1. Commends the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for its work with regard to the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Welcomes the innovative procedures adopted by the Committee for reviewing the implementation of the Convention in States whose reports are overdue and for formulating concluding observations on State party reports;

3. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the Convention still have not fulfilled their financial obligations;

4. Expresses once again its concern that such a situation may lead to a further delay in the discharge of the substantive obligations of the Committee under the Convention;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the work of its forty-first session;

6. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention and to pay their outstanding contributions and, if possible, their contributions for 1993 before 1 February 1993, so as to enable the Committee to meet regularly;

7. Strongly appeals to all States parties, especially those in arrears, to fulfil their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties which are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

9. Decides to consider at its forty-eighth session, under the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination", the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the report of the Committee.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious freedom

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report(27) by Special Rapporteur Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro (Portugal) containing information from 25 Governments on their legislative provisions and measures to restrict religious intolerance and discrimination. He discussed allegations of infringements of the rights and freedoms set out in the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.⁽²⁸⁾ He expressed concern at the persistence of the allegations, stating that they ranged from extra-judicial killings of clergy members to the prohibition of specific manifestations relating to a particular religion or belief. He noted, however, continued progress made in the area of religious freedom by countries in Eastern Europe.

The Special Rapporteur urged States that had not done so to ratify the relevant international human rights instruments and recommended that they continue to consider preparing a separate binding international instrument on the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief. He believed that States should adapt legislation to existing international standards, particularly the 1981 Declaration, and make available effective administrative and judicial remedies. He underlined the importance of promoting religious tolerance and understanding by introducing national and international human rights standards in school and university curricula and through the training of teaching staff. In that regard, he noted the important contribution that could be made by advisory services and technical assistance offered by the United Nations. The Special Rapporteur emphasized the significant role of media briefings and information seminars aimed at the broadest possible dissemination of principles set out in the 1981 Declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽²⁹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights continued in 1992 to consider measures to implement the 1981 Declaration. On 21 February,⁽³⁰⁾ it urged States to provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and called on them to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect for freedom of religion or belief and to examine the supervision and training of members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure their respect for different religions and beliefs. It invited the United Nations University (UNU) and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on encouraging understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief. It considered it desirable to enhance United Nations promotional and public information activities relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that measures were taken to that end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights"). The Commission asked the Secretary-General to accord high priority to disseminating the text of the Declaration in all United Nations official languages and in national languages and to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres (UNICs) and other interested bodies. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and called on Governments to cooperate with him. It asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to enable him to report to the Commission in 1993. The Secretary-General was also asked to report in 1993.

The Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years and its request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to him was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1992/226 of 20 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/129 without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing that those rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Affirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 46/131 of 17 December 1991, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/17 of 21 February 1992, in which the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures, as appropriate, was extended for three years, and taking note also of Economic and Social Council decision 1992/226 of 20 July 1992,

Recognizing that it is desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and that both Governments and non-governmental organizations have an important role to play in this domain,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief,

Conscious of the importance of education in ensuring tolerance of religion and belief,

Alarmed that serious instances, including acts of violence, of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief occur in many parts of the world, as evidenced in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Mr. Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief;

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide adequate guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there is intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief;

4. Urges all States therefore to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

6. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief, and to establish and maintain places for these purposes;

7. Also calls upon all States in accordance with their national legislation to exert utmost efforts to ensure that religious places and shrines are fully respected and protected;

8. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that appropriate measures are taken to this end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration, in all the official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres and by other interested bodies;

10. Encourages the continued efforts on the part of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

11. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

12. Recommends that the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion be given appropriate priority in the work of the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, with regard to, inter alia, the drafting of basic legal texts in conformity with international instruments on human rights and taking into account the provisions of the Declaration;

13. Encourages the Human Rights Committee to give priority to its announced intention to prepare a general comment on article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, dealing with freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

14. Welcomes the efforts of non-governmental organizations to promote the implementation of the Declaration;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the implementation of the Declaration and in the dissemination of its text in national and local languages;

16. Urge all States to consider disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in national and local languages;

17. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

18. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) without vote, 3 December (meeting 56); 55-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.60), orally revised; agenda item 97 (b).

Indigenous populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March 1992,(31) the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see below) be authorized to meet for 10 days prior to the 1992 session of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to intensify efforts to complete a draft declaration on indigenous rights. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group and its Chairman-Rapporteur, to transmit the Group's 1991 report(13) to Governments, indigenous peoples' and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments and suggestions, and to ensure that the Group's sessions were provided with interpretation and documentation in English and Spanish. The Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to consider favourably requests for contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, established by the General Assembly in 1985.(32)

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/231, authorized the Group to meet for 10 working days prior to the Subcommission's 1992 session and approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Group.

Working Group activities. At its tenth session (Geneva, 20-31 July), the Working Group on Indigenous Populations(33) continued the first reading of the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples,(34) provision by provision, and began the second reading of draft operative paragraphs 1 to 14. It recommended that the revised text be sent to Governments, intergovernmental and indigenous peoples' organizations and NGOs for their comments.

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992, the Subcommission adopted a resolution on the draft declaration on indigenous peoples(35) and another on the relocation of Navajo and Hopi families.(36) It also had before it a report on transnational investments and operations on the lands of indigenous peoples,(37) prepared by the Transnational Corporations and Management Division of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Development.

Other action. In accordance with a 1990 decision of the Economic and Social Council,(38) the United Nations Technical Conference on Practical Experience in the Realization of Sustainable and Environmentally Sound Self-Development of Indigenous Peoples was held at Santiago, Chile, from 18 to 22 May 1992.(39)

In accordance with a series of working principles that emerged from its discussions, which incorporated many of the concerns and practical experiences of indigenous peoples in achieving sustainable and environmentally sound self-development, the Conference proposed that: national development projects affecting indigenous peoples be preceded by studies of their socio-economic and environmental impact; the United Nations, with the consent of indigenous peoples, take measures to protect their property rights; meetings of United Nations agencies on indigenous peoples include indigenous representation, provide adequate notice and, when possible, be held on indigenous territories; environmentally sound management of resources and ecosystems of indigenous peoples be encouraged through the provision of funds; and mechanisms be developed to identify, prevent and provide sanctions against environmental degradation. It also recommended that the United Nations consider holding further expert meetings on questions concerning indigenous peoples and the environment, land, resources and culture, and that the Secretary-General give the widest possible distribution to the Conference's report and recommendations.

The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) made a number of recommendations on recognizing and strengthening the role of indigenous people and their communities.(40)

Economic and social relations between indigenous peoples and states

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March 1992,(41) the Commission recommended a draft decision on economic and social relations between indigenous peoples and States for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July, the Council, by decision 1992/255, requested United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to ensure that all technical assistance financed or provided by them was compatible with international instruments and standards applicable to indigenous peoples. It encouraged efforts to promote coordination among United Nations organizations and greater participation of indigenous peoples in planning and implementing projects affecting them. It also encouraged the regional commissions to organize meetings with representative organizations of indigenous peoples in accordance with a 1990 General Assembly resolution.(42)

Protection of property rights

Cultural property

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(43) the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it endorse the appointment of Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) as the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur to prepare and submit in 1993 a study of measures that should be taken by the international community to strengthen respect for the cultural property of indigenous peoples, and ask the Secretary-General to provide her with the assistance required to complete that task.

On 20 July, the Council, by decision 1992/256, endorsed the Special Rapporteur's appointment and the request that the Secretary-General provide her with assistance.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(44) the Subcommission recommended that the Special Rapporteur consider the relationship between indigenous cultural and intellectual property in her study and include recommendations for further research and action on intellectual property.

Intellectual property

In July 1992,(45) the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Subcommittee on the extent to which indigenous peoples could utilize existing international standards and mechanisms to protect their intellectual property, drawing attention to gaps or obstacles and to possible measures for addressing them. He stated that the intellectual property of indigenous peoples was divided into three categories (folklore and crafts, biodiversity, and indigenous knowledge) and described protection in force under existing arrangements for each category. He concluded that existing international agreements did not specifically address indigenous concerns and therefore might merit review and amendment.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(46) the Commission endorsed the Subcommittee's 1991 requests(13) to Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba) to prepare a progress report on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations for submission to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and the Subcommittee in 1992 and to the Secretary-General to assist him.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/253, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommittee's requests.

Subcommittee action. On 27 August 1992,(47) the Subcommittee, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's first progress report,(48) regretted that he could not submit it on time to the Working Group and requested him to submit a second progress report to the Group and the Subcommittee in 1994.

UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

In November 1992,(49) the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations. As at 30 September 1992, contributions totalling $358,704 had been received from 16 Governments. In addition, $18,760 was received from three NGOs. In April, the Board of Trustees of the Fund recommended the awarding of 41 travel and subsistence grants to beneficiaries from 19 countries. The Secretary-General endorsed the Board's recommendation.

On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 47/430, called on Governments, NGOs and representatives of indigenous groups to consider making contributions to the Fund and to disseminate information about its activities. It also requested the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on the Fund's status.

International Year of the World's Indigenous People (1993)

On 10 December 1992, the International Year of the World's Indigenous People (1993) was launched with the theme "Indigenous people—a new partnership". Preparations for the Year, which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1990,(50) were undertaken by the Commission on Human Rights, its Subcommittee, the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Governments and intergovernmental and indigenous peoples' organizations.

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March 1992,(51) the Commission recommended that specialized agencies, regional commissions and other United Nations organizations, in considering their contributions to the success of the Year, be guided by how their operational activities could most effectively contribute to solving problems faced by indigenous people and how indigenous people could play an important role in planning, implementing and evaluating projects which might affect them. It asked Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their initiatives and encouraged them to consult indigenous peoples and NGOs working with them. The Commission accepted the task of promoting the programme of activities, annexed to a 1991 Assembly resolution,(52) as a guideline for the Year, and acknowledged the Assembly's request that it convene a meeting after the Year to assess what conclusions could be drawn from the activities.

The Commission acknowledged the appointment of the Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights as the Coordinator of the Year and urged him to solicit the cooperation of other elements of the United Nations, including financial and development institutions. It welcomed his convening of a technical meeting of specialized agencies, regional commissions and other United Nations organizations with representatives of States, organizations of indigenous people and other NGOs (Geneva, 9-11 March 1992)(53), to identify programmes areas; agree on objectives for special projects to be implemented in 1993; consider existing project guidelines and recommend means to include indigenous people in initiating, designing and implementing special projects in 1993; suggest measures to evaluate projects involving indigenous people in 1993 and thereafter; and consider financial provisions needed to implement projects. The Secretary-General was asked to give all necessary assistance to the Coordinator to allow him to carry out his tasks.

The Commission asked the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights (1993) to take into account that the Conference would take place during the Year. It encouraged States in a position to do so to consider means by which they could provide resources to assist United Nations work on the Year and urged them, together with intergovernmental and indigenous peoples' organizations and NGOs, to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the Year. The Commission proposed to the Assembly that the title of the Year be amended to "1993—The International Year of the World's Indigenous People".

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992,(54) the Subcommission adopted a resolution on the Year.

Working Group activities. At its July session,(33) the Working Group on Indigenous Populations recommended that, to mark the Year, the United Nations should launch an annual report on the state of the world's indigenous peoples, including statistics and analyses compiled by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies in collaboration with indigenous peoples and their organizations.

UNDP action. In an April report on the Year,(55) the UNDP Administrator described activities relating to indigenous people and proposed future activities that UNDP could support, such as improving living standards, economic and technological development, preserving natural resources and environmental conservation, and cultural revitalization. UNDP would give due consideration to the programme of activities for the Year,(52) continue to participate in meetings to foster coordination among United Nations organizations before and during the Year, and join in efforts to harmonize guidelines concerning activities relevant to indigenous communities.

On 26 May,(56) the UNDP Governing Council asked the Administrator to contribute to the programme of activities for the Year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/75 without vote.

International Year of the World's Indigenous People, 1993

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in the Charter, is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without discrimination as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling its resolution 45/164 of 18 December 1990, in which it proclaimed 1993 as the International Year of the World's Indigenous People, with a view to strengthening international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous communities in areas such as human rights, the environment, development, education and health,

Recognizing the value and the diversity of the cultures and the forms of social organization of the world's indigenous people,

Welcoming the report of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as well as resolution 1992/45 of 3 March 1992 regarding the International Year of the World's Indigenous People, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session,

Noting the need to conclude the technical meeting provided for in paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 46/128 of 17 December 1991 in accordance with the requirements of paragraphs 1 and 2 (b) of the same resolution,

1. Reaffirms that it proclaimed 1993 as the International Year of the World's Indigenous People, with the theme of "Indigenous people—a new partnership";

2. Calls upon the United Nations system and Governments that have not yet done so to develop policies in support of the objectives and the theme of the Year and to strengthen the institutional framework for their implementation;

3. Urges the Coordinator for the International Year of the World's Indigenous People to continue to solicit actively the cooperation of specialized agencies, regional commissions, financial and development institutions and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system for the promotion of the programme of activities contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/128;

4. Requests the Coordinator to reconvene from within existing resources, in the three working days preceding the eleventh session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, the technical meeting-provided for in paragraph 8 of resolution 46/128, with a view to concluding its deliberations and finalizing its report;

5. Stresses that governmental and intergovernmental activities undertaken within the context of the Year and beyond should take fully into account the development needs of indigenous people and the need for making full use of the contributions that indigenous communities can bring to sustainable national development;

6. Notes that there is a continuing need to improve the availability and the means of dissemination of socio-economic data relating to the development needs of indigenous people and that the Year should contribute to enhancing and to facilitating the coordination capabilities of Member States for collecting and analysing information in that area;

7. Appeals to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as indigenous people's organizations, to contribute to the voluntary fund for the Year opened by the Secretary-General;

8. Recommends to the Secretary-General that he should give all assistance necessary to the Coordinator to permit him to carry out his tasks;

9. Recommends that the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights should continue to consider at its upcoming meeting how issues pertinent to the Year could be addressed within the framework of the Conference;

10. Stresses the relevance for the solution of problems faced by indigenous communities of the recommendations made in chapter 26 of Agenda 21, contained in the report of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

11. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to ask the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, at its eleventh session, and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its forty-fifth session, to complete their consideration of the draft universal declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and to submit their report to the Commission at its fiftieth session;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the activities developed and the results achieved within the context of the Year.

Migrant workers

International Convention

As at 31 December 1992, Mexico and Morocco(17) had signed the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in 1990.(57)

The Secretary-General reported that, as at 1 August 1992, no ratifications of or accessions to the Convention had been received.(58)

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1992,(59) the Commission urged all States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention, and asked United Nations agencies and organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to disseminate information on it. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance necessary to promote the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights") and to report on the Convention's status in 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/110 without vote.

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and to ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Aware of the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and the marked increase in migratory movements that has occurred, especially in certain parts of the world,

Recalling its resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Also recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 46/114 of 17 December 1991, requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the status of the Convention,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families;

2. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, and expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the promotion of the Convention, through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

4. Invites the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the status of the Convention;

6. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-eighth session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

Protection of minorities

Declaration

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,(60) the Commission approved the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities.(61)

In October,(62) the Secretary-General transmitted the text of the draft declaration to the General Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/4 without vote.

Rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/16 of 21 February 1992, in which the Commission approved the text of the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Aware that persons belonging to minorities may also enjoy under international or domestic law rights other than those set forth in the draft declaration,

Recognizing that there is a continuing need to develop international protection in this area,

Believing that the principles and rights as set forth in the draft declaration involve matter of common interest,

Approves the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and recommends it to the General Assembly for adoption and further action.

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/135 without vote.

Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that one of the main purposes of the United Nations, as proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, is to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Noting the importance of the even more effective implementation of international human rights instruments with regard to the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Welcoming the increased attention given by human rights treaty bodies to the non-discrimination and protection of minorities,

Aware of the provisions of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights concerning the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities,

Considering that the United Nations has an increasingly important role to play regarding the protection of minorities,

Bearing in mind the work done so far within the United Nations system, in particular through the relevant mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in promoting and protecting the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Recognizing the important achievements in this regard in regional, subregional and bilateral frameworks, which can provide a useful source of inspiration for future United Nations activities,

Stressing the need to ensure for all, without discrimination of any kind, full enjoyment and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and emphasizing the importance of the draft Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities in that regard,

Recalling its resolution 46/115 of 17 December 1991 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/16 of 21 February 1992, by which the Commission approved the text of the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/4 of 20 July 1992, in which the Council recommended it to the General Assembly for adoption and further action,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General,

1. Adopts the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the distribution of the Declaration as widely as possible and to include the text of the Declaration in the next edition of Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

3. Invites United Nations agencies and organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on the Declaration and to promoting understanding thereof;

4. Invites the relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations, including treaty bodies, as well as representatives of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, to give due regard to the Declaration within their mandates;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to consider appropriate ways for the effective promotion of the Declaration and to make proposals thereon;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

ANNEX

Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that one of the basic aims of the United Nations, as proclaimed in the Charter, is to promote and encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small,

Desiring to promote the realization of the principles contained in the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as other relevant international instruments that have been adopted at the universal or regional level and those concluded between individual States Members of the United Nations,

Inspired by the provisions of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights concerning the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities,

Considering that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to the political and social stability of States in which they live,

Emphasizing that the constant promotion and realization of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as an integral part of the development of society as a whole and within a democratic framework based on the rule of law, would contribute to the strengthening of friendship and cooperation among peoples and States,

Considering that the United Nations has an important role to play regarding the protection of minorities,

Bearing in mind the work done so far within the United Nations system, in particular by the Commission on Human Rights, the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the bodies established pursuant to the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant international human rights instruments in promoting and protecting the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Taking into account the important work which is done by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in protecting minorities and in promoting and protecting the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Recognizing the need to ensure even more effective implementation of international human rights instruments with regard to the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Proclaims this Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities:

Article 1

1. States shall protect the existence and the national or ethnic, cultural, religious and linguistic identity of minorities within their respective territories and shall encourage conditions for the promotion of that identity.

2. States shall adopt appropriate legislative and other measures to achieve those ends.

Article 2

1. Persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities (hereinafter referred to as persons belonging to minorities) have the right to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practise their own religion, and to use their own language, in private and in public, freely and without interference or any form of discrimination.

2. Persons belonging to minorities have the right to participate effectively in cultural, religious, social, economic and public life.

3. Persons belonging to minorities have the right to participate effectively in decisions on the national and, where appropriate, regional level concerning the minority to which they belong or the regions in which they live, in a manner not incompatible with national legislation.

4. Persons belonging to minorities have the right to establish and maintain their own associations.

5. Persons belonging to minorities have the right to establish and maintain, without any discrimination, free and peaceful contacts with other members of their group and with persons belonging to other minorities, as well as contacts across frontiers with citizens of other States to whom they are related by national or ethnic, religious or linguistic ties.

1. Persons belonging to minorities may exercise their rights, including those set forth in the present Declaration, individually as well as in community with other members of their group, without any discrimination.

2. No disadvantage shall result for any person belonging to a minority as the consequence of the exercise or non-exercise of the rights set forth in the present Declaration.

Article 4

1. States shall take measures where required to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all their human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law.

2. States shall take measures to create favourable conditions to enable persons belonging to minorities to express their characteristics and to develop their culture, language, religion, traditions and customs, except where specific practices are in violation of national law and contrary to international standards.

3. States should take appropriate measures so that, wherever possible, persons belonging to minorities may have adequate opportunities to learn their mother tongue or to have instruction in their mother tongue.

4. States should, where appropriate, take measures in the field of education, in order to encourage knowledge of the history, traditions, language and culture of the minorities existing within their territory. Persons belonging to minorities should have adequate opportunities to gain knowledge of the society as a whole.

5. States should consider appropriate measures so that persons belonging to minorities may participate fully in the economic progress and development in their country.

Article 5

1. National policies and programmes shall be planned and implemented with due regard for the legitimate interests of persons belonging to minorities.

2. Programmes of cooperation and assistance among States should be planned and implemented with due regard for the legitimate interests of persons belonging to minorities.

Article 6

States should cooperate on questions relating to persons belonging to minorities, inter alia exchanging information and experiences, in order to promote mutual understanding and confidence.

Article 7

States should cooperate in order to promote respect for the rights set forth in the present Declaration.

Article 8

1. Nothing in the present Declaration shall prevent the fulfilment of international obligations of States in relation to persons belonging to minorities. In particular, States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations and commitments they have assumed under international treaties and agreements to which they are parties.

2. The exercise of the rights set forth in the present Declaration shall not prejudice the enjoyment by all persons of universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms.

3. Measures taken by States to ensure the effective enjoyment of the rights set forth in the present Declaration shall nor prima facie be considered contrary to the principle of equality contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

4. Nothing in the present Declaration may be construed as permitting any activity contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, including sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of States.

Article 9

The specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system shall contribute to the full realization of the rights and principles set forth in the present Declaration, within their respective fields of competence.

Ethnic cleansing

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/80 without vote.

“Ethnic cleansing” and racial hatred

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Reaffirming its conviction that any doctrine of superiority based on racial differentiation is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous, and that there is no justification for racial discrimination, in theory or in practice, anywhere,

Reaffirming also its conviction that discrimination between human beings on the grounds of race, colour, religion or ethnic origin is an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations among nations and is capable of disturbing peace and security among peoples and the harmony of persons living side by side even within the same State,

Convinced that the existence of racial and ethnic barriers is repugnant to the ideals of any human society, and aware of the need to strengthen efforts to eliminate all forms of racial hatred,

Alarmed by the fact that, notwithstanding the efforts of the international community to eradicate them, there are still in many parts of the world manifestations of racial discrimination that are encouraged by a philosophy of racial superiority or hatred,

Deeply alarmed by policies and practices of “ethnic cleansing”, which foster hatred and violence, wherever they occur,

Noting the importance of respecting the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/242 of 25 August 1992, in which it states that the abhorrent practice of “ethnic cleansing” constitutes a grave and serious violation of international humanitarian law,

1. Condemns unreservedly “ethnic cleansing” and acts of violence arising from racial hatred;

2. Strongly rejects policies and ideologies aimed at promoting racial hatred and “ethnic cleansing” in any form;

3. Reaffirms that “ethnic cleansing” and racial hatred are totally incompatible with universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Reiterates its conviction that those who commit or order the commission of acts of “ethnic cleansing” are individually responsible and should be brought to justice;

5. Demands that all those who commit or order the commission of acts of “ethnic cleansing” put an end to them immediately;

6. Calls upon all States to cooperate in eliminating all forms of “ethnic cleansing” and racial hatred.

Minority problems

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March 1992,(63) the Commission approved the following requests made by its Subcommission in 1991(64) concerning ways to facilitate the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities: that the Secretary-General prepare, with the cooperation of the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, a technical meeting of experts on minorities with a view to its taking place in 1992; that the Special Rapporteur continue consultations with States and submit a progress report on his study on ways to solve problems involving minorities; and that the Secretary-General give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance he might require. On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/254, endorsed the approval by the Commission of the Subcommission's requests.

On 4 March (65) the Commission requested the Special Rapporteur, in preparing his study, to pay special attention to the living conditions of the Roma (gypsy) community. It asked States to adopt measures to eliminate discrimination against them and invited States to avail themselves of the advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights for that purpose.

The technical meeting of experts on minorities was postponed until 1993.

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992,(66) the Subcommission adopted a resolution on facilitating the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) submitted his second progress report on national experiences regarding peaceful and constructive solutions of problems involving minorities.(67) In an addendum,(68) he reported on replies to a questionnaire on minorities received as at 15 June 1992 from 33 Governments, 5 specialized agencies and 8 NGOs. A reply from Yugoslavia was submitted separately.(69)

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March 1992,(70) the Commission on Human Rights called on States to take steps to ensure the full enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) or with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), their families, those associated with them and people presumed to be at risk of infection, paying particular attention to women, children and other vulnerable groups, in order to prevent discrimination against them. It asked the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and similar bodies to monitor States parties' compliance with their commitments under the relevant human rights instruments regarding the rights of people infected with HIV or AIDS, their families and people with whom they lived, or people presumed to be at risk. It welcomed a 1990 preliminary report(71) and a 1991 progress report (64) of the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, and endorsed requests made by the Subcommission in 1991 that he submit his final report in 1992 and that the Secretary-General give him any assistance he required.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/234, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's requests.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July 1992, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Luis Varela Quirós (Costa Rica), submitted a report on discrimination against HIV-infected people or people with AIDS.(72) The report was intended to be a final report but, owing to inadequate support and minimum financial means, it could not be properly completed. The Special Rapporteur described the global AIDS situation, the importance of preventing AIDS-related discrimination, discriminatory practices and legal policy frameworks for protection against discrimination. He provided a synopsis of replies to a questionnaire received from 41 Governments, 2 United Nations specialized agencies, 10 United Nations bodies, 4 intergovernmental organizations and 28 NGOs containing information on the legal and policy framework introduced in response to AIDS. The Special Rapporteur concluded that strategies to prevent AIDS-related discrimination needed to combine education with legal protection against discrimination. He outlined a number of measures for consideration by the Subcommission.

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992,(73) the Subcommission requested that the Special Rapporteur submit his final report in 1993 and that the Secretary-General assist him.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1992, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽¹⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽²⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 115 and 67 States, respectively.⁽³⁾ Angola, Azerbaijan, Benin, Brazil, Cambodia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Guatemala, Latvia, Lesotho, Paraguay, Seychelles, Slovenia, Switzerland and the United States became parties to the Covenant in 1992; Angola, Belarus, Benin, Bulgaria, Chile, Cyprus and Seychelles acceded to or ratified the Optional Protocol.

The Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in 1989⁽⁴⁾ and in force since July 1991⁽⁵⁾—had been ratified or acceded to by 12 States as at 31 December 1992.⁽³⁾ Germany and Luxembourg ratified it in 1992.

In a report to the Commission on Human Rights,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Optional Protocols as at 10 December 1992 (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocols and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. A similar appeal was made in July by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1992/11. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on the status of the Covenant and its Optional Protocols.

Implementation

Human Rights Committee activities. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1992: its forty-fourth in New York from 23 March to 10 April; and its forty-fifth from 13 to 31 July and forty-sixth from 19 October to 6 November, both at Geneva.

At those sessions, the Committee considered reports from 14 States—Algeria, Belarus, Belgium, Burundi, Colombia, Iran, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Peru, Republic of Korea, Senegal, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on 21 communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated. The cases concerned citizens or residents of Austria, Canada, Ecuador, Finland, France, Hungary, Jamaica, the Netherlands, Panama and Peru. The Committee decided that 22 other such communications were inadmissible.

The Committee adopted and annexed to its report⁽⁸⁾ general comments on articles 7 and 10 of the Covenant, which prohibit torture and forced subjection to medical or scientific experimentation and urge humane treatment of prisoners. The comments were intended to assist States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and promote the Covenant's implementation. In May,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the general comments to the Economic and Social Council, which, by decision 1992/263 of 20 July, took note of them.

At its October/November session,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Committee, in view of the situation in the former Yugoslavia, examined special reports submitted by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). (For details on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia, see below, under "Human rights violations".)

State of siege or emergency

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft decision concerning the work of the Special Rapporteur.

teur on human rights and states of emergency (see below). On the same date,(12) it called on States to maintain the right of habeas corpus at all times and under all circumstances, including states of emergency.

On 21 February,(7) the Commission, as did the Council later in the year in resolution 1992/11, underlined the necessity for strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the Covenant and the need for States parties to provide full and timely information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances could be assessed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/249, endorsed a 1991 Subcommittee request(13) to the Special Rapporteur to continue updating the list of states of emergency and to include in his annual report to the Subcommittee and the Commission the completed draft standard provisions on emergency situations. It also endorsed the Subcommittee's request that the Secretary-General provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he might require.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) submitted his fifth annual report containing information on 80 States which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency.(14) Previous reports were issued in 1987,(15) 1988,(16) 1989,(17) and 1991.(13) The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights invite countries that made up the former USSR to request advisory services from the Centre for Human Rights. He further recommended that the Commission propose the inclusion in the agenda of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights") an item on strengthening protection of human rights during states of emergency.

As requested by the Subcommittee on 27 August 1992,(18) the Special Rapporteur revised and updated his fifth report,(19) which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission in November.(20)

Self-determination of peoples

By three resolutions adopted in 1992, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination of the people of Afghanistan,(21) Palestine(22) and Western Sahara.(23) A fourth resolution(24) adopted under the item pertained to the use of mercenaries as a means to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. In addition, the Commission adopted a decision on Cambodia,(25) concerning the development by the Centre for Human Rights of a human rights information programme in that country.

With regard to South Africa, the Commission, in a 28 February resolution on the human rights situation there,(26) reaffirmed the international consensus to oppose apartheid, support the peaceful struggle to eradicate apartheid and facilitate the creation of a non-racial, democratic South Africa. In another resolution of the same date,(27) the Commission reaffirmed its support for the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic South Africa. (For further details on South Africa, see below, under "Human rights violations".)

Report of the Secretary-General. In September,(28) the Secretary-General summarized action taken in 1992 by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council on the right of peoples to self-determination. He also summarized a reply received from Cuba in response to his request for information from States for inclusion in his report, prepared in response to two 1991 Assembly resolutions.(29)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1992, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

On 16 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/83 without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh and forty-eighth sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989, 45/131 of 14 December 1990 and 46/88 of 16 December 1991,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

General Assembly resolution 47/83

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/659) without vote, 28 October (meeting 20); 34-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.5); agenda item 92.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 3-10, 13, 20; plenary 89.

Also on 16 December, on the Third Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/82 by recorded vote.

Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in the importance of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming also the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming further the obligation of all Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and foreign domination,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) and all relevant resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Considering the urgent need of Namibia for assistance in its efforts to reconstruct and strengthen its fledgling economic and social structures,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption at Harare on 21 August 1989 of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa and its subsequent endorsement by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989), as well as the report of the Monitoring Group of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa, and the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1989,

Welcoming Security Council resolution 765(1992) of 16 July 1992, and Council resolution 772(1992) of 17 August 1992 which, inter alia provides the basis for action by the Secretary-General in South Africa in order to assist the people of South Africa in ending the violence in that country,

Recalling the Abuja Declaration on South Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-seventh ordinary session, held at Abuja from 3 to 5 June 1991,

Reaffirming that the system of apartheid imposed on the South African people constitutes a violation of the fundamental rights of that people, a crime against humanity and a threat to regional peace and security,

Deeply concerned that, in spite of the National Peace Accord signed on 14 September 1991, acts of assassination of members and leaders of national liberation movements in South Africa are still continuing,

Recalling its resolution 46/79 A, adopted by consensus on 13 December 1991, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the need for the full implementation of the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa that were not yet fulfilled,

Noting with concern that, while significant legal and political measures in the right direction have been undertaken by the Government of South Africa, there remain various pieces of security legislation that restrict the possibilities for free and peaceful political activity, and that apartheid remains in place,

Noting also with concern that political trials and the detention of opponents of apartheid continue in South Africa in total disregard of the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Deeply concerned about the current wave of violence in South Africa resulting from the continued existence of apartheid policies, practices and structures as well as from actions of those forces opposed to the democratic transformation of the country,

Gravely concerned that a number of South African patriots remain on death row,

Welcoming the signing of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, at Rome on 4 October 1992,^a which provides for the termination of the armed conflict in that country,

Reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Considering that the continuation of the Israeli oppressive measures and the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, sovereignty, independence and return to Palestine constitute a serious threat to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind United Nations resolutions related to the question of Palestine and the rights of the Palestinian people,

Deeply concerned and alarmed at the deplorable consequences of Israel's acts of aggression against Lebanon and its practices in and its continuing occupation of parts of southern Lebanon, as well as its refusal to implement the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully and faithfully all the relevant resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by peoples under colonial and foreign domination;

2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign occupation, in all its forms and by all available means;

3. Reaffirms also the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and all peoples under foreign occupation and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without foreign interference;

4. Calls upon those Governments which do not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial domination, alien subjugation and foreign occupation to do so;

5. Calls upon Israel to refrain from the constant, deliberate violations of the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people, which constitute an obstacle to the achievement of self-determination and independence by the Palestinian people and the ongoing efforts towards comprehensive peace in the region;

6. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations, to extend their support to the Palestinian people through its sole and legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization, in its struggle to regain its right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Urgently appeals to all States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations to render assistance to Namibia in order to enhance its efforts to promote democracy and economic development;

8. Reaffirms its rejection of the so-called "tricameral constitution" of 1983 as null and void, and reiterates that peace in South Africa can be guaranteed only by the establishment of majority rule through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and undivided South Africa;

9. Strongly urges the Government of South Africa to take additional steps to implement fully the provisions of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa, and the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

10. Calls for an immediate end to violence and calls upon the Government of South Africa to exercise its responsibility to end it through, inter alia strict adherence to the National Peace Accord;

11. Calls upon all signatories to the National Peace Accord to manifest their commitment to peace by fully implementing its provisions and calls upon all other parties to contribute to the attainment of its objectives;

12. Strongly condemns the establishment and use of armed groups with a view to pitting them against the national liberation movements;

13. Demands that the Government of South Africa repeal the security legislation that remains in force, which inhibits free and peaceful political activity;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to act speedily to implement Security Council resolution 772(1992) in its entirety, including those parts pertaining to the investigation of criminal conduct and the monitoring of all armed formations in the country;

15. Demands the full application of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, imposed under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by all countries and more particularly by those countries which maintain military and nuclear cooperation with the Government of South Africa and continue to supply it with related matériel

16. Expresses its deep concern about the actions by certain countries whose premature relaxation of existing measures against the South African regime, in flagrant violation of the United Nations consensus declaration, encourages the regime to persist in its oppression of the Black majority with regard to their right to self-determination;

17. Strongly urges the international community, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/87 of 16 December 1991, to continue to extend maximum assistance to Lesotho to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

18. Pays tribute to the Government and people of Angola for their noble contribution to the evolving climate of peace in southern Angola;

19. Demands that the Government of South Africa pay compensation to Angola for damages caused, in accordance with the relevant decisions and resolutions of the Security Council;

20. Demands also that the Government of South Africa pay full and adequate compensation to Botswana for the loss of life and damage to property resulting from the unprovoked and unwarranted military attacks of 14 June 1985, 19 May 1986 and 20 June 1988 on the capital of Botswana;

21. Calls upon the international community to extend its generous support to the ongoing efforts aimed at ensuring respect for and the successful implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique" and at assisting the Government of Mozambique in the establishment of lasting peace and democracy and in the promotion of an effective programme of national reconstruction in that country;

22. Fully supports the Secretary-General in his efforts to implement the plan for the settlement of the question of Western Sahara by organizing, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, a referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara;

23. Notes the contacts between the Government of the Comoros and the Government of France in the search for a just solution to the problem of the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question;

24. Strongly condemns the continued violation of the human rights of the peoples still under colonial domination and alien subjugation;

25. Calls for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance given by all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through anti-apartheid organizations and national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity;

26. Reaffirms that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constitutes a criminal act, and calls upon the Governments of all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through their territories to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General;

27. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental individual rights and compliance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

28. Expresses its appreciation for the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial rule continue to receive from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, and calls for a substantial increase in that assistance;

29. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system to do their utmost to ensure the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to intensify their efforts to support peoples under colonial, foreign and racist domination in their just struggle for self-determination and independence;

30. Decides to consider this question at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 107-22-33 (recorded vote)

Afghanistan

On 21 February 1992,(21) the Commission requested the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative to continue to facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988,(30) and a 1991 General Assembly resolution.(31) It called on all parties concerned to work towards a political solution, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of conditions which would enable Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homeland in safety and honour. It appealed to States and organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance to Afghan refugees, in coordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and called on States to provide adequate financial and material resources to the Coordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan in order to repatriate and rehabilitate speedily the Afghan refugees and to reconstruct the country economically and socially.

Cambodia

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,(25) the Commission welcomed the October 1991 signing in Paris of the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict,(32) under which the Commission was to monitor closely the human rights situation in Cambodia after the end of the transitional period. It encouraged the Centre for Human Rights to develop its human rights information programme throughout Cambodia, in coordination with the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) (for details on the establishment of UNTAC, see PART TWO, Chapter III). It requested the Secretary-General to inform it in 1993 of the human rights activities carried out by UNTAC and the Centre.

Subcommission action. The Subcommission, on 27 August,(33) asked the Secretary-General to develop and implement, in collaboration with UNTAC, long-term comprehensive programmes of technical assistance and advisory services which would contribute to the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cambodia. He was to report to the Commission in 1993 on activities undertaken and progress made.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report to the Commission on the situation in Cambodia (34) the Secretary-General described the human rights component of UNTAC, which comprised a staff of 10 in Phnom Penh to cover monitoring and investigation and training, education and information. There were also human rights officers in each of the 21 provinces of Cambodia. As at 10 November 1992, the component had received some 300 complaints at its office at Phnom Penh and almost as many from the provinces. They dealt with land disputes, harassment and intimidation, wrongful imprisonment, wrongful death, destruction and seizure of property, cease-fire violations and injuries. A mission from the Centre for Human Rights visited Cambodia from 11 to 17 October to identify further ways to promote respect for human rights and to strengthen cooperation between the Centre and UNTAC.

The Secretary-General concluded that, although there were continuing grounds for serious concern, real progress had been made. The number of political assassinations had declined, political prisoners and prisoners of war had been released and freedom of expression and association had improved. In addition, UNTAC had drawn up and published an electoral law to conduct free and fair elections to a Constituent Assembly for Cambodia, in consultation with the Supreme National Council. He recommended the appointment of a special rapporteur on Cambodia to review and monitor the human rights situation, and the establishment of an operational presence of the Centre to ensure a continuing human rights presence after UNTAC left and to take over the functions of UNTAC's human rights component.

International symposium. An international symposium on human rights in Cambodia (Phnom Penh, 30 November—2 December 1992)(35) took place under the auspices of UNTAC's human rights component to identify ways in which the international community could provide support to human rights institutions and structures in Cambodia and to explore how the United Nations and other international organizations, NGOs and the Cambodian human rights community could work together to safeguard human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly following the elections and UNTAC's withdrawal from Cambodia.

Palestinians

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 14 February 1992,(22) adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 2, with 17 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel for its continued occupation of the Palestinian territory and called on it to withdraw. It reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and to recover their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter and United Nations resolutions, and affirmed that the intifadah of the Palestinian people since 8 December 1987 was legitimate resistance against Israeli military occupation (for details on the intifadah, see PART TWO, Chapter V). The Commission reaffirmed its support for the call to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East, with the participation of Security Council permanent members and the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). It urged States, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and other international organizations to support and assist the Palestinians through their representative, PLO, and asked the Secretary-General to make available, prior to its 1993 session, information on the implementation of its resolution and to transmit the text to Israel and all other Governments.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,(36) the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 11 votes to 6, with 6 abstentions, similarly condemned Israel and requested the Secretary-General to provide in 1993 an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents relating to the question of Palestine and other occupied Arab territories, with the texts of relevant United Nations decisions and resolutions, the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and all other relevant information.

Western Sahara

On 28 February 1992,(23) the Commission welcomed the 1991 establishment of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the entry into force of a cease-fire on 6 September 1991,(37) accepted by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro. It endorsed the call made in 1991 by the Security Council(38) for both parties to cooperate with the Secretary-General in implementing his 1991 plan.(37) The Commission expressed support for the Secretary-General's efforts to organize and supervise, in cooperation with the Organization for African Unity (OAU), a referendum for self-determination.

Mercenaries

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February,(24) the Commission, reaffirming that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries should be considered as offences of grave concern, called on all States that had not done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries.(39) It decided to extend its Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years to carry out further studies on the use of mercenaries, took note of his 1991 report(40) and requested him to report in 1993.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/225, approved the extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the request that he report in 1993 (see below).

On 28 February,(41) the Commission asked all special rapporteurs and working groups to continue paying particular attention to the adverse effect on the enjoyment of human rights of acts of violence committed by armed groups, regardless of their origin, that spread terror among the population, and by drug traffickers, in their forthcoming reports on the situation of human rights in countries where such acts of violence occurred. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue collecting information on the question from all relevant sources and to make it available to the special rapporteurs and working groups concerned.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1991 Assembly resolution,(42) the Secretary-General, in September 1992,(43) transmitted a preliminary report containing information on mercenary activities covering January to July 1992, prepared by Special Rapporteur Enrique Bernal Ballesteros (Peru). He noted that the most common form of mercenarism was usually associated with an armed conflict involving the exercise of a people's right to self-determination. In addition, mercenary resources and organized groups were available to undertake mercenary activities having a variety of purposes, such as to reinforce insecure political interests, to assist or impede the actions of opposition groups, and to engage in unlawful actions including terrorist acts, drug- and arms-trafficking operations and paid assassinations.

The number of countries affected by armed conflicts had increased in 1992. The Special Rapporteur specifically discussed mercenary activities in Angola, Liberia, Mozambique, South Africa and the former Yugoslavia. He recommended that the Assembly and other United Nations organs suggest to Member States that they: update their legislation to include provisions defining as an offence the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries, as well as mercenary activities carried out within their territory and the transit of mercenaries through it; prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries and regard as aggravating factors the involvement of mercenaries in activities such as trafficking in arms, drugs or illegal currency; and enter into extradition agreements.

In a later report,(44) the Special Rapporteur discussed the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. He described his activities during 1992 and correspondence received from Member States concerning mercenary activities. He reported on mercenary activities in Africa and the former Yugoslavia and the consequences for human rights of violent acts committed by armed groups and drug traffickers.

As to the status of the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries,(39) the Special Rapporteur stated that only five States had signed and ratified or acceded to the Convention—Barbados, Maldives, Seychelles, Suriname and Togo; 14 States had signed it—Angola, Belarus, Cameroon, Congo, Germany, Italy, Morocco, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Ukraine, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire. In accordance with article 19, the Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

States adopt measures to abolish mercenary activity and to prosecute and punish mercenaries. He further recommended that all States be urged to consider ratifying or acceding to the 1989 Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/84 by recorded vote.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/34 of 4 December 1989 on the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries and its resolutions 45/132 of 14 December 1990 and 46/89 of 16 December 1991 on the use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples,

Urging strict respect for the principle of the non-use or threat of the use of force in international relations, as developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples and their liberation movements for their independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign intervention and occupation, and that their legitimate struggle can in no way be considered as or equated to mercenary activity,

Convinced that the use of mercenaries is a threat to international peace and security,

Deeply concerned about the menace that the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African and other developing States,

Profoundly alarmed at the continued international criminal activities of mercenaries in collusion with drug traffickers,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to the fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and impede the process of the self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

Convinced that it is necessary to develop international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of such offences,

Welcoming again the adoption of the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

2. Condemns the continued recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries, for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of African States and of other developing States and fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

3. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are offences of grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Notes with serious concern the use by the Government of South Africa of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements;

5. Denounces any State that persists in, permits or tolerates the recruitment of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

6. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to light the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention or occupation;

7. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

8. Reaffirms that to use channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries is inadmissible;

9. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking early action to accede to or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

10. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the use of mercenaries, especially in view of the additional elements highlighted in his report.

Rights of detained persons

On 28 February 1992,(45) the Commission requested its Subcommittee to continue its practice of creating a sessional working group on detention to draw up proposals regarding human rights in the administration of justice, and to formulate proposals to the Secretary-General on the utility and format of his reports prepared in pursuance of a 1974 Subcommittee resolution.(46) It invited the new Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) to explore ways of cooperating with the human rights programme in the administration of justice.

In May,(47) the Secretary-General informed the Subcommittee that no information had been received as at 20 May 1992 from States, United Nations organs and specialized agencies in response to his request for information relating to the Subcommittee's annual review of developments in the human rights of detainees.

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, established by the Subcommittee on 4 August 1992,(48) met at Geneva on 5 and 6 August.(49) It discussed the annual synopses of material received from Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs and proposed that the Subcommittee suspend consideration of the item and mandate the Working Group to consider the best procedures to be followed and formulate concrete proposals for the Secretary-General on the utility and format of his reports prepared in pursuance of the 1974 Subcommittee resolution.(46)

In its discussion of habeas corpus as a non-derogable right and as one of the requirements for the right to a fair trial, the Group's attention was drawn to the third report to the Subcommittee on the right to a fair trial (see below),(50) which contained an analysis of sources of international norms relating to amparo or habeas corpus, as well as of any derogations. The Group adopted a proposal to establish and maintain a list of countries that practised the death penalty, distinguishing between: countries that had abolished the death penalty under all circumstances; countries that had abolished it only for crimes committed in normal times, excluding crimes committed during a state of emergency or in time of war; countries that had abolished it de facto, by not carrying out sentences handed down, specifying the date of the last execution; countries that had not yet abolished the death penalty; and countries that had abolished it for persons less than 18 years of age.

In connection with a proposal that the Subcommittee prepare a study of the practice of abolitionist countries when presented with an application for extradition for acts that might attract the death penalty in the requesting country, the Group recommended that the Subcommittee include the question on its agenda.

The Group noted that, in compliance with a 1991 Subcommittee decision,(51) the Secretariat had sent letters to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs reminding them to submit their views on a study of the privatization of prisons, but few replies had been received. In August,(52) the Secretary-General summarized replies received from three Governments and one NGO on the subject. On 27 August,(53) the Subcommittee requested Claire Palley (United Kingdom) to prepare an outline of the possible utility, scope and structure of a special study that might be undertaken on the privatization of prisons, to be submitted to the Working Group and the Subcommittee in 1993. It asked the Secretary-General to provide her with all the assistance she might need.

Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In his seventh report to the Commission on torture,(54) Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands) said that he continued to receive requests for urgent action or information concerning persons who were allegedly being tortured or about whom fears were expressed that they might be. He brought 64 of those cases to the immediate attention of the respective Governments, appealing to them to ensure humane treatment of the persons concerned while in detention. Details on the contents of those appeals and of government replies were given in the report.

The Special Rapporteur reported on a visit to East Timor and Indonesia from 4 to 16 November 1991, in response to Indonesia's invitation, where he had met with government officials and NGOs concerned with human rights, and visited a prison in the Jakarta area.

The Special Rapporteur recommended concerted and sustained action by Governments and professional and human rights organizations. He also made a number of other recommendations, some of which were taken up by the Commission in February.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(55) the Commission, commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, stressed his conclusions and recommendations concerning: instituting a system of periodic visits by independent experts to places of detention; guaranteeing to detainees by the judiciary their rights in accordance with international and national standards; declaring illegal incommunicado detention; adopting legal provisions giving a detainee access to legal counsel and the right to initiate promptly after arrest proceedings before a court on the lawfulness of the detention; taking strict measures against members of the medical profession who practised torture; interrogating detainees at official interrogation centres, recording such interrogations and forbidding blindfolding or holding; and establishing at the national level an independent authority to receive complaints about torture or other maltreatment. It endorsed the recommendation that those responsible for acts of torture should be brought to trial and, if found guilty, severely punished. The Commission called on all States to sign and accede to or ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.(56) It extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years and asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance he might require.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/228, approved the Commission's extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1992, 71 States had ratified or acceded to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment, seven of them (Benin, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Croatia, Latvia, Mauritius, Seychelles) in 1992.(3) The Convention was adopted by the General Assembly in 1984,(56) opened for signature in 1985 and entered into force in 1987.(57) The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture, set up under the Convention, to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 28 parties had made the required declarations. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 10 December 1992.(58)

On 9 September 1992, the Conference of States Parties to the Convention met to consider amendments to the Convention(59) proposed by Australia, by which members of the Committee against Torture would receive emoluments from United Nations resources on terms and conditions decided by the General Assembly.

The amendments were adopted by the Conference and endorsed by the Assembly on 16 December in resolution 47/111.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(60) the Commission urged all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority; it asked all ratifying or acceding States and those States parties that had not done so to consider making the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing their reservations to article 20. It requested the Secretary-General to continue submitting annual reports on the Convention's status and to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective functioning of the Committee against Torture.

Draft optional protocol

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(61) the Commission decided to establish a working group to elaborate a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, using as a basis for its discussion a 1991 proposal by Costa Rica,(62) and requested it to meet for two weeks prior to the Commission's 1993 session. It asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations, the Committee against Torture, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and NGOs to send comments on the draft optional protocol and its implications, for the working group's consideration. It also asked him to invite international or regional bodies experienced in visiting places of detention to submit their observations to the group and to extend all the necessary facilities to the group for its meeting.

Working group activities. The Working Group on the Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Geneva, 19-30 October 1992) discussed the aims, object and purpose of the optional protocol and carried out an initial examination of the draft.(63)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/6 without vote.

Question of a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/43 of 3 March 1992,

1. Authorizes the establishment of an open-ended inter-sessional working group in order to elaborate a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which will use as a basis for its discussion the draft text proposed by the Government of Costa Rica on 22 January 1991, and will meet for a period of two weeks prior to the forty-ninth session of the Commission on Human Rights;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all the necessary facilities to the working group to enable it to meet prior to the forty-ninth session of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/6

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

Committee against Torture

The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its eighth session at Geneva from 27 April to 8 May 1992.(64) It examined reports submitted by Italy, Luxembourg, Romania and Uruguay under article 19 of the Convention.

In three closed meetings devoted to its activities under article 20, the Committee studied confidential information which appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee for the first time declared admissible a communication from an individual claiming to be a victim of violations by a State party of rights recognized in the Convention. In addition, the Committee discussed a draft optional protocol to the Convention (see above) and its contribution to the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights. Annexed to the Committee's report was a list of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 8 May 1992.

The Committee held its ninth session, also at Geneva, from 9 to 20 November 1992, examining reports submitted by Afghanistan, Argentina, Belarus, Germany, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Ukraine and the United Kingdom. It was agreed that the Committee would participate in the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights and select a representative in April 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/113 without vote.

Report of the Committee against Torture and status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975 and contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling further its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in the annex to that resolution, and called upon all Governments to consider signing, ratifying and acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention, most recently its resolution 45/142 of 14 December 1990, and its decisions 46/428 and 46/430 of 17 December 1991, as well as the Commission on Human Rights resolutions on the subject, most recently resolution 1992/25 of 28 February 1992,

Taking note of the decision taken at the Conference of States Parties to the Convention, on 9 September 1992,^a to delete paragraph 7 of article 17 and paragraph 5 of article 18 of the Convention and to insert a new paragraph, as paragraph 4 of article 18, by which the members of the Committee established under the Convention shall receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as may be decided by the General Assembly,

Mindful of the relevance, for the eradication of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the adoption of the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Seriously concerned about the alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment taking place in various parts of the world,

Determined to promote the full implementation of the prohibition, under international and national law, of the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Taking note of the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1992/32 of 28 February 1992, to extend for three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to examine questions relevant to torture,

Noting with appreciation the holding of the first session of the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights elaborating a draft optional protocol to the Convention,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee against Torture;

2. Notes the status of submission of reports by States parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

4. Stresses the importance of strict adherence by States parties to the obligations under the Convention regarding the financing of the Committee against Torture, thus enabling it to carry out in an effective and efficient manner all the functions entrusted to it under the Convention, and urges States parties that have not yet paid their assessed contributions to fulfil their obligations forthwith;

5. Welcomes the attention that the Committee against Torture has given to the development of an effective system of reporting on the implementation of the Convention by States parties, and especially its revision of its general guidelines for the submission of reports by States parties, as well as its practice of formulating concluding observations after the consideration of such reports;

6. Welcomes also the continuing close contacts and exchange of information, reports and documents between the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on questions relating to torture;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee against Torture;

8. Reiterates its request to all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

9. Invites all States ratifying or acceding to the Convention and those States parties which have not yet done so to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention, and to consider the possibility of withdrawing their reservations to article 20;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

11. Decides to consider the reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee against Torture at its forty-ninth session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

Fund for victims of torture

On 28 February 1992,(65) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.(66) It asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1993 a consolidated report on the Fund's activities, entitled "Ten Years of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture". The Commission also asked him to assist in making the Fund's humanitarian work better known and to inform it annually of the Fund's operations.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Fund,(67) the Secretary-General said that, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 22 April-1 May 1992), the Fund's Board of Trustees recommended that 71 new grants be made, of which 46—corresponding to 54 projects and sub-projects and representing an amount of $1,304,800—dealt with continuing support for projects approved in the past; another 16 grants, representing some $198,000, dealt with 15 new projects and sub-projects. An additional $110,000 was recommended for two special projects. The total amount of the grants recommended was $1,600,300 for 1992, compared with $2,238,700 for 1991. The projects recommended by the Board, carried out in some 40 countries and benefiting persons from many others, focused on supporting programmes providing direct medical, psychological, social and other assistance to torture victims and their families. The Board also recommended support for training programmes for health professionals on techniques to treat victims of torture, as well as for meetings of health professionals, in which they could compare their experiences.

The Board again recommended that the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights set aside time to meet as a pledging conference for the Fund. It had submitted that suggestion to the Conference's Preparatory Committee in 1991.(68)

During 1992, the Fund received $1,204,340 from 16 States. Contributions were also received from a number of individuals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/109 without vote.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling with satisfaction the entry into force on 26 June 1987 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Alarmed at the widespread occurrence of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals who have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Invites Governments to make contributions to the Fund, preferably on a regular basis, in order to enable the Fund to provide continuous support to projects that depend on recurrent grants;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments that pledged a contribution to the Fund at the 1992 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to include the Fund on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

7. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund by carrying out its decisions on an increasing number of projects;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions.

Detention of juveniles

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June 1992,(69) Special Rapporteur Mary Concepción Bautista (Philippines) submitted her final report to the Subcommission on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles. The report gave an overview of applicable international standards, among them the 1985 United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules),(70) the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child,(71) the 1990 United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines)(72) and the 1990 United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty.(73) The Special Rapporteur updated information contained in her 1991 report(74) concerning successful efforts to implement international standards, observations relating to practices incompatible with relevant international standards and recommendations concerning measures that should be taken by States and the international community to increase recognition and protection of detained juveniles' rights. Her report was based on information received from five Governments and one NGO; she also took into account other material available to her, particularly the documentation of the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.(75)

The Special Rapporteur recommended that countries review their legislation and consider the full application of United Nations rules, guidelines and conventions concerning juvenile justice. She emphasized that juvenile justice should be managed by specially trained personnel and that special care should be devoted to children of migrant families and juveniles suffering from mental illness. She also stressed the importance of rehabilitation programmes.

Note by the Secretary-General. In June,(76) the Secretary-General submitted a note on the feasibility of organizing a meeting of experts, under the auspices of the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles, as proposed by the Subcommission in 1991.(74) He stated that, following consultations with concerned organizations, the Secretariat proposed to hold the meeting in the spring of 1993 at Geneva. Proposed topics for discussion included crime prevention and improved treatment of juvenile offenders, measures to be taken within institutions for juveniles and international action.

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992,(77) the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance for the meeting of experts and to report on its results.

Detention without charge or trial

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(78) the Commission asked the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, created in 1991(74) for a three-year period, to investigate cases of detention imposed arbitrarily or otherwise inconsistently with the international standards set forth in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights(79) or in relevant international legal instruments. It asked the Group to report in 1993 on its activities and to make suggestions and recommendations to enable it better to carry out its task. It called on the Group to continue to seek information from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and individuals concerned or their representatives.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held three sessions in 1992 (Geneva, 23-27 March, 28 September-2 October, 2-11 December).(80) The activities of the live-member group of independent experts consisted of transmitting letters to the Governments of countries where cases of alleged arbitrary detention were reported to have occurred, asking them to make inquiries and inform the Group of the results within 90 days. The Group sent letters to 24 countries concerning 144 cases of arbitrary detention, to which seven countries replied. In addition, the Group received replies to letters transmitted in 1991.(74) The Group also decided to address 11 urgent-action messages to 10 countries. Most of the cases concerned cases of alleged arbitrary detention which had endangered the health or life of the detainees.

In March, the Group decided that it would consider a number of situations involving questions of principle and adopt decisions thereon, referred to as deliberations. Four deliberations were adopted, relating to house arrest; the Group's methods of work (2); and re-education through labour.

The Group stressed the importance of having timely and comprehensive information and of government efforts to bring laws into line with international human rights instruments. It recommended strengthening habeas corpus and proposed that the Commission on Human Rights recommend to any Government which had been requested to rectify a case of arbitrary detention to report within a four-month period following notification of the decision. Annexed to the report were decisions adopted by the Group concerning communications transmitted in 1991 and 1992.

Hostage-taking

On 28 February,(81) the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned hostage-taking in all circumstances and demanded the immediate release of all those being held. It appealed for respect for the humanitarian action of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and called on States to take preventive and punitive measures and to put an end to cases of abduction and unlawful restraint. It asked the Secretary-General, when a State so requested, to use all available means to obtain the release of hostages.

Detained UN staff members

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July 1992,(82) the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Mary Concepción Bautista (Philippines) submitted her final report on the protection of the human rights of United Nations staff members, experts and their families. She made recommendations pertaining to information on detained staff members; United Nations action in such cases; compensation for damage suffered; rehabilitation and indemnification of staff members and their families in case of illness, invalidity or death attributable to arrest, detention or abduction; enhanced security measures; and follow-up of the issue. Annexed to the report were lists of staff members, victims of human rights violations, as at 24 June 1992, and of officials assassinated, executed or killed since 1973, as submitted by the Association for the Security and Independence of International Civil Servants.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(83) the Commission appealed to Member States to respect and ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under United Nations authority and their families, and urged them, in accordance with the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,(84) to provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention. It further urged Member States to allow medical teams to investigate the health of detained staff members, experts and their families in order to provide them with medical treatment, and called on them to allow representatives of international organizations to attend hearings. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations staff members, experts and their families were fully respected and to seek compensation for damage suffered, as well as their full reintegration. It also asked him to submit in 1993 an updated report on the situation of United Nations staff members, experts and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, including those cases that had been successfully settled since the submission of his last report.(85)

In January 1992,(86) the Secretary-General drew the Commission's attention to his 1991 report on respect for the privileges and immunities of United Nations officials.(87)

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(88) the Subcommission adopted a similar resolution on detained United Nations staff members.

Status of special rapporteurs

In response to a 1991 request of the Commission on Human Rights,(85) the Secretary-General reported in January 1992(89) on measures taken to ensure the protection of special rapporteurs and representatives, members of the Subcommission, independent experts and members of the Secretariat accompanying them on mission.

