(22) to appoint the former Chief Military Observer of ONUCA, Brigadier-General Victor Suanzes Pardo (Spain), Chief Military Observer of ONUSAL.

Financing (January-October 1992)

On 22 April 1992,(23) the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a report on the total requirements of ONUSAL for the period 1 January to 31 October 1992.

He stated that, to enable him to act speedily on the Security Council decision to enlarge and extend the ONUSAL mandate pending approval of the budget for the enlarged operation, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) had concurred with his proposal to enter into commitments for ONUSAL not to exceed $10 million under a 1991 Assembly resolution(24) on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1992-1993 biennium.

The total cost for the period 1 January to 31 October 1992 was estimated at $48,784,000 gross ($46,374,000 net). That amount covered requirements relating to the original mandate (to verify compliance with the 1990 San José Agreement on Human Rights(11)) and to the enlarged mandate, and included the commitment authority of up to $10 million.

As to financing from 1 July to 31 December 1991, assessments totalling $13,242,993 had been apportioned among Member States, of which $7,060,446 had been received, leaving an unpaid balance of $6,182,547 as at 31 March 1992. Initial appropriations and related expenditures for the same period resulted in an estimated unencumbered balance of $3,561,500 gross ($3,347,700 net), or about 25 per cent of the authorized appropriations. Against the contributions received was a net expenditure of $9,652,300 for the period ending 31 December 1991; this resulted in an operating deficit of $2,591,854.

In the light of the deficit and of the unpaid assessed contributions, the Secretary-General recommended that no action be taken regarding the net unencumbered balance and that it be retained in the ONUSAL Special Account.

Following a detailed examination of the cost estimates, and taking account not only of those areas where savings could be made, but also of the net unencumbered balance, ACABQ(25) recommended that, for the period from 1 January to 31 October 1992, the Assembly appropriate and assess $39 million gross ($37 million net) inclusive of the $10 million it had previously authorized.

ACABQ requested that the Secretary-General report to the Assembly on the feasibility and implications of merging the accounts of ONUCA and ONUSAL, in view of the functional relationship of the two operations and of the large number of personnel and equipment that had been transferred from ONUCA to ONUSAL.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/240 without vote on 22 May 1992.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and Council resolution 729(1992) of 14 January 1992, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Mission until 31 October 1992 and to enlarge it to include the verification and monitoring of the implementation of all the agreements signed at Mexico City between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Concurs with the observations and recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report, subject to the provisions of paragraphs 2, 8 and 9 below;

2. Notes that the payment of assessed contributions since 31 March 1992 has reduced the outstanding assessments;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in full and on time;

4. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador an amount of 39 million United States dollars gross (37 million dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 10 million dollars authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, under the terms of General Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991, for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 January to 31 October 1992;

5. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts referred to in paragraph 4 above among Member States in accordance with the composition of the groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on anomalies lies in the allocation of countries to the four groups set out in Assembly resolution 43/232, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B, 45/269 and 46/198 A and applied as an ad hoc arrangement to the financing of the Mission, taking into account Assembly resolution 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly, including resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973;

7. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2 million dollars approved for the Mission;

8. Decides also that 2 million dollars of the unencumbered balance of appropriation shall be retained in the Special Account and that the balance of 1,347,700 dollars shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States as provided for in paragraph 5 above;

9. Decides further, in principle, that the special accounts for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador shall be merged;

10. Decides to consider the contributions of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to the Mission in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted for these Member States by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

11. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 10 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions to be determined;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador".

General Assembly resolution 46/240

22 May 1992 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/46/924) without vote, 21 May (meeting 65); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/46/L.24), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 139.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 5th Committee 64, 65; plenary 86.

Composition

According to the Secretary-General's reports of 25 February(26) and 26 May 1992,(27) the Military Division of ONUSAL was set up and fully deployed by 31 January among four regional military offices and 15 verification centres. Its strength, authorized at 380 military observers, stood at 368 as at 25 February. It was reduced to 292 by 26 May from 10 countries: Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, India, Ireland, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Venezuela. On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Security Council agreed to maintain the Division's strength at that level until 1 September.⁽²⁸⁾ A further gradual reduction was expected during the remainder of the year.

The Police Division was constituted at the beginning of February with 147 of the 631 authorized police observers. By 26 May, its strength had been raised to 304 observers, deployed among six regional offices and four regional sub-offices.

The Human Rights Division was staffed with 51 civilian professionals and 14 police observers assigned from the Police Division.

In addition to the above, eight medical officers were provided by Argentina to assist ONUSAL.

Report of the Secretary-General May). The Secretary-General, on 26 May 1992,⁽²⁷⁾ reported on ONUSAL operations since the cease-fire went into effect on 1 February, as well as on the status of compliance with the undertakings prescribed by the peace agreements.

As from the cease-fire date, the Military Division began to monitor the first steps to end the armed conflict, namely, the separation of FAES and FMLN troops and their peace-time concentration in designated locations. It verified troop and weapons inventories furnished by the two forces, authorized and accompanied the movements of both, and investigated complaints of violations. It conducted air and land patrols over the area under its responsibility.

The functions of the Police Division related to government compliance with the replacement of the three existing public security bodies: the National Guard and the Treasury Police, which were to be abolished and their members incorporated into the Army for inclusion in a review aimed at purifying FAES; and the National Police, which was to be progressively replaced by the new National Civil Police. Pending completion of these processes, the Division lent support to the National Police in the discharge of its duties as the sole body responsible for law and order, monitoring its activities through an average of 100 visits and patrols each day.

The Human Rights Division of ONUSAL continued to verify compliance with the 1990 San José Agreement on Human Rights.⁽¹¹⁾ (For the reports issued by the Division in 1992, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

ONUSAL provided assistance in overcoming some of the difficulties encountered by the parties in the course of implementing the agreements. It participated in the work of the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace (COPAZ), established by the 1991 New York Agreement⁽¹³⁾ to draft legislative measures related to the accords and to supervise their execution. ONUSAL continued to be assisted by the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and by other interested Governments.

The Secretary-General observed that the goal set by the agreements to end the 12-year civil conflict in El Salvador, to consolidate peace and to return to a normal political process that should lead to free and fair elections in 1994 was not easy to achieve. The agreements were complex and demanded compromise and fundamental adjustments in political and social attitudes. While commending the parties for their strict observance of the cease-fire and noting that no major incident had threatened the fragile first phase of national reconciliation, the Secretary-General pointed to serious delays in implementation, which had undermined each side's confidence in the other's good faith.

Of concern was the continuing failure of both sides to concentrate all of their forces in the designated locations, a process that was to have been completed on 2 March. Despite its timely presentation of troop and weapons inventories, FMLN had yet to present a weapons inventory that accurately reflected its true holdings, given the widespread suspicion that it retained clandestine caches of arms and ammunition. Of equal concern was the failure of the Government to set up the National Public Security Academy and to begin recruitment for the National Civil Police, of FMLN to return the first 20 per cent of its combatants to civilian life, and of the Government to initiate the legalization of FMLN as a political party—all of which should have taken place by 1 May.

Contradictory interpretations of specific provisions further impeded implementation. This was true with the land-tenure issue, which, in the absence of a precise definition of "conflict zones" in the Peace Agreement, had resulted in land seizures and dispossessions. This was also true with the restoration of public administration in those zones, where the return of certain judges and mayors met with opposition from FMLN, the community and non-governmental organizations. Based on its interpretation of the letter, the Government saw no problem with the manner in which it had abolished the Treasury Police and National Guard, or in transferring to the National Police large numbers of their members—actions that ONUSAL regarded as contrary to the spirit of the Agreement.

Because of the atmosphere of deep distrust between the parties, ONUSAL's insistence on impartiality had sometimes been perceived by one side as partiality towards the other. The Secretary-General reported in this connection that anonymous threats had recently been made against the security of ONUSAL and its personnel, of which the Salvadorian authorities had been informed. He also stated that the failure of the two sides to comply fully with the timetable had been brought to the attention of the President and the FMLN

General Command, who assured him that they would take steps to break the impasse and get the implementation process back on course.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

After consultations held on 3 June, the President of the Security Council made the following statement(29) to the media on behalf of the Council members in connection with the item entitled "Central America: efforts towards peace":

"The members of the Security Council have taken note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL).

"They are pleased that the cease-fire is holding and there has not been a single violation since it came into force on 1 February 1992.

"However, the members of the Council are deeply concerned about the many delays by both parties in implementing agreements concluded between the Government of El Salvador and the FMLN and the climate of mutual suspicion that still remains. If that situation were to continue, it would jeopardize the very foundation of the agreements.

"They urge both parties to demonstrate good faith in implementing the agreements fully, to abide by the agreed time-limits, to exert every effort to bring about national reconciliation in El Salvador and to implement the process of demobilization and reform.

"The members of the Council reaffirm their full support for the efforts made by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, Mr. Iqbal Riza, with the assistance of the 'Friends of the Secretary-General' and other Governments concerned. They commend the staff of ONUSAL, who are working under very difficult conditions, and express their concern about the threats to their safety. They remind the parties of their obligation to take all necessary measures to guarantee the safety of ONUSAL and its members.

"The members of the Council will continue to monitor closely developments in the implementation of the peace agreements in El Salvador."

Report of the Secretary-General (June). On 19 June,(30) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the issues that had delayed the implementation process had been resolved. According to arrangements finalized on 12 June, those steps that had not been complied with were to be fulfilled by dates reprogrammed as follows.

By 25 June, concentration of the two sides' forces at locations designated for them was to be completed. By 30 June: (1) reintegration of the first FMLN contingent into civilian life was to begin and be completed, as originally scheduled, by 31 October; (2) the Government was to present to the Legislative Assembly a bill for the definitive abolition of the National Guard and Treasury Police, and create a two-unit Special Brigade for Military Security, one unit for frontier protection duties and the other for military police duties (the Brigade would have no public security responsibilities in the civilian sphere, and personnel of the former two security bodies would not be eligible for recruitment into the new National Civil Police, nor could there be further transfers of such personnel to the existing National Police); (3) the Government was also to propose to the Legislative Assembly reforms to the Electoral Code to facilitate the legalization of FMLN as a political party; and (4) COPAZ was to begin verification of the FMLN land inventory, giving priority to properties subject to legal process.

By 15 July, the National Public Security Academy was to begin training recruits for the new National Civil Police, to include personnel from the existing National Police and former FMLN combatants in agreed proportions. Also by 15 July, the Government was to finalize programmes to facilitate reintegration of FMLN combatants into civilian life, providing contingency plans to benefit those who reintegrated earlier.

The Secretary-General subsequently reported(31) that, in the face of further delays, a second reprogramming was agreed upon on 19 August, following a visit to El Salvador by the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations. In this second reprogramming, the fulfilment by 31 October of two key government commitments had to be postponed beyond that date: the provision of agricultural land in the former zones of conflict, originally to have been completed by 31 July; and the establishment of the National Public Security Academy, which had been due on 1 May, to train recruits for the new National Civil Police for deployment no later than 28 October.

In reaction to these government delays, FMLN decided to suspend demobilization, asserting that the dismantling of its military structure, scheduled for completion by 31 October, would likewise have to be reprogrammed in order to maintain the link in the original timetable between the key undertakings of the two parties. Until then, only 40 per cent of FMLN combatants had returned to civilian life; the remaining 60 per cent, who were still armed, had been scheduled to leave their assembly sites, one third on 30 September, another third on 15 October and the final third on 31 October.

Activities of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council on 19 October(32) that, as a result of the finding that the land issue was a main obstacle to the timely implementation of the second reprogramming, intense consultations were mounted inside and outside the United Nations system on the issue. He sent the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations to El Salvador to help the parties search for solutions. On 13 October, he presented them with a proposal deemed an equitable compromise between their positions. It set out terms and conditions for the transfer of land to former combatants of both sides and for the formalization of the land-tenure system; or, if necessary, for the relocation on new land of persons who during the hostilities had moved onto land in the conflict zones. FMLN and the Government accepted the proposal on 15 and 16 October, respectively, and confirmed their commitment to its early implementation.

As to the dismantling of FMLN's military structure, the Secretary-General felt that, due to the complications of demobilizing in 15 different locations, the process could not possibly be completed by 31 October. Thus, on 23 October, he reprogrammed for a third time the schedule for compliance, whereby the final phase of the FMLN demobilization would begin by 31 October and be completed by 15 December. FMLN accepted the proposal provided the Government also accepted it. Owing to its reservations on a number of aspects and questions as to the FMLN weapons inventory and the schedule for implementing the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces, the Government decided to suspend its restructuring, reduction and demobilization of FAES. Clarification of these matters with the parties was in progress at the time of reporting.

Lacking the information required to formulate long-term recommendations on ONUSAL's mandate and strength, the Secretary-General, on 28 October,(33) recommended an extension of the current mandate for an interim period of one month, until 30 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 30 October 1992, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 784(1992).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, 714(1991) of 30 September 1991 and 729(1992) of 14 January 1992,

Taking note of the letter from the Secretary-General dated 19 October 1992, in which he announced a delay in the schedule laid down in resolution 729(1992),

Noting also the letter from the Secretary-General dated 28 October 1992, in which he proposed an interim extension of the current mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL),

1. Approves the proposal of the Secretary-General to extend the current mandate of ONUSAL for a period ending on 30 November 1992;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it, between now and that date, recommendations on the period of extension of the mandate, on the mandate and strength that ONUSAL will need, taking into account progress already made, in order to verify the implementation of the final phases of the peace process in El Salvador together with their financial implications;

3. Urges both parties to respect scrupulously and to implement in good faith the commitments assumed by them under the agreements signed on 16 January 1992 at Mexico City and to respond positively to the Secretary-General's latest proposals to them aimed at overcoming the current difficulties;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 794(1992)

30 October 1992 Meeting 3129 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24737).

Report of the Secretary-General (November). On 23 November,(31) the Secretary-General reported on the status of the implementation of the agreements and the related ONUSAL activities.

As he informed the Council President on 11 November,(34) his Personal Representative for the Central American Peace Process—who, along with the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations, travelled to San Salvador to consult with the parties regarding his 23 October proposal—subsequently reported that arrangements had been concluded which, if implemented, would formally bring the armed conflict to an end on 15 December. These included government implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on Purification of the Armed Forces within a specified time-frame; FMLN presentation to ONUSAL, on 30 November, of its final weapons inventory; and the concentration by that date of the inventoried weapons in designated zones, for destruction beginning on 1 December. Upon confirmation of the completion of these measures, the Government would promptly resume the dissolution of its military units.

Agreement on these arrangements was recorded in letters exchanged by the Personal Representative with the President and the FMLN General Command, stipulating for the first time that compliance with certain key points in the calendar by one side was contingent upon compliance with specific undertakings by the other.

The Military Division of ONUSAL continued to ensure observance of the cease-fire and assumed further verification tasks related to the reduction of FAES. It participated in a working group on the problem of minefields and provided support to a UNICEF public-awareness campaign on the dangers they posed. It determined that the majority of demobilized personnel were released directly into civilian life and verified that personnel transfers to other military service were not in conflict with the accords. It continued to ensure the effective dissolution of the Territorial Service and followed up on regulations to implement the recently promulgated law establishing an armed forces reserve system. It verified the official disbandment of the National Intelligence Department and the creation of the new State Intelligence Agency. It had requested, but had yet to receive, a plan for the recall of military weapons in private hands.

As to public security matters, the Police Division cooperated in verifying that the dissolution of civil defence units was effective and in locating illegal arms caches. It confirmed its finding that demobilized, self-contained FAES units had been integrated into the National Police, in contravention of the spirit of the agreements. It conducted special inquiries required by the Human Rights Division and ensured that special security measures were provided for FMLN leaders. Over ONUSAL's objections, the Academic Council had accepted the applications of former Treasury Police and National Guard personnel to the National Public Security Academy, in contravention of the accords; the Council had moreover given university credit for prior training and service in the National Police. For an effective monitoring of the Academy's functioning, the Division pressed for its attendance at Academic Council meetings. It provided guidance, instruction and logistical support to the Auxiliary Transitory Police, which was deployed in 12 posts by mid-November.

Regarding the complex land-tenure issue, new occupations of lands in the former conflict zones, some by former FMLN combatants, had given rise to new tensions that, on one occasion, threatened the cease-fire but was averted through intervention by ONUSAL and the Archbishop of San Salvador. While FMLN had called a halt to such activity, reports to the contrary continued to be received and investigated by ONUSAL. It continued to press for the completion of procedures for implementing the reintegration programmes. Since the Government accorded FMLN the status of a "political party in formation" on 30 July, steps towards its full political participation had been in progress. In consultation with both sides, ONUSAL, on 16 September, finalized a programme for the restoration of public administration in the former zones of conflict and initiated contacts between mayors in exile and local organizations resisting their return.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the problems encountered in the course of implementing the intricate agreements within a climate of distrust and polarization, implementation of the peace process had advanced steadily and many obstacles had been overcome. That observance of the cease-fire was impeccable and that FMLN was enabled to engage in political activities in advance of its full legalization as a political party were an impressive demonstration of the will of both parties to consolidate peace in their country. In those instances when the implementation process had been put at serious risk, the United Nations exerted considerable effort to steer the process back on track, with help from the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, the United States and other interested Governments.

Pointing to certain major undertakings that were to extend into 1994, such as the reduction of FAES and the deployment of the National Civil Police, the Secretary-General said it could be anticipated that ONUSAL would complete its mission by mid-1994. In the meantime, he recommended that its mandate be extended for a further period of six months, to 31 May 1993. He indicated a preliminary cost estimate of some $20.6 million for that period,⁽³⁵⁾ which should be considered a United Nations expense to be borne by Member States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

Having studied the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 791(1992) on 30 November 1992.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, 714(1991) of 30 September 1991, 729(1992) of 14 January 1992 and 784(1992) of 30 October 1992,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General dated 23 November 1992,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to support implementation of the several agreements signed between 4 April 1990 and 16 January 1992 by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) to re-establish peace and promote reconciliation in El Salvador,

Noting the intention of the Secretary-General to continue, in this as in other peace-keeping operations, to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) as defined in resolutions 693(1991) and 729(1992), for a further period of six months ending on 31 May 1993;
3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to adapt the future activities and strength of ONUSAL, taking into account progress made in implementing the peace process;
4. Urges both parties to respect scrupulously and to implement in good faith the solemn commitments they have assumed under the agreements signed on 16 January 1992 at Mexico City and to exercise the utmost moderation and restraint, both at present and following the conclusion of the cease-fire phase, in order to respect the new deadlines agreed upon by them for the successful completion of the peace process and for the restoration of normal conditions, especially in the zones of former conflict;
5. Shares, in this context, the preoccupations expressed by the Secretary-General in paragraph 84 of his report;
6. Reaffirms its support for the Secretary-General's use of his good offices in the El Salvador peace process and calls upon both parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's Special Representative and ONUSAL in their tasks of assisting and verifying the parties' implementation of their commitments;

7. Requests all States, as well as the international institutions in the fields of development and finance, to continue to support, in particular through voluntary contributions, the peace process;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments in the El Salvador peace process and to report, as necessary, on all aspects of ONUSAL's operations, at the latest before the expiry of the new mandate period.

Security Council resolution 791(1992)

30 November 1992 Meeting 3142 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24861).

Financing (December 1992-May 1993)

On 4 December 1992,(36) following the extension of ONUSAL's mandate for a further six-month period, from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the requirements of ONUSAL for that period. He also summarized the budget performance of the two previous mandate periods, from 1 January to 31 October and from 1 to 30 November 1992, as well as the status of contributions for ONUSAL financing as at 30 November.

In his summary of the appropriations provided for the 10-month period from 1 January to 31 October 1992 and the related expenditures during the 11-month period from 1 January to 31 October and from 1 to 30 November 1992, the Secretary-General indicated an unencumbered balance of $1,624,200 gross ($1,484,700 net).

He estimated the cost for the period 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993 at $19,339,500 gross ($17,999,700 net). Based on that level of expenditure, he further estimated that continued maintenance of ONUSAL beyond 31 May 1993 would cost an average monthly rate not to exceed $3,223,250 gross ($2,999,950 net).

Of the assessments totalling $49,503,028 that had been apportioned among Member States for the period 1 July 1991 to 31 October 1992, $37,894,597 had been received and $3,296,972 had been credited to Member States, leaving an unpaid balance of $11,608,431. As a result of merging the Special Account of ONUCA, which had a net unutilized balance of $146,759, with that of ONUSAL, which had a net deficit of $7,953,242, the combined ONUCA/ONUSAL Special Account resulted in a net operating deficit of $7,806,483. To meet operating cash requirements, loans amounting to $5 million had been made available to ONUSAL from the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group Special Account.

In view of that loan and pending receipt of the outstanding assessed contributions for both ONUCA and ONUSAL, the Secretary-General recommended that no action be taken as to the income of $4,484,174 ($1,990,206 in interest and $2,493,968 in miscellaneous income combined) and that it be retained in the ONUSAL/ONUCA Special Account.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Owing to lack of time, the Fifth Committee could not consider the Secretary-General's report, which was before it on 16 December 1992. It therefore recommended measures for the continued maintenance of ONUSAL until 28 February 1993. These were embodied in decision 47/452, adopted by the General Assembly without vote on 22 December.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

At its 93rd plenary meeting, on 22 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to the amount of 8,045,600 United States dollars gross (7,514,200 dollars net) for the maintenance of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador for the period ending 28 February 1993;

(b) Apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount indicated in subparagraph (a) above among Member States, in accordance with the scheme set out in its resolution 47/41 of 1 December 1992;

(c) Deferred to its resumed forty-seventh session the consideration of the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador".

General Assembly decision 47/452

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/797) without vote, 16 December (meeting 46); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 1.22.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In a report of 23 December 1992,(37) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the armed conflict between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN was formally brought to an end on 15 December, the date fixed by the latest adjusted timetable. The event, preceded the previous day by the legalization of FMLN as a political party, was marked by a ceremony attended by the President of El Salvador, who presided over it, FMLN, the Secretary-General; and representatives of Spain, on behalf of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, of Guatemala, on behalf of the Central American States, and of the United States. The Secretary-General's statement at the ceremony was annexed to his report.

The Secretary-General noted that the parties had generally complied with their commitments according to the adjusted timetable, and that COPAZ and the Legislative Assembly had made a determined effort to complete the related legislation. He made special mention of the timely demobilization of the fifth and final FMLN contingent, which brought the total number of demobilized combatants to 8,876 as at 17 December, and of handicapped and injured combatants to 3,486, also demobilized; of the destruction of 50 per cent of the total FMLN arms inventory, with the remainder to be destroyed by year's end and those located outside El Salvador by early January 1993; of the punctual presentation of the administrative decisions for implementing the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces; and of the completion of the investigations by the Commission on Truth. (Mandated by the 1991 Mexico Agreements⁽¹²⁾ to investigate serious acts of violence committed since the outbreak of armed confrontation in 1980 and whose impact on society demanded that the public know the truth, the Commission on Truth was formally constituted in New York on 13 July. It was composed of three eminent persons: Belisario Betancur (Colombia), former President; Reinaldo Figueredo (Venezuela), former Minister for Foreign Affairs; and Thomas Buergenthal (United States), former President of the Inter-American Court for Human Rights and Honorary President of the Inter-American Institute for Human Rights. The Commission's secretariat was set up in San Salvador.)

The Secretary-General also noted, however, the Government's failure to ensure the recovery of weapons in private hands, which was to have been accomplished by 8 December, adding that less than 100 of an estimated several thousand weapons had been recovered by that date. The Government had assured ONUSAL that it would intensify efforts in that regard.

Noting that a number of provisions remained to be implemented, the Secretary-General pointed to six that merited emphasis: the land-transfer programme, including guarantees for the non-eviction of current landholders pending a legal solution; the programmes for the reintegration into civilian life of ex-combatants of both sides, including the war-disabled; the international supervision of the National Public Security Academy and its establishment in permanent premises; the establishment of the National Civilian Police and its progressive deployment in lock step with the phasing out of the existing National Police; the planned reduction of FAES; and the coordination of long-term plans for the economic and social development of El Salvador.

Aid programmes

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) played a principal role in providing technical assistance and mobilizing financial resources to make possible the implementation of some of the major provisions of the Peace Agreement. Notably, it coordinated an inter-agency mission for the formulation of a National Reconstruction Plan. It provided technical support for the formation and strengthening of democratic institutions, including the National Public Security Academy, the National Ombudsman for the Protection of Human Rights, the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace and the new Supreme Electoral Council. It also provided technical and financial support for the reintegration programmes for demobilized FMLN ex-combatants in the areas of emergency assistance at relocation points, agricultural training, education and health.

Assistance from the international community was being sought to enable the Salvadorian Government to implement the National Reconstruction Plan.

(For additional information on the foregoing, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

El Salvador-Honduras

On 11 September 1992, the International Court of Justice delivered its Judgment in the case concerning the "Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras; Nicaragua intervening)". The case was submitted to the Court in 1986⁽³⁸⁾ by a special agreement between El Salvador and Honduras which defined the questions for decision. In dispute were certain sections of land along the border between the two countries, the islands of the Gulf of Fonseca and the maritime spaces within and outside the closing line of that Gulf, which touched the coastline of El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua on the Pacific.

(For details of the Judgment, see PART FIVE, Chapter I.)

Guatemala situation

In his November 1992 report on the situation in Central America,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General described the status of the peace process in Guatemala, initiated in 1990 by the Government and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG), the opposition movement, when they concluded the Basic Agreement for the Search for Peace by Political Means.⁽³⁹⁾

The Secretary-General stated that, in January 1992, the parties reached agreement on several provisions for inclusion in a future agreement on human rights, including the principle of international verification by the United Nations. Serious differences emerged, however, regarding human rights issues as they related to the protection of the civilian population and wounded and captured combatants, to the proposed voluntary civil defence committees on freedom of association and movement, and to the proposed commission to inquire into human rights violations since the conflict began. A proposal to resolve those differences was presented to the parties in May by the Conciliator (Chairman of the National Reconciliation Commission), which the Government accepted.

Also in May, URNG put forward a comprehensive set of proposals relating to a number of items on the agenda agreed upon in 1991.(40) In an equally comprehensive response of 30 June,(41) the Government, in addition to outlining the status of the peace negotiations, clarified its position with respect to civilian authority and the army's role in a democratic society like Guatemala, the rights of the indigenous population, constitutional amendments and the electoral system, and social and economic problems in such areas as education, land entitlement and redistribution, and resettlement of population groups displaced by the armed conflict. The Government noted that the proposals advanced by URNG failed to state its position on such fundamental issues as a definitive cease-fire, a timetable for implementing agreements, arrangements for verification of implementation, and demobilization.

To give greater impetus to the negotiations based on their proposals, the Government suggested that the Conciliator, the Observer (Personal Representative of the Secretary-General) and the parties consider themselves in permanent session as from the second fortnight of July, meeting during alternate weeks until the agenda had been exhausted and a final peace agreement had been signed.

In August, progress was achieved on the issue of voluntary civil defence committees, with the parties deciding to make public the text of the relative provision agreed upon. Noting that there had been little progress since, the Secretary-General urged the parties to reinvigorate the process and redouble their efforts towards the goal of a firm and lasting peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 47/118, the General Assembly reiterated the importance of stepping up the negotiating process between the Government of Guatemala and URNG in order to achieve the goals laid down in the 1991 Mexico City and Querétaro Agreements.(40) It urged scrupulous implementation of the agreed procedures and progress towards the adoption of commitments on all the issues set forth in the Mexico City Agreement, particularly the signing of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights which they had been considering.

Nicaragua

In 1992, assistance continued to be sought for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua, which were necessary for overcoming the aftermath of war and for the consolidation of peace and democracy already achieved in the country. The appeal for such assistance, from the international community and from international funding agencies, had its origins in the National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters concluded in Nicaragua in 1990(42) (phase I) and 1991 (phase II), which the General Assembly welcomed, supporting in particular the agreements regarding property rights and privatization in phase II of the Agreement.

In resolution 47/118, the Assembly supported efforts by Nicaragua to consolidate peace. In resolution 47/169, it asked for continued support to that country to enable it to overcome the aftermath not only of war but also of recent natural disasters (see PART THREE, Chapter III), and to stimulate the process of reconstruction and development. It requested the Secretary-General to provide Nicaragua with all possible assistance to support the consolidation of peace in such areas as the settlement of displaced and demobilized persons and refugees, rural land ownership and land tenure, direct care for war victims, mine clearance and the restoration of the country's productive areas.

Nicaragua-Honduras

As a result of an out-of-court agreement between Nicaragua and Honduras aimed at enhancing their good-neighbourly relations, the case pending before the International Court of Justice concerning "Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras)" was brought to an end during 1992 on the initiative of Nicaragua. It had filed the Application instituting proceedings against Honduras in 1986.(43) (For details on the discontinuance of the case, see PART FIVE, Chapter I.)

The Caribbean

Cuba-United States

Cuba, on 27 April 1992,(1) requested the Security Council to convene as soon as possible in order to consider the terrorist activities being promoted, encouraged or tolerated by the United States against Cuba. In this context, Cuba referred to terrorists within the United States who were openly organizing and training military groups for the purpose of invading Cuba, and recalled the 1976 explosion of a Cuban civil aircraft, from a bomb planted in it, shortly after take-off from Barbados that killed the 73 persons on board. According to Cuba, the criminal proceedings instituted by Venezuela in 1976 against the four men implicated in the crime ended in 1987, 11 years later. The two Venezuelan nationals accused of planting the bomb were sentenced to 20 years in prison. One of the two Cuban nationals accused of masterminding the crime, Orlando Bosch, was "acquitted". No verdict was rendered in the case of the other Cuban, Luis Posada Carriles, who reportedly left his place of detention under peculiar circumstances. Cuba alleged that the United States had withheld information from Venezuela that would have convicted Orlando Bosch and that the two Cubans were currently in the United States enjoying that country's protection.

Underscoring the Council's statement of 31 January 1992 on the need for the international community to deal effectively with acts of international terrorism, such as the attacks on Pan Am flight 103 in 1988 and on UTA (Union de transports aériens) flight 772 in 1989 (see PART ONE, Chapter I), Cuba demanded that the Council condemn the destruction of the Cuban airliner and that it ask the United States to deliver the two Cuban nationals to Cuba and take immediate steps to eliminate all terrorist activities carried out against Cuba from the United States.

On 8 May,(2) Cuba reiterated its request for a meeting, providing further information as to why the Council was duty-bound to examine its allegations. On 13 May,(3) Cuba disputed a statement reportedly made by the Secretary-General's spokesman that the Council had discussed its request and would continue consultations on the issue, and that Cuba had been so informed. Asserting that such discussion could not have transpired, Cuba reiterated that the Council should convene without further delay.

The United States, on 21 May,(4) replied that the opposite of Cuba's allegations against it was true. It traced the legal actions taken by the United States against Orlando Bosch, beginning with his 1968 trial and conviction for involvement with terrorist activities, which resulted in his sentencing to 10 years in prison; his parole in 1972; his incarceration in 1988 for violating that parole and the consequent recommendation for his exclusion from the United States (he fled the country in 1974 while on parole and illegally re-entered in 1988). The United States asserted that it had no record of having received a request from Venezuela for evidence or testimony in connection with its criminal proceedings against the two Cubans. Although found excludable from the United States, Orlando Bosch had remained in its custody, at his residence in Miami, Florida, with restrictions on his movements and activities. He had not been deported to Cuba, where, the United States said, he faced certain execution, having been tried in absentia and sentenced to death.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council convened on 21 May 1992 to consider the matter brought before it by Cuba, which was invited, at its request, to participate without the right to vote under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Meeting number. SC 3080

In essence, Cuba's statement before the Council was that the United States had covered up for Orlando Bosch by withholding information from Venezuela that would have led to his conviction for the 1976 bombing of the Cuban airliner, and that it continued to withhold information on his other terrorist activities for which he should be brought to justice. Cuba alleged that, notwithstanding the Justice Department's determination that Orlando Bosch should be deported, he was allowed to remain in the United States by a higher authority, that is, by the President of the United States.

Cuba provided information on the whereabouts of Luis Posada Carriles and on his activities in the service of the United States Department of State and Central Intelligence Agency, after leaving his place of detention in Venezuela. In addition, it provided radio and press accounts, dated as recently as April 1992, of terrorist activities against Cuba launched from the United States.

Responding, the United States emphasized that it was not insensitive to the sorrow of those whose relatives or friends had died in the 1976 airline bombing. It labelled as absurd Cuba's attempt to portray the United States as a supporter of international terrorism and harbourer of terrorists, and regretted Cuba's misuse of the Council to make such baseless allegations. To the best of its knowledge, Luis Posada was not in the United States but believed to be somewhere in Latin America. The facts relating to Orlando Bosch, as it had communicated in detail to the Council, belied the canard that the United States had supported his illegal activities.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

The United States restated its position in respect of Cuba: it supported peaceful democratic change in that country and had no aggressive intentions towards it. The United States neither supported nor condoned preparations or efforts within its territory for the violent overthrow of Cuba's Government or for fomenting violence in Cuba; suggestions to the contrary were untruthful and unacceptable. The United States categorically rejected any assertion that its economic policy measures towards Cuba were inconsistent with international law, stressing that every Government had the right to choose with whom it wished to maintain relations. The United States had chosen to have neither full diplomatic nor commercial relations with Cuba because of the lack of democracy there and of the Government's flagrant abuse of human rights.

The Council concluded its meeting without taking action on a draft resolution proposed but not pressed to the vote by Cuba.⁽⁵⁾ The draft would have had the Council condemn the 1976 sabotage of the Cuban airliner, declare that all States in a position to do so had an obligation to contribute to a full investigation of the incident, request the Secretary-General to seek United States cooperation in providing information to facilitate such an investigation and punishment of the guilty parties, urge the United States to release information on the activities of Luis Posada since leaving detention and on his current whereabouts, and further urge it to prevent the use of its territory for terrorist acts against Cuba.

United States embargo against Cuba

In accordance with its 1991 decision,⁽⁶⁾ the General Assembly included in its 1992 agenda an item on the necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba.

The embargo was the subject of several communications from Cuba to the Secretary-General during the year. Of note was the transmittal on 11 June⁽⁷⁾ of a letter to the Congress of the United States, a démarche to the Department of State and a letter to a United States senator, all from the Delegation of the Commission of the European Communities. These expressed the objections of the European Community (EC) to four pieces of legislation pending before the United States Congress that would have the effect of prohibiting United States-owned subsidiary companies incorporated and domiciled outside the United States from trading with Cuba. The Delegation set out in detail the elements which EC regarded as having no basis in international law.

Also of note was a 6 November letter from Cuba⁽⁸⁾ drawing attention to the Cuban Democracy Act of 1992, signed into law on 23 October by the President of the United States. Among the Act's provisions, Cuba cited the categorical prohibition of third-country companies owned or controlled by United States nationals from engaging in any transactions with Cuba. It prohibited third-country vessels from loading or unloading goods at United States ports for 180 days after they had entered Cuban ports for trade in goods or services. It made clear to other countries that, in determining its relations with them, the United States would take into account their willingness to cooperate with its sanctions programme against Cuba.

The Delegation of the Commission of the European Communities had likewise expressed EC objections to the Act when it was pending before Congress.⁽⁹⁾ It cited the unacceptability of, among the Act's other provisions, the extraterritorial extension of United States jurisdiction as a matter of law and policy; and of the discriminatory tax penalties against United States companies with overseas subsidiaries which traded with Cuba, thereby providing a Draconian economic disincentive against transactions that would be permitted in other jurisdictions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 November 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/19 by recorded vote.

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba
The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of trade and international navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Concerned about the promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations whose extraterritorial effects affect the sovereignty of other States and the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction, as well as the freedom of trade and navigation,

Having learned of the recent promulgation of measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba,

1. Calls upon all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law and with the commitments that they have freely entered into in acceding to international legal instruments that, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

2. Urges States that have such laws or measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session.

Haiti

Efforts continued in 1992 to restore the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide of Haiti, overthrown by a military coup in 1991(10) and currently in exile in the United States. Despite the measures taken by the Organization of American States (OAS), which had assumed the leading role in those efforts, that objective had not been realized.

President Aristide thus wrote to the Secretary-General on 3 June 1992, expressing hope that the United Nations would assist OAS in achieving effective implementation of its resolutions to compel restoration of the legitimate Government, particularly compliance with the embargo imposed against Haiti and the dispatch to it of a multidimensional mission. He asked that a personal representative of the Secretary-General be sent to inquire into human rights violations in Haiti and determine its humanitarian needs. It was imperative, he stressed, that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) ensure full compliance with article 33 of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, prohibiting expulsion or forceable return to the frontiers of territories where the refugee's life or freedom would be threatened.(11)

The Secretary-General stated on 18 June that he would seek the opinion of OAS on those requests, as his mandate was limited to supporting OAS action. Meanwhile, he gave assurances that UNHCR was taking steps to alleviate the plight of the Haitian refugees.

The OAS Secretary-General replied on 10 July that the crisis in Haiti—an internal problem of a country in the American hemisphere caused by a disruption of its democratic process—called for joint action in accordance with the commitments by which OAS members were bound and in keeping with the tradition and legal foundations of the regional system of the Americas. The intense effort that OAS accordingly mounted included several initiatives: suspending economic, financial and trade ties with Haiti; endeavouring to protect human rights; cooperating with UNHCR to tackle the Haitian refugee problem; coordinating its efforts with those of the United Nations, including those of UNDP; and, through missions to Haiti, making contact with all sectors of Haitian society. OAS hoped that support from the United Nations membership would be forthcoming, in accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request.(12)

This exchange of communications, transmitted to the Security Council on 15 July, was taken note of by the Council at informal consultations held on 20 July.(14)

(For information on special emergency assistance to Haiti, human rights violations there and the Haitian refugees, see PART THREE, Chapters III, X and XV, respectively.)

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(12) the Secretary-General, on 3 November 1992,(15) presented a comprehensive report on the situation in Haiti since the 1991 coup.(10) The report gave a chronological account of the international community's efforts to resolve the Haitian crisis and summarized the communications between the Secretary-General, President Aristide and OAS (see above). It also covered the situation relating to humanitarian assistance, human rights and the Haitian refugees, and restated the Assembly's position on Haiti's credentials (see below).

In addition to action taken by the Security Council and the General Assembly in 1991, the Haitian Parliament, under pressure from the military, named an "Acting President" to organize new elections and appointed a "Prime Minister", while the Haitian Army reiterated that the return of President Aristide was not negotiable. OAS adopted two resolutions: one demanded the immediate reinstatement of President Aristide and recommended diplomatic, economic and financial isolation of the de facto authorities and suspension of any aid except for humanitarian purposes; the other condemned the illegal replacement of President Aristide, declared unacceptable any government resulting from that situation, urged OAS members to freeze the financial assets of the Haitian State and to impose a trade embargo except for humanitarian aid, and constituted a civilian mission to re-establish constitutional democracy in Haiti. The mission visited Haiti in August and September 1992, and held a meeting in Washington, D.C., in between.

Meanwhile, Colombia's Minister for Foreign Affairs, acting on behalf of OAS, succeeded in arranging several meetings, between November 1991 and February 1992, between President Aristide and the Presidents of the two chambers of the Haitian Parliament. The meetings resulted in the signing of two protocols of agreement at Washington, D.C., on 23 and 25 February. The first protocol provided for President Aristide's reinstatement and for the proclamation of a general amnesty, but not applicable to common criminals; the second called for the confirmation of the Prime Minister-designate, René Théodore, who thereafter would create the conditions for President Aristide's return.

Neither protocol was ratified by the Haitian National Assembly. Instead, a tripartite agreement was concluded on 8 May on the formation of a Government of consensus and public redemption for the consolidation of democracy, which mentioned neither President Aristide nor the protocols of agreement, but left the office of President unfilled until a definitive solution to the crisis was found. Under a revised tripartite agreement, a new "Government" was formed; the "Acting President" resigned and Marc Bazin, previously chosen "Prime Minister" by consensus, was sworn in.

On 17 May, OAS adopted another resolution (MRE/RES.3/92) reinforcing the embargo and recommending that its members deny port access to ships that had engaged in trade with Haiti, prevent violations of the embargo by air and punish the perpetrators and supporters of the coup by denying them visas and freezing their financial assets.

A June meeting between President Aristide and the Haitian community in Miami adopted the Florida Declaration, by which they denounced the tripartite agreement and the pressure brought to bear on Parliament, and called for a dialogue among Haitians aimed at forming a Government of unity and allowing the return to Haiti of the constitutional President. On the basis of the Declaration a 10-member Presidential Commission was established in Haiti on 6 July, which issued a set of proposals, presented as a codification of the Washington protocols as updated in the Florida Declaration.

On 10 September, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council at informal consultations that his representative had taken part in the OAS mission, that the parties did not seem to have come closer together, that OAS was planning to deploy a first group of observers in Haiti and that it had decided to maintain the embargo. The Secretary-General stated his intention to cooperate with OAS and readiness to lend any other assistance that might lead to a solution of the crisis.

The Secretary-General noted that Haiti's economy was in a state of free fall. The normally high unemployment rate had risen even higher. Many small farmers had used up their seed reserves and sold their animals and tools, or even their land. Consumer prices had risen. Shrinking food and fertilizer imports, and the scarcity of fuel to transport goods to consumers, had caused the food situation to deteriorate further. This was exacerbated by the threat of famine in the north-west region due to two years of drought. The lack of safe drinking-water and medicines, as well as the serious disruption of immunization programmes, had put public health at risk. The financial difficulties under which the educational system operated had led to school closures, teacher resignations and a decline in pupil attendance. An estimated 135,000 children had left school as a result of the crisis. An inter-agency committee, set up by eight United Nations agencies maintaining a presence in Haiti, had drawn up a draft integrated plan of humanitarian assistance under the direction of the Secretariat's Department of Humanitarian Affairs. OAS had also set up a coordinating committee for humanitarian assistance to Haiti.

In an addendum of 4 November to his report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the replies from nine Member States to his request for information on measures they had taken in support of the 1991 OAS resolutions described above.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

When the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report, it also took account of an additional resolution adopted by the OAS Permanent Council on 10 November CP/RES.594 (923/92). The resolution urged United Nations Members to adopt the measures specified in the previous three OAS resolutions and to increase their humanitarian assistance to the Haitian people. It also requested United Nations participation in the OAS civilian mission to Haiti.

On 24 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/20 A.

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Recalling its resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991 and 46/138 of 17 December 1991, as well as the relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and by other international forums,

Welcoming resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91 and MRE/RES.3/92 adopted on 3 and 8 October 1991 and 17 May 1992, respectively, by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States,

Also welcoming resolution CP/RES.594(923/92) on the re-establishment of democracy in Haiti, adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States on 10 November 1992,

Considering that, despite the efforts of the international community, the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has not yet been re-established and that civil and political liberties continue to be trampled upon in Haiti,

Greatly alarmed at the persistence and worsening of gross violations of human rights, in particular summary and arbitrary executions, involuntary disappearance, reports of torture and rape, arbitrary arrests and detentions, as well as the denial of freedom of expression, of assembly and of association,

Concerned that the persistence of this situation contributes to a climate of fear of persecution and economic dislocation which could increase the number of Haitians seeking refuge in neighbouring Member States and convinced that a reversal of this situation is needed to prevent its negative repercussions on the region,

Welcoming the measures taken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to lend his support to the Organization of American States, in particular the participation of his personal representative in the mission of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States to Haiti, from 19 to 21 August 1992,

Taking into account its resolution 47/11 of 29 October 1992 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti,

Taking note also of the statement by the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization, in which he declares that he stands "ready to help in any other way to resolve the Haitian crisis",

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that "the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government",

Recognizing the urgent need for an early, comprehensive and peaceful settlement of the situation in Haiti in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law,

1. Strongly condemns again the attempted illegal replacement of the constitutional President of Haiti, the use of violence and military coercion and the violation of human rights in that country;

2. Reaffirms as unacceptable any entity resulting from that illegal situation and demands the restoration of the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, together with the full application of the National Constitution and hence the full observance of human rights in Haiti;

3. Takes note of the efforts by the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States to seek the implementation of the resolutions adopted by that organization;

4. Affirms that the solution of the Haitian crisis should take into account resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and CP/RES.594(923/92) of the Organization of American States;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to take the necessary measures in order to assist, in cooperation with the Organization of American States, in the solution of the Haitian crisis;

6. Urges the States Members of the United Nations to renew their support, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, by adopting measures in accordance with resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and CP/RES.594(923/92) adopted by the Organization of American States, especially as they relate to the strengthening of representative democracy, the constitutional order and to the embargo on trade with Haiti;

7. Also urges the States Members of the United Nations and other international organizations to increase their humanitarian assistance to the Haitian people and to support all efforts to resolve the problems associated with displaced persons, and encourages, in this context, the strengthening of the institutional coordination established among United Nations agencies, as well as between the United Nations and the Organization of American States;

8. Calls upon the international community to refrain from supplying materials for the use of military forces or police in Haiti, including arms, ammunition and petroleum, until the present crisis has been resolved;

9. Emphasizes that an increase in technical, economic and financial cooperation, when constitutional order is restored in Haiti, will be necessary to support its economic and social development efforts in order to strengthen its democratic institutions;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly by mid-February, at a resumed session, a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to keep open the consideration of this item until a solution to the situation is found.

Report of the Secretary-General. In keeping with the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General, on 11 December 1992, appointed Dante Caputo (Argentina) as his Special Envoy for Haiti,⁽¹⁷⁾ to assist, in cooperation with the OAS Secretary-General, in the solution of the Haitian crisis.

Between 17 and 22 December, the Special Envoy held a series of preliminary consultations in Washington, D.C., with President Aristide, and at Port-au-Prince with the following: the Coordinator and members of the Presidential Commission, the Commander-in-Chief of the Haitian Armed Forces and other members of the Army High Command, the Prime Minister of the de facto Government, and the Presidents of the two chambers of the National Assembly of Haiti. The Special Envoy also met in New York with representatives of Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela, whom the Secretary-General had requested to assist him in his endeavours; and in Washington, D.C., with the OAS Secretary-General.

Credentials

The Secretary-General's report of 3 November 1992(15) provided information on the matter of Haiti's credentials. As reported by his spokesman, communications received from the "Government of Haiti" included one on the credentials of its delegation to the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly. Since in 1991(12) the Assembly had affirmed as unacceptable any entity resulting from the attempted illegal replacement of the constitutional President of Haiti and had demanded the immediate restoration of the legitimate Government of President Aristide, the purported credentials from the so-called Government of Haiti in Port-au-Prince were not receivable from the legal point of view and were of no legal consequence to the United Nations.

Other questions relating to the Americas

Cooperation with OAS

In an October 1992 report,(1) the Secretary-General described measures taken to further cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, in accordance with a 1990 General Assembly resolution.(2)

The report outlined the consultations and information exchanges undertaken between the two organizations from 1991. At a general meeting that year (New York, 15-17 May),(3) specific recommendations were made under eight areas identified for cooperation: environment, drug abuse control, women and development, disaster prevention, children and development, rural development and agriculture, Indian people and development, and strengthening cooperation between the two systems at the national level. Also identified were the lead agencies for each area.

Consultations continued in 1992 and representatives of the secretariats of both organizations and the associated institutions attended each other's meetings and cooperated on matters of mutual interest, including the situation in Central America and the crisis in Haiti. In addition, OAS continued its representation on the Support Committee, on the Policies and Project Committee and in sectoral meetings of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America.(4)

The report provided updated information on the collaborative activities and projects undertaken with OAS by six United Nations bodies and programmes—INSTRAW, UNDP, UNEP, UNHCR, WFP and WFP; by a regional commission—ECLAC; and by nine specialized agencies—FAO, UNESCO, WHO, IMF, ICAO, ITU, IMO, IFAD and GATT.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/11 on 29 October 1992.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/10 of 25 October 1990 relating to the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace" and the related consultations within the United Nations and with regional organizations on this subject,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Bearing in mind that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements and agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, and whose activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling also that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles, and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the charter of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction that the first general meeting held between the representatives of the United Nations system and of the Organization of American States was held at United Nations Headquarters from 15 to 17 May 1991, and was inaugurated by the Secretaries-General of the two organizations,

Welcoming the meeting of the two Secretaries-General during the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992,

Bearing in mind the adoption by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States on 23 May 1992 of resolution AG/RES.1199(XXII-O/92), also on cooperation between the Organization of American States and the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 46/7 of 11 October 1991 on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti and taking into account the letter dated 15 July 1992 in which the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council of an exchange of correspondence with the President of Haiti and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, and of his decision to accept the offer for the participation of United Nations officials in the mission of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States to Haiti,

Aware that the effective consolidation of a new international order requires regional action in harmony with that of the United Nations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, as well as his efforts to strengthen that cooperation;

2. Welcomes the offer of the Chairman of the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States to the President of the Security Council concerning the readiness of the Organization of American States to cooperate with the United Nations in its efforts to improve collective measures for the prevention and solution of international conflicts;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the close cooperation between the two organizations in the verification of the electoral process in Nicaragua from August 1989 to February 1990 and recognizes the effectiveness of that cooperation;

4. Recognizes the importance of the participation of the International Support and Verification Commission in the demobilization of the irregular forces of the Nicaraguan resistance and takes note with satisfaction of the fundamental role of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America in the military aspects of the process and of the activities of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the operational area;

5. Welcomes the continued participation of the Organization of American States in the Support Committee and the Policies and Projects Committee of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, established by General Assembly resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988 and extended by General Assembly resolution 45/231 of 21 December 1990;

6. Requests both Secretaries-General, or their representatives, to continue their consultations with a view to signing in 1993 an agreement for cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States;

7. Approves the conclusions and recommendations of the first general meeting between the representatives of the two organizations held in May 1991 and urges the relevant authorities of both organizations to take the necessary steps to implement those recommendations and promote further cooperation;

8. Recommends that a second general meeting between representatives of the United Nations system and of the Organization of American States be held in 1993 to review and appraise progress, and that inter-agency sectoral and focal point meetings be held on areas of priority or mutually agreed issues;

9. Takes note of the participation of senior officials of the United Nations in the mission of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States to Haiti in August 1992;

10. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms for cooperation between the two organizations;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

Chapter III

Asia and the Pacific

The United Nations in 1992 steadfastly maintained the momentum of its peace-keeping and peace-building activities in Asia.

In Korea, the implementation of the 1953 Armistice Agreement continued and the United Nations Command submitted its annual report to the Security Council.

In accordance with the 1991 settlement agreements (Paris agreements) that brought about an official cease-fire in Cambodia and called for their implementation under United Nations auspices, the Security Council early in the year established and deployed the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, one of the Organization's most ambitious and complex peace-keeping operations. Despite the refusal of one of the four signatories to the Paris agreements to implement the second phase of the cease-fire, the Transitional Authority, which became operational in March, forged steadily ahead in discharging its mandate with the ultimate goal of preparing the country for free and fair elections towards the middle of 1993.

United Nations efforts to promote peace among the conflicting factions in Afghanistan were outpaced by political and military events in the country. Although forced to withdraw its personnel from Kabul due to the wide-scale fighting that erupted there in July and August, the United Nations maintained its presence in other parts of the country.

The Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices in Cyprus with the goal of achieving overall agreement between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities.

In March and November, the Security Council conducted a comprehensive review of Iraq's compliance with the series of related Council resolutions, beginning with resolution 687(1991), which embodied the terms of the cease-fire that formally ended the 1991 military action to compel Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait. The key reporting bodies for the reviews were the Special Commission created by the cease-fire resolution and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Both remained resolute, in the face of alternating Iraqi cooperation and resistance, in carrying out their task of uncovering and eliminating Iraq's capability to manufacture or use nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction. The Council reviews concluded that Iraq still was not in full and unconditional compliance with its obligations. Insisting that it had complied with its substantive obligations under the cease-fire resolution, Iraq requested the Council to lift the sanctions imposed on it since 1990.

East Asia

Korean question

The United States, on behalf of the Unified Command, submitted the annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance in 1991 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement(1) to the Security Council on 15 June 1992.(2)

According to the report, the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), set up to supervise the implementation of the Agreement and to settle any violations of it through negotiations with the Korean People's Army (KPA) and the Chinese People's Volunteers (CPV), held one meeting during 1991, at which KPA demanded, as it had in previous years, that UNC cease its annual joint training exercise "Team Spirit" with the Republic of Korea, despite UNC's reiteration that the Agreement did not address military training exercises. Since the appointment in March(3) of Major-General Hwang Won-Tak of the Republic of Korea as the senior member representing UNC, no formal plenary meeting had been held for the remainder of the year. However, the UNC and KPA/CPV commanders maintained communication through the Joint Duty Office "hot line" and through meetings of the MC Secretaries.

In June, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea returned 11 sets of what it said were "United States war remains" to a United States congressional delegation at the Joint Security Area (Panmunjom), in disregard of the provision of an Understanding stipulating that delivery and reception of such remains should be arranged through MAC. In December, KPA informally advised that another 30 UNC war remains recently discovered would be returned in the near future.

Regarding the accord on reconciliation, non-aggression and denuclearization of the Korean peninsula signed by the two Koreas in December 1991,(3) the report noted that UNC, while not directly involved, provided administrative and security assistance to the related negotiations held between the two sides at the Joint Security Area. In this connection, UNC stated that the Democratic People's Republic should abandon its nuclear-weapons programme and accept full-scope nuclear safeguards under the International Atomic Energy Agency. As a confidence-building measure, it should move its armed forces and advanced weapons from their offensive posture.

On 15 June 1992,(4) the United States, on behalf of UNC, drew to the Council's attention a serious Armistice violation that occurred on 21 and 22 May. A group of heavily armed men from a KPA guard post crossed the military demarcation line into the south side. Upon their encounter with a UNC security police patrol, an exchange of fire ensued in which two of the infiltrators were killed and a UNC policeman was wounded. Later, a third infiltrator died in a similar encounter and exchange of fire, in which another UNC policeman was wounded. UNC called a meeting of MAC on 29 May for a joint investigation of the incident, which KPA/CPV boycotted.

The Democratic People's Republic, on 28 September,(5) characterized the two reports as extremely distorted and attributed the paralysis of the supervisory mechanism of MAC to the appointment of Major-General Hwang Won-Tak and to UNC's refusal to hold negotiations on its challenge that a legal institutional mechanism should replace the UNC senior member of MAC. As to the reported infiltration incident, the Democratic People's Republic argued that the incident had nothing to do with it, but was a drama concocted by the Republic of Korea designed to stop the developing dialogue between them.

South-East Asia

Within the context of the call by the Secretary-General in his "An Agenda for Peace" for a closer relationship between the United Nations and regional associations, the General Assembly, by resolution 47/53 B of 9 December 1992, endorsed the purposes and principles of the 1976 Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in South-East Asia for the peaceful settlement of regional disputes and regional cooperation towards peace, amity and friendship among the peoples of South-East Asia.

Cambodia situation

Pursuant to the 1991 settlement agreements (Paris agreements) (1) that brought about the official cease-fire in Cambodia and called for their implementation under United Nations auspices, the Security Council early in 1992 established and deployed the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC). In carrying out its mandate, UNTAC coordinated its activities with the Supreme National Council (SNC), on which were represented the four parties to the Cambodian conflict and signatories to the agreements: (1) the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea, renamed the Cambodian People's Party (CPP) and later also referred to as the party of the State of Cambodia (SOC); (2) the National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Cambodia (FUNCINPEC, from its French title, Front Uni National pour un Cambodge Indépendant, Neutre, Pacifique et Coopératif); (3) the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), renamed on 22 May as the Buddhist Liberal Democratic Party (BLDP); and (4) the Party of Democratic Kampuchea (PDK).

The armed forces of the four parties were, respectively, the Cambodian People's Armed Forces (CPAF), the National Army of Independent Kampuchea (ANKI), the Khmer People's National Liberation Armed Forces (KPNLAF) and the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea (NADK).

UN Advance Mission in Cambodia

At its second meeting of 8 January, the Security Council had before it a report of the Secretary-General of 1991(2) proposing, pending the establishment of UNTAC, the expansion of the mandate of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC) to include, in addition to the existing mine-awareness programme, the training of Cambodians in mine clearance and the initiation of a mine-clearance programme. Following consideration of the report, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 728(1992).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 717(1991) of 16 October 1991 and 718(1991) of 31 October 1991,

Welcoming the fact that the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC) has become operational as reported by the Secretary-General in his report of 14 November 1991,

Welcoming also the progress that has been made in implementing the provisions of the Agreements on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict relating to the functioning of the Supreme National Council of Cambodia under the chairmanship of His Royal Highness Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the maintenance of the cease-fire,

Concerned that the existence of mines and minefields in Cambodia poses a serious hazard to the safety of people in Cambodia, as well as an obstacle to the smooth and timely implementation of the Agreements on the Comprehensive Political Settlement, including the early return of Cambodian refugees and displaced persons,

Noting that UNAMIC's mandate as approved by the Security Council in its resolution 717(1991) provides, inter alia, for the establishment of a mine awareness programme, and that the Agreements provide for the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) to undertake, inter alia, a programme of assisting with clearing mines and undertaking training programmes in mine clearance and a mine awareness programme among the Cambodian people,

Considering that the establishment of training programmes in mine clearance, in addition to the existing mine awareness programme undertaken by UNAMIC, and the early initiation of mine clearance are required for the effective implementation of the Agreements on the Comprehensive Settlement,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General proposing that the mandate of UNAMIC be expanded to include training in mine clearance and the initiation of a mine clearance programme,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General, especially the provision of assistance in mine clearing by Cambodians;

2. Calls upon the Supreme National Council of Cambodia, and all the Cambodian parties, to continue to cooperate fully with the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia, including in the discharge of its expanded mandate;

3. Reiterates its call to all the Cambodian parties to comply scrupulously with the cease-fire and to lend all necessary assistance to UNAMIC;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of further developments.

Security Council resolution 728(1992)

8 January 1992 Meeting 3029 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23383).

The Secretary-General subsequently obtained Council agreement(3) to his proposal(4) that Bangladesh, the Netherlands and Thailand be added to the States contributing troops to UNAMIC, to meet the increase in troop strength required by the expanded mandate. He thereafter confirmed the appointment of Under-Secretary-General Yasushi Akashi as Special Representative for Cambodia,(5) an action the Council welcomed.(6)

Financing

At the request of the Secretary-General,(7) the agenda item of the General Assembly's forty-sixth (1991) session on the financing of UNAMIC was reopened by the Assembly on 4 February 1992 to enable consideration of the additional requirements entailed by UNAMIC's expanded responsibilities.

In his report of 31 January 1992(8) relating to those requirements, the Secretary-General estimated a total cost of $22,893,000 gross ($22,813,000 net) for the period from 15 January to 30 April 1992. That included the initial commitment authority of up to $10 million for the immediate emplacement of additional UNAMIC personnel and equipment, as concurred with by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) under the provisions of a 1991 Assembly resolution.(9) The cost of maintaining UNAMIC for six months beyond 30 April 1992 would amount to $38,874,000 gross ($38,139,000 net), or $6,479,000 gross ($6,356,500 net) a month.

Military personnel required for the mine training and de-mining tasks included a planning and liaison unit of 40 officers at Phnom Penh headquarters, a field engineer battalion of 750 all ranks, a mine-clearing team of 200 expert trainers and a 150-man logistical support unit. Thirty-four civilian (24 international and 10 local) staff were needed to provide additional administrative, transport, communication, procurement, security and interpretation support to UNAMIC. Premises and accommodations, transport, air support, communication, and miscellaneous equipment, supplies and services were also required.

Contributions in kind were provided by Thailand (two fork-lift trucks) and France (a fixed-wing aircraft, two utility helicopters and 41 crew and maintenance personnel).

In view of the additional voluntary contributions ($2,029,000) and savings resulting from delays in staff deployment ($1,607,000), ACABQ(10) recommended to the General Assembly the appropriation and assessment of an additional amount of $19,257,000 gross ($19,204,000 net) for the expanded UNAMIC operations from 15 January to 30 April 1992. As to the estimates for operations beyond 30 April, ACABQ regarded them as indicative and pointed to the likelihood of UNAMIC's merger with UNTAC before then.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/198 B on 14 February 1992.

Financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia,

Recalling its resolution 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 on the financing of the Advance Mission,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, by which the Council approved the proposal of the Secretary-General to expand the mandate of the Advance Mission,

Recognising that the costs of the Advance Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognising also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Advance Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Advance Mission by certain Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Advance Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Concurs with the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia in full and on time;

3. Decides to appropriate an amount of 19,257,000 United States dollars gross (19,204,000 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 10 million dollars authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of General Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991 for the expansion of the Advance Mission for the period from 15 January to 30 April 1992;

4. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 19,257,000 dollars gross (19,204,000 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

5. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 4 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 53,000 dollars approved for the period from 15 January to 30 April 1992, inclusive;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Advance Mission at a rate not to exceed 6,176,900 dollars gross (6,054,000 dollars net) per month for the period beyond 30 April 1992, subject to the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, should the Security Council decide to continue the Advance Mission beyond that date, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

7. Invites voluntary contributions to the Advance Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Advance Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia

Under the terms of the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, one of the four instruments of the Paris agreements of 1991,(1) the mandate foreseen for UNTAC during the transitional period in Cambodia included the promotion and protection of human rights, the organization and conduct of free and fair general elections, the establishment of military arrangements to stabilize security and build confidence among the four Cambodian parties to the conflict, the setting up of a civil administration to ensure a neutral political environment conducive to free and fair elections, the maintenance of law and order, the repatriation and resettlement of the Cambodian refugees and displaced persons, and the rehabilitation of essential Cambodian infrastructure (food security, health, housing, training, education, transport network, public utilities).

The transitional period was defined as the period commencing with the entry into force of the Agreement and terminating when the constituent assembly, elected in conformity with the Agreement, had approved the new Cambodian constitution and transformed itself into a legislative assembly, and when a new Cambodian Government had been elected. The Agreement entered into force upon signature by the parties concerned, on 23 October 1991.

The focal point of the United Nations relationship in Cambodia was SNC—under the Agreement, the unique legitimate body and source of authority in which, throughout the transitional period, the sovereignty, independence and unity of Cambodia were enshrined. By the Agreement, SNC had delegated to the United Nations all powers necessary to ensure implementation of the Agreement. The head of UNTAC, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, would maintain dialogue with SNC regarding UNTAC activities.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1991 Security Council request,(11) the Secretary-General, on 19 February 1992,(12) submitted an implementation plan to serve as the basis for the establishment of UNTAC.

Under the plan, UNTAC would consist of seven distinct components: the human rights, electoral, military, civil administration, police, repatriation and rehabilitation components, each with appropriate functions and structure.

The human rights component would discharge UNTAC's responsibility for fostering an environment conducive to respect for human rights. This included the development of a human rights education programme to promote understanding of and respect for human rights; overseeing the exercise of general human rights in all of the existing administrative structures in Cambodia, particularly in those areas exercising law-enforcement and judicial functions; and providing a mechanism for investigating alleged human rights violations and for effective redress, especially redress of violations relating to participation in the electoral process. A human rights office set up at headquarters at Phnom Penh would be the central policy-making and coordinating body with staff specialists in human rights advocacy, civic education and investigation, and liaison.

The task of organizing and conducting free and fair general elections would be the responsibility of the electoral component. It would design a system for every phase of the election of 120 members to the constituent assembly; establish, in consultation with SNC, a legal framework consisting of an electoral law and regulations to govern the electoral process and an electoral code of conduct to ensure freedom of speech, assembly and movement; mount a civic education programme, as well as an orientation and training programme for staff and political party agents; and design a system of voter registration and procedures for political party registration and for balloting and polling.

Voter registration would take place over three months at fixed, temporary or mobile registration stations and, for military personnel, at cantonments. Polling stations would be in the same location as registration stations. About 200 international staff in two-member teams would be required to supervise an estimated 800 local registration personnel working in five-member teams and to canvass all districts in Cambodia.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General, who would have the task of organizing and conducting the elections, would be assisted by a chief electoral officer and a three-member electoral advisory committee, headquartered at Phnom Penh. Deployment of the international electoral staff would take place in March and April. A proposed election calendar recommended that voter registration begin in October 1992 and that elections extend from late April to early May 1993.

Military arrangements, to be discharged by the military component, were aimed at stabilizing the security situation and building confidence among the parties to the conflict. They were grouped into four categories: verification of the withdrawal and non-return of all categories of foreign forces and their arms and equipment, to be accomplished by posting military observers at 24 fixed ingress/egress points and deployment of mobile monitoring teams to investigate allegations of the presence of foreign forces; supervision of the cease-fire and related measures, including regroupment, cantonment, disarming and demobilization; weapons control, including monitoring the cessation of outside military assistance, locating and confiscating caches of weapons and military supplies throughout Cambodia, and storing of the arms and equipment of the cantoned and demobilized military forces; and management of training programmes in mine-awareness, mine-clearance and related activities.

The military component would need to canton about 200,000 soldiers, disarm about 450,000 soldiers and militia, secure more than 300,000 weapons and monitor the security of Cambodia's borders and territorial waters. To perform those tasks, the component would require the full cooperation of the Cambodian parties and the scrupulous fulfilment of their commitments under the Paris agreements, as well as freedom of movement and communication and other rights and facilities. It would be provided with enough personnel and resources to enable it to establish an effective and credible presence.

A proposed calendar recommended that full deployment of the military component of about 15,900 troops of all ranks be completed by the end of May, and that the regroupment and cantonment processes, as well as demobilization of at least 70 per cent of the cantoned forces, be completed by 30 September.

The responsibility for ensuring a neutral political environment conducive to free and fair general elections rested with the civil administration component, whose functions would include: identification of agencies, bodies and offices of existing administrative structures in five areas to be placed under its direct control—foreign affairs, national defence, finance, public security and information; identification of administrative structures—education, public health, transport and communications—that could influence the outcome of the elections and over which a lesser degree of scrutiny could be exercised; training of Cambodian administrative personnel in connection with codes of conduct and management guidelines to ensure observance of those instruments; and setting up complaints mechanisms and investigation procedures concerning actions by administrative structures that were inconsistent with or militated against the objectives of the comprehensive political settlement.

Offices would be set up to deal with each of the five areas identified for direct control. Twenty-one provincial offices would be established at provincial and municipal centres, paralleling the existing structures in the country, to each of which five to seven international staff would be assigned. About 200 subprovincial offices, mostly at the district level, were foreseen.

Law enforcement would be the responsibility of the police component, which would exercise supervision over the civil police in order to ensure law and order and protect human rights. Some 50,000 Cambodian civil police were expected to be supervised by the UNTAC police monitors. The structure of the UNTAC civilian police component would include a policy and management unit at headquarters, 21 units at the provincial level and 200 at the district level. The latter would operate as mobile teams. A total of about 3,600 UNTAC civilian police monitors would be required.

Under the terms of the Agreement, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) would be the lead agency for the repatriation and resettlement of Cambodians. It was stipulated in this connection that Cambodians must return voluntarily to Cambodia to destinations of their choice, with their human rights and fundamental freedoms fully respected. Appropriate border crossing points and routes would be designated and cleared of mines and other hazards. A memorandum of understanding signed between UNHCR and the Government of Thailand defined modalities of cooperation on all aspects of the repatriation operation.

The objectives set for the repatriation of more than 360,000 potential returnees included: organized repatriation within a nine-month period; identification and provision of agricultural and settlement land, and installation assistance and food for up to 360,000 returnees for up to 18 months and for up to 30,000 "spontaneous" returnees for up to one year; and limited reintegration assistance for up to 360,000 returnees and upgrading of services in returnee-concentrated areas through quick-impact projects.

Repatriation would be in three stages: the movement of returnees from border camps to the final destinations of their choice in Cambodia; the provision of immediate assistance (shelter, materials, household kits) and food for an average of 12 months; and a reintegration programme.

Under the Declaration on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia, one of the four instruments comprising the 1991 Paris agreements,⁽¹⁾ particular attention was to be given to food security, health, housing, training, education, the transport network and the restoration of existing infrastructure and public utilities. The rehabilitation effort would be headed by a Coordinator for Rehabilitation in Cambodia, appointed by the Secretary-General and reporting to the Special Representative. The Coordinator would be responsible for assessing needs and for ensuring that these were met without duplication and with efficiency.

The implementation plan underscored four essential conditions for the effective and impartial discharge of UNTAC's responsibilities: full Security Council support, full cooperation of the Cambodian parties at all times, full freedom of movement and communications, and adequate and timely financial resources.

In an addendum to his report, dated 26 February,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the preliminary indicative costs of UNTAC, inclusive of the initial appropriation of $200 million, were estimated at approximately $1,900 million gross ($1,876 million net). That did not include the repatriation-programme costs. A breakdown of the major objects of expenditure was annexed to the report. The estimates covered a period of approximately 15 months, assuming a new Cambodian Government would be created within three months of the elections as foreseen by the Agreement, or by 31 July 1993.

Based on the implementation plan and the reports of several survey missions, UNTAC structure and personnel requirements were as follows.

UNTAC would be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, assisted by a deputy, an executive management, coordination and liaison team, human rights, political, legal and economic advisers and an information service. The number of international personnel required was estimated at 76, including support staff. In addition, UNTAC would have an administrative support division of some 450 international staff.

The human rights and civil administration components, consisting of some 224 specialists, assisted by 84 international support staff, would operate at the central levels, from offices to be established at the 21 provincial and municipal centres and, particularly as regards dissemination of information and civic education, from offices at all of the estimated 200 districts in Cambodia.

The military component, headed by a Force Commander, would have a strength of about 15,900 all ranks, consisting of: force headquarters and sector headquarters staff of 204, a military observer group of 485, 12 infantry battalions of 10,200 all ranks, a naval element of 376 and logistics and specialized support elements of about 4,500. The infantry element and the observer group would be reduced from 10,200 and 485 to 5,100 and 300, respectively, by 30 September 1992.

The police component would consist of some 3,600 civilian police monitors operating throughout the territory from offices to be established in 21 provincial and municipal centres and in some 200 district offices.

The electoral component would consist of 72 international personnel operating from headquarters and 126 personnel at 21 provincial and municipal centres. Under the supervision of headquarters and provincial electoral personnel, 400 United Nations Volunteers would operate from each of the 200 districts. Electoral personnel would be supplemented by 800 Cambodian teams (4,000 personnel) during the three- to four-month period of voter registration, and, for the polling process, by 1,000 international supervisors and 8,000 Cambodian polling teams (56,000 personnel). The electoral component would be phased out shortly after certification of the results of the election.

All UNTAC components would be assisted by an estimated 7,000 locally recruited support personnel, including some 2,500 interpreters, and by additional temporary staff as may be required for the conduct of the electoral process and other tasks.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 February, the Security Council, having examined the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 745(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, 718(1991) of 31 October 1991 and 728(1992) of 8 January 1992,

Reaffirming also its full support for the Agreements signed in Paris on 23 October 1991,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 19 February 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 718(1991),

Desiring to contribute to the restoration and maintenance of peace in Cambodia, to the promotion of national reconciliation, to the protection of human rights, and to the assurance of the right to self-determination of the Cambodian people through free and fair elections,

Convinced that free and fair elections are essential to produce a just and durable settlement to the Cambodia conflict, thereby contributing to regional and international peace and security,

Mindful of Cambodia's recent tragic history and determined that the policies and practices of the past will not be repeated,

Expressing appreciation for the work of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC) in the maintenance of the cease-fire, in mine awareness and mine clearance, and in preparation for the deployment of a United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC),

Noting with appreciation the efforts of His Royal Highness Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the Supreme National Council under his chairmanship in regard to the implementation of the provisions of the Agreements,

Welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative for Cambodia to act on his behalf,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 19 February 1992 containing his plan, which is subject to re-examination in the light of experience, for implementing the mandate envisaged in the Agreements;

2. Decides that UNTAC shall be established under its authority in accordance with the above-mentioned report for a period not to exceed eighteen months;

3. Decides that it is vital that elections be held in Cambodia by May 1993 at the latest as recommended by the Secretary-General in paragraph 38 of his report;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to deploy UNTAC as rapidly as possible to implement the above decision, urges that both the deployment and the further implementation of his plan be done in the most efficient and cost-effective way possible, and invites him to that end to keep the operation under continuous review, bearing in mind the fundamental objectives of the Agreements;

5. Calls upon the Supreme National Council of Cambodia to fulfil its special responsibilities set out in the Agreements;

6. Calls further upon all parties concerned to comply scrupulously with the terms of the Agreements, to cooperate fully with UNTAC in the implementation of its mandate, and to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of all United Nations personnel;

7. Calls further upon the Supreme National Council and all Cambodians on behalf of the host country to provide all necessary assistance and facilities to UNTAC;

8. Strongly urges the Cambodian parties to agree to the complete demobilization of their military forces prior to the end of the process of registration for the elections as well as to the destruction of the weapons and ammunition deposited into UNTAC custody in excess of those, if any, which may be deemed necessary by UNTAC for the maintenance of civil order and national defence, or which may be required by the new Cambodian Government;

9. Appeals to all States to provide all voluntary assistance and support necessary to the United Nations and its programmes and specialized agencies for the preparations and operations to implement the Agreements, including for rehabilitation and for the repatriation of refugees and displaced persons;

10. Request the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council by 1 June 1992 and subsequently to report to the Council in September 1992, January 1993 and April 1993 on progress to date in the implementation of the present resolution and on tasks still to be performed in the operation, with particular regard to the most effective and efficient use of resources;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 745(1992)

28 February 1992 Meeting 3057 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23651).

On 11 March, the Secretary-General obtained Security Council agreement(14) to his proposed appointment of Lieutenant-General John M. Sanderson (Australia) as Force Commander of the UNTAC military component and of Brigadier-

General Michel Loridon (France) as Deputy Force Commander.⁽¹⁵⁾ He thereafter obtained Council agreement⁽¹⁶⁾ to his proposals⁽¹⁷⁾ that the military elements would be composed of contingents from Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, France, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, the Russian Federation, Senegal, Thailand, Tunisia, the United Kingdom and Uruguay. The addition of Japan and Brunei Darussalam to these troop-contributing countries, as he later proposed,⁽¹⁸⁾ was also agreed to by the Council.⁽¹⁹⁾

Financing

As he informed the Security Council President on 18 January 1992,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General intended to propose that the General Assembly should provide an initial appropriation of $200 million, to be made available immediately upon Council approval of the implementation plan for the establishment of UNTAC. That decision, duly noted by the Council President,⁽²¹⁾ was taken in the context of the need, repeatedly stressed by the Cambodian parties and the international community, for the urgent emplacement of UNTAC in order to prevent any erosion of the peace process.

On 31 January, the Secretary-General submitted his proposal⁽²²⁾ for the appropriation and apportionment of the $200 million, giving a general breakdown by object of expenditure for the priority items of accommodation, vehicles, water transport, communications and miscellaneous items. He described the tasks of UNTAC as distributed among some of its components in order to provide an idea of its likely magnitude and cost. The request for such a substantial appropriation in advance of the General Assembly's review and approval of detailed cost estimates was prompted by the magnitude of the tasks to be performed by UNTAC and the consequent need to obtain in a timely manner the large quantities of equipment and services it required, the near absence in Cambodia of a support infrastructure and the inadequacy of the current financial commitment authority available to the Secretary-General to provide for the anticipated pre-implementation goods and services.

Aware of the exigencies of the situation, ACABQ⁽²³⁾ acknowledged that there was sufficient justification for seeking such a substantial appropriation in advance of Security Council adoption of the plan of implementation for UNTAC and of the General Assembly's review and approval of a detailed cost estimate. It therefore had no objection to approval of the request and noted the Secretary-General's intention to set up a special account for UNTAC. It requested him to ensure that commitments were entered into only in respect of those requirements that were absolutely essential and in line with actual requirements as they emerged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (February)

In response to the Secretary-General's request,⁽²⁴⁾ the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided on 4 February to include in the agenda of its resumed forty-sixth (1991) session an item on the financing of UNTAC and to allocate it to the Fifth Committee.

On 14 February, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 46/222 A without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/18 of 20 November 1991 and 46/198 A of 20 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the initial phase of the implementation plan of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia to be emplaced immediately after the signing of the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, by which the Council expressed its full support for the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict (Paris agreements), signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, which, inter alia, call for the establishment of a United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia,

Noting that the unusual approach of seeking a substantial appropriation in advance of the review and approval by the General Assembly of the detailed cost estimate of the Transitional Authority is prompted by the extraordinary circumstances of the tasks to be performed by the Transitional Authority and the consequent need to obtain in a timely manner the large quantities of equipment and services it will require, as reflected in the statement of the Secretary-General in his report and the exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council reproduced therein, and in the statement by the representative of the Secretary-General to the Fifth Committee at its 58th meeting,

Noting also that the plan for implementing the mandate envisaged in the Paris agreements is under preparation and is to be submitted to the Security Council at the earliest possible date,

Recognizing that the costs to prepare for the deployment of the Transitional Authority are part of the total expenses of the operation and as such are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures for the deployment of the Transitional Authority, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the necessary financial resources to enable the Secretary-General to fulfil the tasks envisaged in the Paris agreements as supported by the Security Council and the General Assembly in their respective resolutions and to prepare for the deployment of the Transitional Authority,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to ensure payment of their assessed contributions in full and on time;

3. Decides to appropriate an amount of 200 million United States dollars to meet the initial, unavoidable requirements, as indicated in the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee, to enable the Secretary-General to initiate the action necessary for a timely deployment of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia consistent with the eventual plan of implementation, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Transitional Authority;

4. Decides also to take into account the amount of 200 million dollars appropriated above against the full assessments to be levied on Member States upon the approval of the total cost estimates of the Transitional Authority;

5. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 200 million dollars among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991;

6. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Authority in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that resources to prepare for the deployment of the Transitional Authority are administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy, and bearing in mind paragraph 11 of the report of the Advisory Committee and the status of the Security Council actions on the Transitional Authority;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly during its forty-sixth session, through the Advisory Committee, the full and detailed budget of the Transitional Authority.

General Assembly resolution 46/222 A

14 February 1992 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/46/879) without vote 13 February (meeting 59): draft by Chairman (A/C.5/46/L.22), orally revised; agenda item 148.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 5th Committee 58, 59; plenary 80, 81.

Report of the Secretary-General. Based on his implementation plan for UNTAC, the Secretary-General, on 7 May 1992,(25) submitted a report to the General Assembly on the financing of UNAMIC and UNTAC. He proposed that, since UNAMIC was absorbed by UNTAC as of 15 March, the individual accounts of the two operations should be consolidated into the UNTAC Special Account and that the expenditures relating to both be combined. The financial accounts would be kept for the period from the inception of UNAMIC on 1 November 1991 to the end of the current UNTAC mandate on 31 July 1993.

The total cost of the two operations was currently estimated at $1,721,596,700 gross ($1,699,512,600 net). That amount comprised UNAMIC expenditures from 1 November 1991 to 14 March 1992, estimated at $20,023,200 gross ($19,777,200 net), and the full cost of UNTAC for the period 15 March 1992 to 31 July 1993, estimated at $1,701,573,500 gross ($1,679,735,400 net), inclusive of the $200 million already appropriated by the Assembly. A breakdown by object of expenditure was annexed to the report. The UNTAC estimated costs included $14 million for rehabilitation/reintegration assistance to the demobilized military forces of the Cambodian parties.

As to repatriation costs, which were not provided for, it was the Secretary-General's intention to launch a separate appeal for the further financing of this component of the operation, but he would recommend alternative arrangements should a shortfall in funding occur.

Appropriations for both missions had so far amounted to $233,576,200 gross, while assessments of $233,294,400 had been apportioned among Member States. As ACABQ was later informed,(26) payments received for both missions as at 6 May reduced the unpaid balance for UNAMIC to $8.9 million and for UNTAC to $57.6 million, or to a combined unpaid balance of $66.5 million.

Given the above figures, the Secretary-General recommended that $764,058,800 gross ($757,117,700 net) should be appropriated and apportioned for UNTAC operations through 31 October 1992. Adding the amounts already appropriated for UNAMIC and UNTAC totalling $233,576,200 gross ($233,171,300 net), the total appropriations for the combined operations of UNAMIC and UNTAC through 31 October 1992 would amount to $997,635,000 gross ($990,289,000 net).

ACABQ noted that it would have been helpful if the requirements for UNTAC for the period 15

March to 31 October 1992 had been separately indicated rather than incorporated in the estimates for 15 March 1992 to 31 July 1993, since this would have clarified the basis for the requested appropriation. Having identified a large number of areas where savings could be made, ACABQ believed that an additional appropriation and assessment of $606 million gross ($600 million net) for UNTAC through 31 October 1992 should be adequate. That figure, plus the $233.6 million gross ($233.2 million net) already appropriated would make available a total of $839.6 million gross ($833.2 million net) for UNTAC operation for the period indicated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION [May]

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/222 B on 22 May 1992 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/18 of 20 November 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 46/198 B and 46/222 A of 14 February 1992,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia, and Council resolution 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, by which the Council approved the proposal of the Secretary-General to expand the mandate of the Advance Mission, especially with regard to the provision of assistance in mine clearing by Cambodians,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, by which the Council expressed its full support for the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict (Paris agreements), signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, and Council resolution 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General of 19 February 1992 for a period not to exceed eighteen months.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting that the budgetary estimates for the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority as contained in the report of the Secretary-General amount to 1,721,596,700 United States dollars gross (1,699,512,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1991 to 31 July 1993,

Noting, also that the duration of the mandate of the Advance Mission extended from the signature of the Paris agreements until the establishment of the Transitional Authority by the Security Council, at which time the Advance Mission was absorbed into the Transitional Authority,

Recognizing that the costs of the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority, as indicated in paragraph

7 of the report of the Secretary-General, are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority with the necessary financial resources to enable them to fulfil their responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia in full and on time;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to consolidate the special account for the Advance Mission into the special account for the Transitional Authority;

4. Decides, at this stage, to appropriate, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 78 of the report of the Advisory Committee, an amount of 606 million United States dollars gross (600 million dollars net) for the operation of the Transitional Authority through 31 October 1992, in addition to the total amount of 233,576,200 dollars gross (233,171,300 dollars net) already appropriated for the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority by the General Assembly in its resolutions 46/198 A and B and 46/222 A;

5. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 606 million dollars gross (600 million dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on anomalies in the allocation of countries to the four groups set out in General Assembly resolution 43/232, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B, 45/269 and 46/198 A and applied as an ad hoc arrangement to the financing of the Transitional Authority, taking into account Assembly resolution 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly, including resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973;

7. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 6 million dollars approved for the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority;

8. Decides also to consider the contributions of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted for these Member States by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

9. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 8 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions to be determined;

10. Reiterates the need for increased use of civilian personnel provided by Governments in relevant sectors of peace-keeping operations, as called for in General Assembly resolutions 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of May 1991, and requests the Secretary-General to encourage the participation of such personnel in the civilian components of the Transitional Authority in accordance with the recommendations contained in paragraphs 24 and 25 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

11. Takes note of the views expressed by the Secretary-General in paragraph 46 of his report with respect to the repatriation programme to be undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and, since the implementation and integrity of the electoral process is dependent upon the prior repatriation of Cambodian refugees, calls upon Member States and others to make voluntary contributions in support of the repatriation programme;

12. Calls upon Member States and others to make voluntary contributions to the rehabilitation programme referred to in paragraph 47 of the report of the Secretary-General;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Authority in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A and 45/258;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Authority is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, no later than at its forty-seventh session, a report on such additional requirements as may be necessary and to include in the report detailed and up-to-date information on the performance of the Transitional Authority;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia".

General Assembly resolution 46/222 B

22 May 1992 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/46/879/Add.1) without vote, 21 May (meeting 65): draft by "Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/46/L.25), orally revised; agenda items 146 & 148.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 5th Committee 64, 65; plenary 86.

Activities

Reports of the Secretary-General (May and June). As requested by the Security Council when it established UNTAC, the Secretary-General, on 1 May 1992,(27) issued the first in a series of progress reports on UNTAC operations. It was based on his visit to Cambodia from 18 to 20 April.

According to the report, the arrival in Phnom Penh on 15 March of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Cambodia marked the initial deployment of UNTAC and UNAMIC's absorption into it. All senior officials of UNTAC had assumed their duties and its various components had begun discharging their responsibilities.

Lines of communication between UNTAC and SNC were being set up. Both agreed that a technical advisory committee, chaired by a senior UNTAC official, would be set up in some areas under UNTAC responsibility to function as an SNC subsidiary. A "hot line" service was installed on 1 April linking the Special Representative and the Force Commander with each of the four Cambodian parties.

The human rights component began its first training programmes for UNTAC police monitors in April. A quick-response mechanism, composed of members of the human rights, civil administration and police components, had been established to investigate alleged human rights violations. At its 20 April meeting, SNC acceded to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.(28) That was the first in a series of measures designed to create a free and neutral political environment within Cambodia. (For the reports of the human rights component, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

A draft electoral law presented by UNTAC was discussed by SNC at three meetings. The Advance Election Planning Unit had completed initial visits to 19 of 21 provinces for the purpose of compiling socio-demographic and cartographic data. Preparation for voter registration and polling was proceeding, but equipment procurement was being hampered by procedural requirements.

Deployment of the military component proceeded at a slower rate than expected, with 3,694 troops deployed by the end of April. Considerable difficulty was experienced in emplacing and securing necessary equipment. Of the 24 checkpoints planned (along the borders with Thailand (7) with Viet Nam (9), with the Lao People's Democratic Republic (2), at the Kompong Som and Phnom Penh ports (1 each), at the airports in Phnom Penh, Battambang, Siem Reap and Stung Treng (1 each)), 3 had been set up along the border with Viet Nam.

The cease-fire had generally been maintained, except at Kompong Thom, where the forces of all four Cambodian parties were present and where a number of armed clashes had occurred since mid-January. On 26 February, an UNTAC helicopter on reconnaissance in the area came under fire and an officer of the Australian contingent was wounded. Following an investigation, the cease-fire was restored. Up to 244 United Nations troops were later stationed at Kompong Thom. As to implementation of cease-fire measures, it was agreed to set up 55 cantonment areas: 33 for CPAF, 14 for NADK, 5 for KPMLAF and 3 for ANKI.

SNC agreed to the creation of a Cambodian Mine Action Centre to be managed by a Governing Council of five Cambodian and five UNTAC members. Six mine-clearing training teams had been deployed in north-western Cambodia. The military component had provided convoy escorts for the repatriation of refugees from camps on the Thai border and set up a security presence at each of the refugee reception centres.

The civil administration component had initiated contacts with the existing administrative structure and had drawn up operating procedures for the exercise of the right of assembly and association, which SNC approved.

At the end of April, 193 civilian police monitors had been deployed, giving priority to deployment at Sisophon and Battambang, where refugee resettlement was in progress.

The repatriation component began its activities on 30 March with the return to Cambodia of 526 refugees. As at the end of April, 5,763 persons had been repatriated. Owing to the difficulty of finding suitable land for returnee resettlement, a geographical widening of land settlement options and non-agricultural solutions for returnees were being actively pursued. (For supplementary information on the activities of UNHCR relating to the repatriation of Cambodian refugees, see PART THREE, Chapter XV.)

The Secretary-General, on 20 April, formally launched an appeal to the international community for $593 million for rehabilitation assistance in the areas of food, health services, shelter, education, training and restoration of basic infrastructure, public utilities and support institutions.

In a special report of 12 June,(29) the Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to the fact that implementation of the 1991 Paris agreements had reached a critical stage. The ability of UNTAC to adhere to the implementation of phase II of the cease-fire, scheduled to begin on 13 June, was being seriously compromised by lack of cooperation from PDK.

In preparation for phase II, the Commander of the UNTAC military component, on 9 May, obtained assurances from each of the four Cambodian parties that it would (a) grant freedom of movement to UNTAC personnel, vehicles and aircraft; (b) mark minefields in the areas it controlled; (c) provide information by 20 May on its troops, arms, ammunition and equipment; and (d) adhere to the Paris agreements, in particular not interfere with troops moving to regroupment and cantonment areas and inform its troops of the regroupment and cantonment plan.

Two parties promptly provided the information requested and a third made a bona fide effort to comply substantially. The fourth party, PDK, continued to deny full access and freedom of movement to UNTAC, preventing it from conducting reconnaissance of 6 of the 16 cantonment sites envisaged for NADK, the PDK army. It failed to provide the information requested, and also failed to mark minefields in areas under its control; it had also re-mined other areas. The PDK army was believed to have been responsible for many of the cease-fire violations that continued to occur in Kompong Thom, Kompong Cham and elsewhere.

PDK explained that, because foreign military personnel remained present in Cambodia and until their withdrawal and non-return had been verified by UNTAC, its own security required that fulfilment of its obligations had to be deferred. While firmly rejecting that view, UNTAC undertook to allay any legitimate concerns by installing 10 border checkpoints on the Cambodia-Viet Nam border, inviting the four parties to participate in manning them and launching mobile military teams to investigate any alleged presence of foreign forces. In reply to a list of such allegations submitted by PDK, UNTAC asked PDK to join it in investigating those allegations; PDK had yet to comply with that request.

Despite the unsatisfactory outcome of the SNC meetings and of his personal appeal to the PDK President on the question, the Secretary-General concluded that phase II of the cease-fire must proceed as scheduled on 13 June. Accordingly, the Special Representative was consulting the three parties which had expressed readiness to begin regroupment and cantonment of their forces, so as to ensure that the conduct of that process would minimize any military disadvantage they would suffer vis-à-vis PDK.

The Secretary-General urged every effort to persuade PDK to join the other parties in good faith in implementing the Paris agreements. He suggested that the Security Council might wish to consider what action it could take to achieve that objective.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and June)

The Security Council, on 14 May 1992,(30) took note of the Secretary-General's first progress report on UNTAC(27) and welcomed the announcement that phase II of the cease-fire arrangements would begin on 13 June.

On 12 June, the Council met to consider the Secretary-General's special report of the same date.⁽²⁹⁾ Following consultations among its members, the President made the following statement,⁽³¹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3085.

"Having read the report of the Secretary-General, the Security Council is deeply concerned by the difficulties that the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) is encountering in the implementation of the Paris agreements, on the eve of moving to the second phase of the cease-fire. In particular, the Council notes that, during the meeting of the Supreme National Council on 10 June 1992, one party was not able to allow the necessary deployment of UNTAC in areas under its control. The Council believes that any delay could jeopardize the whole peace process to which all Cambodian parties have agreed under the auspices of the United Nations and the Paris Conference.

"The Council reaffirms the importance of the full and timely implementation of the Paris agreements. The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative and UNTAC in this regard. It reaffirms that the Supreme National Council, under the chairmanship of HRH Prince Norodom Sihanouk, is the unique legitimate body and source of authority in which, throughout the transitional period, the sovereignty, independence and unity of Cambodia are enshrined. In this regard, section III of part I of the Paris agreements should be implemented as soon as possible.

"The Council stresses the need that the second phase of the military arrangements should begin on 13 June 1992, as determined in accordance with the agreements. In this connection, the Council urges the Secretary-General to accelerate the deployment of the full UNTAC peace-keeping force to Cambodia and within the country.

"The Council calls upon all parties to comply strictly with the commitments they have accepted, including cooperation with UNTAC. It specifically calls upon all parties to respond affirmatively to the latest demands for cooperation in implementation of the agreements put to them by UNTAC."

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In a second special report, of 14 July 1992,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, as at 10 July, the armies of the four Cambodian parties had cantoned 13,512 of their troops, as follows: CPAF, 9,003; ANKI, 3,187; KPNLAF, 1,322; NADK, 0. As the data showed, PDK had so far failed to canton any of its troops. It had moreover failed to grant UNTAC free and unrestricted access to the zones it controlled, to mark the minefields there and to stop cease-fire violations. It insisted on making its compliance with those obligations conditional upon verification of the withdrawal from and non-return to Cambodia of foreign forces and strengthening the role and powers of SNC according to its interpretations of those provisions.

An 11-point informal proposal for discussion to meet some of PDK's concerns was accordingly put forward at a Ministerial Conference on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia (Tokyo, 20 and 22 June). The proposal was drawn up by the five permanent Security Council members, the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference on Cambodia⁽¹⁾ and other Conference participants, including the Special Representative. Following its discussion by all four parties at SNC meetings (22 June, 8 July) and a working session (2 July), the proposal was accepted by all but PDK, which countered with its own proposal regarding SNC's powers and role and the administrative structures in the CPP-controlled zone. Meanwhile, UNTAC strengthened its border checkpoints and mobile military investigation teams to follow up on any reports of the presence of foreign forces or evidence of outside military assistance.

Besides giving priority to the recruitment and deployment of its civil administration staff, UNTAC actively sought PDK agreement on the establishment of a mechanism for keeping the four Cambodian parties informed of and involved with its exercise of direct control over the existing key administrative structures of foreign affairs, national defence, finance, public security and information. In this regard, PDK, through its President, Khieu Samphan, elaborated its position on the relationship between SNC and UNTAC and on UNTAC's exercise of authority in Cambodia, and called for the dissolution of the administrative structures in the CPP zone. The Special Representative explained that the Paris agreements provided that UNTAC control be exercised through the "existing administrative structures" of each of the four Cambodian parties; the Phnom Penh authorities formed part of those structures, which could not be abolished or dismantled.

The UNTAC military deployment was almost complete, with some 14,300 troops already in the country; UNTAC civilian police monitors currently numbered 1,780. A total of 50,000 refugees and displaced persons had been repatriated. Over 100 cases of human rights investigations had been successfully carried out in the CPP zone, with investigations soon to begin in the FUNCINPEC and KPNLF (BLDP) zones. The draft electoral law submitted by UNTAC to SNC in April was under extensive discussion. Pledges of $880 million had resulted from the Tokyo Ministerial Conference—substantially in excess of the $593 million appealed for.

Despite lack of cooperation from PDK, phase II of the cease-fire began on 13 June. While the regroupment and cantonment process should have been completed on 11 July, barely 5 per cent of the estimated 200,000 Cambodian troops had been cantoned by that date. In his instructions to press forward with the process wherever possible, the Special Representative was asked to ensure that the cooperating parties suffered no military disadvantage. Implementation would thus be pursued in areas posing no military confrontation; and some cantoned troops might be permitted to retain their weapons until the situation was clarified. The Secretary-General warned, however, that the process could not go on indefinitely with the cooperation of only three of the parties. He said three points needed to be considered: steps to persuade PDK to comply with its obligations under the Paris agreements; action to underscore the international community's determination to implement the agreements according to the timetable set by the Secretary-General's implementation plan; and ways to obtain the full and active support of the signatories of the agreements.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

At its meeting on 21 July 1992, the Security Council had before it, in addition to the Secretary-General's report, the texts of the Tokyo Declaration on the Cambodia Peace Process and the Tokyo Declaration on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia, issued at the conclusion of the Ministerial Conference on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia on 22 June.(33)

By the first Declaration, the Conference stressed the importance of full and timely implementation of the Paris agreements and the need for all the signatories to comply with their provisions so as to allow UNTAC to exercise, in consultation with SNC, all powers with which it was mandated by the agreements in accordance with the mechanisms and time schedule specified; and it gave a clear signal that there was full international support for the peace process and reaffirmed the importance it attached to its effective and expeditious implementation. By the second Declaration, the Conference set the guidelines for assistance in Cambodia.

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report and the foregoing texts, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 766(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, 728(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 745(1992) of 28 February 1992,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 12 June 1992,

Recalling also that any difficulty arising in the implementation of the Paris Agreements should be settled through close consultation between the SNC and UNTAC and must not be allowed to undermine the principles of these Agreements, or to delay the timetable for their implementation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 July 1992, and in particular of the fact that CPP, FUNCINPEC and KPNLF have agreed to proceed with phase II of the cease-fire as laid down in annex 2 of the first Paris Agreement and that the Party of Democratic Kampuchea has so far refused to do so,

Taking note also of the declaration on the Cambodia Peace Process adopted in Tokyo on 22 June 1992, and the other efforts made there by the countries and parties concerned for the implementation of the Paris Agreements,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the difficulties met by UNTAC in the implementation of the Paris Agreements;

2. Underlines that all signatories of the Agreements are bound by all their obligations thereunder;

3. Deplores the continuing violations of the cease-fire and urges all parties to cease all hostilities forthwith, to cooperate fully with UNTAC in the marking of all minefields and to refrain from any deployment, movement or other action intended to extend the territory they control or which might lead to renewed fighting;

4. Reaffirms the international community's firm commitment to a process under which UNTAC, operating freely throughout all of Cambodia as authorized by the Paris Agreements, can verify the departure of all foreign forces and ensure full implementation of the Agreements;

5. Demands that all parties respect the peaceful nature of UNTAC's mission and take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of all United Nations personnel;

6. Urges all parties to cooperate with UNTAC in broadcasting information helpful to implementation of the Paris Agreements;

7. Strongly deplores the continuing refusal by one of the parties to permit the necessary deployment of all components of UNTAC to the areas under its control to enable UNTAC to carry out its full functions in the implementation of the Paris Agreements;

8. Urges all States, in particular neighbouring countries, to provide assistance to UNTAC to ensure the effective implementation of the Paris Agreements;

9. Approves the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue to Implement the Agreements despite the difficulties;

10. Invites in particular the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to accelerate the deployment of UNTAC's civilian components, especially the component mandated to supervise or control the existing administrative structures;

11. Demands that the Party that has failed so far to do so permit without delay the deployment of UNTAC in the areas under its control, and implement fully phase II of the plan as well as the other aspects of the Paris Agreements;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to ensure that international assistance to the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia from now on only benefits the parties which are fulfilling their obligations under the Paris Agreements and cooperating fully with UNTAC;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 766(1992)

21 July 1992 Meeting 3099 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24320).

Report of the Secretary-General (September). According to the Secretary-General's second progress report, of 21 September 1992,(34) UNTAC continued to enjoy the full cooperation of the SNC President. Its relations with SNC had generally been harmonious and productive despite constraints from the failure of PDK to participate fully in the peace process.

The human rights component remained active in three broad areas: encouraging SNC to adhere to international human rights instruments and reviewing existing judicial and penal systems in the light of those instruments; mounting an extensive human rights information and education campaign; and investigating complaints related to human rights, taking corrective measures where applicable. Of the 250 complaints it had examined of harassment and intimidation, arbitrary arrest, wrongful injury or death and destruction of property, it referred 130 to other UNTAC components and found 13 unsubstantiated. It began work on prison reform; since the creation of a Prisons Control Commission, 258 detainees had been released by August.

The electoral component had deployed some 150 international staff at UNTAC headquarters and in the provinces, and 400 United Nations Volunteers at the district level. It was in the process of deploying some 1,000 locally recruited staff. The draft electoral law, having been amended, was finally adopted and promulgated by SNC on 12 August. The amendments related to the definition of "Cambodian persons" entitled to register and to overseas voting by Cambodians. Provisional registration of political parties began on 15 August. Voter registration was scheduled to begin in October. According to latest estimates, the voting population was about 5 million—larger than the previously estimated 4.3 million.

The electoral component was currently examining a proposal to hold a presidential election simultaneously with the election for a constituent assembly. Since such an election was not provided for in the Paris agreements, it would require Security Council authorization and additional resources.

The almost fully deployed military component had a strength of about 15,100 all ranks, with 12 infantry battalions, military observers, engineers, signals, naval, air and other elements. It completed setting up nine checkpoints on Cambodia's border with Viet Nam, two on the border with the Lao People's Democratic Republic and seven on the border with Thailand. It also installed checkpoints at airports and at the port of Sihanoukville, as well as on all major routes. It reported several incidents of firings at UNTAC helicopters, believed to have come from areas under PDK control, which remained inaccessible to UNTAC. On 17 September, NADK, after an absence of three months, rejoined the Mixed Military Working Group, the mechanism to resolve cease-fire issues.

As at 10 September, 52,292 Cambodian troops had been cantoned, as follows: CPAF, 42,368; ANKI, 3,445; KPNLAF, 6,479; NADK, 0. Approximately 50,000 weapons had been taken into custody. Eleven mine-clearance training centres had been established and had fully trained some 850 soldiers. About 350 were currently employed by UNTAC in mine-clearance activities.

The civil administration component had completed deployment of some 200 international and 600 locally recruited staff. With the exception of PDK, each party had submitted a list of its current laws for UNTAC review. At UNTAC's initiative, SNC adopted laws enshrining the rights of freedom of association and assembly. It also approved a set of principles relating to the legal system, penal law and penal procedure, setting minimum standards applicable throughout Cambodia. On 1 July, the component, whose personnel were deployed in Phnom Penh's ministries of foreign affairs, national defence, public security, finance and information, began to exercise full control over those key administrative areas. By 15 July, UNTAC civil administration offices were in operation in all 21 provinces.

Activities in foreign affairs related to issuance of entry visas to Cambodia, passport and identity card validation, and control over foreign aid. Investigations in national defence revealed a high level of SOC (formerly CPP) political activity within the armed forces, which had to be curtailed. In public security, the Public Security Service, in addition to compiling existing laws and modifying those found to be incompatible with the Paris agreements, had drafted codes of conduct. Direct control over finance had been fully established by early September, which extended to individual expenditures and to main sources of revenue, such as customs duties. Financial controls were also being exercised in the FUNCINPEC and KPNLF (BLDP) zones. In information, the component drafted a media charter governing freedom of the press and media rights and obligations for consideration by a media working group composed of the Cambodian parties. The Inquiries and Complaints Service, working with the civilian police, electoral and human rights components, had processed some 50 information-related complaints.

The civilian police component, comprising 2,500 police officers (out of a projected strength of 3,600), had extended its activities to all provinces. It had established a highly visible presence in Phnom Penh and at the provincial level, and was setting up police stations in the districts and conducting regular patrols in the villages. It also maintained a permanent presence in the FUNCINPEC and KPNLF (BLDP) zones. PDK had begun cooperating with the UNTAC police in seven Cambodian provinces under its control.

Since 30 March, more than 115,000 refugees and displaced Cambodians had been repatriated under the auspices of UNHCR, the lead agency of the repatriation component. With repatriations expected to rise from 30,000 to 40,000 monthly during the coming dry season, the remaining 250,000 refugees would very likely be repatriated in time to take part in the elections. PDK had neither obstructed nor interfered with the 35,000 or so persons who returned to Cambodia from camps under its control; in fact, it had cooperated in certain respects with the repatriation process.

While PDK had initially refused to cooperate with the SNC Technical Advisory Committee set up to facilitate approval of rehabilitation projects by consensus, it had adopted a more positive attitude following the Tokyo Ministerial Conference. Ten programmes of more than $187 million presented by UNTAC in July were approved by the SNC President. The largest of these was a three-year programme of cooperation ($89 million), to be funded and executed by the United Nations Children's Fund, aimed at improving drinking-water supply and sanitation, schools, health services and food security. The second largest was an aide-mémoire for an Asian Development Bank loan ($74.4 million), covering projects in transport, power, agriculture and education. By September, SNC had approved 13 other programmes totalling over $42 million. A recommendation for a country-wide moratorium on the export of logs from Cambodia was under consideration.

Through UNTAC's information campaign, its activities were becoming increasingly familiar to Cambodians throughout the country. In the six months since its inception and despite constraints imposed by PDK's refusal to participate fully in the peace process, UNTAC had made substantial strides towards its goals. As a result, the Secretary-General remained determined that the electoral process should be carried out as scheduled. As to PDK's failure to meet its obligations under the Paris agreements, he made known his intention, subject to Security Council approval, to request the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference on Cambodia to undertake, within a definite time-frame, consultations with the aim of breaking the current impasse, or, failing that, exploring steps to ensure the realization of the agreements' fundamental objectives.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 29 September 1992,⁽³⁵⁾ the President of the Security Council notified the Secretary-General that a number of Council members required some time to study his report to determine what action was required.

The Council met on 13 October, when it unanimously adopted resolution 783(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992 and 766(1992) of 21 July 1992,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 12 June 1992,

Recalling also the declaration on the Cambodia peace process adopted in Tokyo on 22 June 1992,

Paying tribute to His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, President of the Supreme National Council, for his efforts to restore peace and national unity in Cambodia,

Taking note of the cooperation extended to UNTAC, by the parties of SOC, FUNCINPEC and KPNLF, and of the fact that the PDK still fails to meet obligations it assumed when it signed the Paris Agreements, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 September 1992,

Reaffirming that UNTAC must have full and unrestricted access to the areas controlled by each of the parties,

Welcoming the achievements of UNTAC in the implementation of the Paris Agreements, concerning, inter alia, military deployment almost throughout the whole country, the promulgation of the electoral law, the provisional registration of political parties, the beginning of voter registration, safe repatriation of over 150,000 refugees, progress in rehabilitation programmes and projects and the campaign in favour of respect for human rights,

Welcoming the accession of the SNC to a number of international human rights conventions,

Welcoming also the progress made by UNTAC in strengthening supervision and control over administrative structures as set out in the Paris Agreements, and recognizing the importance of this part of UNTAC's mandate,

Welcoming further the fact that the SNC functions in accordance with the Paris Agreements,

Expressing appreciation to the States and international financial institutions which announced, during the Tokyo Conference on 22 June 1992, financial contributions to Cambodia's reconstruction and rehabilitation,

Expressing its gratitude to the Governments of Thailand and Japan for their efforts to find solutions to the current problems relating to the implementation of the Paris Agreements,

Deeply concerned by difficulties faced by UNTAC caused in particular by security and economic conditions in Cambodia,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Confirms that, in conformity with paragraph 66 of the report, the electoral process shall be carried out in accordance with the timetable laid down in the implementation plan and thus that the election for a constituent assembly will be held no later than May 1993;
3. Supports the intention of the Secretary-General, expressed in paragraph 67 of his report, concerning the checkpoints in the country and along its borders with neighbouring countries;
4. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for their efforts as well as to Member States which have cooperated with UNTAC in order to solve the difficulties it has met and urges all States, in particular neighbouring countries, to provide assistance to UNTAC to ensure the effective implementation of the Paris Agreements;
5. Deplores the fact that the PDK, ignoring the requests and demands contained in its resolution 766(1992), has not yet complied with its obligations;

6. Demands that the party mentioned in paragraph 5 fulfil immediately its obligations under the Paris Agreements; that it facilitate without delay full deployment of UNTAC in the areas under its control; and that it implement fully phase II of the plan, particularly cantonment and demobilization, as well as all other aspects of the Paris Agreements, taking into account that all parties in Cambodia have the same obligations to implement the Paris Agreements;
7. Demands full respect for the cease-fire, calls upon all parties in Cambodia to cooperate fully with UNTAC to identify minefields and to refrain from any activity aimed at enlarging the territory under their control, and further demands that these parties facilitate UNTAC investigations of reports of foreign forces, foreign assistance and cease-fire violations within the territory under their control;
8. Reiterates its demands that all parties take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of all United Nations personnel and refrain from any threat or violent act against them;
9. Emphasizes, in accordance with article 12 of the Paris Agreements, the importance of the elections being held in a neutral political environment, encourages the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue their efforts to create such an environment, and in that context requests, in particular, that the UNTAC radio broadcast facility be established without delay and with access to the whole territory of Cambodia;
10. Encourages the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to make use fully of all possibilities offered by UNTAC's mandate, including annex 1, section B, paragraph 5 (b), of the Paris Agreements to enhance the effectiveness of existing civil police in resolving the growing problems relating to the maintenance of law and order in Cambodia;
11. Invites States and international financial institutions to make available as soon as possible the contributions they had already announced during the Tokyo Conference on 22 June 1992, giving priority to those which produce quick impact;
12. Invites the Governments of Thailand and Japan, in cooperation with the Co-Chairmen and in consultation with any other Government as appropriate, to continue their efforts to find solutions to the current problems relating to the implementation of the Paris Agreements and to report to the Secretary-General and the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference by 31 October 1992 on the outcome of their efforts;
13. Invites the Secretary-General, in accordance with the intention expressed in paragraph 70 of his report, to ask the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference immediately on receipt of the report referred to in paragraph 12 of this resolution to undertake appropriate consultations with a view to implementing fully the peace process;
14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council as soon as possible, and no later than 15 November 1992, on the implementation of this resolution and, if the present difficulties have not been overcome, undertakes to consider what further steps are necessary and appropriate to ensure the realization of the fundamental objectives of the Paris Agreements;
15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 783(1992)

13 October 1992 Meeting 3124 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24652).

Report of the Secretary-General (November).

On 15 November,(36) the Secretary-General reported on the outcome of efforts to find solutions to the full implementation of the Paris agreements. Japan and Thailand, responding to the Security Council's invitation of 13 October to continue such efforts, held further tripartite consultations with PDK so as to meet the central concerns it had repeatedly raised regarding (1) verification of foreign troop withdrawal and non-return; and (2) strengthening the role of SNC and the effective supervision and control of existing administrative structures.

At the first such consultation (Bangkok, 17 July), PDK noted that UNTAC had made considerable progress in meeting the first point but that measures taken to address the second were unsatisfactory. Based on an assessment of PDK's contention regarding the second point, Japan and Thailand, at a second consultation (Bangkok, 22 August), suggested that an Administrative Consultative Body be set up under UNTAC auspices to deliberate on any requests, suggestions and possible complaints regarding all administrative matters related to UNTAC control of existing administrative structures stipulated in the Paris agreements. The new body would be set up when all the Cambodia parties entered into phase II of the cease-fire. At a third consultation (Bangkok, 27 August), PDK merged that suggestion with its own proposal for the creation of consultative committees within the existing administrative structures and the police forces of all the Cambodia parties. Viewing the conditions under which those committees were to be created as going beyond the framework of the Paris agreements, Japan and Thailand suggested that they be set up instead as subsidiaries of the proposed Administrative Consultative Body.

In a revised suggestion designed to ensure the neutrality of administrative actions, Japan and Thailand proposed that, in addition to the system of bodies made up of the Administrative Consultative Body and Consultative Committees as regional subsidiaries, UNTAC would keep SNC meticulously informed every month of its activities in supervising and controlling existing administrative structures. The revised suggestion was handed to PDK (Phnom Penh, 22 October) for discussion at a fourth consultation (Phnom Penh, 29 October), to which representatives of the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference on Cambodia and UNTAC were invited as observers. Rather than address the contents of the revised suggestion at that consultation, PDK once again reverted to talking about the broader context of implementation of the Paris agreements as an integral whole as the fundamental issue to be addressed, making it difficult, if not impossible, to pinpoint specific remedial measures. In the circumstances, Japan and Thailand concluded that the tripartite consultations were no longer the appropriate means to address the impasse in the peace process.

The Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference, responding also to the Council's request that they undertake appropriate consultations, did so (Beijing, China, 7 and 8 November) with the SNC President, the Special Representative and heads of the four Cambodian parties, together with the permanent members of the Security Council, Australia, Germany, Japan and Thailand. It became clear from the consultations that three parties—FUNCINPEC, KPNLF (BLDP) and soc (CPP)—remained fully committed to implementing the peace process. PDK, on the other hand, confirmed that it was still not prepared to cooperate so long as what it claimed to be improper implementation of certain aspects of the agreements was not resolved, specifically as to the verification of foreign (Vietnamese) troop withdrawal and their non-return and the status and functioning of SNC. It would not take part in the electoral process and in subsequent elections so long as a neutral political condition as provided for in the Paris agreements was not ensured.

The Co-Chairmen thus offered several courses of action for consideration by the Council: to reaffirm that the peace process must continue to be implemented and that the timetable leading to elections in April/May 1993 must be maintained; to call on PDK to comply with its obligations; to leave the door open to that party to rejoin the process; to adjust the implementation plan so as to ensure realization of the fundamental objectives of the Paris agreements; to ask the Secretary-General to take steps to complete the establishment of checkpoints; to appeal to the general public and to all the parties to ensure the safety and security of all United Nations personnel; and to define measures to be taken against PDK should it hamper the continuation of the peace plan.

The Co-Chairmen also drew attention to the strong interest expressed by FUNCINPEC, KPNLF and SOC in an election by universal suffrage of a Cambodian head of State, in addition to the general elections for a constituent assembly. A presidential election would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and provide an anchor of stability in the interim period after the general elections and before a new Government of Cambodia could emerge.

Having weighed the practical consequences of the alternatives—putting the process on hold until PDK cooperation was obtained, or withdrawing UNTAC in the conclusion that it was impossible to pursue the process—the Secretary-General concurred with the Co-Chairmen that implementation of the peace process must continue and that the timetable leading to free and fair elections no later than May 1993 must be maintained. This meant that the required demobilization by election time of at least 70 per cent of all Cambodian troops would not be met and that the population in the PDK-controlled areas would be deprived of the opportunity to vote. It also meant that the projected reduction of the UNTAC military component would no longer be feasible. Accordingly, he proposed that the component's present level of deployment be maintained until the elections, so as to foster a general sense of security and enhance the component's ability to protect the electoral process. He would report shortly on the financial implications of that adjustment.

In the meantime, UNTAC would continue to maintain active dialogue with PDK with a view to persuading it to comply with its obligations under the Paris agreements. It would remain prepared to accommodate PDK's entry into the process as long as that was feasible.

As to UNTAC operations, about a million Cambodians had been registered since voter registration began on 5 October. Information to encourage the broadest participation in the elections was being disseminated by radio. The civilian police component had reached a strength of 3,400 police personnel, of which up to 65 per cent were engaged full time in voter registration. The component was also engaged in training local police in basic police methods, including traffic control and implementation of the new penal code, and in cooperating with the human rights and civil administration components on public security issues.

Scattered cease-fire and human rights violations continued to be reported. The recent past had seen a disturbing number of what appeared to be politically motivated acts of harassment, intimidation and violence and an increase in banditry and crime. After a period of relative quiet during the rainy season, tension increased in the central and northern parts of Cambodia following a series of artillery exchanges. Attacks on UNTAC personnel had also increased, such as firings on its helicopters and an attack on 7 November on the village of Choan Khsan, Preah Vihear province, forcing UNTAC to evacuate an electoral team and 11 civilian police monitors. Some 55,000 Cambodian troops had entered canton sites and handed over their weapons. While PDK had ordered its troops not to canton, some 200 of its army had spontaneously presented themselves to UNTAC.

UNTAC continued to devote serious attention to the question of foreign forces, although it had found no evidence of the presence of any formed units of such forces in areas to which it had access. None the less, it was drawing up plans to strengthen border controls. In the light of recent killings of Vietnamese-speaking villagers and fishermen in Tuk Meas village and in Koh Kong province, the issue of foreign residents and immigrants had become a matter of deep concern to many Cambodians. Investigations indicated that NADK was responsible for the killings. UNTAC was therefore considering setting up a technical advisory committee to gather factual information for discussion at SNC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

Following its consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council, on 30 November, adopted resolution 792(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, 766(1992) of 21 July 1992 and 783(1992) of 13 October 1992,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 15 November 1992 in response to its resolution 783(1992),

Paying tribute to His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, President of the Supreme National Council, for his continuing efforts to restore peace and national unity in Cambodia,

Reaffirming its commitment to implement the Paris Agreements and its determination to maintain the implementation timetable of the peace process, leading to elections for a constituent assembly in April/May 1993, the adoption of a constitution and the formation of a new Cambodian Government thereafter,

Recognizing the need for all Cambodian parties, the States concerned and the Secretary-General to maintain close dialogue in order to implement the peace process effectively,

Recalling that all Cambodians have, in accordance with article 12 of the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, the right to determine their own political future through the free and fair election of a constituent assembly and that political parties wishing to participate in the election can be formed in accordance with paragraph 5 of annex 3 to the Agreement,

Noting the discussion during the consultations held in Peking on 7 and 8 November 1992 by the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference regarding a presidential election, and the views of the Co-Chairmen shared by the Secretary-General that such an election could contribute to the process of national reconciliation and help to reinforce the climate of stability in Cambodia,

Welcoming the achievements of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNTAC in the implementation of the Paris Agreements,

Welcoming in particular the good progress made in voter registration,

Welcoming also the efforts of UNTAC to strengthen its relationship with the Supreme National Council (SNC) and its supervision and control over the existing administrative structures, inter alia, to ensure the widest possible agreement on essential regulations for elections, natural resources, rehabilitation, national heritage and human rights, on relations with the international financial institutions, and on the question of foreign residents and immigrants,

Noting also the efforts of UNTAC to address the concerns raised by the PDK, including steps to verify the withdrawal of all foreign forces, advisers and military personnel from Cambodia, close cooperation between UNTAC and the SNC as the embodiment of Cambodian sovereignty, the creation of Technical Advisory Committees to advise the SNC and UNTAC, the extension of UNTAC supervision and control over the five key administrative areas mandated in the Paris Agreements in the areas to which UNTAC has access, and the creation of Working Groups in these areas to enable the parties to be involved in and informed about UNTAC's activities in these five key areas,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of Japan and Thailand to find solutions to current problems relating to the implementation of the Paris Agreements,

Expressing also its appreciation for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference, in consultations with all parties pursuant to resolution 783(1992) to find a way to implement fully the Paris Agreements,

Deplored the failure of the PDK to meet its obligations under the Paris Agreements, notably as regards unrestricted access by UNTAC to the areas under PDK control for voter registration and other purposes of the Agreements and as regards the application of phase II of the cease-fire concerning cantonment and demobilization of its forces,

Deplored recent violations of the cease-fire and their implications for the security situation in Cambodia, emphasizing the importance of maintaining the cease-fire and calling on all parties to comply with their obligations in this regard,

Condemning attacks against UNTAC, in particular the recent firings upon UNTAC helicopters and on electoral registration personnel,

Concerned by the economic situation in Cambodia and its impact on the implementation of the Paris Agreements,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General dated 15 November 1992;

2. Confirm that the election for a constituent assembly in Cambodia will be held not later than May 1993;

3. Notes the decision of the Secretary-General to instruct his Special Representative to make contingency plans for the organization and conduct by UNTAC of a presidential election, and moreover, noting that such an election must be held in conjunction with the planned election for a constituent assembly, requests the Secretary-General to submit any recommendations for the holding of such an election to the Council for decision;

4. Calls upon all Cambodian parties to cooperate fully with UNTAC to create a neutral political environment for the conduct of free and fair elections and prevent acts of harassment, intimidation and political violence;

5. Determines that UNTAC shall proceed with preparations for free and fair elections to be held in April/May 1993 in all areas of Cambodia to which UNTAC has full and free access as at 31 January 1993;

6. Calls on the Supreme National Council to continue to meet regularly under the chairmanship of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk;

7. Condemns the failure by the PDK to comply with its obligations;

8. Demands that the PDK fulfil immediately its obligations under the Paris Agreements; that it facilitate without delay full deployment of UNTAC in the areas under its control; that it not impede voter registration in those areas; that it not impede the activities of other political parties in those areas; and that it implement fully phase II of the cease-fire, particularly cantonment and demobilization, as well as all other aspects of the Paris Agreements, taking into account that all parties in Cambodia have the same obligations to implement the Paris Agreements;

9. Urges the PDK to join fully in the implementation of the Paris Agreements, including the electoral provisions, and requests the Secretary-General and States concerned to remain ready to continue dialogue with the PDK for this purpose;

10. Calls on those concerned to ensure that measures are taken, consistent with the provisions of article VII of annex 2 to the Paris Agreements, to prevent the supply of petroleum products to the areas occupied by any Cambodian party not complying with the military provisions of those Agreements and requests the Secretary-General to examine the modalities of such measures;

11. Undertakes to consider appropriate measures to be implemented should the PDK obstruct the implementation of the peace plan, such as the freezing of the assets held by the PDK outside Cambodia;

12. Invites UNTAC to establish all necessary border checkpoints, requests neighbouring States to cooperate fully in the establishment and maintenance of those checkpoints and requests the Secretary-General to undertake immediate consultations with States concerned regarding their establishment and operation;

13. Supports the decision of the Supreme National Council dated 22 September 1992 to set a moratorium on the export of logs from Cambodia in order to protect Cambodia's natural resources; requests States, especially neighbouring States, to respect this moratorium by not importing such logs; and requests UNTAC to take appropriate measures to secure the implementation of such moratorium;

14. Requests the Supreme National Council to consider the adoption of a similar moratorium on the export of minerals and gems in order to protect Cambodia's natural resources;

15. Demands that all parties comply with their obligations to observe the cease-fire and calls upon them to exercise restraint;

16. Requests UNTAC to continue to monitor the cease-fire and to take effective measures to prevent the recurrence or escalation of fighting in Cambodia, as well as incidents of banditry and arms smuggling;

17. Demands also that all parties take all action necessary to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel throughout Cambodia including by issuing immediate instructions to this effect to their commanders forthwith and reporting their action to the Special Representative;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the implications for the electoral process of the failure by the PDK to canton and demobilize its forces and, in response to this situation, to take all appropriate steps to ensure the successful implementation of the electoral process;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to investigate and report upon the implications for security in post-election Cambodia of the possible incomplete implementation of the disarmament and demobilization provisions of the Paris Agreements;

20. Invites the States and international organizations providing economic assistance to Cambodia to convene a meeting to review the current state of economic assistance to Cambodia in the wake of the Conference on Reconstruction and Rehabilitation of Cambodia held in Tokyo in June 1992;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council as soon as possible and no later than 15 February 1993 on the implementation of this resolution, and on any further measures that may be necessary and appropriate to ensure the realization of the fundamental objectives of the Paris Agreements;

22. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 792(1992)

30 November 1992 Meeting 3143 14-0-1

6-nation draft (S/24865).

Sponsors: Belgium, France, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Cape Verde, Ecuador, France, Hungary, India, Japan, Morocco, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

Explaining its abstention, China said it agreed with some of the elements of the draft resolution, such as the call on the parties to fulfil their commitments to the cease-fire and to exercise restraint. It also contained elements, however, that China felt were at variance with the Paris agreements: sanctions and a three-party election. The first would further increase differences and sharpen contradictions, and thus could lead to new, complicated problems. The second could have possible adverse consequences, regarding which China was deeply anxious. It added that sanctions could affect neighbouring States, in which case their sovereignty should be respected and their opinions on the matter fully heeded.

Financing (December)

In December 1992,(37) the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly containing details of additional resource requirements for UNTAC, including updated information on its financial performance.

The report indicated outstanding assessments, as at 31 October, of $4,935,000 for UNAMIC and $210,928,300 for UNTAC, or a combined total of $215,863,300. As ACABQ was later informed during its review of the report, that total had been reduced to $215,211,000 as at 30 November.