Extra-legal executions

In January 1992,(90) Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights his tenth report on summary or arbitrary executions, based on information received from Governments, NGOs, groups and individuals. He described urgent appeals and other communications transmitted to Governments, together with any replies or observations received from them, and outlined the legal and analytical framework within which he carried out his mandate. His conclusions focused on death threats, deaths in custody, executions following inadequate trial or judicial procedures and extra-legal executions in situations of internal conflict.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Governments: ratify international human rights treaties relevant to the protection of the right to life; review national law and practice and provide appropriate training to law enforcement, judicial, correctional and military personnel; investigate allegations of summary or arbitrary execution and ensure prosecution of the responsible parties; take measures to ensure the elimination of unnatural deaths in custody; consider establishing an independent governmental body to promote, defend and protect human rights; cooperate fully with ICRC; and make efforts to eliminate the root causes of violence and intolerance.

The Special Rapporteur urged Governments that had received communications from him to reply promptly and fully and consider participating in an exchange of information or inviting him to undertake a mission to clarify allegations. He suggested that the international community ensure that Governments requiring technical or material assistance to eliminate the causes of summary and arbitrary executions and strengthen national mechanisms to protect human rights were provided with effective assistance. He further suggested that the international community respond rapidly and effectively to situations of internal armed conflict and civil strife, which remained the major cause of such executions, and promote information and awareness campaigns; to eliminate the root causes of violence. The Special Rapporteur proposed guidelines concerning the procedures and working arrangements of the Centre for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur. Annexed to his report was a list of instruments and other standards constituting the legal framework of his mandate.

In April,(91) the Special Rapporteur reported on his 1991 mission to Zaire, at the invitation of the Government, to observe a trial (State Koyagialo et al) to establish the facts surrounding events in 1990 at the University of Lubumbashi and responsibility relating thereto in connection with loss of life and threats against the life and physical integrity of persons, as well as material damage to personal and university property.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1992,(92) the Commission, strongly condemning the large number of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions taking place, appealed to Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs to take action to combat and eliminate them. Noting the impending resignation of the current Special Rapporteur, it asked its Chairman to appoint another for three years to continue to examine situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, paying special attention to executions of children. It requested the Special Rapporteur to continue examining such executions and to respond to information he received, particularly when a summary or arbitrary execution was imminent or threatened or when such an execution had occurred. It asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur and to consider ways to publicize his work and recommendations. It urged Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur and to take measures to lower the level of violence and needless loss of life during situations of internal violence, disturbances, tensions and public emergency.

On 10 April, the Chairman of the Commission appointed Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal) as Special Rapporteur.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/242, approved the Commission's request to its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur for three years and to the Secretary-General to provide him with the assistance he required.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/136 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling its resolution 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which it condemned the practice of summary and arbitrary executions, and its resolutions 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983, 39/110 of 14 December 1984, 40/143 of 13 December 1985, 41/144 of 4 December 1986, 42/141 of 7 December 1987, 43/151 of 8 December 1988, 44/159 of 15 December 1989 and 45/162 of 18 December 1990,

Deeply alarmed at the continued occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto, which resolution was endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15,

Welcoming the close cooperation established between the Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with regard to questions relating to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental right, the right to life,

1. Once again strongly condemns the large number of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions which continue to take place throughout the world;

2. Demands that the practice of summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end;

3. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

4. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council decision 1992/242 of 20 July 1992, in which the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur for three years to consider questions related to summary or arbitrary executions and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

5. Urges all Governments, in particular those that have consistently not responded to communications transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur, and all others concerned to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

6. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has recently occurred, and, furthermore, to promote exchanges of views between Governments and those who provide reliable information to the Special Rapporteur, where the Special Rapporteur considers that such exchanges of information might be useful;

7. welcomes the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur in his reports to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh and forty-eighth sessions with a view to eliminating summary or arbitrary executions;

8. Encourages Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and support projects with a view to training or educating law enforcement officers in human rights issues connected with their work, and appeals to the international community to support endeavours to that end;

9. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as medical and forensic experts;

10. Request the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

11. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appears not to have been respected;

12. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

General Assembly resolution 47/136

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(93) the Commission extended for three years the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and asked the Group to submit in 1993 a report on its work and recommendations to help eliminate the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances. It also asked the Group to draw attention to cases concerning children of disappeared parents. The Commission encouraged Governments concerned to consider inviting the Group to visit their countries and asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Group was provided all necessary assistance, in particular staff and resources, especially in carrying out missions and holding sessions in countries prepared to receive it.

The Economic and Social Council, on 20 July, by decision 1992/227, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Group's mandate for three years and its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance. On 30 April, by decision 1992/220, the Council had authorized the Group to meet from 18 to 22 May 1992.

Also on 28 February,(94) the Commission, commending Governments that had invited any of the thematic special rapporteurs or the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to visit their countries, encouraged them to respond expeditiously to requests for information. It invited Governments to study carefully the recommendations addressed to them under thematic procedures and to keep the relevant mechanisms informed on progress made in implementing them. The Commission encouraged thematic special rapporteurs and working groups to follow closely the progress made by Governments in their investigations carried out within their respective mandates. It asked the Secretary-General to issue annually a compilation of general recommendations made by special rapporteurs and working groups and to ensure the availability of resources for an effective implementation of all thematic mandates.

On the same date,(95) the Commission, noting the proposed model autopsy protocol prepared under United Nations auspices,(96) decided that it would be desirable to create a standing team of forensic experts and experts in related areas, to be enrolled on a voluntary basis worldwide, who could be requested by Governments, through the Secretary-General, to assist in exhuming and identifying probable victims of human rights violations or in training local teams for the same purpose. It asked the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to consult with professional organizations to study the practical and financial viability of such a scheme and to develop workable arrangements for its management. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to inform it in 1993 of progress made.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,(97) held three sessions in 1992: its thirty-sixth (New York, 18-22 May) and thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth (Geneva, 31 August-4 September and 25 November-4 December).(98)

During those sessions, the Group held 9 meetings with government representatives and 12 with representatives of human rights organizations, associations of relatives of missing persons and families or witnesses directly concerned with reports of enforced or involuntary disappearances. As a follow-up to a 1991 mission to Sri Lanka,(99) three members of the Group visited the country from 5 to 15 October 1992 at the Government's invitation.(100) They reported that the downward trend of disappearances that had begun in 1991 had continued, with 62 cases reported in 1992 versus 146 in 1991.

In 1992, the Group continued to process a backlog of some 12,000 reports submitted in 1991 and received some 10,000 new reports of disappearances in 36 countries. It transmitted 8,651 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned, of which some 4,000 were received in 1992, while the rest were part of the backlog. It also, transmitted to Governments 348 cases under its urgent-action procedure, of which 53 were clarified during the year.

Some 6,000 alleged cases of disappearance occurring in the former Yugoslavia were brought to the Group's attention. The Group stated that, in view of the overwhelming dimensions of the situation, it was urgently seeking the guidance of the Commission on Human Rights on how to approach the matter of the disappeared in the former Yugoslavia. (For details of human rights violations in the former Yugoslavia, see below, under "Human rights violations".)

The Group urged concerned Governments to adopt measures to protect those involved in investigating cases of disappearances and to investigate any act which might affect them. It proposed that the Commission request it to integrate the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance (see below) into its methods of work and to report on obstacles encountered in implementing the Declaration. It was essential, the Group noted, that legislation and practice provide for an expeditious and easily accessible habeas corpus. The Group reported on its assistance to the Secretary-General in his consultations with professional organizations dealing with forensic science, noting that it had met with organizations in the field of medical or anthropological activities. It drew up a preliminary scheme based on suggestions and comments received from several organizations, which it transmitted to the Secretary-General, together with a recommendation that it continue consultations in 1993. The scheme would involve the maintenance by the Group of a list of organizations with experience in human rights and forensic science; the organizations would designate experts to work on different forensic activities.

Annexed to the Group's report was a summary of replies received from Governments and NGOs on the Group's consideration of impunity; the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearances; and graphs showing the development of disappearances for the period 1973-1991 in countries with more than 50 transmitted cases.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/132 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 46/125 of 17 December 1991 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the practice of enforced disappearances in the world,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Concerned by the growing number of reports concerning harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared,

Noting with satisfaction the proclamation of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other relevant United Nations resolutions, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate enforced disappearances, duly taking into account the provisions of the Declaration,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/30 of 28 February 1992,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and thanks those Governments that are cooperating with it;

2. Welcomes the decision made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1992/30 to extend for three years the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting, and requests the Working Group to continue to fulfil its mandate in a rigorous and constructive fashion;

3. Invites Governments to take appropriate legislative or other steps to prevent and suppress the practice of enforced disappearances and to take action at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations to that end;

4. Appeals to the Governments concerned, particularly those that have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group, to cooperate fully with it, and in particular to reply more quickly to the requests for information addressed to them so that, while respecting its working methods based on discretion, it may perform its strictly humanitarian role;

5. Encourages the Governments concerned seriously to consider inviting the Working Group to visit their countries, thus enabling it to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

6. Extends its warm thanks to those Governments which have cooperated with the Working Group and to those Governments which have invited the Working Group to visit their countries, requests them to give all necessary attention to its recommendations and invites them to inform the Working Group of any follow-up measures taken;

7. Appeals to the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of persons who have disappeared against any intimidation or ill-treatment of which they may be the target;

8. Calls upon all Governments to take steps to ensure that, when a state of emergency is introduced, the protection of human rights is ensured, particularly as regards the prevention of enforced disappearances;

9. Reminds all Governments of the need to ensure that their competent authorities conduct prompt and impartial inquiries when there is reason to believe that an enforced disappearance has occurred in territory under their jurisdiction;

10. Request the Working Group, pursuant to its mandate, to take into account the provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance;

11. Also requests the Working Group to give the necessary attention to cases of children who have disappeared and of children of persons who have disappeared;

12. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group and to the follow-up of its recommendations when it considers the report to be submitted by the Working Group to the Commission at its forty-ninth session;

13. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities;

14. Decides to consider the question of enforced disappearances at its forty-ninth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Draft declaration

Working group action. The Working Group on the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1991,(101) having completed consideration of the articles of the draft declaration, met on 29 January 1992 at Geneva to adopt the text of the final draft.(102)

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(103) the Commission approved the draft declaration submitted by the Working Group.(102) It transmitted it to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, and recommended that, after its adoption by the Assembly, the full text of the declaration be disseminated as widely as possible.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July, the Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/5 without vote.

Declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights decision 1986/106 of 13 March 1986, by which the Commission invited the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to reconsider the question of a declaration against unacknowledged detention of persons,

Recalling also its resolution 1991/27 of 31 May 1991, by which it authorized an open-ended working group of the Commission to consider the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances, prepared by the Subcommission,

Expressing its appreciation to the Commission for finalizing the draft declaration,

1. Decides to submit the report of the Working Group on the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance of the Commission on Human Rights to the General Assembly for consideration, with a view to the adoption by the Assembly, at its forty-seventh session, of the declaration contained in the annex to the reports;

2. Recommends that, after adoption by the General Assembly, the full text of the declaration be disseminated as widely as possible.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/5

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 September,(104) the Secretary-General transmitted the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance to the Assembly.

On 18 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/133 without vote.

Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance

The General Assembly,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations and other international instruments, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Bearing in mind the obligation of States under the Charter, in particular Article 55, to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply concerned that in many countries, often in a persistent manner, enforced disappearances occur, in the sense that persons are arrested, detained or abducted against their will or otherwise deprived of their liberty by officials of different branches or levels of Government, or by organized groups or private individuals acting on behalf of, or with the support, direct or indirect, consent or acquiescence of the Government, followed by a refusal to disclose the fate or whereabouts of the persons concerned or a refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of their liberty, which places such persons outside the protection of the law,

Considering that enforced disappearance undermines the deepest values of any society committed to respect for the rule of law, human rights and fundamental freedoms, and that the systematic practice of such acts is of the nature of a crime against humanity,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978, in which it expressed concern about the reports from various parts of the world relating to enforced or involuntary disappearances, as well as about the anguish and sorrow caused by those disappearances, and called upon Governments to hold law enforcement and security forces legally responsible for excesses which might lead to enforced or involuntary disappearances of persons,

Recalling also the protection afforded to victims of armed conflicts by the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Having regard in particular to the relevant articles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which protect the right to life, the right to liberty and security of the person, the right not to be subjected to torture and the right to recognition as a person before the law,

Having regard also to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which provides that States parties shall take effective measures to prevent and punish acts of torture,

Bearing in mind the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners,

Affirming that, in order to prevent enforced disappearances, it is necessary to ensure strict compliance with the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment contained in the annex to its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988, and with the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, set forth in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/65 of 24 May 1989 and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/162 of 15 December 1989,

Bearing in mind that, while the acts which comprise enforced disappearance constitute a violation of the prohibitions found in the aforementioned international instruments, it is none the less important to devise an instrument which characterizes all acts of enforced disappearance of persons as very serious offences and sets forth standards designed to punish and prevent their commission,

Proclaims the present Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as a body of principles for all States and urges that all efforts be made so that the Declaration becomes generally known and respected:

Article 1

1. Any act of enforced disappearance is an offence to human dignity. It is condemned as a denial of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and as a grave and flagrant violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and reaffirmed and developed in international instruments in this field.

2. Any act of enforced disappearance places the persons subjected thereto outside the protection of the law and inflicts severe suffering on them and their families. It constitutes a violation of the rules of international law guaranteeing, inter alia, the right to recognition as a person before the law, the right to liberty and security of the person and the right not to be subjected to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. It also violates or constitutes a grave threat to the right to life.

1. No State shall practise, permit or tolerate enforced disappearances.

2. States shall act at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations to contribute by all means to the prevention and eradication of enforced disappearance.

Article 3

Each State shall take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent and terminate acts of enforced disappearance in any territory under its jurisdiction.

Article 4

1. All acts of enforced disappearance shall be offences under criminal law punishable by appropriate penalties which shall take into account their extreme seriousness.

2. Mitigating circumstances may be established in national legislation for persons who, having participated in enforced disappearances, are instrumental in bringing the victims forward alive or in providing voluntarily information which would contribute to clarifying cases of enforced disappearance.

Article 5

In addition to such criminal penalties as are applicable, enforced disappearances render their perpetrators and the State or State authorities which organize, acquiesce in or tolerate such disappearances liable under civil law, without prejudice to the international responsibility of the State concerned in accordance with the principles of international law.

Article 6

1. No order or instruction of any public authority, civilian, military or other, may be invoked to justify an enforced disappearance. Any person receiving such an order or instruction shall have the right and duty not to obey it.

2. Each State shall ensure that orders or instructions directing, authorizing or encouraging any enforced disappearance are prohibited.

3. Training of law enforcement officials shall emphasize the provisions in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present article.

Article 7

No circumstances whatsoever, whether a threat of war, a state of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, may be invoked to justify enforced disappearances.

Article 8

1. No State shall expel, return (refouler) or extradite a person to another State where there are substantial grounds to believe that he would be in danger of enforced disappearance.

2. For the purpose of determining whether there are such grounds, the competent authorities shall take into account all relevant considerations including, where applicable, the existence in the State concerned of a consistent pattern of gross, flagrant or mass violations of human rights.

Article 9

1. The right to a prompt and effective judicial remedy as a means of determining the whereabouts or state of health of persons deprived of their liberty and/or identifying the authority ordering or carrying out the deprivation of liberty is required to prevent enforced disappearances under all circumstances, including those referred to in article 7 above.

2. In such proceedings, competent national authorities shall have access to all places where persons deprived of their liberty are being held and to each part of those places, as well as to any place in which there are grounds to believe that such persons may be found.

3. Any other competent authority entitled under the law of the State or by any international legal instrument to which the State is a party may also have access to such places.

Article 10

1. Any person deprived of liberty shall be held in an officially recognized place of detention and, in conformity with national law, be brought before a judicial authority promptly after detention.

2. Accurate information on the detention of such persons and their place or places of detention, including transfers, shall be made promptly available to their family members, their counsel or to any other persons having a legitimate interest in the information unless a wish to the contrary has been manifested by the persons concerned.

3. An official up-to-date register of all persons deprived of their liberty shall be maintained in every place of detention. Additionally, each State shall take steps to maintain similar centralized registers. The information contained in these registers shall be made available to the persons mentioned in the preceding paragraph, to any judicial or other competent and independent national authority and to any other competent authority entitled under the law of the State concerned or any international legal instrument to which a State concerned is a party, seeking to trace the whereabouts of a detained person.

All persons deprived of liberty must be released in a manner permitting reliable verification that they have actually been released and, further, have been released in conditions in which their physical integrity and ability fully to exercise their rights are assured.

Article 12

1. Each State shall establish rules under its national law indicating those officials authorized to order deprivation of liberty, establishing the conditions under which such orders may be given, and stipulating penalties for officials who, without legal justification, refuse to provide information on any detention.

2. Each State shall likewise ensure strict supervision, including a clear chain of command, of all law enforcement officials responsible for apprehensions, arrests, detentions, custody, transfers and imprisonment, and of other officials authorized by law to use force and firearms.

Article 13

1. Each State shall ensure that any person having knowledge or a legitimate interest who alleges that a person has been subjected to enforced disappearance has the right to complain to a competent and independent State authority and to have that complaint promptly, thoroughly and impartially investigated by that authority. Whenever there are reasonable grounds to believe that an enforced disappearance has been committed, the State shall promptly refer the matter to that authority for such an investigation, even if there has been no formal complaint. No measure shall be taken to curtail or impede the investigation.

2. Each State shall ensure that the competent authority shall have the necessary powers and resources to conduct the investigation effectively, including powers to compel attendance of witnesses and production of relevant documents and to make immediate on-site visits.

3. Steps shall be taken to ensure that all involved in the investigation, including the complainant, counsel, witnesses and those conducting the investigation, are protected against ill-treatment, intimidation or reprisal.

4. The findings of such an investigation shall be made available upon request to all persons concerned, unless doing so would jeopardize an ongoing criminal investigation.

5. Steps shall be taken to ensure that any ill-treatment, intimidation or reprisal or any other form of interference on the occasion of the lodging of a complaint or during the investigation procedure is appropriately punished.

6. An investigation, in accordance with the procedures described above, should be able to be conducted for as long as the fate of the victim of enforced disappearance remains unclarified.

Article 14

Any person alleged to have perpetrated an act of enforced disappearance in a particular State shall, when the facts disclosed by an official investigation so warrant, be brought before the competent civil authorities of that State for the purpose of prosecution and trial unless he has been extradited to another State wishing to exercise jurisdiction in accordance with the relevant international agreements in force. All States should take any lawful and appropriate action available to them to bring to justice all persons presumed responsible for an act of enforced disappearance, who are found to be within their jurisdiction or under their control

Article 15

The fact that there are grounds to believe that a person has participated in acts of an extremely serious nature such as those referred to in article 4, paragraph 1, above, regardless of the motives, shall be taken into account when the competent authorities of the State decide whether or not to grant asylum.

Article 16

1. Persons alleged to have committed any of the acts referred to in article 4, paragraph 1, above, shall be suspended from any official duties during the investigation referred to in article 13 above.

2. They shall be tried only by the competent ordinary courts in each State, and not by any other special tribunal, in particular military courts.

3. No privileges, immunities or special exemptions shall be admitted in such trials, without prejudice to the provisions contained in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations.

4. The persons presumed responsible for such acts shall be guaranteed fair treatment in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant international agreements in force at all stages of the investigation and eventual prosecution and trial.

Article 17

1. Acts constituting enforced disappearance shall be considered a continuing offence as long as the perpetrators continue to conceal the fate and the whereabouts of persons who have disappeared and these facts remain unclarified.

2. When the remedies provided for in article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights are no longer effective, the statute of limitations relating to acts of enforced disappearance shall be suspended until these remedies are re-established.

3. Statutes of limitations, where they exist, relating to acts of enforced disappearance shall be substantial and commensurate with the extreme seriousness of the offence.

Article 18

1. Persons who have or are alleged to have committed offences referred to in article 4, paragraph 1, above, shall not benefit from any special amnesty law or similar measures that might have the effect of exempting them from any criminal proceedings or sanction.

2. In the exercise of the right of pardon, the extreme seriousness of acts of enforced disappearance shall be taken into account.

Article 19

The victims of acts of enforced disappearance and their family shall obtain redress and shall have the right to adequate compensation, including the means for as complete a rehabilitation as possible. In the event of the death of the victim as a result of an act of enforced disappearance, their dependants shall also be entitled to compensation.

Article 20

1. States shall prevent and suppress the abduction of children of parents subjected to enforced disappearance and of children born during their mother's enforced disappearance, and shall devote their efforts to the search for and identification of such children and to the restitution of the children to their families of origin.

2. Considering the need to protect the best interests of children referred to in the preceding paragraph, there shall be an opportunity, in States which recognize a system of adoption, for a review of the adoption of such children and, in particular, for annulment of any adoption which originated in enforced disappearance. Such adoption should, however, continue to be in force if consent is given, at the time of the review, by the child's closest relatives.

3. The abduction of children of parents subjected to enforced disappearance or of children born during their mother's enforced disappearance, and the act of altering or suppressing documents attesting to their true identity, shall constitute an extremely serious offence, which shall be punished as such.

4. For these purposes, States shall, where appropriate, conclude bilateral and multilateral agreements.

Article 21

The provisions of the present Declaration are without prejudice to the provisions enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in any other international instrument, and shall not be construed as restricting or derogating from any of those provisions.

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Slavery

Working Group activities. The Subcommission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its seventeenth session (Geneva, 4-13 May 1992),(105) chose as its main theme an evaluation of its activities in 1989,(106) 1990(107) and 1991,(108) during which it discussed the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the exploitation of child labour (see below, under "Other human rights questions") and debt bondage; and the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others. It reviewed developments in other contemporary forms of slavery, including slavery and the slave trade, slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, child soldiers, and the removal of organs from children for commercial purposes.

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March 1992,(109) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite States parties to the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,(110) and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others(111) to submit regular reports to the Subcommission on the situation in their countries. It invited States that had not ratified the relevant Conventions to do so, or to explain in writing why they felt unable to. Intergovernmental organizations, relevant United Nations organizations and NGOs were asked to supply information to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. The Commission encouraged its Subcommission to elaborate recommendations on ways to establish an effective mechanism to implement the slavery Conventions on the basis of a 1989 study by the Secretary-General.(112) He was asked to designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for coordinating United Nations activities to suppress contemporary forms of slavery. It asked the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children to examine ways of cooperating with the Working Group and asked Governments to pursue a policy of information, prevention and rehabilitation of women victims of the exploitation of prostitution and to take appropriate economic and social measures to that effect. The Secretary-General was to report to the Economic and Social Council on steps taken to implement a 1983 Council resolution on suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others.(113)

Also on 3 March,(114) the Commission approved a number of requests made by its Subcommission in 1991 pertaining to organizational matters of the Working Group. Those requests were also approved by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

Subcommission action. The Subcommission adopted on 14 August a resolution concerning matters considered by the Working Group.(115)

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1983 request of the Economic and Social Council,(113) the Secretary-General submitted in May 1992 a report summarizing information from seven Governments, one regional commission and three intergovernmental organizations on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others.(116)

On 20 July, the Council, by decision 1992/263, took note of the report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Council adopted decision 1992/257 without vote.

Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery

At its 32nd plenary meeting, on 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1992/115 of 3 March 1992 and resolution 1991/34 of 29 August 1991 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, endorsed the approval by the Commission of the requests of the Subcommission to the Secretary-General: (a) to send a representative of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to participate in a Council of Europe seminar on trafficking in persons and prostitution, at Strasbourg from 25 to 27 September 1991, and to report on the results of this seminar to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery at its seventeenth session, (b) to reassign to the Working Group a full-time Professional staff member of the Centre for Human Rights to work on issues relating to contemporary forms of slavery, to prepare documentation well in advance, to facilitate the representation at the sessions of the Working Group of the largest possible number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with competence in the fields examined and to report on the measures taken for this purpose to the Commission at its forty-ninth session and the Working Group at its seventeenth session, and (c) to examine the possibility of organizing the sessions of the Working Group for eight working days during the month of April or May, in order to avoid overlapping with meetings of other working groups of the Subcommission and the burden this places on the Centre for Human Rights and in view of the impossibility of attendance at simultaneous sessions by representatives of Governments and non-governmental organizations.

Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

Also on 20 July, the Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/10 without vote.

Suppression of the traffic in persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/20 of 10 March 1982, 1988/42 of 8 March 1988, 1989/35 of 6 March 1989, 1990/63 of 7 March 1990, and 1991/58 of 6 March 1991, and taking note of Commission resolutions 1992/47 of 3 March 1992 and 1992/74 of 5 March 1992,

Recalling also its resolutions 1982/20 of 4 May 1982 and 1983/30 of 26 May 1983 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, 1988/34 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/74 of 24 May 1989 on the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and 1990/46 of 25 May 1990 and 1991/35 of 31 May 1991 on the suppression of the traffic in persons,

Considering that the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Economic and Social Council on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others still constitutes a useful basis for further action,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others,

Noting that only a few Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations have submitted information on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30,

Gravely concerned that slavery, the slave trade and slavery-like practices still exist, that there are modern manifestations of those phenomena and that such practices represent some of the gravest violations of human rights,

Convinced that the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery will play an important role in the protection of the human rights of victims of contemporary forms of slavery,

Aware of the complexity of the issue of the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and the need for further coordination and cooperation to implement the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and by various United Nations bodies,

1. Reminds States parties to the Slavery Convention of 1926, the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956, and the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949 that they should submit to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities regular reports on the situation in their countries, as provided for under the relevant conventions and under Council decision 16(LVI) of 17 May 1974;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the Council, at its substantive session of 1993, on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30 by those Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations that have not yet submitted such information and to make that report available to the Working Group;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in that report information on activities of the supervisory bodies of the International Labour Organisation regarding the implementation of provisions and standards designed to ensure the protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in that report information on any operational activities of the United Nations system that can foster the implementation of standards designed to ensure the protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery and activities that may be geared to the prevention of violations and alleviation of the plight, or rehabilitation, of victims;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure effective servicing of the Working Group and of other activities related to the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery and slavery-like practices, and requests him to report to the Council at its substantive session of 1993 on the steps taken in this regard;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to designate the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as the focal point for the coordination of activities in the United Nations for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

8. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to collaborate closely with the Centre for Human Rights on the issue of the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

9. Welcomes the establishment of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery;

10. Decides to consider the question of the suppression of the traffic in persons at its substantive session of 1993 under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/10

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 2 July (meeting 5); 13-nation draft (E/1992/C.2/L.2); agenda item 17.

Sponsors: Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, France, Gambia, Ireland, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Philippines, Romania, Russian Federation, Venezuela.

Draft programme of action to prevent the traffic in persons

On 28 February 1992,(117) the Commission on Human Rights endorsed the views of its Subcommission, expressed in a 1991 resolution,(108) on the desirability of launching a programme of action for the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others. It decided to transmit the draft programme of action to Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and asked the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on the comments received.

UN Voluntary Trust Fund
on Contemporary Forms of Slavery

On 3 March,(118) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, established by the General Assembly in 1991,(119) and asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to all Governments. It also asked him to appoint a five-person Board of Trustees and to assist the Board in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known.

Freedom of movement

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights(120) the 1991 report of the Working Group on a draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.(121)

Population transfer

On 27 August 1992,(122) the Subcommission, recognizing that population transfer, including the implantation of settlers and settlements, constituted a violation of human rights, entrusted Special Rapporteurs Awn Shawkat Al-Khasawneh (Jordan) and Ribot Hatano (Japan) with preparing a preliminary study, for submission in 1993, on the human rights dimensions of population transfer. It asked Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway), in his next report on possible ways to facilitate the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities, to address the impact of population transfer on the rights of minorities.

Freedom of speech

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(123) expressing concern at the extensive occurrence of detention of persons exercising their right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Commission appealed to States to ensure respect and support for that right. It also appealed to them to ensure that persons seeking to exercise those rights and freedoms were not discriminated against or harassed, in areas such as employment, housing and social services. It asked the two Special Rapporteurs to submit a final report to the Subcommission, together with conclusions and recommendations. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance they might require.

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. In July 1992,(124) the Special Rapporteurs, Louis Joinet (France) and Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia), in their final report, discussed general points on the right to freedom of opinion and expression and analysed the relationship between the right to freedom of expression and permissible restrictions. They also considered the question of sanctions against persons exercising their right to freedom of expression, and freedom of opinion and expression in the context of the struggle against racism.

The Special Rapporteurs recommended a discussion of the conditions under which the Subcommission could draw up specific safeguard standards, especially with a view to lessening possible risks to democracy of so-called admissible restrictions, and the introduction of a special procedure to assure the protection of professionals in the field of information. The procedure, they stated, could take the form of the appointment of a special rapporteur or working group of the Commission or a request to the Secretary-General to prepare periodic reports on protecting professionals in that field.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

Note by the Secretary-General. In February 1992,(125) the Secretary-General, in response to a 1991 Commission request,(126) provided information on specific cases in which persons had suffered reprisals for availing or attempting to avail themselves of United Nations human rights procedures or had been subjected to intimidation to prevent them from doing so. He also described decisions and measures taken by United Nations policy-making organs in that regard. Annexed to the report were allegations of intimidation and reprisal received and processed by United Nations human rights bodies.

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(127) the Commission urged Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against individuals or groups seeking access to United Nations human rights bodies. It requested representatives of those bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights to help prevent the hampering of access to United Nations human rights procedures and to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal. It also requested them to include in their reports a reference to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken by them. It invited the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on the subject.

Amnesty

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. As requested by the Subcommission in 1991,(126) Special Rapporteurs El Hadji Guissé (Senegal) and Louis Joinet (France) submitted a working paper on the practice of impunity for perpetrators of serious human rights violations.(128) They discussed the promotion and protection of human rights through anti-impunity measures and presented an analysis of the legal mechanisms and practices facilitating impunity.

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992,(129) the Subcommission requested the Special Rapporteurs to draft a study to determine the scale of the phenomenon of impunity for perpetrators of serious human rights violations and to propose measures to combat that practice. It decided to consider the preliminary report in 1993 and asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteurs with any assistance they might need.

Independence of the judicial system

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(130) the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 1991 decision to entrust Louis Joinet (France) with preparing a report on practices and measures which had served to strengthen or weaken the independence of the judiciary and the legal profession.(131) It requested the Secretary-General to provide Mr. Joinet with all the assistance necessary to prepare that report.

By decision 1992/229 of 20 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's endorsement and request.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Joinet submitted in June 1992 a report(132) containing information received from 14 States regarding cases of measures and practices that had served to strengthen the safeguards of independence and protection of judges and lawyers. It also examined cases of measures and practices that had weakened those safeguards, based on information from 21 States.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that part of his mandate was to find the best method of assessing interference with the independence of the judiciary and the protection of lawyers. He recommended further testing that method to improve the procedure and submission of his final report in 1994.

Subcommission action. On 28 August,(133) the Subcommission endorsed the Special Rapporteur's recommendation and entrusted him with preparing a report for submission in 1994. He was to elaborate on his 1992 recommendations and to follow up the recommendations in his 1991 report.(126) The Subcommission also asked that his report include information on practices and measures that had served to strengthen or weaken the independence of the judiciary and the legal profession in accordance with United Nations standards and examine ways to enhance cooperation and avoid duplication of work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Subcommission. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with the necessary assistance to complete that report and to transmit its resolution to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, including professional associations of judges and lawyers, requesting them to provide specific information on the subject.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,(134) the Commission, having examined a brief report prepared in 1990 by two Special Rapporteurs(135) and their second (1991) report,(131) endorsed the Subcommission's 1991 request(136) that they continue preparing a study on the right to a fair trial: current recognition and measures to strengthen it. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide them with any assistance they might require and to transmit the revised questionnaire annexed to their second report to Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs that had not responded to the earlier questionnaire, as well as to associations of lawyers, and to transmit their responses to the Special Rapporteurs. The Special Rapporteurs were asked to submit a third report to the Subcommission later in the year.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/230, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's request and its request to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteurs.

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. Responding to the Commission's request, the Special Rapporteurs, Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) and William Treat (United States) submitted in May 1992 their third report on the right to a fair trial: current recognition and measures necessary for its strengthening.⁽¹³⁷⁾ They discussed the second report⁽¹³¹⁾ and indicated several revisions to it; identified new sources of international fair trial norms issued since July 1991; and summarized the interpretations of fair trial standards by the European Commission and Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Commission on and Court of Human Rights. They also summarized information on amparo and habeas corpus and presented a supplemental bibliography of material identified since July 1991. As to the questionnaire on the right to a fair trial, the report summarized replies received as at mid-April 1992 from 27 Governments, 4 specialized agencies, 1 intergovernmental organization and 17 NGOs.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,⁽¹³⁸⁾ the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteurs to submit in 1993 a fourth report analysing national practices regarding the right to a fair trial, including information received in response to the questionnaires. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the report to Fisseha Yimer (Ethiopia) and invited the latter, an expert, to examine the report with a view to making comments on it at the Subcommission's 1993 session.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,⁽¹⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to organize, under the 1992-1993 United Nations human rights programme, an expert seminar to discuss indicators for measuring achievements in realizing economic, social and cultural rights, and to promote coordination between United Nations human rights activities and those of development agencies. It asked the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia), when preparing his next report on problems, policies and progressive measures relating to a more effective realization of economic, social and cultural rights, to take into account comments made in the Commission; it asked that priority be given to identifying practical strategies to promote the rights contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.(2) It asked the Economic and Social Council to identify ways in which international cooperation and technical assistance would contribute to the effective implementation of the rights recognized in the Covenant. The Commission encouraged States parties to the Covenant to support and cooperate with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and urged them, together with the specialized agencies and NGOs, to contribute actively to the Committee's work (for details of the Committee's action in 1992, see below).

Also on 21 February,(3) the Commission endorsed 1991 requests by its Subcommission(4) to the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1992 (see below) and to the Secretary-General to provide him with any assistance he might need.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/248 of 20 July, approved the Commission's endorsement of its Subcommission's requests.

Again on 21 February,(5) by a roll-call vote of 43 to 2, with 7 abstentions, the Commission asked the Subcommission to submit the final report of the Special Rapporteur to the Commission in 1993 and asked Governments and interested inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to provide him with their comments and information about their experience concerning the impact on the enjoyment of human rights of economic adjustment policies arising from foreign debt.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Danilo Türk submitted to the Subcommission in July 1992 his final report on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights.(6) He had submitted a preliminary report in 1989(7) and progress reports in 1990(8) and 1991.(4)

The final report dealt with the need to strengthen economic, social and cultural rights and the obstacles faced in realizing them. It discussed recent developments in World Bank and International Monetary Fund (IMF) policies regarding poverty reduction and the social aspects of adjustment programmes that were beneficial to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The report recommended that the Subcommission: continue to appoint special rapporteurs to study specific aspects of those rights; recommend to the Commission the desirability of appointing special rapporteurs to report on and investigate those rights, with mandates similar to those of thematic rapporteurs; address further recommendations to the Commission encouraging country rapporteurs to examine the situation of non-compliance by States with respect to economic, social and cultural rights; and encourage the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to forward specific recommendations to States parties to the Covenant suggesting legislative and policy changes necessary to bring States' practice into full conformity with the Covenant's provisions. Recommendations also were made for action by the Commission (see below), human rights treaty bodies, the Centre for Human Rights, States, the World Bank, IMF and NGOs.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(9) the Subcommission endorsed its Special Rapporteur's recommendations and, as proposed by him, requested the Commission to consider appointing thematic rapporteurs dealing with specific economic, social and cultural rights and to forward its views to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights as to the feasibility of drafting an optional protocol to the International Covenant. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure the widest possible distribution of the Special Rapporteur's progress reports; prepare policy guidelines on structural adjustment and economic, social and cultural rights; invite the World Bank and IMF to consider organizing an expert seminar on their role in realizing those rights; and inform the Subcommission of progress achieved in implementing the recommendations directed towards the Centre for Human Rights.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1992, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(2) and in force since 1976,(10) had been ratified or acceded to by 118 States. Angola, Azerbaijan, Benin, Brazil, Cambodia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Guinea-Bissau, Latvia, Lesotho, Paraguay, Seychelles, Slovenia and Switzerland became parties to it in 1992.(11)

The Secretary-General provided information on the status of ratifications of or accessions to and signatures of the Covenant as at 10 December 1992(12) (see also below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Implementation of the Covenant

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,(13) the Commission appealed to all States that had not become parties to the Covenant to do so. It welcomed the efforts of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in preparing general comments on the provisions of the Covenant and encouraged Governments to publish the Covenant in as many languages as possible and to disseminate it widely. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on the status of the Covenant.

Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985,(14) held its seventh session at Geneva from 23 November to 11 December 1992.(15) Its pre-session working group, a five-member group established in 1988(16) to meet for one week prior to each session, met at Geneva from 29 June to 3 July.

Concerning the rights covered by articles 13 to 15 of the Covenant (the rights to education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation), the Committee examined reports from Belarus,(17) Hungary,(18) Norway(19) and Poland.(20)

The Committee considered additional information submitted by Panama on articles 6 to 9 (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights and the right to social security);(21) articles 10 to 12 (covering the protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard and to physical and mental health);(22) articles 13 to 15;(23) and supplementary information updating those reports.(24) It also considered additional information submitted in response to its request by France,(25) Jamaica,(26) Jordan,(27) the Netherlands,(28) Panama(29) and the Philippines.(30)

Under articles 1 to 15, the Committee examined a report from Italy.(31)

The Committee's general discussion focused on the right to take part in cultural life as recognized in article 15 of the Covenant.

The Committee expressed strong support for drafting and adopting an optional protocol to the Covenant that would permit the submission of communications pertaining to some or all of the rights recognized in the Covenant. It also discussed the problems of the elderly as they related to the realization of rights recognized in the Covenant. On 7 December, the Committee adopted a draft statement for submission to the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, the text of which was annexed to its report. Also annexed to its report was the status of submission of reports in accordance with a programme established by the Economic and Social Council.

The Council, by decision 1992/259 of 20 July, noting the longstanding backlog of States parties' reports awaiting the Committee's consideration, authorized, on an exceptional basis, the holding of an extraordinary additional three-week session of the Committee in the first half of 1993. In addition, the Council, by decision 1992/261 of the same date, approved the Committee's 1991 initiative(4) to send one or two of its members to advise the Government of the Dominican Republic regarding efforts to promote full compliance with the Covenant in the case of large-scale evictions, subject to the Dominican Republic accepting the Committee's offer.

Right to development

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(32) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report(33) on the implementation of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development.(34) He discussed some conceptual issues regarding the right to development, described measures taken by Governments, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to implement that right and made proposals to implement and promote that right further. In October,(35) the Secretary-General transmitted his report to the General Assembly.

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,(36) by a roll-call vote of 48 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit concrete proposals on the effective implementation and promotion of the 1986 Declaration. It called on the Preparatory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, in examining the relationship between development and human rights, to take fully into account the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/123 without vote.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Right to Development, which it proclaimed at its forty-first session, Recalling its resolutions 45/97 of 14 December 1990 and 46/123 of 17 December 1991, and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1992/13 of 21 February 1992.

Recalling also the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right,^a Bearing in mind the principles proclaimed in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development of 14 June 1992,

Reiterating the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Mindful that the Commission on Human Rights entered a new phase in its consideration of this matter, which is directed towards the implementation and further enhancement of the right to development,

Reaffirming the need for an evaluation mechanism so as to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling its resolution 45/155 of 18 December 1990, in which it decided, inter alia, that one of the objectives of the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993 would be to examine the relationship between development and the enjoyment by everyone of economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights, recognizing the importance of creating the conditions whereby everyone may enjoy these rights as set out in the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling also that, in order to promote development, equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights,

Having considered the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/15 of 22 February 1991 and General Assembly resolution 46/123,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries;

2. Takes note with interest of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session concrete proposals on the effective implementation and promotion of the Declaration on the Right to Development, taking into account the views expressed on the issue at the forty-eighth session of the Commission as well as any further comments and suggestions that may be submitted on the basis of paragraph 3 of Commission resolution 1992/13;

4. Reiterates the need for appropriate ways and means, such as an evaluation mechanism, to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration;

5. Requests the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Development and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to continue coordination of the various activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration;

6. Urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, particularly the specialized agencies, when planning their programmes of activities, to take due account of the Declaration and to make efforts to contribute to its application;

7. Also urges the regional commissions and regional intergovernmental organizations to convene meetings of governmental experts and representative non-governmental and grass-roots organizations for the purpose of seeking agreements for the implementation of the Declaration through international cooperation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session and the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session of the activities of the organizations, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system for the implementation of the Declaration;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to make proposals to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right and replies contained in the report of the Secretary-General prepared in accordance with the relevant decisions of the Commission and the General Assembly;

10. Calls upon the World Conference on Human Rights and the Preparatory Committee for the Conference to take fully into account the Declaration in examining the relationship between economic and social development, democracy and the enjoyment of human rights and the indivisibility and interdependency of economic, social, cultural and political rights, and the fact that economic and social progress facilitates the growing trend towards democracy and the promotion and protection of human rights;

11. Decides to consider this question at its forty-eighth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) without vote, 3 December (meeting 56); 77-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.49); agenda item 97 (b).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Right to an adequate standard of living

Fraudulent enrichment of State officials

On 3 March 1992,(37) by 49 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, the Commission decided to keep in mind the question of the fraudulent enrichment of top State officials prejudicial to the public interest, the factors responsible for it and the agents involved when discussing the question of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. It asked the Secretary-General to bring its decision to the attention of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

Extreme poverty

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February 1992,(38) the Commission called on States, specialized agencies, United Nations bodies and other international organizations to continue to make their views on human rights and extreme poverty known to the Secretary-General, and asked him to disseminate that information as widely as possible. It encouraged the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to give greater attention to extreme poverty and exclusion from society, and requested its Subcommittee to prepare, as a matter of priority, a study on human rights and extreme poverty for submission in 1993.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(39) the Subcommittee appointed Leandro Despouy (Argentina) as Special Rapporteur on human rights and extreme poverty and asked him to submit a preliminary report in 1993. It also asked him to transmit any useful information on the subject to the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights. The Subcommittee requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to inform him of the conclusions of any consultations held on human rights and extreme poverty with Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/134 without vote.

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 44/148 of 15 December 1989 and 44/212 of 22 December 1989, and other relevant resolutions,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/14 of 22 February 1991, in which the Commission drew the attention of the General Assembly to the contradiction between the existence of situations of extreme poverty and exclusion from society, which must be overcome, and the duty to guarantee the full enjoyment of human rights,

Recalling its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, in which it proclaimed the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the main concerns of which are the search for a significant reduction of extreme poverty and the joint responsibility of all countries,

Recognizing that extreme poverty is a violation of human dignity and might, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty continues to spread in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and seriously affects the most vulnerable and disadvantaged individuals, families and groups, who are thus hindered in the exercise of their human rights and their fundamental freedoms,

Stressing the need for a complete and in-depth study of extreme poverty, based on the experience and the thoughts of the poorest,

Taking note with satisfaction, in that regard, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/11 of 21 February 1992 and resolution 1992/27 of 27 August 1992 of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Subcommittee designated Mr. Leandro Despouy as Special Rapporteur on this question,

Recognizing that the elimination of widespread poverty and the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights are interrelated goals,

Recognizing also that the grave suffering of the vast majority of human beings who live in conditions of extreme poverty requires the immediate attention of the international community and the adoption of specific measures to eliminate extreme poverty and exclusion from society,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Expresses its satisfaction that the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1992/11, requested the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake a study of extreme poverty and, in particular, of the following aspects: the effects of extreme poverty on the enjoyment and exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of those experiencing it; the efforts of the poorest to achieve the exercise of those rights and to participate fully in the development of the society in which they live; the conditions in which the poorest may effectively convey their experience and their thoughts and become partners in the realization of human rights; and the means of ensuring a better understanding of the experience and thoughts of the poorest and of the persons working with them;

3. Again calls upon States, the specialized agencies, United Nations bodies and other international organizations, including intergovernmental organizations, to give the necessary attention to this problem;

4. Notes with appreciation the specific measures taken by the United Nations Children's Fund to mitigate the effects of extreme poverty on children and the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme to give priority to the search for some means of alleviating poverty within the framework of the relevant resolutions;

5. Decides to consider this question further at its forty-ninth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to own property

Report of the independent expert. In January 1992,(40) independent expert Luis Valencia Rodríguez (Ecuador) submitted a preliminary report on the means whereby the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others served to foster, strengthen and enhance the exercise of other human rights and fundamental freedoms. He discussed measures taken by United Nations bodies and listed United Nations and regional instruments relating to the right to property. He also noted a number of basic conceptual issues that should be highlighted in the final report.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February,(41) asked the Secretary-General to assist the independent expert and to transmit his preliminary report to all Member States and interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, requesting them to submit their comments. It would examine the expert's report in 1993.

In July,(42) the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that, as requested, he had transmitted the preliminary report and asked for comments.

Right to adequate housing

In a June working paper,(43) the Subcommission's expert on the right to adequate housing, Rajindar Sachar (India), identified some of the central issues affecting the realization of that right. He recommended carrying out a longer-term study on the topic.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(44) the Subcommission appointed Mr. Sachar as Special Rapporteur on promoting the realization of the right to adequate housing and requested him to carry out a two-year study and to submit a progress report in 1993. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to request Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide information to the Special Rapporteur. It also asked him to assist the Special Rapporteur in preparing the study.

Forced evictions

On 27 August,(45) the Subcommission recommended a draft resolution on forced evictions to the Commission, by which it would ask the Secretary-General to transmit the text to Governments, United Nations bodies, regional and intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and community-based organizations, soliciting their views and comments. It would also ask him to submit in 1994 an analytical report on forced evictions, based on that information as well as on international law and jurisprudence.

Advancement of human rights

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/137 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Noting with concern that many of the principles enunciated in resolution 32/130 have not yet been taken into consideration by the international community with all the necessary dynamism and objectivity,

Emphasizing the special importance of the purposes and principles proclaimed in the Declaration on the Right to Development, contained in the annex to its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the right to development, and also its resolution 45/155 of 18 December 1990, in which it decided that one of the objectives of the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993 would be to examine the relation between development and the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights, recognizing the importance of creating the conditions whereby everyone may enjoy those rights,

Taking into account the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,

Reiterating that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of development opportunities is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals within nations,

Expressing its particular concern about the progressive worsening of living conditions in the developing world and the negative impact thereof on the full enjoyment of human rights, and especially about the very serious economic situation of the African continent and the disastrous effects of the heavy burden of the external debt for the peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America,

Reiterating its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights,

Deeply convinced that today more than ever, economic and social development and human rights are complementary elements leading to the same goal, that is, the maintenance of peace and justice among nations as the foundation for the ideals of freedom and well-being to which mankind aspires,

Reiterating that cooperation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, is essential for the promotion of peace and development, convinced that the primary aim of such international cooperation must be the achievement by all human beings of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Considering that the efforts of the developing countries for their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources and by the adoption of appropriate and substantive measures for creating an external environment conducive to such development,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights should continue its current work on overall analysis with a view to further promoting and strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and working methods of the Commission, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the provisions and ideas set forth in General Assembly resolution 32/130;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international cooperation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for every human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from promoting and protecting the others;

3. Reaffirms that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

5. Considers that the issues mentioned in paragraph 4 above should be approached with due attention in the preparatory work for the World Conference on Human Rights so as to evaluate during the Conference the obstacles to achieving progress in the field of human rights;

6. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

7. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements for achieving full realization of the right to development;

8. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

9. Considers it necessary for all Member States to promote international cooperation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, with a view to solving international economic, social and humanitarian problems;

10. Urges all States to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all human rights without diminishing personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for the right of workers to participate in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, entailing a restructuring of existing international economic relations;

12. Decides that the approaches to future work within the United Nations system on human rights matters should take into account the content of the Declaration on the Right to Development and the need for the implementation thereof;

13. Decides to consider this question at its forty-eighth session.

National institutions for human rights protection

On 3 March,⁽¹⁾ the Commission welcomed the principles relating to the status of commissions and their advisory role, as contained in the report of the International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (Paris, 7-9 October 1991),⁽²⁾ and decided to rename them the principles relating to the status of national institutions. It further decided to transmit the principles, which were annexed to its resolution, to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, for adoption. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to publicize the proceedings of the workshop and undertake follow-up activities, transmit the proceedings to the Preparatory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights and consider the results of the workshop in preparing a manual on national institutions. It also asked him to begin planning a follow-up international workshop in 1993, following the World Conference on Human Rights, and to submit a report in 1993 on those preparations. It asked the Preparatory Committee of the World Conference to consider ways to promote the principles relating to the status of national institutions.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/233 of 20 July, approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General publicize the proceedings of the 1991 international workshop, undertake follow-up activities, begin planning a follow-up international workshop in 1993, following the World Conference on Human Rights, and submit a report on those preparations to the Commission in 1993. It decided to transmit to the General Assembly for adoption the principles annexed to the Commission's resolution.

By a November note,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted those principles to the General Assembly. On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 47/431, took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-eighth session at Geneva from 27 January to 6 March 1992. At that session, it adopted 83 resolutions and 19 decisions. In addition, the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council 7 draft resolutions and 34 draft decisions. The Commission also held its first special session in 1992 (Geneva, 13 and 14 August) to discuss the dangerous situation in the former Yugoslavia (see below). A second special session on the same matter was held, also at Geneva, on 30 November and 1 December (see below).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/264 of 20 July, took note of the Commission's report on its forty-eighth session.⁽⁴⁾

With regard to the organization of its work, the Commission decided to consider a report on the situation of human rights in Guatemala⁽⁵⁾ under agenda item 19,⁽⁶⁾ request the Economic and Social Council to bring forward its consideration of draft decisions adopted by the Commission at its 1992 session and relating to mandates requiring the Council's approval,⁽⁷⁾ and invite a number of experts, special rapporteurs, special representatives and chairman-rapporteurs of working groups to participate in the meetings at which their reports were to be considered.⁽⁸⁾

On 6 March,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission expressed its gratitude to the United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights, Jan Martenson (Sweden), for his services and dedication.

Emergency mechanism of the Commission

On 3 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission considered that an emergency mechanism of the Commission would enable the United Nations to react appropriately and immediately to acute situations arising from gross human rights violations wherever and whenever they occurred. Recalling a 1990 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽¹¹⁾ on the enlargement of the Commission and the further promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and bearing in mind the General Assembly's approval in 1991 of the Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission took note of a proposal to establish an emergency mechanism of the Commission as outlined in an annex to its resolution and decided to resume consideration of the proposed mechanism in 1993.

Organization of the work of the 1993 session

On 6 March,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize 40 fully serviced additional meetings for the Commission's forty-ninth (1993) session, and requested that the Chairman make every effort to organize the session's work within the time normally allotted, the additional meetings to be utilized only if absolutely necessary.

On 20 July, by decision 1992/258, the Council approved the request.

Revised 1993 provisional agenda and rationalization of work

The Commission on Human Rights, on 6 March (14) recalling its 1991 decision on guidelines for a revised provisional agenda for 1993,(15) stated that the revision of its agenda should be paralleled with a rationalization of its work. The Commission decided to consider the rationalization of its work at the beginning of its 1993 session.

Administrative measures related to mandates

By decision 1992/221 of 29 May, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Secretariat to take provisional administrative measures related to the mandates adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in 1992 on a temporary basis and until a formal decision on those mandates was taken by the Council.

Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Subcommission session

The Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its forty-fourth session at Geneva from 3 to 28 August 1992.(16) At that session, it adopted 39 resolutions and 12 decisions. In addition, it recommended to the Commission on Human Rights, its parent body, 8 draft resolutions and 13 decisions for adoption.

The Subcommission adopted decisions relating to the composition of its pre-session working groups,(17) methods of voting under agenda item 6 (violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms)(18) and its 1993 provisional agenda.(19) It also decided to invite a number of experts and special rapporteurs to participate in the meetings at which their reports were to be considered.(20)

Report of the Subcommission Chairman. In February,(22) the Subcommission's 1991 Chairman, Louis Joinet (France), submitted a report on the implementation of guidelines for the Subcommission provided by the Commission in 1991.(15)

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,(22) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 40 to none with 11 abstentions, endorsed the Subcommission's establishment in 1991,(15) on an exceptional basis, of an inter-sessional Working Group on the rationalization of its work and agenda and asked the Group to make a series of recommendations on a number of points (see below). The Commission invited the Subcommission's 1991 Chairman to consult with the members of the Bureau of the Commission at the end of its 1992 session and the 1992 Chairman to report to the Commission in 1993 on the Subcommission's implementation of the resolution.

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/238, approved the Commission's endorsement of the establishment of an inter-sessional Working Group and approved its invitations to the 1991 and 1992 Subcommission Chairmen.

Report of the inter-sessional Working Group. The five-member inter-sessional Working Group on the methods of work of the Subcommission (Geneva, 11-15 May)(23) focused on rationalizing methods of work, restructuring the agenda, coordinating with the Commission and other United Nations human rights bodies, and the independence of experts. The Group adopted a draft decision containing guidelines on the Subcommission's methods of work, which the Subcommission adopted on 26 August.(24) The Group made proposals on restructuring the Subcommission's agenda and on improving coordination with the Commission and other United Nations human rights bodies. It also discussed publicity for the Subcommission's work.

Election of Subcommission members

Between December 1991 and February 1992, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission the names of candidates and alternates nominated by Governments for election to the Subcommission, along with relevant biographical data.(25) In accordance with a 1986 Economic and Social Council resolution,(26) the Commission elected by secret ballot 13 members (half of the membership) of the Subcommission, and their corresponding alternates, if any, for a period of four years (see APPENDIX III).

Strengthening the Centre for Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(27) the Commission on Human Rights recognized that the workload of the Centre for Human Rights had greatly increased while resources had failed to keep pace with the expansion of its responsibilities, as noted in reports of the Secretary-General.(28) It asked the Secretary-General to take into account, when preparing the 1994-1995 budget outline, that adequate resources were projected for human rights, particularly for the Centre, and decided to consider the question again in 1993.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(29) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission, in February, an interim report on developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights,(30) and, in November, a final report to the General Assembly.(31)

In February, the Secretary-General summarized comments received from three Governments, one intergovernmental organization and four NGOs concerning the Centre's coordinating role.(32)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/127 without vote.

Strengthening of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/35 of 15 December 1989, 45/180 of 21 December 1990 and 46/118 and 46/111 of 17 December 1991,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/46 of 6 March 1989, 1990/25 of 27 February 1990, 1991/23 of 5 March 1991 and 1992/53 of 3 March 1992, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/47 of 25 May 1990 and 1991/36 of 31 May 1991,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/54 of 7 March 1989 and 1991/22 of 5 March 1991 on the coordinating role of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat within the United Nations system,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic purposes of the United Nations enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and an issue of the utmost importance for the Organization,

Bearing in mind that the Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization for 1992, stated that the "Charter of the United Nations places the promotion of human rights as one of our priority objectives along with promoting development and preserving international peace and security", an approach which he also applied in his proposals for the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/80 of 5 March 1992 on advisory services and the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, and recognizing the growing importance of advisory services for the promotion and strengthening of human rights, as demonstrated by the increasing number of requests from Governments for support and technical assistance in the field of human rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Centre for Human Rights in the promotion, protection and implementation of human rights and the need to provide sufficient human resources to the Centre, particularly in view of the fact that its workload has dramatically increased, while resources have failed to keep pace with the expansion of its responsibilities,

Noting that the difficult financial situation of the Centre during the biennium 1992-1993 has created considerable obstacles in the implementation of the various procedures and mechanisms, negatively influenced the servicing by the Secretariat of the bodies concerned with human rights and impaired the quality and precision of reporting,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and his previous reports, and noting that additional posts for the Centre have been authorized by the Secretary-General for an initial period of six months and that some of those posts only replace temporary posts that had been abolished,

Noting that, in spite of recent developments, the disparity between mandates themselves and resources available to carry them out has grown further, as a result of additional mandates given to the Centre by intergovernmental and expert bodies, after the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 and the adoption of that budget,

Noting also that the Assembly, in section XIX of its resolution 46/185 C of 20 December 1991, requested the Secretary-General, with regard to the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the level of general temporary assistance for section 28 of the programme budget, to ensure that adequate resources were available during the biennium 1992-1993,

Noting further that the Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its thirty-second session, held from 11 to 22 May 1992,^a reaffirmed its previous recommendations on the strengthening of the programmes and activities of the Centre, in the context of the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,^b

Noting that the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in revising estimates for the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, took note of the redeployment of live posts to the Centre, which will be used to respond to the mandate established by the Commission on Human Rights at its first special session, held on 13 and 14 August 1992,

1. Supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the role and importance of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as the coordinating unit within the United Nations system of bodies dealing with the promotion and the protection of human rights;

2. Takes note of the statement by the Secretary-General, as reflected in his report concerning the implications of organizational changes in the Secretariat, that he would propose using the remaining vacant posts now available in the Secretariat "in the light of new initiatives and emerging mandates and priorities";^c

3. Emphasizes that, in the review of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, adequate staffing, temporary assistance and other resources should be allocated to the Centre so as to enable it to respond to its increasing workload and its needs in order that it may carry out all the functions assigned to it, including those relating to the preparations for the World Conference on Human Rights and the Conference itself;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are accorded to the Centre to enable it to carry out, in full and on time, all the mandates, including the additional ones, resulting from the decisions of intergovernmental and expert bodies;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session and a final report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the developments relating to the activities of the Centre and on the measures taken to implement the present resolution.

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) without vote, 3 December (meeting 56); 90-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.56); agenda item 97 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 47-56; plenary 92.

Strengthening United Nations action

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(33) the Commission reiterated that all peoples had the right to determine freely their political status and pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State had the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the United Nations Charter (see APPENDIX II), including respect for territorial integrity. It called on Member States to base their activities for the promotion, protection and full realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the development of further international cooperation in that area, on the Charter, the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights(34) and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities inconsistent with that international legal framework. It underlined the continuing need for accurate, impartial and objective information on political, economic and social situations and events in all countries and asked United Nations human rights bodies and special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups to take into account its resolution in carrying out their respective responsibilities. The Commission regretted that the Secretary-General had not yet submitted recommendations on measures to promote international cooperation in the area of human rights related to ensuring that accurate, impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and developments in all countries was made available to all specialized bodies in the field, as requested by the Commission in 1991.(35) It asked the Secretary-General to submit those recommendations and to make them available to the Preparatory tory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights and to regional conferences, as requested by the General Assembly in 1991.(36)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/131 without vote.

Strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and its determination to promote social progress and better standards of living in greater freedom,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Bearing in mind also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization shall promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being that are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and that, in accordance with Article 56, all Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55,

Reiterating that Member States should continue to act in the human rights field in conformity with the provisions of the Charter,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Recalling its resolutions 32/130 of 16 December 1977, 37/200 of 18 December 1982, 41/155 of 4 December 1986 and 43/155 of 8 December 1988,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 2131(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 and 36/103 of 9 December 1981,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/39 of 28 February 1992,

Taking note of the recommendation made by the Commission on Human Rights in the annex to its resolution 1991/30 of 5 March 1991, that the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights, being guided by a spirit of consensus, should make suggestions aimed at ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues in United Nations human rights forums,

Aware of the fact that the promotion, protection and full exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as legitimate concerns of the world community should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the protection and promotion of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with this international framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Affirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as legitimate concerns of the world community should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity, and should not be used for political ends;

6. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the content of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

7. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Underlines, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

9. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, and international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-ninth session, to continue to examine ways and means to strengthen United Nations action in this regard on the basis of the present resolution and of Commission resolution 1992/39;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to request from all Member States information and comments on the present resolution for timely transmission to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights, regional conferences and the World Conference itself for consideration and so that relevant proposals, including ways and means to strengthen United Nations action in this regard, can be formulated;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Preparatory Committee with the documentation relevant to the present resolution;

13. Decides to consider this matter at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) without vote, 4 December (meeting 59); 11-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.62), orally revised; agenda item 97 (b).

Rule of law

On 3 March,(37) the Commission on Human Rights, recognizing the need to consider ways by which the United Nations could better contribute to the development and strengthening, by Member States, of the rule of law, requested the Secretary-General of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights to take its resolution into account in preparing reports for its Preparatory Committee.

1993 World Conference on Human Rights

On 28 February,(38) the Commission called on the Preparatory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights to deal with the substantive preparations for the Conference in accordance with a 1990 General Assembly resolution(39) and a 1991 Commission resolution.(40) It encouraged its Chairman, the chairpersons or other designated members of human rights bodies and working groups, as well as special and thematic rapporteurs, to participate in the work of the Preparatory Committee. The Commission welcomed contributions of extrabudgetary resources to meet the costs of representatives from least developed countries and encouraged further contributions to the Voluntary Fund established for that purpose. It also welcomed the willingness of Italy to consider acting as host to the World Conference.

Also on 28 February,(41) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to give priority, under the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights, to activities aimed at disseminating the objectives of the Conference.

Venue of the Conference

Communications. By a letter of 12 February,(42) Germany withdrew its 1991 invitation to the Secretary-General to hold the 1993 United Nations World Conference on Human Rights at Berlin.(40)

On 31 March, Austria transmitted an invitation to the Secretary-General to hold the Conference at Vienna,(43) and Italy expressed an interest in hosting the Conference at Venice,(44) but requested that the decision be postponed.

Note by the Secretary-General. On 24 April,(45) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the text of a draft decision taken by the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights at its second session (see below) concerning the dates and venue of the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 46/473 of 6 May 1992, the General Assembly noted with deep satisfaction Austria's decision to invite the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights to meet at Vienna and decided that the Conference would be convened there for two weeks in June 1993.

Subsequently, Austria informed the third session of the Conference's Preparatory Committee that the dates envisaged for the Conference were 14 to 25 June 1993.

Preparatory Committee

The Preparatory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights at its second (30 March-10 April 1992)(46) and third sessions (14-18

September),(47) both held at Geneva, elected its officers, adopted its agenda and rules of procedure and discussed its organization of work.

In April, the Committee recommended that the General Assembly ask the Secretary-General to invite specific categories of NGOs to regional meetings for the Conference. It considered a report of the Conference's Secretary-General on the public information programme and information coverage of the Conference and its preparatory process,(48) and urged him to ensure coverage of the regional meetings. The Committee again invited contributions of extrabudgetary resources to provide funds for the participation of representatives of least developed countries in the preparatory meetings and the Conference. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the voluntary fund established for that purpose in April(49) and in September.(50) In September, the Committee had before it a report of the Conference's Secretary-General on that question.(51) The Committee took note of progress achieved in developing a reference guide to United Nations studies and reports on human rights and in updating the publications United Nations Action in the Field of Human Rights,(52) Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments(53) and Human Rights: Status of International Instruments.(54) On 14 September, the Committee considered a report of the Secretary-General on the status of the preparation of publications, studies and documentation for the Conference.(55) A report on the status of the fund was also made to the Commission on Human Rights in March.(56)

Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly request,(57) the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee, in March, a report on progress made on other preparatory meetings related to the Conference(58) that had been organized in response to a 1990 Assembly resolution.(39) In that regard, the Committee asked the Secretary-General, in April, to prepare an analytic compilation of the recommendations of those meetings and of any others; in August, he submitted an initial compilation.(59) In response to a 1991 Assembly request,(57) the Secretary-General submitted a report on studies and documentation for the Conference(60) to the Committee's March/April session, which took note of it.

On 18 September, the Committee adopted its provisional rules of procedure.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/122 without vote.

World Conference on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the goal of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, as set out in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recognizing that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of another,

Recalling its resolution 45/155 of 18 December 1990, in which it decided, inter alia, to convene at a high level a World Conference on Human Rights in 1993, and its resolution 46/116 of 17 December 1991,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/30 of 5 March 1991,

Convinced that the holding of a world conference on human rights could make a significant contribution to the effectiveness of the actions of the United Nations in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recognizing the urgency of adopting a draft agenda for the World Conference on Human Rights before the final session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights on the work of its second and third sessions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, the bodies and organs of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations for their contributions to the preparatory process;

3. Approves the draft rules of procedure for the World Conference on Human Rights, as recommended by the Preparatory Committee at its second and third sessions, with the exception of rule 15 (e);

4. Decides that the distribution of the twenty-nine positions of vice-president of the Conference should be in accordance with the established criteria of the General Assembly based on equitable geographical distribution;

5. Approves the recommendation made by the Preparatory Committee at its third session regarding the participation of non-governmental organizations in regional meetings related to the preparatory process;

6. Also approves the provisional agenda for the Conference, as annexed to the present resolution, on the understanding that participants can raise issues of interest to them under the appropriate agenda item at the fourth session of the Preparatory Committee and at the Conference for possible inclusion in the final text;

7. Decides, in accordance with the decisions adopted by the Preparatory Committee:

- (a) (i) That the Preparatory Committee shall meet for its fourth session at Geneva, for a period of two weeks in April 1993;
- (ii) That the Preparatory Committee shall take up the question of the final outcome of the Conference at its fourth session, taking into consideration, inter alia, the preparatory work and conclusions of the regional meetings to be held at Tunis, San José and Bangkok;
- (iii) That the Secretary-General shall give the Conference and the preparatory process thereto the widest possible publicity and ensure full coordination of public information activities in the area of human rights within the United Nations system;

(b) To renew its invitation for contributions of extra-budgetary resources to meet the costs of the participation of representatives of the least developed countries in the preparatory meetings, including regional meetings, and in the Conference itself, and to request the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts in this regard;

8. Renews its request to Governments, the specialized agencies, other international organizations, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights or development to participate actively in the preparatory process and in the Conference itself;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the outcome of the Conference, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

ANNEX

Provisional agenda for the World Conference on Human Rights

1. Opening of the Conference.
2. Election of the President.
3. Adoption of the rules of procedure.
4. Election of other officers of the Conference.
5. Appointment of the Credentials Committee.
6. Establishment of committees and working groups.
7. Adoption of the agenda.
8. Commemoration of the International Year of the World's Indigenous People.
9. General debate on the progress made in the field of human rights since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and on the identification of obstacles to further progress in this area and ways in which they can be overcome.
10. Consideration of the relationship between development, democracy and the universal enjoyment of all human rights, keeping in view the inter-relationship and indivisibility of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights.
11. Consideration of contemporary trends in and new challenges to the full realization of all human rights of women and men, including those of persons belonging to vulnerable groups.
12. Recommendations for:
 - (a) Strengthening international cooperation in the field of human rights in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with international human rights instruments;
 - (b) Ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues;
 - (c) Enhancing the effectiveness of United Nations activities and mechanisms;
 - (d) Securing the necessary financial and other resources for United Nations activities in the area of human rights.
13. Adoption of the final documents and report of the Conference.

Public information activities

In a February report to the Commission on Human Rights on the development of public information activities in the human rights field, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Secretary-General described the activities of the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI). He also discussed co-ordination and cooperation within and outside the United Nations system, human rights observances and national focal points and assessed the Campaign's impact. In a later report,⁽⁶²⁾ the Secretary-General updated information on public information activities in the human rights field, as requested by the General Assembly in 1990.⁽⁶³⁾

The World Public Information Campaign, launched by the Assembly in 1988,⁽⁶⁴⁾ sought to increase understanding and awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms as well as provide education on international human rights machinery and the efforts of the United Nations to promote and protect human rights. Activities within the Campaign focused on preparing and disseminating printed information and reference materials; workshops, seminars and training courses; fellowships and internships; special human rights observances; and coverage and promotion activities.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February 1992,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that recent periodic reports of States parties to treaty-monitoring bodies and summary records of discussions of them in the treaty bodies be made available in UNICs of the submitting countries. It encouraged Member States to provide, facilitate and promote publicity for United Nations human rights activities and to accord priority to disseminating in their national and local languages the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽³⁴⁾ and other international instruments. Urging Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues, it encouraged the efforts of the Centre for Human Rights to develop a manual for higher education, in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The Commission asked DPI to use fully its available resources in human rights and to produce materials on such issues, and asked the Centre for Human Rights to coordinate the activities of the World Campaign and maintain liaison with Governments, regional and national institutions and individuals in developing and implementing those activities. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to take advantage of NGO collaboration in implementing the World Campaign and to submit a report in 1993 on public information activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/128 without vote.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are essential to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and that carefully designed programmes of teaching, education and information are essential to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Recognizing the catalytic effect of initiatives of the United Nations on national and regional public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing also the valuable role that non-governmental organizations can play in those endeavours,

Taking note of the recommendation of the fourth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies to the effect that an expert group from outside the Secretariat should be constituted to undertake a comprehensive review of the existing information programme of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the need for information materials on human rights to be carefully designed in clear and accessible form, to be tailored to regional and national requirements and circumstances with specific target audiences in mind, and to be effectively disseminated in national and local languages and in sufficient volume to have the desired impact, and for effective use also to be made of the mass media, in particular radio and television and audiovisual technologies, in order to reach wider audiences, priority being given to children, young people and the disadvantaged, including those in isolated areas;

3. Urges the Secretariat to take measures to ensure the further production and effective dissemination of human rights information materials, especially those on the basic United Nations human rights instruments and institutions, in national and local languages, in cooperation with regional, national and local organizations, as well as with Governments, making full and effective use of the United Nations information centres;

4. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that recent periodic reports of States parties to treaty-monitoring bodies and the summary records of discussions on the reports in the treaty bodies are available in the United Nations information centres of the countries that have submitted them;

5. welcomes the information relative to the situation of documentation on human rights at each United Nations information centre contained in the report of the Secretary-General, and reiterates the need to ensure, within available resources, the collection of basic United Nations information and reference material on human rights and fundamental freedoms at each of those centres and for the centres to disseminate human rights materials in all countries within their designated areas of activity;

6. Encourages all Member States to make special efforts, particularly in view of the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993, to provide, facilitate and encourage publicity for the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights and to accord priority to the dissemination, in their respective national and local languages, of the texts of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and major conventions on human rights, as well as information and education on the practical ways in which the rights and freedoms enjoyed under those instruments can be exercised;

7. Urges all Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues, and encourages all those responsible for training in law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate human rights components in their programmes;

8. Notes the special value, under the advisory services and technical assistance programme, of regional and national training courses and workshops, in cooperation with Governments, regional and national organizations and non-governmental organizations, in promoting practical education and awareness in the field of human rights;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the fullest effective deployment of the skills and resources of all concerned units of the Secretariat and to make available, within existing resources, in particular from the budget of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, adequate funding for developing practical and effective human rights information activities;

10. Calls upon the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, which has primary responsibility within the United Nations system in the field of human rights, to coordinate the substantive activities of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights pursuant to the direction of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, and to serve as liaison with Governments, regional and national institutions, non-governmental organizations and concerned individuals in the development and implementation of the activities of the Campaign;

11. Calls upon the Department of Public Information, which has primary responsibility for public information activities, to coordinate the public information activities of the Campaign and, in its responsibility as secretariat to the Joint United Nations Information Committee, to promote coordinated system-wide information activities in the field of human rights;

12. Stresses the need for close cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Department of Public Information in the implementation of the aims established for the Campaign and the need for the United Nations to harmonize its activities in the field of human rights with those of other organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with regard to education for human rights;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take advantage, as much as possible, of the collaboration of non-governmental organizations for, inter alia, the dissemination of human rights materials, with a view to increasing universal awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-ninth session, to consider the recommendation made by the fourth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies that an expert group, from outside the Secretariat, should be appointed to review comprehensively the existing information programme of the Centre for Human Rights, with a view to developing a new information strategy that integrates the needs of the various sections within the human rights programme, including treaty bodies;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Advisory services

In 1992,(66) under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights established in 1955,(67) activities funded by the United Nations regular budget included electoral assistance to Cambodia, Eritrea and Malawi. The following seminars and training courses took place: a training course on free and fair elections and human rights in a democratic society (Luanda, Angola, 31 August-4 September); a technical conference on practical experience in the realization of sustainable and environmentally sound self-development by indigenous peoples (Santiago de Chile, Chile, 18-22 May) (see above, under "Racial discrimination"); a national training course on the preparation of reports (Tehran, Iran, 2-5 August); a conference on de facto racial discrimination (Pretoria, South Africa, 21-23 October); a training course on international protection of human rights (Lima, Peru, 7-10 April); and a workshop on the situation of human rights in Haiti (New York, 18-20 November). Fellowships were awarded to 32 candidates, and 118 internships were offered to postgraduate students. The advisory services of experts were provided to Guatemala (see below) and the Russian Federation.

Under the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, established in 1987,(68) needs assessment missions were carried out in Albania, Benin, Mongolia, Namibia and Sao Tome and Principe, and electoral assistance was provided to Lesotho and Romania. Technical assistance programmes were under way in Colombia, Paraguay and Uruguay. Fellowships were awarded to 10 candidates and an additional 13 under technical assistance projects. Training activities included a training course on implementing human rights standards (Mbabane, Swaziland, 18-22 May); a seminar on human rights (Cotonou, Benin, 2-7 September); a training course on the implementation of human rights instruments and the administration of justice for officials from English-speaking African countries (San Remo, Italy, 9-13 March); a training course on human rights in the administration of criminal justice (Bucharest, Romania, 19-23 October; Tirana, Albania, 2-6 November); a seminar on human rights in the administration of justice (Bucharest, 30 November-4 December); an international symposium on human rights in Cambodia (Phnom Penh, 30 November-2 December) (see above under "Civil and political rights"); and training courses on teaching human rights in primary and secondary schools (Bucharest, 7-11 December and 14-18 December). The Centre continued its assistance to the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights of OAU, the Arab Institute of Human Rights (Tunis, Tunisia), the African Centre for Democracy and Human Rights Studies (Banjul, Gambia) and the Romanian Institute for Human Rights (Bucharest).

The Secretary-General reported that, as at 31 December 1992, the Fund had a negative balance of $549,300. Annexed to the report was an account of the Fund's income and expenditures for the year, its utilization as at 30 November 1992 and project commitments in 1992.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,(69) the Commission, taking note of a report by the Secretary-General on advisory services in the field of human rights during 1991, including the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights,(70) asked him to provide urgently more human and financial resources to enlarge advisory services; pursue his efforts towards a medium-term plan for advisory services and technical assistance; elaborate comprehensive programmes of advisory services and technical cooperation under the Voluntary Fund; draw the attention of human rights organs and Governments to the possibilities available to provide technical cooperation in the human rights field under the Voluntary Fund; guarantee the transparency of the criteria applied and of the rules of procedure to be followed in carrying out human rights technical cooperation; explore further the possibilities offered by cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and specialized bodies of the system; bring the need for further technical assistance in the legal field to the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies; and report to the Commission annually on progress made in implementing the programme of advisory services. It requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, to inform Governments of the possibility of availing themselves of the services provided for under the programmes of advisory services and to include in their recommendations proposals for specific projects.

On 4 March,(71) the Commission welcomed the conclusion, on 13 February, of an agreement on technical cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, on the one hand, and Albania, on the other. On 3 March,(72) it welcomed the close cooperation between Romania and the Centre in the field of advisory services.

Equatorial Guinea

On 5 March,(73) the Commission on Human Rights, commending Expert Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) for his report on the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea,(74) asked that country to cooperate with a newly appointed expert and the Centre for Human Rights in implementing the emergency plan of action as outlined in the report. It expressed serious concern that, notwithstanding the programme of advisory services offered to the Government, fundamental freedoms were still seriously restricted. It called on Equatorial Guinea to stop using military courts for trying ordinary law offences and to permit the establishment of an independent judiciary; take measures to promote harmonious coexistence of its peoples; free all political prisoners; and take legislative and administrative measures to establish freedom, democracy and the rule of law, as well as to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission asked its Chairman to appoint an expert to prepare a study of human rights violations in Equatorial Guinea and asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance the expert might need. It asked the expert to report to the Commission in 1993.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/247 of 20 July 1992, approved the appointment of such an expert and the Commission's request that the Secretary-General provide assistance.

Guatemala

Human Rights Commission action. Taking note of a report by independent expert Christian Tomuschat (Germany) on the situation of human rights in Guatemala,(5) the Commission on Human Rights, on 5 March,(75) expressed its gratitude to Guatemala for collaborating with the Commission in carrying out its advisory activities and asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide that country and NGOs with advisory services. Urging Guatemala to intensify investigations to identify and bring to justice those responsible for human rights violations, the Commission also requested Guatemala to intensify efforts to ensure that its authorities and security forces fully respected the human rights of the Guatemalan people. It asked the Secretary-General to extend the expert's mandate and asked the expert to report in 1993.

Extension of the expert's mandate was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1992/246 of 20 July 1992.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(76) the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 13 to 4, with 4 abstentions, adopted a resolution on the situation of human rights in Guatemala.

International human rights instruments

On 14 August,(77) the Subcommission, having considered a July note of the Secretary-General relating to communication with Member States concerning the ratification of, or accession to, international human rights instruments and developments in that area since its 1990 session,(78) asked him to renew his invitation to Member States that had not yet replied to previous communications, to submit information on the human rights instruments to which they had not yet become party and to draw their attention to the instruments they had already signed but not ratified. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue holding informal discussions concerning prospects for ratification of human rights instruments, to continue to inform it of his efforts in implementing its resolution and to update the table containing a country-by-country record of developments concerning the ratification of, or accession to, human rights instruments falling under its terms of reference. It requested the Subcommission Chairman to appoint, prior to its 1994 session, one of its members to report on information received under its resolution, to analyse difficulties impeding ratification of, or accession to, human rights instruments and to assess the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights with a view to encouraging universal acceptance of human rights instruments.

Human rights treaty bodies

In 1992, there were seven human rights treaty instruments in force providing for the monitoring of treaty implementation by expert bodies. Those instruments and their respective treaty bodies were the: 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination(79) (CERD); 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights(34) (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(34) (Human Rights Committee); 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women(80) (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment(81) (Committee against Torture); 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child(82) (Committee on the Rights of the Child); and the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid(83) (Group of Three).

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February,(84) the Commission endorsed continuing efforts to streamline, rationalize and improve reporting procedures by treaty bodies and by the Secretary-General. It also endorsed the recommendation made by the third meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 1-5 October 1990)(85) to institutionalize the meetings and asked the General Assembly to take action to enable them to be held biennially. It requested the fourth (1992) meeting (Geneva, 12-16 October)(86) to include on its agenda the question of the extent of reservations to human rights instruments. Welcoming the conclusions and recommendations of a 1989 study on possible long-term approaches to enhance the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations human rights instruments,(87) the Commission took note of a January 1992 report of the Secretary-General containing comments of the treaty bodies on the study.(88) The Secretary-

General was asked to consider establishing a committee resource room to gather and facilitate access to various sources of information indispensable for the effective functioning of various treaty bodies and to submit to the Assembly in 1992 a report examining the financial, legal and other implications of providing full funding for the operation of all human rights treaty bodies. He was also asked to expedite the implementation of the 1990 recommendations of the Task Force on Computerization,(89) by asking Member States to contribute voluntarily to cover the cost of the proposed system; prepare an inventory of all international human rights standards-setting activities to facilitate better-informed decision-making; ensure that recent periodic reports of States parties to treaty-monitoring bodies and summary records of committee discussions pertaining to them were made available in the UNICs in the countries submitting the reports; and ensure that the Manual on Human Rights Reporting(90) was available in all official languages at the earliest opportunity.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(91) the Secretary-General reported in October on the financial and legal implications of fully funding the operation of all human rights treaty bodies.(92)

By a note of 10 November,(86) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the fourth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies convened pursuant to the same 1991 Assembly resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/111 without vote.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/111 of 17 December 1991, as well as its other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the effective implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights is of major importance to the efforts of the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Reaffirming its responsibility to ensure the proper functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to instruments adopted by the General Assembly and, in this connection, also reaffirming the importance of:

- (a) Ensuring the effective functioning of systems of periodic reporting by States parties to these instruments;
- (b) Securing sufficient financial resources to overcome existing difficulties with the effective functioning of treaty bodies;

(c) Addressing questions of reporting obligations and financial implications whenever elaborating any further instruments on human rights,

Recalling the conclusions and recommendations of the second meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 10 to 14 October 1988,^a and the endorsement of the recommendations aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/111 and the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1992/15 of 21 February 1992,

Taking particular note of the conclusions and recommendations of the third and fourth meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 1 to 5 October 1990, and from 12 to 16 October 1992 respectively,

Expressing concern about the increasing backlog of reports on implementation by States parties to United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on progress achieved in enhancing the effective functioning of the treaty bodies,

Recalling the study^b on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations instruments on human rights, prepared by an independent expert, and aware of the need to update the study,

Welcoming the decision taken at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January 1992 to amend paragraph 6 of article 8 of the Convention and to add a new paragraph, as paragraph 7 of article 8, by which the members of the Committee established under the Convention shall henceforth receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as may be decided by the General Assembly, welcoming also the decision taken at the Conference of the States Parties to the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, on 9 September 1992, to delete paragraph 7 of article 17 and paragraph 5 of article 18 of the Convention, to insert a new paragraph, as paragraph 4 of article 18, by which the members of the Committee established under the Convention shall receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as may be decided by the General Assembly, and to recommend that the Assembly take action for the implementation of the proposed amendment at its forty-seventh session,

Welcoming the reports of the Secretary-General examining the financial, legal and other implications of providing full funding for the operation of all human rights treaty bodies,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and supports the continuing efforts in this connection by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General within their respective spheres of competence:

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations instruments on human rights, which contains several recommendations on reporting and monitoring procedures, servicing and financing of supervisory bodies and long-term approaches to human rights standard-setting and implementation mechanisms, and which was presented to the Commission on Human Rights for detailed consideration at its forty-sixth session, and, in the light of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the fourth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, requests that the report of the independent expert be updated for submission to the Commission at its fiftieth session and that an interim report be presented to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session and be made available to the World Conference on Human Rights in June 1993;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give high priority to establishing a computerized database to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the functioning of the treaty bodies;

4. Again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations and to contribute, individually and through meetings of States parties, to identifying and implementing ways of further streamlining and improving reporting procedures as well as enhancing coordination and information flow between the treaty bodies and with relevant United Nations bodies, including specialized agencies;

5. Welcomes the emphasis placed by the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies and by the Commission on Human Rights on the importance of technical assistance and advisory services and, further to this end:

(a) Endorses the request of the Commission to the Secretary-General to report regularly to it on possible technical assistance projects identified by the treaty bodies;

(b) Invites the treaty bodies to give priority attention to identifying such possibilities in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

6. Endorses the recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on the need to ensure financing and adequate staffing resources for the operations of the treaty bodies and, with this in mind;

(a) Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to provide adequate resources with regard to the various treaty bodies;

(b) Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. calls upon all States parties to meet fully and without delay their financial obligations under the relevant instruments on human rights, and requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of strengthening collection procedures and making them more effective;

8. Emphasizes that any administrative and budgetary measures shall be taken without prejudice to the duty of States parties under United Nations human rights instruments to meet all their current and outstanding financial obligations pursuant to such instruments;

9. Endorses the amendments to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take the appropriate measures to provide for the financing of the committees established under those conventions from the regular budget of the United Nations, beginning with the budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

(b) To take the necessary measures to ensure that the two committees meet as scheduled until the amendments enter into force;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take the appropriate steps in order to finance the biennial meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies from the resources available from the regular budget of the United Nations;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the views expressed at the forty-ninth session of the Commission on Human Rights and the thirty-seventh session of the Commission on the Status of Women, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report examining the conclusions and recommendations of the fourth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held in October 1992;

12. Decides to give priority consideration at its forty-eighth session to the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Reporting obligations of States parties

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February, (84) the Commission urged States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and to contribute to identifying and implementing ways to further streamline and improve reporting procedures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1992/260, by which it appealed to the following States, which had been parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights for more than 10 years but had not submitted even an initial report required by the Covenant, to do so as soon as possible: Bolivia, Central African Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, the Gambia, Guinea, Kenya, Lebanon, Mali, Mauritius, Morocco, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka and Suriname.

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February,(93) the Commission adopted a resolution on the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,(34) which corresponded largely to a resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council later in the year. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on the status of the Covenants and on the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/11 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its important responsibilities in relation to the coordination of activities to promote the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the latter and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Noting the entry into force on 11 July 1991 of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting and implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its sixth session, as well as the general and country-specific comments of the Human Rights Committee,

Noting, in this regard, that a number of States Members of the United Nations have yet to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Welcoming the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures, as well as the continuing efforts in this connection by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General within their respective spheres of competence,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of the international effort to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to consider acceding to the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty;

3. Again invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

4. Appeals to States parties to the Covenants that have exercised their sovereign right to make reservations in accordance with relevant rules of international law to consider whether any such reservations should be reviewed;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to intensify the systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to provide technical assistance to the States that are not parties to the Covenants, with a view to assisting them in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocols to the latter;

7. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation and the need for strict observance of all the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

8. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar questions of human rights to respect those standards as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee;

9. Also welcomes the adoption by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of a general comment at its third, fourth and fifth sessions, and encourages the Committee to continue using that mechanism to develop a fuller appreciation of the obligations of States parties under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

10. Further welcomes the fact that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its general comment on article 11, paragraph 1, of the Covenant, adopted at its sixth session, dealt with the right to adequate housing;

11. Invites States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in conformity with article 2, paragraph 1, of the Covenant, to consider identifying benchmarks to measure achievements in the progressive realization of the rights recognized in the Covenant and, in that context, to pay particular regard to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged groups;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights informed of the relevant activities of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the other functional commissions concerned, the Sub-commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the other treaty bodies and, as appropriate, the specialized agencies, and also to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to those bodies;

13. Encourages all Governments to publicize the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the latter, in all appropriate languages, and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

14. Invites States parties to the Covenants to consider the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

15. Decides to transmit the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session for consideration under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/11

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 2 July (meeting 5); 27-nation draft (E/1992/C.2/L.3); agenda item 17.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, by decision 47/429, asked the Secretary-General to make arrangements to award human rights prizes in 1993, the year marking the forty-fifth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,(65) as envisaged in a 1966 Assembly resolution.(94)

Electoral processes

Periodic and genuine elections

As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(95) the Secretary-General in November submitted a report on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections.(96) The Secretary-General stated that between 1 October 1991 and 16 October 1992, 31 requests had been received from Member States for electoral assistance compared with five such requests at the same time in 1991. Of those requests, 12 related to technical assistance, 8 referred to the sending of observers and 11 involved a combination of the two activities. Annexed to the report was a list of the 31 countries, the nature of their requests and follow-up action taken. The Secretary-General discussed major United Nations missions, including UNTAC (for further details see PART TWO, Chapter III), the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II (see PART TWO, Chapter I) and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

In accordance with a 1991 Assembly resolution,(95) the Secretary-General stated that a voluntary fund-the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation-was established for cases in which the requesting Member State was unable to finance, in whole or in part, the electoral verification mission. In addition, the UNDP Administrator had established a separate Trust Fund for Technical Assistance to Electoral Processes.

In addition to the criteria that should be met before agreeing to requests for electoral verification, as outlined in his 1991 report,(97) the Secretary-General stated that six basic approaches for such involvement could be defined as organization and conduct of elections; supervision; verification; observation; coordination and support of the activities of international observers affiliated with other organizations; and technical assistance.

The Secretary-General summarized additional replies received since his November 1991 report(97) from two Governments and one inter-governmental organization concerning suitable approaches to permit the United Nations to respond to Member States' requests for electoral assistance. Annexed to the report were the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Coordination of Assistance in the Electoral Field (Ottawa, Canada, 5-8 October 1992).

The addendum to the report contained proposed guidelines, prepared by the Secretariat, for Member States considering the formulation of requests for electoral assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/138 by recorded vote.

Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/146 of 15 December 1989, 45/150 of 18 December 1990, and especially 46/137 of 17 December 1991, as well as the annex to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/51 of 7 March 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Acknowledging the proposed guidelines on electoral assistance prepared by the Secretariat,

Noting the increase in requests for electoral assistance by Member States,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to designate a focal point for electoral verification and electoral assistance;

3. Takes note of the decision of the Secretary-General to establish the Electoral Assistance Unit within the Secretariat;

4. Commends the electoral assistance provided to Member States at their request by the Organization, requests that such assistance continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the proposed guidelines on electoral assistance, recognizing that the fundamental responsibility for ensuring free and fair elections lies with Governments, and also requests the Electoral Assistance Unit to inform Member States on a regular basis about the requests received, the responses given to those requests and the nature of the assistance provided;

5. Welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation and the establishment by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme of a separate fund, the Trust Fund for Technical Assistance to Electoral Processes, and calls upon Member States to consider contributing to the Funds;

6. Stresses the importance of coordination by the focal point within the United Nations system, commends the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for the advisory services and technical assistance it provides and the Department of Economic and Social Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme for the technical assistance they are providing to requesting Member States, and requests the focal point to continue to collaborate closely with the Centre for Human Rights as well as with the Department of Economic and Social Development and the United Nations Development Programme and inform them of requests presented in the area of electoral assistance;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Electoral Assistance Unit with adequate human and financial resources, under the regular budget of the Organization and within existing resources, to allow it to carry out its regular mandate;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to reinforce the Centre for Human Rights through the redeployment of resources and personnel in order to enable it to answer, in close coordination with the Electoral Assistance Unit, the increasing number of requests from Member States for advisory services in the area of electoral assistance;

9. Recommends that the proposed guidelines on electoral assistance be considered as provisional, and requests the Secretary-General to evaluate the guidelines in the light of experience over the next two years;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of resolution 46/137 and the present resolution, in particular on the status of requests from Member States for electoral assistance and verification, and on the validity of the guidelines in the light of experience;

11. Decides that the question of enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections shall be biennialized as of the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(98) the Secretary-General in October submitted a report(99) summarizing action taken by the Commission on Human Rights concerning respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes. He stated that while no specific action had been taken to review the fundamental factors negatively affecting the observance of those principles, a number of resolutions referred to the issue of elections in the context of guaranteeing the free expression of the will of people. They had concerned Afghanistan;(100) Albania;(71) South Africa;(101) and strengthening United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity.(33)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 47/431 of 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

On the same date, and on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/130 by recorded vote.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Also recalling its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, contained in the annex to that resolution,

Further recalling the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of 'the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Also reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to decide freely on their own future,

Recognizing that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections,

Also recognising that there is no single political system or single model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples, and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

Recalling its resolutions in this regard, in particular resolution 46/130 of 17 December 1991,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Reaffirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the ways for its implementation according to their constitution and national legislation;

3. Also reaffirms that any activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that intend to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Further reaffirms that there is no universal need for the United Nations to provide electoral assistance to

Member States, except in special circumstances such as cases of decolonization, in the context of regional or international peace processes or at the request of specific sovereign States, by virtue of resolutions adopted by the Security Council or the General Assembly in each case, in strict conformity with the principles of sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States;

5. Urges all States to respect the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and the sovereign right of peoples to determine their political, economic and social system;

6. Strongly appeals to all States to refrain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

7. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

8. Reiterates that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution to the situation in South Africa;

9. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to determine their political, economic and social system, without interference;

10. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session to continue giving priority to the review of the fundamental factors that negatively affect the observance of the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Regional arrangements

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March, (102) the Commission asked States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights did not exist to consider agreements to establish regional machinery to promote and protect human rights. It welcomed the continued cooperation of the Centre for Human Rights with the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) in establishing a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials at ESCAP headquarters (Bangkok). The Commission asked the Secretary-General, as foreseen in the medium-term Plan for 1992-1997, to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights, and welcomed the continued organization, by the Centre for Human Rights, of national, regional and subregional workshops and training courses for government officials engaged in the administration of justice and in implementing international human rights instruments. It also asked him to submit in 1993 a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion of human rights.

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1990, (103) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission in February, (104) and to the Assembly in October, (105) a report describing cooperation to promote and protect human rights between the United Nations and regional bodies and commissions in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific and Europe.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/125 without vote.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular resolutions 45/167 and 45/168 of 18 December 1990,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 45/167, the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of that resolution,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/52 of 3 March 1992 on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights concerning advisory services in the field of human rights, including its most recent resolution on that subject, 1992/80 of 5 March 1992,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/50 of 7 March 1989, 1990/71 of 7 March 1990, 1991/28 of 5 March 1991 and taking note of Commission resolution 1992/40 of 28 February 1992 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level under the auspices of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional intergovernmental organizations,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights may make a major contribution to the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that the exchange of information and experience in this field among the regions, within the United Nations system, may be improved,

Bearing in mind that regional instruments should complement the universally accepted human rights standards and that the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies noted during their third meeting, held at Geneva from 1 to 5 October 1990, that certain inconsistencies between provisions of international instruments and those of regional instruments might raise difficulties with regard to their implementation,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the continuing cooperation and assistance of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in the further strengthening of the existing regional arrangements and regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights, particularly in regard to advisory services and technical assistance, public information and education, with a view to exchanging any information and experience in the field of human rights;

3. Welcomes also in that respect the close cooperation given by the Centre for Human Rights in the organization of regional and subregional training courses or workshops in the field of human rights, including, most recently, those that took place at Barcelona, Brasilia, Cairo, Caracas, Paris, San Remo, Santiago, Teheran, Valetta and Windhoek, aiming at creating greater understanding of the promotion and protection of human rights issues in the regions and at improving procedures and examining the various systems for the promotion and protection of the universally accepted human rights standards;

4. Stresses the importance of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, and renews its appeal to all Governments to consider making use of the possibilities offered by the United Nations, under this programme, of organizing information and/or training courses at the national level for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international bodies;

5. Invites States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider agreements with a view to the establishment within their respective regions of suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, as foreseen in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights, and welcomes, in this connection, the fact that the Centre for Human Rights will continue to organize national, regional and subregional workshops and training courses for government officials engaged in the administration of justice and in the implementation of the international human rights instruments and that more countries in all regions of the world are expected to develop forms of cooperation and assistance with the Centre, in keeping with their specific needs;

7. Invites the organizers of regional meetings convened in preparation for the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993 to promote further ratification of and accession to United Nations human rights treaties and the implementation of universally accepted human rights standards;

8. Welcomes the recommendation of the persons chairing or representing the United Nations human rights treaty bodies concerning a possible meeting, during the World Conference on Human Rights, of the persons chairing or representing the United Nations human rights treaty bodies and those chairing or representing each of the principal regional organizations and institutions in the field of human rights, and requests the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights to consider the holding of such a meeting;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of advisory services and to make, where necessary, the relevant recommendations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider this question further at its forty-ninth session.

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly, in 1990,(106) had welcomed the designation of the ESCAP library as a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials within ESCAP at its Bangkok headquarters. The library's functions included the collection, processing and dissemination of such materials in the Asian and Pacific region.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(107) the Commission encouraged ESCAP member States and associate members and other parties to use ESCAP's depository centre and asked the Secretary-General to ensure a continuing flow of human rights materials to the library. It encouraged States in the Asian and Pacific region to consider establishing regional arrangements to promote and protect human rights, and asked the Secretary-General to organize a seminar in 1992 to discuss the matter. The Commission appealed to Governments in the region to consider making use of the United Nations to organize, under the programme of advisory services and technical assistance in human rights, information and training courses for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international organs. It requested the Secretary-General to consult the States in the region in the implementation of its resolution, and asked him to submit a report on the progress achieved.

Reports of the Secretary-General. At its 1992 session, the Secretary-General presented to the Commission a progress report on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in Asia and the Pacific.(108) He described cooperation between the Centre on Human Rights and ESCAP, and summarized replies received from two specialized agencies and two United Nations bodies containing their suggestions for activities. The Secretary-General also discussed consultations between the United Nations and countries in the region.

In May,(109) the Secretary-General drew to the attention of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council his report to the Commission. On 20 July, the Council, by decision 1992/263, took note of the Secretary-General's report, as did the Assembly on 18 December by decision 47/433.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Working Group activities. The Working Group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms held its seventh session at Geneva from 13 to 24 January and on 18 February.(110) It considered the preamble and chapters I to V with a view to reaching agreement on all matters left outstanding from previous sessions. The Group provisionally adopted a first-reading text but did not finalize several elements of chapters II, III, IV and V of the draft declaration. Annexed to the Group's report were a compilation of all the texts showing the state of the whole draft declaration, a compilation of proposals for a second-reading text and guidelines for a technical review of the draft declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(111) the Commission requested the Working Group to submit the draft declaration in 1993 and asked the Secretary-General to circulate the group's report to Member States, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments on the first-reading text. It also asked the Secretary-General to carry out a technical review of the draft in accordance with the guidelines annexed to the group's report and to distribute the results to Member States, specialized agencies, persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The Commission decided to continue elaborating the draft declaration at its 1993 session and to make meeting time available to the Working Group prior to and during that session. It recommended a draft resolution to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/9 without vote.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/82 of 5 March 1992,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the forty-ninth session of the Commission, with a view to completing at that time the second reading of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms and to submitting the text to the Commission at its forty-ninth session for adoption;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all the necessary facilities to the working group for its meetings.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/9

20 July 1992	Meeting	32	Adopted	without	vote
Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

Internally displaced persons and humanitarian assistance

On 5 March,(112) the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the Secretary-General's February 1992 analytical report on internally displaced persons,(113) asked him to designate a representative to seek views and information from all Governments on the human rights issues related to such persons, a request approved by the Economic and Social Council on 20 July by decision 1992/243. It also encouraged the Secretary-General to seek views and information from specialized agencies, United Nations organs, regional intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and experts in all regions, as well as from the United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator, UNHCR, the International Organization for Migration, ICRC and the Ad Hoc Working Group on Early Warning regarding New Flows of Refugees and Displaced Persons. It asked him to submit in 1993 a comprehensive study identifying existing laws and mechanisms to protect internally displaced persons, possible additional measures to strengthen implementation of those laws and mechanisms for addressing protection needs not adequately covered by existing instruments.

Subcommission action. On 26 August 1992,(114) the Subcommission called on all parties involved in the conflict in Somalia to end violations of human rights and humanitarian law and asked UNHCR to ensure adequate protection of and resources for refugees. (For further details on refugees in Somalia, see PART THREE, Chapter XV, and for further details on humanitarian assistance to that country, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Human rights violations

During 1992, situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Cambodia, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970 to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights,(1) the Working Group on Communications of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities met from 20 to 31 July 1992. Following its consideration of the Working Group's confidential report, the Subcommission referred to the Commission for consideration certain situations that appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested human rights violations. It deferred action on certain communications until 1993 and decided to take no action on communications pending since its 1991 session.(2)

Africa

South Africa

Working Group activities. In 1992, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967,(3) submitted to the Commission an interim report(4) and prepared a final report to be submitted to the Commission in 1993.(5)

In its final report, the Group re-examined its mandate and discussed the organization of its work concerning fact-finding missions aimed at gathering testimony from witnesses (Harare, Zimbabwe, 20-24 July, and Gaborone, Botswana, 27-30 July). Subjects of inquiry dealt with by the Group concerned: the right to life; detention and deaths in police custody; capital punishment and executions; administration of justice; political trials; escalating violence resulting in deaths; conditions after the repeal of certain apartheid legislation; return of exiles; constitutional negotiations; the right to education; and children.

The Working Group recommended the implementation of a number of observations contained in a 7 August report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council on the question of South Africa(6) (see PART TWO, Chapter 1) and supported recommendations proposed by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association (see below, under "Trade union rights"). It recommended establishing guarantees to secure the safety of witnesses and improving the legal aid system in South Africa. The Group asked the Commission to invite the Government of South Africa to restore confidence in the administration of justice; ensure the independence of the judiciary; prosecute civil servants having committed human rights violations under international human rights instruments; establish a consultative body, including representatives of the black population, to facilitate a dialogue to improve living conditions in rural areas; and facilitate the active participation of all parties concerned in the constitutional negotiations. The Group further asked the Commission to exert pressure on South Africa to grant an unconditional amnesty only to those who had committed acts to combat apartheid; obtain from those who had visited South Africa any relevant information likely to help the Group in fulfilling its mandate; enlist the Secretary-General's support to obtain authorization from the Government for the Group to visit that country in 1993; renew its mandate; and authorize the Group to update its list of civil servants and other South African government officials who had committed acts violating international human rights instruments. It advocated the release of all detained children and the transformation of South Africa's educational system into a non-racial one. Annexed to the report was a list of persons deemed responsible for the crime of apartheid.

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(7) the Commission demanded that the South African authorities fully respect section 29 of the Prisons Act, prevent the inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and ensure their basic and legitimate freedoms of movement, association and education. It called on the authorities to release all political prisoners; allow an impartial investigation into the alleged complicity by security organs and State-funded organizations in fomenting township violence and harassing legitimate anti-apartheid groups; maintain law and order; repeal the provisions of the Internal Security Act providing for detention without trial; abolish the system of "homelands"; repeal remaining discriminatory laws; accede to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights(8) and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;(9) and allow the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa to visit South Africa and cooperate with it in appraising human rights developments. It called on the international community to assist the front-line and neighbouring States; increase material and financial assistance to apartheid victims and assist and enhance the role of humanitarian and human rights groups in doing the same; assist UNHCR and other humanitarian organizations in repatriating and reintegrating South African refugees; and observe fully the mandatory arms embargo and the Security Council's 1977 request to monitor effectively the implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa.(10) The Commission called on the Centre for Human Rights to respond to the needs of South Africa during its period of transition, in accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(11) and asked the Group to report in 1993.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,(12) the Subcommission called on South Africa not to execute persons convicted and sentenced to death for "security" "security-related" or "unrest-related" offences and to bring before the courts any members of the security forces or other government organs or other persons against whom prima facie evidence of participation in killing residents in black areas or in murdering political opponents of apartheid existed. It condemned all military collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the nuclear field.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a note of 20 September,(13) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a preliminary report on the situation of human rights in South Africa prepared by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa. The report evaluated the principal developments of the human rights situation in South Africa between February and September 1992. The Working Group believed that immediate effect should be given to a number of recommendations contained in the Secretary-

General's 7 August 1992 report to the Security Council.(6) Considering a recommendation by the Secretary-General that the United Nations provide 30 observers to serve in South Africa, the Group recommended that its members be included among the observers. It further recommended transforming the educational system in South Africa to a non-racial one; respect for an agreement between South Africa and UNHCR under a Memorandum of Understanding; according a general amnesty for returning exiles; and incorporating the item on complete abolition of the apartheid system into the draft agenda of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights. The Group stressed the importance of providing potential witnesses with protection from any form of victimization and recommended the establishment of guarantees to secure the safety of such witnesses with the help of United Nations monitoring.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 47/431 of 18 December 1992, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Group's preliminary report on the situation of human rights in South Africa.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1992, there were 95 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (14) which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973(15) and entered into force in 1976.(16) In 1992, Croatia, Jordan, Latvia and Slovenia became parties to the Convention. In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention,(17) the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified, acceded or succeeded to it as of 1 August.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/81 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/103 of 4 December 1986, 42/56 of 30 November 1987, 43/97 of 8 December 1988, 44/69 of 8 December 1989, 45/90 of 14 December 1990 and 46/84 of 16 December 1991,

Mindful that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid constitutes an important international treaty in the field of human rights and serves to implement the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid is a crime against humanity and constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and a gross violation of human rights, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Condemning the abhorrent policy and system of apartheid and the repression it engenders, which continue to aggravate the situation in South Africa,

Emphasizing that the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa is apartheid,

Deeply concerned at the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the Government of South Africa, particularly in the military field, as an encouragement of its odious policy of apartheid,

Convinced that universal ratification of or accession to the Convention and the immediate implementation of its provisions will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention which have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the Government of South Africa with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

4. Underlines the importance of the universal ratification of the Convention, which would be an effective contribution to the fulfilment of the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other human rights instruments;

5. Appeals once again to those States which have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

Foreign support of South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 28 February, (18) adopted by a roll-call vote of 35 to 15, with 3 abstentions, the Commission condemned assistance to South Africa, particularly in the military field. Also condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of some States, in particular Israel, with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. Noting with appreciation measures taken by some States, parliamentarians, institutions, trade unions and NGOs to exert pressure on South Africa, the Commission called on them to maintain their efforts to force South Africa to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions. It also noted the disinvestment, trade restrictions and other positive measures taken by some countries and transnational corporations and urged them to continue. The Commission called on Governments that had not yet done so to take measures to end economic, financial and technological cooperation with South Africa, to end assistance in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there and to cease nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

It called on Governments to maintain sanctions and all forms of pressure against South Africa until agreement had been reached on drawing up and adopting a new constitution and holding elections. It appealed to the international community to assist the front-line and neighbouring States and to increase its contributions to the victims and opponents of apartheid. The Commission appealed to the international community, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to increase humanitarian and legal assistance to apartheid victims, returning refugees and exiles and released political prisoners.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the coordination of activities of the United Nations system in accordance with the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa (19) and to continue monitoring its implementation and pursue initiatives leading to the eradication of apartheid. Expressing appreciation to the Sub-commission's Special Rapporteur, Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), for his updated 1991 report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to South Africa,(20) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to give the report the widest dissemination and to issue it as a United Nations publication, and called on Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur.

On 21 February,(21) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 33 to 14, with 5 abstentions, recommended a draft text to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/13 by recorded vote.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist regime of South Africa

Recalling its resolution 1991/126 of 31 May 1991,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 39/15 of 23 November 1984, 41/95 of 4 December 1986, 43/92 of 8 December 1988 and 45/84 of 14 December 1990,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Ahmed Khalifa, for his updated report;

2. Expresses its thanks to all Governments and organizations that provided information to the Special Rapporteur;

3. Invites the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist regime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as he may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report to the Commission on Human Rights through the Subcommission;

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, specialized agencies, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant sources in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist regime of South Africa;

(c) To intensify direct contacts with the Department of Economic and Social Development and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, with a view to consolidating mutual cooperation in updating his report;

4. Calls upon all Governments:

(a) To cooperate with the Special Rapporteur in making the report even more accurate and informative;

(b) To disseminate the updated report and give its contents the widest possible publicity;

5. Calls upon all Governments and organizations to maintain sanctions against the regime of South Africa until the total dismantlement of the apartheid system, in conformity with the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989 and contained in the annex thereto;

6. Invites the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its forty-fourth session and the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session to consider the updated report;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 45/84, to make two economists available to the Special Rapporteur to help him develop his analysis and documentation on specific cases of special importance;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view to intensifying direct contacts with the Department of Economic and Social Development and the Centre against Apartheid and to consolidating mutual cooperation in updating his report;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring the updated report of the Special Rapporteur to the attention of Governments whose national financial institutions continue to deal with the regime of South Africa, and to call upon them to provide the Special Rapporteur with any information or comments they may wish to submit on the matter;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to contact the Government of South Africa, with a view to enabling the Special Rapporteur to visit South Africa on a special mission for the purpose of the next updating of his report;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give the updated report of the Special Rapporteur the widest possible distribution and publicity as a United Nations publication.

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 29-17-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) by recorded vote (31-16-4), 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Colombia, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Iran, Jamaica, Kuwait, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Philippines, Rwanda, Somalia, Suriname, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Poland, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Belarus, Russian Federation.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur presented to the Subcommission an updated report(22) with an addendum listing banks, insurance companies, firms and other enterprises giving, directly or indirectly, military, economic and other assistance to South Africa. By a September note and later addendum,(23) the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly.

Subcommission action. On 21 August,(24) the Subcommission, expressing its gratitude to the Special Rapporteur, recommended the appointment of a special rapporteur to report on the transition to democracy in South Africa.

On 27 August,(25) it took note of the recommendations of the Pan-African Congress on Democracy and Management of the Transition in Africa (Dakar, Senegal, 25-28 May).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 47/426 of 16 December 1992, the General Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his contribution to the cause of eliminating apartheid and thanked all Governments and organizations that had supplied him with information.

Also on 16 December, the Assembly, by decision 47/427, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Special Rapporteur's report.

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa continued in 1992 to study the situation relating to the right to work and trade union rights and the conditions of black workers. Its findings, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1991,(26) were included in its report to the Commission and submitted to the Council separately in April.(27)

By decision 1992/263 of 20 July 1992, the Council took note of the note by the Secretariat transmitting the report of the Working Group.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a June note,(28) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report of the ILO Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association concerning allegations of infringement of trade union rights in South Africa. The Council had referred the allegations to the Commission in May 1991.(26)

The Commission recommended giving priority to enacting legislation extending to agricultural and domestic workers, trade union and collective bargaining rights in common with other workers in South Africa; addressing problems posed by the existence of 11 different sets of labour relations legislation in South Africa's various territories; resolving the outstanding issues in negotiations concerning new legislation to govern labour relations in the public sector; banning by law limits to membership in trade unions or employers' organizations because of race; reforming security or other legislation which had been used to restrict the right of trade unions to freely carry on their activities; bringing to justice those interfering with trade unions and their members and, in particular, for acts of violence against them; and granting free access by unions to workers living and working on employer premises for the purpose of carrying out normal union activities. As South Africa was not an ILO member, the Commission recommended that the Government be invited, through the Council, to submit reports on measures taken to give effect to the Commission's conclusions and recommendations, and that the Council should transmit such reports to the ILO Director-General, who should in turn provide any advice and comments which the Council might wish to have on them. The Commission recommended that widespread publicity be given to its report in South Africa and that South Africa bring its law and practice into full conformity with the 1948 Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention (No. 87)(29) and the 1949 Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention (No. 98).(30) As to reforming the industrial court system, the Commission recommended that the ILO Director-General examine favourably any request for assistance from the Government of South Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July 1992, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/12 without vote.

Allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association concerning the Republic of South Africa referred to it by the International Labour Office, pursuant to Council resolution 1991/37 of 31 May 1991,

Taking note with satisfaction of the findings, conclusions and recommendations contained in the report, in particular in paragraph 748, clauses 13, 14 and 15,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Government of South Africa to report, no later than 31 December 1992, on the measures it has taken to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission, and thereafter, at yearly intervals until the Economic and Social Council is satisfied that the recommendations have been implemented;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to refer the reports of the Government of South Africa on this matter to the International Labour Office, with the request that the latter transmit to the Council its advice and comments stemming from examination of the reports;

3. Takes note of the request of the Government of South Africa that the International Labour Office should provide to it and to labour and management organizations of South Africa technical assistance and advice, in respect of the recasting of that country's labour laws, and invites the International Labour Office to comply with this request and to inform the Council of actions taken in this regard in the context of an annual report to the United Nations.

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Madagascar for African States (E/1992/C.2/L.4); agenda item 17.

Sudan

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/142 by recorded vote.

The situation in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Taking note of resolution AHG/Res.213 (XXVIII) on the strengthening of cooperation and coordination among African States, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-eighth ordinary session, held at Dakar from 29 June to 1 July 1992,^a and recalling declaration AHG/Decl.1 (XXVI) adopted at the twenty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 9 to 11 July 1990,^b

Noting with deep concern reports of grave human rights violations in the Sudan, particularly summary executions, detentions without trial, forced displacement of persons and torture, described in part in the reports submitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session by the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,^c

Noting the announcement by the Government of the Sudan of its intention to constitute an independent judicial inquiry commission to investigate the killings of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign government relief organizations,

Deeply concerned that access by the civilian population to humanitarian assistance is being impeded, which poses a threat to human life and an offence to human dignity,

Alarmed by the large number of internally displaced persons and victims of discrimination in the Sudan, including members of minorities who have been forcibly displaced in violation of their human rights and who are in need of relief assistance and of protection,

Alarmed also by the mass exodus of refugees into neighbouring countries, and conscious of the burden that this places on those countries, but expressing its appreciation for the continuing efforts to assist them, thereby easing the burden on host countries,

Emphasizing that it is essential to put an end to the serious deterioration of the human rights situation in the Sudan,

Welcoming the efforts of the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations to provide humanitarian relief to those Sudanese in need,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the serious human rights violations in the Sudan, including summary executions, detentions without due process, forced displacement of persons and torture;

2. Urges the Government of the Sudan to respect fully human rights, and calls upon all parties to cooperate in order to ensure such respect;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to comply with applicable international human rights instruments, in particular the International Covenants on Human Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to which the Sudan is a party, and to ensure that all individuals in its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including members of all religious and ethnic groups, enjoy the rights recognized in those instruments;

4. Calls upon all parties to the hostilities to respect fully the applicable provisions of international humanitarian law including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect all civilians from violations, including arbitrary detention, ill-treatment, torture and summary execution;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the humanitarian organizations for their work in helping displaced persons and drought and conflict victims in the Sudan, and calls upon all parties to protect humanitarian relief workers;

6. Calls upon the Special Rapporteur on Summary or Arbitrary Executions to address the killing of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign government relief organizations;

7. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to ensure a full, thorough and prompt investigation of the killings of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign government relief organizations by the independent judicial inquiry commission, to bring to justice those responsible for the killings and to provide just compensation to the families of the victims;

8. Calls upon all parties to permit international agencies, humanitarian organizations and donor Governments to deliver humanitarian assistance to the civilian population and to cooperate with the recent initiatives of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to deliver humanitarian assistance to all persons in need;

9. Recommends that the serious human rights situation in the Sudan be monitored, and invites the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session to give urgent attention to the situation of human rights in the Sudan;

10. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-eighth session.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Before the Third Committee adopted the text, the United Kingdom, on behalf of the 12 members of the European Community, motioned that action be taken on the draft on the situation in the Sudan⁽³¹⁾ before taking action on a draft on the situation of human rights in the Sudan,⁽³²⁾ sponsored by the Sudan, which would have postponed any action on the former draft until 1993. The Committee approved the United Kingdom's motion by a recorded vote of 69 to 13, with 42 abstentions.

The Sudan then motioned that no action be taken on the draft on the situation in the Sudan.⁽³¹⁾ By a recorded vote of 77 to 12, with 36 abstentions, the Committee rejected that motion.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February 1992, Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) presented to the Commission on Human Rights a report on the human rights situation in Afghanistan.⁽³³⁾ He had visited Pakistan from 29 December 1991 to 2 January 1992 and Afghanistan from 2 to 5 January 1992.

The Special Rapporteur stated that since the submission of his 1991 interim report,⁽³⁴⁾ hostilities in Afghanistan had diminished. Nevertheless, fighting between the opposition and Government forces and among the opposition groups continued to cause casualties.

In response to an appeal made by the Special Rapporteur, in conformity with a 1991 General Assembly resolution, ⁽³⁵⁾ the President of Afghanistan issued a decree, which entered into force on 15 January 1992, limiting the number of cases in which the death penalty might be applied; as a result, 114 death sentences were commuted. The number of convicted political prisoners remained stable at about 2,500. Special courts were abolished and a new judicial system was in place. However, the Special Rapporteur was unable to verify how it functioned and whether it guaranteed a fair trial. Detention on remand remained at a critical stage and continued to be unreasonably long.

The Special Rapporteur described the plight of some 5 million Afghan refugees living in Iran and Pakistan and the situation of prisoners of war and political prisoners.

The Special Rapporteur recommended the incorporation of human rights elements into a political solution, namely: creating conditions for refugees to exercise their free will to return; calling for the participation by United Nations Member States in demining activities; releasing unconditionally all political prisoners and prisoners of war; exchanging lists of all prisoners and providing information to their relatives through ICRC; and ceasing all organized hostilities. He advocated the following human rights measures, regardless of when a political solution was arrived at: releasing all former Soviet prisoners; commuting all death sentences and abolishing the death penalty; investigating alleged ill-treatment of prisoners; respect for the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the first United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in 1955;⁽³⁶⁾ allowing visitation of prisoners by the Special Rapporteur and ICRC; and establishing a bar association and training for lawyers.