Voluntary contributions in kind were received as follows: three medium transport aircraft and six utility helicopters with an estimated value of $29.9 million, which had been budgeted for; 1.5 million meals with an estimated value of $570,000, not budgeted for; and air ambulance service, not utilized during the period under review. Other contributions (television sets, videotape recorders, portable generators plus spare parts, emergency health kits) were currently of undetermined value.

The financial performance of UNTAC for the period 1 November 1991 to 31 October 1992 showed a revised apportionment for the combined UNAMIC and UNTAC operations of $677,215,400 gross ($672,215,300 net) compared to the initial apportionment of $839,561,200 gross ($833,156,300 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $162,345,800 gross ($160,941,000 net) for the period. That balance was accounted for in large part by substantial savings under premises and accommodation ($81.3 million), late deployment of military contingents ($23.8 million) and of international and local staff ($10.6 million), and savings in air and surface freight ($26.7 million).

The Secretary-General estimated the requirements for the nine-month period from 1 November 1992 to 31 July 1993 at $925,802,500 gross ($906,632,100 net). The requirements were indicated separately for the six-month period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993 in the amount of $633,961,200 gross ($620,808,500 net) and the subsequent three-month period from 1 May to 31 July 1993 in the amount of $291,841,300 gross ($285,823,600 net).

The revised cost estimates for the period from 1 November 1991 to 31 July 1993 amounted to $1,603,018,000 gross ($1,578,847,500 net), representing a reduction of $118,578,700 gross ($120,665,100 net) from the initial cost estimates submitted in May.(25)

In addition, the Secretary-General noted that contingency plans were being drawn up for the organization and conduct by UNTAC of an election for a head of State of Cambodia, to be held in conjunction with the planned election for a constituent assembly. That would require, in due course, Security Council authorization and additional resources.

In summary, the Secretary-General recommended: an appropriation, and apportionment, of $633,961,200 gross ($620,808,500 net) for the continued operation of UNTAC from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993; a decision to credit to Member States the unencumbered balance of $162,345,800 gross ($160,941,000 net) in respect of the period 1 November 1991 to 31 October 1992 against their assessments for the period beginning on 1 November 1992; and commitment authorization in the amount of $291,841,300 gross ($285,823,600 net) for UNTAC's continued operation from 1 May to 31 July 1993 and for the apportionment thereof.

In its review of the Secretary-General's report and the additional information provided by his representatives, ACABQ(38) took account of the unencumbered balance from the initial period and identified a number of budget items where savings could be achieved. It thus reduced the cost estimates by $200 million, recommending that the Assembly appropriate and assess an additional amount of $483,961,200 gross ($470,808,500 net) for the continued operation of UNTAC from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993; and provide commitment authorization not to exceed $241,841,300 gross ($235,823,600 net) for 1 May to 31 July 1993, with prior ACABQ concurrence.

ACABQ further recommended that the Secretary-General be permitted the usual flexibility to transfer credits between items of expenditure as necessary, adding that, should he experience difficulties with the reduced level of resources, he might submit additional requirements to address any eventual shortfall. ACABQ also concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal for the disposition of the unencumbered balance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 22 December 1992, adopted resolution 47/209 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/18 of 20 November 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 46/198 B and 46/222 A of 14 February 1992 and 46/222 B of 22 May 1992,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia, and Council resolution 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, by which the Council approved the proposal of the Secretary-General to expand the mandate of the Advance Mission, especially with regard to the provision of assistance in mine clearing by Cambodians,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, by which the Council expressed its full support for the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict (Paris agreements), signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, and Council resolution 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General of 19 February 1992, for a period not to exceed eighteen months,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 766(1992) of 21 July 1992, by which the Council approved the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue to implement the Paris agreements despite the difficulties,

Taking note also of Security Council resolutions 783(1992) of 13 October 1992 and 792(1992) of 30 November 1992, by which the Council confirmed that the electoral process should be carried out in accordance with the timetable laid down in the implementation plan and thus that the election for a constituent assembly would be held no later than May 1993,

Taking further note of Security Council resolution 792(1992), by which the Council requested the Secretary-General to submit any recommendations for the holding of a presidential election to the Council for decision,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting that the revised budgetary estimates for the Advance Mission and for the Transitional Authority as contained in the report of the Secretary-General amount to 1,603,018,000 United States dollars gross (1,578,847,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1991 to 31 July 1993, a reduction of 118,578,700 dollars gross (120,665,100 dollars net) from the initial cost estimates contained in the previous report of the Secretary-General,

Noting also that the duration of the mandate of the Advance Mission extended from the signature of the Paris agreements until the establishment of the Transitional Authority by the Security Council, at which time the Advance Mission was absorbed into the Transitional Authority,

Recognizing that the costs of the Advance Mission and of the Transitional Authority are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Authority with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority by certain Governments,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia in full and on time;

3. Decides, at this stage, to appropriate, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 62 of the report of the Advisory Committee, an amount of 483,961,200 dollars gross (470,808,500 dollars net) for the continued operation of the Transitional Authority for the period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993, in addition to the amount of 839,576,200 dollars gross (833,171,300 dollars net) already appropriated for the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority;

4. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 483,961,200 dollars gross (470,808,500 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

5. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 4 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 13,152,700 dollars approved for the Transitional Authority;

6. Decides that the unencumbered balance of 162,345,800 dollars gross (160,941,000 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 November 1991 to 31 October 1992 shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States as provided for in paragraph 4 above;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Transitional Authority at a rate not to exceed 241,841,300 dollars gross (235,823,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 May to 31 July 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

8. Decides to consider the contributions of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to the Transitional Authority in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-seventh session;

9. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 8 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

10. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Authority in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Authority is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a detailed performance report on the budget of the Transitional Authority, including the planned disposal of the assets of the operation;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia".

General Assembly resolution 47/209

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/824) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/46/L.15); agenda item 123.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 46, 50; plenary 93.

Personnel safety

After consultations among the members of the Security Council, its President, in a statement to the press on 2 December 1992, expressed the Council's deep concern and outrage over the increasing number of attacks against United Nations personnel serving in various peace-keeping operations. Among these were two military and four naval observers serving with UNTAC, who were illegally detained by NADK in Kompong Thom province on 1 December. An UNTAC helicopter, sent to assist in their release, was fired upon, injuring a military observer on board. Also, on 2 December, six UNTAC civilian police monitors were injured in two land-mine incidents in Siem Reap province. Another instance of illegal detention occurred on 20 December, followed by release the next day.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Council met on 22 December and, following consultations among its members, the President was authorized to make the following statement(39) on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3153.

"The Security Council strongly condemns the illegal detention of UNTAC personnel by elements of the Party of Democratic Kampuchea and acts of threat and intimidation against these personnel. It demands that such actions and any other hostile acts against UNTAC cease immediately, and that all parties take all action necessary to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel throughout Cambodia.

"The Council urges all the parties to abide scrupulously by their obligations under the Paris Agreement to cooperate fully with UNTAC and to respect all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council."

South Asia

Papua New Guinea-Solomon Islands

On 17 September 1992,(1) Solomon Islands drew to the attention of the President of the Security Council an act of aggression by the armed forces of neighbouring Papua New Guinea that violated its territorial integrity and caused the death of two of its citizens, the abduction of another and the wounding of a child. It requested the Council to take several actions, including a call on Papua New Guinea to offer a public apology, to return the abducted citizen, to pay compensation for liabilities resulting from the aggression and to seek a peaceful resolution to the crisis, as well as a request for an investigation of the incident by the good offices of the Secretary-General.

The incident, which occurred on 12 September, was a spillover from an ongoing secessionist movement on Bougainville, an island in Papua New Guinea's North Solomons province. Papua New Guinea, which withdrew from the island as a result of an uprising in 1989, imposed a strict military blockade in 1990 that resulted in continuing allegations of human rights violations (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

The Council informally considered the matter on 24 September, when the President reported that Papua New Guinea had already addressed several of the points raised by Solomon Islands and had proposed that the two Governments enter into a formal agreement governing all aspects of their relations, a fact confirmed by Papua New Guinea on 29 September.(2) The Council concurred that the matter should be resolved through bilateral talks as quickly as possible.

To encourage such a dialogue and to express United Nations concern for the security of small island States, the Secretary-General, on his own initiative, dispatched a good-will mission to Solomon Islands and neighbouring States from 2 to 15 November.

In December, Solomon Islands informed the United Nations that the two Governments were in the process of agreeing to resume their dialogue in January 1993 at several levels. The talks would be aimed at an eventual formal agreement on the maintenance of their common maritime borders.

Southern and Western Asia

Afghanistan situation

Early in 1992, the Secretary-General, through his Personal Representative in Afghanistan and Pakistan, set in motion arrangements for the convening of an Afghan gathering for the purpose of reaching agreement on a transition period and mechanism that would lead to the establishment of a broad-based Government through free and fair elections. This was in response to the 1991 General Assembly request(1) that he and his Personal Representative continue to encourage and facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of the 1988 Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan.(2)

Those efforts, however, were quickly overtaken by political and military events in Afghanistan that led to the installation of a new Government in April, when the proposed Afghan gathering was to take place. The change of government led not only to massive voluntary repatriations of Afghans from Iran and Pakistan, but also to wide-scale fighting among various factions that erupted in July and August in and around Kabul, accompanied by heavy rocket attacks on the city. The repatriations increased the country's humanitarian needs. The assault on Kabul caused a large number of casualties, vast material damage and hundreds of thousands of city residents to flee their homes and become displaced.

(For information on emergency international assistance for the reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan and the activities of the Office for the Coordination of United Nations Economic and Humanitarian Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan; on human rights violations there; and on the Afghan refugee situation, see PART THREE, Chapters III, X and XV, respectively.)

Statements by the Secretary-General. In a statement delivered at Geneva on 10 April, the Secretary-General, referring to the round of consultations carried out by his Personal Representative, stated that the proposal for convening an Afghan gathering had received widespread support among the Afghans consulted, including political, religious and tribal leaders, resistance commanders and prominent Afghan personalities residing in Afghanistan, in Islamabad and Peshawar (Pakistan) and in Tehran (Iran), as well as Afghans residing outside the region. He welcomed as a major contribution to the peace process President Mohammed Najibullah's announcement on 18 March(3) of his decision not to insist on his personal participation in the proposed Afghan gathering and of his agreement that, once an understanding was reached through the United Nations process for the establishment of an interim Government in Kabul, all powers and all executive authority would be transferred to that Government as of the first day of the transition period.

An agreement in principle had accordingly been reached to establish, as soon as possible, a pre-transition council composed of impartial personalities to which all powers and all executive authority would be transferred. An Afghan gathering, combined with the one originally envisaged, would be organized to work out arrangements for the transition period and establishment of the interim Government. An understanding had also been reached that once the council assumed power in Kabul, there would be a cessation of hostilities, a declaration of general amnesty, guarantees of safety and security for all Afghans, respect for human rights, protection of property, and opening of all major routes to commercial traffic.

The Secretary-General urged appropriate international guarantees to enable the council to carry out effectively its responsibilities and that all Governments concerned recognize and support it as the legitimate authority in Afghanistan during the transition period until the interim Government was established.

The Secretary-General referred to the humanitarian response by Iran, Pakistan and the United States to his appeal of 6 April for food and funds to alleviate the suffering in Afghanistan, and urged all other Governments to respond likewise. He also urged all Afghans to set aside their differences and exercise maximum restraint in order to safeguard lives and the country's unity and territorial integrity.

In a further statement of 16 April, the Secretary-General expressed concern about events that occurred on the night of 15/16 April, including the aborted departure of President Najibullah and his taking refuge in United Nations premises in Kabul, creating a delicate situation. The Secretary-General expected that the safety of all United Nations personnel would be respected and that they would be allowed freedom of movement in and out of the country as their responsibilities required.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

After consultations held on 16 April 1992, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement(4) on behalf of the Council members:

"The members of the Security Council strongly endorse the statement on the situation in Afghanistan issued by the Secretary-General on 10 April 1992 and share the Secretary-General's concern about the recent events there expressed in his statement of 16 April 1992. In this regard, it is imperative that all concerned display restraint and support the efforts of his Personal Representative towards a political solution to the Afghanistan crisis, to which there is no viable alternative. Such a solution has been proposed by the Secretary-General with the objective of bringing an end to bloodshed and violence, promoting national reconciliation, and safeguarding the unity and territorial integrity of Afghanistan. Failure to do so could only perpetuate the suffering of the Afghan people. The members of the Council urge all parties in Afghanistan to assure the safety of all, especially United Nations personnel and their complete freedom of movement and the safety of the personnel of all diplomatic missions, as well as the safe departure of those who have chosen to leave."

Communication. Afghanistan, on 17 April,(5) referring to the Security Council's statement of 16 April, acknowledged that there was no alternative to a political settlement of the country's situation. It stated its conviction that, with Mohammed Najibullah having stepped aside, the ground had been paved for the cessation of war and establishment of peace in the country. In full compliance with the international agreements and conventions on diplomatic rights and immunities, Afghanistan would spare no effort to ensure the security, safety and full freedom of movement of United Nations employees and diplomatic personnel. It would further spare no effort in cooperating towards realizing the Council's urgings and requested the cooperation of the Jehadi formations and local commanders in that respect.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(1) the Secretary-General submitted a report in November 1992(6) on the progress of his efforts and those of his Personal Representative towards a settlement of the protracted conflict in Afghanistan.

He stated that his Personal Representative, in addition to the round of bilateral consultations he had undertaken with Afghan representatives, held tripartite consultations at Tehran on 30 March with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iran and the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan. He also held regular consultations with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference. The object was to convene an Afghan gathering during the second half of April, at Geneva or Vienna, inviting some 150 middle-level representatives, acceptable to all sides, from all segments of Afghan society. Those efforts were outpaced, however, by accelerated political and military events in Kabul.

Following President Najibullah's resignation and refuge in United Nations premises on 16 April, the Islamic Unity Party of Afghanistan, an alliance of various Afghan resistance groups based in Tehran, including the mujahideen, was formed. On 24 April, most of the Afghan resistance groups concluded the Peshawar Agreement, according to which the power vested in the Government of the Republic of Afghanistan was to be transferred to the Islamic State of Afghanistan, with Sebghatullah Mojaddedi, leader of the Afghan National Liberation Front, as Acting President and Chairman of a 51-member Jehadi Council, for a term of two months. That transfer took place on 28 April at a ceremony in Kabul, with officials of the outgoing Government in attendance. The new leadership proclaimed the establishment of the Islamic State of Afghanistan, declared general amnesty and introduced several institutional changes.

On 28 June, Burhanuddin Rabbani, leader of the Islamic League of Afghanistan, succeeded Mojaddedi. Under the Peshawar Agreement, he was to serve concurrently as head of the Islamic Leadership Council and as head of the Islamic State of Afghanistan for four months. Thereafter, an Islamic Council would be formed, which would decide on the form of the future interim Government, with the understanding that it would hold elections within 18 months to two years.

In the meantime, the Secretary-General held discussions on the Afghanistan situation with the President and Foreign Minister of Pakistan (25 April), as well as of Iran (26 and 27 April), and with the Islamic Unity Party of Afghanistan. Apart from emphasizing the imperative of promoting national unity and safeguarding Afghanistan's territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence, the Secretary-General also emphasized the need for an immediate cease-fire, a declaration of general amnesty for all, respect for human rights and guarantees for personal safety, security and property. He further reiterated the readiness of the United Nations to assist in the country's reconstruction and rehabilitation.

Despite the establishment of the interim Council, fighting and violence escalated in and around Kabul in July and August, indicating that a national consensus had not been achieved. On 10 August, the Secretary-General appealed to the warring factions to lay down their arms and begin a dialogue forthwith, as well as to neighbouring Governments to use their influence to help end the tragedy. He asked that the safety and protection of United Nations personnel be assured if their humanitarian and other operations in Afghanistan were to continue. The Security Council repeated that appeal on 12 August (see below).

Owing to the deteriorating situation, the Secretary-General, on 22 August, instructed the remaining United Nations personnel to evacuate Kabul temporarily. In return for his assurances that he would spare no effort to mobilize international humanitarian assistance to the Afghan people, President Rabbani assured him that the Afghan Government would ensure the safety and security of all diplomatic missions and United Nations personnel, premises and property.

At the same time, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative cooperated with interested Governments in encouraging a temporary cease-fire to allow the safe evacuation of diplomatic personnel from Kabul. A cease-fire was agreed on 29 August, although scattered fighting continued in parts of the city. A peace commission was created and a neutral Afghan buffer force was deployed between warring factions. Improved security permitted several fact-finding and technical assistance missions of United Nations international staff to visit Kabul for consultations with government officials and to assist in restoring basic services.

On 31 October, the Afghan Leadership Council extended President Rabbani's term for an additional period of 45 days and decided that his main task was to organize and convene the Council of Learned People Who Can Resolve and Decide on 10 December.

The Secretary-General observed that operational constraints continued to be experienced owing to unstable security situations in the country. Although United Nations international staff in Kabul had been withdrawn, the United Nations had strengthened its presence in other provinces. He appealed for the release of prisoners of war, Afghan and non-Afghan, including former USSR servicemen, who continued to be held by various groups, stating that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) stood ready to provide assistance in that regard. In his view, the general amnesty declared in April should apply to all. International efforts should focus on the country's massive needs in the humanitarian, economic and social sectors, to enable the Afghans to consolidate peace with rehabilitation and reconstruction.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following Security Council consultations on 12 August 1992, the Council President made the following statement(7) to the media on behalf of Council members:

"The members of the Security Council express their utmost concern over the wide-scale fighting which has broken out in Kabul and which has already resulted in heavy loss of life and property, including to foreign missions and their personnel.

"The members of the Security Council urge that the Government of Afghanistan take every measure to ensure the safety and security of all diplomatic and international missions, as well as their personnel in Kabul, and call upon all those involved in the hostilities to cease such hostilities and establish the necessary conditions for the safe evacuation of foreign personnel."

Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan

The Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan(6) continued to assist the Secretary-General in his efforts towards a comprehensive political settlement in Afghanistan. The Office was headed by the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan, Benon V. Sevan, who, after 7 August 1992, was succeeded by Sotirios Mousouris. The Office maintained two small headquarters units, one in Kabul and the other in Islamabad. The sub-office in Peshawar was closed on 30 June.

A Military Advisory Unit, comprising 10 military advisers from Austria, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Poland and Sweden, continued to provide the Personal Representative with military advice, as required, and maintained continuous assessment of the security situation in Afghanistan. The military advisers were temporarily detached, with the concurrence of their respective Governments, from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon.

Cyprus question

The Secretary-General continued in 1992 his mission of good offices in Cyprus, with the objective of achieving a comprehensive settlement between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities. Discussions were held with the leaders of the two communities as well as with government representatives of Greece and Turkey.

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), in June and December. The troop-contributing countries began reducing their contingents in the Force due to its deepening financial crisis.

Although the question of Cyprus was included in the agenda of the forty-seventh (1992) General Assembly session (decisions 46/474 of 14 September and 47/402 of 18 September), it was not discussed, but the Assembly retained it on its agenda (decision 47/467 of 23 December).

Cyprus and Turkey addressed communications to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the situation throughout the year. Those from Turkey forwarded letters from the Turkish Cypriot community signed by Osman Ertug as "representative of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and those from Cyprus referred to George Vasiliou as President of the Republic of Cyprus.

On 2 April 1992, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe decided to make public a report by the European Commission of Human Rights of October 1983 regarding Application No. 8007/77, Cyprus v. Turkey. The report stated, inter alia, that the recognition by Turkey of the Turkish Cypriot administration in the northern part of the island as the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" did not affect the continuing existence of the Republic of Cyprus as a single State and that, consequently, the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" could not be regarded as an entity which exercised "jurisdiction" over any part of Cyprus, within the meaning of article 1 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Cyprus presented excerpts of the report in May(1) and the full report in September.(2)

Between July and November, Turkey and Cyprus transmitted a series of communications to the Secretary-General concerning the question of human rights in Cyprus,(3) and a resolution on the demographic structure of the Cypriot communities, based on the report of the Council of Europe's Committee on Migration, Refugees and Demography.(4) The resolution by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe requested the Republic of Cyprus and the Turkish Cypriot administration to keep the arrival of aliens on the island under strict control, and appealed to the latter to reconsider its legislation on naturalization. It stated that the population in the southern part of the island had increased by 13.7 per cent since 1974, from 505,700 to 575,000 at the end of 1990; in the northern part, the population increase was 48.35 per cent, from 115,600 to 171,500.

In November, Mr. Vassiliou indicated his acceptance of the confidence-building measures proposed by the Secretary-General(5) and reiterated his willingness to proceed with the demilitarization of Cyprus.(6) If complete demilitarization was not in itself sufficient guarantee for the security of the Turkish Cypriot community, he would be ready to accept a United Nations force.

In order to put the proposal of demilitarization into a proper context, Mr. Ertug pointed out that, according to the Greek Cypriot Defence Minister, the Greek Cypriot National Guard was equipped with sophisticated weaponry and was not prepared for the static defence of Cyprus, but poised for a prompt and decisive victory in the island.(7)

Oscar Camili6n continued his functions as the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus.

Secretary-General's good offices

The Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus focused on ensuring an overall framework agreement between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities, based on a set of ideas that emerged from talks held in 1991.(8) Those ideas provided for the establishment of a bi-communal and bi-zonal federation represented in international relations as a single, sovereign and independent State comprising two politically equal communities; outlined the structure and functioning of its legislative, executive and judicial branches of government; elaborated on the guarantees of human rights and security of both communities; and provided for transitional arrangements to implement such an agreement.

Outstanding issues to which a solution needed to be found were territorial adjustments and displaced persons. Despite differences on those and other issues, however, the leaders of both communities expressed willingness to continue their dialogue.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In an April 1992 report,(9) the Secretary-General recounted the efforts made during the preceding two years to prepare a set of ideas for an overall framework agreement. He summarized the ideas that had emerged from extended contact with the parties, stating that, in his opinion, they provided elements of a fair solution. He added that if similar progress could be made on the outstanding issues, in particular territorial adjustments and displaced persons, an overall solution would be within reach.

In order to review the Cyprus question, the Secretary-General met in January with the leaders of the two communities. He stressed the importance of the momentum achieved in 1991 and reiterated the need to proceed with discussions in order to complete the set of ideas for an overall framework agreement. Both Greece and Turkey had assured him of their full support.

A first round of talks in February and March, however, did not succeed in bringing matters forward; on the contrary, there was regression in some areas. In his conclusions, the Secretary-General emphasized that it was vital that the parties be willing to clarify equally all the elements of the agreement and adhere to the principles laid down by the Security Council; the current effort could not be expected to continue indefinitely if all concerned were not willing to contribute to a compromise solution. The usefulness of the parties' endorsement of Council resolutions was undermined by the interpretations they had given them; it was, however, essential that their views be in harmony with the Council's position.

The lack of progress in his mission of good offices was compounded by developments related to UNFICYP (see below), the Secretary-General added, which made it unlikely that the United Nations would be able for much longer to maintain its peace-keeping presence in Cyprus on the current scale.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April and July)

On 10 April 1992, having considered the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council adopted resolution 750(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 3 April 1992 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on Cyprus,

Noting with concern that there has been no progress in completing the set of ideas for an overall framework agreement since the Secretary-General's report of 8 October 1991 and that in some areas there has even been regression,

Welcoming the assurances given to the Secretary-General over the past two months by the leaders of the two communities and the Prime Ministers of Greece and Turkey of their desire to cooperate with him and his representatives,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts, and expresses its appreciation for his report;

2. Reaffirms the position, set out in resolutions 649(1990) of 12 March 1990 and 716(1991) of 11 October 1991, that a Cyprus settlement must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded, and comprising two politically equal communities as defined in paragraph 11 of the Secretary-General's report in a bi-communal and bi-zonal federation, and that such a settlement must exclude union in whole or in part with any other country or any form of partition or secession;

3. Calls again upon the parties to adhere fully to these principles and to negotiate without introducing concepts that are at variance with them;

4. Endorses the set of ideas described in paragraphs 17 to 25 and 27 of the Secretary-General's report as an appropriate basis for reaching an overall framework agreement, subject to the work that needs to be done on the outstanding issues, in particular on territorial adjustments and displaced persons, being brought to a conclusion as an integrated package mutually agreed upon by both communities;

5. Request all concerned to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his representatives in clarifying without delay these outstanding issues;

6. Reaffirms that the Secretary-General's mission of good offices is with the two communities, whose participation in the process is on an equal footing to assure the well-being and security of both communities;

7. Decides to remain seized of the Cyprus question on an ongoing and direct basis in support of the effort to complete the set of ideas referred to in paragraph 4 above and to conclude an overall framework agreement;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his intensive efforts to complete the set of ideas referred to in paragraph 4 above during May and June 1992, to keep the Council closely informed of his efforts and to seek the Council's direct support whenever necessary;

9. Continues to believe that, following the satisfactory conclusion of the Secretary-General's intensive efforts to complete the set of ideas referred to in paragraph 4 above, the convening of a high-level international meeting chaired by the Secretary-General in which the two communities and Greece and Turkey would participate represents an effective mechanism for concluding an overall framework agreement;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a full report to the Council on the outcome of his efforts by July 1992 at the latest and to make specific recommendations for overcoming any outstanding difficulty;

11. Reaffirms the important mandate entrusted to the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and looks forward to receiving the report on the Force that the Secretary-General proposes to submit in May 1992.

Security Council resolution 750(1992)

10 April 1992 Meeting 3067 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23797).

Following an oral report by the Secretary-General on 24 June on his mission of good offices, the Council met on 13 July in accordance with the understanding reached in its prior consultations. The President issued the following statement on behalf of the Council members:(10)

Meeting number. SC 3094.

"The Security Council recalls the oral report presented on 24 June 1992 on the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus. It welcomes the separate meetings which the Secretary-General had with the leaders of the two communities from 18 to 23 June. It notes with satisfaction that the discussions focused on the issues of territorial adjustments and displaced persons and that the other six issues that make up the set of ideas on an overall framework agreement were also reviewed. It is unanimous in expressing its full support of the procedure adopted by the Secretary-General for implementing resolution 750(1992).

"The Council reaffirms its endorsement of the set of ideas as an appropriate basis for reaching an overall framework agreement as mentioned in paragraph 4 of resolution 750(1992).

"The Council notes with satisfaction the acceptance by the leaders of the two communities to resume on 15 July their meetings with the Secretary-General and to remain for such reasonable duration as may be necessary to complete the work.

"The Council considers that the forthcoming meetings represent a determining phase in the Secretary-General's effort and calls on both leaders to be ready to take the necessary decisions to reach agreement on each of the issues as dealt with in the set of ideas as an integrated whole on an overall framework agreement.

"The Council endorses the Secretary-General's intention to invite the two leaders to a joint meeting as soon as the proximity talks reveal that the two sides are within agreement range on the set of ideas; and, subject to the successful completion of the work of the joint meeting, to convene an international high-level meeting to conclude the overall framework agreement.

"The Council calls upon all concerned to fulfil their responsibilities and cooperate fully with the Secretary-General to ensure the success of these meetings.

"The Council reaffirms its decision to remain seized of the Cyprus question on an ongoing and direct basis in support of the effort to complete the set of ideas and to conclude an overall framework agreement.

"The Council requests that the Secretary-General provide it with an ongoing assessment of the progress being made at the meetings beginning on 15 July so as to enable the Council to determine, as the talks unfold, how it might best lend its full and direct support.

"The Council looks forward to receiving at the conclusion of these meetings a full report from the Secretary-General as requested in operative paragraph 10 of resolution 750(1992)."

Report of the Secretary-General (August). Reporting to the Council on 21 August,(11) the Secretary-General described the proximity talks he conducted with the two leaders in New York from 18 to 23 June and from 15 July to 11 August, as well as the joint meetings under his chairmanship which began on 12 August with the purpose of negotiating an agreement on the basis of the set of ideas, including the Secretary-General's suggestions regarding territorial adjustments and displaced persons. The meetings adjourned on 14 August and were to be reconvened in October.

The Secretary-General felt that the set of ideas, which was annexed to his report, was now sufficiently developed to enable the two sides to reach an overall agreement. On territorial adjustments, substantive discussions had taken place for the first time, but the Turkish Cypriot side needed to show willingness to foresee an adjustment more or less in line with the suggestions embodied in the set of ideas.

While accepting certain principles contained in the set, the Turkish Cypriot side expressed apprehension about the impact of the suggested adjustments on its community and indicated that its position formulated in 1984 and 1986 remained unchanged. The Greek Cypriot side agreed to negotiate an agreement on the basis provided by the set, though it did not consider the suggested territorial adjustments to be equitable.

The Secretary-General said there was no question of the population living in the affected area becoming displaced or refugees, as no one would be required to move; those who wished to move to the federated State that would come under Turkish Cypriot administration would only do so when adequate housing and economic rehabilitation had been provided.

Continuation of the status quo not being a viable option, the Secretary-General concluded that, should no agreement emerge from the talks scheduled for October, it would be necessary for the Security Council seriously to consider alternative courses of action for resolving the Cyprus problem.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council on 26 August unanimously adopted resolution 774(1992).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1992 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on Cyprus,

Noting that some progress has been achieved, in particular the acceptance by both sides of the right of return and the right to property, and in a narrowing of the gap by both sides on territorial adjustments,

Expressing concern nevertheless that it has not yet been possible, for reasons explained in the report, to achieve the goals set out in resolution 750(1992),

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General and commends him for his efforts;

2. Reaffirms its position that a Cyprus settlement must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded, and comprising two politically equal communities as defined in paragraph 11 of the Secretary-General's report of 3 April 1992 in a bi-communal and bi-zonal federation, and that such a settlement must exclude union in whole or in part with any other country or any form of partition or secession;

3. Endorses the set of ideas including suggested territorial adjustments reflected in the map contained in the annex to the Secretary-General's report as the basis for reaching an overall framework agreement;

4. Agrees with the Secretary-General that the set of ideas as an integrated whole has now been sufficiently developed to enable the two sides to reach an overall agreement;

5. Calls on the parties to manifest the necessary political will and to address in a positive manner the observations of the Secretary-General for resolving the issues covered in his report;

6. Urges the parties, when they resume their face-to-face talks with the Secretary-General on 26 October 1992, to pursue uninterrupted negotiations at United Nations Headquarters until an overall framework agreement is reached on the basis of the entire set of ideas;

7. Reaffirms its position that the Secretary-General convene, following the satisfactory conclusion of the face-to-face talks, a high-level international meeting chaired by him to conclude an overall framework agreement, in which the two communities and Greece and Turkey would participate;

8. Requests all concerned to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his representatives in preparing the ground prior to the resumption of the direct talks in October to facilitate the speedy completion of the work;

9. Expresses the expectation that an overall framework agreement will be concluded in 1992 and that 1993 will be the transitional period during which the measures set out in the annex to the set of ideas will be implemented;

10. Reaffirms that, in line with previous resolutions of the Security Council, the present status quo is not acceptable, and, should an agreement not emerge from the talks that will reconvene in October, calls on the Secretary-General to identify the reasons for the failure and to recommend to the Council alternative courses of action to resolve the Cyprus problem;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, prior to the end of 1992, a full report on the talks that will resume in October.

Security Council resolution 774(1992)

26 August 1992 Meeting 3109 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24487).

Report of the Secretary-General (November). The Secretary-General submitted a further report in November(12) on the face-to-face talks between the leaders of the two communities, which resumed in New York from 28 October to 11 November. Matters discussed included displaced persons, constitutional aspects of the federation, territorial adjustments, overall objectives of the framework agreement and guiding principles, security and guarantee of the federal republic and of the federated states, economic development and safeguards, and transitional arrangements.

The report described the parties' positions on each issue. The Greek Cypriot side accepted the set of ideas and the map setting out the territories of the federated states as a basis for an agreement. While affirming its basic acceptance of 91 out of the 100 paragraphs of the set, the Turkish Cypriot side stated a lack of agreement on seven issues incorporated in the nine remaining paragraphs, dealing with the executive branch of government and the federal council of ministers, elimination of economic disparities, the principle of "one sovereignty" and its modalities, participation of Cyprus in international organizations where Turkey and Greece were not both members, the establishment of a transitional Government and the issue of displaced persons. The Turkish Cypriot side also held to its position on territorial adjustments, refusing to accept the suggested map endorsed by the Council.

Noting that no agreement resulted from the talks, the Secretary-General formulated a number of confidence-building measures to be embraced by the parties before the scheduled resumption of negotiations in March 1993. His proposals provided for the reduction of armed forces and armaments; the unmanning of all military positions in the buffer zone; inclusion of Varosha in the United Nations-controlled area; reduced travel restrictions across the buffer zone for both Cypriots and foreign visitors; promotion of inter-communal cooperation; a Cyprus-wide census under United Nations auspices; and feasibility studies on the resettlement and rehabilitation of Turkish Cypriots affected by territorial adjustments as part of the overall agreement.

The time may have come, the Secretary-General said, to give fuller form to the decision of the Security Council, reflected in its April 1992 resolution, to be seized of the matter on an ongoing and more direct basis.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 25 November, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 789(1992).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 November 1992 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,

Noting with satisfaction that the two leaders discussed all the issues in the set of ideas with the result that there were areas of agreement as noted in the report,

Welcoming the agreement by the two sides to meet again with the Secretary-General in early March 1993 to complete the work on an agreed set of ideas,

1. Reaffirms all its previous resolutions on Cyprus, including resolutions 365(1974), 367(1975), 541(1983), 550(1984) and 774(1992);

2. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General and commends him for his efforts;

3. Reaffirms also its endorsement of the set of ideas including the territorial adjustments reflected in the map contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1992 as the basis for reaching an overall framework agreement;

4. Reaffirms further its position that the present status quo is not acceptable and that an overall agreement in line with the set of ideas should be achieved without further delay;

5. Notes that the recent joint meetings did not achieve their intended goal, in particular because certain positions adopted by the Turkish Cypriot side were fundamentally at variance with the set of ideas;

6. Calls upon the Turkish Cypriot side to adopt positions that are consistent with the set of ideas on those issues identified by the Secretary-General in his report, and for all concerned to be prepared in the next round of talks to make decisions that will bring about a speedy agreement;

7. Recognizes that the completion of this process in March 1993 would be greatly facilitated by the implementation by each side of measures designed to promote mutual confidence;

8. Urges all concerned to commit themselves to the confidence-building measures set out below:

(a) That, as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces envisaged in the set of ideas, the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus undergo a significant reduction and that a reduction of defence spending be effected in the Republic of Cyprus;

(b) That the military authorities on each side cooperate with the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus in order to extend the unmanning agreement of 1989 to all areas of the United Nations-controlled buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other;

(c) That, with a view to the implementation of resolution 550(1984), the area at present under the control of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus be extended to include Varosha;

(d) That each side take active measures to promote people-to-people contact between the two communities by reducing restrictions to the movement of persons across the buffer zone;

(e) That restrictions imposed on foreign visitors crossing the buffer zone be reduced;

(f) That each side propose bi-communal projects, for possible financing by lending and donor Governments as well as international institutions;

(g) That both sides commit themselves to the holding of a Cyprus-wide census under the auspices of the United Nations;

(h) That both sides cooperate to enable the United Nations to undertake, in the relevant locations, feasibility studies (i) in connection with the resettlement and rehabilitation of persons who would be affected by the territorial adjustments as part of the overall agreement, and (ii) in connection with the programme of economic development that would, as part of the overall agreement, benefit those persons who would resettle in the area under Turkish Cypriot administration;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to follow up on the implementation of the above confidence-building measures and to keep the Security Council informed as appropriate;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to maintain such preparatory contacts as he considers appropriate before the resumption of the joint meetings in March 1993, and to propose for the Security Council's consideration revisions in the negotiating format to make it more effective;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General, during the March 1993 joint meetings, to assess developments on a regular basis with the Council with a view to considering what further action may be needed by the Council;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a full report after the conclusion of the joint meetings that will resume in March 1993.

Security Council resolution 789(1992)

25 November 1992 Meeting 3140 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24841).

UNFICYP

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by the Security Council in 1964,(13) continued throughout 1992. It supervised the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces, keeping the area between the lines—the buffer zone—under constant surveillance through a system of 151 observation posts, with 51 of them permanently manned as at 30 November 1992.

UNFICYP also continued to facilitate humanitarian activities on the island, provide emergency medical services and support United Nations relief operations. It delivered foodstuffs and other supplies to the 250 Maronites and the Greek Cypriots in northern Cyprus, whose number decreased from 551 to 544 during the year; visited regularly Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and facilitated five voluntary transfers and 899 visits of Greek Cypriots to the south. The Force also remained seized of the situation in the mixed village of Pyla, located in the buffer zone. In an effort to reduce demands on its declining manpower, UNFICYP recommended that Red Cross representatives of both parties resume their original responsibilities for the delivery of mail, medical supplies and Red Cross messages across cease-fire lines.

The number of cease-fire violations increased slightly in the second half of the year. UNFICYP reported 210 overflights of the zone by civilian, military and police aircraft, including 17 by aircraft of other countries, and continuing crossings of the maritime security line by Greek Cypriot tourist and fishing boats, which on one occasion led to warning shots. Despite protests by the Turkish Cypriot side and reservations expressed by the Force, the Cyprus National Guard intensified construction work on its defensive positions along the cease-fire lines and often refused to cooperate in UNFICYP's investigations and inspection of its positions.

Safety and security in the buffer zone were also threatened as a result of hunting by Greek Cypriots in certain areas and by mines that had not been removed despite representations by UNFICYP and the Government's commitment to do so. The 1989 agreement concerning the unarming of certain positions in Nicosia continued to hold, with only a few violations. As part of the confidence-building measures recommended in a November report on his good offices mission (see above), the Secretary-General requested the UNFICYP Commander to initiate discussions on a possible extension of the agreement to all areas of the zone where the troops of both sides remained in close proximity to each other. The Security Council, in its 25 November resolution, urged both sides to commit themselves to these measures.

UNFICYP's military personnel were reduced during 1992 from 2,103 in May to 2,040 in November, with the strength of civilian police remaining 38. The Force's size was further reduced significantly in December, which necessitated a major restructuring and reorganization, including a decrease in the number of permanently manned observation posts.

In March,(14) the Security Council agreed to the change in the UNFICYP command proposed by the Secretary-General;(15) on 8 April, Major-General Clive Milner of Canada handed over command of the Force to Major-General Michael F. Minehane of Ireland.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). In response to a 1991 Security Council resolution,(16) the Secretary-General submitted a report(17) on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, covering the period from 1 December 1991 to 31 May 1992. The report brought up to date the activities of UNFICYP and the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. It showed that UNFICYP had continued to perform its functions, often under difficult circumstances.

The Secretary-General recommended an extension of the UNFICYP mandate for a further period of six months, subject to possible changes in its size and mandate, on which he was holding consultations with the troop contributors. Those discussions had been made necessary in view of UNFICYP's deepening financial crisis, which imposed an unfair burden on the troop-contributing countries (Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Sweden, United Kingdom). Discussing the future of UNFICYP in view of an impending reduction of its contingents, he noted that that would deny it the troops necessary for execution of the existing mandate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 12 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 759(1992).

The Security Council,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 31 May 1992,

Noting also the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting further that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1992,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1992;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting the troop-contributing Governments as envisaged in paragraph 56 of the report, to submit specific proposals to the Security Council no later than 1 September 1992 on the restructuring of the Force, such proposals to be based on the realistic options available in current circumstances;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1992;

4. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 759(1992)

12 June 1992 Meeting 3084 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24084).

Reports of the Secretary-General (September and December). Reporting to the Council in September,(18) the Secretary-General reviewed his consultations of 9 and 10 September with representatives of the troop-contributing countries. While acknowledging that a critical moment had been reached in the efforts to achieve a settlement in Cyprus, the majority of the contributors believed that UNFICYP could maintain its mandate with fewer resources, relying on the use of military observers instead of infantry units. Five contributing Governments—Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland and the United Kingdom—had already indicated that they would be reducing their contingents. The Secretariat argued that the Force's mandate implied not only observation but also rapid intervention in peace-threatening incidents, and that its tasks might become more extensive and require its current strength for a fixed transitional period, should the parties conclude an agreement in 1993.

The Secretary-General noted that the Force Commander had been instructed to absorb as much as possible the effects of the forthcoming reductions, but pointed out that UNFICYP in its current form would shortly become unviable unless the Council changed the basis of its financing.

By a letter of 28 September,(19) the Security Council President stated that the Council members had taken note of the report. They looked forward to the holding of further consultations with the troop-contributing States and to the Secretary-General's report containing specific proposals on the restructuring of the Force. They recalled that in December 1991 they had agreed to keep the question of UNFICYP financing under review as a matter of urgency. (For details on UNFICYP financing, see below.)

The Secretary-General submitted a report in December covering the United Nations operation in Cyprus from 1 June to 30 November 1992.(20) He stated that in the face of a forthcoming troop reduction by 28 per cent, UNFICYP was undergoing restructuring, commencing on 16 November with the withdrawal of 63 Austrian personnel and to be completed by 15 December. Following the restructuring, the territory under UNFICYP's control would be divided into three sectors instead of four and the number of permanently manned observation posts would be reduced from 51 to 39. Further reductions in the contingents were planned during 1993.

The Secretary-General, however, expressed the belief that UNFICYP's continued presence on the island remained indispensable to achieve the objectives set by the Security Council, and recommended an extension of its mandate for another six months. He noted that the contributing Governments had been asked to maintain the current strength of their contingents throughout the new mandate period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 796(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 1 December 1992.

Noting also the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting further that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1992,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1993;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1993;

3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General expressed in paragraph 46 of his report to pursue his consultations with the troop-contributing Governments about a restructuring of the Force and to report on this to the Council as soon as possible;

4. calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 796(1992)

14 December 1992 Meeting 3148 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24949).

Financing of UNFICYP

For the two mandate periods of UNFICYP ending in 1992, voluntary contributions from Governments to the part of the Force's financing borne by the United Nations amounted to only $7.8 million, against anticipated expenditures of some $30.8 million. As a result of chronic shortfalls, the reimbursement claims from the troop-contributing countries had been met only up to December 1981, and the accumulated deficit in the UNFICYP Special Account was expected to reach approximately $197.1 million for the periods since the inception of the Force.

Based on the revised strength and responsibilities of the Force due to contingent reductions, UNFICYP expenditures for the six-month period ending on 15 June 1993 was estimated at $9.5 million. On 10 March(21) and 24 November 1992,(22) the Secretary-General appealed to all Member States and members of the specialized agencies for voluntary contributions, stressing UNFICYP's vital peace-keeping role and its critical financial situation.

In his December report(20) on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see above), the Secretary-General said it had been predicted for several years that unless the financing of UNFICYP was assured by assessed contributions, it would prove impossible to maintain the Force. Following a review of UNFICYP's financial crisis and adoption of a Security Council resolution in December 1990,(23) the Secretariat had cooperated actively with the Council in its deliberations on the issue and identified a new method of defining and rationalizing those costs incurred by the troop contributors for which the United Nations would be responsible. Unfortunately, the necessary agreement did not exist in the Council for a decision on a change in UNFICYP financing, with the consequences now evident.

As a result, the Secretary-General was pursuing consultations with the troop-contributing Governments about a restructuring of the Force and was also exploring the possibility of additional countries which could agree to contribute troops to replace those being withdrawn. Currently, however, his impression was that even if UNFICYP was radically restructured, it was likely that a viable arrangement could be made only on the basis of financing by assessed contributions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 47/218, section IV, of 23 December 1992, on administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations, the General Assembly, having noted the Secretary-General's report of December on UNFICYP financing and its appeal for voluntary contributions, invited all Member States to respond positively.

Iran

Iran-Iraq

Throughout 1992, Iran and Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General numerous communications containing allegations of violations: of the terms of the cease-fire between them.

Iran reported several instances of Iraqi border encroachments and infiltrations; airspace violations; firing of light weapons, including at facilities in Khorramshahr, once; and, along and inside the area of separation between the two countries, frequent traffic of Iraqi military vehicles and armed soldiers patrolling, monitoring, moving ammunition boxes, digging trenches and canals, constructing bunkers and restoring others, deploying automatic machine-gun positions, laying mines and installing the Iraqi flag. Iran also reported the kidnapping of four Iranian soldiers from their sentry posts.(1)

Iraq made particularly numerous allegations of Iranian violations, including airspace violations, mostly by helicopters and at times by fighter planes; border incursions, including abduction of a farmer, as well as of 12 Iraqi fishermen fishing in Iraqi territorial waters; frequent random rifle firings, some shelling and machine-gun firings across the border into Iraqi territory; and various Iranian activities along and inside the area of separation, mainly building guard posts or fortifying them with barbed wire and sandbags, digging slit trenches, constructing defensive positions with high sandbag embankments, and setting up monitoring posts and machine-gun emplacements.

The most significant of Iraq's allegations was communicated to the President of the Security Council on 5 April,(2) to the effect that, on that day, Iran's Air Force carried out four air raids inside Iraq near Al-Khalis, a town 90 kilometres from the border and 70 kilometres north-east of Baghdad. One of the eight bombers was shot down and its two-man crew taken prisoner. Iran, also on 5 April,(3) claimed that the raids were in self-defence, responding to the armed attacks launched from Iraq earlier that day on the Iranian villages of Beshkan and Bayani that killed four civilians and wounded seven others, as well as to the simultaneous attacks on several Iranian diplomatic missions abroad, violating premises, injuring officials, taking hostages and damaging property. Those attacks, Iran alleged, were organized and coordinated by terrorist mercenaries operating in Iraq, whose headquarters was the target of the Iranian raids.

Iraq reported on 20 April(4) that, according to the two captured Iranian pilots, preparations for the raids took place a month before they were carried out, thus invalidating Iran's claim of action taken in self-defence. On 27 April,(5) Iraq stated that the three military observers from the United Nations Office of the Secretary-General in Iraq (UNOSGI), based at Baghdad, who inspected the bombed supply depots at Al Azim on 14 April verified that 500-pound rockets and cluster bombs were among the projectiles used. On 12 September,(6) Iraq also alleged that a number of captured Iraqi military deserters confessed to having been enlisted by Iran to carry out acts of sabotage within Iraq. It later substantiated its allegation with what it claimed were videotapes of those confessions.(7)

Prisoners of war

In identical letters of 12 May 1992(8) to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, Iraq drew attention to what it called Iran's persistent refusal to release all Iraqi prisoners of war (POWs) in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (third Geneva Convention). Whereas no Iranian POW remained in Iraq other than those who had refused repatriation and whose refusal had been notified to ICRC, Iran released Iraqi POWs on a one-for-one basis—an action neither legitimate nor realistic, since the number of Iraqi prisoners in Iran far exceeded that of Iranian prisoners in Iraq. As a result, thousands of Iraqi POWs remained in Iran despite the almost four years since the conclusion of the 1988 ceasefire between the two countries.

According to Iraq's record of Iraqi POWs held by Iran, 41,655 had been repatriated. Of those remaining in Iran, 10,225 were registered with ICRC and bore ICRC numbers; a further 9,558 were registered with ICRC through correspondence; and 66,161 were missing in action.

As a result of a joint technical committee meeting held at the invitation of ICRC (Geneva, 12-14 February), Iran and Iraq agreed upon and signed an action plan outlining the steps for their resumption of the repatriation process and verification of the fate of all missing persons. Because of Iran's failure to comply with the plan and its termination of ICRC activities in Iran on 26 March, another joint technical committee meeting was held (Geneva, 15 and 16 April), at which both parties agreed to resume repatriation by 1 May. Iran subsequently postponed the repatriation process without setting another date for its resumption.

UN Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

By decision 46/478 of 14 September 1992, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group" (UNIIMOG).

In October, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly(9) on the status of the liquidation costs and disposition of assets of UNIIMOG, which was terminated in 1991.(10) The report updated information on the status of unpaid assessed contributions, total expenditures for the duration of the operation and the unencumbered balance and miscellaneous income. Among the annexes to the report was a description and valuation of additional property transferred to existing United Nations peace-keeping and other operations, including UNOSGI in Iran and Iraq.

As at 30 September 1992, unpaid assessed contributions to UNIIMOG totalled $1,060,886. Resources made available since its inception on 9 August 1988 until its termination on 28 February 1991 totalled $213,827,900 gross ($210,509,900 net), while operating costs amounted to $171,387,911 gross ($167,286,511 net), leaving a balance of $42,439,989 gross ($43,223,389 net—a figure higher than the gross because expenditures for staff assessment exceeded the amount budgeted). The sum of $24,481,000 gross ($23,627,000 net) from that balance was credited to Member States against their assessed contributions for the last four mandate periods (between 1 April 1990 and 28 February 1991 in accordance with a 1990 Assembly decision,(11) thus adjusting the unutilized appropriations to $19,596,389.

Interest income amounted to $9,999,427 and miscellaneous income to $8,272,872 (including an amount of $6,364,150 from the sale of equipment), making a total of $18,272,299. This amount plus the unutilized appropriations, minus the unpaid assessed contributions, left a total unencumbered balance of $36,807,802 in the UNIIMOG Special Account.

In view of the foregoing, the Secretary-General proposed the following: that an appropriation of $2,384,000 gross ($2,178,000 net) be authorized and apportioned in respect of the period 1 to 28 February 1991 and that the same amount from the unencumbered balance be credited to Member States against their assessments; that the unutilized appropriations balance be credited to Member States; and, in view of the outstanding assessed contributions, that $17,211,413 of the total interest and miscellaneous income be retained in the Special Account pending an Assembly decision on the proposed Peace-keeping Reserve Fund (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

ACABQ(12) did not object to those proposals. It noted, however, that the unutilized appropriations balance of $19,596,389 was subject to further adjustment upon liquidation of the $3,003,407 in obligations indicated by the Secretary-General as outstanding as at 30 September 1992. In addition, cash resources backing those obligations continued to accrue interest, as did the $17,211,413 proposed to be retained in the Special Account. Consequently, future credits to Member States and other adjustments might be necessary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 22 December 1992, adopted resolution 47/206 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Military Observer Group, the latest of which was resolution 685(1991) of 31 January 1991,

Recalling its resolution 42/233 of 17 August 1988 on the financing of the Military Observer Group and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 45/245 of 21 December 1990,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Military Observer Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Military Observer Group, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Military Observer Group by certain Governments,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment in full of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group;

3. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in General Assembly resolution 42/233 the amount of 2,384,000 United States dollars gross (2,178,000 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly in its resolution 45/245 and apportioned in accordance with paragraphs 11 to 13 thereof for the operation of the Military Observer Group for the period from 1 to 28 February 1991;

4. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 2,384,000 dollars: gross (2,178,000 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 to 28 February 1991;

5. Decides further that 19,596,389 dollars of the unutilized balance in the Special Account for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group shall be credited to Member States;

6. Decides to transfer the balance remaining in the Special Account for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group to the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund.

General Assembly resolution 47/206

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/821) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.4); agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 36, 50; plenary 93.

Iran-Israel

On 1 July 1992,(13) Iran drew the Secretary-General's attention to a 15 June statement by the Chief of Israel's Air Force which, it said, contained unfounded allegations, as well as threats of armed aggression against Iran and other countries. (The subject of the statement appeared to be Iran's nuclear energy programme.)

Iran stated that it was a party to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons(14) and as such had concluded a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). It referred to a February 1992 IAEA inspection whose findings corroborated the fact that Iran was in full compliance with its international obligations in respect of its nuclear programme. It further recalled its long-standing advocacy of a Middle East free from nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, adding that, as common knowledge had it, that was not the case with Israel, whose nuclear-weapons programme flew in the face of all international instruments.

Through the Secretary-General, IAEA, on 10 July,(15) provided the Security Council with a copy of its 14 February press release officially setting out the nature and results of the visit of a four-member IAEA team to Iran from 7 to 12 February, undertaken at that country's request. The team familiarized itself with the current status of the Iranian Nuclear Research and Development Programme and visited the Bushehr Nuclear Power Project, the Esfahan Nuclear Technology Centre, the Tehran Nuclear Research Centre and the Karaj Agricultural and Medical Research Centre. It also visited the site of a uranium exploration project at Saghand in Yazd province and a facility under construction in the mountains north of Tehran near Mo'allem Kalayeh.

The press release stated that the activities reviewed at those facilities and sites were found to be consistent with the peaceful application of nuclear energy and ionizing radiation, and that the team's conclusions were limited to those facilities and sites and of relevance only to the time of the visit.

Iran-United Arab Emirates

The question of sovereignty over the three islands of Abu Musa, Greater Tunb and Lesser Tunb in the Gulf was brought anew to the attention of the Security Council and the General Assembly in 1992. The claimants to the islands were Iran and the United Arab Emirates. Iran militarily occupied the islands towards the end of 1971,(16) when the United Kingdom terminated its treaties with Bahrain, Qatar and the seven Trucial States (Abu Dhabi, Ajman, Dubai, Fujairah, Ras al Khaimah, Sharjah, Umm al Qaiwain), which since became known as the United Arab Emirates. Iran claimed its action to be a re-establishment of its rightful authority over the islands after a long interruption of colonial domination of the Persian Gulf. The United Arab Emirates asserted sovereignty over the islands as integral parts of its federation and was backed by other Arab States which affirmed the islands to be Arab. The question was again brought before the United Nations in 1972(17) and 1980.(18)

By a resolution adopted on 13 September 1992, the Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the League of Arab States decided: to stand by the United Arab Emirates in its claim to full sovereignty over the three islands and to denounce their illegal occupation by Iran; to state the Council's unqualified support for all measures taken by the United Arab Emirates to assert its sovereignty over the islands and to place the issue of Iranian violations, which endangered the region's security and stability, before the United Nations; and to call on Iran to respect the pacts and covenants it had concluded with the United Arab Emirates and the latter's sovereignty over the three islands. The resolution was transmitted to the Security Council on 2 October(19) and the Assembly on 6 October.(20)

Iraq-Kuwait situation

During 1992, the Security Council twice conducted a comprehensive review of the status of compliance by Iraq with resolution 687(1991),(1) setting forth the terms of the cease-fire that formally brought to an end the 1991 military action taken against Iraq to compel it to withdraw from Kuwait and providing for other conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the Gulf region. Compliance with subsequent related resolutions was also reviewed, chief among which were resolutions 707(1991)(2) and 715(1991)(3) directly linked with and elaborating upon certain provisions of the cease-fire resolution.

For the purpose of the reviews, several entities were called upon to present their assessments, key among which were the Special Commission established under the cease-fire resolution and IAEA, both mandated to ensure Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations. At the request of Iraq, it was represented at the two reviews by a high-level official delegation headed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq.

Cease-fire compliance

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In accordance with a December 1991 statement by the President of the Security Council,(4) the Secretary-General submitted on 25 January 1992(5) a factual report on Iraq's compliance with all the obligations placed upon it by Council resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions. The information was updated by a further report submitted in March (see below). The reports focused only on those provisions in the resolutions that placed mandatory obligations on Iraq, grouped into three categories: general, specific and other obligations.

The general obligations required Iraq's acceptance of the provisions of the entire resolution 687(1991) (para. 33) and compliance with all its international obligations (resolution 707(1991), para. 5). The report noted that Iraq complied with the first in 1991(6) and that it was not specifically required to confirm compliance with the second.

There were nine specific obligations, which included respect for the inviolability of the international border and allocation of islands between Iraq and Kuwait (resolution 687(1991), para. 2); obligations relating to conventional, biological or chemical weapons and such materials for warfare (resolution 687(1991), paras. 8, 9 (a) and 10; resolution 707(1991), para. 3; resolution 715(1991), para. 5), to nuclear capability development programmes (resolution 687(1991), paras. 10 and 12; resolution 707(1991), para. 3; resolution 715(1991), para. 5), and to repatriation of and access to all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals in Iraq (resolution 687(1991), para. 30); liability under international law for loss or damage resulting from Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait (resolution 687(1991), para. 16); adherence to all obligations concerning servicing and repayment of Iraq's foreign debt (resolution 687(1991), para. 17); non-entitlement to claims deriving from the effects of the measures taken by the Council in resolution 661(1990)(7) and related resolutions (resolution 687(1991), para. 29); liability for the full cost of the tasks authorized under section C of resolution 687(1991) (resolution 699(1991), (8) para. 4); and provision of monthly statements of gold and foreign currency reserves (resolution 706(1991), (8) para. 7).

Two other items concerned the undertaking not to commit or support any international terrorist act (resolution 687(1991), para. 32) and obligations under the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons(10) (NPT) (resolution 707(1991), para. 5). The Secretary-General was unable to offer any guiding information to the Council as to the first item, but referred to Iraq's 1991 communication affirming that it had never pursued a policy favourable to international terrorism.(11) As to the second item, Iraq's 1991 letter accepting resolution 687(1991) also stated that it was a party to NPT and referred to IAEA reports confirming that it was in observance of all NPT provisions.

The January report, besides stating that Iraq had respected the demilitarized zone (DMZ), annexed detailed assessments of compliance with the specific obligations cited.

The Special Commission covered compliance with respect to the elimination of capabilities in regard to chemical and biological weapons, ballistic missiles and long-range guns; ongoing monitoring and verification to ensure that acquisition and development of such weapons were not resumed; the related reporting obligations; and obligations in connection with the facilities, privileges and immunities of the Commission and IAEA.

The Special Commission stated in summary that significant progress had been made in implementing section C of resolution 687(1991) but that much remained to be done. It had not been able to complete the first phase of its work-inspection and survey-as Iraq had not met its reporting obligations comprehensively. Furthermore, it had no confidence that the full, final and complete disclosure called for by resolution 707(1991) would be forthcoming in the immediate future, given Iraq's recent indication that it would respond only to specific items of evidence of undisclosed weapons, facilities and materials. The second phase—disposal of weapons of mass destruction and the facilities for their production—was being carried out with significant progress in the area of ballistic missiles, with Iraq having destroyed its declared missiles and launchers under Commission supervision. Planning for the destruction of chemical weapons was in an advanced stage with active Iraqi cooperation. As to the third phase-ongoing monitoring and verification—Iraq had not made a clear acknowledgement of the plans for that phase. Instead, it arrogated to itself the determination of what it considered to be required of it. (For measures undertaken by the Commission and the Security Council on the subject, see below, under "Special Commission activities".)

The IAEA assessment covered Iraq's compliance with respect to the disclosure of its activities in nuclear-weapons development, its holdings of nuclear-weapons-usable material and its nuclear facilities and equipment; granting IAEA access and inspection rights; and the removal and rendering harmless of all items related to clandestine nuclear programmes. IAEA stated that Iraq's response to the IAEA inspections had been marked by a pattern of denial of clandestine activities until forced into acknowledgement when presented with overwhelming evidence, followed by cooperation until the next case of concealment was revealed. Consequently, it was not possible to be confident that the full extent of prohibited nuclear activities in Iraq had been disclosed. IAEA thus deemed it necessary to continue the inspections in parallel with the monitoring programme. (See also below, under "IAEA inspections".)

ICRC had helped in the return of 6,909 prisoners of war and civilians from Iraq to their home countries since March 1991. It had registered about 3,700 persons currently in Iraq whose nationality could not be established with certainty but who claimed residence in Kuwait and wished to return. Their personal data had been transmitted to Kuwait for determination of repatriation eligibility. Kuwait on 12 October 1991 had submitted a list of 2,101 missing persons, and had repeatedly stressed that those names were not identical with the 3,700 persons mentioned above.

Through ICRC, Saudi Arabia had sent Iraq detailed testimonies by former Saudi prisoners to the effect that some of the 17 Saudi nationals reported missing in Iraq had been seen in Iraqi captivity. ICRC had not yet received information from Iraq on the whereabouts of persons reported missing in Iraq, the outcome of the search by Iraq for those persons and identification of persons who had died while in custody. (See also below, under "Repatriation of Kuwaitis and third-country nationals".)

The Governing Council of the United Nations Compensation Commission stated that Iraq's compliance with its liability under international law for loss or damage resulting from its unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait, which was dependent on the resumption of its exports of petroleum and petroleum products, had not taken place because the 1990 economic sanctions imposed upon it remained in force. The sales regime established by resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991)(12) to meet the humanitarian requirements of the Iraqi civilian population while the sanctions were in place, as well as the costs of various United Nations activities undertaken in implementation of resolution 687(1991), was objected to by Iraq, which stated that, since it had satisfied all conditions specified in paragraph 22 of the latter resolution, the sanctions should be lifted. (See also below, under "UN Compensation Commission and Compensation Fund".)

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) noted that Iraq was in arrears in the sum of SDR (special drawing rights) 7.3 million as at 31 December 1991 and had yet to submit any report on its gold and foreign currency reserves. It had been advised that Iraq's attempts to meet its obligations had failed due to the sanctions. Iraq's debt with certain members of the Paris Club of creditor countries totalled $13,420 million as at 1 April 1991.

No information was provided by the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) (Committee on sanctions) with respect to paragraphs 10 and 12 of resolution 687(1991). With respect to paragraph 29 of the same resolution, however, information received from Denmark indicated that Iraq had attempted to make a claim in connection with a contract affected by the coming into effect of the 1990 economic sanctions.

Appended to the report was a summary of Iraq's financial obligations in respect of the operations involved in implementing resolution 687(1991), including appropriate payment to the United Nations Compensation Fund, the full costs of destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, the full costs incurred by the United Nations in facilitating the return of all Kuwaiti properties, and half the costs of the Iran-Iraq Boundary Demarcation Commission. Iraq, which had yet to signify its willingness to comply with the provisions of resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991), indicated that it was not prepared to resume the production and export of petroleum and petroleum products on the basis of the procedures outlined in those resolutions.

As at 31 December 1991, financial commitments to meet the costs mentioned above amounted to $17.2 million. That amount was provided through a commitment authority of $10 million granted by ACABQ under a 1989 General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses(13) and contributions of $7.2 million by Member States. Iraqi reimbursement of these amounts was the subject of two rounds of discussions held with Iraq (Baghdad, 22 and 23 November 1991; Vienna, 8-10 January 1992), which were inconclusive.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (5 February)

On 5 February 1992, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement(14) to the media on behalf of the Council members in connection with the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council held informal consultations on 28 January and 5 February 1992 pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991). The members of the Council express their thanks to the Secretary-General for his factual report on Iraq's compliance with all the obligations placed upon it by resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions (S/23514).

"After taking note of the Secretary-General's report and hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regime established in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 21 of that resolution.

"In the context of compliance, the Council members note with concern the recent incident at Baghdad, which demonstrates a lack of Iraqi cooperation in complying with the resolutions of the Council.

"In connection with the Secretary-General's factual report on Iraq's compliance with all the obligations placed upon it by resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions, the members of the Security Council note that while much progress has been made, much remains to be done. There is serious evidence of Iraqi non-compliance over its programmes for weapons of mass destruction and the repatriation of Kuwaitis and other third-country nationals detained in Iraq. There is still much Kuwaiti property to be returned. The members of the Council are disturbed by the lack of Iraqi cooperation. Iraq must implement fully resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions, as was stated in the statement read out by the President of the Council on behalf of its members in the meeting held on 31 January 1992 with the participation of the heads of State and Government (S/23500).

"The members of the Security Council note that with a view to alleviating the humanitarian conditions of the civilian population of Iraq and facilitating the utilization of paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) had been requested to prepare a study of those materials and supplies for essential civilian and humanitarian needs, other than medicines which have not been subject to sanctions and food shipments which have been permitted to move freely, that might be transferred from the 'no objection' procedure to a simple notification procedure. The members of the Council also note the report of the Chairman of the Committee in this regard. They express their appreciation for the efforts the Chairman has made to reach a conclusion and encourage him to continue his consultations with the members of the Committee on the study and to report to the Council at an early date.

"The members of the Council strongly deplore that the Iraqi authorities have decided and communicated that decision to the Secretariat to discontinue contacts with the Secretariat regarding implementation of resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991), which give to Iraq the possibility for oil sales to finance the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs for the purpose of providing humanitarian relief. They underscore that the Government of Iraq, by acting in this way, is forgoing the possibility of meeting the essential needs of its civilian population and therefore bears the full responsibility for their humanitarian problems. They hope that a resumption of these contacts may lead to the early implementation of the scheme set out in those resolutions to enable humanitarian supplies to reach the Iraqi people."

Communications. Iraq, on 23 January 1992,⁽¹⁵⁾ transmitted a comprehensive and detailed report on the measures it had implemented pursuant to resolution 687(1991). Its obligations were in live main areas: demarcation of boundaries between Iraq and Kuwait, including cooperation with the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM); nuclear weapons; weapons of mass destruction, including chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles; return of Kuwaiti property; and repatriation of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals. Iraq restated its position on the question of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary made known in 1991,⁽¹⁶⁾ adding that it had participated in all four meetings of the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission. It had further fully cooperated with UNIKOM to ensure the success of its task to monitor the DMZ and deter violations or potentially hostile action from either side.

On its NPT and nuclear-weapons-related obligations, Iraq emphasized that it had never sought to acquire or develop nuclear weapons. It cited six letters to IAEA containing declarations, with tables and annexes, of amounts and types of nuclear material and nuclear-related items and their locations. It further cited an additional 26 letters containing answers to questions raised by the IAEA inspection teams regarding its nuclear programme, which, it stressed, was devoted to peaceful purposes. In April 1991, it agreed to place all of its nuclear-weapons-usable materials under IAEA control and itemized those disposed of by the inspectors. It enumerated the services extended to them by their Iraqi counterparts in facilitating the destruction, rendering harmless, or removal of nuclear materials and related equipment. It named the more than 50 sites inspected by the first to eighth (1991) IAEA inspections and confirmed that it had halted all nuclear-related activities, including the transfer and unilateral destruction of nuclear-related materials and equipment.

Iraq maintained that it had declared, within the prescribed period, all information regarding its chemical weapons and related production sites, laboratories and stocks of chemical agents, as well as non-filled ammunition. It mentioned all the sites visited by the six chemical weapons inspections conducted in 1991 by the Special Commission. It also stated that it had declared its research programme in biological weapons to be for defensive purposes and that Al-Salman, the programme site, and other associated facilities had been inspected; that it had likewise declared information on its Scud missiles, together with their conventional and chemical warheads, accessories, support systems and launchers; and that it had made additional declarations of mobile launchers, missile storage areas, production, testing and modification sites, and missile research and development programme (Fahad 300, Fahad 500, Al-Hijara, Condor, Al-Abbas, Tamuz and the long-range gun). Under Special Commission instruction and supervision, it had destroyed missiles and related equipment. Its obligation to abandon any activity related to ballistic missiles had been practically verified by the seven 1991 ballistic missile inspection teams.

In addition to Kuwaiti property returned during 1991,⁽¹⁷⁾ Iraq was in the process of arranging for delivery to Kuwait of Hawk missiles and related equipment, along with other military hardware. Delivery delays were due, Iraq stressed, not to its reluctance, but to United Nations procedures and staff shortage.

Iraq indicated that it had carefully and earnestly facilitated the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals. It provided updated information on the subject in February, including the number of those repatriated through ICRC, the measures it had taken and those it had intended to take to expedite the search for persons still missing, as communicated to ICRC on 20 February and on the basis of which it stated that it had met its obligations under paragraphs 30 and 31 of resolution 687(1991). (See also below, under "Repatriation of Kuwaitis and third-country nationals".)

Finally, Iraq reiterated its 1991 statement that it had registered its firm rejection of international terrorism.⁽¹¹⁾

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In a further report of 7 March 1992,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General updated information on the status of Iraq's compliance with obligations as outlined in his January report⁽¹⁵⁾ and incorporated information contained in Iraq's letter of 23 January.

Under the first of the two obligations of a general nature, the Secretary-General referred to Iraq's statement that, as of 31 December 1991, it had met a very large part of the conditions, restrictions and measures imposed on it by Security Council resolution 687(1991).

New information was presented under the group of specific obligations, as follows. Regarding respect for the inviolability of the international border and allocation of islands between Iraq and Kuwait, reference was made to the measures that Iraq said it had taken in its dealings with UNIKOM; its statement regarding its cooperation with the Mission was quoted. According to the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission, Iraq had fully participated in the Demarcation Commission's work: it attended all meetings, took part in voting procedures and in drafting the report, and in no way hindered the preliminary field work of surveying and mapping, concluded in November 1991.

As to obligations relating to conventional, biological or chemical weapons, the Special Commission listed the following as outstanding from Iraq: acknowledgement of its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) and under the plans, approved by the latter, for ongoing monitoring and verification; the declarations required under those plans; agreement to implement unconditionally all its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) and resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991); information required under resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991) in order for the Commission and IAEA to have the full, final and complete picture of all aspects of Iraq's programmes for weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres; arrangements necessary for the implementation of certain of the facilities, privileges and immunities of the Commission, such as airport landing rights; and compliance with Commission instructions to destroy items and facilities used in proscribed ballistic missile programmes.

With respect to obligations relating to nuclear capability development programmes, IAEA stated that, whereas the initial information required of Iraq should cover the period from 1 January 1989, the information received reflected the situation as of the date of reporting, namely, November 1991, after the military operations in the Gulf, during which certain facilities and equipment had been damaged, and subsequent to Iraq's unilateral destruction of items. Moreover, the list of items reported was limited to those in the possession of the Iraqi Atomic Energy Commission (IAEC), whereas it should have included all items of the kind in question existing in Iraq. The Iraqi technical team advised IAEA that, while modifications of the initial information could be made in order to reflect the situation as of 1 January 1989, it could not comply with the second requirement, deeming it practically impossible to extend the list to cover all the items in question.

On obligations relating to repatriation of and access to all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals, the Secretary-General restated the information provided by Iraq in January and February 1992 as to the series of measures it had taken and intended to take. Attention was drawn to a March letter from France, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States, describing Iraq's February letter as no more than a belated and restrictive declaration of intent.

As to Iraq's liability under international law for loss or damage resulting from its unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait, the United Nations Compensation Commission reported that, at the fourth (20-24 January) session of its Governing Council, Iraq had requested a five-year grace period for its contribution to the Compensation Fund in view of its financial obligations and urgent food and medicine requirements. The Governing Council decided that the request be addressed to the Security Council, the competent authority on the matter.

IMF indicated that, as at 29 February, Iraq's arrears to IMF had increased to SDR 8.6 million.

Information from the United Nations Coordinator for the return of Kuwaiti property was that, to date, properties of Kuwait's Central Bank, Central Library, National Museum, News Agency, Airways Corporation and Air Force had been returned. A number of additional items were ready to be returned. Lists of properties from other Kuwaiti ministries, corporations and individuals had been submitted and were being pursued. The Iraqi and Kuwaiti officials involved in the return process had extended maximum cooperation to the United Nations.

In addition, annexed to the report were comments by the Office of the Executive Delegate of the Secretary-General relating to the Security Council's demand that Iraq end the repression of the Iraqi civilian population, including in Kurdish-populated areas. Reference was made to restrictions on essential commodities, particularly food and fuel, imposed by the Government since October 1991 on the three northern governorates of Dohuk, Erbil and Suleimaniya, to the non-payment of civil servants' salaries in those governorates since November, and to distribution of less than half of the regular food rations since December.

The Executive Delegate and the executive heads of UNHCR, UNICEF, the World Food Programme (WFP) and the World Health Organization (WHO) informed the Government in December of their inability to replace essential services and provide the goods denied to the Kurdish population at large. The Government's position was that the restrictions were due to the inability of the Kurdish leadership to maintain security and protect government personnel and resources. Discussions between the Government and the Kurdish leadership had so far not succeeded in ending the restrictions. (See also below, under "Kurds and other minority populations".)

The 1991 Memorandum of Understanding (see below, under "Inter-agency humanitarian programme"), which expired on 31 December 1991, was extended to the end of June 1992. Under the extended Memorandum, the Government committed itself to facilitating access where necessary in most parts of Iraq by United Nations and other relief agencies. However, the Government had refused to approve the establishment of humanitarian centres at Kirkuk in the north and Nasariya and Hammar in the south. The Government's position in this respect was that, according to the Memorandum, establishment of such centres and determination of humanitarian needs were to be undertaken in agreement and cooperation with the Government and with due respect for Iraq's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. Given the need for agreement, the Government's refusal was not to be construed as a unilateral act.

Under the original Memorandum, Iraq contributed 1.5 million Iraqi dinar (ID) to cover the inter-agency programme's in-country operational costs. The ID 1 million it undertook to make available under the extended Memorandum had not been received as at 17 January 1992.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (11 and 12 March)

As agreed in prior consultations, the Security Council convened on 11 March 1992 and invited Iraq and Kuwait to participate, in accordance with Article 31 of the Charter of the United Nations and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. It also invited, under rule 39,^b the Director General of IAEA, Hans Blix, and the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission, Rolf Ekéus. A high-level Iraqi technical team and the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq, Tariq Aziz, appeared before the Council to respond to questions on all aspects of Iraq's compliance with resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions.

After consultations among Council members, the President was authorized to make the following introductory statement(19) on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3059 (with resumptions 1 and 2).

"I. General obligation

"1. The resolutions concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait impose a number of general and specific obligations upon Iraq.

"2. As regards the general obligation, Iraq is required, under paragraph 33 of Security Council resolution 687(1991), to give official notification to the Secretary-General and to the Security Council of its acceptance of the provisions of that entire resolution.

"3. Iraq signified its unconditional acceptance in letters dated 6 and 10 April 1991 (S/22456 and S/22480, respectively) and 23 January 1992 (S/23472).

"4. When the Security Council met at the level of heads of State and Government on 31 January 1992, the concluding statement made by the President of the Council, on behalf of its members (S/23500), contained the following passage:

" 'Last year, under the authority of the United Nations, the international community succeeded in enabling Kuwait to regain its sovereignty and territorial integrity, which it had lost as a result of Iraqi aggression. The resolutions adopted by the Security Council remain essential to the restoration of peace and stability in the region and must be fully implemented. At the same time the members of the Council are concerned by the humanitarian situation of the innocent civilian population of Iraq.'

"5. On 5 February 1992, the President of the Security Council issued a statement on behalf of its members (S/23517) in which he stated, among other things:

" 'In connection with the Secretary-General's factual report (S/23514) on Iraq's compliance with all the obligations placed upon it by resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions, the members of the Security Council note that while much progress has been made, much remains to be done.... The members of the Council are disturbed by the lack of Iraqi cooperation. Iraq must implement fully resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions, as was stated in the statement read out by the President of the Council on behalf of its members in the meeting held on 31 January 1992 with the participation of the heads of State and Government (S/23500).'

"6. In a statement made on behalf of the Council on 28 February 1992 (S/23663), the President said:

^a Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

^b Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

“The members of the Council demand that Iraq immediately implement all its obligations under Council resolution 687(1991) and subsequent resolutions on Iraq. The members of the Council require the Government of Iraq to communicate directly to the Council without further delay an authoritative and unconditional acknowledgement of its agreement to accept and implement the above noted obligations, including specifically to comply with the determination of the Special Commission requiring the destruction of ballistic missile-related equipment. The members of the Council emphasize that Iraq must be aware of the serious consequences of continued material breaches of resolution 687(1991).”

“7. I must also draw attention to the further report of the Secretary-General on the status of compliance by Iraq with the obligations placed upon it (S/23687).”

“8. From the aforementioned statements by the President and in view of the reports of the Secretary-General, it will be seen that, despite Iraq’s statements of unconditional acceptance of Security Council resolution 687(1991), the Security Council has determined that Iraq is not in full compliance with all of its obligations.”

“II. Specific obligations

“9. In addition to the general obligation to accept the provisions of resolution 687(1991) in their entirety, several Security Council resolutions impose specific obligations upon Iraq.

“(a) Respect for the inviolability of the international boundary

“10. By paragraph 2 of resolution 687(1991) the Security Council demands that Iraq respect the inviolability of the international boundary and the allocation of islands previously agreed upon between Iraq and Kuwait. Pursuant to paragraph 3 of that resolution, the Secretary-General established a Boundary Demarcation Commission to demarcate the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait. Paragraph 5 of the same resolution requires Iraq and Kuwait to respect a demilitarized zone (DMZ) established by the Security Council. The Council has been informed that Iraq has respected the DMZ and that it has fully participated in the work of the Boundary Demarcation Commission. It has also been informed that Iraq refuses to withdraw a number of police posts that are not in line with UNIKOM’s principle that both sides should stay 1,000 metres from the boundary line shown on UNIKOM’s map.

“(b) Weapons-related obligations

“11. Section C of resolution 687(1991) imposes certain specific obligations upon Iraq with respect to its chemical and biological weapons programmes, its ballistic missile programmes with a range greater than 150 kilometres and its nuclear programmes. These obligations are elaborated upon in resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991). The obligations are defined in paragraphs 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 of resolution 687(1991) and they are elaborated upon in paragraphs 3 and 5 of resolution 707(1991) and paragraph 5 of resolution 715(1991).

“12. The information relevant to Iraq’s compliance with the obligations laid down in the paragraphs of the Security Council resolutions to which I have just referred is reproduced in annex I to the Secretary-General’s report (S/23687).

“13. By resolution 699(1991), the Security Council decided that the Government of Iraq shall be liable for the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991). No funds have so far been received from Iraq to meet this liability.

“14. The Council has noted that since the adoption of resolution 687(1991) progress has been made in the implementation of section C of that resolution but that much remains to be done. There is serious non-compliance with the obligations concerning the programmes for weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles and the members of the Council have found this to be a continuing material breach of resolution 687(1991).

“15. The Special Commission has informed the Council about the outstanding matters that would at the present time appear to be the most important. The Council’s attention is invited again to annex I of the Secretary-General’s report, S/23687, of 7 March 1992.

“16. The Council has also noted the statement by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) contained in the Secretary-General’s report of 25 January 1992 (S/23514, section C of the annex). The attention of the Council is drawn to information annexed to the further report of the Secretary-General, S/23687 (annex II), of 7 March 1992, relative to the two last inspections by the IAEA, on Iraq’s compliance with its obligations under United Nations Security Council resolutions as they relate to nuclear activities.

“17. In a statement issued on behalf of the members of the Council (S/23609), the President stated on 19 February 1992 that:

“ ‘Iraq’s failure to acknowledge its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), its rejection up until now of the two plans for ongoing monitoring and verification and its failure to provide the full, final and complete disclosure of its weapons capabilities constitute a continuing material breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991).’

“18. In a further statement made on 28 February 1992 on behalf of the Council (S/23663), the President said:

“ ‘The members of the Council deplore and condemn the failure of the Government of Iraq to provide the Special Commission with full, final and complete disclosure, as required by resolution 707(1991), of all aspects of its programmes to develop weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres, including launchers, and of all holdings of such weapons, their components and production facilities and locations, as well as all other nuclear programmes; and the failure of Iraq to comply with the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved by resolution 715(1991). ...Furthermore, the members of the Council equally deplore and condemn Iraq’s failure, within the time prescribed by the Special Commission at the request of Iraq, to commence destruction of ballistic missile-related equipment designated for destruction by the Special Commission. The members of the Council reaffirm that it is for the Special Commission alone to determine which items must be destroyed under paragraph 9 of resolution 687(1991)

“(c) Repatriation of and access to Kuwaiti and third-country nationals in Iraq

“19. As regards Kuwaiti and third-country nationals in Iraq, Security Council resolutions 664 (1990), 666(1990), 667(1990), 674(1990), 686(1991) and 687(1991) impose an obligation on Iraq to release, facilitate repatriation of, and arrange for immediate access to them, as well as the return of the remains of any deceased personnel of the forces of Kuwait and of the Member States cooperating with Kuwait pursuant to resolution 678(1990). Furthermore, paragraph 30 of resolution 687(1991) requires Iraq to extend all necessary cooperation to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in facilitating the search for Kuwaiti and third-country nationals still unaccounted for.

“20. The Security Council was informed by the ICRC in January 1992 that almost 7,000 persons have returned from Iraq to their countries since the beginning of March 1991. The ICRC also stated that despite all its efforts, there are still thousands of persons reported missing by the parties to the conflict.

“21. A special commission composed of the representatives of France, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States has met under the auspices of the ICRC to try to reach an agreement on, among other things, the implementation of paragraph 30 of resolution 687(1991). However, the ICRC has informed the Council that it has not yet received any information as to the whereabouts of the persons reported missing in Iraq. Nor has it received detailed and documented information on the search conducted by the Iraqi authorities. Finally, it is also still awaiting information on persons who have died while in custody.

“22. The attention of the Council is drawn to section 4, paragraphs 12 to 14, of the Secretary-General's report contained in document S/23687 of 7 March 1992.

“(d) Iraq's liability under international law

“23. Another obligation concerns Iraq's liability under international law. In resolution 674(1990), the Security Council reminds Iraq ‘that under international law it is liable for any loss, damage or injury arising in regard to Kuwait and third States and their nationals and corporations, as a result of the invasion and illegal occupation of Kuwait by Iraq’. Its liability under international law is reaffirmed in paragraph 1 (b) of resolution 686(1991) and paragraph 16 of resolution 687(1991). Resolution 687(1991) further specifies that it ‘is liable under international law for any direct loss, damage, including environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources, or injury to foreign Governments, nationals and corporations, as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait’.

“24. By paragraph 18 of the same resolution, the Security Council created a Fund to pay compensation for claims that fall within paragraph 16, to be financed by a percentage of the value of the exports of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq. In view of the existing economic sanctions against Iraq under resolution 661(1990), Iraq was permitted by the Security Council under resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) to sell a limited quantity of oil, as an exception, a portion of the proceeds from which would be used to provide financial resources for the Fund. To date, it has not availed itself of this possibility. The Council notes that this authorization is due to lapse on 18 March 1992. The members of the Council are aware of a request by Iraq for a five-year moratorium on meeting its financial obligations, including payments into the Compensation Fund.

“(e) Repayment and servicing of Iraq's foreign debt

“25. With regard to another obligation, the Security Council, in paragraph 17 of resolution 687(1991), demands that Iraq scrupulously adhere to all of its obligations concerning servicing and repayment of its foreign debt.

“26. The attention of the Council is drawn to paragraphs 17 and 18 of the Secretary-General's report (S/23687) of 7 March 1992.

“(f) Return of property

“27. I now turn to the question of return of property. The Security Council, in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 686(1991), demands that Iraq immediately begin to return all Kuwaiti property seized by it, to be completed in the shortest possible period. The members of the Council have noted with satisfaction that, as stated in the further report of the Secretary-General, Iraqi officials involved with the return of property have extended maximum cooperation to the United Nations to facilitate the return.

“(g) Monthly statements of gold and foreign currency reserves

“28. Another obligation is set out by paragraph 7 of resolution 706(1991), under which the Government of Iraq is required to provide to the Secretary-General and appropriate international organizations monthly statements of its gold and foreign currency reserves. To date, no such statements have been provided to the Secretary-General or to the IMF.

“(h) Undertaking not to commit or support acts of international terrorism

“29. By paragraph 32 of resolution 687(1991), Iraq is required not to commit or support acts of international terrorism or allow any organization directed towards commission of such acts to operate within its territory and to condemn unequivocally and renounce all acts, methods, and practices of terrorism.

“30. The Council notes Iraq's statements contained in letters dated 11 June 1991 (S/22687 and S/22689) and 23 January 1992 (S/23472) that it is a party to international conventions against terrorism and that it has never pursued a policy favourable to international terrorism as defined by international law.

“(i) Security Council action with respect to the Iraqi civilian population

“31. Resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) provide a means for Iraq to meet its obligations to supply its civilian population with needed humanitarian assistance, particularly food and medicine. To date, Iraq has refused to implement these resolutions. In fact, after initiating discussions with Secretariat representatives on implementation, Iraq abruptly terminated the discussions.

“III. Security Council resolution 688(1991)

“32. I should now like to refer to the demands by the Security Council with respect to the Iraqi civilian population. In paragraph 2 of resolution 688(1991), the Security Council demands that Iraq, as a contribution to removing the threat to international peace and security in the region, and the repression of its civilian population. In paragraphs 3 and 7, the Security Council insists that it allow immediate access by international humanitarian organizations to all those in need of assistance in all parts of Iraq, and demands its cooperation with the Secretary-General to these ends.

"33. The Security Council remains deeply concerned at the grave human rights abuses that, despite the provisions of resolution 688(1991), the Government of Iraq continues to perpetrate against its population, in particular in the northern region of Iraq, in southern Shi'a centres and in the southern marshes (Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/71 of 5 March 1992). The Security Council notes that this situation is confirmed by the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights (E/CN.4/1992/31, also to be circulated in document S/23685) and by the comments of the Office of the Executive Delegate of the Secretary-General contained in the further report of the Secretary-General.

"34. The members of the Council are particularly concerned at the reported restrictions on the supplies of essential commodities, in particular food and fuel, which have been imposed by the Government of Iraq on the three northern governorates of Dohuk, Erbil and Suleimaniya. In this regard, as the Special Rapporteur has noted in his report, inasmuch as the repression of the population continues, the threat to international peace and security in the region mentioned in resolution 688(1991) remains.

"IV. Concluding observation

"35. In view of the observations on the record of Iraq's performance, the Security Council has considered itself justified in concluding that Iraq has not fully complied with the obligations placed upon it by the Council. It is the Council's hope and expectation that this meeting will prove an invaluable opportunity to advance in the consideration of this issue as required in the interest of world peace and security, as well as that of the Iraqi people."

Iraq, in the person of its Deputy Prime Minister, Tariq Aziz, referred to resolution 687(1991) as laying down measures and conditions without precedent in United Nations history, for they transcended by a large degree the initial limits and declared objectives of Council resolutions 660(1990)(20) and 686(1991).(21) It recalled that, as an independent sovereign State, Iraq made known its views on resolution 687(1991), based on the Charter, international law and principles of fairness and justice, but accepted the resolution to ward off the dangers that were threatening the Iraqi people. As demonstrated by its comprehensive letter of 23 January,(15) Iraq had since implemented to a large extent the fundamental provisions of that resolution.

Focusing on aspects that had been the source of problems, Iraq stated that the prohibited weapons had been totally destroyed; whatever remained was scheduled for destruction according to a plan about which Iraq and the United Nations inspection teams had no argument. Equipment used or allegedly used to produce such weapons had been identified, examined and placed under seal to ensure its non-use. From April 1991 to February 1992, 29 inspection teams of about 400 inspectors conducted 415 inspections in Iraq, including 127 surprise ones, for a total of 240 days. The teams used the most advanced and sophisticated means of detection, communication, reconnaissance and transport, including extensive helicopter aerial surveys—about 45 of them, plus another 120 flights, each of between four and eight hours' duration. United States U-2 planes flew 32 reconnaissance missions, averaging three to four hours each.

The inspection teams supervised 40 operations of destruction of missile systems, chemical weapons, equipment and their accessories, totalling around 14,000 items, ranging from half-manufactured parts to missiles and rocket launchers, from machines and equipment to empty chemical-munition shells. Iraq itself had destroyed more than 270,000 items of equipment and machine parts. More than 1,500 tonnes of raw materials had also been destroyed. Machines and equipment placed under seal numbered nearly 1,000, not to mention those destroyed during the 1991 military operations. The conclusion to be drawn was that Iraq was no longer in possession of any weapons, munitions, or major or minor systems prohibited by resolution 687(1991).

Iraq repeated the information it communicated to the Council President in February regarding the repatriation of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals and to the Secretary-General on 28 January regarding the return of Kuwaiti properties.

Iraq restated that it had fulfilled the most fundamental provisions of sections A, B, D and H of resolution 687(1991). Those provisions that required some time to implement fully were being implemented with Iraq's serious and professional cooperation. Iraq noted that, after each compliance review since June 1991, the Council had declared that it was not yet in full compliance; the embargo thus remained in force and the suffering of 18 million Iraqis continued unmitigated. It asserted that the extent of its compliance, repeatedly notified to the Council, had been ignored under pressure from a small but influential and perhaps even tyrannical number of Council members, which had exploited resolution 687(1991) for political ends.

As to the Council President's statement of 28 February (see below, under "Special Commission activities"), Iraq declared its readiness to take several steps—all in relation to resolution 687(1991)—based on respect for its sovereignty and dignity and non-infringement of its national security. It would continue to cooperate with the Special Commission and IAEA in accomplishing the tasks specified and in providing information to complete the picture of its prohibited programmes; it was ready to reach a practical solution to the question of verifying Iraq's capabilities to produce prohibited weapons, as well as a practical mechanism to render harmless the equipment specified in paragraph 8 of the resolution.

With regard to completing information and data, Iraq proposed a technical meeting between itself, the Special Commission and the Security Council, at which the Commission's demands and questions relating to resolution 687(1991) would be submitted; the information and documentation to be presented by Iraq would be reviewed; and a comprehensive report would be submitted to the Council within a fixed period. By this means the Council's demand for a full, complete and final declaration would be met scientifically, objectively and reliably.

In order to resolve the issue of ongoing monitoring and verification, Iraq proposed that the related plans be discussed—a proposal for which the inspection teams evinced an understanding. As to equipment capable of dual use, Iraq felt it possible to arrive at a reasonable formula for verifying that such equipment was not used to produce prohibited weapons while at the same time preserving Iraq's legitimate rights, its sovereignty and security, rather than resorting to the extremist approach calling only for destruction. To that end Iraq proposed that the Commission submit to the Council a complete and final list of all the machines and equipment to be destroyed or rendered harmless. Iraq would determine whether or not, in its view, the equipment could be used for prohibited purposes. Alternatively, every Member State could be represented by experts capable of verifying the information and views of both sides.

Finally, Iraq sought clarification from the Council as to its position on the subject of the economic embargo imposed on Iraq, saying that despite the extent to which it had implemented resolution 687 (1991), the Council had not budged an inch. Therefore, Iraqis remained deprived of their right to a normal life and had to import all their humanitarian needs. It called on the Council to abandon that position in favour of an objective and fair one.

IAEA, in the person of its Director General, stated its mandate under the series of Council resolutions beginning with resolution 687(1991): to map nuclear programmes and facilities in Iraq intended, or susceptible to being used, to produce nuclear weapons or weapons-usable material; to remove, destroy or render harmless proscribed items; and to plan and perform future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with all Council resolutions in the nuclear sphere.

IAEA stated that considerable work had been accomplished, which would not have been possible without Iraq's cooperation; however, the results would have come sooner and with much less pain had Iraq fully and spontaneously complied with its obligations under the resolutions. It noted in this connection that Iraq's behaviour had often been marked by denial of clandestine activities until the evidence was overwhelming, followed by cooperation until the next case of concealment was revealed. He recalled serious incidents of confrontation when IAEA inspection teams were denied unrestricted access to sites or when pertinent documents were removed from them. In the face of these attitudes, IAEA could not have carried out the mapping of Iraq's nuclear programme but for the firm and consistent support of the Council.

After 10 months of work, including 10 inspections, after many sessions of intense questioning of Iraqi technical teams, after the screening of masses of documents and assessment of the analytical investigations of many hundreds of samples taken in Iraq, a fairly consistent and coherent picture was emerging of the Iraqi nuclear programme. That picture was by no means a simple reflection of the information supplied by Iraq; it was based on direct observation and inspection of nuclear facilities, equipment and material, on authentic documents and proven information from other countries and on the IAEA experts' considerable experience of nuclear programmes. Some gaps or grey areas remained, however. In view of these and Iraq's track record of non-revelation, inspections needed to continue even as future ongoing monitoring and verification was under way.

A general shortcoming in Iraq's attitude had been the lack of full and explicit acceptance of resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991)—an expression not only of reluctance but also of resistance that was incompatible with the binding nature of those resolutions. The Council's insistence on the matter was important, not only as a question of its authority but as a matter underlying the many specific points of non-compliance that had been noted. Lack of cooperation and non-compliance still persisted in respect of information on procurement sources of critical material and equipment. Further, the initial information needed to establish the future ongoing plan for monitoring and verification, required to be supplied by Iraq under resolution 715(1991), had been provided only partially. A statement by Iraq of readiness to provide procurement information and to complete the information required under resolution 705(1991) would eliminate serious hurdles.

As to the removal, destruction or rendering harmless of proscribed nuclear items, a large part of Iraq's nuclear facilities, including most of those known to have been used in the nuclear-weapons development programme, was either fully destroyed or heavily damaged in the course of the 1991 military operations in the Gulf. This was true of Al-Tuwaitha, the main research and development centre of the Iraqi nuclear programme; of Tarmiya, the industrial complex for electromagnetic isotope separation (EMIS) enriched uranium production; of Ash Sharqat, the intended second site for EMIS industrial-scale activities; of Al-Jesirah, the large chemical complex, where the natural uranium feed material for enrichment activities was produced; and of Al-Qaim, where uranium concentrates from indigenous uranium-bearing phosphate ores were produced.

In addition, by admission of the Iraqi authorities, a number of items, such as components and equipment, were subsequently damaged or destroyed by the Iraqi military in an attempt to remove evidence of the clandestine nuclear programme. In spite of this extensive destruction, there were still sites, facilities, equipment and material that suffered little or no damage and therefore fell into the category of items requiring destruction, removal or rendering harmless under resolution 687(1991). A case in point was the Al-Atheer site, specifically designed for weaponization activities, and of some buildings at Tarmiya and Ash Sharqat.

IAEA summarized progress as follows. Material in the form of fresh and irradiated fuel elements for the Iraqi research reactors was removed from Iraq in November 1991; negotiations were under way to remove the remaining irradiated fuel. A large number of components of calutrons and ultracentrifuges relevant to producing enriched uranium had been destroyed under IAEA supervision. Hot cells, glove boxes, remote-handling manipulators and other equipment used in research activities for laboratory-scale separation of plutonium from irradiated fuel had been destroyed or rendered harmless. Dedicated equipment and machine tools for the manufacture of those components had also been destroyed. Dual-use items were being inventoried and placed under IAEA seal. Buildings, such as laboratories, plants and other facilities where research and development, production or testing directly, relevant to activities prohibited under resolution 687(1991) were conducted, were being assessed for destruction.

IAEA noted that large facilities and amounts of equipment for the production of nuclear weapons and nuclear-weapons-usable material had been destroyed, removed or rendered harmless. New facilities could not be built easily without detection, and the import or production of new relevant equipment would meet great obstacles. What certainly remained in Iraq, however, was a large cadre of highly trained scientists and engineers who had been engaged in its nuclear programme. It was important, the Director General said, that that cadre, reported to be currently engaged in the civilian reconstruction of Iraq, remain engaged in non-proscribed activities.

The Special Commission, in the person of the Executive Chairman, emphasized that the Commission had one fundamental aim: to be able to report to the Council as soon as possible that Iraq had fully met all its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) as elaborated upon in resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991). The speed with which the Commission could report the successful execution of its task was largely determined by the degree of Iraq's cooperation, openness and transparency, which fell short of what was required. All the necessary information that Iraq claimed to have provided was neither complete nor systematized, for the Commission had evidence of the continued existence and concealment of undeclared weapons and means of their delivery. The very fact that Iraq had not acknowledged resolution 707(1991), which called for full, final and complete disclosure of its prohibited programmes in all their aspects, undermined the credibility of the information it had provided.

Instead of providing the disclosure called for, Iraq had proposed a dialogue whereby the Commission would elicit information through an inquisitorial approach and thus shift the onus placed on Iraq to present the information it possessed onto the Commission to seek and compile that information. The Commission stressed that Iraq must provide: all information on the evolution of the programmes and the links among all the elements in each; all information on procurement to support the programmes, including a detailed year-by-year breakdown of production and imports plus sources; full records of the use of all relevant weapons and their components; credible, detailed information on items unilaterally destroyed by Iraq; and sufficient, credible supporting documentation and physical evidence for all declarations made to date. Since resolution 687(1991) provided for the disposal of prohibited items only under international supervision, the Commission had requested, but had yet to receive, a list fully accounting for the 270,000 items declared as having been unilaterally destroyed.

Regarding the Commission's responsibility to destroy, remove or render harmless Iraq's weapons and capabilities in the proscribed areas, the destruction of weapons already declared was under way with Iraqi cooperation, duly noted as having been good. Regarding disposal of production capabilities, however, in particular certain missile-producing ones identified for destruction after a long process of exchanges with Iraq on a case-by-case basis, a ballistic missile inspection team charged with overseeing the destruction had to be withdrawn due to Iraq's refusal to proceed. As the Council statement of 28 February clearly reaffirmed, it was for the Commission alone to determine what items must be destroyed under paragraph 9 of resolution 687(1991).

To Iraq's argument that, rather than destroy the facilities specifically designed to produce weapons of mass destruction, they should be converted to civilian use so as not to deprive the country of its civilian industrial base, the Executive Chairman replied that the Commission would be failing in its responsibility to the Council if it did not ensure that such facilities were either destroyed, removed or rendered harmless. The latter would involve modification to render the facilities incapable of being reconverted for prohibited activities.

The Commission drew attention to the existing impasse with respect to the third stage of its responsibility: ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991). In January 1992, Iraq confirmed its position to the Commission that the objectives of the monitoring and verification plans were incompatible with the letter and spirit of the United Nations Charter, the norms of international law, and international and humanitarian pacts and covenants. While Iraq claimed that that statement did not amount to a rejection, the Commission could not but understand it as such in the light of its language. Further confirming that rejection was Iraq's failure so far to submit two declarations required under the Commission's plans for ongoing monitoring and verification, without which a satisfactory monitoring regime could not be set up and monitoring could not be instituted.

The Commission explained that the intrusive elements in the general provisions of the plans were approved by the Council against a background of Iraqi concealment, movement of proscribed items and violation of the privileges and immunities of inspection teams. Those elements would not be invoked provided Iraq cooperated. In any event, the Commission and IAEA had no need to justify plans unanimously endorsed by the Council in resolution 715(1991), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The successful implementation of the work of the Commission and of IAEA required that their facilities, privileges and immunities be respected, flowing as they did from Council resolutions, from relevant international conventions to which Iraq was party, and from the express provisions of the status agreement between the United Nations and Iraq, which entered into force on 14 May 1991.⁽²²⁾ If Iraq had a real interest in the full cooperation necessary to expedite implementation of section C of resolution 687(1991), it should stop meeting with silence the Commission's approaches to resolve the difficulties interposed in regard to its operations and aircraft landing rights. Aerial surveillance flights were undertaken with full Commission control and command. It was correct that a large number of them had taken place over Baghdad for the simple reason that a number of facilities to which resolution 687(1991) related were in its vicinity. The Commission had to act in accordance with Council resolutions, the provisions of which it could not negotiate away.

In the absence of the undertaking by Iraq to comply fully with the Council's decisions, and until practical experience was gained to confirm that such an undertaking was being honoured, the Special Commission would be seriously hindered in those phases of its operations concerning identification and destruction of proscribed items and would be precluded from instituting the ongoing monitoring and verification phase. In such a situation, the possibility of the Special Commission's certifying Iraq's compliance with its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) could not even arise.

At a resumed meeting on 12 March, Iraq responded to the questions and concerns put forward.

Addressing the matter of respect for the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait, Iraq said there was not a fundamental problem but rather a minor one concerning five police posts set up by Iraq on Kuwait's side of the boundary. He said Iraq had asked that their withdrawal be deferred until the demarcation had been completed.

On the weapons-related obligations, Iraq asserted that all weapons prohibited under resolution 687(1991) and their subsystems had been destroyed. Iraq was ready to make full, comprehensive and final declarations of all of its weapons programmes specified in that resolution, and, for that purpose, suggested that technical meetings be held with the Special Commission and IAEA. As to the "destruction or rendering harmless" of specified items and facilities, Iraq said it was committed to the provisions of resolution 687(1991) as they stood, but reiterated its observation that the current interpretation of that phrase was not in line with the text of the resolution. It asserted that destruction must be limited to equipment that could be used only to produce prohibited weapons and called on the Council to meet Iraq's legitimate request that other equipment that could be converted for non-prohibited purposes be simply rendered harmless. Verification of such use could be provided for.

Through its acceptance of resolution 687(1991), Iraq had accepted the principle of future verification of compliance, but reaffirmed in this connection that the requirements of its national sovereignty and territorial integrity be respected.

Iraq restated the measures it had taken and was taking to arrange visits to prisons and detention camps and to obtain information on missing Kuwaitis and third-country nationals. It had accepted the resolutions on the question of its liability under international law. Iraq emphasized that, as the party directly concerned in the claims for losses and damage being filed against it, it should be represented in the machinery dealing with those claims. Under the law, a relationship between fault and damage should be established and justice demanded proof of fault for liability. As to its obligation to pay its debts and interest, Iraq could not do so under the all-out embargo against it.

As to suspicions that if Iraq were allowed to export oil to finance its humanitarian needs it might use the proceeds for other purposes, a practical way to dispel those suspicions was to sell oil to Council members which had been purchasers of Iraqi oil and Iraq could confine its purchases to the permanent Council members so that they could keep track of the transactions. For Iraq, the sales regime laid out in resolution 706(1991) had political implications that, wittingly or not, would lead to interference in Iraq's internal affairs. Therefore, it was ready to enter into serious talks to find an acceptable alternative solution. It was ready to pursue the contacts begun at Vienna in February, but without preconditions, so as to reach agreement on practical arrangements for the export of an appropriate amount of Iraqi oil and to secure transparency on future imports and exports. Iraq hoped that such arrangements would not be embodied in a resolution.

Regarding the Kurds in the north and the Shiites in the south, as well as the alleged blockade against the three governorates and international relief efforts, Iraq's position on resolution 688(1991)(23) on the matter was that it constituted blatant interference in Iraq's internal affairs. Dialogue with the Kurdistan Front, while resulting in a new formula for autonomy for the Iraqi Kurds, was not signed by the Front. Subsequent acts of destruction and sabotage against Government authorities in the governorates made it imperative for the Government to withdraw the administrative apparatus from the area. Thus Erbil was bereft of a mechanism whereby to pay the salaries of civil employees, although salaries could be collected at Mosul or Kirkuk. The governorates were likewise bereft of the apparatus to distribute supply rations so that distribution was being made to Kurdish-controlled caterers. The question of proper distribution thus fell outside the central Government's responsibility. There was no blockade of the governorates, Iraq asserted, only precautionary measures in the form of checkpoints to prevent smuggling into bordering countries.

Iraq had reaffirmed its commitment against terrorism, and there was not a shred of evidence that it had taken part in terrorist operations.

Finally, Iraq requested that it be allowed to appear before the Council at every review of its compliance in order to have the opportunity to explain its position on matters raised.

After consultations among the Council members during a brief suspension of the meeting, the President was authorized to make the following statement(24) on the Council's behalf:

"In concluding the present stage of the consideration of the item on the agenda, I have been authorized, following consultations among members of the Security Council, to make the following statement on behalf of the Council:

" 'The views of the Security Council having been expressed through its President and by the statements of its members on the extent of compliance by the Government of Iraq with its obligations under the relevant Security Council resolutions, the Security Council has listened with close attention to the statement by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and his responses to the questions posed by Council members.

" 'The members of the Security Council wish to reiterate their full support for the statement made by the President of the Council on their behalf at the opening of the 3059th meeting (S/23699).

" 'In the view of the Security Council, the Government of Iraq has not yet complied fully and unconditionally with those obligations, must do so and must immediately take the appropriate actions in this regard. It hopes that the goodwill expressed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq will be matched by deeds.' "

Report of the Special Commission. On 22 May 1992,(25) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a report by the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission on the status of Iraq's compliance with its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) and resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), prepared for the Council's 60-day review of the sanctions imposed on Iraq.

The report stated that the Office of the Executive Chairman explained in detail to Iraq's high-level delegation to the Council in March the format and modalities required by the plan for ongoing monitoring and verification under its different sections and annexes, and emphasized that the plan required full information. The Iraqi team promised to provide the information by early April—although not information on the sources of imported items and the operational deployment or disposition of relevant weapons—as well as the full, final and complete disclosure of all aspects of Iraq's proscribed weapons programmes as required under resolution 707(1991). To an invitation to visit Baghdad to review both sets of draft declarations, the Commission indicated acceptance provided it received beforehand the draft texts and Iraq's clear acknowledgement of its obligations arising from resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991). Neither that formal acknowledgement nor the draft declarations had been received.

The Executive Chairman summarized the Commission's inspection activities with respect to Iraq's chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles. He again drew attention to the Commission's unsuccessful efforts to obtain landing rights at Rasheed airport, to Iraq's continuing protests against the use of the U-2 high-altitude surveillance aircraft, and to the fact that not all the documents forcibly removed from a nuclear inspection team in 1991 had yet been returned.

On 26 May 1992,(26) Iraq transmitted a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq in response to a 21 May letter from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission.

As to the required full, final and complete disclosure, the Minister said such disclosure in the nuclear field was submitted directly to the IAEA Director General on 12 March. At the time it was agreed that it would be seen as a draft for discussion and revision in the light of IAEA comments. The draft was subsequently revised after discussions with the inspectors of the eleventh (April) nuclear inspection. The Minister recalled that the Commission had been advised in March that the draft of the full, final and complete disclosure relating to chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles was ready for submission in Arabic, and that the English version would be submitted to a Commission delegation that was to have visited Baghdad in April but never did. The report was ready and Iraq awaited the Executive Chairman's views as to whether it should be transmitted by mail or through Commission representatives.

With regard to Iraq's acknowledgement of its obligations under resolution 707(1991) and 715(1991) approving the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification, the Minister recalled the Deputy Prime Minister's statement before the Council emphasizing Iraq's readiness to reach a practical solution regarding the verification specified and the possibility of identifying a reasonable formula that would achieve the plans' objectives while preserving Iraq's legitimate rights, sovereignty and security.

As to providing the declarations called for under the plans, he explained that those in the nuclear field were made in November 1991, as later updated. Declarations on chemical, biological and ballistic activities were to be discussed with a Commission technical team that was never sent to Baghdad. What remained to be met of the Commission's demands were the names of suppliers of materials related to those activities, which Iraq had declined to divulge on the grounds of trading ethics. On the question of ongoing monitoring to ensure that prohibited (ballistic, chemical and nuclear) weapons were not produced in the future, it was Iraq's demand that agreement be reached between it, the Commission and IAEA, under Security Council auspices, on practical guarantees to ensure that the methods employed would not infringe upon Iraq's sovereignty, threaten its internal security, lead to interference in its internal affairs or deny it the prospects for scientific, technological and industrial progress in both the civilian and military spheres not prohibited under resolution 687(1991).

In the light of Iraq's responses, the Secretary-General, on 3 June,(27) circulated to the Security Council the Executive Chairman's letters of 1 and 2 April to the Vice-Chairman of the Military Industrial Corporation of Iraq and of 21 May to the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Iraq. The 1 April letter contained the Executive Chairman's conditions for accepting Iraq's invitation to review the draft declarations in Baghdad. The 2 April letter reviewed the preliminary draft declarations made available to the Commission on an unofficial basis by the Iraqi technical team in March and explained the concept behind the plan for ongoing monitoring and verification in relation to the revisions necessary to make the declarations conform with the parameters established by the provisions of the plans. The 21 May letter set out the three items that remained to be provided by Iraq, stressing that if not received, the Commission would have no alternative but to conclude that no progress had been made in obtaining them from Iraq.

IAEA report. IAEA, on 26 May 1992,(28) submitted a report on the status of Iraq's compliance with its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) and resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), likewise prepared for the 60-day review by the Security Council of the sanctions imposed on Iraq.

IAEA stated that, on 12 and 13 March, it discussed outstanding issues with a team headed by the IAEA Chairman and drawn from Iraq's high-level delegation to the Council. Further meetings were held (Vienna, Austria, 20-24 March) at the request of Iraq for the purpose of clarifying the role and functions of the Al-Atheer Centre in an effort to spare it from destruction. Convinced, however, that the technical core of the Al-Atheer-Al-Hatteen facility had been designed to accommodate nuclear-weapons development, IAEA informed Iraq on 25 March that the destruction of the facility had to proceed in conjunction with the eleventh (April) nuclear inspection (see below, under "IAEA inspections").

IAEA concluded that, before it could report to the Council that Iraq was in substantial compliance with its obligations, it had to fulfil the following: accept its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991); make a full, final and complete disclosure of all aspects of its nuclear programme, including procurement details, as called for by resolution 707(1991); and provide, under the IAEA plan adopted through resolution 715(1991), a complete list of equipment and materials used for prohibited purposes and of equipment and materials having dual-use capability. The removal, destruction and rendering harmless called for by resolution 687(1991) had to be completed to the full satisfaction of IAEA, and monitoring and verification to ensure that Iraq did not reacquire capabilities prohibited under resolution 687(1991) must be initiated and must proceed smoothly.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and September)

After consultations held on 27 May 1992, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement(29) on behalf of the Council members in connection with the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council held informal consultations on 27 May 1992 pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991).

"After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there still was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regime established in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 21 of that resolution."

Likewise, after consultations on 24 September, the President issued a similar statement(30) on behalf of the Council members in connection with the same item.

Communications from Iraq. On 28 October 1992,(31) Iraq called on the Security Council in the strongest terms to revise its position and attitude towards Iraq. It accused the Council, the Special Commission and IAEA of waging a ferocious and unparalleled campaign to exact from Iraq compliance with obligations imposed on it under resolution 687(1991). For the sake of truth and the historical record, it was obliged to state that most of the inspection teams that visited Iraq were hostile. They engaged in effrontery and provocation and had no regard for the sovereignty, dignity and security of Iraq. They contrived problems and their inspection plans were based, not on scientific, technical and logical considerations, but on tendentious reports aimed at furthering the well-known political designs of certain States against Iraq. The teams behaved more like medieval inquisitors than technical inspectors carrying out the well-defined objectives of resolution 687(1991).

Iraq asserted that the United Nations was applying a shameful double standard. In its pursuit of the enforcement of provisions that punished and restricted Iraq well beyond the wording of the resolution, the provision calling for the establishment of a Middle East zone free of weapons of mass destruction and all missiles for their delivery was being ignored. Israel and Iran were engaged in building their arsenals of mass destruction, resulting in the emergence of a dangerous disequilibrium of forces in the region that threatened its security and stability. The Council, whose resolution 687(1991) allegedly was the result of the Iraq-Kuwait issue, had further chosen to ignore Iran's military occupation of the Gulf islands belonging to the United Arab Emirates (see above, under "Iran-United Arab Emirates").

In the interest of justice and fairness, Iraq deemed it essential for the Council to conduct a radical review of the provisions of resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), saying they were intrusive and constituted a violation of its sovereignty. At issue were the Commission's aerial surveillance by helicopter and U-2 aircraft, which Iraq claimed were intelligence-gathering missions on behalf of certain Governments endeavouring to undermine the country's internal situation and eliminate its national leadership. In addition, Iraq registered its vigorous protest against the gratuitous imposition of no-fly zones north of the 36th parallel and south of the 32nd—by France, the United Kingdom and the United States. Iraq called for the condemnation of such autocratic action, which undermined the legitimacy of the Council resolutions so long as the Council failed to address this issue.

Finally, Iraq recalled its requests for the lifting of the economic embargo imposed against it under resolution 661(1990),(7) stating that, whereas its lifting was originally linked to compliance with resolution 660(1990)(20) demanding Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait, it became linked to new conditions incorporated in resolution 687(1991). Iraq referred to its statement before the Council in March that the high proportion of obligations it had fulfilled warranted a full or partial lifting of the sanctions, regardless of any difference of opinion as to the extent to which those obligations had been fulfilled. Citing deprivations suffered by the Iraqis and death rates of children in various age groups, Iraq asserted that continuance of the sanctions was tantamount to genocide against its people and called for an end to such a squalid operation.

Iraq, on 10 November,(32) reiterated that it was incumbent on the Council to begin lifting the embargo and all the exceptional measures imposed on Iraq. It stated its wish to send a high-level delegation to New York on the occasion of the Council's November review of the status of its compliance with its obligations. On 19 November,(33) Iraq submitted a factual report on further measures it had taken to implement section C of resolution 687(1991), covering the period between January and November 1992. The report gave a detailed account of activities in conjunction with the 1992 IAEA and Special Commission inspections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

The Security Council met on 23 November 1992 for its second review of the status of Iraq's compliance with resolution 687(1991) and other related resolutions. As agreed in earlier consultations, it invited Iraq and Kuwait to participate in the debate in accordance with Article 31 of the United Nations Charter and rule 37a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. It also invited, under rule 39,b the IAEA Director General, Hans Blix, the Special Commission Executive Chairman, Rolf Ekéus, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and the Emergency Relief Coordinator, Jan Eliasson, and the Special Rapporteur on human rights, Max van der Stoep.

China and Zimbabwe registered their view that it was inappropriate for the Council to invite the Special Rapporteur to its deliberations on the grounds that the human rights question fell within the purview of the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly. China further entered its reservations on the references to the interim report of the Special Rapporteur contained in the statement below.

Following consultations among the Council members, the President was authorized to make the following introductory statement(34) on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3139 (with resumptions 1 and 2).

"I. General obligation

"1. The resolutions concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait impose a number of general and specific obligations upon Iraq.

"2. As regards the general obligations, Iraq is required, under paragraph 33 of Security Council resolution 687(1991), to give official notification to the Secretary-General and to the Security Council of its acceptance of the provisions of that entire resolution.

"3. Iraq signified its unconditional acceptance in letters dated 6 and 10 April 1991 (S/22456 and S/22480, respectively) and 23 January 1992 (S/23472).

"II. Specific obligations

"4. In addition to the general obligation to accept the provisions of resolution 687(1991) in their entirety, several Security Council resolutions impose specific obligations upon Iraq.

"(a) Respect for the inviolability of the international boundary

"5. By paragraph 2 of resolution 687(1991) the Security Council demands that Iraq respect the inviolability of the international boundary and the allocations of islands previously agreed upon between Iraq and Kuwait. Pursuant to paragraph 3 of that resolution, the Secretary-General established a Boundary Demarcation Commission to demarcate the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait. Paragraph 5 of the same resolution requires Iraq and Kuwait to respect a demilitarized zone (DMZ) established by the Security Council.

"6. Iraq did not participate in the work of the Boundary Demarcation Commission at its July 1992 and October 1992 sessions. Iraq has refused up to now to withdraw a number of police posts that are not in line with UNIKOM's principle that both sides should stay 1,000 metres from the boundary line shown on UNIKOM's map. The Council in paragraph 2 of resolution 773(1992) welcomed the Commission's land demarcation decisions and, by paragraph 5, the intention of the Secretary-General to carry out at the earliest practicable time the realignment of the DMZ to correspond to the international boundary demarcated, by the Commission, with the consequent removal of the Iraqi police posts.

"7. In response to the Iraqi Foreign Minister's 21 May 1992 letter to the Secretary-General (S/24044), the Security Council in a 17 June 1992 statement (S/24113) stressed to Iraq the inviolability of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait being demarcated by the Commission and guaranteed by the Council pursuant to resolution 687(1991). The Presidential statement also noted with dismay that the Iraqi Foreign Minister's letter recalled past Iraqi claims to Kuwait without also recalling Iraq's subsequent repudiation of these claims. The members of the Council firmly rejected any suggestion that tended to dispute the existence of Kuwait. Resolution 773(1992) underlined the Council's guarantee of the above-mentioned international boundary and its decision to take as appropriate all necessary measures to that end in accordance with the Charter, as provided for in paragraph 4 of resolution 687(1991).

"(b) Weapons-related obligations

"8. Section C of resolution 687(1991) imposes certain specific obligations upon Iraq with respect to its chemical and biological weapons programmes, its ballistic missile programmes with a range greater than 150 kilometres and its nuclear programmes. These obligations are elaborated upon in resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991). The obligations are defined in paragraphs 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 of resolution 687(1991) and they are elaborated upon in paragraphs 3 and 5 of, resolution 707(1991) and paragraph 5 of resolution 715(1991).

"9. By resolution 699(1991), the Security Council decided that the Government of Iraq shall be liable for the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991). No funds have so far been received from Iraq to meet this liability.

"10. The Council has noted that since the adoption of resolution 687(1991) progress has been made in the implementation of section C of that resolution but that much remains to be done. In particular, Iraq needs to provide the full, final and complete disclosure of all aspects of its programmes for weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres. There is a particular and vital requirement for complete information, including credible documentary evidence on Iraq's past production, suppliers and consumption of all prohibited items, and its past capacity to produce such items.

"11. Iraq must also acknowledge clearly its obligations under Security Council resolution 715(1991) and the two plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved thereunder. It must agree to implement these obligations unconditionally. In this connection the Council notes the letter of 28 October 1992 from Iraq's Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Secretary-General seeking a review of the terms and provisions not only of resolution 715(1991) but also Security Council resolution 707(1991). It is accordingly clear that Iraq seems unprepared to comply with the obligations already prescribed.

"12. The Special Commission has informed the Council about the outstanding matters that would at the present time appear to be the most important. The Council has noted document S/24661 of 19 October 1992 entitled 'The status of the implementation of the plan for the ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with relevant parts of section C of Security Council resolution 687(1991)'.

"13. The Council has also noted document S/24722 of 28 October 1992 containing the second report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) on the implementation of the Agency's 'plan for the future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with paragraph 12 of resolution 687(1991)'.

"14. In a statement issued on behalf of the members of the Council (S/23803) on the Special Commission's right to conduct aerial surveillance flights in Iraq, the President stated on 10 April 1992 that:

" 'The members of the Council wish to point out that the surveillance flights are carried out under the authority of Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991). Reaffirming the right of the Special Commission to conduct such aerial surveillance flights, the members of the Council call upon the Government of Iraq to take all the necessary steps to ensure that the Iraqi military forces will not interfere with or threaten the security of the flights concerned and to comply with its responsibilities to secure the safety of the Special Commission's aircraft and personnel flying over Iraq.'

"The President also said that:

" 'The members of the Council warn the Government of Iraq of the serious consequences which would ensue from any failure to comply with these obligations.'

"15. The Special Commission, on 15 October 1992, informed the Council of actions endangering the safety and security of the Commission's inspection teams in Iraq, including a systematic campaign of harassment, acts of violence, vandalism to property and verbal denunciations and threats at all levels. The President of the Council issued on the same day a statement to the press stressing the Council's particular concern for the safety of the Commission's inspectors.

"16. In a further statement made on 6 July 1992 on behalf of the Council (S/24240) concerning the Government of Iraq's refusal to permit access to certain premises by a team of inspectors, the President said:

" 'Iraq's present refusal to permit access to the Inspection Team currently in Iraq to the premises designated by the Special Commission constitutes a material and unacceptable breach by Iraq of a provision of resolution 687(1991) which established the cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region. The members of the Council demand that the Government of Iraq immediately agree to the admission to the premises concerned of the inspectors of the Special Commission as required by the Chairman of the Special Commission, so that the Special Commission may establish whether or not any documents, records, materials, or equipment relevant to the responsibilities of the Commission are located therein.'

"Security Council resolution 707(1991) demands that Iraq allow the Special Commission, the IAEA and their inspection teams immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation which they wish to inspect. Therefore, the Council cannot accept Iraq's insistence that there must be a limit on access by the inspection teams.

"(c) Repatriation of and access to Kuwaiti and third-country nationals in Iraq

"17. As regards Kuwaiti and third-country nationals in Iraq, Security Council resolutions 664(1990), 666(1990), 667(1990), 674(1990), 686(1991) and 687(1991) impose an obligation on Iraq to release, facilitate repatriation of, and arrange for immediate access to them, as well as the return of the remains of any deceased personnel of the forces of Kuwait and of the member States cooperating with Kuwait pursuant to resolution 678(1990). Furthermore, paragraph 30 of resolution 687(1991) requires Iraq to extend all necessary cooperation to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in facilitating the search for Kuwaiti and third-country nationals still unaccounted for.

"18. In spite of ICRC's best ongoing efforts, ICRC has not received information as to the whereabouts of the persons reported missing in Iraq. Nor has it received detailed and documented information on the search conducted by the Iraqi authorities. Following the 11-12 March 1992 Council meeting with the Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister, Iraq published in its press lists of those believed missing/detained inside Iraq. ICRC has still not received permission to visit Iraqi prisons and detention centres in accordance with standard ICRC criteria. Very few missing persons/detainees have been released since March 1992, while hundreds are believed still to be inside Iraq.

"(d) Iraq's liability under international law

"19. Another obligation concerns Iraq's liability under international law. In resolution 674(1990), the Security Council reminds Iraq that under international law it is liable for any loss, damage or injury arising in regard to Kuwait and third States and their nationals and corporations, as a result of the invasion and illegal occupation of Kuwait by Iraq. Its liability under international law is reaffirmed in paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 686(1991) and paragraph 16 of resolution 687(1991). Resolution 687(1991) further specifies that it 'is liable under international law for any direct loss, damage, including environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources, or injury to foreign governments, nationals and corporations, as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait'.

"20. By paragraph 18 of the same resolution, the Security Council created a fund to pay compensation for claims that fall within paragraph 16, to be financed by a percentage of the value of the exports of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq. In view of the existing economic sanctions against Iraq under resolution 661(1991), Iraq was permitted by the Security Council under resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) to sell a limited quantity of oil, as an exception, a portion of the proceeds from which would be used to provide financial resources for the fund. To date, it has not availed itself of this possibility. The Council noted that this authorization lapsed on 18 March 1992 but indicated its readiness to authorize the regime for the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products for a like period of time as that specified in the resolutions and also its readiness to consider possible further extensions (S/23732, 19 March 1992). Since then Iraq has not shown any willingness to resume discussions about implementing these resolutions. The members of the Council are aware of a previous request by Iraq for a five-year moratorium on meeting its financial obligations, including payments into the Compensation Fund.

"21. In view of Iraq's refusal to cooperate in the implementation of resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) after several rounds of technical discussions with the Secretariat, the Security Council adopted resolution 778(1992) which mandates that certain frozen Iraqi assets be transferred to a United Nations escrow account. A portion of these funds will be transferred to the Compensation Fund.

"(e) Repayment and servicing of Iraq's foreign debt

"22. With regard to another obligation, the Security Council, in paragraph 17 of resolution 687(1991), demands that Iraq scrupulously adhere to all of its obligations concerning servicing and repayment of its foreign debt.

"(f) Non-entitlement to claims deriving from the effects of the measures taken by the Security Council in resolution 661(1990) and related resolutions (para. 29 of resolution 687(1991)) of the Security Council

"23. According to information received with regard to this item, Iraq has attempted to enforce some claims under which it would have benefited from a contract frustrated by the coming into effect of the terms of resolution 661(1990), in particular, through the confiscation of the property of foreign companies and organizations left in Iraq.