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission, noting the Special Rapporteur's report, urged all parties concerned to increase their efforts to achieve a political solution based on the Secretary-General's 1991 five-point peace plan,⁽³⁸⁾ including free and fair elections, the cessation of hostilities and the free return of refugees to their homeland. It also urged them to respect the accepted humanitarian rules as set out in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols of 1977,⁽³⁹⁾ halt the use of weapons against civilians, protect prisoners from reprisals and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution, expedite the exchange of prisoners, transmit to ICRC the names of all prisoners and grant ICRC unrestricted access to all parts of the country and the right to visit all prisoners. The Commission called on States and parties concerned to release all prisoners of war detained as a result of the conflict, in particular, the release of former Soviet prisoners of war, considering that the hostilities in which the former USSR was involved had legally ended, and asked that ICRC be given full access to prisoners of war held by opposition forces. It called on all conflicting parties to investigate the fate of disappeared persons, apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees, reduce the period during which prisoners awaited trial, treat all prisoners in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners⁽³⁶⁾ and apply to all convicted persons article 14, paragraph 3 (d) and paragraph 5 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽⁸⁾ It noted with concern allegations of atrocities committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and captured civilians. Expressing concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, were becoming increasingly difficult, the Commission urgently appealed to Member States and humanitarian organizations to promote the implementation of projects envisaged by the Coordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan and UNHCR programmes. It also appealed to Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to cooperate fully, especially on the subject of mine detection, to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity. The Commission urged all parties concerned to undertake measures to ensure the safety of personnel of organizations involved in implementing United Nations humanitarian and economic assistance programmes and extend their full cooperation to the Commission and its Special Rapporteur. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1992 and the Commission in 1993. The Secretary-General was asked to give him all necessary assistance.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/240, approved the Commission's extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and its requests that he report to the General Assembly in 1992 and to the Commission in 1993 and that the Secretary-General give him all necessary assistance.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan from March to October 1992,⁽⁴⁰⁾ prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's request. The Special Rapporteur had visited Pakistan and Afghanistan in September.

Although the period of foreign occupation and communist rule in Afghanistan had ended in April/May 1992, a situation of conflict still prevailed in the country which prevented the effective enjoyment of human rights. During the formation of a transitional Government, different armed groups had entered Kabul (for details on the transition period, see PART TWO, Chapter III). In August 1992, Kabul came under the heaviest rocket attacks during the last 14 years of war. The events in Kabul had resulted in a stream of new refugees and displaced persons. After the collapse of the former Government, no mass systematic executions were reported, but death sentences had been pronounced and applied in Jalalabad, Kabul and Kandahar.

The Special Rapporteur recommended releasing prisoners of war held by the mujahidin; respect for humanitarian law; issuing a declaration on human rights in emergency situations; respect for the right to life including a speedy demining process; preventing torture; permitting ICRC visits to places of detention; limiting the period of detention on remand or preventive detention to a reasonable length; not discriminating against refugees associated with the former Government and to whom amnesty applied; returning Afghan children remaining in the former Soviet Union to their country; and inviting Afghanistan to accept United Nations monitoring or advisory services in the field of human rights.

Appendices to the report contained the text of the Peshawar Accord (24 April 1992) establishing a structure and timetable for the period of transition and maps identifying the locations of Afghanistan's major ethnic groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/141 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals that could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of the inhabitants of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces,

Recalling also its resolution 46/136 of 17 December 1991 and all its other relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note in particular of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/68 of 4 March 1992, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year and to request him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, and of Economic and Social Council decision 1992/240 of 20 July 1992, in which the Council approved the decision of the Commission,

Noting that, following the demise of the former Afghan Government, a transitional Islamic State of Afghanistan was established on the basis of the Peshawar Accord concluded by resistance parties on 24 April 1992,

Noting with deep concern that in spite of the efforts and initiatives taken by the Government of Afghanistan towards ensuring complete peace and stability, a situation of armed confrontation, which is affecting mainly the civilian population, continues to exist in parts of the territory of Afghanistan, and in particular in Kabul, and much remains to be done for the treatment of prisoners in conformity with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Concerned that the prevailing uncertainty in the country over political and legal order may affect the situation of members of ethnic and religious minorities,

Noting with concern reports of violations of rights enshrined in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, such as the right to life, liberty, personal security and freedom of opinion, expression and association,

Concerned that neither the International Committee of the Red Cross nor the Special Rapporteur was able to visit prisoners who were associated with the former Government,

Welcoming the fact that over one million refugees have returned to Afghanistan since April 1992, and hoping that conditions in Afghanistan will allow those still in exile to return as soon as possible,

Aware that peace and security in Afghanistan are prerequisites for the successful repatriation of more than four million refugees, in particular the achievement of a comprehensive political solution and the establishment of a freely and democratically elected government, the end of armed confrontation in Kabul and in some provinces, the clearance of the minefields that have been laid in many parts of the country, the restoration of an effective authority in the whole country and the reconstruction of the economy,

Welcoming the declaration of general amnesty issued by the Islamic State of Afghanistan, which should be applied in a strictly non-discriminatory manner,

Commending the activity carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross in cooperation with the Afghan authorities, as well as non-governmental organizations, in favour of the people of Afghanistan,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

1. Welcomes the cooperation that authorities in Afghanistan have extended to the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in view of the circumstances prevailing in the country;

2. Also welcomes the cooperation that the authorities in Afghanistan have extended, in particular to the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and to international organizations, such as the specialized agencies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross;

3. Urges all the Afghan parties to increase their efforts in order to achieve a comprehensive political solution, which is the only way to bring about peace and the full restoration of human rights in Afghanistan, based on the free exercise of the right to self-determination by the people, including free and fair elections, the cessation of armed confrontation and the creation of conditions that will permit the free return, as soon as possible, of the more than four million refugees to their homeland in safety and dignity, whenever they wish, and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by all Afghans;

4. Recognizes that the promotion and protection of human rights should be an essential element in the achievement of a comprehensive solution to the crisis in Afghanistan, and calls upon all Afghan parties to respect human rights;

5. Urges all the Afghan parties to respect accepted humanitarian rules as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to protect all prisoners from acts of reprisal and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary executions, to transmit to the International Committee of the Red Cross the names of all prisoners, to expedite the exchange of prisoners wherever they may be held and to grant to the Committee unrestricted access to all parts of the country and the right to visit all prisoners in accordance with its established criteria;

6. Calls upon all States and parties concerned to make all efforts for the realization of its decision 47/428 of 16 December 1992 entitled "Prisoners of war and persons missing as a result of war in Afghanistan", and calls upon them to make all efforts for the release, as soon as possible, of all prisoners of war as provided for under article 118 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949, considering that the hostilities in which the former Soviet Union was involved have legally and effectively ended;

7. Requests that the International Committee of the Red Cross be given full access to all prisoners by the warring factions;

8. Calls upon the authorities in Afghanistan to investigate thoroughly the fate of those persons who have disappeared, to apply amnesty decrees equally to all detainees, to reduce the period during which prisoners await trial, to treat all prisoners, especially those awaiting trial or those in custody in juvenile rehabilitation centres, in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to apply to all suspected/convicted persons article 14, paragraphs 3 (d) and 5 to 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

9. Expresses its concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, are becoming increasingly difficult because of the decline in international humanitarian assistance;

10. Urgently appeals to all Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to cooperate fully, especially on the subject of mine detection and clearance, in order to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity;

11. Also urgently appeals to all Member States and humanitarian organizations to continue to promote the implementation of the projects envisaged by the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially the pilot projects for the repatriation of refugees;

12. Urges all Afghan parties to undertake all necessary measures to ensure the safety of the personnel of humanitarian organizations involved in the implementation of the United Nations humanitarian and economic assistance programmes relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

13. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to extend their full cooperation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

15. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-eighth session, the situation of human rights in Afghanistan in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) without vote, 4 December (meeting 58); draft by Chairman (A/C.3/47/L.71); agenda item 97 (c). Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 47-58; plenary 92.

On 16 December, also on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 47/428, by which it called on Afghanistan and the Russian Federation to negotiate and consult to solve the humanitarian question of prisoners of war and missing persons on both sides, on the basis of a joint statement issued on 14 May. In that statement, they had expressed their readiness to do everything necessary for the earliest and unconditional release of all war prisoners and to seek the whereabouts of missing persons to give them a chance to return to their homes freely. The Governments of the newly independent States concerned and Afghanistan were encouraged to do the same.

Cambodia

The Commission on Human Rights, its Subcommission and the Economic and Social Council expressed concern about the protection of human rights in Cambodia (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

East Timor

In an addendum to his report to the Commission on the question of torture,(41) Special Rapporteur Peter H. Koijmans (Netherlands) discussed his visit to East Timor and Indonesia from 4 to 16 November 1991, in response to Indonesia's invitation, where he had met with Government officials and NGOs concerned with human rights and visited a prison in the Jakarta area.

On 12 November 1991,(42) there had been violent incidents at Dili, East Timor, resulting in loss of life and injuries among civilians. Following those events, the Secretary-General decided to send S. Amos Wako (Kenya) as his personal envoy to report on the incidents.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 13 to 6, with 4 abstentions, on 27 August,(43) the Subcommission invited the Secretary-General to transmit the report of his personal envoy to the Commission on Human Rights and asked him, in preparing his report on the situation in East Timor for the Commission's consideration, to include an analytical compilation of information received from, among others, Governments, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs. It called on Indonesian authorities to honour their commitment to facilitate access to East Timor by humanitarian and human rights organizations.

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) in January submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report on the human rights situation in Iran. He had received information on alleged incidents and cases concerning the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the administration of justice; freedom of expression, opinion and association and the right to peaceful assembly; political rights; the situation of women and children the right to leave one's country and to return; freedom of religion; and the Baha'i community. The detailed allegations had been transmitted to Iran to enable it to verify their accuracy; Iran's replies were reflected in the Special Representative's report. He also gave information on his third visit to Iran, which he undertook in December 1991.

The Special Representative concluded that in 1991 Iran had made no real progress towards improved compliance with international human rights instruments. He identified the areas of greatest weakness regarding human rights in Iran as follows: excessive use of the death penalty; lack of guarantees of due process of law; discrimination against citizens because of religious beliefs, specifically the Baha'is; and the absence of independent associations and a climate of legal certainty and guarantees for the expression of literary and artistic thought and creativity. One positive measure was the signing of an agreement to allow ICRC to visit prisons as from January 1992. The Special Representative stated that international monitoring of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Iran should continue and that Iran should be called on to comply with international human rights standards.

Annexed to the report were lists of names and particulars of persons allegedly executed in Iran as well as information on prisoners.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a July note,(45) the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Subcommission to the Special Representative's report.

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,(46) by a roll-call vote of 22 to 12, with 15 abstentions, the Commission, expressing concern at continuing reports of human rights violations in Iran, called on that country to intensify its efforts to investigate and rectify the human rights issues raised by the Special Representative, comply with international instruments on human rights and ensure that all individuals enjoyed the rights recognized in those instruments. It encouraged Iran to continue to cooperate with ICRC and with the Special Representative. The Commission endorsed the Special Representative's view that international monitoring of human rights in Iran should be continued. Deciding to extend the Special Representative's 1984 mandate for another year, the Commission asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1992 (see below) and a final report to the Commission in 1993, and asked the Secretary-General to give him all the necessary assistance. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1992/239 of 20 July 1992.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(47) the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 18 to 3 with 2 abstentions, asked the Special Representative to include in his 1992 report to the General Assembly (see below) and in his 1993 Commission report information on executions, arrests and measures to suppress political opposition, including the formation of special paramilitary units and any further information on the assassination of Professor Kazem Rajavi, a judge who had tried a case involving the assassination of an Iranian citizen in Germany. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to inform it in 1993 of relevant reports by special rapporteurs or bodies, as well as of steps taken by the Assembly and the Commission to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

Interim report of the Special Representative. In November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Representative's interim report on the human rights situation in Iran.(48) The report summarized information he had obtained between January and September 1992 on the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the administration of justice; freedom of expression, opinion and the press; the situation of women; political rights; the rights to work, education and to own property; freedom of religion and the situation of the Baha'is; and the war on drug traffic. Information was also received on the events of 5 April 1992 relating to an air attack by the Iranian Air Force on the Ashraf military base in Iraqi territory, which belonged to the Iran National Liberation Army of the People's Mujahidin.

The Special Representative noted that excessive application of the death penalty continued and incidents of violence against Iranian citizens living abroad who were members of various opposition organizations were reported. Concerning the investigation of the assassination of Professor Kazem Rajavi, a judge who had tried a case involving the assassination of an Iranian citizen in Germany, a Swiss newspaper, Le Courrier, had reported in February that the investigation had confirmed the participation of 13 persons, including a number of Iranian citizens. He stated that there were confirmed cases of persons who had been subjected to torture and allegations of irregularities concerning the administration of justice. In March, Iran had informed ICRC that it must cease its activities and leave the country, which it did on 27 March.

The Special Representative stated that international supervision of the human rights situation should be maintained and that it would be appropriate for the Assembly to call on Iran to continue its cooperation with the Special Representative, to respond to the comments and allegations brought to its attention and to accept another visit by him.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/146 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in the field,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/67 of 4 March 1992,

Regretting that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, after having allowed the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights to pay three visits to that country, has discontinued its cooperation with the Special Representative,

Noting the observation of the Special Representative that international supervision of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran should be maintained,

Noting that the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1992/15 of 27 August 1992, condemned the continuing grave violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights and the observations contained therein;

2. Expresses its deep concern at continuing reports of violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

3. Expresses its concern more specifically at the main criticisms of the Special Representative of the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, namely, the high number of executions, the practice of torture, the standard of the administration of justice, the absence of guarantees of due legal process, the treatment of the Baha'i community and restrictions of freedom of expression, thought and opinion and of the press;

4. Expresses its grave concern at the fact that, contrary to the earlier recommendation of the Special Representative, the application of the death penalty has been excessive;

5. Regrets that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran has not permitted the Special Representative to visit the country and failed to reply to allegations of human rights violations transmitted to it by the Special Representative in time for the reply to be reflected in the interim report;

6. Regrets also that, as the Special Representative concluded, the Islamic Republic of Iran has not given adequate follow-up to many of the recommendations contained in the previous reports;

7. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to intensify its efforts to investigate and rectify the human rights issues raised by the Special Representative in his observations, in particular as regards the administration of justice and due process of law;

8. Also calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with international instruments on human rights, in particular the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party, and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including religious groups, enjoy the rights recognized in these instruments;

9. Endorse the view of the Special Representative that the international monitoring of the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran should be continued;

10. Encourages the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to resume cooperation with the Special Representative;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;

12. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran during its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions" in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Iraq

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February, (49) Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) reported on the human rights situation in Iraq, including the plight of refugees. He visited Iraq from 3 to 9 January and travelled to Iran from 13 to 15 January and to Saudi Arabia from 17 to 19 January to hear testimony from Iraqi refugees claiming to be victims and eyewitnesses to human rights violations committed by the Government of Iraq.

Allegations of violations received by the Special Rapporteur involved summary or arbitrary execution; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; enforced or involuntary disappearances; arbitrary arrest and detention; due process and rule of law; freedom of thought, expression and association; access to food and health care; the situation of women and children; and property rights. He also received information on human rights violations in Iraq affecting the Kurdish population, the Assyrian community, the Turkoman minority and the Shiah of southern Iraq. The report contained replies by the Government of Iraq to the Special Rapporteur's enquiries and to the allegations of human rights violations reported by him in 1991.(50) gravest nature by Iraq with no indication that steps had been taken to curtail them. The situation demanded an exceptional response, specifically, sending to Iraq a team of human rights monitors who would remain there until the situation had drastically improved. He recommended that Iraq be urged to submit the activities of the security services to transparent legal constraints in order to end arbitrary arrests, torture or extrajudicial execution; set up a commission of inquiry into the fate of tens of thousands of disappeared persons; end the practice of torture; renew negotiations on a food-for-oil formula to enable Iraq to buy food and medical supplies; end the blockade of the Kurdish-controlled area; and restore full religious freedom to the Shiah community. Annexed to the report was a list of NGOs that had provided information, selected official documents of the Government of Iraq allegedly found in Iraqi security offices and a sample list of persons said to have disappeared in Iraqi custody.

In March, Belgium requested that the Special Rapporteur's report be circulated as a Security Council document.(51)

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 35 to 1, with 16 abstentions, the Commission, on 5 March,(52) expressed strong condemnation of massive human rights violations by Iraq, in particular: summary and arbitrary executions; systematic torture; enforced or involuntary disappearances; hostage-taking; suppression of freedom of thought, expression and association; and violations of property rights. It called on Iraq to release persons arbitrarily arrested and detained, including Kuwaitis and nationals of other States, and, as a State party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,(8) to abide by its obligations under the Covenants. The Commission urged Iraq to set up an independent commission of inquiry to look into the fate of tens of thousands of disappeared persons. Regretting the failure of Iraq to provide satisfactory replies concerning human rights violations brought to the Special Rapporteur's attention, it called on that country to reply without delay to enable him to formulate recommendations to improve the human rights situation there. It asked the Special Rapporteur, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to develop further his recommendation for an exceptional response and to report thereon to the General Assembly in 1992 (see below). The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate as contained in a 1991 Commission resolution,(53) asked him to visit again the northern area of Iraq, and to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1992 and a final report to the Commission in 1993. It asked the Secretary-General to give him all the assistance he needed and urged Iraq to accord him full cooperation. The decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the Commission's requests to him and the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/24 1 of 20 July.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(54) the Subcommission appealed to the international community and to all Governments, including Iraq, to facilitate the supply of food and medicines to the civilian population of Iraq.

Interim reports of the Special Rapporteur. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report by the Special Rapporteur,(55) in which he described grave human rights violations in the marshes of southern Iraq and set forth guidelines for establishing a system of human rights monitoring in that country. Annexed to the report was a letter of 29 July from the Special Rapporteur to the Minister of Foreign Affairs concerning the situation in southern Iraq. Iraq transmitted its response to the interim report by a 5 October letter to the Secretary-General.(56) The subject was also discussed by the Security Council (see PART TWO, Chapter III, for details).

In a later addendum to his interim report,(57) the Special Rapporteur discussed the situation of economic and social rights in Iraq and presented correspondence received from the Government. He recommended that Iraq implement a Memorandum of Understanding signed on 22 October by the Government and the United Nations providing for the presence of United Nations guards in three northern governorates and in Baghdad; remove obstacles, including proclaimed or de facto internal embargos, to the equitable enjoyment of food and medical supplies; accept a United Nations-supervised sale of Iraqi oil; initiate consultations with the tribal peoples of the southern marsh area aimed at securing their economic, social and cultural rights; and accept the deployment of human rights monitors throughout the country, but especially in the southern area.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/145 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field.

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights and to other human rights instruments,

Recalling its resolution 46/134 of 17 December 1991, in which it expressed its deep concern about the flagrant violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq should cooperate with humanitarian organizations and ensure that the human and political rights of all Iraqi citizens were respected,

Recalling in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991, in which the Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a Special Rapporteur to make a thorough study of the violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, based on all information the Special Rapporteur might deem relevant, including information provided by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and any comments and material provided by the Government of Iraq,

Bearing in mind the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights condemning the flagrant violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, including its most recent, resolution 1992/71 of 5 March 1992, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a further year and requested him in pursuing his mandate to visit again the northern area of Iraq in particular, and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session and a final report to the Commission at its forty-ninth session,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 706(1991) of 15 August 1991, 712(1991) of 19 September 1991 and 778(1992) of 2 October 1992,

Deeply concerned by the massive and grave violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, such as summary and arbitrary executions, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, enforced or involuntary disappearances, arbitrary arrests and detentions, and lack of due process and the rule of law and of freedom of thought, expression, association and access to food and health care,

Deeply concerned also by the fact that chemical weapons have been used on the Iraqi civilian population, by the forced displacement of hundreds of thousands of Iraqi civilians and by the destruction of Iraqi towns and villages, as well as by the fact that tens of thousands of displaced Kurds had to take refuge in camps and shelters in the north of Iraq,

Deeply concerned further by the current severe and grave violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq against the civilian population in southern Iraq, in particular the Shiah communities in the southern marshes,

Expressing concern in particular that there has been no improvement in the human rights situation in Iraq, and welcoming, therefore, the proposal of the Special Rapporteur for the deployment of a team of human rights monitors in Iraq,

Noting that despite the formal cooperation extended to the Special Rapporteur, the Government of Iraq needs to improve that cooperation, in particular by giving full replies to the inquiries of the Special Rapporteur about acts it is committing that are incompatible with the international human rights instruments that are binding on Iraq,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq submitted by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Expresses its strong condemnation of the massive violations of human rights of the gravest nature, for which the Government of Iraq is responsible and to which the Special Rapporteur has referred in his recent reports, in particular:

(a) Summary and arbitrary executions, orchestrated mass executions and burials, extrajudicial killings, including political killings, in particular in the northern region of Iraq, in southern Shiah centres and in the southern marshes;

(b) The widespread routine practice of systematic torture in its most cruel forms, including the torture of children;

(c) Enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrest and detention, including of women and children, and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law;

(d) Suppression of freedom of thought, expression and association, and violations of property rights;

3. Deplores the refusal of Iraq to cooperate in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) and its failure to provide the Iraqi population with access to adequate food and health care;

4. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to release immediately all persons arbitrarily arrested and detained, including Kuwaitis and nationals of other States;

5. Calls once again upon Iraq, as a State party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights as well as to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the Covenants and under other international instruments on human rights, and particularly to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals irrespective of their origin within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

6. Recognizes the importance of the work of the United Nations in providing humanitarian relief to the people of Iraq, and calls upon Iraq immediately and fully to implement the Memorandum of Understanding signed on 22 October 1992 between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq and to cooperate with the United Nations programmes, including ensuring the safety and security of United Nations personnel and humanitarian workers;

7. Expresses special alarm at the repressive policies and practices directed against the Kurds, which continue to have an impact on the lives of the Iraqi people as a whole;

8. Also expresses special alarm at the resurgence of grave violations of human rights against Shiah communities, especially in southern Iraq, which is the result of a policy directed against the marsh Arabs in particular;

9. Further expresses special alarm at all internal embargoes, which prevent the equitable enjoyment of basic foodstuffs and medical supplies, and calls upon Iraq, which has sole responsibility in this regard, to remove them;

10. Welcomes the proposal of the Special Rapporteur for a system of human rights monitors which would constitute an independent and reliable source of information, and invites the Commission on Human Rights to follow up this proposal at its forty-ninth session;

11. Urges once more the Government of Iraq to set up an independent commission of inquiry to look into the fate of tens of thousands of persons who have disappeared;

12. Regrets the failure of the Government of Iraq to provide satisfactory and convincing replies concerning the violations of human rights brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur, and calls upon it to reply without delay in a comprehensive and detailed manner;

13. Urges, therefore, the Government of Iraq to accord its full cooperation to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to make the appropriate recommendations to improve the human rights situation in Iraq;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance necessary to carry out his mandate;

15. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Iraq during its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions" in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Kuwait under Iraqi occupation

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Walter Kälin (Switzerland) reported on the human rights situation in Kuwait under Iraqi occupation.⁽⁵⁸⁾ Following a description of his mandate and activities and the general legal framework on which his report was based, he discussed the human rights situation and the corresponding guarantees of international humanitarian law concerning arbitrary arrest, detention and deportation; torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment; the right to life and prohibition of arbitrary and summary execution; disappearances and missing persons; freedom to leave; freedom of religion, expression and assembly; special protection of children and women; and economic, social and cultural rights.

In his recommendations on the fate of missing persons, the Special Rapporteur stated that United Nations organs should urge Iraq to comply with a 1991 General Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁹⁾ and provide information on events occurring between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991 concerning: persons deported from Kuwait who might still be detained; persons arrested in Kuwait who died during or after that period while in detention and the site of their graves; and executions of persons arrested in Kuwait and carried out in Kuwait or Iraq during or after that period. He recommended that United Nations organs ask Iraq to search for persons still missing and cooperate with international humanitarian organizations in that regard. He also recommended that Kuwait be asked to cooperate with international organizations to identify all remaining unidentified persons killed there. Governments concerned should be urged to allow for the repatriation of persons deported from Kuwait to Iraq to the country of their former residence, and Iraq should be urged to provide compensation for victims of human rights violations committed by the Iraqi occupying forces through a fund established by the Security Council in 1991.⁽⁶⁰⁾

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 47 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 3 March,⁽⁶¹⁾ strongly condemned Iraq's failure to treat prisoners of war and detainees in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and insisted that it refrain from subjecting them to acts of violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution. Expressing deep concern for Kuwaiti and third-country nationals detained and missing in Iraq, it requested Iraq to provide information on those abducted from Kuwait between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991 who might still be detained and to free them without delay. It also asked Iraq to provide information on persons arrested in Kuwait within that time period who might have died while in detention, as well as on the location of their graves. It further requested Iraq to search for persons still missing and to cooperate fully with international humanitarian organizations, such as ICRC, in that regard and in their efforts towards an eventual repatriation of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals detained and missing in Iraq.

Myanmar

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(62) the Commission, expressing concern at the seriousness of the human rights situation in Myanmar and at the fact that political leaders, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other leaders of the National League for Democracy, remained deprived of their liberty, decided to nominate a special rapporteur to establish direct contacts with the Government and people of that country and to report to the General Assembly in 1992 (see below) and to the Commission in 1993. The Economic and Social Council approved that nomination by decision 1992/235 of 20 July 1992. The Commission urged Myanmar to cooperate fully with the Commission and its special rapporteur and to ensure the special rapporteur's access to any person in Myanmar whom he deemed it appropriate to meet. It asked the Government to ensure that all persons were given the minimum guarantees for a fair trial and called on Myanmar to end the exodus of refugees and to facilitate their early repatriation. The Commission also called on Myanmar to pay attention to prison conditions and allow ICRC to visit prisons there, and urged Myanmar to reopen its universities and other institutions of higher education.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In November, the Secretary-General transmitted the preliminary report of Special Rapporteur Yozo Yokota (Japan) on the human rights situation in Myanmar.(63) He traced the chronology of events relevant to that situation from 1948 to early 1992.

The Special Rapporteur examined allegations of arbitrary detention; disappearances; torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and summary or arbitrary executions. He urged Myanmar to sign and ratify the 1966 Covenants on Civil and Political Rights and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,(8) and the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,(64) and encouraged Myanmar to allow an ICRC and UNHCR presence to carry out their humanitarian task. He urged Myanmar to continue its policy of allowing Daw Aung San Suu Kyi to receive visits from her family and to extend that policy to other detainees.

In a later report,(65) the Special Rapporteur described his visit to Myanmar from 7 to 14 December.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/144 without vote.

Situation in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/132 of 17 December 1991,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the Organization promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that article 21, paragraph 3, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that "the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government",

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur to establish direct contacts with the Government and with the people of Myanmar, including political leaders deprived of their liberty, their families and lawyers, with a view to examining the situation of human rights in Myanmar and following any progress made towards the transfer of power to a civilian government and the drafting of a new constitution, the lifting of restrictions on personal freedoms and the restoration of human rights in Myanmar, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session and to the Commission at its forty-ninth session,

Noting the measures taken by the Government of Myanmar, including its accession to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war, the release of a number of political prisoners, the lifting of the curfew, the revocation of certain martial laws and the reopening of the universities, in response to the concerns expressed by the international community, including the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Gravely concerned that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitments to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Gravely concerned also at the continued seriousness of the situation of human rights in Myanmar, including reports of torture and arbitrary execution, continued detention of a large number of persons for political reasons, the existence of important restrictions on the exercise of fundamental freedoms and the imposition of oppressive measures directed in particular at ethnic and religious minorities,

Noting that the human rights situation in Myanmar has consequently resulted in massive flows of refugees to neighbouring countries,

Deeply concerned at the continuing problem of large numbers of refugees from Myanmar in neighbouring countries, including the almost 265,000 Myanmar Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his preliminary report and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to extend its full and unreserved cooperation to the Special Rapporteur and to ensure that he has free access to any person in Myanmar whom he deems it appropriate to meet for the conduct of his mandate;

3. Express its grave concern about the continued seriousness of the human rights situation in Myanmar;

4. Urges the Government of Myanmar to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy, fully respecting the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990;

5. Also urges the Government of Myanmar to take every appropriate measure to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to accelerate the process of transition to democracy, in particular through the transfer of power to the democratically elected representatives;

6. Further urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities;

7. Notes the release of a number of political leaders from detention;

8. Deeply regrets, however, that many political leaders are still deprived of their freedom and their fundamental rights;

9. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to release unconditionally the Nobel Peace Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi, who is now in her fourth year of detention without trial, and other political leaders and remaining political prisoners;

10. Also calls upon the Government of Myanmar to respect fully the obligations under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, in particular the obligations under article 3 common to the Conventions and to make use of such services as may be offered by impartial humanitarian bodies;

11. Requests the Government of Myanmar to invite the presence of the International Committee of the Red Cross in Myanmar in order for it to carry out its humanitarian tasks;

12. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to create the necessary conditions to ensure an end to the flows of refugees to neighbouring countries and to facilitate their speedy repatriation and to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations organs on this matter;

13. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-eighth session.

Papua New Guinea

Bougainville

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(66) the Subcommission, aware of the continuing allegations of human rights violations relating to the situation on Bougainville, called on Papua New Guinea to restore freedom of movement to the people of Bougainville and asked the Special Rapporteur on the study of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations to include in his report the agreements entered into between the indigenous people of Bougainville and Papua New Guinea.

Tibet

Note by the Secretary-General. By a January note,(67) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report on the situation in Tibet containing a reply by China to a note verbale he had sent in December 1991. Annexed to the report were attachments to China's reply and information received from NGOs on human rights violations in Tibet.

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March 1992,(68) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 27 to 15, with 10 abstentions, decided to take no decision on a draft concerning the situation in China/Tibet.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Albania

Report of the Secretary-General. In January,(69) the Secretary-General reported on action taken pursuant to a 1991 Commission on Human Rights resolution concerning human rights in Albania,(70) noting that he had requested information from Albania on steps taken to implement the resolution's provisions. Included in the report was a communication from Albania to the Secretary-General describing measures taken in 1991 to guarantee and promote human rights there.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 4 March 1992,(71) called on Albania to continue to adopt legislative and administrative measures to meet the requirements of relevant international human rights instruments and respect the rights of minorities living there. Welcoming the conclusion, on 13 February, of an agreement on technical cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights and Albania, it asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Albania's attention, request information regarding its implementation and report to the Commission in 1993.

Cyprus

Report of the Secretary-General. In February,(72) the Secretary-General reported on human rights in Cyprus pursuant to a 1991 Commission decision.(70) The Secretary-General described action taken in 1991 by the Security Council and the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Human Rights Commission action. On 27 February,(73) the Commission postponed until 1993 debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide a report on their implementation.

Estonia and Latvia

In response to a request by Latvia,(74) the Secretary-General sent a fact-finding mission to that country (27-30 October) to investigate alleged human rights abuses against minorities there. At Latvia's request, the summary report of the fact-finding mission was circulated as an official General Assembly document.(75)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/115 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Estonia and Latvia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Convinced that respect for human rights is an inalienable component of maintaining and promoting good-neighbourly relations between States,

Taking into account the complaint of alleged violations of human rights with respect to the Russian-speaking population in Estonia and Latvia,

Taking note of the conclusions and recommendations made by the United Nations fact-finding mission that visited Riga in October 1992 at the invitation of the Government of Latvia,

1. Notes with concern the existence of certain problems that involve large groups of population in Estonia and Latvia;

2. Welcomes the cooperation that the Government of Latvia has extended to the United Nations fact-finding mission;

3. Also Welcomes the invitation of the Government of Estonia to receive a similar United Nations fact-finding mission and its intention to extend to it its cooperation;

4. Calls upon the States concerned to intensify their efforts on the bilateral level aimed at resolving concerns with regard to the situation of the Russian-speaking population on the basis of generally accepted norms of international law in the field of human rights;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States informed of the progress in the field of human rights in Estonia and Latvia and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Situation of human rights in Estonia and Latvia".

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/773) without vote, 3 December (meeting 56); draft by Chairman (A/C.3/47/L.52); agenda item 149. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 47-56: plenary 89.

Romania

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January,(76) Special Rapporteur Joseph Voyame (Switzerland) outlined the main events relating to the human rights situation in Romania that had occurred since the submission of his previous report in 1991.(70) He described his activities in carrying out his mandate and analysed information compiled in connection with various human rights and fundamental freedoms and their implementation.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that, overall, the human rights situation had continued to improve in Romania. It recently had adopted a modern constitution, which was reproduced in the Special Rapporteur's report. Despite progress made, Romania's minority problem remained a cause for concern, as did the practical application of the new constitutional and legislative rules and the functioning of the justice system.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Romanian authorities continue to ensure respect for human rights; pay particular attention to the points raised by him; and consider the possibility of continuing to use the United Nations Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's report, incorporated his recommendations into a resolution of 3 March 1992.(77) It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to Romania's attention, ask it to provide information on its implementation and report to the Commission in 1993.

The former Yugoslavia

In 1992, the Commission on Human Rights held two special sessions, both at Geneva (13 and 14 August;(78) 30 November and 1 December(79)), to consider the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia. By a 1990 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,(80) the Commission had been authorized to meet exceptionally between its regular sessions, provided that a majority of its States members so agreed.

Human Rights Commission action. On 14 August 1992,(81) the Commission condemned in the strongest terms all human rights violations in the former Yugoslavia, especially in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and called on all parties to end such violations immediately and take steps to ensure full respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms and humanitarian law; cease immediately the human rights violations that had produced refugees and displaced persons and ensure conditions conducive to a safe return to their homes; and fulfil their obligations under the provisions of the 1966 International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,⁽⁸⁾ the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,⁽⁸²⁾ the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽⁶⁴⁾ and the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.⁽⁹⁾ The Commission condemned ethnic cleansing and called on all parties to ensure the protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities.

The Commission demanded that all parties extend full cooperation and protection to UNHCR and other international humanitarian organizations and relief workers assisting refugees and displaced persons. Calling for the release of all persons arbitrarily arrested or detained, it demanded that ICRC be granted access to all camps, prisons and other places of detention and that all parties ensure safety and freedom of movement for ICRC.

The Commission asked its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina; visit the area; compile information on possible human rights violations, including war crimes; take into account and seek to complement the efforts being undertaken by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (a forum of 35 participating States, including Canada and the United States, for the periodic review of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, adopted in 1975 at Helsinki, Finland, and to facilitate a wider political dialogue in a more united Europe); provide a preliminary report no later than 28 August 1992, including recommendations for ending and preventing such violations; report findings and recommendations to the Commission periodically thereafter until its 1993 session and report to the Assembly in 1992 and to the Commission in 1993. United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were asked to assist the special rapporteur, as were the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture and on summary or arbitrary executions, the Secretary-General's representative on internally displaced persons and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention. The Commission demanded that all parties cooperate with the special rapporteur in implementing its resolution. The Secretary-General was asked to make the special rapporteur's reports available to the Security Council and to assist him in fulfilling his mandate.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/305 of 18 August, endorsed the Commission's resolution.

Annexed to the Commission's resolution was a decision on the situation of human rights in Yugoslavia adopted by the Subcommission on 13 August.⁽⁸³⁾

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. By a note of 3 September,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the preliminary report on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia prepared by Special Rapporteur Tadeusz Mazowiecki (Poland).⁽⁸⁵⁾ He had visited the former Yugoslavia, in particular Bosnia and Herzegovina, from 21 to 26 August, and was accompanied by the Chairman of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions.

The Special Rapporteur's observations focused on ethnic cleansing directed against Muslims and ethnic Croats in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia under the control of ethnic Serbs. He also described the situation of ethnic Serbs in Croatia, which had resulted in the flight of a large number of ethnic Serbs to Serbia and to those parts of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina under their control. The Special Rapporteur had received information on cases of detention, executions, disappearances and other violations such as physical abuse and torture. The causes of human rights violations and the difficulties encountered by humanitarian organizations were discussed.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that mass and grave human rights violations were occurring in Bosnia and Herzegovina and were being perpetrated by all parties to the conflicts. Violence was tolerated and often encouraged by responsible authorities. The situation of detainees and refugees was particularly dramatic, and the indoctrination of a large part of the population encouraged national and religious hatred.

The Special Rapporteur recommended neutralizing the heavy weaponry in Bosnia and Herzegovina; the continued call by the United Nations for an end to ethnic cleansing; increasing the size and expanding the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force; granting ICRC full access to detention camps and centres; reinforcing the efficiency of the information system on the fate of persons forcibly separated from their families; establishing a commission to determine the fate of disappeared persons; setting up an information agency, independent of local authorities, to counteract the dissemination of hatred; creating a commission to assess and further investigate cases warranting prosecution; and concerted international action to improve the fate of victims of human rights violations. Annexed to the report was the programme of the Special Rapporteur's visit and his observations concerning the parties in control of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia.

On 6 November,(86) the Secretary-General transmitted the second report on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia(87) based on the Special Rapporteur's visit to the area from 12 to 22 October. Also taking part in that mission were the Special Rapporteurs on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and on the question of torture, the Chairman of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Secretary-General's Representative on internally displaced persons and one medical and one forensic expert. The mission included visits to different areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Serbia, including Kosovo, Vojvodina and Sandjak, and gave special attention to prisons and refugee centres.

The Special Rapporteur noted that since his first visit, widespread and serious human rights violations continued to be committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in certain respects, had intensified. He concluded that the situation required emergency action by the international community with priority being given to protecting the right to life, guarantee for the security of displaced persons, an increase in humanitarian assistance and priority attention to opening humanitarian relief corridors to besieged areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He reconfirmed the recommendations made in his preliminary report. Annexed to the report was the programme of the Special Rapporteur's second visit and a statement by the forensic expert concerning several mass graves near Vukovar (Croatia).

The Secretary-General, on 17 November,(88) transmitted the Special Rapporteur's third report on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia. His report was based on information received prior to and during his two missions, mainly from credible witnesses or from reliable and impartial sources.

Concerning the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Special Rapporteur discussed ethnic cleansing and noted that the number of Croat and Muslim refugees fleeing areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under Serbian control was three to four times greater than the number of Serbian refugees and displaced persons from Bosnia and Herzegovina. Arbitrary executions, terrorist attacks against homes and places of worship and hostage-taking continued there and also in the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) of Croatia (western Slavonia, eastern Slavonia and Krajina). The Serbian authorities in control of certain territories in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in UNPAs were responsible for ethnic cleansing there, as were the Yugoslav National Army and the political leadership of Serbia. Albanians, Croats, Hungarians, Muslims and other ethnic minorities were discriminated against in the Serbian areas of Kosovo, Vojvodina and Sandjak, and discrimination and human rights violations occurred against the Serbs in territories controlled by the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and in territory under the control of Bosnian Croats. Similar abuses occurred in Croatia, particularly against Serbs. The Special Rapporteur observed that there was growing evidence that war crimes had been committed.

The Special Rapporteur recommended investigating war crimes, taking more effective steps to stop ethnic cleansing, establishing security zones in Bosnia and Herzegovina, protecting the right of refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes, opening humanitarian relief corridors and supporting democratically oriented groups. He urged all States, particularly the European ones, in cooperation with ICRC and UNHCR, to offer asylum and temporary refuge to persons at imminent risk of death due to inhumane conditions in detention and transit facilities in northern Bosnia. The Special Rapporteur considered it necessary to have a small number of human rights monitors, under his direction, located in the former Yugoslavia and asked that the necessary arrangements be made.

Report of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. In December,(89) the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal), reported on his participation in two missions to the former Yugoslavia in August and October, when he accompanied the Special Rapporteur on the former Yugoslavia.

He observed that extrajudicial executions were a serious problem in the former Yugoslavia and were used as a method of advancing ethnic cleansing. The shelling of civilian population centres and interference in the delivery of humanitarian relief were also forms of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions.

The Special Rapporteur also visited the former Yugoslavia from 15 to 20 December, where he conducted preliminary investigations into allegations that victims of war crimes were buried in various mass graves, especially in Croatia.(90)

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 45 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission on Human Rights, on 1 December,(91) condemned all human rights violations in the former Yugoslavia identified by the Special Rapporteur, as well as the indiscriminate shellings of cities and civilian areas, the systematic terrorization and murder of non-combatants, the destruction of vital services and the besieging of cities and use of military force against civilians and relief operations by all sides, recognizing that the main responsibility lay with Serbian forces. It categorically condemned ethnic cleansing, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina, recognizing that the primary responsibility rested with the Serbian leadership in territories under their control in that region, the Yugoslav Army and the political leadership in Serbia. It demanded an immediate end to ethnic cleansing, and particularly that Serbia use its influence with the self-proclaimed Serbian authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia to end that practice and to reverse its effects, re-emphasizing the rights of refugees, displaced persons and other victims of ethnic cleansing to return to their homes and the invalidity of acts made under duress. Expressing grave concern regarding information reported by the Special Rapporteur in his third report⁽⁸⁸⁾ on the dangerous situation in the Serbian areas of Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, the Commission urged all parties in those areas to engage in a meaningful dialogue under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter IV) and to act with utmost restraint and settle disputes in full observance of human rights and freedoms. The Commission called on the Serbian authorities to refrain from the use of force, stop ethnic cleansing and respect fully the rights of persons belonging to ethnic communities or minorities in order to prevent extending the conflict to other parts of the former Yugoslavia.

Affirming the accountability of States for human rights violations committed by their agents on another State's territory, the Commission condemned such violations relating to detention—including killings, torture and, rape—and called on all parties to close immediately all detention centres not authorized by and in compliance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions and to release all detainees. It also called on all parties to end violations of human rights and humanitarian law immediately and to apprehend and punish those guilty of perpetrating or authorizing them, make efforts to account for the missing and consider the extent to which the acts committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia constituted genocide, in accordance with the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.⁽⁸²⁾

The Commission on Human Rights welcomed the establishment of the Commission of Experts to examine information relating to violations of international humanitarian law (see below); encouraged close cooperation between its Special Rapporteur and the Commission; recommended that the Commission be granted the staff and resources to act effectively; and asked the Commission to provide its conclusions to the Secretary-General to allow the Security Council to consider further steps towards bringing those accused to justice. The Commission on Human Rights called on all parties to provide information to the Commission of Experts and urged the Commission, with the assistance of the Centre for Human Rights, to arrange for an urgent investigation of a mass grave near Vukovar and other mass grave sites and places where mass killings were reported to have taken place, and asked the General Assembly to provide the resources to do so.

The Commission welcomed the special Rapporteur's call to open humanitarian relief corridors and his recommendation to create security zones to protect displaced persons, and asked him to continue his efforts. It called on bodies entrusted with human rights monitoring in the former Yugoslavia to cooperate closely with the Special Rapporteur and the Commission of Experts. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Security Council with the Special Rapporteur's reports and urged him to ensure the cooperation of all United Nations bodies in implementing its resolution. The General Assembly and the Secretary-General were asked to make available all resources needed by the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate and to comply with his request for staff to be based in the former Yugoslavia to enhance effective monitoring of the human rights situation there.

Commission of Experts. In accordance with Security Council resolution 780(1992) of 6 October, the Secretary-General, on 14 October,⁽⁹²⁾ established a Commission of Experts to examine and analyse information submitted on violations of humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia (see also PART TWO, Chapter IV).

At its first session (New York, 4 and 5 November), the Commission of Experts discussed organizational and procedural questions, dealt with issues related to its mandate and appointed a Rapporteur on issues of law.

The Commission, at its second session (Geneva, 14-16 December), requested Physicians for Human Rights, a United States-based NGO, to investigate a mass grave near Vukovar. A four-member international forensic team, assembled by Physicians for Human Rights, conducted a preliminary site exploration near Vukovar from 17 to 19 December. The forensic team concluded that a mass execution had taken place; the grave contained possibly as many as 200 bodies; the grave site's remote location suggested that the executioners had sought to bury their victims secretly; the grave had not been disturbed since the time of execution or interment; and evidence at the site suggested that the grave most likely contained the remains of Croats. The conclusions of the forensic team were annexed to the Commission's interim report to the Security Council.(93)

In December, the Commission also adopted its rules of procedure, further discussed its mandate and appointed Rapporteurs on the gathering and analysis of facts and for on-site investigations. It began reviewing numerous reports alleging grave breaches of international humanitarian law received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and other sources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/147 without vote.

Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned about the human tragedy in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and at the continuing massive and systematic violations of human rights occurring in most of that territory, particularly in the areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under Serbian control,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 771(1992) of 13 August 1992, 780(1992) of 6 October 1992 and 787(1992) of 16 November 1992, in which, inter alia, the Council demanded that all parties and others concerned in the former Yugoslavia should immediately cease and desist from all breaches of international humanitarian law, and pursuant to which the Secretary-General has established a Commission of Experts to examine and analyse information relating to violations of humanitarian law being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia,

Recalling its resolution 46/242 of 25 August 1992, in which it demanded an end to the fighting, condemned the massive violations of human rights and international humanitarian law occurring in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, in particular the abhorrent practice of "ethnic cleansing", rejected recognition of the acquisition of territory by force and demanded the safe, unconditional and honourable repatriation of refugees and deportees to their homes,

Bearing in mind its resolution 47/80 of 16 December 1992 in which it condemned unreservedly "ethnic cleansing", and reiterated its conviction that those who committed or ordered the commission of acts of "ethnic cleansing" were individually responsible and should be brought to justice,

Noting that the Commission on Human Rights, at its first special session, devoted to the consideration of the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, adopted resolution 1992/S-1/1 of 14 August 1992, in which it condemned in the strongest terms all violations of human rights within the territory of the former Yugoslavia, called upon all parties to cease those violations immediately and to take all necessary steps to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and humanitarian law and requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Special Rapporteur, as well as those of the Chairman of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, who accompanied him on one or both of his missions,

Welcoming the decision by the Commission on Human Rights to meet again in special session to consider the reports of the Special Rapporteur,

Encouraging the continuing efforts made in the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to find a peaceful solution to the situation in the former Yugoslavia, including the proposals made by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the Conference for a constitution for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina designed to protect human rights on the basis of fundamental human rights instruments,

Welcoming the consideration by the Human Rights Committee of the special reports from the Governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina on the human rights situation in those parts of the territory of the former Yugoslavia, with respect to their obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting with concern the comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee following consideration of those special reports at its meeting held on 6 November 1992,

Welcoming the effort by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to prevent further human rights violations and its missions dispatched to the territory of the former Yugoslavia, including missions of long duration to Kosovo, Vojvodina and Sandjak, where the human rights situation remains a cause of great concern,

Gravely concerned about the human rights situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and in particular at the continuing, odious practice of "ethnic cleansing", which is the direct cause of the vast majority of human rights violations there and whose principal victims are the Muslim population threatened with virtual extermination,

Alarmed that, although the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina is not a religious conflict, it has been characterized by the systematic destruction and profanation of mosques, churches and other places of worship, as well as other sites of cultural heritage, in particular in areas currently or previously under Serbian control,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur for his reports on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

2. Expresses its grave concern at the Special Rapporteur's detailed reports of violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and at his conclusion that most of the territory of the former Yugoslavia, in particular Bosnia and Herzegovina, is the scene of massive and systematic violations of human rights and grave violations of humanitarian law;

3. Condemns in the strongest possible terms the abhorrent practice of "ethnic cleansing" and recognizes that the Serbian leadership in territories under its control in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Yugoslav People's Army and the political leadership of the Republic of Serbia bear primary responsibility for this reprehensible practice, which flagrantly violates the most fundamental principles of human rights;

4. Condemns also the specific violations identified by the Special Rapporteur, most of which are caused by "ethnic cleansing", and which include killings, torture, beatings, rape, disappearances, destruction of houses, and other acts or threats of violence aimed at forcing individuals to leave their homes, as well as reports of violations of human rights in connection with detention;

5. Condemns further the indiscriminate shelling of cities and civilian areas, the systematic terrorization and murder of non-combatants, the destruction of vital services, the besieging of cities and the use of military force against civilian populations and relief operations by all sides, recognizing that the main responsibility lies with Serbian forces;

6. Demands that all parties involved in the former Yugoslavia, and especially those most responsible, cease these violations immediately, take appropriate steps to apprehend and punish those who are guilty of perpetrating or authorizing the violations, including those violations in connection with detention, and take all necessary measures to ensure the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with their obligations under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, the International Covenants on Human Rights, and other international human rights instruments;

7. Reaffirms that all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity and other grave breaches of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those breaches and that the international community will exert every effort to bring them to justice, and calls upon all parties to provide all pertinent information to the Commission of Experts in accordance with Security Council resolution 780(1992);

8. Expresses deep concern at the number of disappearances and missing persons in the former Yugoslavia, and calls on all parties to make all possible efforts to account for those missing;

9. Demands an immediate end to the practice of "ethnic cleansing", and in particular that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) use its influence with the self-proclaimed Serbian authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia to bring the practice of "ethnic cleansing" to an immediate end and to reverse the effects of that practice;

10. Reaffirms that States are to be held accountable for violations of human rights which their agents commit on the territory of another State;

11. Expresses its complete support for the victims of these violations, reaffirms the right of all persons to return to their homes in safety and dignity, considers invalid all acts made under duress affecting ownership of property and other related questions, and recognizes the right of victims of "ethnic cleansing" to receive reparation for their losses;

12. Condemns in particular the violations of human rights and humanitarian law in connection with detention, including killings, torture and the systematic practice of rape, and calls upon all parties in the former Yugoslavia to close immediately all detention centres not in compliance with the Geneva Conventions and to release immediately all persons arbitrarily or illegally detained;

13. Demands that the International Committee of the Red Cross, the Special Rapporteur, the missions of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and other relevant international humanitarian organizations be granted immediate, unimpeded and continued access to all camps, prisons and other places of detention within the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

14. Expresses its grave concern at the report of the Special Rapporteur on the dangerous situation in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, urges all parties there to engage in a meaningful dialogue under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, to act with utmost restraint and to settle disputes in full compliance with human rights and fundamental freedoms, and calls upon the Serbian authorities to refrain from the use of force, to stop immediately the practice of "ethnic cleansing" and to respect fully the rights of persons belonging to ethnic communities or minorities, in order to prevent the extension of the conflict to other parts of the former Yugoslavia;

15. Calls upon the parties to implement immediately all commitments made in the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and to work together to ensure the success of the Conference, and welcomes in this regard the acceptance by the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina of the constitutional proposals of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the Conference as a basis for negotiations;

16. Endorses the resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its second special session addressing the reports of the Special Rapporteur, in particular its call for all States to consider the extent to which the acts committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia constitute genocide, in accordance with the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide;

17. Calls upon all United Nations bodies, including the United Nations Protection Force and the specialized agencies, and invites Governments and informed inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur and in particular to provide him on a continuing basis with all relevant and accurate information in their possession on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia;

18. Urges all States, United Nations bodies, including the specialized agencies, the Special Rapporteur and, as appropriate, international humanitarian organizations to make available to the Commission of Experts, pursuant to Security Council resolution 780(1992), substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them relating to the violations of humanitarian law, including grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

19. Urge all States and relevant organizations to consider implementation of the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur, and in particular:

(a) Welcomes the call of the Special Rapporteur for the opening of humanitarian relief corridors to prevent the imminent death of tens of thousands of persons in besieged cities;

(b) Welcomes the invitation of the Security Council, in its resolution 787(1992), to the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other relevant agencies, to study the possibility of and the requirements for the promotion of safe areas and the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur for the creation of such security zones for the protection of displaced persons, while keeping in mind that the international community must not acquiesce in demographic changes caused by "ethnic cleansing";

(c) Draws the attention of the Commission of Experts established by Security Council resolution 780(1992) to the need for an immediate and urgent investigation by qualified experts of a mass grave near Vukovar and other mass grave sites and places where mass killings are reported to have taken place, and requests the Secretary-General, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, to make available all necessary resources for this undertaking and for the other work of the Commission;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the full and effective coordination of all United Nations bodies to implement the present resolution, and calls upon those bodies concerned with the situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia to coordinate closely with the Special Rapporteur and the Commission of Experts;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, to make all necessary resources available for the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate and in particular to provide him with a number of staff based in the territories of the former Yugoslavia adequate to ensure effective continuous monitoring of the human rights situation there and coordination with other United Nations bodies involved, including the United Nations Protection Force;

22. Further requests the Secretary-General to give all other necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

23. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia during its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Cuba

Report of the Special Representative. In January, (94) Special Representative Rafael Rivas

Posada (Colombia) reported on the human rights situation in Cuba. He stated that he had been unable to secure the cooperation of the Government and had based his report on information received from Cubans living outside the country and information that Cuban citizens living in the country had sent abroad. Allegations of human rights abuses dealt with the right to life, the right to physical integrity, disappearances, the right to enter and leave the country, unlawful or arbitrary detention, the right to due process, the right to security, the right to work, religious freedom, freedom of expression and information, and freedom of association. The information supplied to the Special Representative could not be checked against the Cuban authorities' versions, which made it difficult, he stated, to arrive at objective and impartial conclusions.

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 23 to 8, with 21 abstentions, the Commission, on 3 March, (95) commended the Special Representative for his report and noted that it was incomplete because he had been unable to meet with the people or Government of Cuba. It deplored Cuba's decision not to allow the Special Representative to fulfil his mandate and expressed concern that the Government of Cuba, a member of the Commission, had failed to cooperate with the Commission. The Commission regretted the numerous reports of human rights violations described in the report, particularly governmentally organized mob action against human rights activities. It called on Cuba to respect universally recognized human rights standards and fundamental freedoms and to promote their exercise and enjoyment, and to end all such violations, including the detention and imprisonment of those who advocated peaceful change. The Commission asked its Chairman to designate the Special Representative as its special rapporteur to review and report on the human rights situation in Cuba and asked the special rapporteur to report to the Commission in 1993 and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1992. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to maintain direct contact with the Government and citizens of Cuba and urged Cuba to cooperate with him.

On 18 March, the Special Representative informed the Centre for Human Rights of his decision not to accept the designation of special rapporteur given to him by the Commission's resolution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted decision 1992/236 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

At its 32nd plenary meeting, on 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/61 of 3 March 1992, approved the Commission's request to its Chairman to designate the Special Representative appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to Commission resolution 1991/68 of 6 March 1991 as its Special Rapporteur to review and report on the situation of human rights in Cuba, and also approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to report to the Commission at its forty-ninth session on the results of his endeavours pursuant to Commission resolution 1992/61 and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 24-4-23 (recorded vote)

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) by recorded vote (25-4-23), 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Morocco, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: Angola, China, Iran, Syrian Arab Republic.

Abstaining: Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Ecuador, Guinea, India, Jamaica, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Somalia, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. By a note of 19 November (96) the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba prepared by Special Rapporteur Carl-Johan Groth (Sweden). The Special Rapporteur stated that he had not been able to secure the cooperation of Cuba in carrying out his mandate. Thus, his report was based on meetings with individuals and representatives of organizations and groups concerned with human rights in Cuba operating in New York and Miami (United States). He had travelled to New York (28-30 September) and Madrid (Spain) (13 and 14 October), where he met with Cuban citizens in exile and representatives of human rights organizations.

The Special Rapporteur received information on alleged violations of freedom of opinion, expression and association, the right to leave the country and on alleged conditions in prisons and labour camps.

The Special Rapporteur proposed that Cuba end persecution for reasons related to the freedom of peaceful expression and association; permit legalization of independent groups; respect the guarantees of due process; ensure guarantees in prison; review sentences imposed for political offences and for trying to leave the country unlawfully; and expedite and make more explicit the procedure of applying for a permit to leave the country. Annexed to the report was a note verbale of 27 April from Cuba to the Secretary-General giving its legal interpretation of the resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights on 3 March (95) and the legal opinion issued by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs thereon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/139 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to fulfil the commitments they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Taking particular note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/61 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission recognized with deep appreciation the efforts of the then Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Cuba,

Noting the appointment of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on Cuba,

Noting as well concern about ongoing reports of serious violations of human rights in Cuba, as outlined in the interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba presented to the General Assembly by the Special Rapporteur,

Recalling the failure of the Government of Cuba to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights with regard to its resolution 1991/68 of 6 March 1991 by refusing to permit the Special Representative to visit Cuba, and noting its response, as cited in appendix I to the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, in which it expresses its decision not to "implement so much as a single comma of resolution 1992/61",

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba;

2. Expresses its full support for the work of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Calls upon the Government of Cuba to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur by permitting him full and free access so that he may establish contact with the Government and the citizens of Cuba in order to fulfil the mandate entrusted to him;

4. Regrets profoundly the numerous uncontested reports of violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms that are described in the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur;

5. Calls upon the Government of Cuba to adopt measures proposed by the Special Rapporteur to cease the persecution and punishment of citizens for reasons related to freedom of expression and peaceful association, to permit legalization of independent groups, to respect guarantees of due process, to permit access to the prisons by national independent groups and international humanitarian agencies, to review sentences for crimes of a political nature and to cease retaliatory measures towards those seeking permission to leave the country;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-eighth session.

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 69-18-64 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) by recorded vote (64-17-59), 4 December (meeting 58); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.70); agenda item 97 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 47-58; plenary 92.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Greece, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Against: Angola, China, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ghana, Iran, Iraq, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Myanmar, Namibia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Colombia, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mexico, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

On 2 December, Cuba introduced in the Third Committee a draft on cooperation of the Government of Cuba with the Commission on Human Rights in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolutions adopted in 1959(97) and 1971(98) and the Commission's thematic procedures.(99)

By that draft, the Assembly would have considered that the reports on the human rights situation in Cuba showed that the use of procedures envisaged for serious human rights violations should be re-examined. It would have taken note of Cuba's commitment to cooperate with the Commission in accordance with the 1959(97) and 1971(98) Council resolutions and the Commission's procedures and asked the Commission to take account of the resolution in considering the question in 1993. On 3 December, the United States, on behalf of 230 other countries, introduced a draft resolution on the situation of human rights in Cuba.(100) On 4 December, the United States moved that the Committee take action on that draft before taking action on Cuba's draft.(99) The Committee approved that motion by a recorded vote of 59 to 23, with 41 abstentions. Following the adoption of the draft on the situation of human rights in Cuba, Hungary moved that no action be taken on Cuba's draft. The Committee decided not to take action on that draft by a recorded vote of 50 to 25, with 54 abstentions.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative. Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo (Spain) in January submitted to the Commission his final report on human rights in El Salvador, covering events in 1991.(101) He observed a decrease in the number of human rights violations, but still expressed concern over the situation. Economic, social and cultural rights in El Salvador continued to be adversely affected by the armed conflict, and he noted a lack of progress in the criminal proceedings instituted on many serious human rights violations committed in the past. Politically motivated summary executions and disappearances continued to take place.

The Special Representative reiterated the recommendations he made to El Salvador's constitutional authorities in his report submitted to the Commission in 1991.(102)

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(103) the Commission expressed satisfaction at the agreements set forth in the New York Act of 31 December 1991(104) and the Peace Agreement signed at Mexico City on 16 January 1992 between El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional(105) whereby the armed conflict was ended and the parties undertook to democratize the country, guarantee unrestricted respect for human rights and help reunify Salvadorian society, and urged both parties to abide by the agreements reached. It also expressed satisfaction at the appointment of the Commission on the Truth, established under the 1991 Mexico Agreements,(106) comprising three persons of acknowledged standing in the human rights field, to investigate serious acts of violence that had occurred since 1980. It welcomed the appointment of the members of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces and the impending appointment of an attorney-general for the protection of human rights, and endorsed the efforts made by the Secretary-General through the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL).