"(g) Return of property

"24. I now turn to the question of return of property. The Security Council, in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 686(1991), demands that Iraq immediately begin to return all Kuwaiti property seized by it, to be completed in the shortest possible period. The members of the Council have previously noted with satisfaction that Iraqi officials involved with the return of property have extended cooperation to the United Nations to facilitate the return. However, much property, including military equipment and private property, remains to be returned.

"(h) Monthly statements of gold and foreign currency reserves

"25. Another obligation is set out by paragraph 7 of resolution 706(1991), under which the Government of Iraq is required to provide to the Secretary-General and appropriate international organizations monthly statements of its gold and foreign currency reserves. To date, no such statements have been provided to the Secretary-General or to the IMF.

"(i) Undertaking not to commit or support acts of international terrorism

"26. By paragraph 32 of resolution 687(1991), Iraq is required not to commit or support acts of international terrorism or allow any organization directed towards commission of such acts to operate within its territory and to condemn unequivocally and renounce all acts, methods and practices of terrorism.

"27. The Council notes Iraq's statements contained in letters dated 11 June 1991 (S/22687 and S/22689) and 23 January 1992 (S/23472) that it is a party to international conventions against terrorism and that it has never pursued a policy favourable to international terrorism as defined by international law.

"(j) Security Council action with respect to the Iraqi civilian population

"28. Resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) provide a means for Iraq to meet its obligations to supply its civilian population with needed humanitarian assistance, particularly food and medicine. Resolution 778(1992) mandates that certain frozen Iraqi assets be transferred to a United Nations escrow account and urges States to contribute funds from other sources to the escrow account. A portion of these funds will be used for humanitarian assistance.

"III. Security Council resolution 688(1991)

"29. I should now like to refer to the demands by the Security Council with respect to the Iraqi civilian population. In paragraph 2 of resolution 688(1991), the Security Council demands that Iraq, as a contribution to removing the threat to international peace and security in the region, end the repression of its civilian population. In paragraphs 3 and 7, the Security Council insists that it allow immediate access by international humanitarian organizations to all those in need of assistance in all parts of Iraq, and demands its cooperation with the Secretary-General to these ends.

"30. The Security Council remains deeply concerned at the grave human rights abuses that, despite the provisions of resolution 688(1991), the Government of Iraq continues to perpetrate against its population, in particular in the northern region of Iraq, in southern Shi'a Centres and in the southern marshes (Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/71 of 5 March 1992). The Security Council notes that this situation is confirmed by the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights (E/CN.4/1992/31, also circulated as document S/23685 and Add.1, and part I of the interim report circulated as document S/24386). The members of the Council recall their public meeting with Mr. Max van der Stoep on 11 August 1992.

"31. The members of the Security Council take note of the renewal on 22 October 1992 of the Memorandum of Understanding providing the framework for urgent humanitarian assistance throughout the country between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq.

"IV. Concluding observation

"32. In view of the observations on the record of Iraq's performance, and without prejudice to further action by the Security Council on the question of the implementation of its relevant resolutions by Iraq, the Security Council has considered itself justified in concluding that Iraq has up to now only selectively and then partially complied with the obligations placed upon it by the Council. It is the Council's hope that this meeting will prove a valuable opportunity to impress once again upon Iraq the imperative need for full compliance and to obtain from Iraq undertakings which would constitute an advance in the consideration of this issue as required in the interest of world peace and security, as well as that of the Iraqi people."

In its address to the Council on 23 November, Iraq, in the person of its Deputy Prime Minister, Tariq Aziz, stated that, in the past eight months, 16 additional inspections were carried out by the Special Commission and IAEA, during which 9,983 pieces of weaponry (shells, bombs, warheads, propellant charges), as well as many installations and equipment that could have been converted for civilian industrial purposes, were destroyed. Iraq referred to its factual report of 19 November giving details of what had been accomplished during the preceding eight-month period in further fulfilment of its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991). Recapitulating the figures since that resolution was adopted, Iraq said that, in all, it had received 46 inspection teams comprising 1,056 inspectors who had spent a total of 11,816 inspection days in Iraq. They conducted 884 inspection operations including 237 surprise visits. They also conducted no less than 64 aerial survey missions involving 371 helicopter flights of four to eight hours duration and 97 U-2 surveillance flights, averaging three to four hours each.

The inspection teams supervised 44 destruction operations during which the number of items destroyed reached 26,865, including semi-manufactured items, missiles and launchers, as well as equipment, devices and empty chemical-munition shells. Also destroyed were quantities of raw materials weighing in excess of 1,500 tonnes. In addition to huge quantities of documentation that were either presented or seized before Iraq submitted its complete and comprehensive report, hundreds of hours of dialogue had been held with the inspectors, during which Iraq answered innumerable questions and proved false the vicious allegations that it was hiding missiles and had an underground reactor. In this connection, it quoted part of its 28 October letter⁽³¹⁾ comparing the inspectors to medieval inquisitors and accusing the Council of applying double standards and overlooking the larger goal of security and stability in the Gulf area and in the Middle East.

Despite all this, the iniquitous embargo imposed on Iraq remained in force, denying the Iraqi people the essentials of human existence. Moreover, the Council in recent months had placed obstacles to Iraq's use of its assets abroad, which Council members continued to keep frozen even as the Committee on sanctions had allowed them to free those assets. The United States had also imposed on the Council adoption of resolution 778(1992)—another in the series of unjust Council resolutions—which allowed the arbitrary use of parts of those assets. While the Council placed heavy emphasis on the alleged loss of property of claimants who had not substantiated or sufficiently documented their claims, it deliberately squandered assets that were clearly Iraq's.

Iraq asserted that keeping the embargo in place amounted to the perpetration of the crime of genocide. For example, the embargo had caused the death of thousands of Iraqi children, deprived students of their education needs, led to the deterioration of the environment, and prevented Iraqis, including the sick, from travelling by fixed-wing aircraft.

Iraq reiterated its call for a halt to the Commission's use of the U-2 aircraft—referring to it as a United States spy plane—and its proposal that aircraft from a neutral State or Iraqi aircraft currently lying idle be used instead. Iraq would never tolerate any act intended to encroach on its sovereignty and trample its dignity. Stressing the importance of security and stability in the Gulf area and the need to deal in a balanced manner with all of the countries in the region, it demanded that the measures provided for in resolution 687(1991) be applied equally to all of them, not to Iraq alone. Iraq was ready for constructive and responsible cooperation towards that end.

IAEA, in the person of its Director General, stated that, since March, IAEA had made five more inspections and carried out considerable further investigative and other work. As a result, IAEA had fulfilled important parts of its first two tasks and had begun implementing elements of the third.

As to the first task—the complete mapping of Iraq's nuclear capabilities—while the picture of the nuclear programme that had emerged was comprehensive and detailed, IAEA could not be certain that it was complete. Due to Iraq's unwillingness to reveal foreign sources of equipment, material and technology, it was difficult to ascertain whether all nuclear-related imported equipment and material had been identified. Also, new information could point to sites requiring inspection. Therefore, IAEA saw a need for continued on-site inspection.

Since March, much work had been devoted to the second task, that of ensuring the destruction, removal or rendering harmless, as appropriate, of facilities and equipment related to the clandestine nuclear programme. With the active cooperation of the Iraqi authorities, key buildings, equipment and material at Al-Atheer, Tarmiya and Ash Sharqat had been destroyed or rendered harmless. The only nuclear-weapons-usable material known to remain in Iraq was the highly enriched uranium in irradiated reactor fuel assemblies, arrangements for the removal of which were under way.

The third task—long-term monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with the requirement not to reacquire or develop a nuclear-weapons capability—had met with some cooperation and some resistance. Iraq continued to challenge the legitimacy of the plans approved under resolution 715(1991). Of particular concern was Iraq's letter of 28 October(31) restating in strong terms its non-acceptance of resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991). IAEA reiterated that the lack of acceptance of those resolutions ignored their binding nature and appeared also to ignore Iraq's own explicit acceptance of resolution 687(1991), paragraph 12 of which laid on Iraq the obligation to accept the plan for monitoring and verification.

Iraq continued to delay compliance with repeated requests for clear and complete information on items to be reported to IAEA under the plan. Only recently did it indicate its readiness to submit before the end of the year information on all nuclear-related items existing in Iraq as of 1 January 1989.

In the circumstances, IAEA was unable to report to the Council that Iraq had fully complied with its obligations under the relevant resolutions.

The Special Commission, in the person of its Executive Chairman, referred to the two biannual reports on the Commission's activities in the discharge of its threefold responsibilities. The first stage—identification of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction in the chemical, biological and ballistic missile areas—remained incomplete. The information that according to Iraq constituted the full, final and comprehensive report of all aspects of its programmes to develop weapons of mass destruction was unanimously found by the Commission, at its fourth plenary (October) session, to be flawed and incomplete. Almost the entire documentation needed to substantiate Iraq's account of its chemical, biological and bacteriological programmes had been denied to the Commission. The same was true in the missile field.

However, some progress had been made in compiling more information on Iraq's programmes for weapons of mass destruction as they existed at the outbreak of the military operations in the Gulf. Once again, this was largely due to further painstaking inspection in conjunction with lengthy seminar-type meetings with senior Iraqi officials.

On the disposal of the capabilities for the production of weapons of mass destruction, the impediments to destruction of certain missile-producing capabilities reported in March had been overcome. This second stage of the Commission's activities remained incomplete, however, pending final decision on the disposal of many items and facilities that were currently under seal.

As to the third stage—ongoing monitoring and verification—the impasse reported in March had yet again been confirmed and even more forcefully. Iraq had consistently refused to acknowledge the existence of its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) and under the plans approved by the latter. From the outset, Iraq had indicated willingness only to accept ongoing monitoring and verification in principle and on its own terms. Those terms appeared to be Iraq's exclusive understanding of paragraphs 10 and 12 of resolution 687(1991), which placed the most severe limitations—expressed as considerations of sovereignty, national security, dignity and non-interference in Iraq's internal affairs and industrial development—on any form of monitoring. This position could not be more clearly enunciated than by Iraq's letter of 28 October, which called on the Council to conduct a radical review, based on justice and fairness, of the terms and provisions of those two resolutions.

That letter further objected to the essential aspects of the Commission's operations in Iraq, in particular its air transportation, helicopter and high-altitude surveillance activities—all clearly authorized by Council resolutions adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter. Thus, if sanctions and the oil embargo were to end without Iraq's unconditional acceptance of its obligations under the two resolutions, the Commission's air transportation and aerial surveillance would be halted by withdrawal of Iraq's de facto acquiescence, and monitoring and verification would be reduced purely to visits to such installations as Iraq selected and at such times as it permitted.

Since March, the Commission had to defend vigorously the privileges and immunities of its staff and inspectors in Iraq, in particular their safety and security (see below, under "Special Commission activities"). Currently, however, there were fewer incidents of individual harassment.

Responding to the remarks regarding the conduct of its inspectors and staff, the Commission said they deserved tribute for their competence, dedication and courage. In seeking to identify and map out Iraq's weapons programmes, they had acted in the most professional manner, often under difficult and trying circumstances. The apparent intrusiveness of their activities on occasion was brought about by lack of Iraqi cooperation and by their desire to ensure that the Council's mandates were carried out.

If Iraq pursued its current course of action, particularly where resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) were concerned, the Special Commission would be constrained to repeat its March assessment, namely, that the possibility of the Commission's certifying Iraq's compliance with its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) did not even arise.

The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and the Emergency Relief Coordinator referred to the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq, which he had signed on behalf of the Secretary-General on 22 October, covering a six-month period ending 31 March 1993. The plan of action included components corresponding to more than $250 million and covered all regions of Iraq with emphasis on assistance delivery to the northern governorates due to the supply restrictions imposed on them and the impending harsh winter.

The Under-Secretary-General reported that, between July and the signing of the new Memorandum in October, United Nations personnel in the north experienced security problems and harassment. Their visas were not extended and travel permits were not granted. By September, they numbered less than 200. There was no United Nations presence in the south. Programme implementation under the new Memorandum was a struggle for time. Visas had been extended for the duration of the action plan, to be reviewed at the beginning of 1993. A total of 195 United Nations guards were currently deployed; another 105 were expected by December, the majority to be posted in the northern provinces.

Ten million litres of kerosene valued at $2.9 million were in the process of being delivered to Erbil and Suleimaniya. In cooperation with CARE, a non-governmental organization (NGO), UNICEF would shortly purchase another 20 million litres. In addition, it had just launched a nationwide vaccination campaign. WHO planned to distribute some $2 million worth of medicines to various areas. WFP had stocked 5,200 tonnes of food in the country, of which 2,000 tonnes were in the north; an additional 20,000 tonnes were in the process of being shipped to Iraq through Turkey. The WFP plan was to supply 27,000 tonnes of wheat flour to the north and 16,200 tonnes to the rest of the country.

For the success of the programme, it was essential to have the full cooperation of the Iraqi Government and the financial support of Member States. If the United Nations was to deliver humanitarian aid on an urgent basis, it was important that substantial contributions be made in the very near future. (See also below, under "Inter-agency humanitarian programme".)

The Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights stated that, based on evidence (statements of witnesses, documents, audio and video cassettes) he had to conclude that Iraq continued to refuse compliance with resolution 688(1991),(23) which demanded that Iraq immediately end the repression of the Iraqi civilian population. Iraq had repeatedly labelled that conclusion a subjective and biased one, although it was arrived at by using the yardsticks of the international human rights instruments to which Iraq had acceded: the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol,(35) the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,(36) and the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.(37)

The Special Rapporteur said that even in the special circumstances invoked by Iraq (the Iran-Iraq armed conflict, the 1991 military operations in the Gulf and Iraqi uprisings, the economic embargo), the norms of applicable international law did not allow summary or arbitrary executions and forced disappearances or torture—all of which had happened in Iraq, not incidentally, but on a massive scale. The Special Rapporteur recalled that United Nations personnel participating in the inter-agency, humanitarian programme had repeatedly been subjected to harassment, vandalism and violence. Those incidents had occurred mostly in government-controlled areas, several at government checkpoints and others in the presence of local police or government security personnel who had failed to intervene.

Notwithstanding Iraq's explicit assurances to the contrary, discrimination existed with respect to access to food and health care. The population in the marshlands to the south were subjected to a complete blockade. The supply of food and fuel in the three Kurdish governorates in the north had steadily diminished, especially in Erbil and Suleimaniya. In the course of the year, a virtually complete embargo had been applied on fuel supplies to those governorates. Contrary to the Government's promise to facilitate the safe and rapid passage of humanitarian assistance throughout the country, it took nearly a month before 12 lorries carrying 400,000 litres of heating and cooking oil arrived in the north, where the fuel requirements for the 3 million Kurds during the four winter months had been estimated at 47 million litres of kerosene.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that when a Government tried to deny the right to life to a specific community within the State, the question inevitably arose as to whether it was engaging in genocidal practices as defined in the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. (See also below, under "Kurds and other minority populations".)

On 24 November, Iraq vigorously insisted that, despite the unjust and arbitrary nature of resolution 687(1991) and other related resolutions, it had met the obligations they had imposed, particularly the substantive ones relating to the economic embargo. On the question of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary, Iraq decided not to participate in the activities of the Boundary Demarcation Commission since Iraq's view, as substantiated by historical evidence and realities, was not listened to. None the less, Iraq had not hindered the Demarcation Commission's activities. (See also below, under "Iraq-Kuwait boundary".)

On the question of missing persons, Iraq reaffirmed that it had cooperated sincerely and objectively with ICRC and that it detained no one, Kuwaiti or otherwise. The responsibility for those missing, it said, belonged to those who waged the war called Desert Storm.

With regard to its liability under international law, Iraq was emphatic that there be no vengeance claims or claims trumped up for material gain. That Iraq was not represented in the machinery dealing with such claims was incompatible with international law or with precedents in this area. Due process of law demanded a clear-cut link between fault and damage and stressed that compensation should be the direct result of that liability. Justice demanded proof and the party concerned should be represented directly. As to its foreign debt, Iraq repeated that it could neither repay debt nor service interest because of the economic embargo.

Concerning claims of government expropriation of the property of other countries and companies, Iraq informed those concerned that certain equipment would be used in agricultural and service projects in order to mitigate the suffering of the Iraqis caused by the embargo and that all rights accruing to them from such use would be fully respected, in accordance with their contracts with Iraq.

Regarding the return of Kuwaiti property, Iraq stated that from March through 25 October 1992, it had returned the following: four Skyhawk aircraft and one dual-use aircraft, type 383; Kuwaiti Airlines reserve equipment, 68 marine units; property belonging to Kuwait's Ministries of Health, of Social Affairs, and of Housing, its Institute of Planning and Air Force. Arrangements were under way for the return of remaining weapons and military equipment. Iraq stated that it had not received any demands whatsoever regarding private property.

Iraq repeated that at no time did it engage in acts of terrorism. It asserted that resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) were adopted with the aim of interfering in its internal affairs, and that in the three rounds of negotiations with the United Nations, Iraq failed to reach agreement on a reasonable arrangement that would meet the urgent humanitarian needs of its people. Talk of those two resolutions after Iraq had met so many of its obligations relating to economic embargo was but an attempt to divert attention from the essential issue of lifting the economic embargo in keeping with paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991). Iraq further repeated that resolution 688(1991) was also a blatant interference in its internal affairs.

Commenting on other issues brought out during the debate, Iraq said that the Iraqi population's attitude towards the inspection teams reflected their bitterness over the continued sanctions, which the Iraqi officials could not control.

On the issue of the alleged repression of the Kurds and Shiites, Iraq asserted that it was the only country where recognition of the Kurds' national and cultural rights was enshrined in the constitution and in law and where the Kurds shared power. In a country where Arabs, Christians, Kurds, Muslims and Shiites lived together, the Shiites had never been the object of sectarian persecution. Concerning the Special Rapporteur's allegations about the situation in the southern marshes, Iraq asked why the Council had not sent a mission of eminent persons to verify the situation, as Iraq had suggested. The no-fly zone imposed by the United States was never meant to protect the Shiites or the marsh-dwellers of southern Iraq but to create a military crisis with Iraq during the United States presidential elections.

Finally, Iraq argued that the assertion that it was feeding its army but not its people was absurd, for the Iraqi army could not possibly be consuming the millions of tonnes of food cited by the United States as having entered Iraq. That could be true only if the 18 million Iraqis constituted the Iraqi army.

After consultations among Council members during a suspension of the meeting, the President was authorized to make the following statement(38) on behalf of the Council:

"The views of the Security Council having been expressed through its President and by the statements of its members on the extent of compliance by the Government of Iraq with its obligations under the relevant Security Council resolutions, the Council has listened with close attention to the statements by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq. The Council regrets the lack of any indication in the statements by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq of how the Government of Iraq intends to comply with the resolutions of the Council. It also regrets the baseless threats, allegations and attacks launched by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq against the Council, the Special Commission, the International Atomic Energy Agency

(IAEA), the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission and the Committee established by resolution 661(1990). The Council rejects in toto these threats, allegations and attacks.

"Having heard all the interventions in the debate, the Council reiterates its full support for the statement made by the President of the Council on its behalf at the opening of the 3139th meeting (S/24836).

"In the view of the Security Council, while there have been some positive steps, the Government of Iraq has not yet complied fully and unconditionally with its obligations, must do so and must immediately take the appropriate actions in this regard."

Iraq-Kuwait boundary

Communications. On 15 May 1992,(39) Kuwait drew the Secretary-General's attention to recent statements by Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister in a Jordanian newspaper and by the Speaker of the National Assembly in a British newspaper in Baghdad to the effect that a decision adopted by the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission in April was not based on legally valid documentation. Therefore, Iraq would not accept the new border, which gave some of its territory to Kuwait. Iraq needed direct talks with Kuwait, and if a third party was to be involved, it should be the League of Arab States.

Iraq, on 21 May,(40) referred to its position on the international boundary, as communicated to the Secretary-General in 1991,(41) and set forth in detail its views on the decisions adopted by the Demarcation Commission on 14 April, at its fifth session. It asserted that the Commission, having based its work on United Kingdom sources and interpretations (Security Council document S/22412 specified in resolution 687(1991)), had come out with a boundary line that was worse for Iraq than that drawn by the United Kingdom using the same sources. The coordinates arrived at contradicted geographical as well as historical facts. Iraq maintained that, throughout the nineteenth century and until the First World War, the small village settled some two centuries ago on the banks of the Arabian Gulf under the name of "Kuwait", an Iraqi term for "a small settlement of people", was an Iraqi Qadhaa' (district) belonging to the province of Basrah. Under Ottoman administrative law, Kuwait was an integral part of Iraq, subject to that province. By the 1916 Sykes-Picot Agreement, the United Kingdom had drawn artificial boundaries severing a part (Kuwait) of Iraq and its natural access to the Arabian Gulf.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following consultations held by the Security Council on 17 June 1992, its President issued the following statement(42) on behalf of the Council members:

"The members of the Security Council have noted the letter of 17 April 1992 from the Chairman of the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission to the Secretary-General and express their complete support for the work of the Secretary-General and the Boundary Demarcation Commission in implementing paragraph 3 of resolution 687(1991). They recall in this connection that through the demarcation process the Boundary Demarcation Commission is not reallocating territory between Kuwait and Iraq, but is simply carrying out the technical task necessary to demarcate the precise coordinates of the boundary between Kuwait and Iraq for the first time. This task is being carried out in the special circumstances following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and pursuant to resolution 687(1991) and the Secretary-General's report (S/22558) for implementing paragraph 3 of that resolution. They look forward to the completion of the work of the Commission.

"The members of the Council have noted with particular concern the letter of 21 May 1992 from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Iraq to the Secretary-General (S/24044) concerning the work of the Boundary Demarcation Commission, which appears to call into question Iraq's adherence to Security Council resolution 687(1991). The members of the Council are concerned in particular that the letter from Iraq of 21 May 1992 may be interpreted as rejecting the finality of the Boundary Demarcation Commission's decisions notwithstanding the terms of resolution 687(1991) and the Secretary-General's report for implementing paragraph 3 of that resolution, both of which were formally accepted by Iraq.

"They note with dismay that the letter recalls past Iraqi claims to Kuwait without also recalling Iraq's subsequent repudiations of these claims, inter alia through its acceptance of resolution 687(1991). The members of the Council firmly reject any suggestion that tends to dispute the very existence of Kuwait, a member State of the United Nations.

"The members of the Council remind Iraq of its obligations under resolution 687(1991), and in particular paragraph 2 thereof, and under other relevant resolutions of the Council.

"The members of the Council also remind Iraq of its acceptance of the resolutions of the Council adopted pursuant to Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, which forms the basis for the cease-fire. The members of the Council wish to stress to Iraq the inviolability of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait being demarcated by the Commission and guaranteed by the Council pursuant to resolution 687(1991), and the grave consequences that would ensue from any breach thereof."

Upon issuance of that statement, Ecuador(43) quoted the views it had expressed to explain its abstention on resolution 687(1991), stating that Article 36 of the Charter did not give the Council authority under Chapter VII to pronounce on the territorial limits between Iraq and Kuwait or to stipulate arrangements demarcating the boundary in question; that the Council could not be given powers greater than those laid down in the Charter and the means of implementing the Council resolutions must be in full conformity with the norms of international law; and that, as many Council members had expressed, the relevant paragraphs of resolution 687(1991) did not constitute a precedent that could be invoked subsequently. However, Ecuador did not wish to obstruct actions agreed upon by the Council in implementation of that resolution.

Communications. On 12 July 1992,(44) Iraq, referring to a notification of the forthcoming sixth session (New York, 15-24 July) of the Boundary Demarcation Commission, restated that the outcome of the Commission's work was a predetermined one imposed by Powers that controlled the Security Council and the United Nations, in particular the United Kingdom and the United States. Iraq was convinced that its views would not be heard in the Commission, as confirmed by the fact that the Council, instead of giving Iraq's 21 May letter careful consideration, was induced to adopt a statement by its President containing interpretations lacking in objectivity and threats. For these reasons, Iraq concluded that its participation in the Commission's work would be to no avail.

Kuwait, on 5 August,(45) drew to the attention of the Council President the escalation of Iraqi propaganda against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kuwait. It stated that Iraqi official pronouncements and media-newspapers, radio, television, magazines and even a university publication said to contain historical evidence—were making increasing references to Kuwait as being an integral part of Iraq and an Iraqi governorate, to Kuwait's restoration to its mother country, Iraq, and to its union with Iraq. It said that the Council's responsibility to ensure international security and stability required this grave matter to be taken up and adequately addressed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 26 August 1992 in connection with a recent report of the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission and adopted resolution 773(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, and in particular paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 thereof, and its resolution 689(1991) of 9 April 1991,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 May 1991 concerning the establishment of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission (the Commission) and the subsequent exchange of letters of 6 and 13 May 1991,

Having considered the Secretary-General's letter of 12 August 1992 to the President of the Security Council transmitting the further report of the Commission,

Recalling in this connection that through the demarcation process the Commission is not reallocating territory between Kuwait and Iraq, but it is simply carrying out the technical task necessary to demarcate for the first time the precise coordinates of the boundary set out in the Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the restoration of Friendly Relations, Recognition and Related Matters signed by them on 4 October 1963, and that this task is being carried out in the special circumstances following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and pursuant to resolution 687(1991) and the Secretary-General's report for implementing paragraph 3 of that resolution,

1. Welcomes the Secretary-General's letter of 12 August to the President of the Council and the further report of the Commission enclosed therewith;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for its work on the demarcation of the land boundary, and welcomes its demarcation decisions;

3. Welcomes also the decision of the Commission to consider the Eastern section of the boundary, which includes the offshore boundary, at its next session and urges the Commission to demarcate this part of the boundary as soon as possible and thus complete its work;

4. Underlines its guarantee of the inviolability of the above-mentioned international boundary and its decision to take as appropriate all necessary measures to that end in accordance with the Charter, as provided for in paragraph 4 of resolution 687(1991);

5. Welcomes further the Secretary-General's intention to carry out at the earliest practicable time the realignment of the demilitarized zone referred to in paragraph 5 of resolution 687(1991) to correspond to the international boundary demarcated by the Commission, with the consequent removal of the Iraqi police posts;

6. Urges the two States concerned to cooperate fully with the work of the Commission;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 773(1992)

26 August 1992 Meeting 3108 14-0-1

4-nation draft (S/24488), orally revised.

Sponsors: France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Cape Verde, China, France, Hungary, India, Japan, Morocco, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Ecuador.

In explanation of its abstention, Ecuador referred to its views(43) quoted in connection with the Council President's statement of 17 June(42) (see above) as being applicable also with respect to the resolution just adopted.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), established by the Security Council in 1991,(46) was mandated to monitor the Khawr Abd Allah waterway and the DMZ established by the Council along the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait, to deter DMZ violations through surveillance, and to observe any hostile or potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State into the other.

For operational purposes, UNIKOM divided the DMZ into three sectors—north, centre and south-east with a headquarters and six patrol/observation bases. Operations were conducted through those bases, observation points, vehicular and aerial patrols, investigation teams and liaison with Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities at all levels. The Governments of both parties extended the cooperation necessary for UNIKOM to carry out its mandate.

On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Council extended the UNIKOM mandate twice in 1992, each for a six-month period: from 9 April until 8 October 1992 and from 9 October 1992 until 8 April 1993.

Reports of the Secretary-General (March and October). In 1992, the Secretary-General provided the Security Council with two reports on the activities of UNIKOM in connection with the six-month review of its mandate in March and October. The first report covered the period 3 October 1991 to 31 March 1992;(47) the second, 1 April to 30 September.(48)

During those two periods, the engineering unit cleared and marked 250 kilometres of patrol tracks, disposed of 6,050 pieces of unexploded ordnance and reconfirmed the safety of previously cleared routes. It continued to improve security and working conditions at the northern (Umm Qasr) headquarters and its extension, Camp Khor, and built seven landing strips and 16 concrete helicopter landing pads, as well as observation towers, in the DMZ. The logistics unit continued to provide transport, distribute logistic supplies, and maintain heavy-duty vehicles. The medical unit operated a sick-bay facility at Umm Qasr and first-aid posts at the other two sectors. Mine-clearance, contracted for by Kuwait, was under way on its side of the DMZ, which was particularly badly littered with unexploded ordnance.

UNIKOM maintained contact with and provided support to other United Nations missions working in Iraq and Kuwait, in particular the United Nations Boundary Demarcation Commission and the United Nations Return of Property from Iraq to Kuwait.

UNIKOM observed three types of violations: minor incursions on the ground by small groups of soldiers, often just one or two; overflights by military aircraft of the type used by Kuwait and by forces of Member States cooperating with Kuwait; and policemen carrying weapons other than the prescribed sidearms. Tabulated summaries of these violations indicated a total of 9 by Iraq, 39 by Kuwait, 11 by Member States cooperating with Kuwait and 20 by unidentified parties. As of 31 March, 100 violations were ascribed to Kuwait and Member States cooperating with it. Since the declaration of the "no-fly zone" in southern Iraq, a number of overflights had been too high to identify. The Governments concerned with that zone were asked to avoid actions that might compromise the demilitarized status of the DMZ and adversely affect the work of UNIKOM.

UNIKOM received and investigated 61 written complaints from Iraq and 35 from Kuwait. Efforts had been unsuccessful to persuade Iraq to pull back either its five police posts on the Kuwaiti side of the boundary line or the two on its side that were closer than 1,000 metres to the line. Iraq was firm in its position that those posts remain in place until the border had been demarcated.

Four incidents gave cause for concern. On 10 October 1991, Kuwait detained 55 Iraqi fishermen north-east of Failaka Island, claiming they were inside Kuwaiti territorial waters; they were returned to Iraq eventually through ICRC. Eight days later, Iraq alleged that a Kuwaiti patrol entered Iraq near Safwan, fired on an Iraqi police post there, wounded a local farmer with rifle fire and detained two others. While it could not verify the attack on the post, UNIKOM determined that the incident took place on the Kuwaiti side of the DMZ in an area close to the boundary where Iraqis used to farm prior to the 1990 Iraqi occupation of Kuwait. On 2 November, armed Kuwaitis intercepted 12 Iraqi policemen en route towards Talha on a road criss-crossing the boundary, detained them and confiscated their vehicle, arms and money; they were returned to Iraq on 7 December through ICRC. On 7 January 1992, two Kuwaiti policemen were apprehended at one of the five Iraqi police posts on the Kuwaiti side of the boundary line. UNIKOM determined that they had lost their way and approached the post by mistake; they were returned to Kuwait by ICRC on 25 January.

The latter part of the second period was marked by a gradual heightening of tension in the DMZ. The work of the Boundary Demarcation Commission drew attention to the fact that some of the areas farmed by Iraqis in the northern sector were actually on Kuwaiti territory. Suspicions that the farmers were Iraqi military or security personnel resulted in a number of firing incidents between them and the Kuwaitis, during one of which (30 August) a UNIKOM military observer was injured while trying to restore calm. To enable it to monitor the situation, UNIKOM asked Iraq for a register of its farmers in the area. Increased Iraqi fishing in the Khawr Abd Allah also resulted in complaints by Kuwait of violations of its territorial waters and by Iraq of detention of its nationals.

Since July, the safety of United Nations staff in Iraq, including UNIKOM, had been put at risk by Iraqi demonstrations, threatening telephone calls, and vandalizing of their cars.

The Secretary-General was of the view that UNIKOM's high level of vigilance was essential for ensuring respect for the DMZ and maintaining calm in the area. He therefore recommended that UNIKOM be extended for a further six months from 9 April to 8 October 1992 in the first instance, with which the Council concurred;(49) and from 9 October 1992 to 8 April 1993 in the second, with which the Council also concurred.(50)

Composition

As of September 1992, UNIKOM had a strength of 413.(48) Of these, 254 were military observers from 33 Member States and 159 were personnel comprising four administrative and logistics units provided by Canada, Chile, Denmark and Norway. Of the 300 military observers authorized, 46 were on stand-by in their countries. The total strength of the four units had been reduced by 41 since April.(47)

The civilian staff numbered 186—90 international and 96 local recruits—representing a reduction of 10 since April. For personnel and equipment transport between Baghdad and Kuwait, UNIKOM had the use of two small fixed-wing civilian aircraft and a military helicopter unit.

Financing

In a report of November 1992 on the financing of UNIKOM,(51) the Secretary-General stated that assessments totalling $121,166,424 had been apportioned among Member States for UNIKOM from its inception on 9 April 1991 to 8 October 1992. Contributions received for the same period amounted to $95,784,205, leaving a shortfall of $25,382,219. Voluntary contributions in kind were received from Switzerland in the form of two fixed-wing aircraft with crew, valued at about $1,587,300, and from Sweden in the form of airlift of military personnel at the beginning of UNIKOM operations, later valued at $250,000.

In the interest of administrative efficiency, the Secretary-General proposed that the special financial period of UNIKOM be for a period of 12 calendar months, from 1 November of one year to 31 October of the next, with effect from 1 November 1992. He further proposed that the third financial period be extended by 23 days up to and including 31 October 1992, making that period 9 April to 31 October 1992.

Resources made available from 9 April 1991 to 31 October 1992 totalled $123,077,000 gross ($120,347,200 net), comprising appropriations of $94,577,000 gross ($92,649,000 net) and commitment authorization of $28,500,000 gross ($27,698,200 net). Estimated expenditures for the same period amounted to $112,828,735 gross ($119,838,324 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $10,248,265 gross ($9,508,876 net). Interest income totalled $675,259 and miscellaneous income, $61,359.

The cost of UNIKOM from 1 November 1992 to 31 October 1993 was estimated at $4,141,100 gross

($4,006,500 net) a month. On that basis, the Secretary-General requested that the General Assembly provide appropriations for the six months from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993—amounting to $24,846,600 gross ($24,039,000 net)—and for a further six months, from 1 May to 31 October 1993, should the Security Council decide to continue UNIKOM.

In view of the outstanding contributions, the Secretary-General proposed that no action should be taken with respect to the unencumbered balance. He also proposed that the special arrangements approved for UNIMOG should be applied to UNIKOM, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to troop-contributing States be retained beyond the period stipulated under the relevant regulations of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations.

ACABQ(52) recommended deferment of the latter proposal without prejudice to existing arrangements and concurred with the retention of the unencumbered balance in the UNIKOM Special Account. In the light of that and of savings that might be realized in line with experience gained during the previous mandate, ACABQ recommended that appropriations for 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993 should not exceed $20,000,000 gross ($19,192,400 net). For the period beyond 30 April 1993, it recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into commitments not to exceed $3.3 million gross ($3.1 million net) a month, subject to its prior concurrence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/208 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to set up the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling its resolutions 45/260 of 3 May 1991 and 46/197 of 20 December 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observation Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission in full and on time;

3. Decides that the authorization provided by its resolution 46/197 for the period from 9 April to 8 October 1992, inclusive, shall be extended to include the period up to and including 31 October 1992;

4. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in General Assembly resolution 45/260 an amount of 28.5 million United States dollars gross (27,698,200 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by the Assembly in paragraph 14 of its resolution 46/197 for the operation of the Observation Mission from 9 April to 31 October 1992;

5. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 20 million dollars gross (19,192,400 dollars net) for the operation of the Observation Mission from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993, inclusive, subject to the review by the Security Council of the mandate of the Mission in respect of the period beyond 8 April 1993;

6. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 20 million dollars gross (19,192,400 dollars net) for the above-mentioned period among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/260 and 46/197, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

7. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 807,600 dollars for the period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993, inclusive, approved for the Observation Mission;

8. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Observation Mission at a rate not to exceed 3.3 million dollars gross (3.1 million dollars net) per month for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1993, inclusive, subject to the review by the Security Council of the mandate of the Mission in respect of the period beyond 8 April 1993, and subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for the period beyond 30 April 1993, the said amounts to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

9. Decides to consider the contributions of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, San Marino, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to the Observation Mission in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-seventh session;

10. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 9 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

11. Decides to retain the unencumbered balance in the Special Account for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission;

12. Decides also that the special financial period of the Observation Mission shall be for twelve months, beginning 1 November of one year and ending on 31 October of the next, effective as from 1 November 1992, subject to the continuation of the Mission by the Security Council;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991): United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission".

General Assembly resolution 47/208

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/823) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.5), orally revised by United Kingdom; agenda item 120 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 38, 50; plenary 93.

On-site inspections

IAEA inspections

During 1992, IAEA, with the assistance and cooperation of the Special Commission of the United Nations, conducted eight on-site nuclear inspections in Iraq—the ninth to sixteenth since it began such inspections in accordance with the relevant provisions of Security Council resolution 687(1991) of April 1991. The sites inspected were designated by the Special Commission and the inspection findings were summarized in reports transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General.

The ninth inspection (11-14 January)(53) confirmed data obtained from Germany that, between January and May 1990, it had delivered large quantities of stock material intended for Iraq's centrifuge manufacturing programme. In addition, Iraq declared the procurement of 100 tonnes of 350-grade maraging steel and aluminium forgings sufficient for the manufacture of several thousand top and bottom flanges for centrifuge vacuum housings. It made no previous declaration of these materials and components since it had unilaterally destroyed or rendered them harmless by melting and crushing just before the IAEA inspections began. The team's rough, on-site estimate of the quantities of melted steel pieces and powder from the crushed ferrite magnets appeared consistent with the quantities procured.

The team thoroughly re-inspected the Rashdiya complex, located near the Baghdad North Bridge, to verify the existence of some machine tools that might have been associated with the centrifuge enrichment programme. Part of the complex had been modified into an Engineering Design Centre, staffed by 250 technical and administrative personnel, whose work was described as water treatment and quality management, but marked by a complete absence of paper records. Ten per cent of the southern part of the complex was used to store fertilizers, pesticides and seeds, from which samples were taken; the rest of the area was empty. No physical evidence suggested that the facility served a purpose other than that declared.

The tenth inspection (5-13 February)(54) focused on 10 sites: the Salah-al-Din General Establishment (SAAD-13); the Tuwaitha Transportation Centre and the Engineering Services Centre; the "Future Design Centre"; the Latifiya Agricultural Farm; and six sites near Mosul indicated to IAEA as potential locations for heavy water production facilities. The first two sites had been inspected previously.

The team obtained a detailed description of the development and purpose of SAAD-13. It thoroughly inspected all the buildings, the open ground between the plant site and the river, the water intake, and the treatment and discharge facilities for both the plant and the village, the underground shelters and a heating/cooling facility. It conducted a helicopter survey of the site with video and still camera. A team of divers collected water samples above and below the discharge canal and sediment samples from points along the bottom of the river. Pending analysis of those samples, it appeared unlikely that an underground reactor had been constructed there. The six sites near Mosul yielded no evidence of nuclear-related activity. Inspection of the "ingots" of melted maraging steel and ferrite powder stored at the Iskandariya State Enterprise for Mechanical Industries, as well as of the aluminium stock materials declared as having been melted at the Ur Establishment (the only aluminium smelter in Iraq), yielded data in reasonable agreement with Iraqi declarations.

The team continued work on reconciling inconsistencies between IAEA findings and Iraqi declarations of nuclear material. It sought clarification of Iraq's position as to its obligation, to provide information as required under resolution 715(1991), with which it had yet to comply. It made plans for the transfer of irradiated fuel from the Tamuz 2 and IRT-5000 reactors stored in a farm north of Tuwaitha into new tanks due to an increasing risk of a radiological incident (the fuel cladding was corroding from seepage of salt-containing groundwater into the tanks), as well as for the transfer of uranium wastes being held in an oil storage tank at the Al-Jezira UO 2 plant pending recovery and analysis of the uranium content.

In addition, the team provided technical support to a Special Commission inspection of the central computer facility at the Ministry of Industry and Minerals in central Baghdad.

An important objective of the eleventh inspection (7-15 April)(55) was the destruction of key technical installations at the Al-Atheer-Al-Hatteen complex southwest of Baghdad, identified by IAEA as the main research centre where Iraq intended to pursue development of nuclear weapons. Eight buildings covering a surface of approximately 35,000 square metres and 26 major equipment items, some consisting of several components, were marked for destruction. Owing to the extensive preparatory work required for the demolition, only about 24,000 square metres of buildings were demolished, but most of the equipment was destroyed. Iraq provided all the manpower, equipment and materials that efficiently accomplished the task under the inspectors' supervision. The remaining buildings and equipment were being prepared for destruction during the next inspection.

The inspection team supervised the transfer of the irradiated fuel from the farm near Tuwaitha to new concrete containers above ground—an operation that took Iraqi technicians four days to execute. The team's attempts to resolve a variety of inconsistencies in Iraq's declarations relating to nuclear materials resulted in a new declaration of sources and quantities, subsequent processing and end-use for related work carried out at Al-Tuwaitha. This substantially changed IAEA's assessment of the flow and associated production (type and location) of nuclear materials in Iraq.

Replies to the team's repeated questioning about inconsistencies in declarations regarding Iraq's uranium enrichment programme indicated that the political decision to open this file to the inspectors had yet to be taken. Sources of carbon fibre rotors and maraging steel and of centrifuge technology advice, as well as information on the scope of the Iraqi chemical enrichment work, remained to be identified.

In further efforts to determine the extent of Iraqi experiments and studies in weapons development, the team focused on the production of plane-wave explosive lenses and on testing facilities for high explosives, and removed from Iraq the pressing die declared to have been used for lens production. It revisited 12 sites previously inspected, to complete the inventory and manufacturer identification of key equipment and machine tools used or capable of use in Iraq's nuclear programme. It held discussions on a draft text of the "full, final and complete report" submitted by Iraq in March on its nuclear programme and on the implementation of the plan for future ongoing monitoring and verification. Iraq proposed another meeting before finalizing that report and requested IAEA clarification of a number of items identified in an annex to the long-term plan.

The twelfth inspection (26 May-4 June)(56) supervised the completion of the destruction by Iraqi technicians of the remaining buildings (approximately 11,000 square metres in surface area) and equipment at the Al-Atheer-Al-Hatteen complex and removal of the protective berm around Building 33 firing site. It set in motion preparations for the destruction of selected buildings at the two EMIS sites at Tarmiya and Ash Sharqat and for other associated activities. The inspection team completed work to identify the machine tools and to better understand the overall capabilities of facilities declared to have been involved in the IAEA programme. The information was intended to help establish the basis for the long-term monitoring programme.

The amount of undeclared nuclear material processed in a safeguarded fuel fabrication facility, in violation of the safeguards agreement between Iraq and IAEA, was revised upwards by Iraq from 19 kilograms to 60 kilograms of natural uranium dioxide. The team removed the remaining quantity of fresh highly enriched uranium fuel (473 grams of U-235) from Iraq. Through written questions, meetings and interviews, it obtained some clarification of issues related to Iraq's weaponization and uranium enrichment programmes and nuclear material declarations. Certain questions on Iraq's centrifuge enrichment programme and the extent of chemical enrichment work remained open.

The final version of Iraq's "full, final and complete" report, dated May 1992, regarding all activities relating to weapons of mass destruction was handed to the team on 4 June for transmission to the Special Commission. The covering letter requested that, because of its nature, the report should be treated as confidential. The nuclear portion of the report was being translated.

The team noted that Iraq's cooperation in carrying out the destruction operations mentioned above could not be faulted. A definite stiffening in Iraqi attitude had become evident, however, as exemplified by numerous attempts to prohibit or limit photograph-taking and placing of seals, and by a slow-down in arrangements for meetings, transportation and other activities. The reason, Iraq explained, was that their active cooperation during previous inspections had not resulted in an improvement in the sanctions situation.

The thirteenth inspection (14-21 July)(57) supervised the destruction of key installations at the two EMIS sites, including eight buildings (four at each site). As in similar operations in the past, Iraq supplied the necessary manpower, equipment and materials required to execute the task. With the completion before the end of August of a few remaining activities at the sites, all known technical facilities and equipment for research and production of enriched uranium using EMIS technology would have been destroyed or rendered harmless. The sites would continue to be inspected, however, under the long-term monitoring plan.

The 95 irregular chunks of melted maraging steel in open-air storage at the Iskandariya State Enterprise for Mechanical Industries were individually identified and photographed preparatory to their transfer to a foundry for remelting and dilution with equal amounts of high carbon steel during a future mission in order to render the material harmless.

The inspection team twice revisited the State Enterprise for Heavy Engineering Equipment at Daura to collect additional technical data and contract numbers needed to identify or confirm the identities of manufacturers or procurement routes for the furnaces and the electron beam welder intended for use in Iraq's centrifuge manufacture programme.

The fourteenth inspection (31 August-7 September)(58) verified completion of the destruction of the eight buildings at the EMIS sites. In the context of the long-term monitoring plan, the team began a project aimed at the periodic control of radionuclides and other selected, stable nuclides of the main bodies of water in Iraq. A number of sites had been identified where water and sediment samples would be periodically collected. Highly sensitive analytical techniques applied to the samples would yield information on any sizeable nuclear activity. The first sampling, begun by the inspection team and to be completed during the next inspection, would provide the baseline against which future sampling results would be compared. Samples were taken from 15 sites.

The identification and tagging of a number of high-temperature laboratory furnaces and other non-released equipment stored at the Ash Shaykili warehouse was completed. These had been removed from Tuwaitha prior to the inspections authorized under resolution 687(1991) and, at IAEA request, were collected for storage. Previously inspected sites were revisited for monitoring purposes. The maraging steel pieces were transferred to a Basrah foundry. The uranium-containing wastes at Al-Jezira and the water level in the spent-fuel storage tanks near Tuwaitha were monitored.

The inspection team held several meetings with Iraqi authorities on the radiometric hydrologic survey as a component of the long-term monitoring plan, on the completeness of the "full, final and complete" Iraqi report and on annex 3 of the long-term monitoring plan.

The fifteenth inspection (8-18 November)(59) concluded the sampling of the waterways of Iraq, begun during the previous inspection. The 37 sites visited brought to 52 the total number of sites sampled along the full length of the Tigris-Euphrates watershed. A detailed assessment was made of the conditions for the removal of the irradiated fuel stored near Tuwaitha. It included an evaluation of fuel design, exposure history and current storage conditions. Removal of the fuel was estimated to take from four to six months. Under the observation of the inspectors, the 100 tonnes of maraging steel at Basrah was destroyed by remelting and diluting it with equal amounts of high carbon steel. The R24 experimental EMIS magnet system was destroyed with cutting torches. The system included nine double-pole magnets, a coil-winding machine and transport rails.

Iraq acknowledged to the inspectors that the Engineering Design Centre at Rashdiya played a role in the design of the centrifuge enrichment programme. It also identified the role of certain key technical staff, interviews with whom resulted in a more credible picture of Iraq's centrifuge programme. The importance of procurement data for the establishment of a basis for the long-term monitoring programme was again emphasized to no avail. The current process of obtaining that information through Member States continued to produce results, but that process was inherently slow.

Work to identify and catalogue key machine tools in various Iraqi State engineering establishments continued. Under resolution 715(1991), Iraq was to update every six months a declaration regarding facilities, materials and equipment starting from the situation as it existed on 1 January 1989. Its reporting obligation covered all sites in Iraq, not just those belonging to IAEA. Iraq advised that it would officially submit a declaration covering IAEA facilities as soon as possible after the end of the inspection. A draft was provided to the inspection team and a commitment was made to amend the declaration to cover the country as a whole by year's end.

The uranium waste material recovered at Al-Jezira and removed to Al-Tuwaitha was weighed, sampled for verification and removed for storage under IAEA seal. Re-verification of irradiated fuel at the IRT-5000 reactor and remedial actions to improve storage conditions for the irradiated fuel near Tuwaitha were completed. A number of additional nuclear material samples were taken from previously verified material to evaluate further Iraqi declarations regarding the processing of nuclear materials at Al-Tuwaitha.

The inspection team visited 30 other locations throughout Iraq, including known nuclear facilities, State industrial establishments, support or storage facilities and other sites not previously inspected. Some were visited on short notice, with prior notifications of between five minutes and two hours.

The inspection report noted that the team was not harassed at any of the sites inspected, nor did tight security interfere with inspection work. Arrangements to accommodate the inspection activities were made efficiently throughout the inspection period.

The inspectors of the sixteenth inspection (5-8 December),(60) with support from a chemical-biological weapons team from the Special Commission, inspected a complex of buildings used by the Military Industrial Committee as an Engineering Design Centre to rebuild Iraqi industry. The complex included the former headquarters of "Petrochemical Three", the code name for Iraq's project for developing an implosion-type nuclear weapon.(61) The inspectors were in search of documents pertaining to that project and to Iraq's programme for developing chemical and biological weapons of mass destruction. While the inspection team found neither activity nor documents relevant to resolution 687(1991), it observed the removal of documents from the site on its arrival. Confronted with videotape footage of the situation, the chief Iraqi counterpart promised an immediate investigation of the incident, which he ascribed to the personal initiative of panic-stricken individuals.

Short-notice inspections were also made of an IAEA guest house in the Tuwaitha area and of a warehouse at Al-Atheer. On 7 December, the IAEA Chief Inspector met with the IAEA Chairman, who read a written statement on the question of the procurement sources for Iraq's centrifuge enrichment programme. The statement first reiterated Iraq's position regarding the "grey areas", expressed to the Security Council on 23 November, and then noted that Iraq had so far named a total of 80 companies (35 in the "full, final and complete" report, 30 in inspection reports and 15 named as a result of the survey of machines, equipment and other items in IAEA workplaces and support facilities), representing 90 per cent of Iraq's sources. Questions on the remaining 10 per cent could be submitted to Iraq in writing, which would be dealt with positively. Accordingly, IAEA on 18 December submitted a request for the names of the manufacturers and suppliers of the maraging steel; Iraq's reply of 22 December failed to provide the requested information.

IAEA reports. During 1992, IAEA issued the second and third semi-annual reports on its implementation of the plan for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of items listed in paragraph 12 of Security Council resolution 687(1991). The second report covered the period 17 December 1991 to 17 June 1992, and the third, the period 17 June to 17 December. They were transmitted to the Council in June(62) and December(63) respectively.

According to the reports, the 12.24 kilograms of U-235 contained in the fresh fuel for the IRT-5000 research reactor, removed from Iraq in November 1991,(64) was transferred to the Russian Federation, where it was transformed, through isotopic dilution, into approximately 61 kilograms of uranium, enriched to slightly less than 20 per cent in U-235. It was then transferred to a storage facility, where it will remain under IAEA safeguards pending its resale. French-origin MTR type plates and Russian-origin pins containing, respectively, 372 grams and 116.1 grams of U-235 were removed from Iraq in June 1992 and were in storage at the IAEA laboratory in Seibersdorf, Austria.

Other irradiated enriched research reactor fuel containing a total of 35.58 kilograms of U-235 was held in storage in the Russian reactor building at Al-Tuwaitha and a location nearby. Negotiations with a consortium of commercial companies from France and the United Kingdom for the removal and reprocessing of this fuel had met with legal, technical and financial difficulties. Consequently, IAEA, on 27 November, called for new proposals for the removal, transportation and disposal of the material. The removal, to take place during the first half of 1993, could be accomplished without major difficulties, but required the substantial involvement of Iraqi personnel.

IAEA continued to pursue its inquiry into the Iraqi nuclear material flow declarations, in particular with regard to activities declared to have taken place at Al-Tuwaitha. Additional samples were taken of the filters, declared feed and waste materials.

As to installations, equipment and other materials relevant to enriched uranium production, materials procured from Germany and new Iraqi declarations of other stocks of materials procured were described in detail by the ninth (January) IAEA inspection(53) The destruction of EMIS uranium enrichment production capabilities at the Tarmiya and Ash Sharqat sites, including the associated electrical power distribution capability, had been verified as complete. EMIS components, consistent with Iraqi declarations and independently acquired procurement data, had been verified as destroyed; 51 return irons of 30 tonnes each were removed from Tarmiya to a nearby storage area. Electrical power to the site was reduced by a factor of three.

With respect to Iraq's weaponization activities, the Al-Atheer-Al-Hatteen sites had been re-inspected since completion of the destruction of the weaponization-related facilities and equipment there. At Iraq's invitation, cameras and associated accessories declared in 1991 were inventoried and were being evaluated as to their utility for high explosives testing. Approximately 250 tonnes of HMX, a high-melting-point explosive, was in storage under IAEA seal at Al-Qa'qa' pending a determination of its disposition.

Future activities included: arrangements for the removal from Iraq of 35 kilograms of U-235 contained in the irradiated fuel elements of the Tamuz 2 and IRT-5000 research reactors; and determination of the disposition of the approximately 700 machine tools inventoried by IAEA, some of which met the specifications for annex 3 of the IAEA plan for ongoing monitoring of Iraq's compliance with relevant Council resolutions.

In all, IAEA had carried out, with Special Commission assistance and cooperation, 16 inspections in Iraq of more than 70 sites that resulted in the gradual disclosure of a broad-based nuclear programme aimed at the production of enriched uranium and development of nuclear-weapon capabilities. In the course of the inspections, IAEA interviewed numerous Iraqi authorities and secured thousands of pages of documents from which it had been able to draw a reasonably coherent and consistent picture of Iraq's nuclear programme. Doubts remained, however, as to whether that picture was complete.

Special Commission activities

The Special Commission established under resolution 687(1991)(1) continued to maintain three offices: the Office of the Executive Chairman in New York, a field office at Manama, Bahrain, and another at Baghdad. Agreements concluded by the United Nations with Bahrain and Iraq governing the status, privileges and immunities of the Commission(22) remained in force. According to the two 1992 reports on the Commission's activities (see below), issued by the Executive Chairman, Rolf Ekeüs, the agreement with Bahrain was extended twice during the year, each for a six-month period, to 29 September 1992 and thereafter to 31 March 1993.

The question of the Commission's financing, currently met by contributions in cash and in kind (personnel, services, equipment) from a number of Member States, required attention in the absence of an Iraqi agreement to sell oil under the terms of resolution 706(1991).(9) The first contribution to the escrow account established by that resolution was received on 10 December from Saudi Arabia in the amount of $30 million specifically earmarked for the Commission.

Special mission (January)

As reported by the Secretary-General on 25 January 1992,(5) the Special Commission dispatched a special mission to Iraq from 27 to 29 January. Led by two Commission members, the mission was to emphasize to Iraq the most serious concern at its failure to provide information required under resolution 715(1992)(3) and to urge it, in accordance with resolution 707(1991),(2) to disclose, fully and completely, information on its programmes related to chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres.

The Commission's Executive Chairman, in a special report transmitted to the Security Council on 18 February,(65) stated that, while the mission obtained some of the information that Iraq should have supplied on its own initiative as part of its compliance with resolution 707(1991), it had to do so by an interrogative procedure whereby specific questions were addressed to Iraq to which it replied. The mission had no success as to the requirement that Iraq unconditionally comply with its obligations under the two plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved by resolution 715(1991). The Commission thus concluded that Iraq had no intention of meeting those obligations and that it recognized only its own understanding of its obligations under paragraphs 10 and 12 of resolution 687(1991), which fell far short of what was called for by resolution 715(1991).

The Executive Chairman drew attention to additional matters of serious concern that illustrated Iraq's refusal to acknowledge its obligations under resolution 707(1991) and impinged on the privileges and immunities of the Commission. One was Iraq's insistence that incoming and outgoing inspection flights to and from Bahrain or Kuwait use Habbaniyah airfield, coupled with the imposition of increasingly onerous conditions that not only had considerably delayed loading and off-loading but had also come close to harassment. Given those difficulties and the 100-kilometre distance of Habbaniyah from the Commission's centre of operations in Baghdad, the Commission on 23 January officially proposed using Muthanna or Rasheed airfields, which were operational and within city limits. Of further concern were Iraq's constant objection to the aerial surveillance flights by the Commission and Iraq's continuing failure to deliver to IAEA the documents forcibly removed from the sixth nuclear inspection team in September 1991.(61)

The Executive Chairman stated that, were the Commission to initiate the ongoing monitoring and verification phase of its mandate under these circumstances, it would be sending a message that, in fact if not in law, it was prepared to conduct this phase of its responsibilities under Iraq's conditions, not the Council's. The Commission was neither legally able nor prepared to adopt such an approach, which experience had demonstrated was fraught with serious inadequacies. It was therefore seeking instructions from the Council, adding that the longer firm action was delayed, the more intransigent Iraq's position was likely to become.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (19 February)

After consultations held on 19 February 1992, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement(66) on behalf of Council members in connection with the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council express their gratitude to the Secretary-General for the report submitted to the Security Council on 18 February 1992 (S/23606).

"The members of the Security Council note that while progress has been made, much still remains to be done to implement the relevant resolutions of the Council. The members of the Council are gravely concerned by Iraq's continued failure to acknowledge all its obligations under Council resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), and its continued rejection of the plans of the Secretary-General and of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (S/22871/Rev.1 and S/22872/Rev.1 and Corr.1) as approved by resolution 715(1991) for ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with its obligations under paragraphs 10, 12 and 13 of resolution 687(1991).

"Ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's obligations is an integral part of Security Council resolution 687(1991), which established a cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region. Such ongoing monitoring and verification is a step of the utmost importance towards the goal set out in paragraph 14 of that resolution.

"Iraq's failure to acknowledge its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), its rejection up until now of the two plans for ongoing monitoring and verification and its failure to provide the full, final and complete disclosure of its weapons capabilities constitute a continuing material breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991). Unconditional agreement by Iraq to implement these obligations is one of the essential preconditions to any reconsideration by the Council under paragraphs 21 and 22 of resolution 687(1991) of the prohibitions referred to in those paragraphs.

"The members of the Council support the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch a special mission headed by the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission to visit Iraq immediately to meet and discuss with the highest levels of the Iraqi Government for the purpose of securing the unconditional agreement by Iraq to implement all its relevant obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991). The mission should stress the serious consequences if such agreement to implement is not forthcoming. The Secretary-General is requested to report on the results of the special mission to the Security Council upon its return."

Special mission (February)

Following the statement by the President of the Security Council, a five-member special mission(67) headed by the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission visited Baghdad from 21 to 24 February 1992. The mission held four meetings with officials of the Government of Iraq at the highest levels, including the Deputy Prime Minister; the Minister for Foreign Affairs; the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs; and the Adviser to the Minister, as well as the Foreign Ministry's Director of Disarmament Section, Head of Research Department, and Chief of Department of International Organizations; the Vice-Chairman of the Military Industrial Corporation; and the IAEC Chairman. As agreed at the second meeting on 22 February, both sides clarified their respective positions through an exchange of written statements.

In the mission's statement, the Executive Chairman noted that progress had been made but much remained to be done to implement the Council's resolutions. The Council was gravely concerned at Iraq's continued failure to acknowledge its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) and viewed its rejection of the ongoing monitoring and verification plans as a continuing material breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991). Full disclosure of Iraq's weapons programmes, with supporting documentary and physical evidence, was required under resolution 707(1991) to advance implementation of resolution 715(1991). Monitoring and verification of Iraq's obligations were integral to resolution 687(1991) and of the utmost importance in achieving in the Middle East a zone free from weapons of mass destruction and all missiles for their delivery. Unconditional agreement by Iraq to implement its obligations under all relevant Council resolutions was one of the essential preconditions for any Council reconsideration of the sanctions. The special mission's purpose was to obtain Iraq's unconditional agreement to implement all its obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) and to stress the serious consequences if such agreement was not forthcoming, including a delay in the lifting of sanctions and destruction of more of Iraq's dual-capable production facilities than would otherwise be required.

The Executive Chairman stressed that dialogue on Iraq's compliance would be meaningful only on the basis of a full, final and complete disclosure of its weapons programmes. He drew attention to the Special Commission's rights to operate its own aircraft and use airfields of its choice, as elaborated upon in resolution 707(1991) and in the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification, offering to explore practical arrangements to accommodate Iraq's legitimate concerns in this regard. He further drew attention to a request by a chemical-weapons destruction team then in Iraq to land a fixed-wing aircraft at Al-Tallil airfield at Nasiriyah, for medical evacuation in case of an emergency during the destruction of a large number of chemically-armed rockets at Khamisiyah. Having explained in depth the background of the ongoing monitoring and verification plans, the Executive Chairman stressed that their implementation could be relatively easy with complete declarations and full cooperation.

The Iraqi statement asserted that Iraq had provided all the necessary information required of it under resolution 687(1991) but suggested presenting it again in a consolidated format to give a better overall picture. If that information still proved unsatisfactory, Iraq proposed that the Special Commission and IAEA should then address specific questions to Iraqi experts at a seminar that should deal once and for all with the overall picture of Iraq's weapons programmes. The seminar would take place within a fixed timetable and should result in a jointly signed statement, to which a definitive list of outstanding issues could be appended, and in a report to the Council that Iraq was in compliance with its obligations under stage 1 of the Special Commission's work. To facilitate completion of that stage, the Commission should draw up a final list of the precise equipment that needed to be destroyed.

Iraq did not respond to the Commission's point about operating its own aircraft and using airfields of its choice. In the discussions, however, Iraqi concerns in this regard appeared to be linked to the question of sovereignty, territorial integrity and national security. The mission learned on leaving Baghdad that Iraq had agreed to the request for emergency landings at the Al-Tallil airfield.

While it had earlier expressed objections to resolution 687(1991), Iraq nevertheless admitted its obligations to permit ongoing monitoring of its obligations not to reacquire the weapons systems destroyed under section C of that resolution. It did not reject the two plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved under resolution 715(1991); it merely expressed its position on that resolution. From its standpoint, the main problem with the plans lay in the general provisions, which continued into the indefinite future the privileges, immunities and facilities for the Special Commission and IAEA, agreed as part of the cease-fire arrangements, and as such infringed Iraq's sovereignty, territorial integrity, national security and industrial capabilities.

Iraq proposed that the Commission provide a detailed description of how the ongoing monitoring and verification plans would be implemented, the better to identify a mode of implementation acceptable to both sides. It insisted on a linkage between its cooperation with the Special Commission and the easing or lifting of sanctions. It asked that a clear distinction be made between stage 1 of the Commission's work—the identification and destruction of weapons systems specified in resolution 687(1991) and identification of the related production equipment for future monitoring—and stage 2—the long-term monitoring plans under resolution 715(1991). Sanctions should be progressively eased as implementation of stage 1 progressed. Stage 2 should not be used as a mandate in perpetuity by Council members empowered with a veto.

After a careful review of the Iraqi statement and taking account of the discussions held, the Executive Chairman regretfully concluded that, at that stage, he was not able to report to the Council that he had secured unconditional agreement by Iraq to implement all its obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991). He was of the view that Iraq's offer to consolidate what it called "all the necessary information" it had already provided would not constitute the full, final and complete disclosure called for by resolution 707(1991), which would give a complete picture and understanding of all of Iraq's prohibited weapons programmes.

The Executive Chairman would continue to press for landing rights at Rasheed airport so that the Commission's fixed-wing and helicopter operations might be consolidated at one place not far from its field office at Baghdad. Iraq accepted only the "principle" of ongoing monitoring and verification under resolution 715(1991), subject to considerations of sovereignty, territorial integrity, national security and non-infringement of its industrial capabilities—a statement the Executive Chairman could not interpret as constituting unconditional agreement by Iraq to implement its obligations under those plans. Short of such agreement, the practical implementation of resolution 715(1991) and the plans it approved could not be undertaken in a credible manner.

The Iraqi statement indicated that a delegation to be dispatched to talk to the Council in March would convey Iraq's position on resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991). The Executive Chairman concluded that only through successful implementation in the field, based on adequate declarations and periodic reporting by Iraq, could those resolutions be carried out to the point where the Special Commission and IAEA would be in a position to report to the Council that Iraq was in substantial compliance with its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991).

In a 24 January letter to the Secretary-General,(68) Iraq recapitulated the points it had made to the special mission and reiterated its proposal for an expert-level dialogue for the following purposes: to present to the Special Commission information required from Iraq in consolidated form and to respond to any questions relating to it; to enable adequate material balances to be established for all weapons and their components; to provide credible detailed information on items destroyed unilaterally by Iraq; to respond to specific requests for available evidence relating to Iraqi declarations; and to discuss the scope of destruction proposed by the Special Commission, so as to ensure irreversibly the non-prohibited use of facilities, equipment, materials and components.

Iraq confirmed that it did not reject the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification. It reaffirmed that, by recognizing resolution 687(1991), it had accepted the principle that the Security Council should ascertain and verify that Iraqi industry was in no way directed towards the production of prohibited weapons. In this regard, Iraq could deal with the Council and the Special Commission on the basis of respect for its sovereignty and national security requirements, and of non-infringement of its industrial capabilities devoted to purposes not prohibited by resolution 687(1991).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (28 February)

Following consultations among Security Council members, the President made the following statement(69) on behalf of the Council, at its meeting on 28 February 1992, in connection with its consideration of the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council express their gratitude to the Secretary-General for the report submitted to the Council on 27 February 1992 (S/23643), transmitting the results of the special mission dispatched to Iraq by the Secretary-General pursuant to the statement of the President of the Council of 19 February 1992 (S/23609). The members of the Council approve in full the conclusions of the special mission as contained in the report and in particular its finding that Iraq is not prepared to give its unconditional agreement to implement all of its obligations under resolutions 687(1992), 707(1991) and 715(1991).

"The members of the Council deplore and condemn the failure of the Government of Iraq to provide the special mission with full, final and complete disclosure, as required by resolution 707(1991), of all aspects of its programmes to develop weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres, including launchers, and of all holdings of such weapons, their components and production facilities and locations, as well as all other nuclear programmes; and the failure of Iraq to comply with the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification (S/22871/Rev.1 and S/22872/Rev.1 and Corr.1) approved by resolution 715(1991). In the statement made on 19 February 1992 (S/23609) prior to the dispatch of the special mission to Iraq, the Council noted that Iraq's behaviour constituted a material breach of resolution 687(1991). Regrettably, this continues to be the case.

"Furthermore, the members of the Council equally deplore and condemn Iraq's failure, within the time prescribed by the Special Commission at the request of Iraq, to commence destruction of ballistic missile-related equipment designated for destruction by the Special Commission. The members of the Council reaffirm that it is for the Special Commission alone to determine which items must be destroyed under paragraph 9 of resolution 687(1991). Therefore, the Government of Iraq's letter of 28 February 1992 to the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission is unacceptable. Iraq's refusal to implement the determinations of the Special Commission constitutes a further material breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991).

"The members of the Council demand that Iraq immediately implement all its obligations under Council resolution 687(1991) and subsequent resolutions on Iraq. The members of the Council require the Government of Iraq to communicate directly to the Council without further delay an authoritative and unconditional acknowledgement of its agreement to accept and implement the above noted obligations, including specifically to comply with the determination of the Special Commission requiring the destruction of ballistic missile-related equipment. The members of the Council emphasize that Iraq must be aware of the serious consequences of continued material breaches of resolution 687(1991).

"The members of the Council note that an Iraqi delegation is prepared to come to New York as soon as it is invited to do so. The members of the Council have asked its President to extend such an invitation to the delegation to come to New York without further delay. The members of the Council intend in any event to continue their consideration of this question no later than the week beginning 9 March 1992."

Meeting number. SC 3058.

Report of the Special Commission (June). The Executive Chairman of the Special Commission submitted two reports—its third and fourth—in 1992, which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council. The third report, issued in June and covering the period 4 December 1991 to 10 June 1992,(70) summarized the principal developments and activities since the Commission's report of December 1991.(71) It restated the negative outcome of the special mission to Iraq in February and its implications for the implementation of resolution 715(1991).

The Special Commission and IAEA continued to conduct vigorous inspections of sites declared by Iraq or designated by the Commission. The inspections were the main source for compiling a picture of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and capabilities for producing them. Although Iraq had in most instances extended cooperation to inspectors in the field, it had not been uniformly forthcoming with information on its weapons programmes as a whole. Three problems that emerged in the first five months of Commission operations had crystallized, shifting the emphasis of the Commission's work from conducting inspections to seeking compliance with Council resolutions, and thus delaying the fulfilment of its mandate.

First, an obstruction to the Commission's progressive discharge of its work as envisioned—from inspection and survey to destruction, and thence to long-term ongoing monitoring and verification to ensure that Iraq did not reacquire proscribed weapons—emerged in November 1991 with Iraq's written confirmation of its position that the plans for future ongoing monitoring and verification were illegal, as it had stated before the Council resolution 715(1991) approving those plans was adopted.(17) Second, Iraq had failed to provide the initial declarations required under the plans, which were important for identifying which facilities, materials and activities needed to be monitored. In June, however, it submitted to the twelfth (May/June) IAEA inspection team documents containing what it characterized as a comprehensive and complete version of its nuclear, chemical, biological and ballistic-missile activities. Those documents, currently being assessed, should correspond to the full, final and complete disclosures required under resolution 707(1991). Third, Iraq had continued putting obstructions in the way of the Commission's landing rights for fixed-wing aircraft and stepping up criticisms and protests against its high-altitude surveillance flights.

The protests, reported to the Security Council on a number of occasions, escalated to a point where, by a letter of 9 April, Iraq referred to a recent incursion into Iraqi airspace by Iranian aircraft and called a halt to all Commission aerial surveillance flights "in order to avoid any unfortunate incidents"; it further referred to the possibility that the flights might "now endanger the aircraft itself and its pilot". In his response of 10 April, the Executive Chairman expressed the gravest concern that those remarks appeared to constitute a threat to the security of the Commission's surveillance flights, which derived from resolution 687(1991) and was expressly authorized under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) and in the 1991 status agreement between the United Nations and Iraq.(22) Unless the Commission received immediate assurances from Iraq that its military forces would not interfere with or threaten the security of the flights, the modalities for those unescorted flights would have to be reviewed. The exchange of correspondence was transmitted to the Council for consideration (see below).

During the period under review, the Special Commission conducted two chemical-weapons inspections: the seventh and eighth. The 10 sites inspected during the seventh inspection (27 January—5 February) revealed no evidence of activities or items relevant to resolution 687(1991). At Al-Muthanna, where the central chemical weapon destruction facility was under construction, the team verified the return to the facility of chemical-bomb-making equipment from a sugar factory at Mosul. After observing an experimental test run of a procedure for the controlled destruction of nerve agents by caustic hydrolysis, the team concluded that further test runs were necessary.

The eighth inspection (15-29 April) covered 14 sites to verify declarations submitted on 28 March relating to chemical weapon items that Iraq claimed to have unilaterally destroyed in July 1991. It also inspected without prior notice a suspected documentation centre and visited the former headquarters of the Centre for Technical Research. It found no activity of relevance to resolution 687(1991) at either site.

Meanwhile, a team directed and controlled the destruction at Khamisiyah (21 February—24 March) of 425 chemically filled and 38 unfilled rockets. Another team monitored preparations for the destruction facility at Al-Muthanna (5-13 April), providing technical guidance for the construction of a mustard-agent incinerator, which was 70 per cent complete, and a large-scale nerve-agent hydrolysis plant, which needed further modification. By a decision of the Commission, all ballistic-missile-related chemicals used in the production of solid rocket propellant were to be transferred from their current locations to Al-Muthanna for destruction.

Between December 1991 and June 1992, the Special Commission conducted six ballistic-missile inspections. The first inspection (1-9 December 1991) was to verify destruction of fixed launch sites, mainly in the western zone, and of "supergun" components. The team inspected 17 missile sites, of which seven were undeclared. Equipment assessed to have been primarily intended for ballistic-missile production and testing was found at two of the undeclared sites. Iraq agreed to destroy four Scud-missile transporters that were re-inspected and to blow up four similar ones remaining at Al-Taji.

The second inspection (9-17 December 1991) visited 14 suspected missile concealment sites—one in Baghdad and the rest in the western zone—in search of documentary evidence relating to missiles and associated equipment.

The main task of the third inspection (21-28 February 1992) was to supervise destruction by Iraq of ballistic-missile production and repair facilities, together with related equipment, identified by the Executive Chairman in a 14 February letter to Iraq's Minister of State for Foreign Affairs. The team inspected a total of seven sites and found the facilities for the missile-solid-propellant project to have been extensively rebuilt. It also found and catalogued prohibited items in a number of areas that had been inaccessible to previous inspection teams due to war damage. Owing to Iraq's refusal to execute destruction as specified in the letter, the Executive Chairman ordered the team to withdraw from Iraq. As a result of the Council's consideration of the matter in formal session on 11 and 12 March (see under "Cease-fire compliance"), Iraq on 19 March declared additional numbers of ballistic missiles, chemical weapons and associated items and stated its readiness to go along with the required destruction.

In addition to initiating the destruction concerned, the fourth inspection (21-30 March) was charged with verifying Iraq's claim to having unilaterally destroyed 89 ballistic missiles and certain associated equipment in the summer of 1991, and with conducting a number of undeclared inspections. The team was handed a revised accounting of the number of missiles Iraq had received from the former USSR and a downward revision of the number of missiles Iraq fired at Iran during their 1980-1988 armed conflict. The fifth inspection (13-21 April) continued supervising destruction of ballistic-missile production equipment. Forty-five items and 10 buildings were destroyed, representing the majority of the items listed in the Executive Chairman's letter of 14 February, as extended by his letter of 4 April.

The sixth inspection (14-22 May) continued with the verification, begun by the previous inspection, of Iraq's declaration of 19 March. It inventoried equipment designed for the production of nozzles for the BADR-2000 ballistic missile, miscellaneous components, and missile transport dollies. It verified destruction of six items of various types of test vehicles as well as a maintenance vehicle, the erector arm of a training launcher, nine oxidizer and four propellant vehicles, a spot welder and a rolling machine. It identified five sets of Iraqi manufactured missile guidance components, which were to be removed from Iraq for technical analysis. The remains of guidance components unilaterally destroyed by Iraq were found scattered in and around a canal 10 kilometres long. The team found a number of documents relating to the construction of facilities probably associated with missile systems. It removed for analysis copies of 33 pages of documents concerning construction at SAAD-16.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (10 April)

The exchange of correspondence between Iraq and the Special Commission regarding the latter's aerial surveillance flights was the subject of Security Council consultations held on 10 April 1992.

After those consultations, the Council President issued the following statement⁽⁷⁴⁾ on behalf of the Council members in connection with the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council have learned with grave concern from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission of recent developments which appear to call for a halt in and constitute a threat to the safety and security of the Special Commission's aerial surveillance flights over Iraq. The members of the Council wish to point out that the surveillance flights are carried out under the authority of Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991). Reaffirming the right of the Special Commission to conduct such aerial surveillance flights, the members of the Council call upon the Government of Iraq to take all the necessary steps to ensure that the Iraqi military forces will not interfere with or threaten the security of the flights concerned and to comply with its responsibilities to secure the safety of the Special Commission's aircraft and personnel while flying over Iraq. The members of the Council warn the Government of Iraq of the serious consequences which would ensue from any failure to comply with these obligations."

Report of the Special Commission (December). The fourth report of the Special Commission covered its activities during the period 10 June to 14 December 1992.⁽⁷³⁾ Five appendices contained descriptions of organizational and administrative issues; security issues; further inspections of Iraq's proscribed weapons activities in the areas of chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles; aerial surveillance by high-altitude aircraft and helicopter; and activities relating to the destruction of Iraq's chemical agents and munitions. A sixth appendix listed all inspections and special missions undertaken by the Commission since its inception.

The report provided a detailed account of the main problems that had impeded the Commission's operations and thus the fulfilment of its mandate. They included: Iraq's position that the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification were unlawful and that a solution to address their substance in a manner acceptable to Iraq should be negotiated between Iraq, the Security Council, the Special Commission and IAEA; Iraq's "full, final and complete" disclosures due under resolution 707(1991) and its initial declarations, due under the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification, found to contain major shortcomings, needed to be rectified if they were to form the basis for a definite material balance of Iraq's past programmes of weapons of mass destruction and for effective monitoring and verification of compliance; and Iraq's failure to substantiate information it had provided on its prohibited programmes. The Commission had accepted the declarations made by Iraq on these issues as a basis for dialogue with its authorities in the hope of eventually obtaining complete disclosures.

As to observance of the Commission's status, privileges and immunities, the problems related to its right to operate aircraft anywhere within Iraq continued. A most serious instance was the Iraqi authorities' refusal to accept that an appropriately notified aerial surveillance flight should take place. A formal complaint was lodged with Iraq's Foreign Ministry and the incident was brought to the Security Council's attention on 10 December (see below). A disturbing new development was the sharp deterioration of the security of Commission personnel and property in Iraq. An appendix to the report summarized the types of security-related incidents, including hostile demonstrations, harassment, telephone threats, verbal abuse and physical attacks on Commission inspectors and property. The report stated that, while some incidents might have been spontaneous, it was difficult not to believe that the decrease in security was the result of a centrally coordinated government campaign to intimidate and humiliate Commission staff.

Three chemical weapons inspections—the ninth to the eleventh—were conducted during the period under review. The ninth inspection (26 June–10 July) was essentially in search of documentation on proscribed weapons activities at declared and undeclared sites, some of which were possibly concerned with biological weapons and ballistic missiles. The team also surveyed and recorded reconstruction activity at the Fallujah sites, where chemical weapon precursors were formerly produced. In addition, it supervised the destruction of a majority of the chemical bomb-making equipment identified to date. The inspection ended with a stand-off at the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation, where the Iraqi authorities refused access to the building. The team, which had been monitoring the building's exits to ensure that evidence was not removed, had to be withdrawn eventually.

The tenth inspection (21–29 September) verified that, with the exception of mortar rounds at Fallujah and whatever might remain in the damaged and unsafe bunkers at Muhammadiyat, Iraq had fully carried out Commission instructions to move all identified chemical munitions and agents to the destruction facility at Al-Muthanna. A comprehensive inventory of the items, currently under way, would form the baseline for destruction operations.

The eleventh inspection (6-14 December) comprised two sub-teams which undertook inspections relating to chemical and bacteriological weapons. A report on that inspection remained to be submitted.

In the area of ballistic missiles, the Commission conducted three inspections. The team of the first inspection (11-29 July) replaced that of the ninth chemical weapons inspection. Its task was to keep watch outside the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation until such time as access was allowed. The team was forced to withdraw from the vicinity of the building on 22 July after an attack on one of the inspectors, which Iraqi security officials did nothing to prevent. Following discussions on modalities in New York between the Executive Chairman and the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations, access to the Ministry was granted and a full inspection was conducted. No proscribed items were found, although indications were that such items might have been removed.

The findings of the second inspection (7-18 August), which investigated Iraq's ability to acquire or produce indigenously proscribed ballistic missiles, especially missile guidance and control systems, including gyroscopes, were negative. The team obtained further information, however, on the scope and extent of Iraq's programmes to acquire or produce prohibited ballistic missiles and components, the interrelationship between the various projects and organizations in the ballistic missile programme, and foreign involvement in certain of the programme's aspects.

The third inspection (16-30 October) had a two-fold objective: to determine whether Iraq retained an inventory of or the capability to produce fuels for ballistic missiles and to obtain information on the operational use of those missiles. Iraq adopted a more open approach to providing data on the operational use of its ballistic missiles since 1980. The team obtained information on Iraq's past plans to acquire fuel and oxidizer for prohibited missiles but found no evidence of the capability to produce such fuels indigenously.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 July)

After Security Council consultations held on 6 July 1992, the President issued the following statement(74) on behalf of the Council members in connection with the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council have learned with concern of the refusal of the Government of Iraq to permit a team of inspectors sent to Iraq by the Special Commission to enter certain premises designated by the Special Commission for inspection.

"The members of the Council recall that, under paragraph 9 (b) (i) of section C of Security Council resolution 687(1991), Iraq is required to permit the Special Commission to undertake immediate on-site inspection of any locations designated by the Commission. This obligation is imposed as a result of a decision of the Council, taken under Chapter VII of the Charter. Furthermore, Iraq has agreed to such inspections as a condition precedent to the establishment of a formal cease-fire between Iraq and Kuwait and the Member States cooperating with Kuwait in accordance with Security Council resolution 678(1990). The members of the Council further recall that by paragraph 2 (ii) of resolution 707(1991) the Council has reaffirmed the relevant provision of resolution 687(1991) and expressly demanded that Iraq 'allow the Special Commission and their Inspection Teams immediate, unconditional, and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records, and means of transportation which they wish to inspect.'

"Iraq's present refusal to permit access to the Inspection Team currently in Iraq to the premises designated by the Special Commission constitutes a material and unacceptable breach by Iraq of a provision of resolution 687(1991), which established the cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region. The members of the Council demand that the Government of Iraq immediately agree to the admission to the premises concerned of the inspectors of the Special Commission as required by the Chairman of the Special Commission, so that the Special Commission may establish whether or not any documents, records, materials, or equipment relevant to the responsibilities of the Commission are located therein."

Mission (July)

The Special Commission undertook a third mission to Iraq, from 17 to 19 July 1992, in order to secure from the Iraqi Government immediate and full access to the premises of the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation and to obtain Iraq's undertaking to implement its obligations under all relevant Security Council resolutions. Access to the Ministry had been denied to the ninth chemical weapons inspection team on 5 July.

The four-member mission, headed by the Executive Chairman, held four meetings, on 18 and 19 July: with the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, along with the IAEC Chairman, the Director of the Military Industrial Corporation, and the Permanent Representative designate of Iraq to the United Nations, on the first day; and with the Foreign Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, along with the Permanent Representative designate, on the next.

The Executive Chairman explained that the Ministry had been designated for inspection because of a well-founded concern that the facility contained material of relevance to section C of resolution 687(1991). He reiterated the Council demand that Iraq immediately agree to admit the Commission inspectors to the premises, warning that if the situation was not rectified, a new legal situation regarding the cease-fire arrangement might be created. The obstruction by Iraq amounted to a challenge to the Council's authority.

Iraq's legal argument was that Council decisions taken under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations could not be invoked to impose on a Member State conditions that infringed on its national sovereignty. Thus, Iraq did not accept that resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991) placed an obligation on it to give the Commission unimpeded access to any place in Iraq. The building in question was a ministerial building symbolizing Iraq's sovereignty. To permit its inspection would create a precedent for access to other ministry buildings and politically sensitive sites, which was an unacceptable infringement of Iraq's sovereignty.

In an effort to find what he called an honourable solution to the impasse, the Deputy Prime Minister proposed that a team of weapons experts from neutral and non-aligned countries within the Security Council should be allowed to conduct, independently of the Commission and not under the terms of the Council resolutions, a full inspection of the premises and report to the Council. The Executive Chairman, recalling that such a proposal had been firmly rejected by the Council in March, stated that the idea could be considered provided that the inspection took place under the auspices of the relevant Council resolutions and that the experts were approved as competent and thoroughly trained and briefed by the Commission. He then outlined other procedures for determining whether the facility contained anything related to resolution 687(1991), Iraqi reaction to which was inconclusive.

The Executive Chairman's report on the mission,(75) which concluded that it had failed to obtain its objectives, was transmitted to the Council President by the Secretary-General.

Iraq, on 19 July,(76) conveyed to the Council President its proposal to invite a group of experts from members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and possibly from Austria, China and Sweden, to conduct the inspection, outside the Special Commission's mandate, to ascertain that no materials relevant to resolution 687(1991) were in the premises. On 22 July, when the inspection team was withdrawn from its watch of the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation because of attempted physical violence on an inspector, which Iraq failed to prevent, Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement by a Foreign Ministry spokesman(77) contending that the decision to withdraw stemmed rather from the dilemma in which the Commission found itself after Iraq had expressed readiness to accept inspection by a neutral team to prove the falsity of the alleged presence of prohibited materials in the building.

Communications. On 17 December,(78) the Security Council President circulated to Council members a letter of 10 December from the Deputy Executive Chairman of the Special Commission, Pierce S. Corden, providing details of adverse developments that affected the ability of the Special Commission and IAEA to carry out their mandates.

One development concerned Iraq's refusal of an aerial surveillance mission of which the appropriate Iraqi authorities were notified on 2 December. The reason given for the refusal was that part of the designated flight area fell within Baghdad city limits. To the Commission's request for a reconsideration of that position, Iraq on 9 December confirmed the negative decision, stating moreover that such flights would not be permitted "one metre inside Baghdad".

On 6 December, during the sixteenth IAEA inspection, conducted jointly with the Special Commission,(59) the joint inspection team, while seeking admission to a designated site, observed a number of individuals hurriedly leaving the site with documents. In response to protests by the Chief Inspector, Johan Stantesson (Sweden), the Iraqi authorities claimed that those individuals had acted on their own initiative. Certain documents, purportedly those removed, were subsequently produced for the inspectors. Further, the inspectors were denied permission to remove or copy blueprints of pharmaceutical plants found at the site, with the Iraqi authorities demanding that the inspectors first prove the documents' direct relevance to resolution 687(1991). To resolve the conflict, the Chief Inspector inventoried and tagged the blueprints for examination by a Commission expert due to arrive in the course of the inspection.

The Special Commission and IAEA were lodging protests with Iraq's Foreign Ministry regarding deprivation of their rights to aerial surveillance, to secure and review documents without interference and alone to determine the relevance of documentary evidence to their mandate and when to remove or copy documents.

Also circulated was an account of an 8 December meeting between the Chief Inspector and General Amer Muhammad Rashid, Director of the Military Industrial Corporation, which reflected a serious deterioration in Iraq's willingness to fulfil its obligations. The General strongly criticized the Special Commission, in particular its November report to the Council. He stated that regardless of what Iraq provided, the Commission demanded more. Whereas the report of the October ballistic missile inspection⁽⁷³⁾ expressed complete satisfaction that Iraq's ballistic missile programme was totally finished, the Executive Chairman's speech before the Council made no mention of it. The purpose of the Commission's helicopter surveillance, the General asserted, was to gather intelligence information and humiliate the Iraqi people; consequently, he would never allow the helicopter one metre inside Baghdad. Iraq had trusted the Commission but had been deceived; therefore, the game was over. Iraq would provide nothing more and would punish any of its people who provided information to the Commission.

In 14 December,⁽⁷⁹⁾ Iraq wrote to set the record straight by apprising the Council of the true facts of the meeting between the Chief Inspector and General Amer Muhammad Rashid. The letter stated that the General affirmed Iraq's candour and frankness in its dealings with the Commission regarding implementation of resolution 687(1991), despite the malevolent game in progress, behind which were certain influential Council members bent on prolonging the inspections in order to maintain the embargo against Iraq. It was evident, he said, that the inspection teams were reiterating requests for information already provided, as if the inspections had begun again from zero. The General asked why the Executive Chairman's statement before the Council in November made no reference to the positive results of the October inspection that had closed the file on Iraq's ballistic missile programme. When the General indicated that he would punish any Iraqi who undertook to provide the inspection teams with information bearing no relation to resolution 687(1991), his intention was clear: to stop the teams from harassing their Iraqi counterparts with questions and inquiries that bore no relation to that resolution.

The General stressed that he was conveying to the Chief Inspector the Iraqi people's anger and deep distress towards the inspection teams so that the Commission might understand their feelings regarding the embargo. Despite detailed and complete information provided by Iraq, the Commission had persisted in presenting new requests under suspicions raised by parties hostile to Iraq. This had engendered the prevailing belief that the inspection teams served political and intelligence-related goals that had nothing to do with Council resolutions.

In view of Iraq's request for adherence to the agreement reached with the aerial inspection team regarding the boundaries of the City of Baghdad and his feeling that the aerial inspections were intelligence-gathering missions, the General regarded the flight requests unwarranted and provocative and said the sites could be investigated by ground-based inspection teams.

It saddened the General that the reports of his meeting with the Chief Inspector ignored his affirmations of Iraq's desire to cooperate with the Commission, leading to the perception that the aim of those reports was to distort the position of Iraq and do it a disservice. He pointed out that the inspection teams had seen and verified everything relating to resolution 687(1991) and that all weapons and equipment proscribed by that resolution had been destroyed. That could not have been done without Iraq's full assistance and cooperation. As a result, Iraq had expected the Commission to fulfil its own obligations under the resolution by recommending that the economic embargo against Iraq be lifted. Regrettably, nothing of the kind had happened.

Monitoring and verification

The long-term monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with relevant parts of Security Council resolution 687(1991), as set forth in the Special Commission and IAEA plans⁽⁸⁰⁾ approved by resolution 715(1991), continued to be challenged by Iraq in 1992. As a follow-up to the objection it raised before the Council when the plans were approved,⁽⁸¹⁾ Iraq formally restated its position in a letter of 19 November 1991 to the Council President, namely, that it did not recognize any obligations under resolution 715(1991) and attacked the plans, describing them as unlawful and aimed at objectives incompatible with the letter and spirit of the United Nations Charter, the norms of international law and international and humanitarian pacts and covenants.

The Special Commission's plan covered long-term monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with its unconditional obligations not to use, retain, possess, develop, construct or otherwise acquire any weapons or related facilities and items prohibited by the Council under resolution 687(1991), relating to proscribed ballistic missiles, chemical and biological weapons and facilities. The plan provided for inspections in Iraq of both military and civilian sites, facilities, material and other items or activities that could be used in contravention of those obligations, as well as for aerial overflights and submission by Iraq of information to enable the Commission to discharge its mandate.

Under the IAEA plan, Iraq was obliged to provide the Agency with inventories of: all nuclear material in Iraq; all facilities, installations and sites where nuclear activities of any kind, including but not limited to research facilities, laboratory-scale installations and pilot plants suitable for carrying out such activities; all material, equipment and items in Iraq identified in annex 3 of the plan; all isotopes in Iraq used for medical, agricultural or industrial applications; and all facilities, installations and sites provided with any means of supply of electricity exceeding 10 MW (megawatts). Iraq was also to provide information on existing and proposed programmes of nuclear activities for the next five years. Annex 2 of the plan set forth the information requirements of these inventories, including the requirement that the initial information be provided in English within 30 days of the plan's adoption and should cover the period from 1 January 1989, with subsequent complete information to be provided each 15 January and 15 July. Annex 3 contained the list of items to be reported to IAEA.

On 14 July 1992, IAEA informed the Council, through the Secretary-General, that annex 3 to its plan was being revised and that it would so inform Iraq. Its revision was warranted in the light of experience gained in the implementation of resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991), and of an agreement by a group of 27 nuclear-supplier countries that export controls should be applied to a list of nuclear-related dual-use equipment, materials and associated technology. The revised annex, together with an appendix of detailed specifications for machine tools, was transmitted to the Council on 16 July.⁽⁸²⁾

During the year, the Secretary-General, on behalf of the Special Commission, submitted two reports to the Council, as did the IAEA Director General, prepared pursuant to a provision of resolution 715(1991) that both submit reports at least every six months on the implementation of the plans.

Reports of the Secretary-General (April and October). On 10 April 1992,⁽⁸³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his first report on the implementation of the Special Commission's plan during the period 11 October 1991 to 8 April 1992.

He recalled that under the plan, Iraq was to submit, by 10 November 1991, (a) initial information on the specific dual-purpose activities, facilities and items outlined in the plan and its annexes; and (b) a report on the legislative and administrative measures taken to implement resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991), other relevant Council resolutions and the plan. Iraq was further obliged to update the information in (a) each 15 January and 15 July and to report further on (b) when requested by the Special Commission. Remaining firm in its position and arrogating to itself the right to decide what information to provide the Commission, Iraq in late November 1991 submitted what it described as the information required under resolution 687(1991) that fell under the Commission's mandate. The information did little more than repeat what had already been supplied, and no information was given on any legislative and administrative measures taken by Iraq.

Iraq failed to respond to the Commission's request that it provide not only the specified initial information but also the first semi-annual declaration under the plan due on 15 January 1992. The Secretary-General outlined the steps that the Commission took to obtain Iraq's compliance, including its missions to Iraq in January and February, the corresponding Council statement after being apprised of the results of each mission, as well as Iraq's reiteration of its position and alternative proposals (see above, under "Special Commission activities"). He restated what the Commission regarded as the most important outstanding matters, and recounted the Commission's statement to the Council in March,⁽¹⁸⁾ as well as the meeting immediately thereafter between the Iraqi technical team and the Commission and its outcome (see above, under "Cease-fire compliance").

The Commission communicated to Iraq on 20 December 1991 that it could not decide upon Iraq's requests for the reuse of certain dual-purpose items until it received all information and data under the plan for ongoing monitoring and verification and obtained clear and unequivocal acceptance by Iraq of resolution 715(1991) and the plan. Any such items that might be released by the Commission for reuse, after being rendered harmless, needed to be covered by appropriate monitoring and verification procedures envisaged in the plan.

Thus, as of the reporting date, the Secretary-General concluded that, during the period covered, Iraq was not in compliance with resolution 715(1991) and that, without clear acknowledgement of its obligations under that resolution and the plans it approved, as well as its agreement to implement unconditionally those obligations, the Commission would neither legally nor practically be able to initiate and operate its monitoring and verification plan.

A second report, transmitted on 19 October,⁽⁸⁴⁾ provided information on developments between 10 April and 10 October 1992. It recapitulated the Council decisions adopted in the light of Iraq's non-compliance, which further served to define the Council's position in respect of the ongoing monitoring and verification and to provide guidance to the Commission in seeking to carry out its mandate. Those decisions, embodied in statements issued by the Council President on behalf of its members, included the findings that: full implementation of the Council's resolutions on the situation between Iraq and Kuwait was essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region (statement of the heads of State and Government at the Security Council summit on 31 January—see PART ONE, Chapter I); Iraq's failure to acknowledge its obligations under resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) and to provide the necessary declarations constituted a continuing material breach of resolution 687(1991) (19 February);(66) that Iraq's unconditional agreement to implement its obligations under those two resolutions was an essential precondition to any reconsideration of the lifting of sanctions under paragraphs 21 and 22 of resolution 687(1991) (19 February)(66) and was necessary for the initiation and credible practical implementation of ongoing monitoring and verification (28 February);(69) and Iraq had not complied fully and unconditionally with all its obligations, must do so and immediately take appropriate actions.(24)

The Secretary-General described, among other developments, Iraq's demand made before the Council on 11 March that agreement should be reached between it, the Special Commission and IAEA, under Council auspices, to ensure that the measures and methods of ongoing monitoring would not infringe on Iraq's sovereignty, threaten its internal security, lead to interference in its internal affairs or deny it the prospects of scientific, technological and industrial progress in the civilian and military fields. The report noted that Iraq missed the first two reporting requirements; however, on 27 June, it formally submitted what it termed its "report on future compliance verification", assessed by a group of international experts as inadequate for the purpose of commencing ongoing monitoring and verification activities.

The report concluded that the conditions for the initiation in full of the Commission's plan for ongoing monitoring and verification had still not been met. There had been no movement in Iraq's underlying position on the plan and resolution 715(1991) to suggest a change in the Commission's assessment that Iraq was seeking to ensure that implementation of the plan proceeded on the basis of its interpretation of its obligations rather than on the Council's resolutions. Thus, while the Commission had already been performing some essentially monitoring functions, for the time being it remained constrained from going beyond preparatory work into full-scale monitoring and verification until it was clear that Iraq would comply with such monitoring on the Council's terms. The Council directives on this point were unequivocal and must be complied with by both the Commission and Iraq.

IAEA reports (April and October). The first IAEA report, submitted on 11 April 1992,(85) stated that approximately 190 pages of Arabic text including five tables and one appendix relating to Iraq's nuclear capabilities were delivered to the Special Commission in Baghdad on 20 November 1991. Following a meeting with the Iraqi Resident Representative to IAEA (Vienna, 3 December 1991), an additional 52 pages, also in Arabic, were transmitted to IAEA on 11 December "in compliance with Security Council resolution 715(1991)"—the only occasion on which Iraq referred to submitting information under that particular resolution. The texts were described as: table 1—Iraq's obligations and action taken; table 2—Inventory of nuclear material in Iraq, with a notation that uniform tables were being prepared for all information contained in declarations mentioned; table 3—Information on nuclear sites, facilities and installations; table 4—Inventory of radioactive sources of IAEA; table 5—Inventory of radioactive sources in Iraqi installations and establishments other than IAEA; and table 6—actually an appendix to table 3.

Although the information submitted was declared to be that required by the plan, its scope did not conform with the information requirements set forth in annex 2 of the plan in so far as it included only items belonging to IAEA, rather than all relevant items located in Iraq. Nor did the information reflect the situation as of 1 January 1989—a requirement that Iraq later said would be practically impossible to meet. It also refused to identify facilities, installations and sites provided with an electricity supply exceeding 10 MW, except for two IAEA facilities.

In January 1992, another table, also in Arabic and listing "equipment and devices related to the Iraqi nuclear programme in accordance with resolution 687(1991)", was submitted with a letter referring to a number of items whose required inclusion Iraq considered as exceeding its obligations under that resolution.

The report noted that it had been made clear to Iraq that IAEA would not negotiate modifications to the terms of the plans approved by resolution 715(1991); and that, until Iraq provided full and complete details of its nuclear programme, IAEA would be unable to establish a firm basis for effectively carrying out monitoring and verification of the scope and nature approved by the Council.

The second IAEA report, submitted on 30 September,(86) stated that, during the twelfth (May-June) IAEA inspection, Iraq provided a revised declaration of its nuclear programme, referred to as the "full, final and complete report" required by resolution 707(1991), but refused to provide information on the suppliers of its enrichment equipment and technology. Following additional clarifications of the revisions to annex 3 of the plan, IAEA expected Iraq to submit updated inventories.

Two Iraqi requests were received for the import of specified radioisotopes for use in nuclear medicine applications (11 December 1991) and in 44 research projects (26 March 1992). Following receipt of additional information from Iraq, IAEA, with prior clearance from the Committee on sanctions, gave its technical approval to the first request and to 42 of the projects listed in the second. IAEA was of the opinion that the remaining two projects could be linked to proscribed research and development activities.

There were indications that information was being compiled in full compliance with the plan's requirements. In the meantime, IAEA had begun to implement those components of the plan that were not dependent on the availability of additional information, including: periodic checks of IAEA seals applied to nuclear and other materials, equipment and machine tools; visits to sites previously identified as related to Iraq's nuclear weapons programme to verify that no nuclear activity was resumed; analysis of high- and low-altitude imagery of known nuclear sites to identify the purpose of new buildings or to detect activities that might require further on-site inspection; and periodic radiometric surveys of the main water bodies in Iraq for the detection of the presence or resurgence of major nuclear activities.

Kuwaiti property

The Secretary-General, in his report of March 1992⁽¹⁸⁾ updating information on the status of Iraq's compliance with its obligations under the series of Security Council resolutions beginning with resolution 687⁽¹⁹⁹¹⁾, stated that properties belonging to a number of Kuwaiti Government and public institutions had been returned and that the return of additional Kuwaiti property was continuing. Iraq's January report⁽¹⁵⁾ on its compliance activities listed the items it had returned between May and December 1991⁽¹⁷⁾ to the same Kuwaiti entities cited by the Secretary-General.

Kuwait, on 6 November 1992,⁽⁸⁷⁾ transmitted to the Secretary-General a document signed by officials of Iraq and Kuwait, including a representative of each country's Ministry of Health, and by a United Nations representative, attesting to Iraq's return of Kuwaiti property listed in annex A, with the condition of each item described in annex B, on 26 August at Ar'ar, Saudi Arabia. The parties acknowledged that inspection of the returned property was not feasible and that Kuwait reserved the right to submit to the United Nations any observations pertaining to alleged loss, damage or alteration in respect of the items listed.

UN Compensation Commission and Compensation Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established by the Security Council in 1991⁽⁸⁸⁾ for the resolution and payment of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its invasion and occupation of Kuwait, submitted its first annual report to the Council on 21 September 1992.⁽⁸⁹⁾

The report summarized the activities of the Commission and of the Governing Council, its policy-making organ, during the period July 1991 to June 1992. It listed the six sessions held by the Governing Council and annexed a list of the decisions (1 to 11) it adopted, with decisions 3 to 9 reproduced. The report also described the status of the Commission's financing.

The Commission maintained its headquarters at Geneva. Under the direction of the Executive Secretary, its secretariat organized the Governing Council sessions and prepared the relevant documentation. It advised Governments and international organizations on questions related to the preparation and submission of claims.

Activities of the Governing Council. The Governing Council held live sessions in 1992, all at Geneva: the fourth 20-24 January) and resumed fourth (6 March),⁽⁹⁰⁾ fifth (16-20 March),⁽⁹¹⁾ sixth (22-26 June),⁽⁹²⁾ seventh (21-24 September)⁽⁹³⁾ and eighth (14-18 December)⁽⁹⁴⁾ sessions.

As a result of its work during those sessions, the Governing Council adopted a number of decisions on topics as follows: on 24 January and 6 March—determination of ceilings for compensation for mental pain and anguish (decision 8) and propositions and conclusions on compensation for business losses: types of damages and their valuation (decision 9); on 26 June—provisional rules for claims procedure (decision 10) and eligibility for compensation of members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces (decision 11); on 24 September—claims for which established filing deadlines were extended (decision 12) and further measures to avoid multiple recovery of compensation by claimants (decision 13); on 18 November—establishment of the United Nations Compensation Commission Committee on Administrative Matters (decision 14) compensation for business losses resulting from Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait where the trade embargo and related measures were also a cause (decision 15) and awards of interest (decision 16).

As listed in the Commission report, the decisions adopted by the Governing Council in 1991 included: guidelines for the conduct of its work; criteria for expedited processing of urgent claims (decision 1), arrangements for ensuring payment to the Compensation Fund (decisions 2 and 6), personal injury and mental pain and anguish (decision 3), business losses of individuals eligible for consideration under the expedited procedures (decision 4), guidelines relating to paragraph 19 of the criteria for expedited processing of urgent claims (decision 5) and criteria for additional categories of claims (decision 7).

Iraq, on 17 December 1992,(95) stated that the Governing Council, in adopting decision 10, failed to follow the Secretary-General's 1991 recommendations(17) stressing that Iraq be informed of all claims and be given the right to present its views to the panels of commissioners within time-limits fixed by the Governing Council—recommendations which the Security Council directed it to take into account.(88) The Executive Secretary's report of 30 October 1992, although circulated to Iraq, did not provide the necessary details on which to base its views: it contained numbers without details or explanation, or even the claimants' names and nationalities. Decision 10 thus denied Iraq of its legal and logical right, despite the fact that Iraq was the only party of crucial importance in the matter of compensation payment.

Iraq called on the Security Council to correct the situation and ensure compliance with its relevant instructions.

Arms and related sanctions

Reports of the Committee on sanctions. The Committee established by Security Council resolution 661(1990)(7) (Committee on sanctions) issued four reports—one every 90 days—during 1992, pursuant to the responsibilities entrusted to it under the guidelines approved by the Council(96) for monitoring the prohibitions against the sale or supply of arms to Iraq and related sanctions. They were transmitted to the Council President on 12 March,(97) 10 June,(98) 8 September(99) and 4 December.(100)

Each report stated that, during the period under review, the Committee had received no information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals. It had not been consulted by States or international organizations on either the sale or supply of items to Iraq that might fall within the categories of proscribed items or of dual- or multiple-use items, nor had any allegations of violations in this regard been reported to it. No international organization had reported any relevant information that might have come to its attention.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following each consultation held by the Security Council on 27 March,(101) 27 July(102) and 24 November(103) 1992, on the March, June and September reports of the Committee on sanctions, respectively, the Council President issued a statement to the effect that informal consultations were held pursuant to paragraphs 21 and 28 of resolution 687(1991) and paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991);(96) that, after hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President concluded that there still was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regimes established in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 21 of that resolution; in paragraphs 22, 23, 24 and 25 of resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 28 of that resolution; and in paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991).

The March report of the Committee on sanctions indicated that the same statement was issued following the Council's consideration of the December 1991 report.(104)

Repatriation of Kuwaitis and third-country nationals

Further to the information provided by Iraq to the Security Council on 23 January 1992(15) on the repatriation of Kuwaitis and third-country nationals who had remained unaccounted for in Iraq since the 1991 military operations in the Gulf, Iraq, on 28 February,(105) submitted updated information according to which it had repatriated, in cooperation with ICRC, 6,520 Kuwaiti and other nationals since 4 March 1991. Some 3,594 Kuwaitis currently living free in Iraq were awaiting Kuwait's agreement to their repatriation. So far, Kuwait had agreed to repatriate only 460 of them. Thus, despite Iraq's cooperation, Kuwait had refused to receive its nationals. An examination of the Kuwaiti list of 2,242 persons believed to be in Iraq revealed that 233 had already been repatriated under ICRC supervision and 59 were among those awaiting repatriation approval from Kuwait. To make the international community aware of the developments in the matter and at the request of Iraq, the League of Arab States sent a team to Iraq to conduct on-site investigations to ascertain the situation of Kuwaitis in Iraq.

As a result of a 1991 meeting between Iraq and the coalition States held under ICRC auspices (Geneva, 16 and 17 October), the participants signed a protocol by which Iraq was to publish the names of the missing in the Iraqi media, with a request that any information on those persons be conveyed to ICRC, and to repeat publication as necessary. Accordingly, Iraq informed ICRC of its agreement to: disseminate in one Iraqi newspaper the names of missing Kuwaitis and Saudis and seek information on their fate; provide ICRC with lists of detention sites and prisons so that it could visit each of them once; and have the visits coordinated with the competent Iraqi agencies and Foreign Ministry. Based on the principle of reciprocity, Iraq asked that the same procedures be instituted by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia in the search for missing Iraqis. Iraq said that, in view of the negative reply from the coalition States, it alternatively proposed that ICRC draw up a plan to be agreed upon between it and the coalition States concerning methods and procedures for tracing Iraqi, Kuwaiti, Saudi and other nationals on the basis of the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.

To dispel the widespread belief engendered by a media campaign that Iraq continued to hold large numbers of Kuwaitis in detention, Iraq communicated its position to ICRC thus: its competent authorities were prepared to publish the names of missing Kuwaitis, Saudis and others in Iraqi newspapers; to arrange visits by ICRC to detention sites and prisons; and to reach agreement with the ICRC head at Baghdad regarding these measures. Having done so, Iraq stated that it had met its obligations as stipulated in paragraphs 30 and 31 of resolution 687(1991).

On 6 March,(106) the third countries concerned—France, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States—stated that Iraq's letter of 28 February was yet another attempt to delay fulfilling its commitments under the Geneva Conventions and the relevant Council resolutions. It had neither published any names in any of its media nor lived up to its commitment made at Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, on 7 March 1991 to grant ICRC the facilities necessary to enable it to gather information to establish the whereabouts of missing persons. It had not effectively responded to individual inquiry files submitted by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia in October 1991, having merely returned them on 18 February 1992 without information as to specific measures taken to trace the cases. Nor had it responded to ICRC inquiries outlined in the Secretary-General's 25 January report.(5) Its unilateral assumption that it had met its obligations by submitting a letter of intent only underlined Iraq's disdain towards this humanitarian issue.

Regarding that assumption, Iraq, on 19 March,(107) explained that it meant that it had given effect to the practical measures required by paragraphs 30 and 31 of resolution 687(1991) and that that was to be considered an achieved stage in its efforts to close the file on the matter, in cooperation with the United Nations, ICRC and the other parties concerned. Iraq stated that: on 10 and 17 March, it published the names of missing Kuwaitis in Al-Thawrah, Al-Jumhuriyah and Al-Iraq and would repeat their publication; on 12 March, it notified ICRC that it would be allowed to conduct open and unrestricted visits to all detention places; it returned the 13 inquiry files to ICRC with an official reply to every question entered; and, except for one case of death of a Kuwaiti in detention, of which ICRC had been informed, no other cases of death had been reported by the competent Iraqi authorities.

Humanitarian assistance

Iraq

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council met on 19 March 1992 in connection with its resolutions 706(1991)(9) and 712(1991),(12) setting up a scheme and appropriate machinery whereby Iraq was authorized to sell petroleum and petroleum products, to finance, inter alia, the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies to meet Iraq's urgent humanitarian needs.

Following consultations among Council members, the President was authorized to make the following statement,(108) on behalf of the Council:

"The Security Council welcomes the announcement of the Iraqi authorities that they will resume discussions with the United Nations Secretariat concerning implementation of the scheme of sales of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products, as provided for in Security Council resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991), and for the use of the proceeds of such sales in accordance with the Secretary-General's report of 4 September 1991 (S/23006) and the above-mentioned resolutions.

"The Council also welcomes the Secretary-General's intention that these discussions be organized without delay.

"The Council is prepared to authorize the regime for the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products on the above basis for a like period of time as that specified in these resolutions as soon as the Secretary-General indicates that the Iraqi authorities are prepared to proceed on a date certain with the export of petroleum and petroleum products in accordance with the scheme.

"The members of the Council are prepared at an appropriate time to consider possible further extensions of time based upon Iraq's cooperation with the above and the Council's ongoing assessment of the needs and requirements in accordance with paragraph 1 (d) of Security Council resolution 706(1991)."

Communication. On 13 July 1992,(109) Iraq stated that the idea of meeting Iraq's humanitarian needs, already on scale so modest as to fall short of what was required to ensure a minimum of humanity to its people, evolved into two resolutions—706(1991) and 712(1991)—containing many political conditions and restrictions that sought to strip Iraq of its sovereignty. The issue had developed into controversy with the result that, in mid-1992, the essential needs of the Iraqi people for the second half of the previous year had yet to be met. Negotiations with the United Nations Secretariat between January and June had led Iraq to conclude that the purpose of the formula for meeting those needs was to impair Iraq's independence and interfere in its internal affairs.

The most recent formula resulting from three rounds of negotiations contained numerous restrictions and complexities exposing the purchase, shipment and distribution of food and medicine to possible hindrances and stoppage, to say nothing of the consequent high prices that would reduce the purchasing power of the already paltry sum that would be made available to Iraq through such outlandish procedure.

Iraq asserted that the sound and workable course was for the Security Council to allow Iraq to export its petroleum in the regular manner that it had done before the events of August 1990 so that its people might have their humanitarian due.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council convened on 2 October 1992 in accordance with an understanding reached in prior consultations and adopted resolution 778(1992).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions and in particular resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991),

Taking note of the letter of 15 July 1992 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council on Iraq's compliance with the obligations placed on it by resolution 687(1991) and subsequent resolutions,

Condemning Iraq's continued failure to comply with its obligations under relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming its concern about the nutritional and health situation of the Iraqi civilian population, and the risk of a further deterioration of this situation, and recalling in this regard its resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991), which provide a mechanism for providing humanitarian relief to the Iraqi population, and resolution 688(1991), which provides a basis for humanitarian relief efforts in Iraq,

Having regard to the fact that the period of six months referred to in resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) expired on 18 March 1992,

Deploring Iraq's refusal to cooperate in the implementation of resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991), which puts its civilian population at risk, and which results in the failure by Iraq to meet its obligations under relevant Security Council resolutions,

Recalling that the escrow account provided for in resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) will consist of Iraqi funds administered by the Secretary-General which will be used to pay contributions to the Compensation Fund, the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991), the full costs incurred by the United Nations in facilitating the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq, half the costs of the Boundary Commission, and the cost to the United Nations of implementing resolution 706(1991) and of other necessary humanitarian activities in Iraq,

Recalling that Iraq, as stated in paragraph 16 of resolution 687(1991), is liable for all direct damages resulting from its invasion and occupation of Kuwait, without prejudice to its debts and obligations arising prior to 2 August 1990, which will be addressed through the normal mechanisms,

Recalling its decision in resolution 692(1991) that the requirement for Iraqi contributions to the Compensation Fund applies to certain Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products exported from Iraq before 2 April

1991, as well as to all Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products exported from Iraq after 2 April 1991,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that all States in which there are funds of the Government of Iraq, or its State bodies, corporations, or agencies, that represent the proceeds of sale of Iraqi petroleum or petroleum products, paid for by or on behalf of the purchaser on or after 6 August 1990, shall cause the transfer of those funds (or equivalent amounts) as soon as possible to the escrow account provided for in resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991); provided that this paragraph shall not require any State to cause the transfer of such funds in excess of 200 million dollars or to cause the transfer of more than fifty per cent of the total funds transferred or contributed pursuant to paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this resolution; and further provided that States may exclude from the operation of this paragraph any funds which have already been released to a claimant or supplier prior to the adoption of this resolution, or any other funds subject to or required to satisfy the rights of third parties, at the time of the adoption of this resolution;

2. Decides that all States in which there are petroleum or petroleum products owned by the Government of Iraq, or its State bodies, corporations, or agencies, shall take all feasible steps to purchase or arrange for the sale of such petroleum or petroleum products at fair market value, and thereupon to transfer the proceeds as soon as possible to the escrow account provided for in resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991);

3. Urges all States to contribute funds from other sources to the escrow account as soon as possible;

4. Decides that all States shall provide the Secretary-General with any information needed for the effective implementation of this resolution and that they shall take the necessary measures to ensure that banks and other bodies and persons provide all relevant information necessary to identify the funds referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 above and details of any transactions relating thereto, or the said petroleum or petroleum products, with a view to such information being utilized by all States and by the Secretary-General in the effective implementation of this resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

- (a) To ascertain the whereabouts and amounts of the said petroleum and petroleum products and the proceeds of sale referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this resolution, drawing on the work already done under the auspices of the Compensation Commission, and report the results to the Security Council as soon as possible;

- (b) To ascertain the costs of United Nations activities concerning the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, the provision of humanitarian relief in Iraq, and the other United Nations operations specified in paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 706(1991); and

- (c) To take the following actions:

- (i) Transfer to the Compensation Fund, from the funds referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this resolution, the percentage referred to in paragraph 10 of this resolution; and

- (ii) Use of the remainder of funds referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this resolution for the costs of United Nations activities concerning the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, the provision of humanitarian relief in Iraq, and the other United Nations operations specified in paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 706(1991), taking into account any preference expressed by States transferring or contributing funds as to the allocation of such funds among these purposes;

6. Decides that for so long as oil exports take place pursuant to the system provided in resolutions 706(1991) and 732(1991) or to the eventual lifting of sanctions pursuant to paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991), implementation of paragraphs 1 to 5 of this resolution shall be suspended and all proceeds of those oil exports shall immediately be transferred by the Secretary-General in the currency in which the transfer to the escrow account had been made, to the accounts or States from which funds had been provided under paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this resolution, to the extent required to replace in full the amounts so provided (together with applicable interest); and that, if necessary for this purpose, any other funds remaining in the escrow account shall similarly be transferred to those accounts or States; provided, however, that the Secretary-General may retain and use any funds urgently needed for the purposes specified in paragraph 5 (c) (ii) of this resolution;

7. Decides that the operation of this resolution shall have no effect on rights, debts and claims existing with respect to funds prior to their transfer to the escrow account; and that the accounts from which such funds were transferred shall be kept open for retransfer of the funds in question;

8. Reaffirms that the escrow account referred to in this resolution, like the Compensation Fund, enjoys the privileges and immunities of the United Nations, including immunity from legal proceedings, or any forms of attachment, garnishment or execution; and that no claim shall lie at the instance of any person or body in connection with any action taken in compliance with or implementation of this resolution;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to repay, from any available funds in the escrow account, any sum transferred under this resolution to the account or State from which it was transferred, if the transfer is found at any time by him not to have been of funds subject to this resolution; a request for such a finding could be made by the State from which the funds were transferred;

10. Confirms that the percentage of the value of exports of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq for payment to the Compensation Fund shall, for the purpose of this resolution and exports of petroleum or petroleum products subject to paragraph 6 of resolution 692(1991), be the same as the percentage decided by the Security Council in paragraph 2 of resolution 705(1991), until such time as the Governing Council of the Compensation Fund may decide otherwise;

11. Decides that no further Iraqi assets shall be released for purposes set forth in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991) except to the sub-account of the escrow account, established pursuant to paragraph 3 of resolution 712(1991), or directly to the United Nations for humanitarian activities in Iraq;

12. Decides that, for the purposes of this resolution and other relevant resolutions, the term "petroleum products" does not include petrochemical derivatives;

13. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully in the implementation of this resolution;

14. Decides to remain seized of this matter.

Security Council resolution 778(1992)

2 October 1992

Meeting 3117

14-0-1

7-nation draft (S/24605).

Sponsors: Belgium, France, Hungary, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Cape Verde, Ecuador, France, Hungary, India, Japan, Morocco, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

Explaining its abstention, China stated that the issue of payments to the United Nations Compensation Fund, the costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991), the costs incurred in the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq, half the costs of the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission and the financing of the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people should be resolved by making full use of the machinery established by resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991). China thus believed it unnecessary to resort to so extraordinary a measure as the seizure of Iraq's frozen assets overseas.

During the remainder of the year, some 40 States wrote to the Secretary-General in connection with paragraphs 1 and 2 of the resolution. Of these, 34 stated that, under their jurisdiction, there were no petroleum or petroleum products or funds of the Government of Iraq, or of its State bodies, corporations, or agencies that represented the proceeds of sale of Iraqi petroleum or petroleum products subject to the provisions of the resolution.

Inter-agency humanitarian programme

In view of the expiry at the end of 1991 of the Memorandum of Understanding that provided the basic framework for the United Nations humanitarian presence and action in Iraq,(110) the Executive Delegate for the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme for Iraq, Kuwait and the Iraq/Turkey and Iraq/Iran border areas, Sadruddin Aga Khan, reached agreement with Iraq's Foreign Minister, on 24 November 1991,(18) to extend the Memorandum for a further six-month period up to the end of June 1992, including the continued deployment in Iraq of the United Nations Guards Contingent for the same period.

As he informed the Security Council in November (see above, under "Cease-fire compliance"), the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, acting on behalf of the Secretary-General, signed in New York on 22 October a new Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and Iraq, covering a six-month period ending 31 March 1993. Based on that Memorandum, a plan of action was finalized covering all regions of the country, with emphasis on assistance to the northern provinces.

In the period between the end of the extended Memorandum and the signing of the new 1992 Memorandum, assistance delivery to the northern governorates (Dohuk, Erbil and Suleimaniyah) ground to a halt due to lack of fuel, travel and visa restrictions, security problems, and an unacceptable wave of harassment of United Nations personnel.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following consultations held with members of the Security Council on 17 July 1992, the President made the following statement⁽¹¹¹⁾ on behalf of the Council, in connection with its consideration of the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The Security Council deeply deplores the murder of a member of the United Nations Guards Contingent in Iraq on 16 July 1992 in the Governorate of Dohuk. It supports the Secretary-General's decision to order an immediate and thorough investigation of this appalling crime. Members of the Council wish to express their sincere condolences to the family of the victim, Mr. Ravuama Dakia, and to the Government of Fiji.

"The Security Council wishes to register its profound concern at the deteriorating security conditions affecting the safety and well-being of United Nations personnel in Iraq. The Council demands that attacks perpetrated against the United Nations Guards Contingent and other humanitarian personnel deployed in Iraq cease immediately and that maximum cooperation be extended by the authorities in the investigation of this crime, as well as in the protection of United Nations personnel."

Iraq, in a letter to the Secretary-General of 17 July 1992,⁽¹¹²⁾ stated that the regrettable incident of 16 July occurred where there was no Government presence. The Governorate of Dohuk was controlled by Kurdish irregulars supported by the United States and its allies. The heinous incident, for which the Government of Iraq bore no responsibility, was a consequence of interference by the United States and its allies in Iraq's internal affairs.

Commenting on a statement by the Spokesman for the Secretary-General issued on 9 July concerning the series of incidents affecting the safety of personnel assigned to the United Nations Humanitarian Programme, Iraq, on the same date,⁽¹¹³⁾ observed that the statement avoided identifying the locations of the incidents because they were occurring in the northern governorates, where Government administration had been withdrawn and were thus wide open to brigands, thieves and irresponsible elements supported and encouraged by the United States and its allies.

Communication from the Secretary-General. On 24 August 1992,⁽¹¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President of the progress of United Nations efforts to obtain from Iraq an extension or renewal of the Memorandum of Understanding governing the Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme in Iraq. The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, assisted by the Coordinator and senior officials from United Nations entities and agencies participating in the Programme—UNHCR, UNICEF, WFP and WHO—held five rounds of talks with Iraq's Foreign Minister and other officials (Baghdad, 17-21 August), including a meeting with the Deputy Prime Minister. Further meetings were held at the technical level.

Iraq took the position that circumstances had changed since the first Memorandum so that the Programme should be based on transitional arrangements leading from an emergency operation to regular cooperation with United Nations agencies. Therefore, the exceptional measures previously provided for would no longer apply. United Nations sub-offices would no longer be permitted, although access on a functional basis would be granted for project implementation; NGO participation would only be allowed under a separate agreement between each NGO and the Government of Iraq; the Guards Contingent would be limited to a maximum strength of 150, to be deployed only in the three northern Governorates, with the Contingent Chief and four or five assistants to be located in Baghdad; a separate radio communications system for the Programme would no longer be permitted; and the new Memorandum would no longer provide for a local-currency contribution by the Government. The period covered could not go beyond 31 December 1992. Iraq also urged that every effort be made to exempt humanitarian requirements from the ongoing sanctions in view of the suffering they inflicted on the civilian population.

The United Nations maintained that sub-offices or field stations were essential for effective implementation of the Programme throughout Iraq; NGO participation was an important operational requirement, but separate individual agreements could be considered subject to the successful adoption of a Memorandum; a ceiling of 500 Guards was necessary to ensure the protection of Programme personnel; a radio communications system was an essential component of all United Nations emergency humanitarian operations; and, in the absence of a special currency exchange rate for humanitarian operations, a Government contribution in local currency was necessary. In view of the time lost since the expiration of the extended Memorandum and the importance of assistance during the winter months, the duration of the new Memorandum should extend to 31 March 1993.

The United Nations agreed to take into consideration and reflect in an eventual Memorandum dum Iraq's request for joint preparation of the action plan and for its implementation under a Coordination Committee consisting of Programme and Iraqi Government representatives, as well as of Iraq's requirement for separate agreements with NGOs. Iraq, however, was not prepared to modify its position on the question of sub-offices and on the deployment of Guards.

Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister, expressing concern at the impending imposition of an exclusion zone for Iraqi aircraft below the 32nd parallel (see below), explicitly linked that eventuality to the continued presence of the Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme in the south of the country and of the maintenance of sub-offices under a renewed agreement. Because of possible demonstrations in the Basrah area if the no-fly zone was put into effect, the remaining humanitarian personnel in the south—eight Guards and a UNICEF staff member—were recalled to Baghdad at the Deputy Prime Minister's behest.

As a result of representations by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs regarding the unacceptable wave of harassment of United Nations staff based in Baghdad, the Foreign Minister gave his assurance that every effort would be made to prevent further harassment.