The Commission encouraged El Salvador to press ahead with its reform of the judiciary, particularly the legal profession; reiterated the need to continue the agrarian reform programme and to carry out other structural reforms permitting the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights; and urged the international community to cooperate in El Salvador's reconstruction efforts. It asked the Secretary-General to appoint an independent expert to assist El Salvador in human rights matters, consider the human rights situation there and the effects of the Peace Agreements on the enjoyment of human rights and investigate the manner in which both parties applied the recommendations contained in the Special Representative's final report and those made by ONUSAL and the committees established during the negotiating process. It asked the independent expert to report to the General Assembly in 1992 and to the Commission in 1993.

By decision 1992/237 of 20 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's appointment of an independent expert and its request for him to submit a report to the Assembly in 1992 and to the Commission in 1993.

Subcommission action. On 27 August 1992,(107) the Subcommission offered its full support to the independent expert.

Report of the Independent Expert. By a note of 13 November,(108) the Secretary-General transmitted the report of Independent Expert Pedro Nikken (Venezuela) on the human rights situation in El Salvador, which he visited from 27 September to 4 October.

The Independent Expert stated that the cessation of the armed conflict began as scheduled, and although it had eliminated an important source of human rights violations, certain violations persisted. During his visit he was informed of alleged cases of violations concerning the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; the right to freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the right to liberty; the right to due process of law; freedom of the press; economic, social and cultural rights; and international humanitarian law. He discussed the impact of the Peace Agreements on human rights and the implementation of recommendations made by the Special Representative, ONUSAL and commissions established in the negotiating process.

He recommended strengthening the Office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights; setting up and developing the National Civil Police; guaranteeing the full independence of judges and lawyers; completing amendments to the National Council of the Judiciary Act and the Career Judicial Service Act; a more rapid and effective functioning of the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace, established in 1991;(109) and greater support from the international community for the peace process.

ONUSAL

By a 19 February note, the Secretary-General transmitted the third report of ONUSAL(110) consisting of the report of the Director of the ONUSAL Human Rights Division for November and December 1991. In June 1992, he transmitted the Director's fourth report,(111) covering 1 January to 30 April, which reflected the change in the activities of the ONUSAL Human Rights Division brought about by the signing of the Peace Agreement on 16 January.(105) In August, the Secretary-

General transmitted the fifth report, covering ONUSAL activities from 1 May to 30 June.(112)

(For further details concerning the political situation in El Salvador, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/140 without vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Convinced that the Peace Agreement reached on 16 January 1992 at Chapultepec, Mexico, between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional reflects the country's profound aspiration for peace and justice, and that scrupulous compliance with the Agreement will not only permit an end to the armed conflict through political means but also lay the bases for major political, legal, economic and social changes, which must involve all sectors of the country in the establishment of a democratic and united society,

Bearing in mind that the Secretary-General, pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/62 of 3 March 1992, appointed an independent expert to provide assistance in human rights matters to the Government of El Salvador, consider the human rights situation in the country and the effects of the implementation of the Peace Agreement on the effective enjoyment of human rights and investigate the manner in which both parties are applying the recommendations contained in the final report of the Special Representative and those made by the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the commissions established during the negotiating process,

Taking into account the provisional report prepared by the Independent Expert, as well as the other reports submitted by the Secretary-General and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Noting with satisfaction that despite the delays and difficulties that have arisen in the process of implementing the Peace Agreement, both parties have scrupulously observed the cease-fire and, through the mediation of the Secretary-General and his representatives, have adopted agreements which, if implemented within the new time-limits, will lead to the final cessation of the armed conflict on 15 December 1992,

Taking into account that after 15 December 1992 the parties will have to fulfil, on the agreed dates, a number of commitments made in the Peace Agreement which are necessary for the reunification of Salvadorian society, the stability of the country and the effective enjoyment of human rights,

Bearing in mind that the overall process of implementation of the Peace Agreement requires supervision by the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in order to help ensure the scrupulous fulfilment of commitments in accordance with the agreed timetable,

Considering that the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, which make up the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, as well as the Government of the United States of America, reiterated on 12 November 1992 their determination to continue to support the work of the Secretary-General until the full and comprehensive implementation of the Peace Agreement is achieved in El Salvador,

Aware that the international community must follow closely and continue to support all efforts to consolidate peace, ensure respect for human rights and undertake the reconstruction of El Salvador,

Bearing in mind that the creation of the Office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights and of the National Civil Police, as well as the reform of the judicial system, are necessary for putting in place a sound structure for the effective protection of human rights, and that these measures have not proceeded as stipulated in the Peace Agreement,

Considering that a commitment was made to implement the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission, the Commission on the Truth and the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Observing that the cessation of the armed conflict has itself eliminated an important source of violations of human dignity, but has not been sufficient to prevent the persistence of human rights violations, which, unless punished and eliminated as soon as possible, could cause a recurrence of situations of increased human rights violations since the resources available to civil society with which to combat them are still weak,

1. Commends the Independent Expert for his report and the members of the Ad Hoc Commission, the Commission on the Truth and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador for their work in favour of human rights and the consolidation of peace in El Salvador;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the steps taken to implement the vital Peace Agreement reached on 16 January 1992 by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional and at the flexibility shown by both parties in overcoming obstacles and differences and in maintaining the close linkage between the implementation of the various commitments assumed by them, in order to ensure the full and scrupulous implementation of the Agreement;

3. welcomes the fact that the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, have agreed to implement the Peace Agreement which will permit the holding, on 15 December 1992, of a national reconciliation ceremony, which should put a final end to the armed conflict, and to step up their commitment to fulfil the remaining agreements in order to guarantee the consolidation of peace;

4. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to fulfil scrupulously all their commitments within the agreed time-limits and, with a heightened sense of responsibility and in a spirit of détente and reconciliation, to ensure that as of 15 December 1992 normal living conditions prevail throughout the country, especially in the zones most affected by the armed conflict;

5. Also urges all sectors of Salvadorian society to show moderation and act constructively in order to dispel the animosities aroused by the armed conflict and to support the mandate which the President of El Salvador has to carry out in order to achieve the goals of peace, national reconciliation and democratization, in accordance with the Peace Agreement;

6. Expresses its gratitude for the effective and timely mediation of the Secretary-General and his representatives, and extends to them its support so that they can continue to take all necessary steps to contribute to the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement;

7. welcomes the fact that the Governments which make up the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Government of the United States of America will continue to support the work of the Secretary-General until the full and comprehensive implementation of the Peace Agreement, which reflects the determination and the desire of the Salvadorian people to live in peace, democracy and prosperity;

8. Encourages the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to implement the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission, the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and, in due course, the Commission on the Truth;

9. Endorses all the recommendations made by the Independent Expert in his report, especially those aimed at strengthening the Office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights, setting up and developing the National Civil Police in accordance with the model resulting from the Peace Agreement and carrying out the agreed reform of the judicial system;

10. Reiterates its appeal to all States to contribute to the consolidation of peace in El Salvador by supporting full compliance with the Peace Agreement and generously financing their implementation and the implementation of the National Reconstruction Plan;

11. Decides to keep the situation of human rights in El Salvador under consideration during its forty-eighth session, in the light of the course of events in the country,

Haiti

Report of the Independent Expert. In January, Independent Expert Marco Tulio Bruni Celli (Venezuela) submitted to the Commission a report covering the human rights situation in Haiti during 1991.(113) The Expert visited Haiti from 2 to 6 September 1991 to assess the human rights situation from the beginning of the year and again from 4 to 7 December to evaluate events following the 29 September 1991 coup d'état overthrowing President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, elected in December 1990 under that country's first free and democratic elections.

The Expert observed that basic needs had not been fulfilled in Haiti. In terms of income, Haiti ranked below the poorest countries in Asia and Africa. Economic growth was minimal, supply of foodstuffs was scarce, infant mortality was high and enrolment in secondary schools was low. Official figures gave an illiteracy rate of 85 per cent. A worsening unemployment situation had already affected over 30 per cent of the population of working age. In addition to a rise in prices, social services had deteriorated sharply. The judicial system was characterized by the inadequacy and widespread corruption of its various organs.

During 1991, Haiti had had three different Governments, and the human rights situation had varied under each of them. The Expert recommended to the Commission that it condemn the September coup d'état continue to monitor human rights in Haiti, demand Haiti's compliance with the international human rights instruments it had ratified, ask international agencies to assist Haiti in improving its human rights situation and appoint a special rapporteur. He also recommended that the Commission ask Haiti to fulfil its promises to implement the programmes announced to improve the administration of justice and the prison system, modernize civil and criminal legislation, separate the police from the armed forces, investigate crimes violating human rights committed by the authorities, implement Haiti's 1987 Constitution fully and restore the State governed by the rule of law that was overthrown by the coup d'état. He recommended that the Centre for Human Rights provide Haiti with a human rights specialist permanently based at the UNDP office at Port-au-Prince.

In a later addendum,(114) the Expert summarized information gathered between 16 November 1991 and 12 February 1992 covering the evolution of the situation in Haiti, the principal human rights violations and the special situation of Haitians who tried to flee the country after the coup d'état, known as the boat people.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,(115) the Commission strongly condemned the overthrow of Haiti's constitutionally elected President, the use of violence and military coercion and the subsequent deterioration of the human rights situation. It expressed deep concern over human rights violations committed under the illegal Government set up following the coup d'état. Drawing the attention of the international community to the fate of Haitians who were fleeing the country, the Commission asked for support in assisting them. The Commission asked its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare a report on the human rights situation in Haiti based especially on information supplied by the Organization of American States (OAS), with a view to submitting an interim report to the General Assembly in 1992 and to the Commission in 1993. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the special rapporteur. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by its decision 1992/245 of 20 July 1992.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(116) the Subcommission asked all competent international bodies, particularly the United Nations and OAS, to assist the people of Haiti.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(117) the Secretary-General, in a November report,(118) provided a brief overview of the situation of human rights and democracy in Haiti one year after the September 1991 coup d'état and described the international community's efforts to solve the crisis there. He also summarized replies received from nine Member States on measures taken by them in support of resolutions adopted by OAS in 1991 and welcomed by the Assembly in 1991.(117)

The Assembly, in resolution 47/20 of 24 November 1992, took note of the Secretary-General's report and strongly condemned the attempted illegal replacement of the constitutional President of Haiti, the use of violence and military coercion and the violation of human rights in the country (see also PART TWO, Chapter II).

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. By a November note,(119) the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report of Special Rapporteur Marco Tulio Bruni Celli on the human rights situation in Haiti. He had visited Haiti from 18 to 21 August in his capacity as Chairman of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. Throughout 1992, Haiti had been governed by de facto Governments, with a change of Government having taken place in May.

The Special Rapporteur had received information alleging incidents of repression and violence and violations of the right to life, liberty and the security of person; the right to protection against arbitrary arrest and detention; the right to protection against torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the right to freedom of opinion and expression; and the right to freedom of assembly and association. In describing the situation of the boat people, the Special Rapporteur noted that as at 8 September 1992, 38,513 Haitians had been intercepted while trying to reach the United States. Between December 1991 and May 1992, United States authorities took the boat people to that country's naval base at Guantánamo Bay (Cuba), where they were interviewed to determine whether they had a plausible claim for asylum. According to information received by the Special Rapporteur, by 8 September, some 31 per cent of Haitian asylum-seekers who had been screened were brought to the United States to pursue further their claims of asylum, except those who were found to be HIV positive, who pursued their claims from Guantánamo. The Special Rapporteur also discussed international negotiations to resolve the political crisis in Haiti.

He concluded that the human rights situation in that country had deteriorated appreciably during 1992. There was virtually no rule of law, the Constitution was not in force and citizens were defenceless in the face of arbitrary action by State agents. Since the 1991 coup d'état, power in Haiti rested with the armed forces and, although the international community had made efforts to achieve a political settlement, negotiations were bound to fail unless their terms were endorsed by the military. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights continue to monitor the human rights situation in Haiti; inform the de facto Government that it was not exempt from its obligations to the Haitian people and compliance with all instruments to which Haiti was a State party; and maintain its decision to appoint a special rapporteur and to base permanently one or more human rights specialists at the UNDP office at Port-au-Prince to monitor the human rights situation, encourage the teaching and promotion of human rights and advise the authorities on measures to strengthen institutions for the protection of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/143 without vote.

Human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991 and 46/138 of 17 December 1991,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Aware of its responsibility for the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and resolved to keep a close watch on human rights violations wherever they may occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States are required to promote and protect human rights and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/77 of 5 March 1992 in which the Commission decided to appoint a special rapporteur with a mandate to prepare a report on the situation of human rights in Haiti based on the information which the special rapporteur deemed relevant, especially information supplied by the Organization of American States, with a view to submitting an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session and a report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session,

Deeply concerned about the grave events occurring in Haiti since 29 September 1991, which abruptly and violently interrupted the democratic process in that country and have resulted in the loss of human lives and the violation of human rights,

Concerned also at the mass exodus of Haitian nationals from the country because of the deteriorating political and economic situation since 29 September 1991,

Deeply alarmed by the persistence and worsening of serious violations of human rights, in particular summary and arbitrary executions, forced disappearances, torture and rape, arbitrary arrests and detentions and denial of freedom of expression, assembly and association,

Welcoming the measures taken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to express support for the Organization of American States, in particular through the participation of his Personal Representative in the mission of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States that visited Haiti from 18 to 21 August 1992,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Mr. Marco Tulio Bruni Celli, for his report on the situation of human rights in Haiti and supports the recommendations contained therein;

2. Once again condemns the overthrow of the constitutionally elected President, Mr. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, the use of violence and military coercion and the subsequent deterioration of the situation of human rights in Haiti;

3. Expresses its deep concern about the substantial worsening of the human rights situation in Haiti during the year 1992 and the resulting increase in violations of the human rights embodied in the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the American Convention on Human Rights: "Pact of San José, Costa Rica" and other international human rights instruments;

4. Condemns the recurrence of the flagrant human rights violations committed under the illegal government that took power following the coup of 29 September 1991, in particular summary executions, arbitrary arrests and detentions, torture, searches without warrant, rape, restrictions on freedom of movement, expression, assembly and association and the repression of popular demonstrations calling for the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

5. Calls the attention of the international community to the fate of the Haitian nationals who are fleeing the country not only, as pointed out by the Special Rapporteur in his report, because of the serious deterioration in economic and social conditions, but also because of indiscriminate political persecution and repression;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the work it is doing in favour of the Haitian nationals fleeing the country and invites Member States to continue to give financial and material support to its efforts;

7. Calls upon the States Members of the United Nations and of other international organizations to increase their humanitarian assistance to the people of Haiti, to support all efforts to resolve the problems of displaced persons and to encourage the strengthening of institutional coordination among the specialized agencies and between the United Nations and the Organization of American States;

8. Decides to keep the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Haiti under review during its forty-eighth session and to consider it further in the light of the information supplied by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Peru

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(120) the Subcommission expressed its deep concern at the events in Peru since 5 April 1992, when its President dissolved the National Congress, altered the composition of the courts and suspended essential functions of the judiciary, seriously affecting the state of law and the rule of democracy, and noted with deep alarm the growing criminal activities of the terrorist groups Sendero Luminoso and Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru. The Subcommission called on Peruvian authorities to strengthen their cooperation with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and to reopen dialogue with representative political forces until institutional normalization was restored, human rights fully respected and representative democracy completely re-established.

Communication. On 6 August,(121) Peru transmitted to the Secretary-General an OAS resolution adopted on 24 July condemning terrorist violence in Peru.

Middle East

Lebanon

On 4 March,(122) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 49 to 1, with 1 abstention, condemned continued Israeli human rights violations in southern Lebanon, manifested by arbitrary detention of civilians, destruction of their homes, confiscation of their property, their expulsion from the occupied area, and bombardment of villages. It called on Israel to end such practices immediately and to implement relevant Security Council resolutions requiring its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. It also called on Israel to comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and to facilitate the humanitarian mission of ICRC and similar organizations. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1992 and to the Commission in 1993 on the results of his efforts.

In accordance with the Commission's request, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in November(123) that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution and had received no reply.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1992, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a report to the Commission,(124) the Secretary-General stated that he had brought the Commission's two resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Governments, the Special Committee on Israeli practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. They had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, international humanitarian organizations and NGOs. Information was also disseminated through United Nations press releases, publications, audio-visual programmes and journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine.

In accordance with a 1991 Commission request,(125) the Secretary-General reported(126) that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine and had received no reply.

In January 1992, the Secretary-General submitted a list of all United Nations reports issued since 8 March 1991 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.(127)

Human Rights Commission action. By a 14 February 1992 resolution,(128) adopted by a roll-call vote of 30 to 16, with 3 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel's policies and practices which violated the human rights of the Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied territories. Affirming the right of the Palestinians to resist the Israeli occupation by all means, the Commission called on Israel to desist from all human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, to respect the principles of international law and its commitments to the Charter of the United Nations and to withdraw from the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other occupied Arab territories in accordance with United Nations and Commission resolutions.

By another resolution, adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 17 abstentions,(129) the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel for refusing to apply that Convention and for the ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees and prisoners. It also condemned Israel for deporting Palestinians, calling on it to comply with Security Council, General Assembly and Commission resolutions providing for their return to their homeland and to desist from that policy. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on progress in implementing its resolutions, after bringing them to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental and international humanitarian organizations and NGOs.

Also on 14 February,(130) by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 17 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned Israel for refusing to comply with United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan Heights and demanded that Israel rescind its 1981 decision(131) to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory, which, the Commission said, was null and void and without international legal effect. Condemning Israel's persistence in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Golan Heights, the Commission emphasized that displaced persons must be allowed to return and recover their property. It determined that all Israeli measures that altered the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan were null and void, violated international law and the fourth Geneva Convention and had no legal effect. Strongly condemning Israel for attempting to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrians and for its practices of annexation, establishing settlements, confiscating lands, diverting water resources and imposing a boycott on agricultural products, the Commission called on Israel to desist from its settlement designs and policies aimed against academic institutions and from its repressive measures. It again called on Member States not to recognize any of those measures or actions. The Secretary-General was asked to give the resolution wide publicity and to report to the Commission in 1993.

By a fourth resolution, also adopted on 14 February,(132) by a roll-call vote of 45 to none, with 1 abstention, the Commission reaffirmed that the installation of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and constituted a violation of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. It urged Israel to abstain from installing settlers, including immigrants, in the occupied territories.

By a decision of 25 February 1992,(133) the Commission decided to postpone to a later year consideration of a draft resolution on the subject recommended by its Subcommission in 1991.(125)

Pursuant to a 1991 Subcommission request,(134) the Secretary-General, in July 1992, provided an updated list of reports, studies, statistics, documents and United Nations decisions and resolutions on Palestine and other occupied Arab territories.(135)

Mass exoduses

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(136) the Commission adopted a resolution inviting Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations to intensify their cooperation in addressing problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons (see Chapter XV of this section) and also the causes of such exoduses. It asked Governments to ensure the implementation of relevant international instruments to help avert new exoduses and took note of the Secretary-General's 1991 report on human rights and mass exoduses.(137) Noting that the General Assembly in 1991(138) had encouraged the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations of a 1990 report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on coordinating activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows,(139) the Commission invited the Secretary-General, intergovernmental agencies and offices and international agencies to implement JIU's recommendations. It asked the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to develop the Secretariat's role in coordinating information-gathering and analysis with international organizations to provide early warning of developing situations requiring his attention and to provide focal points within the United Nations system for policy response, including identification of policy options. He was also asked to make information available to the competent United Nations organs, bearing in mind the JIU recommendations.

The Commission urged the Secretary-General to allocate resources to consolidate the system for undertaking early-warning activities by strengthening coordination among the Secretariat offices concerned, including the office of the United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator,(140) UNHCR, the Centre for Human Rights and the relevant specialized agencies, in order to ensure that effective action was taken to identify human rights abuses which contributed to mass exoduses. The Commission looked forward to the Secretary-

General's 1992 report to the Assembly on his role in undertaking early-warning activities and on further developments relating to the recommendations contained in a 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees.(141)

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 General Assembly request(138) and the Commission's March resolution,(136) the Secretary-General in October(142) submitted a report on human rights and mass exoduses. He stated that the Emergency Relief Coordinator had assumed his new functions in April 1992 and noted that some progress had been made in computerizing early-warning data-gathering.

Annexed to the report were the views of 10 Governments, 1 specialized agency and 2 NGOs relating to the recommendations contained in a 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees.(141)

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, by decision 47/431, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1992,(14) 108 States had become parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.(82) In 1992, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Latvia, Seychelles and Slovenia became parties to the Convention. The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August 1992.(143)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/108 without vote.

Status of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/142 of 13 December 1985, 41/147 of 4 December 1986, 42/133 of 7 December 1987, 43/138 of 8 December 1988, 44/158 of 15 December 1989 and 45/152 of 18 December 1990,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1986/18 of 10 March 1986, 1987/25 of 10 March 1987, 1988/28 of 7 March 1988, 1989/16 of 2 March 1989 and 1990/19 of 23 February 1990,

Recalling further its resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which it approved and proposed for signature the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide annexed thereto,

Reaffirming once again its conviction that genocide is a crime that violates the norms of international law and runs counter to the spirit and aims of the United Nations,

Recognising that crimes of genocide have caused great losses and privations to mankind throughout its history,

Expressing its conviction that strict observance of the provisions of the Convention by all countries is necessary for the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Once again strongly condemns the crime of genocide;

2. Reaffirm the need for international cooperation in order to liberate mankind from such an odious crime;

3. Notes with satisfaction that more than one hundred States have ratified the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide or have acceded thereto;

4. Urges those States which have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention and to ratify it or accede to it without further delay;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the status of the Convention.

General Assembly resolution 47/108

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.1) without vote, 25 November (meeting 49); 3-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.39): agenda item 97 (a).

Sponsors: Belarus, Croatia, Poland.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 40,42-45, 48,49; plenary 89.

Other aspects of human rights violations

Declaration on gross and large-scale human rights violations

On 27 August,(144) the Subcommission, having received a working paper prepared by Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) on the preparation of a declaration defining gross and large-scale violations of human rights as an international crime,(145) authorized him to submit to the Subcommission a more detailed working paper, including provisions for such a declaration, and to consider the question in 1993.

Restitution for human rights violations

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,(146) the Commission endorsed a request made by its Subcommission in 1991(147) concerning the preparation by the Special Rapporteur on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms of a second progress report and its request that the Secretary-General provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/250 of 20 July 1992, approved the Commission's endorsement of its Subcommission's requests.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Theo van Boven (Netherlands), submitted a progress report on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.(148) He reviewed material submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in 1992 and discussed compensation to victims of gross human rights violations resulting from the invasion and occupation of Kuwait by Iraq. The Special Rapporteur also discussed a 1991 report, submitted to the ILO Governing Body by its Commission of Inquiry, on a complaint concerning Romania's observance of the 1958 ILO Convention on Discrimination in respect of employment and occupation,(149) especially a chapter on reparations describing measures taken to remedy the consequences of human rights violations committed by the former regime in Romania and to redress the wrongs suffered. He dealt with the issue of reparation under the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and expressed some views on the issue of impunity in relation to reparation for victims of gross human rights violations. Annexed to the report were the conclusions of the Maastricht Conference on the Right to Restitution, Compensation and Rehabilitation for Victims of Gross Violations of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Maastricht, Netherlands, 11-14 March).

Subcommission action. On 27 August,(150) the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue his study and to submit in 1993 a final report containing conclusions and recommendations. It asked the Secretary-General to give him all the assistance he might require.

Arms production and trade

On 28 August,(151) the Subcommission, welcoming the General Assembly's adoption in 1991 of a resolution(152) in which it recognized that international arms transfer and production and the illicit arms trade led to human rights violations, recommended that the Commission on Human Rights ask the Secretary-General to prepare an in-depth study on the positive impact on the promotion of human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights, of a 10 per cent reduction in world armament expenditure, the savings from which should be allocated to development. It also recommended that the Commission ask the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, to consider inviting Member States to approve as soon as possible the elaboration and expansion of the Register of Conventional Arms, established by a 1991 Assembly resolution,(153) to cover national production, small arms and unconventional weapons. (For further details on the Register of Conventional Arms, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Civil defence forces

On 3 March 1992,(154) the Commission noted that the formation of civil defence forces appeared to be on the rise, particularly in areas of conflict, and that their actions had in some cases jeopardized the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It requested the Secretary-General to ask Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for information on domestic law and civil defence forces and for their comments on the relationship between civil defence forces and human rights. The Commission also asked him to submit in 1993 a report summarizing the information and comments received. It asked the special rapporteurs and working groups concerned to pay attention to the matter of civil defence forces in relation to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In response to a General Assembly request of 1990,(1) the Secretary-General submitted, in July 1992,(2) information received from 10 Member States on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims.(3) As at 2 July 1992, 115 States had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts). Seven States—Brazil, Croatia, Kazakhstan, Madagascar, Portugal, Slovenia, Turkmenistan—did so in 1992. All but 12 of the 115 also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States—France and the Philippines—adhered only to Protocol II.

Rights of the Child

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1992,(4) there were 127 parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989(5) and in force since 2 September 1990. In 1992, 20 States ratified or acceded to the Convention.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention in January(6) and again in September 1992.(7)

CRC activities. At its second session (Geneva, 28 September to 9 October),(8) the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) devoted its general discussion to children in armed conflicts and established a working group to submit final proposals on the subject in 1993. The Committee continued to discuss its participation in the preparatory activities for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights. It made a number of recommendations concerning the organization of informal regional meetings, sources of information, public information activities, relations with other United Nations and treaty bodies, and the fourth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (see "Advancement of human rights"). The Committee decided to establish a working group to consider the system of information and documentation relevant to its work. Annexed to the report was a list of 123 States which had ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 29 September 1992, together with a list of Committee members, and the submission status of initial reports by States parties due in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/262, took note of CRC's report on its first (1991) session(9) and transmitted it to the General Assembly.

The Committee held its first informal regional meeting (Quito, Ecuador, 1-5 June). The meeting, organized by UNICEF with the cooperation of the Centre for Human Rights, discussed various themes, including children's health, nutrition and education, child labour, refugee children and the legislative status of minors.

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(10) the Fourth Meeting of States parties to the Convention met (New York, 11 November) to determine the duration of CRC meetings as provided for in article 43 of the Convention. By a November 1992 note to the General Assembly,(11) the Secretary-General stated that the States parties had approved the 1991 CRC recommendation on the duration of its future meetings, the text of which was annexed to his note and approved by the Assembly in resolution 47/112.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1992,(12) the Commission called on States that had not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a matter of priority and appealed to States parties that had made reservations to review the compatibility of their reservations with article 51 of the Convention and other relevant rules of international law. It asked the Secretary-General to provide facilities and assistance for disseminating information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to it; ensure the provision of staff and facilities for the effective performance of CRC; make the necessary resources available for the Working Group of the Whole of CRC to meet in 1992; and to report on the status of the Convention in 1993. It recommended a draft for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, the text of which follows.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTION

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/8 without vote.

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 46/112 of 17 December 1991 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/75 of 5 March 1992,

Concerned about the workload of the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the risk of building up an undesirable backlog in the consideration of reports from States parties,

1. Notes that the General Assembly, in its resolution 46/112, supported the organization of the future work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the basis of two sessions annually, each for a duration of two or three weeks, and the establishment of a pre-sessional working group for a preliminary review of reports from States parties;

2. Welcomes the decision of the General Assembly, in its resolution 46/112, to take appropriate action at its forty-seventh session on the recommendations of the Committee;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary resources available, within the overall existing budget framework, to enable the Working Group of the Whole of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to meet in 1992 subsequent to the second session of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/8

20 July 1992 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22): agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/112 without vote.

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, by which it adopted the Convention on the Rights of the Child, continued in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also its resolution 46/112 of 17 December 1991 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/75 of 5 March 1992,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on its first session, held at Geneva from 30 September to 18 October 1991, and the meeting of the States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, held in New York on 11 November 1992,

Reaffirming that the rights of children require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as for their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social and economic conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and of the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced that the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, makes a positive contribution to protecting the rights of children and ensuring their well-being,

Recalling the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted at the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, and stressing the necessity to ensure the follow-up of the Summit at the national and international levels,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention,

Encouraged by the fact that an unprecedented number of States have to date become signatories and parties to the Convention, thereby demonstrating the widespread commitment that exists to strive for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

2. Recalls with deep satisfaction the entry into force of the Convention on 2 September 1990 as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention since it was opened for signature, ratification and accession on 26 January 1990;

4. Calls upon all States that have not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, from within existing resources, all facilities and assistance necessary for the dissemination of information on the Convention and its implementation, with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention, as well as the full realization of its principles and provisions;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strict compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

7. Appeals to States parties to the Convention that have made reservations to review the compatibility of their reservations with article 51 of the Convention and other relevant rules of international law;

8. Recognizes the important role of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in overseeing the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

9. Welcomes the constructive and useful results achieved by the Committee on the Rights of the Child during its first session, including the adoption of the general guidelines regarding the form and contents of initial reports to be submitted by States parties;

10 Approves the recommendation contained in the resolution adopted by consensus at the meeting of the States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on 11 November 1992, in which the States parties reaffirmed the recommendation made by the Committee on the Rights of the Child regarding the organization of the future work of the Committee on the basis of two sessions annually, each of up to three weeks' duration, as may be decided by the Committee in the light of its anticipated workload, and the establishment of a pre-session working group that would meet for one week approximately two months in advance of each session for a preliminary review of reports from States parties;

11. Authorizes the Secretary-General to implement the recommendation mentioned in paragraph 10 above;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities, within the overall existing budget framework, for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

13. Requests bodies and organizations of the United Nations, within the scope of their respective mandates, to intensify their efforts to disseminate information on the Convention, promote understanding of it and assist Governments in its implementation;

14. Invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on the Convention to adults and children alike and promoting understanding of it;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the status of the Convention;

16. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Sale of children, child prostitution and pornography

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand) presented his second report in January 1992(13) on the sale of children for, among other things, adoption, labour, prostitution and pornography and organ transplants. He discussed his visits to the Netherlands in 1991 and Brazil in 1992 to study the situation and recommended a number of preventive measures, among them: a more active role by the private sector and consumers; more effective enforcement of laws to protect children; more collaboration between State and local agencies; establishment of national focal points to coordinate action against the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; cooperation between national police forces and Interpol (International Criminal Police Organization) and immigration authorities to curb the traffic in children; and education to create public awareness of the issues. He also made specific recommendations on the sale of children, child prostitution and pornography. Annexed to the report was a questionnaire on the situation of children which the Special Rapporteur sent to a broad range of countries, NGOs and concerned individuals.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,(14) the Commission extended the mandate of its Special Rapporteur for three years and asked him to pay particular attention to areas which were insufficiently documented and to set short- and medium-term priorities in his recommendations. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur so that he could submit a report in 1993.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/244 of 20 July, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Programme of action

On 5 March,(15) the Commission adopted the Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography and recommended that all States adopt legislative and administrative measures to carry out the Programme. It urged United Nations bodies and intergovernmental organizations concerned to bear in mind the Programme of Action when designing policies and developing programmes related to children and the family. The Commission also urged NGOs to adopt the Programme of Action and develop activities related to their mandates. It recommended that CRC consider the Programme of Action in studying reports submitted by States parties to the Convention and in all actions carried out under its mandate. It also recommended that the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children bear in mind the Programme of Action when developing activities under his mandate. The Commission asked all States to inform the Subcommission of measures adopted to implement the Programme of Action and their efficacy. It asked the Subcommission to, submit a report every two years on implementation of the Programme of Action by States and asked the Under-Secretary-General on Human Rights to collaborate with the Subcommission in order to fulfil the mandate. Annexed to the Commission's resolution was the Programme of Action.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission an analysis of replies from 14 States, 2 United Nations bodies, 3 specialized agencies and 4 NGOs, on the draft programme of action for the elimination of the exploitation of child labour.(16) The text of the draft programme was annexed to the report.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,(15) the Commission decided to submit to its Subcommission the draft programme of action so that it might amend the draft, taking into account the views of Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It requested the Subcommission to give the utmost priority to amending the draft programme so that it might be approved by the Commission in 1993. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to consider presenting his comments and suggestions to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery and asked the Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights to provide the Subcommission with the support needed to fulfil this mandate.

Child soldiers

In June 1992,(17) the Secretary-General updated his 1990 report on the recruitment of children into governmental and non-governmental armed forces.(18) The Secretary-General provided background on the subject and presented information received from 12 Governments, 1 regional commission, 1 specialized agency, 1 intergovernmental organization and 7 NGOs.

Youth and human rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 3 March,(19) the Commission recommended a draft text on human rights and youth for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Dumitru Mazilu (Romania), in his final report on human rights and youth,(20) submitted in June, discussed the increasing violation of young people's human rights. He presented a programme of action to ensure and promote the rights and freedoms of youth, stating that millions of young people continued to be exposed to great harm. There were countries, he said, where the absence of the most elementary rights and freedoms resulted in the arrest, conviction and execution of young people on political grounds. He recommended measures to end violations of young people's fundamental right to life; establish a mechanism to react speedily to threatened or imminent summary or arbitrary executions and enforced or involuntary disappearances; promote a healthier environment through the containment and reduction of disease, famine, war, corruption, criminality and social breakdown; attack every aspect of the illicit drug enterprise; eliminate illiteracy and promote education and vocational training; implement large-scale national employment programmes; and ensure that new technologies enhance the situation of young people.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/7 without vote.

Human rights and youth

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/49 of 3 March 1992 and resolution 1991/20 of 28 August 1991 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Dumitru Mazilu, for his progress report;

2. Expresses its thanks to all Governments and non-governmental organizations that supplied the Special Rapporteur with relevant information;

3. Decides to invite the Special Rapporteur to update his report in the light of the suggestions made at the forty-third session of the Subcommission, giving special attention to the questions of underdevelopment, unemployment, the right to conscientious objection to military service and children in prison throughout the world;

4. Invites the Special Rapporteur to consult governmental and non-governmental organizations in order to elaborate further and to complete his work, with a view to submitting his final report to the Subcommission at its forty-fourth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to gather and supply to the Special Rapporteur information and data relating to his study and to provide him with all the assistance he may need to complete his report, including consultations at the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, in order that he may submit his final report to the Subcommission at its forty-fourth session.

----	------	------	---------	----	---------	---------	------

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/103) without vote, 15 July (meeting 7); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1992/22); agenda item 17.

Women

Discrimination

On 14 August,(21) the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to seek the views of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) on the desirability of obtaining an advisory opinion on the validity and legal effect of reservations to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽²²⁾ and to invite them to make further observations on reservations to the Convention. It also asked him to report in 1993 on the results of his consultations. The Subcommission decided to reconsider in 1993 a draft it postponed consideration of in 1991, which recommended to the Commission on Human Rights that it propose that the Economic and Social Council ask the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on the validity and legal effect of reservations to the Convention.

Also on 14 August 1992,⁽²³⁾ the Subcommission recommended that the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights give priority to the question of discrimination affecting women and that information on the equality and empowerment of women, and their access to equality in education, work, health and literacy, be included in States' reports to all human rights monitoring bodies as well as to CEDAW. It asked the Secretary-General to report on implementation of the resolution to the Subcommission at its forty-fifth session.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1992/20, invited the Centre for Human Rights and Member States, in preparing for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, to use gender-disaggregated data to identify inequalities between women and men.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

On 28 February 1992,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights approved its Subcommission's 1991 recommendations concerning traditional practices affecting the health of women and children.⁽²⁵⁾

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/251, endorsed the Commission's approval of the Subcommission's recommendations.

Human rights and science and technology

In a note of May,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General summarized action taken since 1986 by the Commission on Human Rights, its Subcommission and UNU on the use of scientific and technological developments for the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

On 14 August,⁽²⁷⁾ the Subcommission decided to consider in 1994 elaborating new human rights standards relating to scientific developments which might affect the mental condition or genetic structure of human beings.

Human rights and the environment

Human Rights Commission action. By a vote of 50 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 28 February 1992,⁽²⁸⁾ endorsed a 1991 Subcommission request⁽²⁹⁾ that Special Rapporteur Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria) be entrusted with preparing a progress report on human rights and the environment in 1992 and that the Secretary-General be asked to give her all the assistance she might require.

The Economic and Social Council approved those requests by decision 1992/252 of 20 July.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur submitted a progress report⁽³⁰⁾ reviewing constitutional, national and regional provisions relating to the environment. The decisions and comments of regional human rights bodies were presented, as were those of United Nations human rights bodies. In a later addendum,⁽³¹⁾ the Special Rapporteur highlighted the results of UNCED (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June 1992) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) pertaining to human rights and the environment.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,⁽³²⁾ the Subcommission asked its Special Rapporteur to submit a second progress report on human rights and the environment in 1993 and asked the Secretary-General to provide her with all the assistance she might require. It also asked him to invite Governments, United Nations bodies including the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, indigenous peoples' and international human rights organizations to provide the Special Rapporteur with information relating to her report.

Human rights of disabled persons

On 3 March 1992,⁽³³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to study the technical and financial feasibility of the recommendations made in 1991 by its Special Rapporteur on human rights and disability,⁽²⁹⁾ with a view to implementing them. It also asked him to ensure better coordination among specialized agencies, United Nations human rights bodies and other organs dealing with the human rights of disabled persons and to ensure that the Special Rapporteur's report was issued as a United Nations publication in all official languages, given the widest possible circulation and transmitted to the Commission for Social Development for consideration. The Economic and Social Council approved those requests by its decision 1992/232 of 20 July. The Commission further asked the Secretary-General to make available the appropriate computer diskettes to organizations wishing to reproduce the report in Braille, in large print, or on cassette, and to request the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs to continue its efforts to coordinate and supervise the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons⁽³⁴⁾ and to make available all documentation in Braille and on cassette to organizations wishing to publish it.

Human rights and peace

On 21 August 1992,⁽³⁵⁾ the Subcommission took note of the recommendations made in a 1991 working paper on the interrelationship between human rights, particularly the right to life and the right to development, and international peace,⁽²⁹⁾ submitted by Murlidhar Bhandare (India), and asked him to present a further document in 1994.

Trade union rights

On 21 February 1992,⁽³⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States to ensure conditions for all persons to exercise freely and fully their trade union rights. It invited States that had not done so to ratify and apply fully the International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽³⁷⁾ the ILO Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention (No. 87) and the Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98),⁽³⁸⁾ and called on them to involve representative trade union organizations in the processes of popular participation and development.

Chapter XI

Health, food and nutrition

During 1992, the United Nations continued to address health, food and nutrition problems throughout the world.

The World Health Organization (WHO) reported that by late 1992 an estimated 13 million adults were infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), of which some 2.5 million cases progressed to the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). In addition, some 1 million HIV-infected children, mostly in sub-Saharan Africa, had been born to HIV-infected women, and over half of them developed AIDS or died. In 1992, an updated WHO global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS was endorsed by the World Health Assembly to meet the new challenges of the pandemic, and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) established an HIV and Development Programme to strengthen UNDP efforts to increase global awareness of the threat posed by the disease.

The year marked the conclusion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992). In October, the General Assembly proclaimed 3 December as the International Day of Disabled Persons (resolution 47/3). An expert group meeting to develop a long-term strategy to further the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons drew up a strategy to create a society for all and remove barriers that prevented disabled people from fully participating in the socio-cultural, political and economic development of their countries and societies.

War, civil unrest and drought caused food aid requirements to soar in 1992. The World Food Programme—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)—shipped a record 5.2 million tonnes of food, benefiting some 42 million people, including 14.4 million refugees and displaced people.

The international community intensified action on nutritional deficiency diseases during the year. Representatives attending the International Conference on Nutrition, jointly sponsored by FAO and WHO, adopted a World Declaration and Plan of Action for Nutrition in which they declared their determination to eliminate hunger and reduce all forms of malnutrition and made recommendations for action by Governments to improve nutrition.

Health

Primary health care

Strengthening primary health-care services was addressed in 1992 by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June).

The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee held a special session (Geneva, 30 and 31 January)(1) to discuss follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children and the goals contained in the Summit's World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and its Plan of Action.(2) In that context, the Committee discussed strengthening national health-care capabilities with an emphasis on district health systems, which were intended to decentralize decision-making authority and place it in the hands of local officials with the means to implement action (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV, for specific action concerning children). The Committee considered the district to be the key level of the health delivery system for implementing, monitoring and expanding health services and recommended that priority be given to training and supervision; logistics and supplies; community and health education; community involvement and empowerment; surveillance, information gathering, monitoring and evaluation; and biomedical and operational research. It also recommended that UNICEF and WHO collaborate on, among other things, monitoring water safety and sanitation; combating dracunculiasis (guinea-worm disease), malaria, schistosomiasis and AIDS; research, training and community-based projects on essential drugs; and nutrition. The Committee further recommended that the two organizations work together to strengthen district health systems through a variety of programmes, including the Bamako Initiative (see below). Those recommendations were endorsed in May by the WHO Executive Board(3) and in June by the UNICEF Executive Board.(4) The UNICEF Board also endorsed the Committee's recommendation that WHO and UNICEF assist Governments in providing emergency responses to cholera outbreaks as well as in preparing for, controlling and preventing the spread of the disease.

UNCED action. UNCED, in Agenda 21, a global plan of action for environment and development,⁽⁵⁾ made a number of recommendations aimed at protecting and promoting human health. The recommendations dealt with meeting primary health-care needs, particularly in rural areas; controlling communicable diseases; protecting vulnerable groups; meeting the urban health challenge; and reducing health risks from environmental pollution and hazards.

The General Assembly, in resolution 47/190, endorsed Agenda 21. (See PART THREE, Chapter VIII, for details on UNCED.)

Bamako Initiative

The 1987 Bamako Initiative,⁽⁶⁾ adopted by the African Ministers of Health to improve the quality of primary health care in sub-Saharan Africa through community participation in financing and managing local health services, was evaluated in 1992 on the basis of case-studies conducted in Burundi, Guinea, Kenya, Nigeria and Uganda.⁽⁷⁾ At the time, the Initiative was operating in 33 countries. The evaluation, sponsored by the Overseas Development Administration (United Kingdom), the Danish International Development Agency, the Norwegian Agency for International Development and the Swedish International Development Authority, was carried out by the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, which made recommendations aimed at improving quality of service, affordability, pricing structures and payment mechanisms, cost recovery and community participation. In addition, recommendations were made concerning the need for support for the Initiative as a way of developing primary health care.

In June,⁽⁸⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board endorsed those recommendations and called on UNICEF to continue to promote the community-focused approach to health-sector development both within and beyond Africa, in close collaboration with WHO. UNICEF was asked to identify and study other successful examples of community-focused initiatives and to examine the potential for, and risks of, applying the community-focused approach to other sectors. The Board called for the submission in 1994 of a progress report on the implementation of the Initiative.

AIDS prevention and control

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General in July 1992 transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly a report of the WHO Director-General on the implementation of the WHO global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Assembly had endorsed the strategy in 1987.⁽¹¹⁾

In a later report,⁽¹²⁾ the WHO Director-General reported that by late 1992 an estimated 13 million adult men and women were HIV-infected and there had been some 2.5 million cases of adult AIDS. In addition, some 1 million HIV-infected children, mostly in sub-Saharan Africa, had been born to HIV-infected women, and over half of them had developed AIDS or died. WHO projected that by the year 2000 a world total of at least 30 million to 40 million men, women and children would have been infected with HIV since the start of the pandemic.

An updated WHO global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS was endorsed by the World Health Assembly in 1992.⁽¹³⁾ The updated strategy proposed ways of meeting the new challenges of the pandemic, including increased emphasis on health care; more effective treatment for other sexually transmitted diseases; stronger focus on HIV prevention by improving women's health, education and status; a more supportive social environment for prevention programmes; and greater emphasis on the public health dangers of stigmatizing people known to be or suspected of being infected and of discrimination against them. (See PART THREE, Chapter X, for information on discrimination against HIV-infected people or people with AIDS.) The updated strategy was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly (see below).

The WHO Director-General highlighted the 1992 activities of the WHO global programme on AIDS and those carried out by United Nations organizations and specialized agencies. He discussed coordination mechanisms for HIV/AIDS activities within the United Nations system.

On 7 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/204, decided that one of the themes of its 1992 coordination segment would be devoted to United Nations policies and activities relating to HIV/AIDS prevention and control and programmes aimed at mitigating its negative socio-economic consequences.

The Secretary-General, in a June report to the Council,⁽¹⁴⁾ discussed the challenges of the evolving HIV/AIDS pandemic as it related to a series of wide-ranging health and socio-economic issues, including preventing the transmission of HIV infection, demographic impact of the disease, effect on vulnerable populations and negative effects on women and their children. He presented the coordination mechanisms that had evolved over the past live years and the policies enacted, and outlined the key principles necessary for improving coordination among the partners of the United Nations system. He also described the prevention and control activities undertaken by the specialized agencies aimed at mitigating negative social and economic effects of the disease.

The Council, by decision 1992/300 of 31 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

UNDP action. In January 1992, UNDP established an HIV and Development Programme to strengthen UNDP efforts to increase global awareness of the threat posed by the epidemic, as well as national capacity to respond to challenges to human development. The Programme was responsible for coordinating and providing policy and programming guidelines for UNDP work in the field. In a report to the UNDP Governing Council,⁽¹⁵⁾ the UNDP Administrator said that the specific UNDP mandates for policy and programme development were to help increase awareness and understanding at global and national levels of the development implications of the epidemic; to support community-based programmes and programmes for women; to strengthen national capacities to develop effective multisectoral HIV strategies; and to minimize the adverse effects of the epidemic.

The Governing Council, on 26 May,⁽¹⁶⁾ took note of the section of the Administrator's report dealing with HIV and development. It asked him to make an assessment of UNDP activities to combat HIV/AIDS and to review the policy framework for the role of UNDP.

Also in May,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council welcomed the efforts of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) to strengthen its AIDS prevention and control activities (for UNFPA's AIDS-related activities, see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

A memorandum of understanding for implementing a WHO/UNDP alliance to combat HIV/AIDS, signed in July, assigned the two organizations joint responsibility for developing a programme approach at the national and global levels.

UNICEF action. In a February report,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Executive Director of UNICEF recommended that UNICEF intensify and expand its support to HIV/AIDS prevention activities, working in close collaboration with Governments, WHO, bilateral agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and others. He also recommended that UNICEF-supported programmes should focus on reducing HIV transmission among young people; promoting informed and responsible sexual behaviour; protecting children from sexual exploitation; promoting improved reproductive health of women and youth; expanding the role of NGOs; and supporting creative community-based approaches to provide the support and social services required by AIDS orphans and families affected by HIV/AIDS.

In June,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report and asked him to take further steps, in close coordination with specialized agencies, NGOs and donors, to strengthen coordination and accelerate global efforts, including the establishing of and participation in an international AIDS coordination forum. It urged him to give priority to accelerating UNICEF society-focused interventions aimed at promoting mutual fidelity and responsible sexual behaviour, reducing gender disparity, improving the socio-economic status of women and reducing the vulnerability of youth to sexual and other exploitation. He was also requested to strengthen the role of UNICEF in combating HIV/AIDS and to review the UNICEF AIDS programme approach to ensure its consistency with the global AIDS strategy and to make refinements as necessary.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1992/33 without vote.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

1. Endorses the updated global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS as the global policy framework;
2. Also endorses the recommendations of the Management Committee of the World Health Organization Global Programme on AIDS concerning coordination of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)/AIDS activities at both the global and the country level, and requests all relevant organizations of the United Nations system to collaborate in carrying out those recommendations;^a
3. Requests the relevant agencies of the United Nations system, in elaborating improved country-level coordination mechanisms, to take into account the important role the resident coordinator should play in such mechanisms to ensure effective implementation of the updated global strategy;
4. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 45/264 of 13 May 1991, to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization, acting in close collaboration with other appropriate bodies, organs and programmes of the United Nations system, to report, through the Secretary-General, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993 on further developments concerning coordination of HIV/AIDS activities at the global and country levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 47/40 without vote.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/203 of 20 December 1991, previous resolutions of the General Assembly and relevant resolutions of other organizations of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS);
2. Endorses the action taken by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1992/33 of 30 July 1992 on prevention and control of AIDS;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization, in close collaboration with all other appropriate bodies, organs and programmes of the United Nations system, to report, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, and biennially thereafter, through the Economic and Social Council, on progress in the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request (20) the Secretary-General submitted a report,(21) in September 1992, on implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons(22) and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992).(23)

The World Programme provided a policy framework for improving the status of disabled persons, the guiding philosophy of which was a shift away from a charity approach towards integrated social development, reflecting a recognition that the problems of disabled persons could not be solved in isolation from those of the greater society. One of the major achievements of the Decade was increasing the knowledge and understanding of the rights of the disabled through information campaigns directed at politicians, legislators, service providers and disabled persons themselves. In addition, disabled persons, through their organizations, were able to increase their influence, gain respect, achieve greater independence and gain access to community resources.

On the negative side, there were indications that the number of disabled persons had increased during the Decade as a result of disease, famine, malnutrition, poverty, violence and war. The social and economic situation of many countries deteriorated during the period, with the most vulnerable groups, including disabled persons, often being hit the hardest. In addition, the financial resources available were insufficient to carry out the tasks required. Although disabled persons increased their participation in various sectors of society, the goal of full and equal participation was far from being realized. People with visual, auditory and comprehension impairments did not always have access to information, and the mass media continued to use materials based on outdated concepts of disability and terminology that was demeaning to disabled persons. (See PART THREE, Chapter X, for action by the Commission on Human Rights regarding disability.) A major obstacle to implementing the Programme of Action was the absence of national coordinating bodies. In addition, many countries did not have comprehensive disability plans and programmes, and, where they did exist, such programmes remained separate from the country's overall socio-economic development. In the majority of countries, most disabled persons and their families were either not covered by social security or had only limited protection, and in some industrialized countries, income security was often a disincentive, increasing the dependency of disabled persons. There was a scarcity of scientifically developed statistics on disabled persons and a lack of coordination of research being conducted at universities and elsewhere. Financial limitations constituted a major obstacle to implementing the goals of the Programme.

The Secretary-General described national disability-prevention activities, including improved health care, nutrition and immunization; rehabilitation; technical aids and appliances; and equalization of opportunities, including physical accessibility, transportation, education, vocational training and employment. He summarized the activities of the United Nations regional commissions, other United Nations bodies and NGOs and recommended a number of measures for Governments to take to move the disability programme from awareness-raising to action and to implement guidelines and policies developed over the Decade.

Pursuant to a 1991 recommendation of the Economic and Social Council,(24) an expert group meeting to develop a long-term strategy to further the implementation of the Programme of Action was held (Vancouver, Canada, 25-29 April 1992).(25) A number of organizations of disabled persons at the local, national and international levels presented their views and proposals. The experts adopted a strategy reaffirming the validity of the Programme.

The strategy's main objective was to create a society for all and remove barriers that prevented disabled people from participating fully in the socio-cultural, political and economic development of their countries and societies. The strategy was designed to increase the capacity of Member States, United Nations bodies and organizations, and governmental and non-governmental organizations to address adequately the issue of disability and encourage them to develop strategic action plans and establish permanent planning and monitoring mechanisms for implementing the Programme. It was also designed to strengthen the processes that had proved successful and sustainable during the Decade, including integration, involving persons with disabilities and their organizations, effective coordination, developing universal norms and standards, and building new partnerships.

Canada also hosted an International Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Status of Persons with Disabilities (Montreal, 8 and 9 October 1992).

The tenth inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (Vienna, 7-10 December 1992)(26) reviewed the major achievements of the Decade and discussed the long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond. It welcomed the proclamation of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons (1993-2002) by members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. The meeting proposed new terms of reference for future inter-agency meetings, which were annexed to its report. It recommended that the shift from awareness-raising to action should be reflected in joint efforts by the specialized agencies and that emphasis be placed on action in developing countries. It also recommended that an affirmative action plan for the employment of disabled persons within the United Nations system be approved by 1995.

The ad hoc open-ended working group to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons submitted its final report in November.(27) It recommended a set of draft rules for finalization by the Commission for Social Development in 1993. It also recommended that the Commission consider ways of linking the monitoring of the standard rules, a long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond and the World Programme of Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/3 without vote.

International Day of Disabled Persons

The General Assembly,

Considering that the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons has been a period of awareness-raising and of action-oriented measures aimed at the continued improvement of the situation of persons with disabilities and the equalization of opportunities for them,

Aware of the need for more vigorous and broader action and measures at all levels to fulfil the objectives of the Decade and the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Noting the importance of developing and carrying out concrete long-term strategies for full implementation & of the World Programme of Action beyond the Decade, with the aim of achieving a society for all by the year 2010,

Welcoming the International Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Status of Persons with Disabilities hosted by the Government of Canada at Montreal, Canada, on 8 and 9 October 1992.

Noting with appreciation the high-level participation in its plenary meetings on 12 and 13 October 1992, marking the conclusion of the Decade,

1. Invites all Member States and organizations concerned to intensify their efforts aimed at sustained effective action with a view to improving the situation of persons with disabilities;

2. Proclaims 3 December as the International Day of Disabled Persons;

3. Urges Governments, as well as national, regional and international organizations, to extend their full cooperation in observing the International Day of Disabled Persons.

UN Voluntary fund

In May 1992,(28) the Secretary-General reviewed the performance of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons from 1980 to 1991. During that period, the Fund provided nearly $3 million in seed-money grants to 161 disability-related projects in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, and western Asia. Global and regional projects accounted for 30 per cent of the total number of projects supported and 37 per cent of the total funds distributed. National capacity-building and institutional development were the main focus of the Fund-assisted activities. Training accounted for 38 per cent of total resources; technical exchange and knowledge, 20 per cent; support to disabled persons' organizations, 19 per cent; data collection and applied research, 13 per cent; and promotional activities, 7.5 per cent. Forty-four Member States provided the majority of the funds.

The Secretary-General believed that the Fund had contributed significantly to the work of the United Nations, and that it should continue under the name United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability in order to further the international community's goal of achieving a society for all by 2010.(29) He proposed new terms of reference for the Fund, stating that its resources should be used to co-finance field-based technical cooperation activities within the framework of the World Programme of Action. The least developed countries and groups of especially disadvantaged disabled people, including women, the elderly, the hearing-impaired, the mentally disabled and persons with multiple disabilities, would receive special emphasis.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/276 of 30 July, recommended that the General Assembly adopt the Secretary-General's recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 47/88 without vote.

Towards full integration of persons with disabilities into society: a continuing world programme of action

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 37/52 and 37/53 of 3 December 1982 and 46/96 of 16 December 1991, and taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1992/276 of 30 July 1992 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/48 of 3 March 1992,

Noting the progress achieved during the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, including increased awareness and expanded knowledge of disability issues, the increased role played by persons with disabilities and by organizations, and the development of disability legislation,

Aware of the major obstacles to the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, foremost among these being an inadequate allocation of resources,

Mindful of the need for persons with disabilities to be afforded the means to take their place as full-fledged citizens in all fields of society,

Deeply concerned by the increasing numbers of persons with disabilities as a consequence of poverty and disease, wars and civil strife and demographic and environmental factors, including natural disasters and catastrophic accidents,

Acknowledging with appreciation the work of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, as the focal point for disability issues within the United Nations system,

Recognizing that the ongoing process of elaborating standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons represents one of the important initiatives of the Decade,

Noting the proposed action towards a long-term strategy to implement the World Programme of Action to the year 2000 and beyond, resulting from the meeting of experts held at Vancouver, Canada, in April 1992,

Welcoming the initiative of the Government of Canada in convening the International Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Status of Persons with Disabilities, held at Montreal, Canada, on 8 and 9 October 1992,

Having carefully considered the various reports and statements made during its plenary meetings on 12 and 13

October 1992, devoted to marking the conclusion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Welcoming Economic and Social Council decision 1992/276, in which the Council recommended the continuation of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons under a new name, the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, and under new terms of reference,

Having taken note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the second round of monitoring of the implementation of the World Programme of Action and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

1. Reaffirms the continuing validity and value of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, which provides a firm and innovative framework for disability-related issues;

2. Reiterates the responsibility of Governments for removing or facilitating the removal of barriers and obstacles to the full integration of persons with disabilities into society, and supports their efforts in developing national policies to reach specific objectives;

3. Urges Governments to show their commitment to improving the situation of persons with disabilities, inter alia, by:

- (a) Establishing an appropriate governmental mechanism to be responsible for policy relating to persons with disabilities and overall coordination;

- (b) Addressing disability issues within integrated social development policies linked to other socio-economic issues and providing preventive and rehabilitative measures and an equalization of opportunities, with the ultimate objective of facilitating the full integration of persons with disabilities into society;

- (c) Where appropriate, creating new or strengthening existing high-level national coordinating committees or other similar bodies in accordance with the Guidelines for the Establishment and Development of National Coordinating Committees on Disability or Similar Bodies,^a adopted at Beijing;

- (d) Supporting the development of organizations of persons with disabilities and using the body of knowledge accumulated by persons with disabilities or their representatives in decision-making processes;

- (e) Integrating, where possible, disability components into technical assistance and technical cooperation programmes;

4. Welcomes the proclamation by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002;

5. Also welcomes the decision of the International Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Status of Persons with Disabilities, held at Montreal, Canada, to establish a Working Group of Ministers and the continuing discussion on the question;

6. Further welcomes the initiative of the United States of America to act as host, in cooperation with the United Nations, to an international conference on disability in the autumn of 1993;

7. Urge the optimum use of existing United Nations mechanisms and bodies, including regional commissions, specialized agencies, other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, especially organizations of persons with disabilities, in the planning, coordination, implementation and monitoring of the United Nations programme on disability, in line with the restructuring and streamlining efforts of the United Nations system and in order to make the most cost-effective use of resources;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to turn the focus of the United Nations programme on disability from awareness-raising to action, to give higher priority and visibility to disability issues within the work programme of the United Nations system, to provide it, through the use of existing resources, with an adequate allocation of funding to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations as a catalyst for change, as a standard-setting organization, as a forum for the exchange of views and as a promoter of technical cooperation activities, by:

(a) Integrating disability issues into the policies, programmes and projects of the specialized agencies on a broader scale and with a higher priority;

(b) Concentrating action and assistance in countries and regions that are most needy and paying special attention to especially vulnerable groups;

(c) Considering the creation of a panel of eminent persons, including persons with disabilities, to advise the Secretary-General on disability matters;

(d) Initiating model pilot projects, in partnership with all interested parties, to assist Member States in formulating comprehensive and coherent disability policies and feasible action plans, taking into account diverse socio-cultural factors and varying levels of economic development;

(e) Finalizing the revision of the translation into the official languages of the United Nations of the World Programme of Action, in particular the terms "impairment", "disability", "handicap" and "disabled person";

(f) Reviewing the Human Development Index of the United Nations Development Programme to include an evaluation of the way a society treats its disabled citizens as a factor of the quality of life in that society;

(g) Continuing United Nations inter-agency meetings established as a result of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and focusing such meetings on the implementation of the World Programme of Action;

(h) Asking the Statistical Office of the Secretariat, in close collaboration with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the relevant United Nations organizations, to continue its important work of collecting statistical data about disability matters and to publish updated disability statistics;

9. Urges the Commission for Social Development to expedite the elaboration of standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons;

10. Encourages the consideration during major forthcoming events, including the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development to be held in 1994, the International Year of the Family to be observed in 1994, the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995, and the World Summit for Social Development to be held in 1995, of disability issues relevant to the subject-matter of those events;

11. Decides to continue, in response to General Assembly resolution 46/96 and Economic and Social Council decision 1992/276, the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability and encourages the Secretary-

General to explore diversified funding arrangements to support and strengthen the Fund involving not only Member States, but also the private sector, with due regard to the need for greater transparency in the management of the Fund;

12. Appeals to Member States to highlight the observance of the International Day of Disabled Persons on 3 December every year with a view to furthering the integration into society of persons with disabilities;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Social development".