While no agreement was reached, the Foreign Minister stated that there would shortly be another opportunity to agree on a formula for a new Memorandum. In the meantime, he gave his Government's assurance that a de facto Memorandum existed, that visas and travel permits would be renewed for staff currently assigned to Iraq, although none would be granted for additional staff, and that the 120 Guards could remain, but no replacements or additional deployment would be permitted. Offices outside Baghdad and the northern Governorates should be closed forthwith and NGO presence terminated for the time being.

The Secretary-General stated that, in the absence of a United Nations presence in the south, a reliable assessment of conditions prevailing in that region would not be possible. Since the Programme's implementation had been brought to a halt in the northern governorates owing to lack of fuel supply, the population there would be placed at serious risk unless adequate food and fuel were prepositioned by November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 2 September 1992 to consider the Secretary-General's communication. After consultations among Council members, the President was authorized to make the following statement(115) on behalf of the Council:

"The Security Council is deeply concerned at the current situation of the Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme in Iraq, as outlined in the Secretary-General's letter of 24 August 1992 to the President of the Council (S/24509), including its reference to Iraq's failure to renew its Memorandum of Understanding with the United Nations.

"The Security Council recalls the statement of 17 July 1992 (S/24309), in which the Council expressed its profound concern at the deteriorating conditions affecting the safety and well-being of United Nations personnel in Iraq. The Council is particularly disturbed by Iraq's continuing failure to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel and the personnel of non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

"The Security Council expresses its concern regarding the conduct and statements of Iraq on the Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme which are inconsistent with the previous Security Council resolutions that demand that Iraq cooperate with the international humanitarian organizations.

"The Security Council affirms that the critical humanitarian needs of vulnerable groups in Iraq require the speedy conclusion of arrangements that would ensure the continuation of the Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme. In this respect, the Council considers unrestricted access throughout the country and the assurance of adequate security measures as essential prerequisites for the effective implementation of the Programme. To this end, the Council fully endorses the Secretary-General's insistence upon appropriate field offices for participating United Nations agencies and programmes and the continuing deployment of the United Nations Guards. The Council strongly supports the Secretary-General's continuing efforts to sustain a United Nations and NGO humanitarian presence throughout Iraq, and urges him to continue to use all resources at his disposal to help all those in need in Iraq. The Council urges Iraq in the strongest possible terms to cooperate with the United Nations."

Meeting number. SC 3112.

Iraq, on 3 November,(116) drew attention to what it described as a serious development in connection with the use of the humanitarian assistance programme as a pretext to interfere in Iraq's internal affairs and undermine its security and stability. As reported by the Turkish press, a shipment of military materiel was discovered on board a French C-160 aircraft refueling at Diyarbakir military airfield. The report was corroborated by a spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Turkey who said that a United Kingdom-based NGO licensed by the European Council and cleared by the Committee on sanctions was behind the affair. Iraq called the incident a violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the rules governing the Committee's work.

Kurds and other minority populations

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In the context of Security Council resolution 688(1991),(23) part I of an interim report on human rights violations in Iraq was transmitted to the Council on 3 August 1992.(117) The preliminary text of the interim report had been transmitted earlier, on 5 March.(118) Prepared by Max van der Stoep (Netherlands), the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq, part I of the report was exclusively concerned with the situation in the southern marshes and elaborated on a previously recommended system of human rights monitoring in Iraq as part of an exceptional response to an exceptional situation.

The Special Rapporteur drew attention to reliable and disconcerting information that, beginning in July, the Iraqi military had launched a series of attacks against the civilian population in the southern marshes bordering Iran, which appeared to demonstrate a preconceived policy. These included indiscriminate bombardments of civilian settlements, disappearances, forced relocation of the Marsh Arabs who were also Shi'a Muslims, and a de facto internal economic blockade. Perhaps the enormous water diversion programme known as the Third River Project posed the greatest threat to the inhabitants. The creation of another central waterway in the region, ostensibly to irrigate salted flats, would result in the draining of the marsh area. This would threaten the immediate livelihood of its inhabitants, which was fishing, and the survival of their ancient culture.

In the Special Rapporteur's opinion, regardless of Iraq's reply to his appeal of 29 July that it cease all activities that might constitute violations of its obligations under international law, the water diversion project ought to be stopped and there was an urgent need to send a team of human rights monitors to the area to serve as an independent source of reliable information. He described the recommended system of human rights monitoring, including the composition of the teams, their duties and mode of operation, organizational setup, logistical and financial requirements and the role of the Government of Iraq.

Iraq wrote on 6 August(119) to express surprise at the Special Rapporteur's transmittal of his interim report and letter to the Security Council President, rather than to the General Assembly, in line with established procedure, as well as at the transmittal even of the preliminary text. Iraq called into question the impartiality and objectivity of the Rapporteur and accused him of participating in the propaganda campaign against Iraq by leaking the report to the press and holding seminars and television and newspaper interviews directed against the country with which he was supposed to be cooperating.

Stating that the report was full of allegations and fallacies, Iraq explained in detail the purpose of the Third River project on which the Rapporteur's report focused. It traced the origins of the project to 1952 as part of a major programme to divert high-salinity drainage water from agricultural enterprises in central and southern Iraq into one main drain and channel it into the Arabian Gulf without intermixture with any of the country's rivers. Its aim was to transform land rendered unfit for cultivation by salt accumulation, particularly in the southern areas, into agriculturally productive land. The project, which had gone through many phases, was resumed after the 1991 military operations in the Persian Gulf.

The paucity of water in the marshlands was caused by the reduction of water in the Euphrates from the Kayban and Karakaya dams in Turkey and the Tabqah dam in the Syrian Arab Republic, and by a project, begun in 1990, to fill the reservoir of Turkey's Ataturk dam.

Iraq peremptorily rejected the recommended system of human rights monitoring as interference in its internal affairs.

In addition, Iraq, on 28 August,(120) drew attention to what it called a dangerous decision by France, the United Kingdom and the United States to prevent Iraqi aircraft from flying in southern Iraq below the 32nd parallel. It said that the true objective of that decision, taken under the pretext of protecting the Shiite population of the marshlands, was to divide the country on an ethnic and confessional basis in order to control it, plunder its wealth and enslave its people. Iraq called on the Secretary-General to assume his responsibilities and prevent this new act of aggression against Iraq.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At the urgent request of Belgium,(121) France,(122) the United Kingdom,(123) and the United States,(124) the Security Council met on 11 August to consider the continuing repression of the civilian population in several parts of Iraq. Those States recalled that, by resolution 688(1991), the Council decided to remain seized of the matter.

Iraq, at its request, was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. At the request of the same States that asked for the meeting, the Council invited Max van der Stoep, the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in Iraq, to participate in his personal capacity under rule 39.^b China, India and Zimbabwe entered reservations about his invitation on the grounds that human rights matters should be more appropriately discussed by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council or the General Assembly.

In addition, the Council had before it a 10 August letter(125) from Iran stating that the campaign of total annihilation of large segments of the Iraqi population—in the recent past mostly against the Shiite inhabitants of the southern marshlands—could lead to conditions threatening regional and international peace and security.

Max van der Stoep stated that information from Iraq's Ministry of Health suggested that the health of the Iraqi population was rapidly deteriorating. The incidence of respiratory diseases was seven to eight times higher than in the past and deaths from dysentery live to six times higher. Infant mortality had risen sharply. Some 1,270 cholera cases required treatment and dozens had died. The Government food-rationing programme provided only 1,400 calories per person daily and food prices in the open market were too high for most of the population. The situation underlined the need for a quick breakthrough in the negotiations for a "food-for-oil" formula based on resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991).

Against that background, Max van der Stoep expressed alarm that the humanitarian programme in Iraq was inexorably grinding to a halt due to the Government's refusal to issue visas to incoming staff or renew visas of those remaining, who were moreover subjected to harassment. Travel and fuel supply restrictions made delivery of aid difficult. He cited the Government's economic blockade of the Kurds in the northern governorates and of the Shiites in the southern marshes, the military attacks on both the north and the south, the forced relocation of the marsh inhabitants, and the threat to their fishing areas and to the survival of their ancient culture by the causeways that were under construction. He concluded that the Government was in the process of undertaking a major operation to subdue the indigenous population of the marshes, recalling in this connection the "Anfal operations" in the north against the Kurds in the 1980s to underscore how ruthless such an operation could be.

Given the gravity of those allegations, Iraq asked why the Special Rapporteur did not verify his information by a country survey or with the Government, to satisfy himself and convince others of his objectivity, seriousness and independence. Iraq repeated the contents of its 6 August letter on the Rapporteur's report(119) and hoped for a correction of its data, including that on the Third River Project. It clarified that Government forces occasionally raided the marshes, not for the reasons alleged but to ferret out deserters, murderers, smugglers and infiltrators hiding within the safety of the tall reeds. Iraq's appearance before the Council, however, was to state that the report, regardless of its merits or demerits, was an illegal attempt to help accomplish an illegal aim: to dismember Iraq by calling for permanent human rights observers and eventually to establish another so-called safe haven in the south.

Other assistance

Emergency relief was provided under the auspices of the United Nations Development Programme for the group of countries affected by the Iraq-Kuwait situation, and international cooperation attempted to mitigate the environmental consequences on Kuwait and other neighbouring countries resulting from the hostilities in the Persian Gulf (see PART THREE, Chapters III and VIII).

Chapter IV

Europe

The United Nations intensified its efforts in 1992 to resolve the armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia. The situation—triggered in 1991 by the breakaway of four of the six republics that constituted Yugoslavia—grew progressively complex and more violent during the year.

At the beginning of 1992, the United Nations became actively involved in the crisis between Croatia and the truncated Yugoslavia (comprising the republics of Serbia and Montenegro) by deploying a peace-keeping mission to Croatia. By April, the ethnic conflicts between Bosnian Serbs, Muslims and Croats grew increasingly violent, causing massive civilian deaths and dislocations.

United Nations efforts to contain the crisis and alleviate the suffering included the military protection of humanitarian convoys, as well as the control and supervision of Sarajevo's airport to allow for the airlift of humanitarian assistance. These activities were carried out in close cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which supervised the relief assistance.

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy, Cyrus R. Vance, worked in close coordination with the European Community to co-sponsor a settlement plan for the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In the face of the escalating violence, the Security Council adopted 22 resolutions directly related to the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, while the General Assembly adopted four resolutions on the matter. The Council in December authorized the establishment of a small presence of the United Nations Protection Force in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to monitor developments in the border areas, which could undermine confidence and stability in Macedonia and threaten its territory.

With regard to the events in the former USSR, the General Assembly called for withdrawal of all foreign military forces from the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. The Secretary-General sent United Nations good-offices and other missions to the Commonwealth of Independent States and other States of the former USSR experiencing internal strife and conflict. He also dispatched a fact-finding mission to help reach a peaceful settlement to the deteriorating situation in and around Nagorno-Karabakh, an enclave in Azerbaijan marked by over four years of fighting between its Armenian and Azerbaijani inhabitants.

Yugoslavia situation

By January 1992, the United Nations had taken several actions in its efforts to settle the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, resulting from the unilateral declarations of independence in 1991 of four—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia and Slovenia—of six of its constituent republics.

Violence erupted over the issues of border delineations between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, on the one side, and Serbia, on the other. Large portions of the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA), under the command of the truncated Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), supported the Serb factions in the two former republics.

By resolution 743(1992) of 21 February, the Security Council established, under its authority and for an initial period of 12 months, a United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), in accordance with a 15 February report of the Secretary-General and a December 1991 United Nations peace-keeping plan. In successive resolutions, the Council added to the responsibilities of UNPROFOR; as a result, UNPROFOR grew considerably throughout the year, in numbers and in the range and variety of its tasks.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Slovenia were admitted to United Nations membership in May 1992 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). Based on a recommendation of the Security Council, the General Assembly ruled that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, that it should apply for membership and should not participate in the Assembly's work.

The United Nations and the European Community (EC), through their appointed envoys, continued mediation efforts to bring about dialogue and resolution of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The EC-sponsored talks for future constitutional arrangements in Bosnia and Herzegovina were suspended on 27 May 1992, when representatives of the Muslim SDA Party withdrew in protest against the continuing shelling of Sarajevo by Bosnian Serb forces. In subsequent statements, President Izetbegovic and members of the presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina expressed inability to undertake further negotiations with representatives of the Serbian SDS Party led by Radovan Karadzic and reaffirmed that they could resume participation in the talks only if the basis for discussions was changed.

International Conference on Yugoslavia. The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia combined the efforts of the United Nations and EC, as well as other international organizations such as the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). Building on the work already done by the EC Conference on Yugoslavia, it was organized to remain in existence until a final settlement of the problems of the former Yugoslavia was reached. Its permanent Co-Chairmen were the head of State or Government of the presidency of EC and the United Nations Secretary-General.

Meeting in London from 26 to 28 August, the Conference adopted a statement of principles for a negotiated settlement. Parties to the conflict represented at the London Conference were Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Slovenia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Other countries present included Albania, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Romania, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Turkey and the United States. Also represented were CSCE, OIC and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

The Conference established a Steering Committee to manage its operational work. It was co-chaired by a representative of the Secretary-General, Cyrus R. Vance (United States), and of the presidency of EC, Lord Owen (United Kingdom). The Committee's membership included representatives of a troika of EC, a troika of CSCE, the live permanent members of the Security Council, an OIC representative, two representatives from neighbouring States, and Lord Carrington (United Kingdom), Chairman of the EC Conference on Yugoslavia.

Mr. Vance and Lord Owen were assisted by the Chairmen of the Conference's six working groups: on Bosnia and Herzegovina; on humanitarian issues; on ethnic and national communities and minorities; on succession issues; on economic issues; and on confidence and security-building and verification measures. The groups met in continuous session at the United Nations Office at Geneva. In addition to their own activities, the Co-Chairmen directed the working groups and prepared the basis for a general settlement and associated measures. The Conference also had an Arbitration Commission and a small secretariat.

In 1992, the Steering Committee held three meetings, all at Geneva: on 3 September, 27 October and 16 December. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on the activities of the Conference on 11 November⁽¹⁾ and 24 December.⁽²⁾

The Co-Chairmen closely monitored the humanitarian situation in the former Yugoslavia and issued several appeals for protection of and assistance to the victims of the conflict, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina. As a result of their efforts, humanitarian flights to Sarajevo, which were suspended following the shooting down of an Italian aircraft on 3 September, were resumed on 3 October.

The Co-Chairmen engaged in extensive diplomatic activities, keeping steady contact with the principal leaders in the former Yugoslavia, as well as leaders of the neighbouring countries, in order to promote peace and a resolution of humanitarian problems, priority being the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. They contacted Governments in a position to assist the peace process and brought together at Geneva Presidents Cosic (Federal Republic of Yugoslavia) and Tudjman (Croatia) on the one hand, and Presidents Cosic and Izetbegovic (Bosnia and Herzegovina) on the other. In the light of the 1991 conflict between Croats and Serbs, they also sought to deal with the central relationship between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Close attention was further given to the potentially explosive situations in the Serbian province of Kosovo and in Macedonia.

With regard to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the efforts of the Co-Chairmen were directed simultaneously at two basic objectives: a cessation of hostilities and the preparation of options for the republic's constitutional future. In order to help improve relations between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Croatia, the Co-Chairmen organized two sets of meetings at Geneva between Presidents Cosic and Tudjman on 30 September and 20 October. Following each meeting, the two Presidents signed joint declarations containing statements of principle and arrangements for practical cooperation. Results of that process included the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula and the establishment of liaison offices at Belgrade and Zagreb.

Croatia

Under the terms of the original United Nations peace-keeping plan, UNPROFOR was intended to be an interim arrangement to create conditions of peace and security required for the negotiation of an overall settlement of the crisis in the former Yugoslavia. To that end, it was deployed in three United Nations protected areas (UNPAs) in Croatia—Eastern Slavonia, Western Slavonia and Krajina—which corresponded largely to areas where intercommunal tensions had led to armed conflict. The plan accepted by the parties to the conflict rested on two central elements: on the one hand, withdrawal of JNA from all of Croatia and the demilitarization of the UNPAs; on the other, the continued functioning, on an interim basis, of the existing local authorities and police, under United Nations supervision, pending the achievement of an overall political solution to the Yugoslav crisis under the auspices of the EC Conference on Yugoslavia. UNPROFOR was required to ensure that the UNPAs remained demilitarized and that all persons residing in them were protected from armed attack. In addition to military personnel, United Nations civilian police (UNCIVPOL) monitors were to ensure that the local police carried out their duties without discrimination against any nationality and with full respect for the human rights of all UNPA residents. The Force was also to provide support to facilitate the return to their homes of all persons displaced by the hostilities who wished to return.

By resolution 762(1992) of 30 June, the Council additionally authorized UNPROFOR to undertake monitoring functions in the so-called “pink zones” of Croatia, which were Serb-controlled areas lying outside the UNPAs where hostilities continued. It also recommended establishment of a Joint Commission chaired by UNPROFOR and consisting of representatives of the Government of Croatia and of the local authorities of the region, with the participation of the European Community Monitoring Mission (ECMM), to oversee and monitor the process of the restoration of the Croatian Government's authority in the “pink zones”. The tasks assigned to UNPROFOR included verifying immediate withdrawal of the Croatian Army, territorial defence forces (TDFs) and any irregular units from the “pink zones”, particularly the Miljevici plateau; supervising the restoration of authority by the Croatian police and the re-establishment of the local police in proportion to the demographic structure of the areas prior to the conflict; and monitoring the maintenance of law and order by the existing police forces, particularly with regard to minorities.

By resolution 769(1992) of 7 August, the Council authorized UNPROFOR to carry out immigration and customs functions at the international borders of certain areas in Croatia where the boundaries of UNPAs coincided with international frontiers. Finally, by resolution 779(1992) of 6 October, the Council authorized UNPROFOR to assume responsibility for monitoring the withdrawal of JNA from Croatia and the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula near Dubrovnik.

UNPROFOR's principal success in Croatia was ensuring the complete withdrawal of JNA from the territory of that republic, including the Prevlaka peninsula. Its presence also helped prevent a recurrence of hostilities in the UNPAs and “pink zones”. However, non-cooperation by the local Serb authorities prevented it from achieving the demilitarization of the UNPAs and the disarming of Serb TDFs and irregular forces. The Serb local authorities took the position that official and public threats by Croatian authorities to resort to force, as well as frequent cease-fire violations and repeated armed incursions, made it impossible for them to implement full demilitarization.

In consequence, UNPROFOR was not able to establish conditions of peace and security that would have permitted the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons. Nor was it able to establish the border controls called for by resolution 769(1992). The civilian aspect of UNPROFOR's activities, notably the efforts of UNCIVPOL to prevent discrimination and abuse of human rights, did not prove fully successful. During the year, the Secretary-General informed the Council on a number of occasions of an atmosphere of terror and intimidation existing in many parts of the four UNPROFOR sectors. However, from November onwards, the situation improved in all but a few areas. The maintenance of law and order was gradually enhanced through the reorganization and redeployment of the local police. The carrying of “long arms”, in breach of the agreed plan, greatly diminished.

By a letter of 9 December,⁽³⁾ the Croatian President expressed regret that the joint efforts of the United Nations and EC had not produced the anticipated results; on the contrary, after initial positive steps, subsequent progress and the peace plan were frustrated by extreme Serbian elements in the UNPAs which had been encouraged and politically and materially supported by the authorities in Belgrade. Aggression against Croatia continued in spite of the engagement of UNPROFOR, and brutal terrorism still reigned in Sectors East, North and South. Even in Sector West there had been recent attempts to offset the modest results achieved, as Serbian extremists from Knin as well as from Bosnia and Herzegovina visited the area in question and publicly stated that they would establish the rule of anarchy equal to, that in other UNPA sectors.

Report of the Secretary-General (5 January). On 5 January 1992,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report pursuant to a November 1991 Security Council resolution,⁽⁵⁾ giving an overview of the activities of his Personal Envoy, who conducted his fifth mission to the former Yugoslavia from 28 December 1991 to 4 January 1992. On his way, he conferred at Lisbon with Joao de Deus

Pinheiro, the Foreign Minister of Portugal and incoming President of the EC Council of Ministers, and Lord Carrington.

In Belgrade, the Personal Envoy met with President Slobodan Milosevic of the Republic of Serbia; General Veljko Kadijevic, Federal Secretary for National Defence of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro); and Branko Jovic, Chairman of the Yugoslav (Serbia and Montenegro) State Committee for Cooperation with the United Nations on Peace-keeping Matters. All confirmed their acceptance of the concept of a peace-keeping operation as outlined in the plan annexed to a December 1991 report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁶⁾

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman stated to the Personal Envoy his Government's full acceptance of the plan and its commitment to an absolute cease-fire. Mr. Jovic expressed the Federal Presidency's desire for an immediate cease-fire and said the Presidency would order all JNA and territorial units not to return fire, even in the event of attack.

Under the chairmanship of the Personal Envoy, military representatives of Croatia and JNA signed at Sarajevo on 2 January an implementing accord for an unconditional cease-fire as agreed on 23 November 1991, to become effective at 1800 hours on 3 January 1992. While in Sarajevo, Mr. Vance also met with President Alija Izetbegovic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, who reiterated his support for the outlined peace-keeping operation and requested once more that 2,000 to 3,000 United Nations peace-keepers be sent to his country to help prevent further hostilities.

As a follow-up to the Personal Envoy's mission, the Secretary-General stated his intention to send immediately to the former Yugoslavia a group of up to 50 military liaison officers, initially drawn from existing peace-keeping operations, to help maintain the cease-fire by facilitating communication between the two sides, resolving difficulties that might arise and determining measures to avoid cease-fire violations or restoring the status quo after such violations. The officers would be attached to the general headquarters of JNA and the Croatian People's Guard and their respective field headquarters. Their mission would take place on the assumption that the cease-fire would quickly establish itself, that the other necessary conditions for deploying a peace-keeping force would be met and that the military liaison group would thus be superseded by a larger operation.

However, a United Nations peace-keeping force could not be established without sustained evidence of the willingness and ability of both sides to ensure respect of the cease-fire; also, the concept for a peace-keeping operation as described in the December 1991 report had to be accepted by all those on whose cooperation the implementation of a peace-keeping mandate depended. With regard to the request of the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina that a substantial United Nations peace-keeping presence be immediately deployed in the republic, the December 1991 concept envisaged United Nations military observers there, the Secretary-General pointed out; for the time being, the question should be approached within the concept of an overall peace-keeping operation.

In an addendum to his report, the Secretary-General estimated the cost for emplacement and maintenance of the military liaison officers' group, including civilian support staff, at some $2 million for the first month and approximately $0.7 million monthly thereafter.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 and 8 January)

Following the shooting down on 7 January of an ECMM helicopter over the former Yugoslavia, killing live people, the Security Council convened on the same day. The Council invited Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at its request, to participate without vote under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

After consultations, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement:⁽⁷⁾

Meeting number SC 3027.

"The members of the Security Council discussed on 7 January the tragic incident that occurred in Yugoslavia earlier in the day, in which helicopters of the European Community Monitoring Mission in Yugoslavia were shot down by a Yugoslav aircraft, killing four Italian members and one French member of the Monitoring Mission.

"The members of the Council condemned this callous attack on unarmed civilian personnel. They extended their most sincere condolences to the families of those who had lost their lives. They noted that the Yugoslav authorities had accepted responsibility for this flagrant breach of the cease-fire, had said that they would take the necessary disciplinary action against those responsible, and had reiterated their commitment to observe the cease-fire fully. The members of the Council called on the Yugoslav authorities to take all steps necessary to ensure that this act does not go unpunished and that such incidents do not occur again.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

"The members of the Council reiterated their urgent call on all parties to the conflict in Yugoslavia to respect their cease-fire commitments. They underlined the continuing importance of the role played by the EC Monitoring Mission, as emphasized in the Secretary-General's report of 5 January. They expressed Their deep appreciation for the work done by members of the Mission and they called on the Yugoslav parties to ensure that members of the Mission and United Nations personnel be allowed to fulfil their role with the full cooperation of all sides."

The Council again convened on 8 January to consider the Secretary-General's 5 January report. It invited Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at its request, to participate without the right to vote. On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 727(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991 and 724(1991) of 15 December 1991,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 5 January 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 721(1991),

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and noting the continuing role that the European Community will play in achieving a peaceful solution in Yugoslavia,

Deploring the tragic incident on 7 January 1992 which caused the death of five members of the European Community Monitoring Mission,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 5 January 1992 and expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for it;

2. Welcomes the signing, under the auspices of the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, of an Implementing Accord at Sarajevo on 2 January 1992 concerning modalities for implementing the unconditional cease-fire agreed to by the parties at Geneva on 23 November 1991;

3. Endorses the Secretary-General's intention as a follow-up to his Personal Envoy's latest mission to send immediately to Yugoslavia a group of up to 50 military liaison officers to promote maintenance of the cease-fire; in this connection, takes note in particular of the views expressed in paragraphs 24, 25, 28, 29 and 30 of the Secretary-General's report and the criteria reflected in paragraphs 3 and 4 of resolution 724(1991);

4. Urges all parties to honour the commitments made at Geneva and Sarajevo with a view to effecting a complete cessation of hostilities;

5. Requests all the parties to take all the necessary measures to ensure the safety of the personnel sent by the United Nations and of the members of the European Community Monitoring Mission;

6. Reaffirms the embargo applied in paragraph 6 of resolution 713(1991) and in paragraph 5 of resolution 724(1991), and decides that the embargo applies in accordance with paragraph 33 of the Secretary-General's report;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in Yugoslavia;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 727(1992)

8 January 1992 Meeting 3028 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23382), orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (4 February). Following the adoption of Council resolution 727(1992), a United Nations military liaison mission headed by Colonel John Wilson (Australia) and consisting of unarmed officers arrived in the former Yugoslavia on 14 January, the Secretary-General reported on 4 February.(8)

In New York, the Secretary-General met on 23 January with Mr. Jovic and the Prime Minister of Croatia; both reiterated the commitment of their respective authorities to the cease-fire and requested the earliest possible deployment of a peace-keeping operation. The Secretary-General responded that there remained a number of obstacles in the way of such a deployment but that he had asked the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, Marrack Goulding, to make an on-site assessment of the cease-fire and to examine how those obstacles could be removed.

During his mission to the former Yugoslavia from 26 to 30 January, Mr. Goulding held discussions to that end with political and military leaders. He pointed out to the parties that before a peace-keeping operation could be deployed, it would be necessary for them to observe an unconditional and effective cease-fire; to accept fully the December 1991 plan; and to make an unconditional commitment to cooperate fully with such a force.

The military liaison officers, during their two weeks on the ground, received daily allegations of sporadic cease-fire violations. None the less, since the Sarajevo accord went into effect on 3 January, the cease-fire had been generally observed. There were almost no complaints of movements of formations of platoon size or larger and commanders on both sides showed evidence of a readiness to respect the cease-fire. Unfortunately, the military forces on both sides included irregular armed elements who were not fully under the control of the established commands and who were responsible for a substantial portion of the alleged cease-fire violations. However, both parties assured Mr. Goulding that they would strengthen measures to bring those elements under their control.

At a meeting in Zagreb on 28 January, the Croatian President said the operation must provide for immediate restoration of the full authority of his Government in the UNPAS, thus retracting his full acceptance of the United Nations plan given to the Special Envoy in December 1991.

Those positions, as well as allegations that the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in September 1991(9) was not being observed, led to the Secretary-General's conclusion that deployment of a peace-keeping operation was not recommendable for the time being. However, he felt that the military liaison group, which had contributed significantly to maintaining the cease-fire, should be kept and enlarged to 75 officers.

By a letter of 3 February 1992, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, the Vice-President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) stated that the competent bodies of his Government guaranteed the unhindered reception of United Nations forces, irrespective of the proposals made by representatives of the Serbian population during their talks with Mr. Goulding.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 February)

The Security Council, at a meeting on 7 February, to which it invited Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to participate without the right to vote under rule 37^a of its provisional rules of procedure, considered the report of the Secretary-General and unanimously adopted resolution 740(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991 and 727(1992) of 8 January 1992,

Noting the further report of the Secretary-General of 5 February 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 721(1991) and welcoming his report that the cease-fire has been generally observed thus removing one of the obstacles to the deployment of a peace-keeping operation,

Taking note that the letter of President Franjo Tudjman of 6 February 1992, in which he accepts fully and unconditionally the Secretary-General's concept and plan which defines the conditions and areas where the United Nations force would be deployed, removes a further obstacle in that respect,

Further noting that the implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan will facilitate the task of the Conference on Yugoslavia in reaching a political settlement,

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing concern at the indications that the arms embargo established by the Security Council in resolution 713(1991) is not being fully observed, as noted in paragraph 21 of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its approval set out in resolution 724(1991) of the United Nations peace-keeping plan contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 11 December 1991;

2. welcomes the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy to remove the remaining obstacle in the way of the deployment of a peace-keeping operation;

3. Approves the Secretary-General's proposal to increase the authorized strength of the military liaison mission to a total of 75 officers;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite his preparations for a United Nations peace-keeping operation so as to be prepared to deploy immediately after the Security Council decides to do so;

5. Expresses its concern that the United Nations peace-keeping plan contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 11 December 1991 has not yet been fully and unconditionally accepted by all in Yugoslavia on whose cooperation its success depends;

6. Calls upon all States to continue to take all appropriate steps to ensure that the Yugoslav parties implement their unqualified acceptance of the United Nations peace-keeping plan, fulfil their commitments in good faith and cooperate fully with the Secretary-General;

7. Calls upon the Yugoslav parties to cooperate fully with the Conference on Yugoslavia in its aim of reaching a political settlement consistent with the principles of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and reaffirms that the United Nations peace-keeping plan and its implementation is in no way intended to prejudice the terms of a political settlement;

8. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee established by resolution 724(1991), including reporting any information brought to their attention concerning violations of the embargo;

9. Decide to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 740(1992)

7 February 1992 Meeting 3049 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23534), orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (15 February). In a report of 15 February,(10) the Secretary-General described recent developments regarding the positions of Croatia and of the local leaders in the province of Krajina, which he had identified in his 4 February report and which constituted the major obstacles to the deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping force. He also dealt with certain aspects of the concept and plan for such a force, put forward in December 1991, and described the structures and resources required for implementing that plan.

The President of Croatia, having been requested by the Personal Envoy to reconfirm full acceptance of the plan, did so in a letter of 11 February 1992. Nevertheless, several technical questions in the status-of-forces agreement needed to be resolved, including substantive issues relating to the extension of the authority of the Croatian Government over the UNPAs in areas such as traffic, trade, banking and currency, maintenance of law and order and the return of refugees. The Secretary-General decided to accept the President's initial assurances and to leave those technical questions to be resolved within the letter and spirit of the plan; if they were not, however, the plan's implementation would be endangered.

The Assembly of the Serbian Krajina Republic, the highest organ of authority in that area, had voted to endorse the plan unconditionally. A rival assembly in Krajina, headed by Milan Babic, decided to hold a referendum on the subject on 22 and 23 February, which, in the Secretary-General's view, was a potential danger to the plan; therefore, it was all the more important that the concerns of the Serbian community in Krajina be considered at the EC Conference on Yugoslavia.

As almost all political groups in Yugoslavia expressed support for a United Nations peace-keeping operation, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of UNPROFOR, headquartered at Sarajevo, with sub-offices at Belgrade and Zagreb and a logistics base at Banja Luka, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

It would be deployed in the three UNPAs, which, for United Nations purposes, would be divided into four sectors: Sector East (Eastern Slavonia including Baranja and Western Srem), Sector North (northern Krajina), Sector South (southern Krajina) and Sector West (Western Slavonia). In addition, military observers would be deployed in certain parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina adjacent to Croatia.

UNPROFOR would include military, police and civilian components. The military component would consist of 12 enlarged infantry battalions (10,400 all ranks); headquarters, logistics and other support elements totalling about 2,840 all ranks; and 100 military observers. The police component (UNCIVPOL) would number about 530 personnel commanded by a Police Commissioner, who would be appointed by the Secretary-General and would report to the Force Commander. The civilian component, headed by the Director of Civil Affairs, would consist largely of United Nations staff performing a wide range of political, legal, information and administrative functions.

The role of UNPROFOR with regard to local administration and maintenance of public order would be: to identify the existing arrangements in the UNPAs, together with any existing regional structures; to use its good offices to ensure that any changes to the status quo with regard to administration were consistent with the spirit of the December 1991 plan and posed no threat to public order; to monitor the work of the local police; and to confirm that the composition of the existing police forces reflected the national composition of the population that lived in the area concerned before the recent hostilities and to arrange changes as might be necessary.

Those arrangements, the Secretary-General emphasized, would be of an interim nature, pending an overall settlement. The success of the operation would depend on the readiness of all concerned to exercise restraint and refrain from actions that could disturb public order in the UNPAs.

UNPROFOR would remain in the former Yugoslavia until a negotiated settlement was achieved. However, it was recommended to establish the Force for a period of 12 months, with a provision for its mandate to be renewed if necessary.

Underlining that the December 1991 plan continued to provide a solid basis for the Force, the Secretary-General discussed certain aspects related to its implementation, such as the drawing of the exact boundaries of the UNPAs, to be decided by an advance party of the Force; the possibility of weapons being handed over to the United Nations for safe custody; the overall command of the operation by the Force Commander instead of a civilian chief of mission as originally proposed; the establishment of a mixed military working group consisting of senior representatives of JNA and the Croatian Army, under the chairmanship of the Force Commander; and the implications of the deployment of the Force for the mandate of ECMM.

The two central elements of the plan—the continued functioning of existing local authorities and police under United Nations supervision, pending an overall political solution to the Yugoslav crisis, and the demilitarization of the UNPAs—must be strictly respected, the Secretary-General stressed; otherwise, the plan would be undermined and there would be a grave risk of resumed fighting. 'The Security Council and all the Yugoslav parties concerned should be alerted to that danger from the outset.

Another major undertaking which required the full cooperation of all the parties was the return of displaced persons; the Secretary-General had requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to assume responsibility for designing and implementing a scheme to permit those who wished to do so to return to their homes as soon as possible after the deployment of UNPROFOR.

Concluding, the Secretary-General stressed that a working cease-fire and unconditional acceptance of the plan by all concerned, with clear assurances of their readiness to cooperate in its implementation, were required if UNPROFOR was to succeed in consolidating the cease-fire and thus facilitate the negotiation of an overall political settlement. There remained a number of unanswered questions about the extent to which UNPROFOR would in practice receive the necessary cooperation; however, the danger of failure of a peace-keeping operation due to lack of cooperation was less grievous than the danger that a delay in its dispatch would lead to a breakdown of the cease-fire and a new conflagration.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (21 February)

The Security Council convened on 21 February to consider the Secretary-General's report. The Council invited Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 743(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991, 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 15 February 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 721(1991) and the request of the Government of Yugoslavia of 26 November 1991 for a peace-keeping operation referred to in that resolution,

Noting in particular that the Secretary-General considers that the conditions permitting the early deployment of a United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) are met and welcoming his recommendation that this Force should be established with immediate effect,

Expressing its gratitude to the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy for their contribution to the achievement of conditions facilitating the deployment of a United Nations Protection Force and their continuing commitment to this effort,

Concerned that the situation in Yugoslavia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security as determined in resolution 713(1991),

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Article 25 and Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Commending again the efforts undertaken by the European Community and its member States, with the support of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, through the convening of a Conference on Yugoslavia, including the mechanisms set forth within it, to ensure a peaceful political settlement,

Convinced that the implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan will assist the Conference on Yugoslavia in reaching a peaceful political settlement,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 15 February 1992;

2. Decides to establish, under its authority, a United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in accordance with the above-mentioned report and the United Nations peace-keeping plan and requests the Secretary-General to take the measures necessary to ensure its earliest possible deployment;

3. Decides that, in order to implement the recommendations in paragraph 30 of the report of the Secretary-General, the Force is established in accordance with paragraph 4 below, for an initial period of 12 months unless the Council subsequently decides otherwise;

4. Requests the Secretary-General immediately to deploy those elements of the Force which can assist in developing an implementation plan for the earliest possible full deployment of the Force for approval by the Council and a budget which together will maximize the contribution of the Yugoslav parties to offsetting its costs and in all other ways secure the most efficient and cost-effective operation possible;

5. Recalls that, in accordance with paragraph 1 of the United Nations peace-keeping plan, the Force should be an interim arrangement to create the conditions of peace and security required for the negotiation of an overall settlement of the Yugoslav crisis;

6. Invites accordingly the Secretary-General to report as appropriate and not less than every six months on progress towards a peaceful political settlement and the situation on the ground, and to submit a first report on the establishment of the Force within two months of the adoption of this resolution;

7. Undertakes, in this connection, to examine without delay any recommendations that the Secretary-General may make in his reports concerning the Force, including the duration of its mission, and to adopt appropriate decisions;

8. Urges all parties and others concerned to comply strictly with the cease-fire arrangements signed at Geneva on 23 November 1991 and at Sarajevo on 2 January 1992, and to cooperate fully and unconditionally in the implementation of the peace-keeping plan;

9. Demands that all parties and others concerned take all the necessary measures to ensure the safety of the personnel sent by the United Nations and of the members of the European Community Monitoring Mission;

10. Calls again upon the Yugoslav parties to cooperate fully with the Conference on Yugoslavia in its aim of reaching a political settlement consistent with the principles of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and reaffirms that the United Nations peace-keeping plan and its implementation is in no way intended to prejudge the terms of a political settlement;

11. Decides within the same framework that the embargo imposed by paragraph 6 of Security Council resolution 713(1991) shall not apply to weapons and military equipment destined for the sole use of UNPROFOR;

12. Requests all States to provide appropriate support to UNPROFOR, in particular to permit and facilitate the transit of its personnel and equipment;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 743(1992)

21 February 1992 Meeting 3055 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23620), orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (2 April). On 2 April,(11) the Secretary-General reported to the Council on the deployment of UNPROFOR.

Force Commander Lieutenant-General Satish Nambiar arrived in Belgrade on 8 March, as did Deputy Force Commander Major-General Philippe Morillon, the Director of Civil Affairs, Cedric Thomberry, Chief of Staff Brigadier-General Lewis MacKenzie, Chief Administrative Officer Keith Walton and other senior members of UNPROFOR. The Force established its headquarters at Sarajevo on 13 March and reconnaissance teams were sent to the four UNPA sectors.

During discussions with the Force Commander, each of the authorities at Belgrade, Zagreb and Sarajevo emphasized the need to stabilize a very delicate situation. Breaches of the cease-fire and continuing tension had been reported on a daily basis in a number of areas, even after the arrival of UNPROFOR's advance elements, and conditions remained far from stable. The Force Commander's finding confirmed the original operational concept for UNPROFOR; however, certain variations in deployment could be made without seriously prejudicing the implementation of the mandate.

As to the military component of the operation, the 12 battalions would be assigned as originally planned: two in Sector East, four in Sector West and three each in Sectors North and South. Logistic bases would be located at Banja Luka, Belgrade and Zagreb. Combat engineers would be based initially in Sector West, concurrently addressing the serious mine-clearing tasks in Sectors West and East. After two months, that unit would shift to Sectors North and South. The construction engineer battalion would be based at Banja Luka, to support all four sectors.

Police headquarters and three sector headquarters were established as at 30 March with 100 police deployed, although with limited logistical support. The Secretary-General recommended that the original provision for 530 police be maintained, but that in order to reduce costs only 320 be deployed at the initial stage, in some 31 locations. Regarding the police tasks in the UNPAS as well as those of the civil affairs element and humanitarian agencies, the Secretary-General expressed deep concern at the continuing reports of mass expulsions and other forms of coercion against certain communities on both sides of the conflict. Strong representations were made on that issue to the respective authorities by both the Secretary-General and UNHCR.

The Secretary-General concluded by sharing the sense of urgency in deploying UNPROFOR, as expressed by all the authorities who had had dialogue with the Force Commander. The cease-fire remained fragile, with alleged violations averaging about 100 per day and occasionally exceeding 200. Tensions were aggravated by reports, not all of them substantiated, that persons of various nationalities were expelled from their homes.

An implementation plan for full deployment of UNPROFOR was annexed to the report. The plan reflected the difficulties that had arisen, largely for budgetary reasons, in making arrangements for transporting some of the more distant battalions and their equipment to the former Yugoslavia. As a result, UNPROFOR would not be fully deployed until mid-May 1992, assuming that the Security Council took a very early decision to authorize full deployment.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 April)

The Security Council convened on 7 April to consider the Secretary-General's report. The Council invited Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37a of its provisional rules of procedure. On that same date, the Council adopted resolution 749(1992) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991, 727(1992) of 8 January 1992, 740(1992) of 7 February 1992 and 743(1992) of 21 February 1992,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 2 April 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 743(1992),

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Welcoming the progress made towards the establishment of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the continuing contacts by the Secretary-General with all parties and others concerned to stabilize the cease-fire,

Expressing its concern about reports on the daily violations of the cease-fire and the continuing tension in a number of regions even after the arrival of UNPROFOR's advance elements,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 2 April 1992;

2. Decides to authorize the earliest possible full deployment of UNPROFOR;

3. Urges all parties and others concerned to make further efforts to maximize their contributions towards offsetting the costs of UNPROFOR, in order to help secure the most efficient and cost-effective operation possible;

4. Further urges all parties and others concerned to take all action necessary to ensure complete freedom of aerial movement for UNPROFOR;

5. Calls upon all parties and others concerned not to resort to violence, particularly in any area where UNPROFOR is to be based or deployed;

6. Appeals to all parties and others concerned in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the efforts of the European Community to bring about a cease-fire and a negotiated political solution.

Security Council resolution 749(1992)

7 April 1992 Meeting 3066 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23788), orally revised.

Reports of the Secretary-General (24 April and 12 May). On 24 April,(12) the Secretary-General reported to the Council on progress made towards full deployment of UNPROFOR. At that time, the Force had a strength of 8,332, including 7,975 military personnel. The majority—i.e., some 350—of the headquarters military personnel was already located at Sarajevo.

In Sector East, the UNPROFOR military component of 1,293 personnel consisting of battalions from Belgium and the Russian Federation was at full strength on the ground as at 18 April. In Sector West, the Canadian infantry battalion was fully deployed. For budgetary reasons, deployment of three other battalions from Argentina, Jordan and Nepal would be carried out primarily by surface means; those battalions would not arrive until mid-May, leaving the current military strength in Sector West at 1,373.

A total of 2,046 military personnel—from Denmark and Poland—were deployed in Sector North, with the arrival of the third battalion from Nigeria expected by the end of May. In Sector South, a total of 1,505 personnel consisting of battalions from Czechoslovakia and France were fully deployed, with a third battalion from Kenya expected in mid-May. The full complement of 102 United Nations military observers was present in the area of operations; 40 of them were to be sent to the Mostar area in Bosnia and Herzegovina on 30 April.

A total of 290 UNCIVPOL officers were in the mission area, with the remaining 230 expected to arrive in the second half of May.

The infantry battalions were already engaged in active patrols throughout the sectors, maintaining a United Nations presence even in areas not yet permanently manned. Battalions already assigned to their areas were establishing liaisons with both sides at various levels, arranging crossing points, preparing positions, patrolling and siting checkpoints and observation posts. On the recommendation of the Force Commander, no logistic base was established at Banja Luka; the elements to be placed there were to be deployed at the two other logistics bases at Belgrade and Zagreb. The other deployment plans proposed in December 1991 and elaborated in two later reports, of 15 February⁽¹⁰⁾ and 2 April 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ remained substantially in force.

A final text for a status-of-forces arrangement with the parties to the conflict was agreed to by the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and a tentative agreement was reached with the Croatian authorities. However, protracted negotiations continued with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), with key differences relating to the provision of goods and services to UNPROFOR by the parties to the conflict.

Disturbing cases were reported in both the UNPAs and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, with combatants on both sides of the conflict using United Nations insignia on their vehicles and uniforms. If such abuse persisted, the Secretary-General warned, the parties' genuineness to cooperate with UNPROFOR would be called into question. Also reported were incidents of small-arms fire directed at Force personnel in the UNPAS, with some perpetrated allegedly by drunken Croatian and JNA soldiers. Firings close to Force personnel had reached unacceptable levels, and UNPROFOR's freedom of movement both by land and air was restricted on several occasions. All such incidents were protested to the authorities concerned.

Discussions were held with both sides on the establishment of an "air corridor" that would permit UNPROFOR flights to and from Belgrade, Sarajevo and Zagreb, as well as over the UNPAS. On 22 April, a technical agreement was concluded with the cooperation of the International Civil Aviation Organization, confirming the following three provisions: freedom to fly in the Sarajevo-Belgrade-Zagreb triangle; freedom for medical evacuation and aircraft-maintenance movement from the UNPAS to their various destinations; and freedom to fly into Zagreb for logistical purposes. Agreement on freedom to fly above the UNPAS had been reached in principle, but further discussions were required on certain aspects of an overall regime for the "UN Special Use Airspace".

The Secretary-General indicated that UNPROFOR would not be in a position to assume its full responsibilities in all the UNPASs for another two to three weeks. During that time, it was crucial that the parties conformed to the letter and spirit of the approved concept, a principle that had not been universally observed.

JNA had started to withdraw from some locations in the UNPAS; while doing so, it had been observed transferring arms to the local TDFs, which were due to be demobilized as soon as UNPROFOR was fully deployed. It was also seen transferring vehicles and personnel to the local police; although Belgrade authorities explained that those were police personnel who had been temporarily attached to JNA and were now being returned to their normal posts, such action was a cause for concern.

UNPROFOR also confirmed reports of forcible evacuation of minority populations from their homes, especially in Eastern Slavonia. Advance warning of such activity enabled the Force to prevent some incidents. Citing specific cases involving over 200 expulsions, the Secretary-General said a pattern of systematic harassment of minority populations seemed to be emerging. All reported incidents were vigorously protested and the Belgrade authorities were requested to investigate. UNPROFOR also stepped up patrols in Sector East.

As Bosnia and Herzegovina slid into anarchy (see below), the situation in Sarajevo continued to deteriorate, making operations more and more difficult. Movement in and out of the city was extremely difficult and within the city became increasingly dangerous. UNPROFOR was using its limited resources at headquarters to provide humanitarian support to the needy citizens affected by the fighting. On a number of occasions, it helped evacuate wounded civilians. However, it lacked adequate resources to carry out all humanitarian operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Secretary-General noted.

He observed that some of the difficulties encountered by UNPROFOR were endemic to most new peace-keeping operations. Others raised concern about the commitment of the parties to the basic principles of the UNPROFOR concept, namely the demilitarization of the UNPAs, maintenance of the existing arrangements for local administration and public order, and voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes.

In discussions with UNPROFOR, both sides raised issues beyond the provisions of the peace-keeping plan. Authorities in Belgrade and Zagreb pointed to the problem of certain areas in Croatia which were currently controlled by JNA but which were outside the agreed boundaries of the UNPAs. The federal authorities proposed that those areas, inhabited primarily by Serbs and later to be known as "pink zones", be included within the UNPAs, while the Croatian side sought UNPROFOR's help with regard to the presence of Serb irregular forces in those areas.

The Secretary-General submitted on 12 May(13) a report on the mission by Under-Secretary-General Marrack Goulding to the former Yugoslavia from 4 to 10 May, of which he had informed the Council in advance by a letter of 29 April(14) and received Council approval the following day.(15)

At Lisbon, Mr. Goulding met with Lord Carrington and his Plenipotentiary for Bosnia and Herzegovina, José Cutileiro of Portugal. In the former Yugoslavia, he met with political and military leaders of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, as well as with Colm Doyle, representing Lord Carrington, and the head of ECMM. He was briefed by representatives of UNHCR and ICRC, visited UNPROFOR in Sector East and met with local civic, military and militia leaders on both sides.

The full deployment of UNPROFOR was one week behind its original schedule, as a result of the conditions in Sarajevo, the complexities of transporting infantry battalions and equipment from distant countries, and the difficulties in assigning civilian staff and procuring the necessary equipment. However, the Force Commander had informed the two sides that he would assume his full responsibilities in Sector East at 0800 hours on 15 May. Thus, the nightly cease-fire violations there would end, particularly in Osijek, which was suffering serious casualties at the hands of JNA. Also, expulsions of non-Serbs from the JNA-controlled areas of Eastern Slavonia would be stopped. UNPROFOR had obtained evidence that JNA and the local police were acting in complicity in those expulsions, although such involvement was denied by both Belgrade and the local authorities.

The two parties had conflicting positions with regard to areas in Croatia outside the UNPAs, controlled by JNA and largely populated by Serbs. Belgrade authorities strongly pressed for those areas to be included in the UNPAs; otherwise, they argued, the Serb residents of those areas would resist the restoration of Croatian authority after the withdrawal of JNA and fighting would resume, with the defence units in neighbouring UNPAs coming to the aid of their fellow Serbs. Croatian authorities, however, were completely opposed to changes in the UNPA boundaries.

As a result, the Force Commander reported, the Sector Commanders, especially in Sectors North and South, were encountering serious difficulties, which threatened the viability of UNPROFOR's mandate. In those areas, Serb territorial defence units were preventing UNPROFOR from setting up checkpoints and observation posts and refused to demobilize unless the additional areas concerned were brought into the UNPAs. Mr. Goulding's attempts to persuade the Belgrade authorities to convince the Serb populations in the areas outside the UNPAs of their safety once Croatian authority was restored and to persuade the Croatian authorities to accept some modifications of the UNPA boundaries were unsuccessful. However, the Croatian President agreed to the deployment of United Nations military observers and police monitors in the areas in question.

Mr. Goulding was informed by JNA leaders that, following the declaration on 27 April of the new Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), all JNA personnel who were citizens of that Republic were to be withdrawn from all other republics of the former Yugoslavia, leaving behind the others to be demobilized or join the armed forces of the new republics. That policy was already applied in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where about 80 per cent of JNA troops were citizens of that republic. It would similarly be employed in Sectors North and South, which would greatly enlarge the number of troops to be demobilized. UNPROFOR would continue to plan for that difficult task on the basis of full support by JNA, as had been negotiated. If those enlarged local forces refused to demobilize, the very basis of the peace-keeping plan would be undermined.

The Secretary-General saw no alternative but to instruct the Force Commander to assume his responsibilities in accordance with the United Nations plan, while continuing to appeal to JNA and Serbian authorities to calm the fears of the Serb communities outside the UNPAs and ensure a successful demilitarization of the UNPAs.

With respect to humanitarian programmes in the entire former Yugoslavia, the Secretary-General said that, in the absence of agreements between the parties, armed escorts were necessary and would be permitted to open fire if a convoy of relief supplies were attacked. A protection operation similar to the one proposed for Mogadishu, Somalia, on 21 April (see PART TWO, Chapter I) would be needed, which would require armed troops in addition to UNPROFOR's existing strength. However, such an operation could risk involving the Force in hostile encounters with those on whose cooperation it depended in order to fulfil its mandate; he did not recommend that the Security Council currently pursue that option.

Other aspects covered by the Secretary-General's report were the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the feasibility of a United Nations peace-keeping operation there (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 May)

By resolution 752(1992) of 15 May, the Security Council noted the progress made in the deployment of UNPROFOR. It welcomed the fact that the Force had assumed its full responsibility in Eastern Slavonia and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that it would do so similarly in all UNPAs as soon as possible. The Council urged all parties and others concerned to cooperate in every way with UNPROFOR in accordance with the United Nations plan and to comply strictly with the plan in all its aspects, in particular the disarming of all irregular forces, whatever their origin, in the UNPAs.

Report of the Secretary-General (26 June). Tensions were rising in the so called "pink zones", most acutely in those adjacent to Sectors North and South, the Secretary-General reported on 26 June.(16)

UNPROFOR assumed its full responsibilities in Sector East on 15 May and in Sector West on 20 June. At the same time, the Force Commander continued to search for a solution to the problem of the "pink zones", holding discussions with the parties. JNA finally withdrew most of its forces from the areas in question, while leaving equipment and many members who were placed under the command of the local defence forces. Until a solution was found to the "pink zones", the Force Commander noted, it would prove extremely difficult for UNPROFOR to assume its full responsibilities in Sectors North and South.

On 1 June, with the consent of both parties, the Force Commander directed UNPROFOR military and police teams to begin moving into the "pink zones" in order to commence preliminary reconnaissance and patrol activities, pending a final agreement. Although that move helped lower the tension, developments in the region as a whole, including certain statements by national leaders, exacerbated the situation and the parties again adopted intransigent positions. None the less, the Force Commander announced that UNPROFOR would assume responsibility in Sectors North and South on 25 June.

On 21 June, the Croatian Army attacked positions of the Serb TDFs near Drnis in the "pink zone" south of Sector South, moving forward several kilometres. Serb forces retaliated by bombarding the town of Sibenik and, on 22 June, the Croatian Army bombarded Knin in Sector South. The advance of the Croatian Army, apparently conducted by two brigades in a well-planned manner, was the second in the area in a month. Both were in breach of the 2 January Sarajevo accord governing modalities of the implementation of the cease-fire. They were protested by UNPROFOR and ECMM, each of which called for the withdrawal of the Croatian Army to the former line of confrontation.

During discussions with the Force Commander on 23 June, the Vice-Premier of Croatia and the Croatian Chief of Defence Staff said the 21 June action had occurred unplanned, in reaction to mounting Serb provocations; none the less, the Croatian Army would not accede to the request to withdraw to its previous positions.

That offensive seriously set back implementation of the United Nations plan, stated the Force Commander, and confidence building among the parties would have to start afresh. Although the Croatian Government did not accept his suggestion of a conference on the issue of the "pink zones", to include Croatian authorities, representatives of Serb inhabitants of area and members of ECMM, it accepted the idea of a presence of UNPROFOR and ECMM monitors in the "pink zones" after the Government had reassumed authority there, in order to reassure the Serb population.

Also on 23 June, the Commander of UNPROFOR in Sector South reported growing tension, with general mobilization on the Serb side, and increasing intensity of shelling by both parties. Substantial casualties had been incurred and it was reported that a Serb TDF counter-attack had taken place. The Sector Commander warned of the risk of the conflict spilling over into the whole of the "pink zones".

In a meeting with the Force Commander on 24 June, the Chairman of the Yugoslav (Serbia and Montenegro) State Committee for Cooperation with the United Nations on Peace-keeping Matters warned that the conflict would escalate if the United Nations plan could not be implemented. His Government remained open to solutions which, however, had to be accepted by the local inhabitants of the "pink zones" who greatly feared Croatian rule.

A representative of the local authorities at Knin also called on UNPROFOR to assume authority in the area as a whole, including the UNPAs and "pink zones", as soon as possible. He claimed that Croatia intended to launch further offensives in the near future. Under the circumstances, his side could not be expected to disarm and withdraw. His authorities were open to any UNPROFOR proposal for a solution, but wanted the issue of the restoration of the Croatian government authority in the "pink zones" to be left open.

The Secretary-General drew three conclusions: the restoration of Croatian authority in the "pink zones" without effective preparation and re-establishment of confidence among its inhabitants did not appear achievable without the serious danger of a resumption of armed conflict; the instability caused in Sectors North and South by the "pink zone" situation had been increased by the conflict in adjacent areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina; and UNPROFOR's assumption of responsibility in the Sectors and the implementation of the December 1991 plan had little likelihood of success if the question of the "pink zones" remained unresolved.

Based on a recommendation of the Force Commander, the Secretary-General proposed several courses of action, including the establishment of a Joint Commission under the chairmanship of UNPROFOR and consisting of representatives of the Government of Croatia and the local authorities in the region, with the participation of ECMM, to oversee and monitor the restoration of Croatian government authority in the "pink zones".

He proposed further that UNPROFOR assume its full responsibilities in Sectors North and South as soon as feasible and, simultaneously, undertake monitoring functions in the "pink zones". There would be an immediate withdrawal of the Croatian Army, TDFs and any irregular units from the "pink zones", including the area of the 21 June incursion. No such elements would re-enter the "pink zones" (with the exception of those disbanded and demobilized in those areas), their withdrawal being verified by United Nations military observers. Any remaining JNA elements would be withdrawn to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Under those circumstances, the Croatian Army would disengage from the line of confrontation in a manner and to a distance established by the Joint Commission. An appropriate number of United Nations military observers would be deployed along the line of confrontation and within the "pink zones", and mobile patrols would be conducted from Sectors North and South.

UNCIVPOL would be deployed throughout the "pink zones" to monitor the maintenance of law and order by the existing police forces, with particular regard to the well-being of minority groups. At a time deemed appropriate but as soon as possible, UNCIVPOL would supervise the restoration of authority by the Croatian police and the re-establishment of the local police in proportion to the demographic structure of the areas prior to the conflict.

ECMM personnel would be deployed on both sides of the line of confrontation but outside the UNPAs, on the basis of a division of labour with UNPROFOR to be agreed within the Joint Commission.

Finally, prior to the reinstatement of Croatian authority in the "pink zones", a general amnesty in regard to events associated with the conflict would be declared by the Government of Croatia, thus helping to create a climate of security in which displaced persons could return to their homes.

Those measures were to be applied under UNPROFOR's authority and supervision, for the purpose of ensuring an internationally monitored, step-by-step reintroduction of the Croatian Government's authority to an area currently controlled by Serb forces and with a substantial Serb population, in such a manner as to minimize the danger of further hostilities and destabilization of the adjoining region. An addition to UNPROFOR of some 60 military observers and 120 UNCIVPOL monitors would be needed to implement those measures.

Each party to the conflict had, at some time, expressed acceptance of some of the elements outlined by the Secretary-General, who was aware that certain aspects would not appeal to one or the other side. In particular, Croatia strongly held that restoration of its authority in the "pink zones" related to its own sovereign territory and was not a matter for negotiation. None the less, the Secretary-General pointed out that unilateral Croatian action as had occurred around 21 June was likely to have a severely destabilizing effect on the UNPAs and jeopardize the viability of UNPROFOR. The collapse of the United Nations plan in Sectors North and South would have grave consequences not only in the other UNPAs but throughout the region.

In a reply of 30 June(17) to the Secretary-General's report, Croatia said the reference to the "pink zones" as areas populated largely by Serbs was not correct, as illustrated by demographic data. It was ready to discuss the Secretary-General's proposals but objected to an imposition of any of the proposed measures through the Secuity Council, which would mean a formal modification of the peace plan and was therefore legally unacceptable.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 June)

The Security Council, convening on 30 June to consider the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 762(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991, 727(1992) of 8 January 1992, 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, 749(1992) of 7 April 1992, 752(1992) of 15 May 1992, 757(1992) of 30 May 1992, 758(1992) of 8 June 1992, 760(1992) of 18 June 1992 and 761(1992) of 29 June 1992,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 26 June 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 752(1992).

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Welcoming the progress made as a result of the assumption of responsibilities by the United Nations Protection Force in Sectors East and West, and concerned about the difficulties encountered by the Force in Sectors North and South,

Commending again the efforts undertaken by the European Community and its member States, with the support of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, through the convening of a Conference on Yugoslavia, including the mechanisms set forth within it, to ensure a peaceful political settlement,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 26 June 1992;
2. Urges all parties and others concerned to honour their commitments to effect a complete cessation of hostilities and to implement the United Nations peace-keeping plan;
3. Also urges, in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 727(1992), the Government of Croatia to withdraw its army to the positions held before the offensive of 21 June 1992 and to cease hostile military activities within or adjacent to the United Nations Protected Areas;
4. Urges the remaining units of the Yugoslav People's Army, the Serb territorial defence forces in Croatia and others concerned to comply strictly with their obligations under the United Nations peace-keeping plan, in particular with regard to the withdrawal and the disarming of all forces in accordance with the plan;
5. Urges the Government of Croatia and others concerned to follow the course of action outlined in paragraph 16 of the Secretary-General's report and appeals to all parties to assist the United Nations Protection Force in its implementation;
6. Recommends the establishment of the Joint Commission described in paragraph 16 of the Secretary-General's report, which should 'consult, as may be necessary or appropriate, with the Belgrade authorities in performing its functions';
7. Authorizes the strengthening of the United Nations Protection Force by the addition of up to sixty military observers and one hundred and twenty civilian police to perform the functions envisaged in paragraph 16 of the Secretary-General's report, with the agreement of the Government of Croatia and others concerned;

8. Reaffirms the embargo applied in paragraph 6 of resolution 713(1991), paragraph 5 of resolution 724(1991) and paragraph 6 of resolution 727(1992);

9. Supports the views expressed in paragraph 18 of the Secretary-General's report about the grave consequences which the collapse of the United Nations peace-keeping plan would have throughout the region;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts to fulfil as soon as possible the terms of paragraph 12 of resolution 752(1992);

11. Calls again upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Conference on Yugoslavia and its aim of reaching a political settlement consistent with the principles of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and reaffirms that the United Nations peace-keeping plan and its implementation is in no way intended to prejudge the terms of a political settlement;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 762(1992)

30 June 1992 Meeting 3088 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24207).

Report of the Secretary-General (27 July). The Secretary-General, in a report of 27 July,(18) discussed progress made by UNPROFOR in Croatia, as well as several major problems confronting it.

A major achievement was the elimination of cease-fire violations involving the use of heavy weapons, facilitated through simultaneous withdrawal by both sides of such weapons to a distance of 30 kilometres from the line of confrontation. Tension in all three UNPAs had also lessened, though occasional cease-fire violations continued. Another major achievement was seen in the withdrawal of JNA from all sectors, except for one infantry battalion in Sector East, which was set to leave within a few days. Simultaneously, a number of Croatian Army units had been withdrawn from the front line.