General Assembly resolution 47/88

Food and agriculture

World food situation

Despite adequate global food production, modern means of transport and the proliferation of humanitarian relief mechanisms, millions of people in developing regions continued to face the threat of famine, according to a 1992 report of the World Food Council (WFC) on the global state of hunger and malnutrition.(1) While progress in reducing hunger and poverty in some developing regions, especially eastern and southern Asia, was welcomed and encouraged, the deterioration of social and economic conditions in a great many low-income countries had to be viewed with great concern.

The Executive Director of the World Food Programme (WFP) reported that the worst drought in recent history had ruined harvests throughout southern Africa in 1992, threatening more than 18 million people with famine, and warfare and civil unrest continued to devastate other African countries.(2) Emergency needs for nearly 16 million people in the Horn of Africa remained substantial, with conflict continuing to afflict parts of Ethiopia, Somalia and much of southern Sudan.

In Eastern Europe, including the Commonwealth of Independent States, millions of people found it increasingly difficult to gain access to adequate food as a result of economic reforms, and some countries were encountering serious national food shortages. WFC stressed that support to the region must not divert assistance from the developing countries, and expressed confidence that economic progress and a successful transformation of the Eastern European economies would stimulate the world economy and benefit the developing countries by contributing to greater food security.

Emergency food aid was also provided to people affected by conflicts in the Persian Gulf and in the former Yugoslavia, to Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan and to victims of natural or man-made disasters in Bangladesh, Cambodia, Haiti and the Philippines. In all, WFP provided a record amount of food-5.2 million tonnes-to approximately 42 million people in 1992.

WFC activities. WFC, the United Nations coordinating body on food issues, held its eighteenth session in 1992 (Nairobi, Kenya, 23-26 June)(3) and made recommendations on the global state of hunger and malnutrition; the need for a new green revolution in Africa; the implications of changes in Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States for food security in developing countries; migration and food security; hunger-alleviation targets set out in the Council's 1989 Cairo Declaration,(4) adopted by the General Assembly in the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000);(5) a successful conclusion of the multilateral agricultural trade negotiations of the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) aimed at liberalizing agricultural trade based on a 1991 GATT proposal;(6) and the importance of greater political leadership and coordination by a strengthened WFC in the light against hunger.

WFC welcomed a May 1992 appeal of the Secretary-General to assist the drought-affected countries of southern Africa and expressed satisfaction at the outcome of a pledging conference (Geneva, 1 and 2 June). It called on countries in a position to do so to provide further resources urgently needed to cover the gap between pledges made and the Secretary-General's target of $856 million to meet the most acute emergency needs. It noted the importance of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). In July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1992/31, appealed to the international community to contribute generously to the second phase of the Programme.

In a review of its future role in a changing global economic and social environment, WFC agreed that it had fallen short of achieving the political leadership and coordination role envisioned when it was established after the 1974 World Food Conference.(7) There was a consensus, however, that food and hunger issues must remain at the centre of development efforts. The Council established an Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of WFC (New York, 14 and 15 September 1992)(8) to develop proposals concerning its mandate and role in the future. The Committee considered several options, among them: transferring the Council's mandate and functions elsewhere in the United Nations system (e.g., the Subcommittee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), the Economic and Social Council or FAO); and significantly reforming and streamlining WFC. WFC asked the General Assembly to take the Committee's report into account when considering the restructuring of the United Nations intergovernmental machinery.

The Council had before it reports prepared by the World Bank(9) and IFAD(10) on their experiences with hunger- and poverty-alleviation programmes and projects.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/207 of 7 February, decided that, during its 1992 substantive session when considering the report of WFC on its eighteenth session, it would not consider new draft proposals except for specific recommendations requiring action by the Council and proposals on coordination-related matters.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1992/32 without vote.

Food and agricultural development

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the World Food Council on its eighteenth ministerial session, held at Nairobi from 23 to 26 June 1992,

Noting the role of the World Food Council in the tight against hunger,

Expressing concern about the ever-increasing number of people suffering from hunger and situations of famine,

Recognizing the need for the role, functioning and mandate of the World Food Council to be reviewed,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the World Food Council at its eighteenth ministerial session;

2. Welcomes the decision of the World Food Council to set up an ad hoc committee to make specific proposals concerning the mandate and functions of the World Food Council and options for its future role, for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/32

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1992/109/Add.2) without vote, 28 July (meeting 16); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1992/C.1/L.19), based on informal consultations on draft by Pakistan for Group of 77 (E/1992/C.1/L.13); agenda item 12 (c).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 47/150 without vote.

Strengthening the United Nations response to world food and hunger problems

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/32 of 30 July 1992, and the decisions of the World Food Council at its eighteenth session,

Taking note also of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the World Food Council,

Deeply concerned about the gravity of the world food security situation, in particular the worsening problems of hunger and malnutrition,

Stressing the urgent need for a more effective and better coordinated United Nations response to world food and hunger problems,

Underscoring the increasing importance of inter-governmental policy guidance in this field,

Noting with concern that, despite its efforts, the World Food Council, by its own acknowledgement, has not been able to achieve political leadership and coordination to the extent expected by its founders,

1. Affirms the critical importance of establishing the most effective arrangements for the management and coordination of the United Nations response to world food and hunger problems;

2. Underlines the need to consider the role of the World Food Council and how its mandate and functions might best be carried out within the wider context of the overall restructuring of the social and economic activities of the United Nations system;

3. Decides to address these issues in the context of the discussions on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields at the resumed forty-seventh session of the General Assembly, and, in this context, invites the World Food Council to continue its attempts to agree on appropriate measures to be taken and to communicate any agreed conclusions to the Assembly.

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/47/718/Add.3) without vote, 9 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/47/L.76), based on informal consultations on 16-nation draft (A/C.2/47/L.59); agenda item 78 (b).

Food aid

CFA activities

In 1992, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the governing body of WFP, held three sessions at Rome, Italy.

During its second special session (23 and 24 April),(11) Catherine Bertini (United States) took the oath of office as WFP Executive Director. CFA approved WFP financial regulations as amended(12) and one development project, a forestry rehabilitation project in Kenya's semi-arid areas.

At its thirty-third session (25-29 May),(13) CFA approved 15 development projects valued at $245 million and representing 570,000 tonnes of food. Seven of the projects supported the development of human resources, while the other eight focused on productive activities, primarily in rural areas. It also approved live projects, valued at $172 million, providing 325,000 tonnes of food to some 2.5 million refugees and displaced persons. CFA noted the report of the WFP Executive Director covering 1991 activities,(14) which the Economic and Social Council also took note of on 31 July by decision 1992/301.

The Committee had before it a report on the WFP cash situation as at April 1992,(15) summarizing the actual movements of cash in 1991 and the projections for 1992 and 1993. The cash balance projected at the end of 1992 and 1993 represented the expenditure for no more than four and three months, respectively. The Deputy Executive Director considered that for a programme of the size and complexity of WFP, only three or four months' availability of cash was a very serious matter. In response to continuing concerns about the WFP cash-flow situation, CFA decided to set up an informal working group to examine all aspects of the long-term financing of its operations and administration.

At its thirty-fourth session (3-6 November),(16) CFA considered an October report by the Executive Director on WFP's cash situation.(17) The informal working group, which met in September, reached agreement on two basic principles, namely, that each WFP activity should pay for itself and that, in a given year or biennium, the cash outflow must not exceed cash inflow. The group made a number of suggestions for action by the secretariat and Governments, which were outlined in the Executive Director's report. The CFA Chairman considered the discussion of the item as an endorsement of the report, subject to the Committee's observations.

CFA approved 11 development projects costing $153 million, representing a food commitment of some 432,000 tonnes, as well as six refugee projects costing $278 million, representing nearly 785,000 tonnes of food to be distributed to some 5.5 million people.

In addition, CFA endorsed a plan for a more extensive and systematic application of WFP assistance to support disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation and rehabilitation measures in Africa. It also endorsed draft guidelines on the allocation of WFP development assistance, which emphasized providing resources based on need.

WFP activities

WFP, with a total expenditure in 1992 of nearly $1.7 billion, remained the largest source of grant assistance for developing countries in the United Nations system. Of that amount, 65 per cent was for emergency relief, 29 per cent for development projects and the remaining 6 per cent for programme support and administrative costs.

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council on the activities of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Development (DESD),⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that it provided technical support to WFP during the year, scrutinizing food-aid projects in low-income, food-deficit and least developed countries. DESD reviewed and dispatched 20 aid projects valued at $272 million in 1992.

Relief activities

In 1992, WFP committed a record amount of emergency food aid—5.2 million tonnes—to meet acute food shortages for some 27.5 million people in 48 countries.

A higher proportion of those receiving emergency food assistance in 1992 were refugees and displaced persons, a result of new working arrangements between WFP and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), which took effect in January 1992, whereby WFP assumed responsibility for all UNHCR-managed refugee feeding operations in developing countries involving more than 1,000 beneficiaries. Thus, refugees and displaced people received more than 60 per cent of all WFP relief food aid in 1992, an increase of some 50 per cent over 1990. WFP committed $874 million to provide 1.9 million tonnes of food to some 14.4 million refugees and displaced people in 23 countries.

The countries of sub-Saharan Africa received nearly 60 per cent of WFP's total food-aid shipments in 1992, nearly 80 per cent of which was for disaster relief. That aid was distributed among 10 million refugees and displaced people in 18 sub-Saharan countries and to 11.4 million victims of drought in 17 countries.

In Somalia, an estimated 1 million people, mostly displaced women and children, were at grave risk of starvation. Because of anarchical conditions in the country that disrupted relief operations, WFP had to resort to large-scale airlifts to deliver food to those in urgent need until the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM) secured access to inland areas and provided armed escorts for food-aid convoys (see PART TWO, Chapter I, for information on UNOSOM).

In the former Yugoslavia, it was estimated that more than 3 million people required emergency food assistance by the end of the year. WFP, under the direction of UNHCR, coordinated and managed the mobilization and delivery of food to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia and Slovenia.

In the Persian Gulf region, WFP continued to help people affected by civil turmoil, providing assistance to hundreds of thousands of displaced people and vulnerable groups inside Iraq. Elsewhere in Asia, the security situation in Afghanistan deteriorated in 1992, disrupting the return of millions of refugees from Pakistan and Iran and leading to severe food shortages in many parts of the country. In Cambodia, arrangements for the return of more than 360,000 refugees from camps on the Thai border were delayed because of continuing problems with mine clearance and the upsurge of political unrest; WFP continued to provide relief food to those refugees. Shipments of WFP food for relief activities in Asia in 1992 totalled $108 million.

For the first time in several years, WFP committed emergency food aid—$3.7 million worth—to Latin America and the Caribbean in 1992. Among the groups receiving assistance were Haitians involuntarily returned to their country, Cubans and Ecuadorans hit by floods and Peruvians affected by drought.

Development assistance

WFP development activities were aimed at alleviating poverty in developing countries as a means for the poor to gain self-sufficiency. In 1992, the Programme assisted projects designed to increase food and agricultural production; improve rural infrastructure; create land settlement projects, in which new lands were brought into production; increase food reserves; help vulnerable groups; assist school feeding programmes; and alleviate urban poverty. While development projects continued to form the foundation of WFP operations, the availability of resources for them declined during 1992, largely because budgetary constraints faced by donors caused them to redirect their resources to emergency and refugee food needs. Thus, WFP was obliged for a third consecutive year to ration commodity shipments to ongoing development projects.

In 1992, sub-Saharan Africa received 40 per cent of WFP development resources; Asia and the Pacific, 32 per cent; Latin America and the Caribbean, 18 per cent; and North Africa and the Middle East, 10 per cent. At the end of 1992, WFP was assisting 258 ongoing development projects, which provided an estimated 15 million people with 1.4 million tonnes of food during the year.

Resources

WFP's receipts for 1992 totalled some $1.75 billion, while expenditures amounted to nearly $1.69 billion. Pledges and contributions for the 1991-1992 biennium totalled nearly $3 billion.

Food and agricultural development

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1992, submitted a report⁽²⁰⁾ to the General Assembly on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products, developments in the liberalization of international trade in those products and follow-up to the section on agriculture of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.⁽⁵⁾

Despite a drop in the volume of world food and agricultural production in 1991—the first global decline since 1983—the volume of world agricultural trade had increased faster than in previous years. Much of the expansion in trade was the result of increased imports by countries experiencing production shortfalls, particularly China and the former USSR. Many developing countries continued to depend on the production and export of agricultural products. Agriculture accounted for about 15 per cent of gross domestic product in developing countries overall, compared to about 2 per cent in industrialized countries. A greater dependence on agricultural production in the developing world translated into a high dependence on agricultural exports. For the majority of developing countries, the share of agricultural products in total merchandise exports ranged from 50 to 100 per cent. While developing countries were highly dependent on exports of tropical products, most of them also depended on imports of basic foodstuffs, such as cereals, dairy products, meat and edible oils.

Many developed countries maintained high levels of protection for their agricultural commodity markets, resulting not only in the reduction or elimination of the traditional markets for developing countries, but also in the displacement of those countries on the world market, often as a result of subsidized exports. In contrast, the general policy in developing countries had resulted in discrimination against agriculture. Many of those countries were implementing policy reforms that would change the structure of incentives and liberalize trade in order to bring domestic prices in line with border prices.

WFC activities. At its 1992 session,⁽³⁾ WFC recommended that a green revolution be launched in the developing world, especially in Africa, to increase significantly yields and production of traditional African crops, such as maize, millet, sorghum, pulses and tubers. Africa did not experience a research and technology breakthrough comparable to Asia's green revolution in the 1960s and early 1970s and remained engulfed in a devastating food crisis. The Council agreed that there was an urgent need for food production breakthroughs based on agricultural research, technology development and application.

UNCED action. Agenda 21, a global plan of action for environment and development, which was adopted by UNCED and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 47/190, contained a number of recommendations for promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development.⁽²¹⁾ The Conference made recommendations on: agricultural policy review, planning and integrated programming, particularly regarding food security and sustainable development; ensuring people's participation and promoting human resource development for sustainable agriculture; improving farm production and farming systems through diversification of farm and non-farm employment and infrastructure development; land-resource planning, information and education for agriculture; land conservation and rehabilitation; water for sustainable food production and sustainable rural development; conservation and sustainable utilization of plant genetic resources for food and sustainable agriculture and of animal genetic resources for sustainable agriculture; integrated pest management and control; sustainable plant nutrition to increase food production; rural energy transition to enhance productivity; and the evaluation of the effects of ultraviolet radiation on plants and animals caused by the depletion of the stratospheric ozone layer. UNCED also made recommendations to strengthen the role of farmers. (See PART THREE, Chapter VIII, for details on UNCED.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 47/149 without vote.

Food and agricultural development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continued validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, the Cartagena Commitment, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s contained in the annex to its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s and the various consensus agreements and conventions, especially Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Reaffirming also its resolution 45/207 of 21 December 1990 on food and agricultural problems and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/32 of 30 July 1992,

Reaffirming further that the right to food is a universal human right that should be guaranteed to all people, Deeply concerned that hunger and malnutrition have been increasing in many areas, particularly in Africa,

Expressing deep concern that the volume of world food and agricultural production fell in 1991, the first global decline since 1983, and that food stocks declined rapidly,

Recognizing the importance of stimulating food production and productivity in developing countries through appropriate policies, taking fully into account Agenda 21, and through the creation of a suitable economic environment, including a more open international trading system, for the development of a viable agricultural sector and improved food security, and, in this context, noting with concern that the Uruguay Round of multi-lateral trade negotiations have not yet been completed and expressing the hope that they will reach a rapid, balanced and comprehensive conclusion,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products, developments in the liberalization of international trade in agricultural and tropical products, and follow-up to the section on agriculture of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, as well as the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council at its eighteenth session;

2. Affirms that increasing food production and improving access to food by low-income people in developing countries will significantly contribute to the alleviation of poverty and the elimination of malnutrition and to helping to raise their standard of living;

3. Stresses the importance of stimulating food and agricultural production and productivity in developing countries in order to achieve sustainable economic growth and development and, on this basis, to create the conditions for more rapid industrialization and diversification of their economic activities, in particular in the agro-industrial sector;

4. Calls upon the international community to consider food and agricultural issues in a comprehensive and multidimensional manner;

5. Encourages all relevant organs of the United Nations system dealing with food and agriculture, as well as regional and subregional financial institutions, to improve their cooperation and coordination in the field of food and agricultural development;

6. Urges all countries, in particular developed countries, to strengthen their efforts in working towards a more equitable international environment, in particular a fairer, more open and viable international agricultural trading system that will stimulate food production and productivity in developing countries, and, in this connection, stresses the urgent need for a balanced and successful outcome of the Uruguay Round of multi-lateral trade negotiations, as well as the need to give effect to the mid-term review agreements, in which it was stated that ways should be developed to take into account the possible negative effects of the reform process on net food-importing developing countries;

7. Calls upon the international community to support scientific and technological research and training as well as capacity-building in developing countries in order to promote sustainable agricultural development;

8. Emphasizes the urgency of strengthening international cooperation in the transfer of environmentally sound agricultural technology;

9. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system dealing with development to continue their support in providing technical cooperation for agricultural and rural development;

10. Requests the international community to continue to assist and support technical cooperation, including technical cooperation among developing countries, in the area of food and agricultural development;

11. Stresses the importance of finance for investment and of a favourable economic environment to encourage it, and urges the international community to take further determined action in support of the efforts of developing countries in this regard;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on food production, including agro-industrial products, international markets for agricultural and tropical products and the state of global food security, taking into particular account the needs of all developing countries, including net food-importing countries;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Food and agricultural development".

General Assembly resolution 47/149

Nutrition

A WFC study on the global state of hunger and malnutrition in 1992(1) reported widespread and severe malnutrition, as well as nutritional deficiency diseases, among refugees and displaced persons receiving international assistance, on a scale unprecedented since the Second World War. In addition, vitamin-A deficiency, which could result in blindness and lesser forms of eye damage, goitre caused by iodine deficiency and iron-deficiency anaemia were endemic in large parts of the developing world. Programmes in various countries to control those deficiencies had shown promise, and it appeared that the international community was preparing to take major steps towards combating micronutrient deficiencies. The subject was addressed in 1992 by the International Conference on Nutrition, organized by FAO and WHO, the ACC Subcommittee on Nutrition and the United Nations University (UNU) (see below). A Micronutrients Secretariat was being established at Canada's International Development Research Centre (Ottawa), with initial funding of $Can 3.5 million provided by the Centre, the Canadian International Development Agency, the World Bank and UNDP.

International Conference on Nutrition

Representatives of 159 States and the European Economic Community, attending the International Conference on Nutrition (Rome, 5-11 December 1992), adopted a World Declaration on Nutrition in which they declared their determination to eliminate hunger and reduce all forms of malnutrition. They expressed concern that about 780 million people in developing countries did not have access to enough food to meet their daily needs and more than 2 billion people, mostly women and children, were deficient in one or more micronutrients, such as iodine, vitamin A and iron. They called on the United Nations to consider declaring an international decade of food and nutrition to emphasize the objectives of the Declaration, giving particular emphasis to the food and nutrition problems of Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean.

Also adopted was a Plan of Action for Nutrition, which provided guidelines for Governments, acting in partnership with NGOs, the private sector, local communities, families and households and the international community. The Plan's overall objectives were to ensure continued access by all people to sufficient supplies of safe foods for a nutritionally adequate diet; achieve and maintain health and nutritional well-being; achieve environmentally sound and socially sustainable development for improved nutrition and health; and eliminate famines and famine deaths.

Proposed actions for consideration by Governments to improve nutrition included: incorporating nutritional objectives, considerations and components into development policies and programmes; improving household food security; protecting consumers through improved food quality and safety; preventing and managing infectious diseases; promoting breast-feeding; caring for the socio-economically deprived and nutritionally vulnerable; preventing and controlling specific micronutrient deficiencies; promoting appropriate diets and healthy lifestyles; and assessing, analysing and monitoring nutrition situations.

ACC activities

The nineteenth session of the ACC Subcommittee on Nutrition was held in Rome from 24 to 29 February 1992.⁽²⁾ The Subcommittee's annual symposium on nutritional issues in food aid (24 and 25 February) discussed public works supported by food aid, supplementary feeding and refugee nutrition. The Subcommittee drew the attention of ACC to statements it approved on nutrition, refugees and displaced persons and on the benefits of preventing growth failure in early childhood.

The Subcommittee also considered iodine, iron and vitamin-A deficiency; a proposal for a micronutrient forum; nutrition and ethics; evaluating nutrition programmes; institutional development; household food security; long-term nutritional effects on development; future nutrition problems; nutritional surveillance; a proposal for an international decade on food and nutrition in Africa; diet and health in Latin America; activities of the International Dietary Energy Consultative Group; food databases, including the International Network of Food Data Systems (INFOODS), the International Food Intake Directory (INFID) and guidelines for rapid assessment procedures (RAP) for supervisors; the use of powdered milk in non-emergency feeding situations; activities of the working group on food aid; a review of country programmes; and reports from participating agencies.

In October, the Subcommittee issued its Second Report on the World Nutrition Situation, which described trends in nutrition from 1975 to 1990.

UNU activities

As part of its ongoing INFOODS project, UNU in 1992 installed computer hardware and software for two subregional databases for Asia and the Pacific, and continued work on regional databases in Africa and Latin America. The aim of the INFOODS project was to improve the availability and quality of food composition data worldwide, particularly in developing countries. Efforts were under way to mobilize support to make the UNU Institute for Natural Resources in Africa the headquarters for the INFOODS regional database in Africa and to include in the database information on African plants having both medicinal and economic value.

The joint UNU/UNICEF RAP project continued to disseminate guidelines for using anthropologically based methods to determine the impact of intervention programmes on health-related behaviours. A Chinese edition of RAP guidelines was completed in 1992, adding to the English, French and Spanish editions already available. RIP workshops were held in Argentina, Peru and Turkey, and a new type of RAP, designed primarily for planners, policy makers and administrators rather than researchers, was conducted in Romania for participants from Eastern Europe and the former USSR.

During the year, UNU continued to work closely with the ACC Subcommittee on Nutrition in assembling information on iron deficiency, the most widespread nutrient deficiency in the world. With the support of the World Bank, UNU established a secretariat for the Group for the Control of Iron Deficiency at the University of California, Berkeley (United States). It was to hold subregional meetings to increase awareness of the functional consequences of iron deficiency and promote the development of national plans to control it. Work had also begun on an extensive data bank of persons concerned with iron deficiency in each country.

UNU nutrition-related publications in 1992 included: Rapid Assessment Methodologies for Planning and Evaluation of Health Related Programmes, Compiling Data for Food Composition Data Bases, INFOODS Food Composition Data Interchange Handbook and four issues each of the Food and Nutrition Bulletin and Journal of Food Composition and Analysis. The University awarded five fellowships in the areas of food science and technology (two to the Instituto de Nutrición de Centro-América y Panama in Guatemala and one to the National Food Research Institute, Japan); nutrition (California Pacific Medical Center, United States); and nutritional immunology (Memorial University of Newfoundland, Canada).

Chapter XII

Human resources, social and cultural development

During 1992, the United Nations continued to promote human resources and cultural development and improved crime prevention and criminal justice programmes.

The new United Nations Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice held its first session in April.

The General Assembly adopted resolutions in December on crime prevention and criminal justice (resolution 47/91), on international cooperation in combating organized crime (47/87), and on the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (47/89).

The Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on organized crime (1992/23) and on preparations for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in 1995 (1992/24).

The third Human Development Report was published by the United Nations Development Programme in 1992. The report focused on the workings of global markets and how they met, or failed to meet, the needs of the world's poorest people.

The Assembly decided to convene a World Summit for Social Development in 1995 (47/92).

Human Development Report

The Human Development Report 1992, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), focused on global markets and their impact on the world's poorest people. The report stated that competitive markets were the best guarantee of efficient production and must be open to all people. They required a regulatory framework, supplemented by judicious social policy action and were of little value if they did not serve human development. The report discussed the concept and measurement of human development under the broad headings of political freedom and human development; the widening gap in global opportunities; global markets, poor nations and poor people; and a new vision for global human development.

The report's main conclusions were that: economic growth did not automatically improve people's lives; rich and poor countries competed in the global market-place as unequal partners; global markets did not operate freely; the world community needed to provide a social safety net for poor nations and poor people; and industrial and developing nations had the opportunity to design a new global compact that would ensure sustainable human development for all.

Global institutions in the twenty-first century, the report suggested, might include a global central bank, a system of progressive income tax, an international trade organization and a strengthened United Nations system that played an increasingly important role in economic and social matters. The latter could be achieved through the creation of a Development Security Council, which would arrive at a consensus on development policy. The report also suggested that: the World Bank should re-establish its role as a sympathetic intermediary between developing countries and global capital markets; the International Monetary Fund should be strengthened to enable it to impose adjustment programmes not only on developing countries but also on industrial nations; and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade should have its mandate enlarged to cover most international trade.

UN research and training institutes

UN Institute for Raining and Research

UNITAR activities

The United Nations Institute for 'Training and Research (UNITAR) continued to focus its efforts on training activities. The Acting Executive Director of UNITAR reported(1) that, in spite of staff reductions, the volume of Institute activities had grown. During the period reviewed (1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992), 98 training events involved some 3,847 participants, in courses lasting up to six months. Voluntary contributions to UNITAR's General Fund amounted to $1 million, while special purpose grants totalled $6.7 million.

A major UNITAR innovation was the introduction of a training programme in peace-keeping and peacemaking for United Nations staff members and the diplomatic personnel of permanent missions.

to the United Nations. Four forums and one training seminar on peace-keeping and peacemaking were held in New York in 1992.

Training programmes also covered environmental and natural resources management, legal aspects of debt management, disaster relief planning and management, economic and social development, and multilateral diplomacy.

Other recent features of UNITAR training programmes included their growing decentralization and increased reliance on inter-agency cooperation. Courses were organized at country or subregional levels in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America. They relied as much as possible on existing training centres in the field, and attracted cooperation from institutions both within and outside the United Nations system.

Financial situation and restructuring of UNITAR

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(2) submitted an October report(3) on UNITAR. He discussed interim measures for the Institute and made recommendations with regard to its future.

As at 31 December 1991, UNITAR owed the United Nations more than $10.1 million—a situation which the Secretary-General said could not be allowed to continue. He concluded that the best course of action would be for the United Nations to take over the UNITAR building in New York in exchange for the cancellation of the debt and coverage of UNITAR's 1992 financial obligations. The New York office of UNITAR would be phased out, and a scaled down UNITAR would be transferred to Geneva. In the first phase of this restructuring, the Secretary-General abolished the post of Under-Secretary-General, and appointed the Director of the UNITAR European Office at Geneva as Acting Executive Director.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section XXIV, the General Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to commit up to $400,000 from 1 January through 28 February 1993 to cover costs related to the security and maintenance of the UNITAR premises, as well as the cost of maintaining the existing New York staff members for whom placement would be sought elsewhere in the United Nations system.

UN University

UNU activities

In 1992,(4) the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, continued to carry out research, postgraduate training and the dissemination of knowledge focused on five areas: multilateralism, the environment, science and technology, hunger and poverty, and capacity-building.

Several conferences, forums, seminars and workshops were held during the year, including two international conferences to examine issues of governance in future society, held at Meiji Gakuin University (Yokohama, Japan, March), and at Dartmouth College (Hanover, New Hampshire, United States, May). A meeting on the role of the international scholarly community in strengthening multilateral action was held at Geneva in April and a training course in international law and institutions, concentrating on the strengthening of environmental legislation in the South Pacific region, was held in Samoa in November.

A UNU research and training centre, the UNU International Institute for Software Technology, commenced operations in Macau in July.

During the year, 69 UNU fellows completed studies with various academic institutions in different parts of the world and 53 fellows began their training in the areas of multilateralism, environment, science and technology, hunger and poverty. They included 12 fellows in geothermal energy at the National Energy Authority (Iceland); 8 in remote-sensing technology at the Instituto de Pesquisas Espaciais (Brazil); 1 in mountain ecology at the University of Berne (Switzerland); 3 in science and technology policy at the Universidade Estadual de Campinas (Brazil); 9 in biotechnology at various institutions in Argentina, Brazil, Costa Rica, Mexico and Venezuela; 10 in micro-informatics at institutions in Ireland and Macau; 5 in food science and technology and nutrition at Instituto de Nutrición de Centro América y Panamá (Guatemala), the National Food Research Institute (Japan), the California Pacific Medical Centre (United States) and the Memorial University of Newfoundland (Canada); and 5 in economics and quantitative techniques at the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies.

Among the books published by UNU in 1992 were: East-West Migration: The Alternatives; Financial Openness and National Autonomy: Opportunities and Constraints; Industrial Pollution in Japan; The Impact of Labour Migration on Households: a Comparative Study in Seven Asian Countries; and The Role of Labour-Intensive Sectors in Japanese Industrialisation.

UNU Council

The Council of UNU did not meet as a whole in 1992, although a meeting of its Bureau was held in June. The thirty-ninth session of the Council was scheduled to take place in 1993.

On 7 February 1992, by decision 1992/208 B, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the 1992 General Assembly the UNU Council report on its work in 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/200.

United Nations University

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2951(XXVII) of 11 December 1972 on the establishment of the United Nations University,

Recalling also its resolution 45/220 of 21 December 1990 on the United Nations University,

Recognizing the contributions of the University and the relevance of its work to the concerns of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University on the work of the University in 1991 and the statement made by the Rector of the United Nations University before the Second Committee on 15 October 1992 concerning the activities of the University in 1992 and its plans for the future,

Noting with appreciation the financial and other contributions made by Governments and organizations in support of the University,

Stressing the need to enhance the visibility of the University and its management,

Taking note of decision 4.3.2 adopted on 27 May 1992 by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and thirty-ninth session,

1. Takes note of the progress made in the overall activities of the United Nations University within the framework of its second medium-term perspective, for 1990-1995;

2. Welcomes the completion of the permanent headquarters building in Tokyo made available to the University by the Government of Japan;

3. Takes note of the progress of the work of the World Institute for Development Economics Research of the United Nations University, in Finland, the Institute for New Technologies of the United Nations University, in the Netherlands, and the Programme for Biotechnology in Latin America and the Caribbean, in Venezuela;

4. Welcomes.

(a) The establishment of the International Institute for Software Technology of the United Nations University, in Macau, under the joint sponsorship of the Government of China, the Government of Portugal and the Territory of Macau;

(b) The progress made in the negotiations towards the establishment of the research and training centre on governance, state and society, in Spain;

(c) The intention of the Government of Ghana to act as host to the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa;

(d) The initiation of the activities of the Institute of Advanced Studies in Japan;

5. Stresses the need, in the light of the institutional development of the University, to maintain and enhance the programming and coordinating role of the University Centre with a view to ensuring the overall coherence, organic integrity and universality of the activities of the University;

6. Notes the valuable contributions made by the University to the work of the United Nations, including its input into Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and encourages the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to avail themselves of the research capacity and research results of the University, which should come to serve as one of the principal academic institutions of the United Nations through its global network of research and training centres and programmes;

7. Requests the University to pursue its efforts:

(a) To enhance its prominence, notably through selection of timely and important research topics, such as the Plan of Action for Academic Initiatives at United Nations Headquarters, launched by the Rector of the United Nations University, intensified coordination and cooperation with other United Nations bodies, wider dissemination of its research results and expanded collaboration with an even wider international academic community of institutions and scholars, particularly in developing countries;

(b) To keep under review the management and administrative functions of the University, particularly with a view to ensuring their efficiency and economy;

(c) To foster its substantive collaboration with other research and training institutes within and outside the United Nations system;

8. Invites the Council of the United Nations University:

(a) To intensify its efforts to promote the activities of the University and make them more widely and better known;

(b) To continue to contribute to the effective management of the University, including the administration of its funds;

(c) To study the possibility of reducing the frequency of its meetings, in the interests of efficiency and economy;

9. Requests the University to continue its fund-raising efforts vigorously, particularly the effort to increase its Endowment Fund, and appeals to the international community to make voluntary contributions to the University, in particular to its Endowment Fund.

Social and cultural development

Social aspects of development

World social situation

In response to an Economic and Social Council resolution of 1991,(1) the Secretary-General presented in April(2) a draft framework for the 1993 report on the world social situation

At the Council's request the draft was re-oriented to reflect the intrinsic relationship between economic growth and social development and to analyse in depth the impact of economic problems in the developing countries on the world social situation. The Secretary-General noted that the first chapter of part one of the re-oriented report would examine these issues taking into account national and international conditions. Specific social problems including population; hunger, malnutrition and food supplies; housing and sanitation; education and literacy; health; and unemployment and low-productivity employment would be considered in subsequent chapters. Part two would take up such issues as changes in economic and social institutions, challenges to social security policies, and the integration and disintegration of communities.

On 21 April,(3) the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) said it would review the draft report to ensure that it had an integrated interdisciplinary focus.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1992/26.

World social situation

Recalling its resolutions 1989/72 of 24 May 1989 and 1991/4 of 30 May 1991 and taking note of General Assembly resolution 46/95 of 16 December 1991,

Acknowledging the relationship between development, including social development, and the enjoyment by everyone of economic, social and cultural rights, as well as civil and political rights, and recognizing the importance of creating the conditions whereby everyone may enjoy these rights, as set out in the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Noting that in paragraph 4 of its resolution 1991/4 the Secretary-General was requested to reorient the draft framework for the 1993 report on the world social situation so that it was in consonance with the requests set forth in paragraph 4 of its resolution 1989/72, and to submit it to the Council for consideration at its substantive session of 1992,

Bearing in mind the importance of a well-balanced report on the world social situation for increasing international awareness of the efforts being made towards achieving the goals of social progress and better standards of living, established in the Charter of the United Nations, as well as of the obstacles to further progress,

Deeply concerned about the continued worsening of the economic situation in many developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, as evidenced by the significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of those countries and the decline of their main social and economic indicators,

Bearing in mind that certain developing countries have been able to achieve some economic and social progress,

Having considered the draft framework for the 1993 report on the world social situation,

1. Notes that in the preparation of the draft framework for the 1993 report on the world social situation efforts have been made to reorient it in accordance with the requests of the Council and the General Assembly;

2. Reaffirms its request set forth in paragraph 4 of its resolution 1989/72 that, in preparing the next report on the world social situation, the Secretary-General should give high priority to an analysis of the main indicators of social progress and standards of living and make a comprehensive analysis of the main causes and circumstances that explain negative trends in those indicators, and reaffirms that chapters devoted to the study of specific social problems must be related to global economic and social situations, taking into account both national and international conditions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the 1993 report, to also take into account the intrinsic relationship between economic growth and social development and to analyse in depth the impact of the economic problems of the developing countries on the world social situation;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Economic and Social Council, the 1993 report on the world social situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/26

----	------	------	---------	----	---------	---------	------

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/106) without vote, 27 July (meeting 20); draft by Pakistan for Group, of 77 (E/1992/C.2/L.9), as orally revised; agenda item 19.

Earlier, on 7 February, by decision 1992/204, the Council decided that its coordination segment should include the theme of assistance in the eradication of poverty and support to vulnerable groups during the implementation of structural adjustment programmes.

On 31 July, by decision 1992/30, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on policies and activities related to assistance in the eradication of poverty and of his report on the prevention and control of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS).

Social development

World summit for social development

The Secretary-General, in response to an Economic and Social Council decision of 1991,(4) submitted a July note(5) on consultations by the Special Representative with Member States on the possibility of convening a world summit for social development. The consultations confirmed that there was widespread support in all regions for convening the summit.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/27.

Social development

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 46/139 of 17 December 1991 and Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991,

Welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative to assist him in the consultations requested by the Council in decision 1991/230,

Bearing in mind the need to involve the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the Commission for Social Development, in the preparations for the proposed world summit for social development,

Taking note of the statement made by the President of the Economic and Social Council at the conclusion of the high-level segment of the Council, on 8 July 1992, that there was broad support for a summit,

Having considered the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the results of the consultations carried out in response to the request made by the Council in its decision 1991/230,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the positive results of the consultations on the possibility of convening a world summit for social development;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Special Representative for their efforts in carrying out a comprehensive process of consultations on this matter;

3. Recommends that the General Assembly convene a world summit for social development, at the level of heads of State or Government, to be held in early 1995;

4. Also recommends that the General Assembly, at its forty-seventh session, take action on the proposed summit, including appropriate decisions on the agenda, means of preparation for the summit and other relevant modalities;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out consultations on the present resolution and present an oral report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/27

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote
Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/106) without vote 24 July (meeting 19); 118-nation draft (E/1992/C.2/L.10), orally corrected; agenda item 19.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, following a recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/92.

Convening of a world summit for social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/139 of 17 December 1991 and Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991 and taking note of Council resolution 1992/27 of 30 July 1992,

Having considered the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the consultations requested by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1991/230,

Recalling its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, by which it adopted the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, which includes as one of its principal themes the need to strengthen the mutually reinforcing relationship between economic growth and human welfare,

Recalling also its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, by which it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, welcoming the support expressed for the convening of a world summit for social development at the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,

Conscious that increased international cooperation for economic and social development would significantly contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Convinced of the need for the enhancement of the social component of sustainable development to achieve economic growth with social justice,

Reaffirming the right and responsibility of each State to determine freely its own priorities, policies and objectives for social development in accordance with its constitutional and legal systems and social conditions,

Conscious of the need to address ways and means for the elimination of widespread poverty and the full enjoyment of human rights, including civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, as interrelated goals,

Acknowledging the need for an integrated approach in the fields of social and economic development in the United Nations system in order to deploy more effectively the widespread experience of the system in those areas,

Stressing that poverty, unemployment and social integration are closely interrelated in all societies and have a particularly profound impact on developing countries,

Convinced that a world summit for social development should contribute to efforts by all countries to foster sustainable development and to promote policies against poverty and unemployment in all societies,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for their efforts in carrying out a comprehensive process of consultations on this matter;

2. Welcomes with satisfaction the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General concerning the positive outcome of the consultations on the possibility of convening a world summit for social development;

3. Decides to convene a World Summit for Social Development at the level of heads of State or Government early in 1995;

4. Accepts with appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Denmark to act as host to the Summit;

5. Decides that the Summit shall have the following objectives:

(a) To further the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations, as stated in Article 55, to promote "higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development", and "solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems", with particular focus on social development aspects;

(b) To express a shared world-wide commitment to put the needs of people at the centre of development and of international cooperation as a major priority of international relations;

(c) To stimulate international cooperation at the bilateral, regional and multilateral levels, through governmental, private and non-governmental initiatives, in order to assist in the implementation of nationally appropriate, effective and efficient social policies and to formulate strategies which will enable all citizens to be actively engaged in those policies;

(d) To formulate strategies on goals, policies and priority actions that could be adopted at the national, regional and international levels to address, in the different development realities, core issues of shared universal concern in the field of social development, giving particular attention to the needs of the least developed countries;

(e) To create international awareness of and address the modalities to attain the necessary balance between economic efficiency and social justice in a growth-oriented, equitable and sustainable development environment, in accordance with nationally defined priorities;

(f) To address, in creative ways, the interaction between the social function of the State, market responses to social demands and the imperatives of sustainable development;

(g) To identify common problems of socially marginalized and disadvantaged groups and promote the integration of those groups into society, highlighting the need for societies to equalize opportunities for all members;

(h) To promote programmes to ensure legal protection, foster effective social welfare programmes and enhance education and training for different groups in all societies, including the marginalized and disadvantaged groups;

(i) To assist in ensuring a more effective delivery of social services for the more disadvantaged sectors of society;

(j) To highlight the need to mobilize resources for social development at the local, national, regional and international levels;

(k) To make appropriate recommendations regarding more effective action by the United Nations system in the sphere of social development, in particular, measures and policies for the revitalization of the Commission for Social Development;

6. Decides, taking into account the objectives set out in the present resolution, that the core issues affecting all societies to be addressed by the Summit are:

(a) The enhancement of social integration, particularly of the more disadvantaged and marginalized groups;

(b) Alleviation and reduction of poverty;

(c) Expansion of productive employment;

7. Decides to establish a Preparatory Committee open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

8. Decides also that the Preparatory Committee shall hold an organizational session for one week in April 1993 and, at the level of personal representatives of the heads of State or Government or other appropriate high-level representatives specifically designated by Governments, three substantive sessions in 1994 of no more than ten working days each, at the Headquarters of the United Nations;

9. Decides that the Preparatory Committee, at its organizational session, shall elect, with due regard to equitable geographical representation, a Bureau, of which the host country, Denmark, shall be an ex officio member;

10. Decides that the Preparatory Committee shall:

(a) Consider reports submitted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system on matters relating to the World Summit for Social Development;

(b) Draft the provisional agenda of the Summit, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

(c) Prepare the draft decisions for the Summit and submit them to the Summit for consideration and adoption;

(d) Adopt other appropriate decisions relevant to the successful preparations for, outcome of and follow-up to the Summit;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to establish an ad hoc secretariat unit, including personnel of the relevant organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, to assist in the preparatory process and the substantive work of the Preparatory Committee;

12. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development give consideration to the agenda of the Summit at its thirty-third session, in 1993, and to the question of holding an extraordinary session dedicated solely to the question of the Summit before the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee in 1994;

13. Recommends also that the Economic and Social Council, at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1993, consider the theme, "World Summit for Social Development";

14. Requests the regional commissions to include in their programme of work for 1993 the question of the World Summit for Social Development, with particular emphasis on the social situation in their respective regions, and to formulate proposals thereon and prepare an integrated report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

15. Requests the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental organizations, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to contribute fully to the preparations for the Summit;

16. Recommends that the Preparatory Committee take full account, as appropriate, of the preparations for and the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993 and the International Conference on Population and Development to be held in 1994 and of the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995;

17. Request the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to contribute in accordance with established practice to the Summit and the preparatory process, as appropriate;

18. Invites the Secretary-General to provide the resources required for initiating the preparatory process of the Summit in 1993, including through redeployment;

19. Also invites the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund and to mobilize voluntary contributions from public and private sources for the financing of the additional activities required by the preparations for and the holding of the Summit;

20. Decides that the resources of the trust fund should be utilized to finance the participation of the least developed countries in the Summit and the preparatory process;

21. Requests the Preparatory Committee to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth and forty-ninth sessions on the progress of work of the Committee and the preparations for the Summit.

Evaluation of social development activities

The Secretary-General submitted a progress report to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) in March(6) on an in-depth evaluation of the social development activities of the United Nations. The report presented an overview of social development activities, their structure and strategies, and reviewed the available information.

It made recommendations on the scope of the final in-depth evaluation, the issues to be addressed and methods of data collection. They were endorsed by CPC at its thirty-second session in May7.

International year for tolerance

In July,(8) a resolution, adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in 1991, inviting its Director-General to consult with the United Nations on declaring 1995 the United Nations year for tolerance, was transmitted to the Secretary-General in a letter from the UNESCO Director-General.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the letter on 30 July by decision 1992/267 and conveyed it to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, acting on a recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/124.

United Nations year for tolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Charter of the United Nations affirms in its preamble that to practise tolerance is one of the principles to be applied to attain the ends pursued by the United Nations of preventing war and maintaining peace,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations as set forth in the Charter is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Mindful of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note with appreciation of resolution 5.6 of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, concerning the proclamation of 1995 as the United Nations year for tolerance,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1992/267 of 30 July 1992 and of the note by the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 concerning guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

1. Welcomes the initiative of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in seeking to have 1995 proclaimed the United Nations year for tolerance;

2. Requests the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare, in cooperation with other interested organizations, his suggestions on the observance of the United Nations year for tolerance and to submit them to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Economic and Social Council

3. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider at its next session the question of proclaiming 1995 the United Nations year for tolerance and to transmit a recommendation to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

4. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare, in accordance with General Conference resolution 5.6, a declaration on tolerance;

5. Decides to consider the question at its forty-eighth session.

The family

International Year of the Family

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(9) submitted a December report(10) to the Commission for Social Development on the state of preparations for the 1994 International Year of the Family. He reviewed the preparatory process for observance of the Year, reporting that more than 100 countries had initiated actions and that the regional commissions and several bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system were also participating.

He stated, however, that several countries had taken little action and the same might be said of several intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), which had a substantive interest in family issues.

As at 20 November 1992, contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the International Year of the Family totalled $1,255,185, of which Governments had contributed $73,055, and organizations and individuals, $1,182,130.

Population growth and changing social conditions

In a November note(11) to the Commission for Social Development, the Secretary-General transmitted a report on the Expert Group Meeting on Social Consequences of Population Growth and Changing Social Conditions, with Particular Emphasis on the Family (Vienna, 21-25 September). The meeting discussed the current situation of the family in the context of kinship, the community and civil society; national policies affecting families in the context of social and demographic change; and prerequisites for policy-making and implementation.

The meeting concluded, among other things, that demographic, economic, political, organizational and environmental changes frequently exerted serious negative influences on the family. It recommended that the Commission urge Governments to: give social policies priority on their national agendas; coordinate and harmonize policies affecting the family in order to resolve conflicts and avoid negative side-effects; and evaluate, in the planning of each project, its possible impact on families.

The meeting concluded that the economic well-being of the vast majority of families depended on the health of the national economy and the distribution of national resources. It recommended that the Commission urge Governments to balance macro-level economic policies, especially in countries undergoing structural adjustments, with microlevel policies to enable families to participate constructively in those adjustments through: training and retraining; access to credit for small business enterprises; and the promotion of cooperatives and self-help organizations.

The meeting concluded that, in developing and developed countries, many families were unable to achieve basic economic security, and redistributive public programmes were necessary to fill the gap. It recommended that the Commission urge Governments to: extend contributory and non-contributory programmes of income maintenance to cover the elderly, single-parent families, dependent children, the disabled and the unemployed; ensure that public programmes were equitable in terms of gender, age, ethnicity and other considerations; and carefully target non-contributory assistance and subsidies on families and individuals in need.

Cooperatives

In response to a 1989 General Assembly resolution,(12) the Secretary-General submitted a May report (13) to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends.

The report was based on 48 replies from governmental agencies or national organizations of cooperatives in 42 countries to a questionnaire from the Secretary-General. It concluded that cooperative enterprises played a key role in the private sector and in agriculture in particular, offering governments a promising economic option when faced with the need for severe structural transformation. Farmers' cooperatives were key institutions in the revitalization of agriculture and the development of rural areas, particularly in Africa, Asia and Latin America and deserved more attention than they had received. It was noted that the global membership of savings and credit cooperatives (credit unions) had grown by more than 8 per cent a year since 1985.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/25.

The role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/58 of 8 December 1989, particularly paragraph 4, in which the Secretary-General was requested, in consultation with Member States and relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends,

Recognizing the importance of the policy-oriented research being undertaken by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat concerning the relevance of cooperatives to the achievement of the social policy objectives set forth in the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, in the execution of which it acts as focal point within the United Nations system,

Bearing in mind that 1995 will mark the centenary of the establishment of the International Cooperative Alliance,

Taking note with satisfaction of the important recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General directed towards ensuring the best possible means of dealing with the issue of cooperatives in the light of their broad significance in contributing to the solution of major economic and social problems,

Welcoming the recommendation contained in paragraph 4 (a) of the report of the Secretary-General, and bearing in mind the substantial support shown by Governments and by the international cooperative movement for the idea of observing an international day of cooperatives,

Expressing its appreciation to government agencies, national organizations representing cooperatives, specialized agencies and other organizations, especially the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, for their valuable contribution,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly proclaim an international day of cooperatives to be observed on the first Saturday in July 1995, to mark the centenary of the International Cooperative Alliance, and that it consider the possibility of observing an international day in future years;

3. Encourages Governments to consider fully the potential of cooperatives for contributing to the solution of economic, social and environmental problems, in formulating national development strategies;

4. Encourages the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to redouble its efforts of support and coordination in order to achieve the social policy objectives set forth in the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future;

5. Invites government agencies, national organizations representing cooperatives, specialized agencies and other organizations, especially the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, to maintain and increase their programmes of support to the international cooperative movement, to the extent possible within existing resources;

6. Also invites, as it did in its resolution 1668(LII) of 1 June 1972, the specialized agencies that have a substantial interest in cooperatives, especially the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, as well as other organizations, especially the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and other concerned international organizations of cooperatives that are not yet members of the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, to become members at an early date in order to ensure its effectiveness by their contribution of appropriate resources;

7. Recommends that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General, to the extent possible within existing resources, to maintain and increase the support provided by the United Nations to the programmes and objectives of the international cooperative movement and, in his next report on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends, to indicate the progress made towards that goal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/90.

The role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/58 of 8 December 1989, in particular paragraph 4 thereof, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/25 of 30 July 1992,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends,

Recognizing the importance of the policy-oriented research being undertaken by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat concerning the relevance of cooperatives to the achievement of the social policy objectives set forth in the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, in the execution of which it acts as a focal point within the United Nations system,

Beating in mind that 1995 will mark the centenary of the establishment of the International Cooperative Alliance,

Taking note with satisfaction of the important recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General directed towards ensuring the best possible means of dealing with the issue of cooperatives in the light of their broad significance in contributing to the solution of major economic and social problems,

Welcoming the recommendation contained in paragraph 4 (a) of the report of the Secretary-General, and bearing in mind the substantial support shown by Governments and by the international cooperative movement for the idea of observing an international day of cooperatives,

Expressing its appreciation to government agencies, national organizations representing cooperatives, the specialized agencies and other organizations, especially the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, for their valuable contribution,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends;

2. Proclaims the first Saturday of July 1995 to be International Day of Cooperatives, marking the centenary of the establishment of the International Cooperative Alliance, and decides to consider the possibility of observing an international day of cooperatives in future years;

3. Encourages Governments to consider fully the potential of cooperatives for contributing to the solution of economic, social and environmental problems in formulating national development strategies;

4. Encourages the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to redouble its efforts of support and coordination in order to achieve the social policy objectives set forth in the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future;

5. Invites government agencies, national organizations representing cooperatives, the specialized agencies and other organizations, especially the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, to maintain and increase their programmes of support to the international cooperative movement, within existing resources;

6. Also invites, as the Economic and Social Council already did in its resolution 1668(LII) of 1 June 1972, the specialized agencies that have a substantial interest in cooperatives, especially the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and other organizations, particularly the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, as well as other relevant international organizations of cooperatives that are not yet members of the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, to become members at an early date in order to ensure its effectiveness by their contribution of appropriate resources;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to maintain and increase the support provided by the United Nations to the programmes and objectives of the international cooperative movement, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends, indicating in his report the progress made towards that goal.

Institutional machinery

Commission for Social Development

On 28 July, by decision 1992/266, the Economic and Social Council decided that the thirty-third session of the Commission for Social Development, which was to have been held at Vienna from 1 to 10 February 1993, would be held from 8 to 17 February 1993.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD), an autonomous institution within the United Nations system, was established to promote research on the social dimensions of development. During 1992 it carried out research on: the environment, sustainable development and social change; the social impact of crisis and adjustment policies; participation and changes in property relations in communist and post-communist societies; ethnic conflict and development; political violence and social movements; refugees, returnees and local society; the socio-economic and political impact of the production, trade and use of illicit narcotic drugs; and patterns of consumption as qualitative indicators of development.

UNRISD held a conference on the Social Dimensions of Environment and Sustainable Development (Valletta, Malta, 22 to 25 April), attended by 80 participants from 31 countries and 18 international and bilateral development agencies. A workshop on political violence and social movements (Geneva, 4-6 May) considered case studies from Colombia, Italy, Lebanon, Northern Ireland, Peru, South Africa, Spain, and Sri Lanka.

The UNRISD Board held its thirtieth session at Geneva on 6 and 7 July.

UNRISD published a number of books, monographs, and discussion papers during the year, as well as its newsletter, UNRISD News, in English, French and Spanish.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Commission on

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1992 (see below), held its first session at Vienna from 21 to 30 April.(14)

The Commission considered the implementation of the recommendations of the 1991 Ministerial Meeting on the creation of an effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice programme(15) to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice and prepare for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in 1995.

The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council adopt three draft resolutions on: the implementation of a 1991 Assembly resolution concerning operational activities and coordination in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;(16) organized crime; and preparations for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. (see below)

On 30 July, by decision 1992/274, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its first session and endorsed its adopted resolutions and decisions. The Council also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the second session of the Commission. On the same date, by decision 1992/275, the Council decided that its decision 1992/274, with regard to chapter I, sections A and B, of the report of the Commission, should also apply to section C of that report, containing Commission resolutions calling for action by the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/1 without vote.

Establishment of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

1. Adopts the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/152;

2. Decides:

(a) To dissolve the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

(b) To establish the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice as a functional commission of the Council, in accordance with the statement of principles and programme of action, paragraphs 23 to 26 of which contain the terms of reference of the Commission;

(c) To endorse the role and functions of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, in accordance with the statement of principles and programme of action;

(d) To invite the present members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to participate during the first two days of the inaugural session of the Commission, at the expense of their respective Governments, except in the case of Committee members from least developed countries, in order to facilitate an orderly transition.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/1

6 February 1992 Meeting 2 Adopted without vote
Draft by President (E/1992/L.12); agenda item 4.

By decision 1992/202, adopted on 7 February, the Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the first session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.(17) By decision 1992/201, of the same date, the Council decided that the Commission's first session would be held at Vienna from 21 to 30 April 1992.

On 3 March, the Commission on Human Rights requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution on the fraudulent enrichment of State officials to the attention of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

International cooperation

The Secretary General, in a March note,(18) submitted a summary of activities relating to international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice.

The note concluded that there was a disparity between the need for practical assistance and technical cooperation activities on the one side, and the availability of resources on the other. Further, the general crime situation, in its most dangerous forms and transnational dimensions, appeared to be deteriorating, thus compounding needs while resources were diminishing. It was of the utmost urgency to reverse that trend.