All TDF units in Sectors East and West, which had received many of JNA's heavy weapons, had handed them over for storage in a number of locations under the control of UNPROFOR. Similar action was in progress in Sectors North and South, including the "pink zones", to be completed within a few days. The next step in the demilitarization process-the withdrawal of the infantry, who were now armed only with light weapons, to be followed by the lifting of mines by unarmed parties of the Croatian Army and JNA under UNPROFOR protection-was already under way in Sector West and would be undertaken in other sectors shortly.

The demobilization of the TDF units had been complicated by the parallel emergence of strengthened police and militia organizations, designated as "special police", "border police", etc., which possessed automatic rifles and sometimes machine-guns, in violation of the United Nations peace plan. In many cases, those groups had taken over from JNA or Serb TDFs on the front lines, and needed to be withdrawn and disbanded. The matter had been repeatedly taken up with the local authorities, but as yet with no satisfactory results.

In the "pink zones", the withdrawal of heavy weapons by both sides had begun, as called for in resolution 762(1992). However, delays continued to occur in some areas, with each side insisting on the prior withdrawal of the other. Moreover, Croatian authorities had replaced their military in certain areas with Croatian police, which they refused to withdraw. The increased strength and armament of police and militia on the Serb side also remained a matter of concern.

JNA forces remained in the Dubrovnik area, despite repeated efforts by UNPROFOR to secure their withdrawal. In meetings with Belgrade authorities, the Force Commander was informed that in view of the strategic importance of the Prevlaka peninsula east of Dubrovnik, which controlled the entrance to the Gulf of Kotor, JNA withdrawal would be contingent on a demilitarization of the peninsula and on the guarantee that Croatian heavy weapons would not be located in its proximity. The Belgrade authorities requested UNPROFOR presence in the area to ensure its demilitarization until the case they had submitted to the EC Conference on Yugoslavia on the delineation of State borders was resolved as part of an overall settlement, or until a decision was taken on the matter by the International Court of Justice. UNPROFOR conveyed the views of the Belgrade authorities to those in Zagreb on 14 July. The Croatian Government indicated its willingness to consider the non-employment of heavy arms in the area, on condition of reciprocal abstention by Serbia and Montenegro, with the situation being monitored by UNPROFOR military observers. Discussions on the matter were being conducted by UNPROFOR as a matter of urgency.

On the positive side, the Croatian Government and the Serb authorities accepted the establishment of a Joint Commission to oversee and monitor restoration of the Croatian Government's authority in the "pink zones". Its composition was announced on 17 July, following consultation with both sides and ECMM. Its first meeting was expected to take place within a week, although its location was not yet agreed on and one of the parties declined to participate until Croatia withdrew all its personnel from the Drnis area.

The Secretary-General also reported on developments of concern during recent months which, he said, had radically altered many of the premises on which the United Nations peace-keeping plan was based and which, if they were to be addressed effectively, would require further modifications to UNPROFOR's mandate. Among those developments were expulsions, coercion and intimidation, the control of international borders and the humanitarian situation in the UNPAs. In the Force Commander's judgement, UNPROFOR's mandate needed to be further enlarged if it was to succeed in establishing peaceful, just and stable conditions in the UNPAs, pending an overall political settlement. Specifically, he recommended that UNPROFOR be given authority to control the entry of civilians into the UNPAs and to perform immigration and customs functions at the UNPA borders where they coincided with international frontiers. He also recommended an increase in the strength of UNPROFOR's civil affairs component. If approved by the Council, those enlargements of the Force's mandate and strength would come on top of two previous enlargements in connection with Sarajevo airport and the "pink zones", by resolutions 758(1992) and 762(1992), respectively. In addition, the Secretary-General said, there was the possibility that UNPROFOR would be asked to establish a military presence on the Prevlaka peninsula to ensure that it remained demilitarized.

UNPROFOR continued to take part in the rescue and care of refugees from the fighting in Bosnia and Herzegovina, although that task was technically outside its mandate. Serbs within the UNPAs were increasingly involved in the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, making it more difficult for the Force to demilitarize those areas. The conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see below) had largely interrupted the economic links between the UNPAs and other former Yugoslav republics; as a result, the Secretary-General received requests for humanitarian aid to the UNPA populations. Those requests were coordinated by the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs, while requests to send aid from Belgrade were referred to the Sanctions Committee of the Security Council, which granted approval on the understanding that the shipments would be inspected by UNHCR, UNPROFOR and ICRC.

Summing up his observations, the Secretary-General expressed gratitude to Croatia for its flexibility in responding to the Force Commander's efforts to find a solution to the question of the "pink zones". Problems nevertheless remained, especially with regard to the excessive armament of the local police in the UNPAs, the continuing persecution of non-Serbs in some areas and the destruction of Serb property in others. It was too early to report, the Secretary-General said, that UNPROFOR had succeeded in demilitarizing the UNPAs and establishing its full authority there or that conditions existed for the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes.

The Force Commander's latest recommendations relating to the UNPAs illustrated the extent to which UNPROFOR was being drawn into quasi-governmental functions which went beyond normal peace-keeping practice. They had major resource implications and might stimulate demands for still deeper United Nations involvement. The Secretary-General viewed that trend with some misgiving, in the light of the many other demands on the Organization's attention and resources. However, he believed that, on balance, the Force Commander's recommendations had to be accepted if the effort already invested in Croatia was not to be undermined as a result of UNPROFOR's mandate being limited to control of military movements only.

The Secretary-General estimated the cost associated with enlarging UNPROFOR's mandate to include the additional responsibilities of controlling the entry of civilians into the UNPAs and performing immigration and customs functions at the UNPA borders, together with an increase in the strength of UNPROFOR's civil affairs component, at some $30.9 million for the two months from mid-August to mid-October; thereafter, the monthly cost relating to those activities would be approximately $5.9 million.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 August)

On 7 August, the Security Council convened to consider the Secretary-General's report. The Council invited Croatia, at its request, to participate without the right to vote under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. On the same day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 769(1992).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 27 July 1992 in which the Secretary-General recommended certain enlargements in the mandate and strength of UNPROFOR,

Taking note of the letter dated 7 August 1992 from the Deputy Prime Minister of the Republic of Croatia to the President of the Security Council,

1. Approves the Secretary-General's report;
2. Authorizes the enlargements of UNPROFOR's mandate and strength recommended by the Secretary-General in that report;
3. Reiterates its demand that all parties and others concerned cooperate with UNPROFOR in implementing the mandate entrusted to it by the Security Council;
4. Condemns resolutely the abuses committed against the civilian population, particularly on ethnic grounds, as referred to in paragraphs 14-16 of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General.

Report of the Secretary-General (28 September). In a report of 28 September,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General provided an update on UNPROFOR's progress in Croatia, as well as on the establishment of a Joint Commission to oversee the return of Croatian authority to the "pink zones". He outlined a number of major difficulties encountered by the Force since his report of 27 July, including violations of the cease-fire; problems in the UNPAs with demilitarization, terrorist acts, refugees and displaced persons; the situation at Dubrovnik; and difficulties caused by inaccurate and inflammatory information.

He noted that UNPROFOR had not fully implemented the United Nations plan in three of the UNPAs, nor had it been able to restore a degree of inter-ethnic tolerance, due to the fact that the conflicting parties had not fully cooperated. The situation had to be corrected as soon as possible, otherwise there would be a real danger of renewed widespread conflict.

The situation along the confrontation line was generally stable, with some incidents occurring and occasional small-arms fire. Tension was high in Sector South, particularly in the areas of the Peruca dam, Miljevci plateau and Zemunik airport, where heavy machine-guns and light mortars had sometimes been used.

Four major incidents had occurred in the UNPAs since the end of July. On 7 August, fighting erupted in the south-east end of Sector West when armed elements from the Croatian side apparently attempted to cross the Sava River to attack armed Bosnian Serbs. United Nations forces sustained no casualties, but were caught in an exchange of fire which included the use of tanks, artillery and mortars. Nine bodies in a variety of uniforms found on the southern side of the river were not claimed by either side, giving rise to the suspicion of the use of mercenaries. On 13 August, a group of Serbs from the village of Markusica in Sector East were attacked by the Croatian Army as they harvested maize in an area just across the confrontation line. Four people were killed and 19 taken prisoner. UNPROFOR quickly defused the situation and secured the release of the 19 individuals. On 21 August, three Serb so-called "border militia" personnel were shot dead in the vicinity of the confrontation line of Sector East.

In the last week of August, a large group of armed personnel attempting to infiltrate through Sector North into Bosnia and Herzegovina were encountered by local Serb militia, who killed or captured several of them. Prisoners interviewed by UNPROFOR said they had been mobilized and trained by the Croatian Army and were being infiltrated in small groups into Bosnia and Herzegovina. When the matter was raised with the Croatian President by Under-Secretary-General Goulding on 31 August, the President stated that such practices would no longer be permitted. However, tension in the area remained high.

In the UNPAs, the demilitarization process had been delayed by the creation of new Serb militia forces, made up of former JNA members, TDFs and irregular elements. Those militia, under the names or "special police", "border police" or "multi-purpose police brigades", comprised up to 16,000 armed men equipped with personnel carriers, mortars and machine-guns. The Force Commander considered that their level of armament and almost total ignorance of police work demonstrated that, in reality they were paramilitary forces. Efforts by UNPROFOR to demobilize the newly created units had largely succeeded in Sector West, but not in the other sectors. Such paramilitary units were engaged in acts of terrorism against minorities, especially in Sector East and to a lesser extent in Sector South, and appeared to enjoy complete impunity.

Deteriorating conditions in Sector East had led to a general breakdown in law and order, with no functioning court system. Harassment, intimidation and aggression against the non-Serb population continued and even increased in the Baranja area. While terrorism was mostly directed against non-Serbs, on 29 August four Serb militiamen were killed by other Serbs and three villagers were wounded. Crime was also rising in the Sector, often with elderly people as the victims. A number of brutal murders had occurred, frequently at the hands of or with the collusion of the "special police". Unemployment was up as well, with non-Serbs often being the first to lose jobs, either for true economic reasons or so that their jobs could be taken by newly arrived Serb refugees. There was a similar situation in Sector South, with an increase of incidents against the non-Serb population, such as the destruction of houses and churches, looting, intimidation and even murder. Such events were often matched by actions against Serbs across the confrontation line.

A slight improvement was seen in the Croatian-controlled part of Sector West, with fewer burnings of Serb houses. However, numerous cases of intimidation and arrest of Serb residents by the Croatian authorities were documented. Some Subs had been removed from UNPROFOR protection to a military prison at Bjelovar, outside the Sector, before being indirectly expelled through an involuntary "prisoner-of-war" exchange. Photographic and medical evidence of serious beatings of several Serbs while in custody was presented to the Croatian authorities, who said they had turned it over to the Public Attorney's Office for proceedings. Few, if any, of those acts in the four sectors had led to prosecution and punishment of the offenders.

The regular civil police in the UNPAS, though often well-trained and professional, were inactive and seemed more or less impotent in the face of the "special police". Under those conditions, UNCIVPOL's role had become even more important. Increasingly, the local population was turning to UNCIVPOL for assistance—as crime victims, for security, or for humanitarian help.

The Joint Commission established by resolution 762(1992) to oversee the restoration of the Croatian Government's authority in the "pink zones" had held five meetings since its inception. Comprised of representatives of UNPROFOR, ECMM, the Croatian Government and the local Serb authorities at Knin, it had, after a slow start, begun to make progress. In the second week of September, subcommissions began meeting on cease-fire and security, and on humanitarian and economic issues "Hot lines" were established between the parties regarding security issues, and experts on both sides had drawn up agreed plans for the repair of utilities and other economic installations in the "pink zones".

After Serb authorities at Knin agreed to withdraw their "special police" forces from the Peruca dam, UNPROFOR brought in international consultants to inspect the installation. Their disturbing report led to the decision, following talks at Belgrade conducted by Personal Envoy Vance, on 12 September, to have UNPROFOR take over full control of the dam, effective as of 14 September. Upon assumption of that authority, UNPROFOR took emergency measures to lower the water level and reduce the pressure, allowing briefly for an adequate flow of water to power stations downstream to generate power for much of the adjoining region. However, Serb forces had apparently laid explosives around the dam prior to their withdrawal, and cooperation of the authorities in Belgrade and Knin had been sought to deal with that danger.

The Secretary-General directed UNPROFOR to remain in charge of the dam until it was fully safeguarded and could be handed over to the appropriate authorities. Despite previous assurances, it was unclear whether the Serb authorities in Knin would respect that arrangement. Senior members had told UNPROFOR that they would insist on restoring their "authority" over the dam. Currently, UNPROFOR troops from two contingents were in control of the dam and its immediate vicinity; several hundred Serb "special militia" were also deployed around it.

The tragedies in the region were often inspired and exacerbated by propaganda, rumour and disinformation, which were employed by some of the national leaders. Distorted and inflammatory accounts of the conflict, and of gross human rights violations, were presented daily in the media UNPROFOR had sought, within its limited means, to explain its mission through print, radio and television. However, its mandate remained widely misunderstood, and authorities in the former Yugoslavia provided inconsistent support for such communication. In particular, Croatian authorities had banned several UNPROFOR radio broadcasts and prevented the Force from televising a programme explaining its mandate. In response, the Force had developed a plan for providing timely and objective information, countering misinformation and explaining its functions and tasks.

Concluding, the Secretary-General observed that there were positive elements, notably the agreement on the Prevlaka peninsula. UNPROFOR's proposal for the withdrawal of JNA forces from there was accepted on 12 September by the Prime Minister of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the JNA Chief of Staff, and on 15 September by the Croatian President. The agreement called for complete withdrawal of JNA from Croatia, the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, and the removal of heavy weapons from neighbouring areas of Croatia and Montenegro.

On the other hand, it had not been possible for UNPROFOR, despite strenuous efforts, to achieve full implementation of the United Nations plan in the three UNPAs or to restore a degree of normalcy and interethnic tolerance. The situation had to be corrected urgently, otherwise there was a real danger of renewed widespread conflict.

The Secretary-General regarded it as particularly distressing that the deteriorating security situation had made it impossible for UNPROFOR and UNHCR to start major programmes for the return of refugees and displaced persons. The Security Council might wish to consider action in response to the many cases in which persons had been coerced into signing away their property and rights of residence, declaring such acts, taken under duress, to be null and void.

The situation in the "pink zones" was also a cause of considerable concern. The Secretary-General noted the readiness of both sides, especially the Serbian one, to cut power and water supplies as a means of putting pressure on their opponents. In his view, completion of the restoration of the Croatian Government's authority in the zones would remove the causes of many of the cease-fire violations, permit many displaced persons to return and help rebuild confidence between the parties.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 October)

The Security Council convened on 6 October to consider the Secretary-General's report. Croatia, at its request, was invited to participate in the Council discussion without vote, under rule 37a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 779(1992).

The security Council

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992 and all subsequent resolutions relating to the activities of the United Nations Protection Force in Croatia,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 28 September 1992 submitted pursuant to resolution 743(1992) and 762(1992);

Concerned about the difficulties encountered by the United Nations Protection Force in the implementation of resolution 762(1992) due to cease-fire violations and in particular to the creation of paramilitary forces in the United Nations protected areas in violation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan.

Expressing grave alarm at continuing reports of "ethnic cleansing" in the UNPAs and of forcible expulsion of civilians and deprivation of their rights of residence and property, welcoming the Joint Declaration signed in Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Welcoming in particular the agreement, reaffirmed in the Joint Declaration, concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations.

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General including the steps taken to ensure the control of the Peruca dam by the United Nations Protection Force;

2. Authorizes the United Nations Protection Force to assume responsibility for monitoring the arrangements agreed for the complete withdrawal of the Yugoslav Army from Croatia, the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula and the removal of heavy weapons from neighbouring areas of Croatia and Montenegro, in cooperation, as appropriate, with the European Community Monitoring Mission, looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on how this is implemented, and calls on all parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with UNPROFOR in its performance of this new task;

3. Calls on all parties and others concerned to improve their cooperation with the United Nations Protection Force in the performance of the tasks it is already undertaking in the UNPAs and in the areas adjacent to the United Nations protected areas;

4. Urges all parties and others concerned in Croatia to comply with their obligations under the United Nations peace-keeping plan, especially with regard to the withdrawal and the disarming of all forces, including paramilitary forces;

5. Endorses the principles agreed by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) on 30 September 1992 that all statements or commitments made under duress, particularly those relating to land and property, are wholly null and void and that all displaced persons have the right to return in peace to (their former homes);

6. Strongly supports the current efforts of the co-chairmen of the International Conference on Former Yugoslavia to ensure the restoration of power and water supplies before the coming winter, as mentioned in paragraph 38 of the report of the Secretary-General, and calls on all the parties and others concerned to cooperate in this regard;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 779(1992)

6 October 1992 Meeting 3118 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/24617). Orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (24 November). In a report of 24 November,(20) the Secretary-General updated information on progress made by UNPROFOR in implementation of its mandate, mainly in Croatia. In particular, he dealt with violations of the cease-fire, demilitarization of the UNPAs, terrorism, the return of refugees and displaced persons, border control, the situation at the Peruca dam, the withdrawal of JNA from the Prevlaka peninsula and the Joint Commission.

Summing up his observations, the Secretary-General stated that the situation in the UNPAs and "pink zones" had not improved since his report of 28 September. Although neither side had fully implemented its undertakings under the United Nations plan and each was guilty of irresponsible and provocative conduct, the root cause of UNPROFOR's inability to make further progress had been the Knin authorities' growing and increasingly outspoken defiance of the Security Council and UNPROFOR. The Knin authorities refusal to accept the demilitarization of the UNPAs and the return of refugees and displaced persons undermined two of the fundamental principles of the peace-keeping plan. Particularly distressing was their apparent intention to establish in Sector West, where UNPROFOR had been making some progress, the conditions of brutal lawlessness which, despite all UNPROFOR efforts, existed in Sectors East, North and South. Although the Croatian authorities from time to time had raised tension in the UNPAs and the "pink zones" by injudicious public statements and provocative military moves, responsibility for non-implementation of the peace-keeping plan rested squarely with the Knin authorities. They had abused the law and order powers entrusted to the local authorities by the plan and instead had created or perpetuated conditions of lawlessness and disorder. They had exploited UNPROFOR's presence and the resulting cessation of hostilities in order to assert their pretensions of sovereignty and statehood, instead of cooperating to create conditions in which a negotiated accommodation of their legitimate concerns could be achieved. They had refused to withdraw their forces from the "pink zones" and had blocked full implementation of resolution 762(1992) by pursuing the aim of consolidating the status quo in those areas rather than facilitating the orderly restoration of Croatian authority there.

The question thus arose as to what further action could be taken to persuade the Knin authorities to honour the commitments arising from their previously declared acceptance of the Peace-keeping plan (though some of their more recent statements called the plan itself into question). It had appeared for a brief time that the improving climate of relations between Belgrade and Zagreb might make it possible to overcome the various obstacles in the way of effective implementation of the plan, but that hope was not fulfilled. Unless a way could quickly be found to obtain the cooperation of the Knin authorities, UNPROFOR in Croatia would confront the Security Council with the same dilemma as had other operations, notably the one in southern Lebanon, which had been prevented by the non-cooperation of one or more of the parties from fulfilling their original short-term mandate but nevertheless succeeded in controlling the suffering of the civilian population. In such situations, the Council had to make the difficult choice between withdrawing the operation, in the knowledge that doing so would be likely to lead to a resumption of fighting, or keeping it in place, which might involve the Council in a large and expensive commitment for an indefinite period of time, without any certainty that the mandate of the operation would be fulfilled.

(For details of the Secretary-General's report on the activities of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina, see below)

Bosnia and Herzegovina

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina worsened markedly during the year. The European Community, which recognized Bosnia and Herzegovina as an independent and sovereign State as of 7 April,(21) supported efforts to bring about a peaceful solution through negotiations on future constitutional arrangements. From 26 to 28 August, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, successor to the EC Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, convened in London under the co-chairmanship of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, in his capacity as President of the Council of Ministers of EC. The Conference adopted a statement of principles for a negotiated settlement of the conflict and reached a number of agreements among the parties. At the London session, the parties agreed to a ban on all military flights over Bosnia and Herzegovina. The ban was broken on numerous occasions, with population centres in the republic sometimes being heavily bombarded, as charged by Bosnia and Herzegovina in several communications.(22)

The Conference's working group on Bosnia and Herzegovina took up its tasks to promote a cessation of hostilities and a constitutional settlement in the republic on 18 September 1992. The discussions led to an agreement, announced on 30

September, that military commanders and local authorities of the three sides would meet under the auspices of UNPROFOR and the International Conference to work towards a demilitarization of Sarajevo and a cessation of hostilities in the city. The Mixed Military Working Group met for the first time on 23 October at Sarajevo airport. The three sides, meeting in the Group, signed on 10 November a cease-fire for all of Bosnia and Herzegovina effective at midnight on 11 November. By resolution 787(1992) of 16 November, the Security Council called on all parties to fulfil their commitments to put into effect an immediate cessation of hostilities and to negotiate in the Mixed Military Working Group, continuously and in uninterrupted session, in order to end the blockades of Sarajevo and other towns and to demilitarize them, with heavy weapons to be placed under international supervision.

Consultations were conducted separately with the parties on a possible constitutional structure for Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Co-Chairmen, in proposals presented to the parties, foresaw that the republic would be a decentralized State, with 7 to 10 autonomous provinces whose boundaries would take into account ethnic and other considerations. The parties in turn were requested to provide, in the form of maps if possible, their conceptions as to those boundaries. By resolution 787(1992), the Security Council called on the parties to continue negotiations, in uninterrupted session, for constitutional arrangements on the basis of the Co-Chairmen's draft outline constitution. In preparation for peace talks scheduled for January 1993, the Co-Chairmen held, on 27 and 28 December 1992, consultations with the parties, which concentrated on the provincial structure in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The peace-keeping plan approved by the Council in resolution 743(1992) of 12 February envisaged that the headquarters of UNPROFOR would be located in Bosnia and Herzegovina and that UNPROFOR military observers would patrol certain limited areas of the republic following the demilitarization of the UNPAs in Croatia. Accordingly, in March, UNPROFOR established its headquarters at Sarajevo, which was chosen as a neutral location unaffected by the conflict in Croatia. It was also hoped that its presence might serve as a stabilizing factor amidst increasing tension, a hope that was rapidly belied by the outbreak of fighting in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which severely handicapped UNPROFOR's senior command in executing its primary mandate relating to the UNPAs. The bulk of UNPROFOR's headquarters staff was therefore relocated temporarily to Belgrade on 16 and 17 May. UNPROFOR subsequently established its headquarters at Zagreb.

Despite the relocation of its headquarters, the Force left behind some 120 persons at Sarajevo under the command of the Chief Military Observer. That UNPROFOR group became the only international presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina when ECMM and ICRC withdrew their personnel after violence was directed against them, causing one fatality each. As a result, UNPROFOR found itself not only facilitating, but also leading, negotiations between the parties, both on specific ad hoc problems and on arrangements for an overall cease-fire, as well as lending its good offices to promote humanitarian actions for which it did not, strictly speaking, have a mandate from the Security Council. Once UNPROFOR had concluded an agreement on 5 June permitting the reopening of Sarajevo airport under its auspices, its formal mandate in Bosnia and Herzegovina followed, and was defined by, that agreement.

By resolution 761(1992) of 29 June, the Council authorized UNPROFOR to take over full operational responsibility for the functioning and security of Sarajevo airport. That responsibility included ensuring the immediate security of the airport and its installations, supervising its operations, controlling its facilities and organization, facilitating the unloading of humanitarian cargo and ensuring the safe movement of humanitarian aid and related personnel. In addition, UNPROFOR was to verify the withdrawal of anti-aircraft weapons systems from within range of the airport and its approaches and to monitor the concentration of artillery, mortar and ground-to-ground missile systems in specified areas. That task was performed initially by one large, and subsequently three smaller, infantry battalions, together with necessary support elements, including military observers and civilian police.

Following widespread reports of attacks on civilians, human rights abuses and shortages of food and medicine throughout the republic, the Council, on 13 August, by resolution 770(1992), acting under Chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations called on states to take all measures necessary to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In further discussion, however, it was decided that that task should be entrusted to UNPROFOR. By resolution 776(1992) of 14 September, which made no reference to Chapter VII, the Council authorized UNPROFOR to support UNHCR efforts to deliver humanitarian relief throughout the republic, and in particular to provide protection where and when UNHCR considered it necessary. The Council noted with appreciation the offers of a number of Member States to make available military personnel for that purpose without cost to the Organization. It also authorized UNPROFOR to protect convoys of released detainees if requested to do so by ICRC. A separate Bosnia and Herzegovina Command was established within UNPROFOR to implement resolution 776(1992), with a total of some 7,800 of all ranks in addition to Sector Sarajevo.

By resolution 781(1992) of 9 October, the Council established a ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina and requested UNPROFOR to monitor compliance with it, including by placing observers where necessary at airfields in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. It also instructed UNPROFOR to ensure, through an appropriate approval and inspection mechanism, that the purpose of flights to and from Bosnia and Herzegovina, other than those banned, was consistent with its resolutions. The ban and the above arrangements were reaffirmed in resolution 786(1992) of 10 November. An additional 75 United Nations military observers were authorized for the task.

Despite interruptions as a result of hostile military action against humanitarian aircraft, UNPROFOR succeeded in keeping Sarajevo airport open during the year to allow the delivery of much-needed relief supplies. The operation under resolution 776(1992) to protect humanitarian convoys throughout the republic was persistently thwarted by obstruction, mines, hostile fire and the refusal of the parties on the ground, particularly—but not exclusively—the Bosnian Serb party, to cooperate with UNPROFOR. None the less, from the deployment of additional UNPROFOR battalions for that purpose in November 1992 until January 1993, a total of some 34,600 tons of relief supplies were delivered to an estimated 800,000 beneficiaries in 110 locations throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina.

However, UNPROFOR's efforts in the republic were characterized by a tendency on the part of the host Government to blame it for a variety of shortcomings, whether real or imagined. Criticism of UNPROFOR's performance in the republic was largely directed at its failure to fulfil tasks it was not mandated, authorized, equipped or staffed for. There were a number of attacks on UNPROFOR by the Government and by elements answerable to it, both in public statements and, more seriously, through violence. Deliberate attacks on UNPROFOR personnel led to the deaths of six soldiers and injuries to over 100 more in the performance of their duties in the republic. Despite formal protests by UNPROFOR, no action was taken by the Government to identify and punish those responsible.

The interdiction of military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina was violated, apparently by all three parties, on many occasions since its imposition. However, the ban achieved its principal purpose of preventing the use of air power in military combat in the republic. UNPROFOR observers on the ground and monitors using AWACS information made available by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) found no evidence to suggest that any party flew combat air missions, or conducted hostilities from the air, since the interdiction regime was established by the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 and 10 April)

In resolution 749(1992) of 7 April, the Security Council appealed to all parties and others concerned in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the EC's efforts to bring about a cease-fire and a negotiated political solution.

The Council convened on 10 April to consider the situation in the republic. After consultations, the President of the Council made the following Statement;(23)

Meeting number SC 3068

The Security Council, alarmed by reports on rapid deterioration of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, reiterates the appeal in Security Council resolution 749(1992) to all parties and others concerned in Bosnia and Herzegovina to stop the fighting immediately. It invites the Secretary-General to dispatch urgently to the area his Personal Envoy to act in close cooperation with representatives of the European Community whose current efforts are aimed at stopping the fighting and at bringing about a peaceful solution to the crisis, and to report to the Council."

Report of the Secretary-General (24 April). In response to the Security Council's appeal in resolution 749(1992), the Secretary-General, in a report of 24 April.(24) discussed the possibility of deploying a peace-keeping force in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

He had met at Geneva on 10 April with the Foreign Minister of the republic, who requested that such a force be sent to his country. The Secretary-General suggested that it might be more appropriate for EC to expand its presence and activities there, since it occupied the role of peacemaker for the former Yugoslavia, with the United Nations mandate being limited to Croatia.

The Secretary-General's Personal Envoy undertook his seventh mission to the region from 14 to 18 April. At Belgrade, he was briefed by the Commander UNPROFOR. He also met with, among others, Colonel-General Blagoje Adzic, the Acting Defence Minister and JNA Chief of Staff, and President Milosevic of Serbia. At Sarajevo, he met with President Izetbegovic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as with leaders of the other communities in the republic and with the regional JNA commander. At Zagreb, he conferred with President Franjo Tudjman and other senior Croatian officials. In Slovenia, he met with President Milan Kucan.

On his return to New York, the Personal Envoy met at Lisbon with the President of the Council of Ministers of EC and the Plenipotentiary for Bosnia and Herzegovina of the Chairman of the Conference on Yugoslavia to discuss the political, military and humanitarian aspects of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

All parties believed that a civil war there would be a great tragedy that could yield no victor and all agreed that no alternative existed to the tripartite talks taking place under EC auspices. All specifically supported the cease-fire agreement reached at Sarajevo on 12 April by the three main parties. The text of the agreement was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

There was no consensus on the origins of or responsibility for the fighting, and no agreement concerning the situation on the ground. According to the President of Serbia, the principal responsibility for the fighting lay with the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina and hostilities had been initiated by units from Croatia. The best solution to the problem, in his view, would be the cantonization of Bosnia and Herzegovina within its existing borders along ethnic lines.

The firm position of the Croatian President was that regular Croatian Army troops were not engaged in the fighting in the republic. However, he acknowledged that Croat irregulars were involved, particularly in the Croat-majority region of western Herzegovina. The President of Serbia acknowledged the presence of Serb irregulars, particularly along the west bank of the Drina River.

According to JNA leadership, all three communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina had some type of paramilitary forces and contained extremist elements which were difficult to control. JNA warned, however, that its troops would react with force if its garrisons and other installations were attacked, as they had been in Croatia.

The President of Bosnia and Herzegovina reiterated the request for immediate deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping force. In his opinion, the Serbian leadership in his country had sought forcibly to alter the republic's demographic composition, with the support of JNA elements, in order to prejudge the outcome of a future division along ethnic lines. He stated that JNA sided with the Serb territorials under the control of the Serb community leader, Radovan Karadzic. He suggested that JNA leadership be restructured in Bosnia and Herzegovina to include Muslims and Croats in the army's higher command structure. The only way to reach a final settlement would be to have outside experts draw a map cantonizing the country, together with the internal communities, the President said. At the same time, he pointed to excessive territorial claims of the Serbs as the source of the conflict.

According to Croatian Democratic Community (HDZ) leaders at Sarajevo, their community in Bosnia and Herzegovina wished the republic, which was their homeland, to be independent. Croatia had recognized Bosnia and Herzegovina's independence and the Republic of Serbia should do the same. While accusing JNA of siding with Serb territorials, they stressed that JNA was the crucial element in a peaceful solution.

Serb community leaders denied responsibility for the violence at Sarajevo and in other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and disclaimed control of the territorials operating in the hills surrounding the city. They charged that the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina wanted to create a fundamentalist Islamic State, and that he resisted the establishment of geographically defined ethnic communities which, in their opinion, was the most urgent issue.

Massive mistrust was underlying the entire conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Secretary-General concluded; all sides tended to blame the others and the cycle of violence was escalating. It was essential that a cease-fire be effected immediately, based on the 12 April agreement, and there was no alternative to concluding and implementing the constitutional arrangements being developed at the tripartite talks under EC auspices. It was also essential that work at the Conference on Yugoslavia continue to be pressed forward, together with EC endeavours to bring about a peaceful settlement.

The Secretary-General also expressed concern about the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where the fighting made it increasingly difficult, if not impossible, to provide for the most basic needs of the victims of the conflict.

Although concurring with his Personal Envoy that the deployment of a peace-keeping force in Bosnia and Herzegovina was not feasible under circumstances making it impossible to define a workable concept for such an operation, the Secretary-General announced that he would advance the dispatch of 41 unarmed military observers to the municipalities of Capljina, Mostar, Stolac and Trebinje.

security council action (24 April)

At the urgent requests of Austria⁽²⁵⁾ and France,⁽²⁶⁾ the Security Council convened on 24 April to consider the deteriorating situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following consultations, the Council authorized its President to make a statement:⁽²⁷⁾

Meeting number. SC 3070

"In advance of its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to Security Council resolution 749(1992), the Security Council has had an exchange of views in the course of which various proposals were made with regard to the situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

"The Security Council notes with deep concern the rapid and violent deterioration of the situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina, which in addition to causing an increasing number of deaths of many innocent victims further risks compromising peace and security in the region.

"It welcomes the recent efforts of the European Community and the Secretary-General aimed at prevailing upon the parties to respect fully the cease-fire signed on 12 April 1992 under the auspices of the European Community. It notes with satisfaction the decision of the Secretary-General to accelerate the deployment in Bosnia-Herzegovina of the 100 military observers from UNPROFOR, 41 to be deployed in the Mostar region immediately. The presence of these military observers, like that of the monitors of the European Community, should help the parties to implement their commitment undertaken on 23 April 1992, to respect the cease-fire. The Council welcomes the support given by the CSCE to the efforts of the European Community and the United Nations.

"The Council demands that all forms of interference from outside Bosnia-Herzegovina cease immediately. In this respect, it specifically calls upon Bosnia-Herzegovina's neighbours to exercise all their influence to end such interference. The Council condemns publicly and unreservedly the use of force, and calls upon all regular or irregular military forces to act in accordance with these principles. It emphasizes the value of close and continuous coordination between the Secretary-General and the European Community in order to obtain the necessary commitments from all parties and others concerned.

"The Council urges all the parties to respect immediately and fully the cease-fire, and condemns all breaches of the cease-fire from whatever quarter.

"The Council supports the efforts undertaken by the European Community in the framework of discussions on constitutional arrangements for Bosnia-Herzegovina under the auspices of the Conference on Yugoslavia. It urges the three communities in Bosnia-Herzegovina to participate actively and constructively in these talks and to conclude and implement the constitutional arrangements being developed at the tripartite talks.

"The Council calls upon all parties and others concerned to facilitate humanitarian assistance and cooperate so that deliveries of humanitarian assistance reach their destination.

"The Council has decided to remain actively seized of the matter, and to continue its consideration of the further contribution that the Security Council can make to the restoration of peace and security in Bosnia-Herzegovina."

Report of the Secretary-General (12 May). In a report of 12 May,(28) the Secretary-General further reviewed the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, covering the findings of Under-Secretary-General Goulding during his mission to the former Yugoslavia from 4 to 10 May. At Sarajevo, Mr. Goulding met with the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina, leaders of the HDZ party and the Muslim Party of Democratic Action (SDA), the commander of JNA at Sarajevo and the Commander of UNPROFOR. At Belgrade, he held consultations with Radovan Karadzic, leader of the Serbian Democratic Party (SDS) of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Throughout the republic, the state of affairs was grim, Mr. Goulding reported, and conditions in Sarajevo continued to disintegrate. The city suffered heavy shelling and sniper fire each night from Serb irregulars in the surrounding hills; they used mortars and light artillery allegedly made available to them by JNA Muslim forces had blockaded JNA locations in the city and regularly attacked a Serb stronghold in the suburb of Hidza. There was no public transportation and streets were virtually deserted. Food and other essential supplies were growing short as a result of the blockade of the city by Serb forces. Many lives had been lost and property destroyed. Intense hostilities were also taking place elsewhere in the republic.

The general consensus among international observers was that a concerted effort was made by the Serbs to create "ethnically pure" areas within the EC-proposed cantons throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. Territory was seized by military force and the non-Serb population was then intimidated. A partial cease-fire signed between Croat and Serb leaders on 6 May revived suspicions that the two parties would attempt to carve up the republic, leaving minimal territory for Muslims, who comprised 44 percent of the population. Further concern was caused by the decision of the Belgrade authorities to withdraw from Bosnia and Herzegovina by 18 May all JNA personnel who were not citizens of that republic; that would leave behind about 50,000 mostly Serb troops and their weapons with no effective political control.

Fighting and intimidation led to massive displacement of civilians, with the number of displaced persons reaching an estimated 520,000 (over 12 per cent of the republic's population) at 8 May, 360,000 of whom had taken refuge in neighbouring republics. The international community's efforts to aid the displaced were strongly obstructed by the fighting, with relief supplies being stolen, vehicles hijacked and international aid workers threatened and abused.

Under the circumstances, it had not been possible to implement the cease-fire agreement of 12 April, which had been reaffirmed on 23 April during a visit to Sarajevo by Lord Carrington and his Plenipotentiary for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ambassador Cutileiro. Following the killing of one of its members near Mostar on 1 May, ECMM withdrew completely from the republic. EC protested to the authorities in Belgrade the action which it believed had been carried out by JNA and called for an investigation.(29)

Meanwhile, Ambassador Cutileiro continued his efforts to induce the leaders of the Croat, Muslim and Serb communities to agree on constitutional arrangements for the republic, in particular to the drafting of maps for the cantonal boundaries. However, because of the deteriorating security situation in Sarajevo, he postponed the reconvening of a conference on the matter.

Operations of UNPROFOR military observers, who had been conducting patrols in Bosnia and Herzegovina since 1 May, were suspended after one observer was wounded at Mostar on 6 May and an observer vehicle was struck by a rocket on 12 May, with the occupants escaping unharmed.

Although it was outside its mandate, UNPROFOR responded positively to requests for help to control the conflict and mitigate its worst consequences. Reacting to humanitarian emergencies arising from the shelling of Sarajevo, it provided some support to international humanitarian agencies and made its good offices available, with the EC representatives, in crisis situations, including those directly arising from military conflict between two of the parties. UNPROFOR headquarters had become the only meeting place accepted by all the parties in the EC-led efforts to implement the cease-fire.

Mr. Goulding's discussions on the feasibility of a United Nations peace-keeping operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina focused on two possible timeframes: an immediate operation to help end the fighting, and an operation to help implement possible constitutional agreements. While President Izetbegovic, HDZ and SDA advocated immediate United Nations intervention, Mr. Goulding's interlocutors at Belgrade, including the leader of SDS, saw no role for a United Nations peace-keeping force under the circumstances and considered the current deployment of UNPROFOR military observers in the Mostar area to be of limited utility. They were doubtful about prospects for negotiating any interim agreements that could form an acceptable basis for a United Nations operation, in advance of an agreement on new constitutional arrangements. The Commander of the JNA Sarajevo corps and Ambassador Joao Salgueiro, head of ECMM, expressed similar views.

A possible United Nations role in resolving specific problems, such as those relating to the closure of Sarajevo airport, on the basis of local or ad hoc agreements among the warring parties, was found acceptable only by President Izetbegovic. Colm Doyle, Lord Carrington's representative, stated that, should he succeed in obtaining adherence to the cease-fire agreed on 12 April, the cease-fire would continue to be monitored by EC, within its existing mandate and using ECMM.

With regard to United Nations peace-keepers supporting international humanitarian activities, the Force Commander and Mr. Goulding noted that no agreements had been negotiated for unhindered distribution of humanitarian aid. In those circumstances, and given the parties' uncooperative attitude to the movement of relief convoys, they judged that armed troops would be required to implement such a mandate.

Some degree of consensus, however, emerged on a possible role for United Nations peace-keepers in helping to implement a constitutional agreement. The President of Bosnia and Herzegovina said he reluctantly accepted the cantonization principle as preferable to war and would welcome a peace-keeping force to separate the warring factions, monitor the future internal borders and verify that no military personnel or equipment crossed those borders. The Belgrade authorities and JNA leadership in both Belgrade and Sarajevo agreed to that concept. In the opinion of the leader of SDS, UNPROFOR military observers could conceivably perform those functions. The President of Croatia expressed similar views.

Following Mr. Goulding's visit, President Izetbegovic, in a letter of 8 May to the Secretary-General, requested the deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping force with specific goals and a limited workable mandate to control Sarajevo airport, protect humanitarian aid deliveries and keep open roads, bridges and border crossings. Commenting on that request, the Secretary-General stated that if it proved possible, contrary to the general expectation, to obtain the other parties' agreement to such interim arrangements, there might be a role for UNPROFOR military observers in monitoring their implementation. However, the chaotic military situation and apparent inability of the protagonists to get their forces to respect the cease-fire agreements would probably make it necessary to deploy armed troops; the protective force might also find that it had to take control of extensive territory.

United Nations military observers could also monitor implementation of agreements, binding on all the armed parties, to allow the unhindered delivery of humanitarian supplies. In the absence of such agreements, however, it would be necessary to provide convoys with armed escorts whose rules of engagement would permit them to open fire in case of an attack, along the lines of the protection operation proposed for Mogadishu, Somalia (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

Based on Mr. Goulding's findings that the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina was dangerous, violent and confused, the Secretary-General did not believe that the conflict in the republic was, in its current phase, susceptible to United Nations peace-keeping, as any such operation had to be based on some agreement between the hostile parties. Without such an agreement—which could range from a simple cease-fire to a comprehensive settlement—a workable mandate for a peace-keeping operation was impossible. If EC's efforts to reach agreements succeeded, opportunities for United Nations peacemaking might emerge, although it might be more appropriate for EC rather than the United Nations to undertake the peace-keeping as well as the peacemaking.

Successful peace-keeping required the parties to respect the United Nations, its personnel and its mandate: none of the parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina satisfied that condition. The establishment of UNPROFOR's headquarters at Sarajevo had not prevented the outbreak of a savage conflict there and the Force Commander's repeated appeals for restraint had been ignored. United Nations personnel were routinely harassed, the Organization's property stolen and its emblems and uniforms misappropriated.

Despite those conditions, the Secretary-General did not believe that an enforcement action, as had been requested by President Izetbegovic, to end the fighting was a practicable proposition.

Drawing the conclusion that it was currently not feasible to undertake peace-keeping activities beyond UNPROFOR's limited involvement in Sarajevo and the Mostar area, where the security of United Nations personnel was already precarious, the Secretary-General suggested that the Council continue to support the peacemaking activities of EC. The possibilities for an effective United Nations role would depend on the success of the EC negotiators.

Due to the problems encountered on a daily basis by UNPROFOR at Sarajevo, the Force Commander had moved most of the civilian administrative staff to Belgrade and Zagreb. In addition, he proposed temporary relocation of significant elements of headquarters staff pending the restoration of calm in the city, a proposal with which the Secretary-General agreed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 May)

The Security Council met on 15 May to consider the Secretary-General's report. By a unanimous vote, it adopted resolution 752(1992).

The security Council

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991, 727(1992) of 8 January 1992, 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, 743(1992) of 21 February 1992 and 749(1992) of 7 April 1992,

Expressing its appreciation for the reports of the Secretary-General of 24 April 1992 and 12 May 1992 pursuant to resolution 749(1992)

Deeply concerned about the serious situation in certain parts of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and in particular about the rapid and violent deterioration of the situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and the continuing role that the European Community is playing in achieving a peaceful solution in Bosnia-Herzegovina, as well as in other republics of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Having considered the announcement in Belgrade on 4 May 1992 described in paragraph 24 of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 May 1992 concerning the withdrawal of Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) personnel from republics other than Serbia and Montenegro and the renunciation of authority over those who remain.

Noting the urgent need for humanitarian assistance and the various appeals made in this connection, in particular by the President of Bosnia-Herzegovina,

Deplored the tragic incident on 4 May 1992 which caused the death of a member of the European Community Monitor Mission, Deeply concerned about the safety of United Nations personnel in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

1. Demands that all parties and others concerned in Bosnia-Herzegovina stop the fighting immediately, respect immediately and fully the cease-fire signed on 12 April 1992, and cooperate with the efforts of the European Community to bring about urgently a negotiated political solution respecting the principle that any change of borders by force is not acceptable;

2. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the European Community in the framework of the discussions on constitutional arrangements for Bosnia-Herzegovina under the auspices of the Conference on Yugoslavia, urges that the discussions be resumed without delay, and urges the three communities in Bosnia-Herzegovina to participate actively and constructively in these discussions on a continuous basis as recommended by the Secretary-General and to conclude and implement the constitutional arrangements being developed at the tripartite talks;

3. Demands that all forms of interference from outside Bosnia-Herzegovina, including by units of the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) as well as elements of the Croatian Army, cease immediately, and that Bosnia-Herzegovina's neighbours take swift action to end such interference and respect the territorial integrity of Bosnia-Herzegovina;

4. Demands that those units of the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) and elements of the Croatian Army now in Bosnia-Herzegovina must either be Withdrawn, or be subject to the authority of the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina, or be disbanded and disarmed with their weapons placed under effective international monitoring, and requests the Secretary-General to consider without delay what international assistance could be provided in his connection;

5. Demands also that all irregular forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina be disbanded and disarmed;

6. Calls upon all parties and others concerned to ensure that forcible expulsions of persons from the areas, where they live and any attempts to change the ethnic composition of the population, anywhere in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, cease immediately;

7. Emphasizes the urgent need for humanitarian assistance, material and financial, taking into account the large number of refugees and displaced persons and fully supports the current efforts to deliver humanitarian aid to all the victims of the conflict and to assist in the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes:

8. Calls on all parties and others concerned to ensure that conditions are established for the effective and unhindered delivery of humanitarian assistance, including safe and secure access to airports in Bosnia Hercegovina;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under active review the feasibility of protecting international humanitarian relief programmes, including the option mentioned in paragraph 29 of his report of 12 May 1992, and of ensuring safe and secure access to Sarajevo airport, and to report to the Security Council by 26 May 1992;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the solution of the situation and to the results of the efforts undertaken by the European Community, to continue to keep under review the possibility of deploying a peace-keeping mission in Bosnia-Hercegovina under the auspices of the United Nations;

11. Demands that all Parties and others concerned cooperate fully with UNPROFOR and the European Community Monitoring Mission, and respect fully their freedom of movement and the safety of their personnel;

12. Notes the progress made thus far in the deployment of UNPROFOR, welcomes the fact that UNPROFOR has assumed the full responsibility called for by its mandate in Eastern Slavonia, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that UNPROFOR will assume its full responsibilities in all the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) as soon as possible and to encourage all parties and others concerned to resolve any problems remaining in this connection;

13. Urges all parties and others concerned to cooperate in every way with UNPROFOR in accordance with the United Nations Plan and to comply strictly, with the Plan in all its aspects, in Particular the disarming of all irregular forces, whatever their origin, in the UNPAs;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter and to consider further steps to achieve a peaceful solution in conformity with relevant resolutions of the Council.

Security Council resolution 752(1992)
15 May 1992 Meeting 3075 adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among council members (S/239727). Orally revised

Report of the Secretary-General (26 May). In a report of 26 May,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General addressed the feasibility of having the United Nations project international humanitarian relief programmes in Bosnia and Herzegovina where devastation was continuing, with displacement of civilians occurring on levels not seen since the Second World War. The plight of those trapped in cities besieged by irregular forces—and in some cases by JNA—was deteriorating. In Sarajevo alone, from 300,000 to 400,000 people were estimated to be in need of emergency relief. The situation was further complicated by repeated failure to implement agreements for the withdrawal of JNA troops surrounding Bosnian territorial forces in Sarajevo.

UNHCR had, until recently, been successful in organizing humanitarian relief convoys to various cities, including Sarajevo. The deteriorating security situation, however, had lately prevented UNHCR from continuing its aid to the city. Relief to other areas in Bosnia, organized out of Belgrade and Zagreb, was made only after protracted negotiations for safe passage with all regular and irregular forces and other parties concerned. Nevertheless, the convoys were stopped at roadblocks and allowed to continue only after further negotiations. On 22 May, UNHCR had 12 of its trucks commandeered by local armed elements, to be returned only after arduous negotiations with Serbian authorities in Pale, Belgrade and Banja Luka.

Following the death on 18 May of one of its delegates, resulting from an attack on one of its convoys at Sarajevo, ICRC was reassessing its plan of action in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Representatives of all parties to the conflict met at Geneva from 21 to 23 May under ICRC auspices and signed an agreement on the application of the basic principles of humanitarian law in the conflict.

Approximately 90 UNPROFOR personnel remained at Sarajevo, while about two thirds were temporarily relocated. Those remaining continued to perform such tasks as arranging, hosting and sometimes chairing meetings between the hostile parties on cease-fires; accompanying delegations to such meetings; arranging exchanges of prisoners of war, wounded and war dead; and such other humanitarian tasks as the Chief Military Observer judged feasible. The staffs well-being was increasingly at risk; on several occasions, they had been the deliberate target of mortar and small-arms fire from various sides.

Analysing the options available for protecting humanitarian relief efforts, the Secretary-General cited respect for agreements, binding on all the armed parties, as the best protection. Their implementation could be monitored by United Nations military observers. However, the feasibility of that approach depended on agreements being negotiated and honoured; the hostile parties, while having concluded a number of agreements, had poor records when it came to honouring them. The presence of international observers did not appear to curb their behaviour.

Air delivery of relief supplies would demand an agreement from all parties for the opening of the necessary airports. In that connection, the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina had informed the Secretary-General on 19 May that civilian and military airports were being destroyed by JNA. UNPROFOR had raised with JNA and the Serb side the possibility of opening Sarajevo airport for humanitarian deliveries, with the latter two agreeing to consider that option provided all shipments were checked to ensure that no weapons were included. The Commander of Serbian forces in Sarajevo confirmed on 26 May that he was ready to participate in immediate negotiations on the subject; that was being followed up by UNPROFOR. A further possible way of delivering supplies would be by airdrops from helicopters, which would require negotiated agreements to ensure their safety.

Armed protection was the second option discussed by the Secretary-General to ensure the delivery of humanitarian relief. It would require the deployment of troops to clear the route in advance and project each convoy's passage. As inflicting hardship on civilians was a strategy of war for some of the parties, the use of force by those troops to fulfil their task would very likely be predisposed. In order to guarantee the security of Sarajevo airport, a considerable body of United Nations troops and armaments would be needed to secure the surrounding hills, from which the airport could be easily shelled; that too would be a potential combat operation.

Providing armed protection for convoys of humanitarian supplies en route from Sarajevo airport to the distribution centres within the city was a less ambitious option, which would require an agreement that no party would fire at the airport or its approaches while such supplies were arriving. That option would necessitate an addition to UNPROFOR's mandate, as well as extra troops and consultations with troop-contributing Governments if existing UNPROFOR personnel were proposed for that purpose. However, any mandate requiring United Nations troops to take coercive action in Bosnia and Herzegovina could make it more difficult to secure the cooperation which UNPROFOR needed in the UNPAS in Croatia. the Secretary-General pointed out

A more promising course would be to persuade the warring parties to conclude and honour agreements permitting unimpeded delivery of relief supplies. Recent developments, including a more receptive attitude by the Serb military leader in Sarajevo and the willingness of the authorities in Belgrade, expressed in a 26 May letter,⁽³¹⁾ to use their influence to help unhindered engagement of the United Nations and international humanitarian organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, suggested that conditions might be more propitious for such agreements than in previous weeks. The Chief Military Observer of UNPROFOR, who led the sole remaining international presence at Sarajevo, would continue to do all he could to arrange negotiations to that effect. The Secretary-General had also requested the United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator to take any steps necessary to facilitate the early negotiation of agreements that would allow unimpeded delivery of humanitarian supplies, in close consultation with UNHCR, ICRC and other agencies involved.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 May)

On 30 May, following an urgent request from Canada,⁽³²⁾ the Security Council convened to consider the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and adopted resolution 757(1992).

The Security council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 721(1991) of 27 November 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991, 727(1992) of 8 January 1992, 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, 749(1992) of 7 April 1992 and 752(1992) of 15 May 1992,

Noting that in the very complex context of events in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia all parties bear some responsibility for the situation,

Reaffirming its support for the Conference on Yugoslavia, including the efforts undertaken by the European Community in the framework of the discussions on constitutional arrangements for Bosnia and Herzegovina, and recalling that no territorial gains or changes brought about by violence are acceptable and that the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina are inviolable.

Deploing the fact that the demands in resolution 752(1992) have not been complied with, including its demands:

—That all parties and others concerned in Bosnia and Herzegovina stop the fighting immediately, —That all forms of interference from outside Bosnia and Herzegovina cease immediately,

—That Bosnia and Herzegovina's neighbours take swift action to end all interference and respect the territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

—That action be taken as regards units of the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the disbanding and disarming with weapons placed under effective international monitoring of any units that are neither withdrawn nor placed under the authority of the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina, —That all irregular forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina be disbanded and disarmed.

Deploing further that its call for the immediate cessation of forcible expulsions and attempts to change the ethnic composition of the population has not been heeded, and reaffirming in this context the need for the effective protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including those of ethnic minorities,

Dismayed that conditions have not yet been established for the effective and unhindered delivery of humanitarian assistance, including safe and secure access to and from Sarajevo and other airports in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Deeply concerned that those United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) personnel remaining in Sarajevo have been subjected to deliberate mortar and small-arms fire, and that the United Nations Military Observers deployed in the Mostar region have had to be withdrawn, Deeply concerned also at developments in Croatia, including persistent cease-fire violations and the continued expulsion of non-Serb civilians, and at the obstruction of and lack of cooperation with UNPROFOR in other parts of Croatia.

Deploring the tragic incident on 18 May 1992 which caused the death of a member of the ICRC team in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Nothing that the claim by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations has not been generally accepted.

Expressing its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General of 26 May 1992 pursuant to resolution 752(1992).

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and the Continuing role that the European Community is playing in working for a peaceful solution in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as in other republics of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Recalling its decision in resolution 752(1992) to consider further steps to achieve a peaceful solution in conformity with relevant resolution of the Council, and affirming its determination to take measures against any party or parties which fail to fulfil the requirements of resolution 752(1992) and its other relevant resolution,

Determined in this context to adopt certain measures with the sole objective achieving a peaceful solution and encouraging the efforts undertaken by the European Community and its member States,

Recalling the right of States, under Article 50 of the Charter, to consult the Security Council where they find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying of preventive or enforcement measures,

Determining that the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in other parts of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the failure of the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), including the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA), to take effective measures to the fulfil the requirements of resolution 752(1992);

2. Demands that any elements of the Croatian Army still present in Bosnia and Herzegovina act in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 752(1992) without further delay;

10. Decides that the measures imposed by this resolution shall not apply to activities related to UNPROFOR, to the Conference on Yugoslavia or to the European Community Monitoring Mission, and that States, parties and other concerned shall cooperate fully with UNPROFOR, the Conference on Yugoslavia and the European Community Monitoring Mission and respect fully their freedom of movement and the safety of their personnel;

11. Calls upon all States, including States not Members of the United Nations, and all international organizations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the date of the present resolution;

12. Requests all States to report to the Secretary General by 22 June 1992 on the measures they have instituted for meeting the obligations set out in paragraphs 4 to 9 above;

13. Decides that the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) shall undertake the following tasks additional to those in respect of the arms embargo established by resolutions 713(1991) and 727(1992):

(a) To examine the reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 12 above;

(b) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 4 to 9 above;

(c) To consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 4 to 9 above and, in that context, to make recommendations to the Council on ways to increase their effectiveness;

(d) To recommend appropriate measures in response to violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 4 to 9 above and provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

(e) To consider and approve the guidelines referred to in paragraph 6 above;

(f) To consider and decide upon expeditiously any applications for the approval of flights for humanitarian or other purposes consistent with the relevant resolutions of the Council in accordance with paragraph 7 above;

14. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee in the fulfilment of its tasks, including supplying such information as may be sought by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council, not later than 15 June 1992 and earlier if he considers it appropriate, on the implementation of resolution 752(1992) by all parties and others concerned;

16. Decides to keep under continuous review the measures imposed by paragraphs 4 to 9 above with a view to considering whether such measures might be suspended or terminated following compliance with the requirements of resolution 72(1992);

17. Demands that all parties and others concerned create immediately the necessary conditions for unimpeded delivery of humanitarian supplies to Sarajevo and other destinations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the establishment of a security zone encompassing Sarajevo and its airport and respecting the agreements signed in Geneva on 22 May 1992;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his good offices in order to achieve the objectives contained in paragraph 17 above, and invites him to keep under continuous review any further measures that may become necessary to ensure unimpeded delivery of humanitarian supplies;

19. Urges all States to respond to the Revised Joint Appeal for humanitarian assistance of early May 1992 issued by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization;

20. Reiterates the call in paragraph 2 of resolution 752(1992) that all parties continue their efforts in the framework of the Conference on Yugoslavia and that the three communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina resume their discussions on constitutional arrangements for Bosnia and Herzegovina;

21. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter and to consider immediately, whenever necessary, further steps to achieve a peaceful solution in conformity with relevant resolutions of the Council.

Reports of the Secretary-General (30 May and 6 June). Pursuant to Council resolution 752(1992), the Secretary-General submitted on 30 May a report(33) on the status of the withdrawal of JNA and Croatian Army forces from Bosnia and Herzegovina.

On 4 May, Belgrade authorities had announced their decision to withdraw by 18 May all JNA personnel who were not citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina. On 13 May, the Vice-President of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) proposed to the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina that talks be resumed with the participation of representatives of the Bosnian Serb and Croat communities. That same day, authorities of the so-called "Serbian Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina" announced the formation of their own army, composed of former JNA units and under the command of General Ratko Mladic (formerly of JNA).

On 17 May, the JNA Chief of General Staff requested assistance from the Secretary-General in withdrawing JNA troops from Bosnia and Herzegovina, referring to a 10 May agreement signed on UNPROFOR premises at Sarajevo by Bosnia and Herzegovina, JNA, ECMM and the representative of the Chairman of the Conference on Yugoslavia. On 21 May, the Vice-President of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) again wrote to the Secretary-General, asking that he request Bosnia and Herzegovina to unblock the JNA garrisons at Sarajevo. By a letter of 25 May, the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina requested that UNPROFOR supervise the withdrawal of part of the JNA personnel and weapons, in accordance with the 10 May agreement.

However, the majority of JNA personnel deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina were actually citizens of that republic and therefore not covered by Belgrade's decision to withdraw JNA. Apparently, most joined the army of the "Serbian Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina", while others became members of the Territorial Defence of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which was under the political control of the presidency of that republic. Still others might have joined various irregular forces. The barely 20 per cent of JNA forces who were not citizens were mostly believed to have already withdrawn into Serbia or Montenegro. Others, however, remained at various garrisons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, especially in Serb-controlled areas, including two installations on the outskirts of Sarajevo; a further category consisted of personnel blockaded in their barracks by the Territorial Defence or hostile irregular forces, mostly in the Sarajevo area.

Clearly, the Secretary-General said, the withdrawal of remaining JNA troops from their barracks had become tied to other problems in the conflict; in particular, it was complicated by problems relating to the withdrawal of heavy weapons. While JNA leadership in Belgrade had indicated its willingness to leave the bulk of those weapons behind, the leaders of the army of the "Serbian Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina" would not. Uncertainly about who exercised political control over the Serb forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina further complicated the situation. Initially, the President of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been reluctant to engage in talks on those and other issues with the leadership of the "Serbian Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina" and insisted on direct talks with the Belgrade authorities, but it became clear that the word of the latter was not binding on the army of General Mladic; for example, it appeared that the heavy shelling of Sarajevo on the night of 28/29 May was ordered by the latter, in direct contravention of the instructions issued by General Nedeljko Boskovic and JNA leadership in Belgrade.

Given the doubts about the ability of the Belgrade authorities to influence General Mladic, efforts were made by UNPROFOR to appeal to him directly, as well as through the political leadership of the "Serbian Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina". As a result, he agreed on 30 May to stop the bombardment of Sarajevo. President Izetbegovic had since agreed to deal with General Mladic, but not with the political leadership of the "Serbian Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina."

No withdrawal of the Croatian Army from Bosnia and Herzegovina had taken place. The Croatian authorities consistently took the position that the soldiers involved there had left the Croatian Army and were not subject to its authority. International observers believed, however, that portions of Bosnia and Herzegovina were under the control of Croatian military units, whether belonging to the local Territorial Defence, to paramilitary groups or to the Croatian Army. It was unclear under the circumstances how their withdrawal or disbandment, as required by the Council, could be achieved, the Secretary-General said.

Resolution 752(1992) outlined three possible alternatives for units of JNA and Croatian Army elements in Bosnia and Herzegovina: they could be withdrawn; be subject to the authority of the Government of the republic; or be disbanded and disarmed, with their weapons placed under international monitoring. International assistance could play a role in implementing each of those alternatives; however, it was contingent on agreements being respected by all parties, especially by the commanders of the units and elements concerned. Such agreements would need to specify clearly which military personnel were deemed "units of JNA" or "elements of the Croatian Army"—a difficult task given the positions of the Croatian and Belgrade authorities and of the other parties involved. Those providing international assistance would also need to be given details, accepted by the principal parties, of the numbers, locations and armament of all troops to which the agreements applied.

International assistance could take various forms, such as monitoring and verifying implementation of agreements. International military personnel could be deployed to help build confidence as troops were assembled and moved out of the republic or to locations where they would pass under the Government's authority, or be disarmed and disbanded. All those forms, however, assumed voluntary agreements by those in political and operational control of the troops concerned, with the latter carrying out the orders they received.

The Council's decision in resolution 757(1992) to impose sanctions on Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) created a new situation. It was not yet clear what implications the decision would have, but it was to be hoped that it would make it easier to negotiate the necessary agreements.