The addenda to the note of the Secretary-General presented the report of the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Strategies to Deal with Transnational Crime, Smolenice, Slovak Republic, 27-31 May 1991;(18) and the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Organized Crime, Suzdal, Russian Federation, 21-25 October 1990;(18) the International Expert Group Meeting for the Elaboration of a Model Treaty on the Transfer of Enforcement of Penal Sanctions, Siracusa, Italy, 3-8 December 1991;(18) and of the Meeting of Experts for the Evaluation of Implementation of United Nations Norms and Guidelines in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, Vienna, 14-16 October 1991.(18)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/22 without vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 46/152 concerning operational activities and coordination in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948, by which the United Nations was entrusted with leadership in promoting international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice and in making the fullest use of the knowledge and experience of national and international organizations which have an interest and competence in this field,

Recalling also its resolutions 1979/20 of 9 May 1979, 1984/48 of 25 May 1984 and 1990/24 of 24 May 1990, in which it requested the Secretary-General to explore new formulas for providing developing countries with technical cooperation, to develop concrete projects of technical cooperation and to promote education, training and public awareness in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Reaffirming its recommendation, contained in resolution 1990/19 of 24 May 1990, that the international community, working through bilateral or multilateral arrangements, should provide Member States, at their request, with necessary assistance, in order to contribute to the establishment of the infrastructure required for crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling its resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986, 1987/53 of 28 May 1987, 1988/44 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/68 of 24 May 1989, on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice, in which it called for intensified technical cooperation in this field,

Recalling also its resolutions 1989/63 of 24 May 1989 and 1990/21 of 24 May 1990, dealing with United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recognizing that many States suffer from extreme shortages of human and financial resources, which prevents them from adequately responding to problems related to crime,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by many States at the bilateral level to provide assistance and know-how in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Acknowledging the need for global efforts commensurate with the magnitude of national and transnational crime,

Bearing in mind that effective international action in crime prevention and criminal justice requires improved coordination of all related activities carried out by United Nations entities,

Recognizing that such improved coordination can only be effected through the continuous and close cooperation of all United Nations entities whose mandates are relevant to crime prevention and criminal justice,

Welcoming with appreciation Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/31 of 28 February 1992, and emphasizing that all Member States should recognize the fundamental importance of human rights in the daily administration of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Also welcoming with appreciation Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 11(XXXV) of 15 April 1992,

Desirous of assisting States in improving their capacity to face the challenge of criminality by fostering new courses of action and enhancing collaborative ties and assistance through mutually supportive partnerships between Member States and the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, and any regional or subregional United Nations institutes, the establishment of which may be necessary to achieve this goal,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/121 of 14 December 1990, in which the Assembly invited Member States to monitor systematically the steps being taken to ensure the coordination of efforts in the planning and implementation of effective and humane measures designed to reduce the social and economic costs of crime and its negative effects on the development process, as well as to continue to explore new avenues for international cooperation in this field,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in which the Assembly emphasized the practical orientation of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and decided that it should provide States with practical assistance, such as data collection, information and experience sharing, and training, in order to achieve the goals of preventing crime and of improving the response to it,

Bearing in mind the urgent and specific needs of the least developed countries in the field of training and in the upgrading and development of their human resources,

Convinced of the need to encourage constructive dialogue and collaboration between Governments, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and funding agencies, with a view to formulating practical operational plans and policies,

Emphasizing the direct relevance of crime prevention and criminal justice to sustained development, stability, security, democratic change and improved quality of life,

Bearing in mind that many developing countries are faced with a lack of skilled personnel, training opportunities and technological and material know-how and have a keen interest in technical cooperation, advisory services and other types of aid,

Determined to respond to the increasing requests from Governments for technical cooperation and advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recognizing that the Secretariat will be called upon to perform new tasks in order to service the annual sessions of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Convinced that operational activities and technical assistance should occupy a prominent place in the United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice, in the light of the recommendations of the Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, held in Paris from 21 to 23 November 1991,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Ministerial Meeting, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 46/152, the progress report of the Secretary-General on United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice, including detailed information on current programme budget and extrabudgetary activities of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the progress report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the note by the Secretary-General on strengthening existing international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, including technical cooperation in developing countries, with special emphasis on combating organized crime, and the note by the Secretary-General on the proposed revisions to programme 29 of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,

I

Strengthening the operational capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, especially operational activities and advisory services

1. Decides that, under the guidance of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the secretariat of the programme should be responsible for facilitating the planning, coordination and implementation of practical activities in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in close collaboration with Governments and interregional and regional institutes, specialized agencies, funding agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the activities of which should be promoted in this field;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session take favourable action on the proposals to be submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/152, relating to the strengthening of the programme;

3. Reaffirms the request of the General Assembly to the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to commit the human and financial resources necessary to strengthen the programme as a whole, with emphasis on designing, implementing and monitoring technical cooperation projects at the national, regional and subregional levels, so as to enable it:

(a) To devote greater attention to helping States requesting assistance, including those channelling requests through United Nations peace-keeping operations, to identify their crime prevention and criminal justice needs and address them through technical cooperation, particularly with regard to law reform within their legal systems, including the improvement of legislation and procedures, the elaboration of criminal codes, the improved planning and formulation of national policies concerning crime prevention and criminal justice strategies, the acceleration of human resources development in specialized fields, and to assisting with the practical implementation of United Nations standards, norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice;

(b) To contribute to the preservation and reinforcement of democracy and justice based on the rule of law, in its field of competence and in collaboration with all the entities of the United Nations system and other appropriate organizations, taking appropriate account of United Nations norms and standards concerning crime prevention, criminal justice, law enforcement and protection of victims, as well as means of conflict resolution and mediation;

(c) To plan, implement and evaluate crime prevention and criminal justice assistance projects and to serve as a facilitating agent and a dynamic operational tool with which to assist countries in preventing crime, promoting security, sustaining national development and enhancing justice and respect for human rights;

(d) To serve as a world-wide training network for developing countries with specific requirements by developing training schemes, including manuals and curricula, by organizing national, regional and cross-sectoral training courses, workshops and seminars on priority issues, tailoring their objectives to the needs of the recipient countries, and by developing fellowship programmes;

(e) To further develop clearing-house facilities in relation to crime prevention and criminal justice issues, including the capacity to match the needs for training with the opportunities available to meet them;

(f) To continue and improve the surveys of crime trends and the operation of criminal justice systems carried out periodically by the United Nations, as a means of obtaining and providing a cross-nationally updated picture of patterns and dynamics of crime in the world, including its transnational forms; to carry out the surveys at two-year intervals, with preparations for the next survey (1990-1992) commencing at the end of 1993, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme and, within their competence, in collaboration with interregional, regional and national crime prevention and criminal justice institutes; and to include provisions for the regular publication and dissemination of the surveys, starting with the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

(g) To strengthen the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network by inviting Governments, interregional and regional organizations, other relevant entities and the private sector to join and support the Network financially and logistically as a viable instrument for the dissemination and exchange of information and the transfer of knowledge for improved criminal justice management and more effective crime prevention;

(h) To promote policy-oriented research and studies on topics of interest to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as to individual member States or groups of member States;

(i) To determine, in cooperation with Governments and interregional and regional institutes, categories of crime prevention and criminal justice information to be supplied to and exchanged through the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network, taking into account priorities specified by the Commission, with a view to ensuring more effective functioning of the Network;

(j) To cooperate closely and directly with a variety of national, regional, interregional and international institutions and training agencies and develop a roster of experts in different disciplines with practical experience in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, as part of the clearing-house function or for such other purposes as the Commission may decide;

(k) To strengthen interregional and regional advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice, so as to ensure necessary feedback and follow-up action;

(l) To develop and implement the various activities of the programme, in accordance with the priorities recommended by the Commission;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, pursuant to the recommendations of the Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, to initiate the necessary consultations for the preparation of a report, to be considered by the Commission at its second session, setting out options and recommendations for the creation of an appropriate mechanism, such as a foundation, to mobilize human, financial and other resources to further technical cooperation.

II

Establishment of a subprogramme on operational activities, planning and overall coordination

1. Takes note of the proposed revisions to programme 29 of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, which reflect the programmatic changes resulting from the most recent relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, as well as the conclusions and recommendations of the Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

2. Recommends the establishment, within programme 29 of the medium-term plan, of a subprogramme on operational activities, planning and overall coordination, in response to paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 46/152 and the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to the resolution;

3. Invites the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to ensure proper follow-up to the recommendation in paragraph 2 of the present section;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect appropriately in the revised estimates to be submitted under section 21 of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 and in subsequent bienniums the changes resulting from the recommendation in paragraph 2 of the present section.

III

Involvement of Member States

1. Urges developed countries, as envisaged in General Assembly resolution 46/152, to strengthen their aid programmes and commit themselves to support technical assistance and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice in order to enhance the global commitment to improving justice and promoting human rights and the rule of law;

2. Invites Member States to establish reliable and effective channels of communication among themselves and with the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, including the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, the regional institutes and government-appointed national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, particularly with regard to the facilities available for training, the use of modern techniques to combat crime which are consistent with international human rights standards, the provision of fellowships, study tours and consultancies, and personnel and information exchanges;

3. Encourages Governments in need of technical assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to identify their specific needs and to avail themselves of the services provided by the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, as well as of those provided bilaterally, access to which should be facilitated by the United Nations Secretariat.

IV

Coordination of activities

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre for acting as host to the annual joint programme coordination meetings of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme network held in Saudi Arabia;

2. Notes that the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute reports to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and invites all other institutes referred to in paragraph 35 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/152 to submit, at future sessions of the Commission, statements outlining their programmes of work and the implementation thereof, with a view to assisting the Commission in facilitating the coordination of their activities;

3. Recommends that the following activities be undertaken by the Secretary-General:

(a) The promotion of arrangements for various types of exchanges within the programme network, in particular the secondment and exchange of staff;

(b) The collection of information, in particular research results and academic and scientific literature, and dissemination thereof to both professionals and the general public in order to permit the development and evaluation of measures and strategies for crime prevention and criminal justice and the identification of viable policy options for States of different regions;

(c) The development of field-level operations and other forms of direct collaborative activity designed to translate into practical action new policy perspectives, strategies and innovative techniques;

(d) The promotion of closer collaboration and continuing dialogue with Governments on matters of special concern;

(e) The coordination and integration of the activities of the interregional, regional and associate institutes cooperating with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

(f) The promotion of collaboration with and among research and training institutions around the world;

(g) The encouragement of Governments to appoint their national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to act as focal points and to foster effective communication and cooperation with the secretariat and other elements of the programme, including the interregional and regional institutes in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

(h) The development of criteria and procedures for the creation and affiliation of new United Nations institutes or centres that would be included among those referred to in paragraph 35 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/152, for consideration by the Commission at its second session, and the favourable review of requests by groups of States to establish United Nations subregional institutes;

4. Recognises the Commission as the principal policy-making body of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and requests it to coordinate, as appropriate, relevant activities in this field;

5. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to cooperate closely with the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Commission on the Status of Women, other bodies, including the International Law Commission, and the specialized agencies, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, whose activities may have crime prevention and criminal justice aspects, in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of United Nations activities in areas of mutual concern and to ensure proper coordination and avoidance of possible duplication;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, including, in particular, preparations for the World Conference on Human Rights and coordination of the various technical advisory services provided by both Centres, in order to undertake joint programmes and strengthen existing mechanisms for the protection of human rights in the administration of justice;

7. Approves the decision of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to authorize its secretariat to prepare concrete proposals on how such cooperation can most effectively be realized;

8. Urges the Commission to cooperate closely with, and to appropriately utilize the expertise, advocacy and assistance of, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the development and implementation of the programme on crime prevention and criminal justice;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage effective cooperation and coordination of relevant activities and to provide to the Commission all the assistance necessary to achieve this goal;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to assist the Commission in the setting of programme priorities:

(a) To conduct a survey of activities carried out in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice within the United Nations system;

(b) To conduct a survey of activities on priority themes identified in section VI, paragraph 1, below, carried out by relevant intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, including activities at the regional level;

(c) To prepare a report, based on an analysis of the information gathered through the surveys mentioned in subparagraphs (a) and (b), which outlines options relating to the priority themes, with their associated budget implications, for consideration by the Commission at its second session in connection with the development of its programme of work for the period 1992-1996;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Governments with the above-mentioned report sixty days in advance of the second session of the Commission.

Funding of operational activities

1. Reaffirms the crucial role of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in mobilizing the support of Member States for the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, as envisaged in paragraph 26 (d) of the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/152;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly consider arrangements for funding programme support, taking into account the practices elsewhere in the United Nations system;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to assist in mobilizing support for the programme and in undertaking vigorous fund-raising activities to strengthen particularly the operational capacity of its technical assistance and advisory services:

(a) By broadening the base of the financial support of the programme by approaching Governments, private foundations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, academic institutions and the private sector;

(b) By establishing collaborative relationships with the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, other United Nations funding agencies and regional development banks and by exploring innovative partnerships to finance joint technical assistance projects;

(c) By organizing special events that would bring together donor countries, recipient countries and funding agencies, with a view to strengthening the financial base of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, encouraging voluntary contributions in cash or in kind, and establishing an ongoing dialogue for more effective operational activities.

VI

Priorities

1. Determines that the following priority themes should guide the work of the Commission in the development of a detailed programme and the budget allocations for the period 1992-1996:

(a) National and transnational crime, organized crime, economic crime, including money laundering, and the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment;

(b) Crime prevention in urban areas, juvenile and violent criminality;

(c) Efficiency, fairness and improvement in the management and administration of criminal justice and related systems, with due emphasis on the strengthening of national capacities in developing countries for the regular collection, collation, analysis and utilization of data in the development and implementation of appropriate policies;

2. Recommends that in the course of the programme budget planning process, allocation should be made for special operational activities and advisory services in situations of urgent need and for programme organization, evaluation and reporting obligations;

3. Determines that in the areas noted in paragraph 1 of the present section, the objectives should be:

(a) To concentrate the majority of programme resources on the provision of training, advisory services and technical cooperation in a limited number of areas of recognized need, taking into account the need for technical assistance to developing countries, in order to achieve a synergetic effect, allowing intense and effective use of materials, resources and experience from both regular budgetary resources and voluntary contributions;

(b) In the case of special operational activities and advisory services in situations of urgent need, to offer timely and practical assistance to Governments, upon request, in situations that do not permit a problem to be adopted as a regular priority by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice; in implementing these special operational activities and advisory services, the Secretariat should place major emphasis on serving as a broker and clearing-house, providing advisory services and training to Member States from within existing budgetary resources and through voluntary contributions; the Secretariat should submit to the Commission at its second session a narrative and statistical report on the implementation of these special operational activities and advisory services, together with a statement of expenditure and any appropriate recommendations;

(c) With regard to programme organization, evaluation and reporting obligations, to assist the Commission in reaching agreement on the general goals of the programme and the needs to be met; to ascertain the capacity available to meet those needs; to determine the objectives, specific activities and mechanisms to be used for that purpose; to remain cognizant of pertinent developments and advise the Commission on them, and discharge other reporting responsibilities; and to mobilize support for the programme;

4. Invites the Commission to keep its priorities under review and to ensure that the programme developments related to the substantive preparations for the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders take those priorities into account;

5. Accords high priority to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/152, and requests an appropriate share of the overall resources of the United Nations for the programme.

VII

Follow-up

1. Urges the Department of Economic and Social Development of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme and other pertinent funding agencies and bodies to give full support to technical assistance projects in crime prevention and criminal justice and to encourage technical cooperation in this field among developed and developing countries;

2. Decides that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice shall include in its agenda, beginning with its second session, a standing item on technical assistance, which would deal with the most practical course of action to be followed to render the programme fully operational and enable it to respond to the specific needs of Governments, including financial needs, if possible;

3. Decides also that the Commission shall include in its agenda, beginning with its second session, a standing item on existing United Nations standards and norms in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, which serve as recommendations to Member States, and on, inter alia, their use and application;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, on the progress made in the implementation of the various provisions of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, acting on a recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/91.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the high costs of crime, particularly in its new and transnational forms, and by the dangers posed to individual and collective security and to the welfare of countries and peoples by the rising incidence of crime,

Emphasizing the need for global efforts commensurate with the magnitude of national and transnational crime, and for strengthened regional and international cooperation to combat crime in all its forms and to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of criminal justice systems,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and the promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Recognizing that many States suffer from extreme shortages of human and financial resources, which prevents them from responding adequately to problems related to crime,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by many States at the bilateral level to provide assistance and know-how in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Bearing in mind that effective international action in crime prevention and criminal justice requires effective cooperation and improved coordination of all related activities carried out at the bilateral and multilateral levels,

Recalling its previous resolutions in which it expressed its concern about the increasing needs of Member States and the capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme to meet them,

Recalling also the recommendations of the Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, held at Versailles, France, from 21 to 23 November 1991, which were adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, and which included the statement of principles and programme of action contained in the annex to the resolution,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/1 of 6 February 1992, by which the Council decided to establish the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Mindful of the responsibilities of the Commission, recommended by the Ministerial Meeting and entrusted to it by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in their relevant resolutions,

Recognising the need for an appropriate Secretariat support structure capable of performing the new functions mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/152 and by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992,

Concerned about the disparity between the scope of the required work and the limited resources available, including resources for practical measures, to assist Member States, upon their request, in dealing with their most urgent needs in preventing and combating crime problems,

1. Welcomes the establishment of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the results of its first session, held at Vienna from 21 to 30 April 1992;

2. Welcomes with appreciation Economic and Social Council resolutions 1992/22, 1992/23 and 1992/24 of 30 July 1992;

3. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the measures taken to implement the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, on the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and on the strengthening of international cooperation in combating organized crime;

4. Recognizes that the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme has a special contribution to make in a world seeking to surmount serious problems of violence and crime;

5. Recalls the priority themes established by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1992/22 to guide the work of the Commission in the development of a detailed programme and the budget allocations for the period 1992-1996, as follows:

(a) National and transnational crime, organized crime, economic crime, including money laundering, and the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment;

(b) Crime prevention in urban areas, juvenile and violent criminality;

(c) Efficiency, fairness and improvement in the management and administration of criminal justice and related systems, with due emphasis on the strengthening of national capacities in developing countries for the regular collection, collation, analysis and utilization of data in the development and implementation of appropriate policies;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to support the operational activities and advisory services of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, within existing resources from the regular budget of the Organization commensurate to its high priority and importance, and independently of resources available through voluntary contributions;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide from existing resources adequate funds to build and maintain the institutional capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme to respond to requests of Member States for assistance in this field;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to take all measures necessary to effect the upgrading of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat into a division, as recommended in and in accordance with resolution 46/152;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures for assisting the Commission in performing its functions as the principal policy-making body in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and for ensuring the proper coordination of all relevant activities in the field, in particular with the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

10. Invites the relevant funding agencies of the United Nations to consider including crime prevention and criminal justice activities in their funding programmes, bearing in mind their established priorities, at a level of priority commensurate to the increasing needs of Member States in the field, and to cooperate closely with the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in planning and implementing those activities;

11. Invites Governments to lend their full support to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to increase their financial contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund.

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/703) without vote, 5 November (meeting 30); 27-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.19), orally revised; agenda item 93 (b). Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belarus, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Egypt, France, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, Italy, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Russian Federation, Trinidad and Tobago, Ukraine, Uruguay, Venezuela. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 11-18, 22, 23, 25, 30; plenary 89.

Organized crime

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1989 General Assembly resolution,(19) submitted a September report(20) to the Assembly on the strengthening of international cooperation in combating organized crime. The report covered the nature and extent of the problem, some recent initiatives, and proposals for follow-up to the Assembly resolution.

The report concluded that, although practically all countries were aware that organized crime posed a threat to their social fabric, full cooperation remained an intention rather than a reality. The most obvious difficulty in this respect was the existence of different legal systems and definitions of crime, accompanied by overly restrictive concepts of sovereignty and jurisdiction.

Money laundering

The Secretary-General submitted a March report(21) to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on money laundering and associated issues: the need for international cooperation. The report contained an overview of national and international initiatives against money laundering, and a comparative analysis of various approaches to the problem. The report noted that the impact of criminal sanctions alone on criminal organizations was limited and that a more effective alternative could be to follow their money trail. Money-laundering investigations and the confiscation of proceeds from criminal activities undermined the ability of a criminal organization to perform its main task, the production of wealth.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/23.

Organized crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Alarmed by the rapid growth and geographical extension of organized crime in its various forms, both nationally and internationally,

Concerned about the menace that these developments represent to social stability, economic development, democratic institutions and legitimate business,

Aware that the transnational nature of a large portion of the activities of organized crime requires the intensification of technical and scientific cooperation, as indicated on several occasions by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Recognizing the importance of initiatives taken in this area by the Committee,

Recalling that the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1989/70 of 24 May 1989, called upon Governments, international organizations and interested non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Committee in promoting international cooperation in combating organized crime,

Recalling also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 44/71 of 8 December 1989, requested the Committee to consider ways of strengthening international cooperation in combating organized crime and to submit its views, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session,

Recalling further that the General Assembly, in its resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989, requested the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to propose control measures aimed at eradicating the activities of organized crime,

Noting that the Eighth Congress, in its resolution 24, adopted the Guidelines for the prevention and control of organized crime,

Noting also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 45/121 of 14 December 1990, welcomed the instruments and resolutions adopted by the Eighth Congress and invited Governments to be guided by them in the formulation of appropriate legislation and policy directives,

Noting further that the General Assembly, also in its resolution 45/121, endorsed the decision of the Eighth Congress that priority attention should be given to specific practical measures to combat international crime over the forthcoming five-year period,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Strategies to Deal with Transnational Crime, held at Smolenice, Czechoslovakia, from 27 to 31 May 1991, formulated important recommendations in this area,

Noting also that the International Seminar on Organized Crime, held at Suzdal, Russian Federation, from 21 to 25 October 1991, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 45/123 of 14 December 1990, formulated practical measures against organized crime, aimed at enhancing the struggle against the different manifestations of organized crime,

Reaffirming that priority must be given to the struggle against all activities of organized crime, including money laundering, the infiltration of legitimate business and the corruption of public officials,

1. Takes note of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Strategies to Deal with Transnational Crime, held at Smolenice, Czechoslovakia, and the practical measures against organized crime, formulated by the International Seminar on Organized Crime, held at Suzdal, Russian Federation, contained in annexes I and II to the present resolution, and offers them for consideration by Governments in their efforts to enhance the struggle against organized crime, both nationally and internationally;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the analysis of information on the impact of organized criminal activities upon society at large, including data on the nature, extent, forms and dimensions of organized crime, on legislative measures and the promotion of international cooperation aimed at controlling organized crime, with special emphasis on economic crimes and the laundering of illicit funds, and on judicial practice as regards cases involving organized crime, with a view to keeping the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice informed;

3. Invites Member States to give favourable consideration to the organization of practice-oriented workshops, research projects and training programmes to deal with specific aspects of organized criminal activities, with a view to exchanging ideas concerning law enforcement methods for control of those activities, which have proved to be both effective and consistent with the concept of respect for human rights.

ANNEX I

Recommendations of the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Strategies to Deal with Transnational Crime, held at Smolenice, Czechoslovakia, from 27 to 31 May 1991

The following recommendations were drawn up by the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Strategies to Deal with Transnational Crime for the attention of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Creation of an Effective International Crime and Justice Programme and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its twelfth session. They are drawn from the discussions of the substantive agenda items, as well as from the papers presented by experts and the United Nations or United Nations-affiliated institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders:

1. The process of studying and combating transnational crime and crimes with transnational aspects should take into account a number of factors, such as the considerable changes in the political, economic and social situation in the world and the extensive development of international business activities, including the creation of common markets and other forms of integration. It should also take into account the vulnerability of national frontiers, the high level of modern communication, the expansion of the international banking system and resultant simplification of money transfer, the extensive use of computer technology, the universal spread of illegal business in arms and explosives, the growth in the number of enterprises producing and using radioactive and chemical substances and the extensive use of such substances, and the limited geographical reach of national laws and national law enforcement authorities, differences in legal systems, and the limited effect of international procedures for obtaining evidence, apprehension and extradition of offenders.

2. In view of the political and economic changes taking place in many countries, including the newly emerging "market economies", new laws and regulations should be developed to permit anticipation of, and response to, changing situations and emerging economic realities. Exchanges of information on, and experiences with, economic crime and its control by criminal sanctions should be intensified. Due consideration should be given to regulatory mechanisms as essential complements to penal sanctions.

3. In view of the increasing seriousness and gravity of organized crime, terrorism and other transnational crimes, Governments should be encouraged to conclude bilateral and multilateral agreements to carry out or enhance the effectiveness of extradition proceedings and mutual assistance in criminal matters, using as a basis United Nations model treaties and other treaties and agreements concluded at the regional and international levels. The role of regional and subregional intergovernmental organizations in supporting the United Nations in this field would be essential. Appropriate coordination mechanisms should be established and maintained.

4. Countries should consider establishing a national organization with powers to plan and coordinate the domestic criminal justice and crime prevention programme. The composition of this organization should include representatives of the various relevant sectors of Government and the community.

5. Countries should agree to share information and intelligence on non-controversial matters. To facilitate such exchanges, countries should establish national databases with linkage to all other countries. A technical committee should be set up to overview these activities.

6. Countries should study the practices on extradition prevailing in certain regional groups, for example the Council of Europe. This could help to eliminate the difficulties associated with the technical requirements that are the main obstacles to extradition being granted.

7. National and international efforts to achieve more effective strategies to deal with transnational crime should focus on:

(a) Harmonization of legislation and avoidance of conflicts of jurisdiction that may result in serious transnational offenders escaping justice;

(b) Penalization of certain forms of behaviour to eliminate gaps in national legislation;

(c) Cooperation through extradition, mutual assistance, enforcement of foreign judgements, transfer of criminal proceedings, transfer of offenders, including designation of an appropriate coordinating authority to expedite the implementation of treaties;

(d) Integration of the various modalities of international cooperation to provide better and more efficient results;

(e) Reassessment of traditional principles of international cooperation, such as reciprocity, double criminality, specialty, the political offence exception and the non-extradition of nationals and territoriality;

(f) A lessening of the divergence of national conceptions of criminal justice, including substantive law and procedural rules and practices, with due respect for human rights considerations;

(g) The sharing of law enforcement intelligence (information) and the increase of joint activities in inter-State law enforcement collaboration;

(h) The development of effective financial mechanisms to trace the proceeds of illicit activities;

(i) The development of subregional or regional "judicial spaces", with a view to exploring the possibilities for their expansion, in accordance with particular and specific emerging needs;

(j) The inclusion of international and transnational crimes in national legislation, in particular with a view to eliminating safe havens;

(k) The development of the means to prevent, detect and prosecute abuses of power by public officials and other forms of corrupt behaviour;

(l) The development of education and training programmes in international criminal law at the level of legal education, as well as within public agencies;

(m) The development of specialized education and training of judges, prosecutors and law enforcement officials in the areas of transnational crime, money laundering and other economic offences, including corruption, and elaboration of the required training material;

(n) The development of regional centres to increase the availability of specialized library material, documents and research results, with the capacity to provide technical legal advice to countries of the region;

(o) Acceptance of the principle that all countries, regardless of how seriously they are affected by transnational crime, have to collaborate and share information on its nature and extent, to facilitate appropriate policy formulation and planning;

(p) The development of interfaces with existing international and regional networks such as the International Criminal Police Organization (ICPO/Interpol) and other international bodies;

(q) Strengthening of an awareness on the part of Governments and relevant national agencies of the important correlation between socio-economic development and crime control programmes, with ap-appropriate budget and resource allocations, including international aid for crime prevention schemes.

8. Efforts should be pursued to formulate effective strategies for dealing with environmental offences. An assessment of the administrative, civil and criminal laws enforced by different countries should be made in order to identify gaps and propose appropriate remedies. Adequate attention should be given not only to the sanctioning strategies but also to the prevention of environmental abuse and the protection of the environment.

9. Efforts should be made to allow the widest possible distribution of information on stolen art objects so as to prevent their illegal sale, thereby effectively stemming the international traffic in movable cultural property.

10. In order to benefit from both successes achieved and failures, an assessment should be made of the results of cooperation already undertaken to prevent the use of the banking system and financial institutions for money laundering, including successful preventive measures. Initiatives such as the development by the Council of Europe of the Convention on Laundering, Search, Seizure and Confiscation of the Proceeds from Crime, which was opened for signature on 8 November 1990, should be encouraged and efforts should be pursued to develop a multilateral agreement with universal application. The model decree for confiscation is a very practical model, which could prove extremely useful in such an application. A detailed analysis of its provisions is available from the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat.

11. Efforts should be made to gather information on corruption and anti-corruption strategies, with a view to assisting Governments in combating corruption and in providing a basis for formulating more effective policies to deal with it. Emphasis should be placed on the formulation of curricula for anti-corruption training courses, benefiting, in particular, developing countries. In addition to research, training and technical assistance in the most advanced methods of corruption control through repression, equal attention should be paid to prevention and education. The efforts of independent commissions against corruption can be useful in devising controls in public administration and in increasing public intolerance for waste and corruption. In its resolution 7, the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders specifically requested the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat to provide assistance for such outreach, requested the Secretary-General to publish in all the official languages the manual on practical measures against corruption, which had already been prepared, and requested the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to develop a draft international code of conduct for public officials for submission to the Ninth Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

12. Recognizing that, while bilateral and regional cooperation may provide mechanisms for specific arrangements to prevent or investigate certain types of transnational criminality, they cannot provide a comprehensive solution in matters of cooperation in combating serious forms of organized crime at the international level. Multilateral cooperation should be made more effective, through the United Nations, which has the general mandate and the international constituency necessary to provide countries with guidance and assistance in the prevention and control of transnational crime. This could be pursued in the context of a genuinely international crime and justice programme, which would be capable of responding to the challenges of such crime.

13. United Nations surveys on crime trends should also include information on trends in transnational crime in order to permit an in-depth analysis of its scale, structure and dynamic, and of the extent of its material cost and potential social consequences. In the further development of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network, attention should be paid to the setting up of databases on transnational crime.

14. The idea of establishing a world foundation on crime prevention and assistance to victims of transnational crime should be pursued. The proposed foundation could help to identify and mobilize financial resources in support of the implementation of international crime prevention and criminal justice programmes, raise public awareness about crime trends and the rights of victims, develop innovative means of responding to technical assistance needs and provide financial support to victims.

15. The United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme should aim at developing the new mechanisms, procedures, conventions and institutions necessary to combat crime with transnational aspects and dimensions and to assist Governments in reducing domestic crime. For example:

- (a) This could, in particular, include assistance to countries in:
 - (i) Gathering information on, and analysing, the incidence of crime and the efficacy of the response to crime;
 - (ii) Preventing crime and helping victims of crime;
 - (iii) Enhancing the criminal justice process through improved methods for the investigation of crime and developing pre-trial, trial and appellate review procedures;
 - (iv) Improving the administration of sentences and the reintegration of offenders into society and the control of recidivism;
- (b) On the international level, the mandates should include:

- (i) The drafting of international conventions, declarations and recommendations pertaining to the definition of international offences;
- (ii) The enhancement of existing cooperative mechanisms and the development of new ones, including such mechanisms as mutual assistance and extradition;
- (iii) The organization of trainee programmes for developing countries;
- (iv) The drafting of model penal provisions dealing with selected offences;
- (c) The mandate should further include the development and encouragement of coordinated subregional, regional and international activities from the investigative to the adjudicative stages, including ascertainment of the practicality of establishing subregional and regional penal tribunals with transferred jurisdiction, in order to meet more effectively the problems of particularly severe domestic crime and of crime transcending national frontiers;
- (d) Consideration should also be given to coordination by the United Nations of cooperative arrangements at the bilateral level, including the exchange of crime prevention and criminal justice personnel, such as police officers at different levels, who could in this manner conduct comparative studies in the area of criminal investigations into drug-trafficking and other similar activities. In addition, criminal justice attachés at embassies and consulates could help one another to reach a better understanding of laws and court processes and procedures of their countries. This could be a very useful means of facilitating effective cooperation with respect to transnational crimes involving different countries;
- (e) The United Nations government-appointed national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice should become more operational. Ideally, their functions should be coordinated by an office or individual in an agency or institution with responsibilities in the criminal justice systems of the countries; this would permit them to ensure that action was taken when necessary and to respond accurately and with authority to United Nations inquiries;
- (f) Technical cooperation, particularly at the regional and subregional levels, should be intensified through the development of technical assistance projects benefiting developing countries. Special consideration should be given to the strengthening of the operational capacity of the crime prevention and criminal justice programme and its interregional advisory services, to ensure that the most recent developments in modern technology and expertise are placed at the disposal of all Member States. Efforts should also be made to create regional advisers on crime prevention and criminal justice to provide services to the respective regions, in close contact with the regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;
- (g) The United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme of work should be coor-ordinated with that of ICPO/Interpol and other relevant organizations.

ANNEX II

Practical measures against organized crime, formulated by the International Seminar on Organized Crime, held at Suzdal, Russian Federation, from 21 to 25 October 1991

1. The International Seminar on Organized Crime, which was attended by leading law enforcement officials and experts from 15 Countries, the United Nations Secretariat, the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, the International Criminal Police Organization (ICPO/Interpol) and the Office of International Criminal Justice of the University of Illinois at Chicago, United States of America, formulated the following practical measures against organized crime, which are based on a distillation of their considerable experience in its prevention and control. The applicability of these measures depends on particular legal and judicial systems, on the availability of resources and on the specific manifestations of organized crime.

I. Profile of organized criminal groups

2. The evolution of organized crime and the forms it takes vary from country to country, although there are common features. The formation of criminal associations is influenced by various social, economic and legal factors. It is, however, possible to single out two basic ways in which organized crime evolves in the majority of countries. These are: involvement in illegal activities (such as property offences, money laundering, drug trafficking, currency violations, intimidation, prostitution, gambling and trafficking in arms and antiquities) and participation in the legal economic sphere (directly or through parasitic means such as extortion). Such participation always tends to use illegal competitive means and can be of greater economic impact than the involvement in entirely illegal activities. In both cases criminal methods are used because the backbone of organized criminal formations is composed of criminal elements.

3. No uniform definition of organized crime has yet been developed. In essence, however, it is usually understood as being a relatively large group of continuous and controlled criminal entities that carry out crimes for profit and seek to create a system of protection against social control by illegal means such as violence, intimidation, corruption and large-scale theft. A more general description would be "any group of individuals organized for the purpose of profiting by illegal means on a continuing basis".

4. Organized crime can be divided into many types. One such type is the traditional or the Mafia-style family, where structured hierarchies, internal rules, discipline, codes of behaviour and diversity in illegal activities are common practice. Included in such organizations are the largest and most developed types of criminal groups, involved in a multiplicity of illegal activities. Another type is the professional. Members of such organizations join together for a certain criminal venture. Such organizations are fluid and not as rigidly structured as those of the traditional type. They are exemplified by entities involved in counterfeiting, car theft, armed robbery, extortion and so forth. The composition of a professional criminal organization may be constantly changing and its members may be involved in a variety of similar criminal enterprises. In addition, there are many organized groups that dominate particular territories, and others that are involved in particular types of crime.

5. There are also organized crime groups divided on the basis of ethnic, cultural and historical ties. These ties link them to their countries of origin, thus forming a major network extending beyond national borders. Exploiting the features of their origins, such as language and customs, they are able to insulate themselves from the actions of law enforcement agencies. Many organized crime groups have significant ethnic or national components and are often commonly referred to by ethnic or national labels. Because of their prevalence and the lack of a practical alternative, these labels are used in the present document, even though such terminology involves oversimplification, risks stereotyping and can be offensive to the vast majority of law-abiding members of that ethnic group or nationality.

6. Identification of these types of organized criminal groups does not necessarily imply rigid borderlines between them. Nearly every organized criminal entity may involve a multiplicity of component features. New forms involving different elements frequently arise. Some countries, for example, have seen the emergence of urban street formations, including juvenile gangs. Organized crime is, indeed, very adaptable; it is often characterized by rapid adaptation of the forms of its activities to the national criminal justice policy and to the protective mechanisms of States. Its leaders are often individuals of great intelligence and extreme cruelty, and are true professionals in crime, making them a particular threat to society.

7. Organized crime produces social, political and economic evils. Among the social evils are the adverse effects of illegal drugs on the behaviour and health of individuals, the growth of violence involving firearms, the fear of crime, manipulation and control of bodies such as labour unions and the increased cost of purchasing goods and services. For example, in one highly developed country, the largest organized crime group has controlled four of that nation's labour unions.

8. The political effects can include infiltration into and influence over political parties and the apparatus of government, including local administrations, and corruption of politicians and state officials. This often leads to a loss of public confidence in the Government and the political process and a breakdown of consensus within society. Many countries report that members of their police forces and armed forces have been corrupted by drug traffickers. Also, assassinations of government officials, judges, mayors and law enforcement officials in certain countries have alarmed public opinion throughout the world.

9. It is not possible to identify accurately or even to estimate all the economic consequences of organized crime. It infiltrates legitimate business, tainting all those with whom it comes into contact, as well as corrupting officials whose services are required to launder illicit profits. In some countries, the profits of organized crime can be compared to those of entire branches of industry; for example, the trade in illegal drugs has been estimated to be the second largest industry in the world, by value of goods. The income of organized crime groups equals the gross national product of many countries.

10. The ability of organized crime to generate a vast supply of capital, to infiltrate legitimate business and to ruin rivals by means of control over prices represents a serious threat to the very future of any society. Legitimate commerce can be undermined by the shadow economy, with all the political and social dangers following that process. The large illicit sums infiltrating the world economy affect a country's balance of payments, the monetary system, bank cooperation, the profitability of private firms and the prices of consumer goods and services.

11. The cooperation between the largest organized criminal entities and the growing internationalization of organized crime may create a system with such economic strength that it poses a threat that many countries would not be able to counteract on their own.

II. Substantive legislation

12. In practically all countries, those engaged in the illegal activities of organized criminal entities are subject to criminal liability in accordance with various laws which establish certain offences, or within the framework of common law in particular categories of crimes. Long experience in organized crime control has led many countries to adopt specific statutes designed to restrict the possibilities for organized crime to flourish. These statutes are both preventive and repressive. Evidence-gathering presents considerable difficulties and there are limits to the application of sanctions and measures against the illegal activities of those involved. Legislation should be kept under review in order to ensure that it is responsive to changing circumstances.

13. It is very important that penal statutes should provide a means of establishing the criminal liability of both the actual perpetrators of a crime and the leaders of criminal entities (who are usually not directly involved in a specific crime). Unless criminal liability of the leadership or membership of criminal entities is established, it will only be possible to prosecute the lower rank of criminals, and not those who control them.

14. The danger and scope of organized crime are considerable. In some countries it may be considered advisable to enact legislation that has a direct impact on the crimes committed by members of organized crime enterprises. Such legislation would be directed not against any specific criminal act but against all serious crimes committed in a concerted manner by a group of individuals acting together for a common purpose. It may also be considered advisable to enact legislation prohibiting membership in a criminal association. It is advisable to specify in such legislation the elements of the offences committed by organized criminals and the factors that aggravate their seriousness.

15. To counteract effectively the laundering of proceeds of crime it is important that all countries adopt norms for banking and financial institutions and establish criminal liability in order to enable them to comply with the provisions of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, of 1988. Other instruments not limited to drug trafficking, such as regional conventions and model regulations, may also be of value.

16. One approach is to create an obligation to report to competent bodies every financial transaction in excess of an amount stipulated by the legislation, or an obligation to report every suspicious transaction. The establishment of criminal liability in case of failure to abide by such obligations will be of great assistance in combating money laundering. A proper inquiry into particularly suspicious transactions can be initiated on the basis of reports received, and reports can be used by investigators seeking to piece together how a criminal organization handles its flow of money. The reports also can serve the important function of corroborating the testimony of cooperating witnesses and they may bring to the attention of investigators a geographical region that has suddenly shown an increase in sizeable financial transactions (indicating that the area may have become the object of organized crime activities), or a bank where there have been suspicious developments in financial transactions. Appropriate international mechanisms should be developed for the exchange of such information.

17. The success of efforts to combat the laundering of "black money" directly depends on how accessible the activities of financial bodies are to the law enforcement agencies. The problem here is that opening up the activities of the financial bodies of any country to outside scrutiny can affect their competitive position. The activities of organized crime can, however, undermine an entire society. Furthermore, the money derived from organized crime often circulates through the same channels as money concealed from the taxation authorities. In view of this, it is vital for the banks to maintain records of the identity of their clients, and to cooperate with law enforcement agencies whenever there are suspicious deposits or other transactions. It may be necessary to strengthen mechanisms of control over banking operations and even to centralize information of this kind. Governments should encourage banks to take as much responsibility as possible for the controls on criminality.

18. At present, money laundering is considered a crime in some countries only. This gives international organized crime the chance to benefit by using the banking and other services of countries that lack such legislation. All countries should therefore include in their criminal codes a crime of "money laundering", in accordance with the provisions of article 3 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. Consideration should be given to ensuring that such legislation embraces all proceeds of organized crime.

19. Corruption greatly facilitates the activities of organized criminal groups. In view of this, many countries have enacted special anti-corruption legislation. The fight against organized crime would be greatly assisted if all countries were to follow the anti-corruption recommendations adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and make appropriate use of the manual on practical measures against corruption approved at that Congress. It is important that countries take steps to prevent organized crime groups from corrupting individuals and organizations in the economic and financial sectors, particularly in such areas as State contracts and trade services.

20. A crime committed by an organized group may be considered an aggravated one. The criminal codes of many countries define the commission of a crime by an organized group as a qualifying feature.

21. In addition to the traditional sanctions of incarceration or fines that may be imposed upon conviction, consideration should be given to other sanctions designed to deter organized criminality. Some countries use judicially imposed limitations on property, residence, association and daily activities of persons formally adjudged to be criminally dangerous, often taking past convictions into account. The granting of licences and public contracts may be conditional on the absence of criminal connections and proof of good reputation. Individuals and legal entities engaged in economic or financial activities involving great risk to the public, for example deposit-taking institutions or those that deal with toxic waste, should be subject to sufficiently severe and sufficiently enforced regulation to prevent wrongdoing, in particular since penal punishments rarely provide proper compensation for victims. Particular attention must be paid to the deterrence and punishment of misconduct by legal entities, such as multinational and other corporations. Individual executives may frequently be beyond national jurisdiction and personal responsibility may be difficult to establish. Criminal punishment of the entity itself, by fine or by forfeiture of property or legal rights, is used in some jurisdictions against corporate misconduct.

22. Crimes committed for economic gain can be successfully countered by the forfeiture of such gains and of any other assets of the individuals and organization involved. In some legal systems, great significance is attributed to the freezing, seizure and confiscation of assets related to illegal activity. The need for more effective organized crime control makes it necessary to regard forfeiture as a strategic weapon, an economic method of discouraging organized crime activities and the means of eliminating the financial advantages of such anti-social activities.

23. The procedures for freezing, seizure and confiscation should be broad in their scope and permit the confiscation of a wide range of assets of an offender. The State should be able to eliminate all gain to offenders from their criminal activity. A subsidiary benefit of such action is that law enforcement agencies may be allowed to use confiscated assets or funds to further the activities of the agency. This can be a powerful incentive. International agreements may provide for the sharing of such assets.

24. In dealing with organized crime, it is appropriate to have the following types of assets subject to confiscation: (a) any property constituting the proceeds of organized criminal actions and any assets obtained with the help of these proceeds; and (b) any property used or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit or facilitate the commission of a crime by an organized group, including land, buildings and other private property.

25. Consideration may be given to allowing certain evidentiary rules to be used in the procedures for confiscation of the assets of criminals involved in organized crime. For example, if it is proved that defendants had acquired assets during the time they were committing offences for which they had been convicted, and there is no other likely method by which they could have acquired the assets, then it may be reasonably inferred that the assets are the proceeds of crime. In the drafting of legislation related to such confiscation, whether preventive or repressive, the liberty and property rights of individuals must be protected in accordance with national constitutional principles.

III. Procedural legislation

26. In many countries criminal procedures oblige the court, prosecutor, investigator and police, as appropriate, to carry out investigations within their power whenever there are indications that a crime has been committed. There may, however, be discretionary powers that allow the law enforcement agencies to choose not to investigate a crime or to initiate a prosecution. Where this discretion exists it is often used by investigators when working with informants from criminal circles. Its use requires a high degree of professional responsibility on the part of investigators. Legal systems should be encouraged to recognize the possibility, in some cases, of granting minor criminals immunity from prosecution for their acts, for the purpose of disclosing the leaders of organized criminal groups.

27. The criminal laws of many countries specify the elements that must be established to prove that an offence has been committed. These may include: the act of committing a crime; the defendant's guilt and motives for the crime; any aggravating or extenuating circumstances, including the defendant's record, and the nature and amount of damage inflicted by the crime. Evaluation of the evidence is carried out by the official performing the investigation, the prosecutor, and finally by the court. In practice, there is no difference in the standard of evidence required in respect of crimes committed by organized crime groups against other crimes.

28. Deciding on the verdict must remain a task for the authority exercising judicial powers over serious offences committed by organized crime. In doing so, the principle of the presumption of innocence must be followed.

29. The experience of many countries suggests that it may be advantageous to use information obtained with the help of electronic surveillance, undercover agents, controlled delivery of drugs, the testimony of accomplices and other methods of preliminary investigation as evidence. The acceptability of such methods of preliminary investigation should be limited by strict observance of legal requirements and criminal procedural principles.

30. The use of the testimony of accomplices can be extremely helpful in prosecutions involving organized crime. Careful assessment and use of such testimony can enable the law enforcement process to penetrate the layers of secrecy that are characteristic of criminal organizations and would otherwise protect them from prosecution. Some countries also find it advantageous to enact legislation obliging witnesses to testify truthfully and providing for sanctions if they refuse to do so.

31. The restriction of the liberty of the defendant prior to conviction is frequently allowed by law when there are specified grounds. The main form of such restriction of liberty prior to conviction is pre-trial detention. This can be considered if it is appropriate in view of the seriousness of the case and the possible sentence upon conviction and for other reasons such as the possibility that the defendant will seek to evade justice or has tried to escape, the possibility of concealment of evidence, or the possibility that the defendant will commit further offences or otherwise be a danger to the community.

32. It may be appropriate to have conditional release provisions, so that a defendant who has been accused of an offence could be released upon the payment of a certain sum of money unless the judicial authorities believe that pre-trial detention is necessary. The question whether a criminal may be released on bail should normally be a matter for a judicial or other competent body but the financial resources of an organized criminal often make release inexpedient. The appropriateness of granting conditional release and other benefits in cases of organized criminality must be evaluated with regard to the criminal record of the accused and the gravity of the accusation.

33. Provisions for the protection of witnesses are of great importance in combating organized crime. It is therefore recommended that national systems of criminal justice pay close attention to provisions, programmes and any legislation aimed at providing for the security of a witness. In particular, they should consider adopting measures for the protection of witnesses that allow for the relocation and change of identity of those witnesses, along with their physical protection if a threat is posed by a defendant and the defendant's associates. This can necessitate making arrangements to provide the witnesses with documents enabling them (and their families) to establish a new identity, with temporary housing, providing for the transportation of household furniture and other personal belongings to a new location, subsistence payments, assisting them in obtaining employment, and providing other necessary services to help the witnesses to lead a full and normal life. In considering the type of protection to be provided, the financial circumstances of a country must be taken into account. In addition, provision should be made for the safe custody of incarcerated witnesses, including separate accommodation. Legislation may also be necessary to deal with the practical problems that can arise in connection with relocated witnesses, such as child custody disputes and crimes committed in the witnesses' new identities.

IV. Law enforcement methods

34. If effective action is to be taken against organized criminal, the law enforcement authorities need to be able to predict and detect organized criminal activity. This requires the systematic collection and analysis of all relevant information from all sources in order to make it possible to produce and use intelligence for both strategic and tactical purposes. The methods employed for the collection and utilization of such information may be authorized and controlled by legislation. Even so, it is important that the technical facilities and techniques that the law enforcement authorities are allowed to use should always be sophisticated enough to enable them to match those employed by organized crime.

35. The production of intelligence requires the collection, collation and analysis of a wide range of information on the persons and organizations suspected of being involved in organized criminal activity, often including information that at first sight is not directly related to organized crime. There may be no rigid borderline between strategic and tactical intelligence but the main aim of tactical intelligence is to help in the planning of particular police operations and to identify the sources for obtaining the evidence that makes it possible to arrest a suspect and to prove guilt. Trained intelligence analysis greatly increases the effective application of law enforcement intelligence. It is important to note that there is often a need to continue the collection of information at all appropriate stages of the legal process. Intelligence should always be collected in such a manner that, even years later, it can be retrieved and used as evidence.

36. Where resources permit, computerized information systems may be of particular benefit in combating organized crime. Computers should be used to store information both on the persons and organizations suspected of being involved in organized criminal activity and on the crimes committed or being planned. Where there are different law enforcement agencies collecting information on organized crime, arrangements need to be made to allow an exchange of information, for example between local and national (or federal) authorities, and between local police forces in different areas. Careful attention must be paid to the compatibility of computerized systems, and the convertibility of manual systems to computerized systems. Creation of a centralized data bank may be appropriate in some countries. This information can be shared internationally on the basis of agreements. Technical assistance in criminal intelligence systems may be of mutual benefit to developing and developed countries.

37. Particular attention should be paid to information from confidential police sources, including prisoners. Further important intelligence will come from other sources, however, including open sources and international liaison. In particular, financial and taxation bodies, when permitted to do so, may be of great assistance in organized crime control, as they frequently find themselves directly in contact with organized groups when these groups seek to use the proceeds of criminal activity. Legislative inquiries and official and public records may also be of value. An essential resource in the effective investigation of organized crime is the capability to collect complicated financial and commercial information and present it in an intelligible manner as evidence. Information concerning forfeitable assets should also be collected, so that such property can be forfeited and made available for police use.

38. The infiltration of organized crime into legal enterprises and any contacts it may make in political circles can create a superficial respectability, facilitate corruption and be used by criminals to hinder investigation of their activities. Therefore, law enforcement agencies, when collecting various data on the criminal activity of a particular person or organization, should try to obtain the most comprehensive intelligence picture possible. Law enforcement agencies should adopt a range of measures, which may include the following:

- (a) Developing intelligence, through informants, searches and other techniques, to uncover large-scale organized criminal enterprises;
- (b) Determining the factors and conditions that facilitate the development of organized criminal activity;

(c) Providing for centralized collection, storage and analysis of information (including use of criminal organization charts) and for the tactical application of such information;

(d) Ensuring cooperation with law enforcement authorities and other bodies involved, using a multi-agency approach;

(e) Studying the experience of other countries in organized crime control;

(f) Developing, on the basis of the above factors, an integral criminal policy of legislation, allocation of resources and mobilization of public support.

39. To lift the veil of secrecy, conspiracy and fear-induced silence of possible witnesses, as well as to understand how the criminal communities function, who directs their activity, where their illegal income is channelled and so on, it is recommended that law enforcement bodies of all countries collect intelligence and evidence of criminal activities by undercover means. With the right safeguards, secret operations directed against organized crime can be conducted effectively through the use of undercover agents and informants, often in conjunction with the use of technical facilities to intercept and to record conversations the contents of which may facilitate the disclosure of crimes. These techniques may include wire-taps, surveillance by means of closed-circuit systems, night vision equipment etc., as well as video and audio recording of ongoing events. In some jurisdictions, such technical surveillance may be used only if other mechanisms of investigation have failed or there is no reason to think that they will lead to the desired results, or if other mechanisms are deemed to be too dangerous.

40. If extreme care is exercised with regard to the reliability of their testimony, and due account is taken of the gravity of their offence, the cooperating witnesses for the prosecution may be a valuable means of infiltrating organized crime groups. Mitigation of sentence or even dismissal of charges, where possible, can motivate lesser criminals to assist in investigations of organized crime. Incorporation of such procedures into national legislation or recognized practice, together with the protective services previously discussed, may serve to attract such cooperating witnesses.

V. Organizational structures

41. Organized crime may be investigated by a variety of law enforcement agencies with different jurisdiction. In this connection, it is advisable to ensure that close coordination is maintained between central and peripheral structures and that law enforcement authorities also ensure effective liaison between intelligence and operations. In countries with federal structures, it is essential that effective mechanisms be established to ensure coordination of jurisdiction, intelligence and operations among federal policing agencies and those of other governmental units. Close coordination within and between agencies and units is essential to successful action against organized crime. A clear delineation of jurisdiction among agencies and units can contribute to a harmonious and effective working relationship.

42. When resources permit, it may be very useful to set up one or more specialized units dedicated to the investigation of organized crime, particularly in the areas of corruption, money laundering and illegal drug trafficking. There is a danger, which must be recognized, that exclusive jurisdiction over an area of investigation may create susceptibility to corruption, and appropriate safeguards against this must be developed.

43. Within any individual law enforcement agency, a strictly centralized senior management system that can scrutinize all aspects of investigations and monitor their course is necessary to ensure that all investigations are conducted in accordance with national laws and with proper respect for human rights. It is important for senior management officials to take due account of the necessity of ensuring financial, logistical and moral support.

44. Investigators, and in particular those leading the investigation, should be selected on the basis of their ability, experience, moral qualities and dedication. The importance of basic and in-service training should not be underestimated, for prosecutors and judges as well as for policemen.

45. The relationships between investigative, prosecutorial and judicial functions vary markedly between different legal systems. To combat organized crime successfully, in any system, it is necessary for these three functions to be harmoniously coordinated. Even so, due respect must be accorded to maintaining the proper relationships between the functions.

VI. International cooperation

46. International experience shows that organized crime has long crossed national borders and is today transnational. The following crimes, in particular, are found most frequently in international dealings: drug trafficking, contraband, counterfeiting of currency, traffic in stolen motor vehicles, money laundering and traffic in minors and arms. It should be noted that aspects of the evolutionary process undergone by society may make powerful criminal organizations even more impenetrable and facilitate the expansion of their illegal activities. Therefore, international cooperation between the law enforcement agencies of all countries is vital for effective organized crime control. Law enforcement operations should pay due respect to the sovereignty of all nations. Such cooperation should be developed on a sound legal basis, created at national, bilateral and multilateral levels. While an international jurisdiction is a remote but possible goal, the easiest mechanism is often bilateral inter-State agreements. Although multilateral agreements require extensive negotiation, they can be of great use, as is the case with the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances.

47. In addition to cooperation in legal matters, effective international action against organized crime can be promoted through bilateral and multilateral cooperation in training, technical assistance and research, and through the exchange of information, in particular for the benefit of developing countries. The United Nations crime and criminal justice programme provides an appropriate framework for these activities. Effective cooperation is also facilitated by making proper use of the valuable facilities and services provided by the International Criminal Police Organization (ICPO/Interpol), and by various regional and subregional arrangements.

48. Since criminal organizations are very mobile and inventive in their use of the slightest deficiencies in national laws, all States should consider making provision to ensure that their judicial and law enforcement agencies respond adequately to requests for legal assistance from other countries. The main forms of cooperation so far established at the national level include exchange of information on organized crime in general and cooperation in specific operational matters; extradition; the transfer of a witness from one country to another; mutual legal assistance to seize and confiscate the proceeds of illegal activities and other assets; and the provision of training and assistance to other police forces, especially for combating illegal drug trafficking.

VII. Evaluation

49. In order to determine the appropriate level of the law enforcement response, mechanisms to evaluate the gravity of the threat posed by organized crime are needed. The current state of knowledge demonstrates considerable lack of precision in this regard. Some countries have attempted to quantify the financial harm caused by organized crime but these have remained only estimates. More extensive and rigorous research in this area may be of value to legislators and governmental administrators, who have to make appropriate decisions on the allocation of resources to combat organized crime.

50. The prevention and control of organized crime should not remain a matter for the law enforcement authorities alone. It requires broad cooperation with other authorities, the business community, civic organizations and the community as a whole. Mobilization of the public to participate in this work requires educational measures and the responsible cooperation of the mass media to reveal the harm caused by organized crime and its dangers to individuals and to society, and to stimulate public participation in the struggle to defeat it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/87.

International cooperation in combating organized crime

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the rapid growth and geographical extension of organized crime in its various forms, both nationally and internationally, undermining the development process, impairing the quality of life and threatening human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Acknowledging the need for global efforts commensurate with the magnitude of national and transnational crime,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling also that the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders adopted resolutions entitled "Organized crime" and "Prevention and control of organized crime",

Recalling further its resolutions 44/71 and 44/72 of 8 December 1989, 45/121 and 45/123 of 14 December 1990, 46/152 of 18 December 1991 and S-17/2 of 23 February 1990 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/70 of 24 May 1989, and taking note of Council resolution 1992/23 of 30 July 1992,

Bearing in mind that the Eighth Congress explored possibilities and ways of strengthening further international cooperation in combating organized crime and adopted the Guidelines for the prevention and control of organized crime, and model treaties relating to this question,

Welcoming with appreciation the results achieved at the Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, held at Versailles, France, from 21 to 23 November 1991,

Acknowledging with appreciation the work done by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice during its first session, held at Vienna from 21 to 30 April 1992,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Strategies to Deal with Transnational Crime, held at Smolenice, Czechoslovakia, from 27 to 31 May 1991, and the International Seminar on Organized Crime, held at Suzdal, Russian Federation, from 21 to 25 October 1991, formulated important recommendations in this area,

Noting also that the meeting convened by the Resource Committee on Transnational Crime of the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council for the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, held at Courmayeur, Italy, from 23 to 28 March 1992, resulted in a proposed outline for an international conference on money laundering and control,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/24 of 30 July 1992, in which the Council decided that the topic "Action against national and transnational economic, organized and environmental crime: national experiences and international cooperation" could be included in the provisional agenda of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/23

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/106) without vote, 23 July (meeting 18); draft by Commission on crime prevention (E/1992/30); agenda item 19.

Reaffirming that priority must be given to the struggle against all activities of organized crime, including the illicit arms trade and traffic in narcotic drugs, cultural property theft, money laundering, the infiltration of legitimate business and the corruption of public officials,

Emphasizing the role of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in that respect,

1. Urges Member States to give favourable consideration to the implementation of the Guidelines for the prevention and control of organized crime at both national and international levels;

2. Invites Member States, in cooperation with international governmental and non-governmental organizations, to assist in increasing awareness to ensure a broad base of public participation and support for action against organized crime;

3. Also invites Member States to make available to the Secretary-General, on request, the provisions of their legislation relating to money laundering, the tracing, seizing and forfeiture of the proceeds of crime and the monitoring of large-scale cash transactions and other measures so that they may be available to Member States desiring to enact or further develop legislation in those fields;

4. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to continue to consider ways of strengthening international cooperation in combating organized crime, taking due account of the opinions of Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations expressed at international forums and to submit its views, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

5. Also requests the Commission to organize the ongoing review and analysis of the incidence of transnational organized criminal activity and the dissemination of information thereon;

6. Calls upon Member States, international organizations and interested non-governmental organizations to cooperate closely with the United Nations in organizing practice-oriented workshops, research projects and training programmes to deal with specific aspects of organized criminal activities.

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/703) without vote, 2 November (meeting 25); 23-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.14), orally revised; agenda item 93 lb]. Sponsors: Albania, Austria, Bahamas, Belarus, Cyprus, France, Germany, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Mongolia, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Turkmenistan.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 11-18, 22, 23, 25; plenary 89.

Domestic violence

An International Meeting of Experts on Domestic Violence met at Vancouver, Canada, from 22 to 25 March 1992.(22) The Meeting recommended revisions to a draft resource manual on domestic violence, to ensure that it presented globally useful and practical approaches to the problem. The manual had been prepared under the supervision of the Canadian Department of Justice, with the assistance of the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, in cooperation with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the United Nations Secretariat.

The Meeting also made recommendations for the dissemination and implementation of the manual. Twenty-eight experts from 16 countries participated in the Meeting.

UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(16) submitted a March report(23) to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the conclusions and recommendations of the 1991 Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme.(24) The report provided a brief overview of the experience of the former Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the prospective organization and functioning of the new Commission, the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, and follow-up to the Ministerial Meeting. The report noted that the continued growth of crime underscored the urgency of incisive action, and its transnational reach demanded a commensurate response. Effective action was needed to confront emerging needs as well as current problems.

Another report on measures taken to implement the 1991 Statement of Principles and Programme of Action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme(16) was submitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in September.(25) The report considered policy development and programme implementation and the institutional capacity of the new programme.

Crime prevention institutes

The report of the Seventh Joint Programme Co-ordination Meeting of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme Network (Dharan, Saudi Arabia, 7 and 8 January 1992) was submitted to the Commission in April.(26) Attending the meeting were representatives of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch; the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders; the International Centre for Criminal Law Reform and Criminal Justice Policy; the Australian Institute for Criminology; the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre; Rutgers University School of Criminal Justice (United States); the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders; the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, and the African Regional Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI).

UNAFRI

The Secretary-General submitted an October report⁽²⁷⁾ on UNAFRI to the General Assembly, pursuant to a 1991 Assembly request.⁽²⁸⁾ The report covered the Institute's operations and funding, noting that financial uncertainty had been a major obstacle to its viability. The Secretary-General said that ways had to be found to involve and integrate UNAFRI fully in the operations and work of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and its programme network.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 47/89.

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

Recalling its resolution 46/153 of 18 December 1991,

Recognizing that criminality is a major concern of all nations and that it calls for a concerted response from the international community aimed at preventing crime, improving the functioning of the criminal justice system and law enforcement, and increasing respect for individual rights,

Conscious of the vital role of regional cooperation in the fight against crime and of the potential contribution of interregional and regional institutes in the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Recognizing the efforts made thus far by the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in fulfilling its mandate through, inter alia, the organization of training programmes and regional seminars,

Aware of the financial difficulties that the Institute continues to face as a result of the fact that many States of the African region are in the category of the least developed countries and therefore lack the necessary resources with which to support the Institute,

Recognizing the urgent need to promote and intensify international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice and the fact that such cooperation can be effective only if it is executed with the direct participation of the receiving States, with due respect for their needs and priorities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and intergovernmental organizations that have supported the Institute in the discharge of its responsibilities;

3. Calls upon Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify financial and other support to the Institute, in order to enable it to fulfil its objectives, particularly in the fields of training, technical assistance, policy guidance, research and data collection;

4. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are provided to the Institute, within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 in support of the Institute, to enable it to carry out, in full and on time, all its mandates;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Preparations for the Ninth (1995) Congress

In a March note⁽²⁹⁾ to the Commission, the Secretary-General discussed preparations for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. The Secretary-General reviewed past congresses, new functions of the Congress, substantive preparations, changes in format, organizational arrangements and rules of procedure. He proposed a number of possible subjects for the Congress, including: crime prevention and justice for the protection of society; the impact of recent transformations on organized, economic and environmental criminality; new forms and transnational dimensions of economic and organized crime and their interfaces; the concept of security and public safety; the exercise of police power and other crime prevention functions; community policing and the maintenance of law and order; science and technology in the service of crime prevention; use of modern technology and management techniques in the administration of justice; and violence prevention and control.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/24.

Preparations for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 415(V), annex, of 1 December 1950 and 46/152, annex, of 18 December 1991, the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be convened in 1995,

Recognizing the significant contributions of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to the promotion and strengthening of international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Bearing in mind the new role of the congresses stipulated in paragraph 29 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/152,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on the preparations for the Ninth Congress,

1. Decides that the following topics could be included in the provisional agenda for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as recommended by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its first session:

(a) International cooperation and practical technical assistance for strengthening the rule of law: promoting the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme;

(b) Action against national and transnational economic, organized and environmental crime: national experiences and international cooperation;

(c) Criminal justice systems: management and improvement of police, prosecution, courts and corrections;

(d) Crime prevention strategies, in particular as related to crimes in urban areas and juvenile and violent criminality, including the question of victims: assessment and new perspectives;

2. Requests the Commission at its second session to finalize the provisional agenda for the Ninth Congress and to make its recommendations to the Council, taking into account the following:

(a) The Ninth Congress should deal with a limited number of precisely defined substantive topics, which should reflect the urgent needs of the world community;

(b) The final selection of those topics should be made in accordance with the priorities set by the Commission;

(c) There should be action-oriented research and demonstration workshops related to the topics mentioned in paragraph 1 above, as part of the programme of the Ninth Congress, and ancillary meetings associated with its provisional agenda;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a discussion guide for the consideration of the Commission, which would include proposals for the workshops mentioned in paragraph 2 (c) above, in cooperation with the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, and invites Member States to be actively involved in that process;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare draft rules of procedure for the Ninth Congress, taking into account:

(a) The terms of reference of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, stipulated in the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme;

(b) The need for all draft resolutions on the selected topics to be submitted well in advance of the Ninth Congress;

5. Invites the regional commissions, the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, government-appointed national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system, the intergovernmental organizations concerned and relevant non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to become actively involved in the preparations for the Ninth Congress;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the organization of the following:

(a) Ancillary meetings of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council, to be held at the site of the Ninth Congress, to deal with issues relating to substantive items of the provisional agenda for the Ninth Congress, in accordance with existing legislative regulations;

(b) Meetings of professional and geographical interest groups to be held at the site of the Ninth Congress;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme with the resources necessary to undertake, in an effective and timely manner, within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, the preparatory activities for the Ninth Congress, as directed by the Commission, including the organization of regional preparatory meetings, and to ensure adequate resources for the biennium 1994-1995;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to provide resources, as required, in accordance with established United Nations budgetary practice, within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, and adequate resources for the biennium 1994-1995, to ensure an appropriate programme of public information relating to the preparations for the Ninth Congress;

9. Takes note with appreciation of the offer of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to act as host for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/24

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote
Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/106) without vote, 23 July [meeting 18]; draft by Commission on crime prevention (E/1992/30); agenda item 19.

Financial implications. E/1992/30/Add.1.

In 1992, the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI) continued to work towards the development of improved policies in the field of crime prevention and control. The Rome-based Institute was originally established as the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) in 1968.(30) The mandate of UNSDRI was updated and its name changed to UNICRI by a 1989 General Assembly resolution.(31)

The third meeting of the Board of Trustees of UNICRI took place in Rome from 26 to 28 October. In adopting the Institute's work programme, special attention was paid to the priority themes identified by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its first session.

Chapter XIII

Women

In 1992, a summit held by the wives of heads of State or Government on the economic advancement of rural women (Geneva, 25 and 26 February) declared that Governments, national institutions, non-governmental organizations, the private sector, the United Nations and other donor agencies should allocate greater resources to promote the economic and social advancement of rural women.

The United Nations continued to implement the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, while also preparing for the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995.

The Commission on the Status of Women held its thirty-sixth session (Vienna, 11-20 March), and recommended seven draft resolutions and two draft decisions to the Economic and Social Council.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its eleventh session (New York, 20-30 January), took up three initial reports and six second periodic reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on the implementation of the Convention. By the end of the year, the Convention had received 96 signatures and 120 ratifications, accessions or successions.

Advancement of women

Implementation of the Nairobi Strategies

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1991,⁽¹⁾ submitted a report to the Assembly in September 1992⁽²⁾ on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the Year 2000, adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.⁽³⁾ The Strategies were designed to overcome obstacles to the Decade's goals of equality, development and peace. The report considered cooperation by the organizations of the United Nations system with the Commission on the Status of Women on implementation of the Strategies; ageing women; the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995; development; human rights; disabled women; the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for 1996-2001; an update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development in 1994; women in the Secretariat; public information regarding the advancement of women; and resources for the programme on the advancement of women.

The report also included an assessment of recent developments relevant to priority themes to be considered by the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session. Among the themes were equality: increased awareness by women of their rights, including legal literacy; development: women in extreme poverty, integration of women's concerns in national development planning; and peace: women and the peace process.

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁵⁾ to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-sixth session⁽⁶⁾ on the monitoring of progress made by the United Nations system in the implementation of the Strategies. The report covered three objectives of the Strategies—equality, development and peace. It dealt with new mandates and programme priorities and significant activities during the biennium 1990-1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/95.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 44/77 of 8 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it endorsed and reaffirmed the importance of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the interrelated goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling also its resolution 46/98 of 16 December 1991,

Taking into consideration the resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council on issues relating to women since the adoption of its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987,

Reaffirming its determination to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs and to promote development, cooperation and international peace,

Conscious of the important and constructive contribution to the improvement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned,

Concerned that the resources available to the programme on the advancement of women of the Secretariat are insufficient to ensure adequate support to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and effective implementation of other aspects of the programme, especially the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995,

Welcoming the completion of work on the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women by the inter-sessional working group of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Recognizing the advancement of women as one of the priorities of the Organization for the biennium 1992-1993,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms paragraph 2 of section I of the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, which called for an improved pace in the implementation of the Strategies in the crucial last decade of the twentieth century, since the cost to societies of failing to implement the Strategies would be high in terms of slowed economic and social development, inadequate use of human resources and reduced progress for society as a whole;

3. Urges Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to implement the recommendations;

4. Calls again upon Member States to give priority to policies and programmes relating to the subtheme "Employment, health and education", in particular to literacy, for self-reliance of women and the mobilization of indigenous resources, as well as to issues relating to the role of women in economic and political decision-making, population, the environment and information;

5. Reaffirms the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women, and calls upon it to continue promoting the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000, based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, health and education", and urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system to cooperate effectively with the Commission in this task;

6. Requests the Commission, when considering the priority theme relating to development during its thirty-seventh and subsequent sessions, to ensure its early contribution to the preparatory work of forthcoming major international conferences such as the World Conference on Human Rights, to be held in 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held in 1994, the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995, and the World Summit on Social Development, to be held in 1995, and to address the impact of technologies on women;

7. Also requests the Commission to give special attention to women in developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries, who suffer disproportionately from the effects of the global economic crisis and the heavy external debt burden, and to recommend further measures for the equalization of opportunity and for integration of these women into the development process when considering the priority theme relating to development;

8. Endorses Economic and Social Council decision 1992/272 of 30 July 1992 concerning the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, in which the Council took note of Commission on the Status of Women resolution 36/8 of 20 March 1992, and expresses its appreciation to the Government of China for its offer to act as host for the Conference, to be held in Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account section A, paragraph 6, of Commission resolution 36/8 when appointing the Secretary-General of the Conference;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that appropriate staff from the secretariats of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Commission on the Status of Women participate in the preparatory process for the World Conference on Human Rights, as well as in the Conference itself, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985;

11. Recommends the further development of methods of compilation and data collection in areas of concern identified by the Commission and urges Member States to improve and broaden collection of gender-disaggregated statistical information and make it available to the relevant bodies of the United Nations system with a view to having prepared, in all official languages, as a background document for the Fourth World Conference on Women, an updated edition of The World's Women 1970-1990: Trends and Statistics;

12. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women in the development process, bearing in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries, and calls upon Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the participation of women in professional, management and decision-making positions in their countries;

13. Emphasizes once again the need to give urgent attention to redressing socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels as a necessary step towards the full realization of the goals and objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies;

14. Urges the Commission to complete its work on the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women and to submit it for information to the World Conference on Human Rights;

15. Strongly urges that particular attention be given by the relevant United Nations organizations and Governments to the special needs of women with disabilities, to elderly women and also to women in vulnerable situations such as migrant and refugee women and children;

16. Endorses the recommendation contained in section B of Commission resolution 36/8 that regional preparatory conferences should include in their agendas the issue of women in public life, as well as the request that the Secretary-General include information on women in public life in the preparation of the priority theme, "Peace: women in international decision-making", for the Commission at its thirty-ninth session, in 1995;

17. Welcomes the recommendations on women, environment and development in all programme areas, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, in particular chapter 24 of Agenda 21, entitled "Global action for women towards sustainable and equitable development";

18. Urges organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations to ensure active participation of women in the planning and implementation of programmes for sustainable development, and requests Governments to consider nominating women as representatives to the Commission on Sustainable Development;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 and in integrating the Forward-looking Strategies into activities mandated by the General Assembly, to pay particular attention to specific sectoral themes that cut across the three objectives, equality, development and peace, and include, in particular, literacy, education, health, population, the impact of technology on the environment and its effect on women and the full participation of women in decision-making, and to continue to assist Governments in strengthening their national machineries for the advancement of women;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, bearing in mind its importance, placing particular emphasis on the adverse impact of the difficult economic situation affecting the majority of developing countries, particularly on the condition of women, giving special attention to worsening conditions for the incorporation of women into the labour force, as well as the impact of reduced expenditures for social services on women's opportunities for education, health and child care, and to submit a preliminary version of the updated World Survey on the Role of Women in Development to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, in 1993 and a final version in 1994;

21. Requests Governments, when presenting candidatures for vacancies in the Secretariat, in particular at the decision-making level, to give priority to women's candidatures, and requests the Secretary-General in reviewing these candidatures to give special consideration to female candidates from underrepresented and unrepresented developing countries;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

23. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for the existing weekly radio programmes on women in the regular budget of the United Nations, making adequate provisions for broadcasts in different languages, and to develop the focal point for issues relating to women in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, which, in concert with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, should provide a more effective public information programme relating to the advancement of women;

24. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, an assessment of recent developments that are relevant to the priority themes to be considered at the subsequent session of the Commission and to transmit to the Commission a summary of relevant views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Assembly;

25. Recommends that the Commission on the Status of Women, as the preparatory body for the Fourth World Conference on Women, should consider at its next session the relevance of the resolutions drafted at the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held in 1985, in order to avoid duplication of work, keeping in mind that those resolutions were neither adopted by the Conference nor considered by the General Assembly;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on measures taken to implement the present resolution;

27. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the state of preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women under the item entitled "Advancement of women";

28. Decides to consider the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies for the period up to the year 2000 at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Monitoring, review and appraisal

1995 world conference on women

The Secretary-General, responding to a resolution adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women in 1991,(7) submitted a report in January 1992(8) on preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995. The report suggested preparatory activities that might be organized at national, regional and interregional levels, and discussed the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the preparations and the type of public information campaign that would be desirable. It indicated the resources currently allocated for the Conference and additional requirements that might be considered.

By a resolution adopted in March,(9) the Commission on the Status of Women accepted China's offer to host the Conference and decided that it should be held in Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995. The Commission recommended that the Secretary-General appoint a woman as Secretary-General of the Conference and that Conference staff include persons from developing countries. The Commission also made recommendations on items for inclusion in the Conference agenda, the draft rules of procedure and the Conference preparatory process at national and regional levels.

By decision. 1992/272 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's resolution and endorsed the recommendations contained therein.

Communications on the status of women

On 11 and 12 March 1992, a list of confidential communications on the status of women was distributed to the representative of each State member of the Commission on the Status of Women(7) On 16 March, the Commission appointed a Working Group on Communications concerning the Status of Women, which held three closed meetings and subsequently submitted its report to the Commission at a closed meeting.

In its report, the Working Group stated that it had received communications from the Division for the Advancement of Women, United Nations Office at Vienna, and the Centre for Human Rights, United Nations Office at Geneva. The Group noted, among the communications received, cases of violence against women by army, security and occupation forces and discrimination against women in their working lives. The Group also proposed ways of improving the communications procedure, including increased publicity for the existing communications mechanism. It noted the importance of concerned Governments replying to communications received.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with a recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/19.

Communications on the status of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 76(V) of 5 August 1947 and 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950, which form the basis for the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to receive at each of its regular sessions a list of confidential and non-confidential communications relating to the status of women,

Taking into consideration its resolution 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, in which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission to consider confidential and non-confidential communications on the status of women and authorized the Commission to appoint a working group to consider communications, with a view to bringing to the attention of the Commission those communications, including the replies of Governments, which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of reliably attested injustice and discriminatory practices against women,

Reaffirming that discrimination against women is incompatible with human dignity and that women and men should participate on the basis of equality, irrespective of race or creed, in the social, economic and political processes of their countries,

Recalling its resolution 1990/8 of 24 May 1990, in which it requested the Secretary-General to examine, in consultation with Governments, the existing mechanisms for communications on the status of women, in order to ensure that such communications receive effective and appropriately coordinated consideration in view of the role of communications in the work of the Commission, and to report thereon to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on examining existing mechanisms for communications on the status of women, and the various views expressed by Governments,

Taking note also of the conclusion of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women, in its report to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session that, while the communications procedure provided a valuable source of information on the effects of discrimination on the lives of women, it should be improved to make it more efficient and useful, and that clear criteria for receiving communications should be given,

1. Reaffirms that the Commission on the Status of Women is empowered to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on what action should be taken on emerging trends and patterns of discrimination against women revealed by communications on the status of women;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to publicize widely among international and national organizations, in particular women's groups, the existence and scope of the communication mechanisms of the Commission;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to support the activities of the Commission with regard to its consideration of communications and to ensure proper coordination of the activities of the Commission in this area and those of the other bodies of the Council, by taking the following action:

- (a) Ensuring that the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat coordinate closely so that all communications received are sent as soon as possible to the appropriate United Nations bodies and to each concerned Member State, and that the respective offices are informed of the disposition of the communications;

- (b) Encouraging the specialized agencies to provide to the Commission, through the Division for the Advancement of Women, communications or other information in their possession that is relevant to discrimination against women;

- (c) Making available to authors of communications any recommendations by the Commission to the Council on situations brought to the attention of the Commission by the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women;

4. Reaffirms that the consideration by the Commission of the communications shall remain confidential until such time as the Commission may decide to make recommendations to the Council;

5. Requests the Commission, in order to avoid duplication of work, to determine whether a trend or pattern of discrimination against women revealed by communications should be brought to the attention of another United Nations body or specialized agency that might be better able to take appropriate action;

6. Also requests the Commission to consider, as appropriate, ways of making the existing procedure for receiving and considering communications, including the standard of admissibility, more transparent and efficient, taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on examining mechanisms for communications on the status of women, which was submitted to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that any costs resulting from the activities set out in the present resolution are kept to a minimum and that the activities are carried out within existing resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/19

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote
Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) without vote, 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1992/24): agenda item 18.

System-wide coordination

The sixteenth ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women was held at Vienna on 9 and 10 March 1992.(10) Representatives of 28 organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations participated. They recommended to the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) that the United Nations report on all activities undertaken in the field of the advancement of women in the quinquennial review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies; that the system-wide monitoring of progress made in implementing the Strategies be linked to the priority themes of equality, development and peace; and that the United Nations system report on activities, progress achieved, lessons learned and obstacles encountered in relation to those themes. Concerning preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, the meeting agreed that institutional support for the public information campaign should be strengthened through inter-agency collaboration and that the participation of NGOs in the Conference should be extended beyond those in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to include NGOs that had demonstrated their strong commitment to work on women's issues. The meeting also issued a statement on the preparations for the Conference.

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The twelfth session of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) was held at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 17 to 21 February 1992.(11) The Board reviewed INSTRAW's work during 1991, its training programme, scholarships and internships, its information, documentation and communication facilities and its publication policy. It discussed cooperation with United Nations organizations, research and training institutes and INSTRAW focal points and correspondents. The Board reviewed the work of the Strategic Planning and Finance Committees and decided that their functions should be merged.

The Board noted INSTRAW's continuing activities to improve statistics on the situation of women relative to that of men, including the situations of elderly women and women in the informal sector (see below). The Board stressed INSTRAW's role in the development, evaluation and demonstration of training materials for the inclusion of women in development and recommended that its scholarship and internship programme be extended. The Board stressed the need for continued close collaboration between INSTRAW and the regional commissions and welcomed the trend of increased cooperation among agencies in developing projects for the advancement of women. The Board approved the proposed programme of work and budget of $4,107,906 for 1992-1993.

INSTRAW activities

In 1992,(12) INSTRAW strengthened its collaboration with bodies and entities of the United Nations and governmental, non-governmental and other organizations. It prepared an innovative pre-workshop resource package to strengthen the use of statistical data on women, and tested it at a training workshop on statistics and indicators on women in the Pacific islands (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, 30 November-3 December 1992). INSTRAW also helped to organize a national workshop on statistics and indicators on women in Turkey (Ankara, 21-23 October).

Methods for assessing the value of women's economic contributions, both paid and unpaid, were considered at an interregional workshop on the development of statistics on women's work in the informal sector (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 25-29 May) and at an international meeting on time-use research methodology (Rome, Italy, 15-18 June).

INSTRAW participated in the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women (see below) and in the twentieth meeting of the ACC Task Force on Rural Development (New York, 22-24 April).

In cooperation with INSTRAW, the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Development and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific organized an interregional workshop applying training modules on women, water supply and sanitation, at Bangkok, Thailand, from 21 to 25 September.

The Institute started work on a long-term research and training programme for women farmers in transitional Eastern European countries. Research was conducted on the situation of women in agriculture in Bulgaria and Hungary. INSTRAW engaged a consultant to attend a workshop on the problems of transforming collective farms into market-oriented units (Godollo, Hungary, 22-26 June), sponsored by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Economic Commission for Europe.

At the invitation of the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts, INSTRAW participated in an interregional seminar on the revision of the system of national accounts (Aguascalientes, Mexico, 5-9 October).

Two issues of INSTRAW News were published—No. 17 (spring) was devoted to women and management and No. 18 (autumn) to the United Nations and women.

Contributions to INSTRAW from Member States during the year amounted to $2,259,392. At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held in November, INSTRAW received pledges of contributions totalling $973,971 for 1993.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, following the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/21.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1991/24 of 30 May 1991, in which it took note of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its eleventh session,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 46/99 of 16 December 1991, in which the Assembly took note of the report of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its activities,

Having considered the report of the Board of Trustees of the Institute on its twelfth session,

Reaffirming the specific and unique role of the Institute in the areas of research and training that would lead to the systematic inclusion of women in mainstream development programmes and projects,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its twelfth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the successful implementation of the programmes of the Institute, in particular activities on improving statistics to yield better descriptive data on the situation of women relative to that of men, including elderly women and women in the informal sector; women, the environment and sustainable development; assessing and developing appropriate communication materials on women and development; rural women and credit; and monitoring and evaluation methodologies for programmes and projects on women and development;

3. Takes note of the programme budget of the Institute for the biennium 1992-1993, approved by the Board of Trustees at its twelfth session, and notes the commencement of work in the areas of appraisal and evaluation of development strategies and programmes for the maximum impact on women and the long-term research project on methods for the measurement of the value of women's work, including that in the informal sector;

4. Commends the sustained efforts made by the Institute to further enhance its linkages with other United Nations organizations, regional commissions, governmental and non-governmental organizations, research institutions and other organizations and groups with similar interests in developing projects for the advancement of women;

5. Reaffirms the catalytic and advocacy role of the Institute in facilitating the inclusion of women as partners in development through research, training and information activities on issues affecting women and development;

6. Recommends, in view of the increase in research and training being done in the general areas of women and development, that the Institute concentrate on the identification of barriers to improvements in the status of women and the development of tools for the removal of those persistent obstacles to progress;

7. Calls upon States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute through voluntary contributions and pledges to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, thus enabling the Institute to continue to respond effectively to its mandate.

Women and development

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,(1) submitted a report in January 1992(2) to the Commission on the Status of Women concerning the integration of women in the process of development. The report covered the results of two meetings—a seminar on the integration of women in development (Vienna, 9-11 December 1991) and an expert group meeting on integration of ageing and elderly women into development (Vienna, 7-11 October 1991). According to the report, these two meetings indicated a need to redefine the framework of current approaches to women in development. It noted the need to recognize women's lifetime productivity, including reproductive activities that were essential to the survival and development of society. The seminar discussed the conceptual framework for, and lessons to be drawn from, the women-in-development (WID) concept that looked beyond women's role as mothers. WID activities encouraged the empowerment of women to participate equally with men in all areas of production and economic development. The expert group meeting drew attention to the "economic viability" of older women whose many productive roles contradicted some societies' perception of them as "an economic burden".

The Commission on the Status of Women adopted two resolutions on women and development. In the first,(3) the Commission encouraged Governments, NGOs and other bodies to involve women, including elderly women, in development activities; invited international development agencies to recognize the potential of elderly women as a human resource for development; and called on the Secretary-General to compile a comprehensive annotated bibliography on the status of elderly women worldwide.

In the second resolution,(4) the Commission urged Governments to foster women's full participation in all areas of development; to promote economic development that integrated their needs and concerns; to include gender perspectives in guidelines for policy-making; to foster women's access to income-generating activities; and to identify national targets for women in such areas as education, employment, income, health and public life. It recommended that Governments strengthen national machinery for the advancement of women and that Governments, international donors and NGOs develop gender-oriented research. It appealed to Governments, donor countries, international organizations and financial institutions to support the establishment of cooperative rural banks to assist women, especially those engaged in small- and medium-scale productive activities. It requested Member States to provide technical and managerial training for women in rural and urban areas and called on Governments, donor countries and international organizations to facilitate the access of rural and urban poor women in particular to basic education and health and child-care facilities.

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/271 on the integration of elderly women into development, took note of the Commission's first resolution.

On 14 February,(5) the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) decided to consider the subject of women in development on a biennial basis.

Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women

The Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women was held at Geneva on 25 and 26 February 1992. Prior to the Summit, the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 8-25 February)(6) expressed its support for the Summit, commended the group of First Ladies who had organized it and underlined the need to strengthen the productive role of rural women to promote food security, alleviate poverty and accelerate development. The Conference appealed to all Member States and the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations to support the Summit and ensure effective follow-up to its recommendations.

On 30 June,(7) Belgium transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women, adopted at the Summit. The Declaration covered objectives for operational strategies and action programmes, implementation and follow-up. In a preamble, the Summit participants—wives of heads of State or Government from Africa, the Americas, Asia, Europe and Oceania—expressed solidarity with the rural women of the world and their determination to raise awareness of conditions affecting rural women among decision makers, at national, regional and international levels. They declared their commitment to the social and economic advancement of rural families and to sustainable development. They noted that women were the backbone of the agricultural labour force in much of the developing world, producing 35 to 45 per cent of gross domestic product and more than 50 per cent of the developing world's food. Yet, more than half a billion rural women were poor and lacked access to resources and markets. The Summit expressed its determination to mobilize public opinion, political will and resources to raise the status and quality of life of rural women and their families.

The Declaration stated that Governments, national institutions, NGOs and the private sector, and United Nations and other donor agencies should allocate greater resources to promote the economic and social advancement of rural women. Measures should be taken to ensure that women had equity in inheritance, marriage, divorce and child custody. Legal and administrative measures should protect rural women from exploitation in the labour, capital and product markets and assure them of equal pay for equal work. Rural women should be made aware of their rights and the resources, technology, production, social services, market opportunities and credit available to them. Their access to credit and financial services should be improved and facilities for women's education and functional literacy should be strengthened. Rural girls and young women should receive at least primary and secondary education, as well as health and vocational training.

The First Ladies expressed their intention to work together to mobilize political and financial resources for women and to establish procedures for monitoring the implementation of the Declaration. They also resolved to establish, at the global level, a committee of representatives of the wives of heads of State or Government with three members from each continent. The group would meet biennially to review implementation and to support national and regional initiatives for the advancement of rural women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/53.

Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1991/64 of 26 July 1991 on the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women,

Recognizing the critical role of rural women as food producers and architects of household food security,

Noting with deep concern the continuing rise in the number of rural women living in poverty,

Reiterating its commitment to contribute to the improvement of the living conditions of rural women,

Welcoming the organization of the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women, held at Geneva on 25 and 26 February 1992, with the participation of a large number of First Ladies and high-level delegations,

Expressing its appreciation to the Patron of the Summit, to the core group of First Ladies who launched the initiative to convene the Summit and to the International Fund for Agricultural Development and other institutions that provided support for the Summit,

1. Welcomes the adoption by the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women of the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women;

2. Urges all States to work for the achievement of the goals endorsed in the Geneva Declaration;

3. Urges all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to take into account the goals of the Geneva Declaration in carrying out their programmes, and invites the relevant governing bodies to consider specific measures, within their competence, to address the special needs of rural women in the light of the Geneva Declaration.

Women, environment and sustainable development

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1990 decision of the Economic and Social Council(8) and a 1991 resolution of the General Assembly,(9) submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women in January 1992 a report on women and the environment.(10) The report considered the linkages between the status and role of women and the environment, action by women on behalf of the environment and action to support women and the environment. It also included, in an annex, women's perspectives on the environment: selected conclusions and recommendations of the Global Assembly of Women and the Environment—Partners in Life (Miami, United States, 4-8 November 1991). The report stated that the solution to the environmental crisis was to alleviate the underlying causes, such as the wasteful consumption of natural resources and energy, pollution-producing technologies, poverty and population pressures. It noted that the role of women in society made them significant contributors to environmental protection and that their action at the grass-roots level ranged from efficient household and natural resources management to demonstrations against manufacturing pollution. The report observed that few women, however, had the opportunity, training or financial means to make an impact at higher decision-making levels. The report recommended that women be involved in decisions affecting the distribution and use of land, the allocation of funds, and project design and implementation. It stated that women's approaches, views and priorities should also be included in policy formulation and the design of development programmes, giving weight to the impact of such programmes on the status of women. It was recommended that funding for environmental projects be decentralized and that women be represented at all levels and in all aspects of decision-making. The report also recommended the formulation and enforcement of international laws against the exploitation of the poor, especially women, as cheap labour, and the dumping of hazardous wastes in developing countries.

The Commission on the Status of Women(11) urged that Governments adopt laws, policies and programmes to promote women's participation in the preservation of the environment; that state and local governments, as well as governmental organizations, NGOs and the private sector, involve women in the implementation of environmental protection policies; and that Governments promote the education and professional and leadership training of women in environmental issues. It called for women's participation in managing funds for environmental protection and sustainable development, and urged Governments, NGOs and other social groups to promote changes in production policies and consumption habits, mainly in developed countries. International cooperation was also sought for the development of environmentally sound technologies.

Women and sustainable development

The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June 1992)(12) adopted the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, in which it proclaimed that women had a vital role to play in environmental management and development and that their full participation was essential to the achievement of sustainable development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

UNCED also adopted Agenda 21, a chapter of which dealt with global action for women towards sustainable and equitable development. The objectives of this programme area, proposed for Governments, were to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,(13) particularly women's participation in national ecosystem management and the control of environmental degradation. The aims were to increase the proportion of women decision makers, planners, technical advisers, managers and extension workers in environment and development fields; to consider developing by the year 2000 a strategy to eliminate all obstacles to women's full participation in sustainable development and in public life; to establish by 1995 mechanisms to assess the implementation and impact of development and environment policies and programmes on women and to ensure their contributions and benefits; to assess, review, revise and implement, where appropriate, curricula and other educational material for the dissemination of gender-relevant knowledge and valuation of women's roles through formal and non-formal education and training institutions; to formulate and implement governmental policies and national guidelines, strategies and plans to achieve equality for women; to implement, as a matter of urgency, measures to ensure the equal right of men and women to decide freely and responsibly the number and spacing of their children and to enable them to exercise that right; and to consider adopting, strengthening and enforcing legislation prohibiting violence against women and to take all necessary measures to eliminate such violence in all its forms.

The Conference identified a number of steps Governments should take in support of those objectives, as well as areas requiring urgent action, activities in the areas of research, data collection and dissemination of information and international and regional cooperation and coordination.

Specifically, the Conference recommended that: the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), in collaboration with the United Nations Children's Fund, should consult with donors to promote programmes and projects that strengthened the participation of women in sustainable development and decision-making; UNDP should establish a women's focal point on development and the environment in the offices of its resident representatives to provide information and exchange experiences in these fields. It was also recommended that the United Nations system, Governments and NGOs involved in the follow-up to the Conference and the implementation of Agenda 21 should ensure that gender considerations were fully integrated into all policies, programmes and activities.

Medium-term plan for women and development

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1989 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,(14) submitted proposals to the Council regarding the framework of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for 1996-2001.(15) The focus of the plan would be to eliminate obstacles and achieve the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.(13) The proposals covered the scope, focus and structure of the system-wide plan, which would comprise seven programmes: elimination of legal and attitudinal forms of discrimination; productive resources, income and employment; human resources development; promotion of peace and conflict resolution; decision-making; improving means of international action; and comprehensive inclusion of women in development.

UN Development Fund for Women

The Consultative Committee on UNIFEM met in New York from 13 to 16 April 1992.

The Committee recommended the following sums for approval:(16) $1 million for African women in crisis, an umbrella project to develop models and strategies for ensuring that refugee, returnee and displaced women were active participants in the search for solutions to their problems; $256,700 for the preparatory phase of an African internship programme, aiming to place 40 to 60 young women annually, for periods of six months each, in national, regional and international institutions; and $359,000 for the development of new methods for data collection, analysis and use in China which would bring producers and users of statistics into dialogue on gender issues of concern to planners and policy makers.

In a report on the activities of UNIFEM during 1992,(17) the UNDP Administrator stated that, in Africa, a project, operated by UNIFEM in collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and various NGOs, was undertaken in Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire to provide support to women refugees from Liberia as well as to local women affected by the influx of refugees. The project offered the women shelter, trauma counselling, health education and training in "portable skills" that could be used to generate income in their current situation and when they returned home.

In conjunction with the African Development Bank, UNIFEM funded a meeting in Côte d'Ivoire in November on mainstreaming gender concerns in African training and research institutes. The meeting brought together trainers working at the grass-roots level with researchers and representatives of institutions in the field of gender training.

Macro/micro linkages, activated in the UNIFEM programme, brought representatives of peasant women from South-East Asia to UNCED. This was the culmination of a process begun in 1991, when national summits on environment and development were held in Bangladesh, India, Nepal and Pakistan. The summits were attended by grass-roots leaders, scientists, politicians, national planners and policy makers. Subsequently, three peasant women leaders attended UNCED and reported back to their constituencies on implementation of environmental agreements.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNIFEM called attention to the negative impact on the development process of violence against women. UNIFEM supported networking between women's anti-violence groups; public education programmes involving citizens, police officers, public officials, lawmakers and others; and advocacy work in shelters and women's centres. In August, women from 21 countries of the region gathered in Brazil for a UNIFEM-sponsored conference on women and sexual and domestic violence.

UNIFEM supported a gender-awareness training programme in Venezuela, developed by the Venezuela Association for Alternative Sexual Education (AVESA), for police officers and university security personnel attending battered women in Caracas. Since 1989, more than 450 officers (one fifth of them women) had been sensitized to the issue; an additional 1,000 officers would be trained by AVESA with the Fund's support during the next year.

The Advocacy Facility of UNIFEM became operational in January 1992. Progress was made in the preparation, production, marketing and distribution of papers, training materials, books, newsletters, videos and other women-in-development resource materials.

On 14 February 1992,(5) the UNDP Governing Council decided to consider on a biennial basis the subject of UNIFEM.

On 22 December, by decision 47/448, the General Assembly took note of the report of the UNDP Administrator on the 1991 activities of UNIFEM.(18)

Status of women

Commission on the Status of Women

At its thirty-sixth session (Vienna, 11-20 March 1992),(1) the Commission on the Status of Women recommended seven draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, dealing with improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (see PART SIX, Chapter II), women and children under apartheid (see PART TWO, Chapter I), Palestinian women, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, violence against women, communications on the status of women, and advancement of women and human rights. The draft decisions related to the Commission's 1993 session.

On 30 July 1992, by decision 1992/269, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its thirty-seventh session. On the same date, the Council, by decision 1992/270, approved the convening of four additional meetings, to be held simultaneously during the Commission's thirty-seventh session, to consider the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace.

Women and peace

In response to a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution, (2) the Secretary-General submitted a report(3) to the Commission on one of its 1992 priority themes—equal participation in efforts to promote international cooperation, peace and disarmament. The report stated that almost no women were involved in decision-making related to peace, international cooperation and disarmament, a reflection of the broader problem of gender inequalities at the national level. The report contended that if women were involved equally in all efforts to promote international cooperation, peace and disarmament, in appropriate numbers, they would make a qualitative difference in the way issues relating to peace were dealt with. It analysed new data on the participation of women in parliaments and Governments worldwide, and identified the factors and conditions that enabled women to participate in public life in sufficient numbers to make a difference.

The report concluded that the low number of women in decision-making positions deprived them of important rights and responsibilities and was not democratic. The slow progress towards equality in participation and decision-making implied a need for new policies and measures by Governments, NGOs and women themselves. United Nations entities should continue their studies of the issue and, in particular, examine the difference women could make in the areas of peace, international cooperation and disarmament.

Women and human rights

On 30 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/20.

Advancement of women and human rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/155 of 18 December 1990, in which it was decided to convene a World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 and to establish a Preparatory Committee for the Conference,

Noting that the General Assembly, in its resolution 46/116 of 17 December 1991, requested concerned United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, among others, to submit recommendations concerning the Conference to the Preparatory Committee,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 46/98 of 16 December 1991, in particular paragraph 8 thereof,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, in which it adopted the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, contained in the annex to that resolution, and bearing in mind in particular those recommendations and conclusions related to the maintenance of de facto discrimination, which prevents women from achieving effective equality,

Taking into account the fact that the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women have identified violence against women as one of the major obstacles to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Welcoming general recommendation 19, adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its eleventh session, and the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence against Women, held at Vienna from 11 to 15 November 1991,

Affirming that various forms of violence against women are violations of human rights,

1. Culls upon the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights, when preparing the agenda and studies for the World Conference, to take into account the existence of de facto as well as de jure discrimination, which continues to impede the full enjoyment by women of their economic, social and cultural rights, as well as their civil and political rights;

2. Also calls upon the Preparatory Committee, in preparing for the examination by the Conference of the main obstacles to the implementation of international human rights instruments, to pay adequate attention to the global problem of violence against women;

3. Invites the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and Member States, in preparing for the Conference, to make use of gender disaggregated data, which identify situations of inequality between women and men;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/98, to guarantee the participation of the secretariats of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women in the preparatory process for the Conference, as well as in the Conference itself;

5. Requests the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, as the secretariat of the Commission, to report to the Commission at its thirty-seventh session on the state of the preparatory process for the Conference and the related activities of the Division, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/98;

6. Requests the Commission to establish, during its thirty-seventh session, an open-ended working group to consider its contribution to the Conference;

7. Urges Member States, when preparing for the Conference at the national level, to consider integrating fully into the scope of the Conference issues related to the rights of women, and to respect the principle of equal participation of women and men in their delegations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/20

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) without vote, 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1992/24); agenda item 18. Financial implications. E/1992/24/Add.1.

Also, on 20 July, the Council adopted decision 1992/251 on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children.

Violence against women

Two reports on violence against women were submitted by the Secretary-General to the Commission.

One of them,⁽⁴⁾ prepared in response to a 1990 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁵⁾ concerned physical violence against detained women and was based on an analysis of information provided by 36 Governments. The report examined legislative, administrative and other measures to prevent violence against detained women that was specific to their sex. Most reporting Governments stated that they did not have any special legal provisions that covered prevention of such violence. However, general legal provisions and rules governing the treatment of prisoners were designed to protect adequately both male and female prisoners from ill-treatment. A number of countries had also adopted sex-specific administrative measures, including some special regulations for female prisoners, and complaint and recourse procedures in cases of irregular conduct or acts of violence by supervising personnel.

The other report,⁽⁶⁾ on violence against women in all its forms and the possibilities of preparing an international instrument on the subject, contained the recommendations, summary of discussion and a draft declaration adopted by an expert group meeting on violence against women (Vienna, 11-15 November 1991).

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW),⁽⁷⁾ in accordance with a 1991 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁸⁾ considered the question of violence against women and made a number of specific recommendations dealing with the issue.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/18.

Violence against women in all its forms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1991/18 of 30 May 1991, in which it requested that an expert group meeting be held to address the issue of violence against women and to discuss the possibilities of preparing an international instrument on this subject and the elements to be contained therein,

Bearing in mind that the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women identify violence against women as a major obstacle to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Noting that, in general recommendation 19, adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its eleventh session, the Committee recognized that gender-based violence was a form of discrimination that seriously inhibited the ability of women to enjoy rights and freedoms on a basis of equality with men,

Noting also the response of the Committee to the report of the Secretary-General on violence against women in all its forms, the annex to which contains the recommendations and a summary of the discussion of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence against Women, held at Vienna from 11 to 15 November 1991,

1. Calls on Governments to recognize that the elimination of violence against women is essential to the achievement of equality for women and is a requirement for the full respect of human rights;

2. Urges Member States to adopt, strengthen and enforce legislation prohibiting violence against women and to take all appropriate administrative, social and educational measures to protect women from all forms of physical and mental violence, in accordance with its resolution 1991/18;

3. Calls on States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to take the steps necessary to implement general recommendation 19, adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its eleventh session;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on violence against women in all its forms;

5. Decides to convene an inter-sessional working group of the Commission on the Status of Women, open to all Member States and observer States, to further develop a draft declaration on violence against women, taking into account the draft declaration contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, and to report to the Commission, at its thirty-seventh session, with a view to recommending a draft declaration to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

6. Requests Governments, international organizations, non-governmental organizations, other relevant bodies and academics to continue to undertake research into the causes of violence against women;

7. Urges Governments to address the issue of violence against women at the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995, as one of the major obstacles to women's advancement.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/18

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) without vote, 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1992/24); agenda item 18. Financial implication. E/1992/24/Add.1,

Draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1992/18, decided to convene an inter-sessional working group of the Commission on the Status of Women to develop further a draft declaration on violence against women. Pursuant to that resolution, the Working Group on Violence against Women met at Vienna from 31 August to 4 September(9) to prepare the draft declaration. The Group adopted its report containing the draft declaration for submission to the Commission in 1993, with a view to recommending it to the General Assembly for adoption, through the Council.

Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council, in a 1991 resolution,(10) had requested the Secretary-General to continue his investigation of the situation of Palestinian women and children and to report to the thirty-sixth session of the Commission. In a note to the Commission,(11) the Secretary-General referred to a statement by Israel emphasizing that the 1991 resolution already contained conclusions concerning the situation, which made an additional investigation unnecessary. Without the means of acquiring the information required by the resolution, the Secretary-General reported that he was not in a position to provide a report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to a recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 1992/16.

Situation of and assistance to Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General and the notes by the Secretary-General concerning the situation of Palestinian women living inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territory,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 thereof,

Recalling also its resolutions 1988/25 of 26 May 1988, 1989/34 of 24 May 1989, 1990/11 of 24 May 1990 and 1991/19 of 30 May 1991,

Deeply alarmed by the deteriorating condition of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli violation of Palestinian human rights, and oppressive measures, including collective punishments, curfews, demolition of houses, closure of schools and universities, deportation, confiscation of land and settlement activities, which are illegal and contrary to the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relevant to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Reaffirm that the basic improvement of the living conditions of the Palestinian women, their advancement, full equality and self-reliance, can only be achieved by an end to the Israeli occupation and by the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relevant to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to respect the provisions of the Convention;

3. Also demands an end to the Israeli violation of human rights in the occupied Palestinian territory, including an immediate halt to the Israeli settlement activities that have harmful effects on Palestinian women and their families;

4. Calls upon governmental, non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations, including organizations of the United Nations system, to assist Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory in developing small-scale industry and creating vocational training and legal consultation centres;

5. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to monitor the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning assistance to Palestinian women;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in monitoring the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the mission of experts to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic to investigate the condition of Palestinian women and children in order to improve the condition of Palestinian women and children;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to review the situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Palestinian territory and in the refugee camps, and to submit a report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session, using all available sources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/16

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 37-1-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) by recorded vote (36-1-13), 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1992/24); agenda item 18.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Colombia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, Guinea, India, Jamaica, Kuwait, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Somalia, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Belarus, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, United Kingdom.

Women in the informal sector

A report⁽¹²⁾ by the Secretariat to CEDAW considered the definition of the informal sector and its possible implications for women. The report noted that international organizations used many definitions according to their objectives and the Statistical Office of the United Nations, in collaboration with INSTRAW, was working to improve statistics by which women's participation and production in the informal sector could be measured. The Statistical Office was preparing a report on the measurement of women's economic activity and other work and was compiling global statistics on women in the informal sector on an experimental basis. The report stated that women in the informal sector were often found in types of employment where they were more likely to be disadvantaged, dependent and exploited. It was suggested that the progressive integration of segments of the informal sector in the formal economy should provide opportunities for women to overcome institutional and socio-cultural barriers which prevented them from achieving fuller professional careers.

Migrant women workers

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/96.

Violence against migrant women workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Charter of the United Nations reaffirms faith in human rights and fundamental freedoms, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women,

Reaffirming the principles set forth in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979 and contained in the annex to that resolution,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries who venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families, while acknowledging the primary duty of States to work for conditions that provide employment to their citizens,

Recognizing that poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic situations in their home countries lead people, including women, to seek employment in other countries,

Recognizing also that it is the duty of sending countries to protect and promote the interests of their citizens who seek or receive employment in other countries, to provide them with appropriate training/education, and to apprise them of their rights and obligations in the countries of employment,

Aware of the moral obligation of receiving or host countries to ensure the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons within their boundaries, including migrant workers and in particular women migrant workers, who are doubly vulnerable because of their gender and because they are foreigners,

Noting with concern the mounting reports of grave abuses and acts of violence committed against the person of women migrant workers by some of their employers in some host countries,

Stressing that acts of violence directed against women impair or nullify the enjoyment by women of their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Convinced of the need to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women and to protect them from gender-based violence,

1. Expresses grave concern over the plight of migrant women workers who become victims of physical, mental and sexual harassment and abuse;

2. Calls upon all countries, particularly the sending and receiving countries, to cooperate with each other in taking appropriate steps to ensure that the rights of women migrant workers are protected;

3. Urges all States to adopt appropriate measures to provide support services to women victims of violence and to provide resources for their physical and psychological rehabilitation;

4. Calls upon relevant bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to inform the Secretary-General of the extent of the problem and to recommend further measures to implement the purposes of the present resolution;

5. Envisages the inclusion of the subject of violence against women migrant workers in the agenda of the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in Beijing in 1995;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the time constraints and pending the completion of a written report, to make a preliminary oral report, through the Commission on the Status of Women and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/670) without vote, 11 November (meeting 35); 14-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.24), orally revised; agenda item 94, Sponsors: Australia, Chile, China, Costa Rica, El Salvador, France, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Philippines, Russian Federation, Thailand, Uganda.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 19-26, 28, 30, 32, 35; plenary 89.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/110 on the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.

Elimination of discrimination against women

Convention on discrimination against women

Established in 1982(1) under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,(2) the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women held its eleventh session in New York from 20 to 30 January 1992.(3)

CEDAW, the treaty-monitoring body for the Convention, considered three initial reports of States parties (Barbados, Ghana, Honduras) and six second periodic reports (China, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Spain, Sri Lanka, Venezuela) on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention.

CEDAW concluded that not all the reports adequately reflected the close connection between discrimination against women, gender-based violence, and violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It offered general comments on specific articles of the Convention, and, in the light of those comments, recommended, among other things, that: States parties should ensure that laws against family violence and abuse, rape, sexual assault and other gender-based violence gave adequate protection to women; States parties in their reports should include information on sexual harassment and should identify the attitudes, customs and practices that perpetuated violence against women; preventive and punitive measures were necessary to overcome trafficking and sexual exploitation; States parties should ensure that coercion was prevented in regard to fertility and reproduction; and States parties should report on the extent of domestic violence and sexual abuse and on the preventive, punitive and remedial measures that had been taken.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, responding to a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,(4) submitted a report(5) to the Commission on the Status of Women on its priority theme—the elimination of de jure and de facto discrimination against women. The report considered the extent of discrimination and positive action to correct inequalities. It concluded that in the current context, positive action was not discriminatory but promoted equality, and Governments should make increasing use of it. Positive action programmes should be flexible and selective and some measures should seek to eliminate or counteract prejudicial attitudes towards women. Others should seek to give women access to wider varieties of education, vocational training and employment opportunities, to ensure their access to credit, land and technology, to foster greater sharing of family and social responsibilities between men and women, and to promote women's active participation in economic and political decision-making. In addition, Governments should publicly declare a commitment to provide equal opportunities, especially at the highest levels, identify and evaluate existing inequalities that could be attributed to past discrimination, set targets and, if desirable, quotas, and specify dates by which those targets should be met. They should also consider establishing an institution or appointing an executive to supervise or monitor the positive action effort.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/17.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the fact that there are now one hundred and twelve States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Noting the importance of the monitoring function of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, as demonstrated most recently in its general recommendation 19 on violence against women, adopted at its eleventh session,

Recalling its resolution 1991/25 of 30 May 1991 and other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council relating to support for the Committee,

Concerned that the duration of the annual session of the Committee, which is considerably less than that of other treaty bodies, has prevented the timely consideration by the Committee of many of the reports submitted to it by States parties to the Convention,

Noting with concern that the Convention is the human rights instrument with the most reservations, and welcoming the decision by a number of States parties to withdraw their reservations,

1. Supports the request of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women for additional meeting time and also supports the proposal that the twelfth session of the Committee should be of three weeks' duration;

2. Recommends that three weeks be allocated for each subsequent session until the Committee removes the backlog of reports to be considered;

3. Strongly supports general recommendation 19 on violence against women, adopted by the Committee at its eleventh session, and calls on States parties to prepare their reports in accordance with this and other general recommendations of the Committee;

4. Welcomes other general recommendations adopted by the Committee at its previous sessions;

5. Urge the Secretary-General to continue to widely publicize the decisions and recommendations of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/17

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) without vote, 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1992/24); agenda item 18. Financial implications: E/1992/24/Add.1.

Also on 30 July, by decision 1992/273, the Council took note of CEDAW's report on its eleventh session and transmitted it to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, in accordance with the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/94.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling its resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, by which it adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on the Convention, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/17 of 30 July 1992,

Taking note of the decisions adopted at the Sixth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention, on 4 February 1992,

Aware of the important contribution that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women can make to eliminating all forms of discrimination against women and to achieving legal and de facto equality between women and men,

Noting the emphasis placed by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, on the ratification of and accession to the Convention,

Having considered the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its tenth and eleventh sessions,

Noting that the Committee agreed, in examining reports, to take due account of the different cultural and socio-economic systems of States parties to the Convention,

Noting also the importance of the monitoring function of the Committee, as demonstrated most recently in its general recommendation No. 19 on violence against women, adopted at its eleventh session,

Concerned about the increased workload of the Committee,

Convinced of the need to adopt measures to enable the Committee to deal in a thorough and timely manner with reports submitted by States parties,

Recalling that, under article 17, paragraph 9, of the Convention, the Secretary-General is required to provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee,

Recalling its resolutions 44/73 of 8 December 1989 and 45/124 of 14 December 1990, in which, inter alia it strongly supported the view of the Committee that the Secretary-General should accord higher priority to strengthening support for the Committee,

Strongly supporting general recommendation No. 19 of the Committee on violence against women, and calling upon States parties to prepare their periodic reports in accordance with this and other general recommendations of the Committee,

Noting with satisfaction that the inter-sessional working group of the Commission on the Status of Women has completed its consideration of the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women,

Welcoming other general recommendations contained in the reports of the Committee on its tenth and eleventh sessions,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the increasing number of States that have ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and supports the recommendation of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to draw attention to those reservations which are incompatible with the objective and purpose of the Convention;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

3. Emphasises the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and requests him to submit annually to the General Assembly a report on the status of the Convention;

5. Takes note also of the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its tenth and eleventh sessions;

6. Invites States parties to the Convention to make all possible efforts to submit their initial as well as their second and subsequent periodic reports on the implementation of the Convention, in accordance with article 18 thereof and with the guidelines provided by the Committee, and to cooperate fully with the Committee in the presentation of their reports;

7. Welcomes the efforts made by the Committee to rationalize its procedures and expedite the consideration of periodic reports and to develop procedures and guidelines for the consideration of second and subsequent periodic reports, and strongly encourages the Committee to continue those efforts;

8. welcomes also, in accordance with general recommendation No. 11 of the Committee, the initiatives taken to provide regional training courses on the preparation and drafting of reports of States parties for government officials and training and information seminars for States considering acceding to the Convention, and urges the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations to support such initiatives;

9. Recognizes the special relevance of the periodic reports of States parties to the Convention to the efforts of the Commission on the Status of Women to review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in those countries;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to provide secretariat staff, including legal staff members expert in human rights treaty implementation, and technical resources for the effective performance by the Committee of its functions;

11. Strongly supports the view of the Committee that the Secretary-General should accord higher priority within existing resources to strengthening technical and substantive support for the Committee, in particular to assist in preparatory research;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for, facilitate and encourage, within existing resources, the dissemination of information relating to the Committee, its decisions and recommendations, the Convention and the concept of legal literacy, taking into account the Committee's own recommendations to that end;

13. Supports the request of the Committee for additional meeting time and requests that the twelfth and thirteenth sessions of the Committee should be of three weeks' duration;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure adequate support to the Committee, and also requests that sufficient resources from within the existing regular budget be provided for that purpose to enable the Committee to deal in a thorough and timely manner with reports submitted by States parties;

15. Decides that, at its forty-ninth session, it will review whether the backlog of the Committee in considering reports has been reduced;

16. Recommends that meetings of the Committee should be scheduled, whenever possible, to allow for the timely transmission of the results of its work to the Commission on the Status of Women, for information, in the same year;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to make the report available to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-ninth session.

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/670) without vote, 5 November (meeting 30); 43-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.22), orally revised; agenda item 94. Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Canada, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Indonesia, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Samoa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 19-26, 28, 30; plenary 89.

Ratifications, accessions and signatures

As at 31 December 1992,(6) the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women had received 96 signatures and 120 ratifications, accessions or successions. During the year, the Convention was ratified or acceded or succeeded to by Benin, Burundi, Cambodia, Croatia, Jordan, Latvia, Namibia, Samoa, Seychelles and Slovenia.

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in September 1992(7) his annual report on the status of the Convention, containing information on signatures, ratifications and accessions as at 1 August 1992 and on reservations and withdrawal of reservations from 1 August 1991 to 1 August 1992.

Chapter XIV

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 1992, the United Nations Children's Fund became increasingly involved in emergency situations caused by man and nature or a combination of both. The Fund provided emergency humanitarian assistance to 54 countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East. These emergency situations took place against a backdrop of some 35,000 largely preventable child deaths in the developing world each day from causes associated with poverty, malnutrition and diseases.

The problems affecting the health and well-being of youth were also widespread in developed and developing countries. More than 1.5 billion people—about one third of the world's population—were aged between 10 and 24 and many of the dramatic forces that were shaping the world were impacting negatively on them.

In October, the Assembly held four special meetings devoted to a conference on the ageing at which it adopted a Proclamation on Ageing and designated the year 1999 as the International Year of Older Persons.

Children

UN Children's Fund

During 1992,⁽¹⁾ the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) cooperated in programmes in more than 130 countries, the majority of which were in Africa (44), followed by Latin America and the Caribbean (35), Asia (34) and the Middle East and North Africa (14). Programme expenditures totalled $744 million, of which $228 million (31 per cent) was spent on child health; $167 million (22 per cent) on emergency operations; $108 million (15 per cent) on planning programme advocacy and support; $84 million (11 per cent) on water supply and sanitation; $72 million (10 per cent) on education; $32 million (4 per cent) on nutrition and household food security; and $53 million (7 per cent) on other programme areas.

Major emergency operations were carried out in Afghanistan, Angola, Haiti, Iraq, Liberia, Mozambique, Somalia, the Sudan and the former Yugoslavia.⁽²⁾ UNICEF provided emergency assistance to more than 40 countries affected by natural disasters and health emergencies, including floods in Ecuador, Lebanon and Pakistan; a volcanic eruption in the Philippines; earthquakes in Egypt, Indonesia and Turkey; cholera outbreaks in El Salvador and Peru; and an outbreak of cerebrospinal meningitis in Cameroon. Drought continued to affect 13 countries in Africa, putting 22 million people at risk of starvation and disease. Countries such as Bangladesh, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Guinea, Kenya, Mauritania and Sierra Leone were affected by influxes of refugees from conflicts in neighbouring countries. UNICEF also provided emergency support for children and women in many of the successor States of the former USSR and for returnees and displaced persons in Sri Lanka.

The UNICEF Executive Board⁽³⁾ held its regular session in New York from 15 to 26 June 1992 and elected officers for the period 1 August 1992 to 31 July 1993. The Programme Committee convened from 15 to 23 and on 26 June, while the Committee on Administration and Finance met on 22, 23 and 26 June.

On 31 July, by decision 1992/301, the Economic and Social Council took note of an extract from the report of the Board on its 1992 session.

Programme policy decisions

The Executive Board approved a number of recommendations by its Programme Committee for programme cooperation in Africa, the Americas and the Caribbean, Asia, and the Middle East and North Africa (see below).⁽⁴⁾ It requested the Executive Director to ensure that national capacity-building was a component in all relevant UNICEF programmes,⁽⁵⁾ and requested him to include in his annual report to the Board, from 1993 onwards, a section on measures taken to strengthen national capacities. It decided that representatives of Board member countries should visit the field for a better insight into UNICEF's activities.⁽⁶⁾

Having reviewed the medium-term plan for 1992-1995,⁽⁷⁾ the Board⁽⁸⁾ reaffirmed the priority of the country programming process in all UNICEF field activities and reconfirmed that situation analysis should be broad and holistic, providing the basis for UNICEF advocacy on behalf of children. It also endorsed the programme objectives contained in the medium-term plan. The Board⁽⁹⁾ approved the medium-term plan as a framework of projections for 1992-1995, including the preparation of up to $400 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1993.

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

After reviewing the Executive Director's report on the follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children,(10) the Executive Board(11) welcomed initiatives taken by States to expedite national programmes of action (NPAs) and invited those that had not initiated or completed their NPAs to do so.

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,(12) submitted a June 1992 report(13) to the Assembly, providing information on action by the international community in response to the World Summit. The report covered, among other things, NPAs, regional developments, the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child,(14) education and literacy, health, nutrition, water and sanitation, children in especially difficult circumstances, urban children, women and the girl child, and responses of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs)

The report noted that, although follow-up had been substantial, much remained to be done and donor countries still needed to demonstrate their commitment to "human priorities". United Nations agencies and international financial institutions also needed to report their plans for World Summit follow-up to their respective governing bodies, in keeping with the Summit's Plan of Action. As of 31 May, only the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) had done so.

On 31 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1992/301, taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the World Summit. On 22 December, by decision 47/447, the General Assembly also took note of the Secretary-General's report, and asked him to submit an updated report in 1993.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Committee on the Rights of the Child submitted a June 1992 report(15) to the General Assembly, providing an overview of its activities related to provisional rules of procedure, methods of work, cooperation with specialized agencies, UNICEF and other United Nations organs, and its future meetings.

The Committee held its second session at Geneva from 28 September to 9 October,(16) adopting a report which provided an overview of its activities and the provisional agenda for its third session to be held in 1993. The States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child held their second meeting (New York, 11 November),(17) and discussed future meetings and their duration.

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/112 on implementation of the Convention. As at 31 December, the number of parties to the Convention stood at 127 and a total of 133 States had signed it.

Universal Children's Day

The Executive Board(18) invited all States to observe Universal Children's Day each year, on 20 November or on a day they considered appropriate, with special emphasis on the promotion of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 47/126 without vote.

Plight of street children

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a major contribution to the protection of the rights of all children,

Recalling also the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted at the World Summit for Children on 30 September 1990, the World Declaration on Education for All adopted by the World Conference on Education for All on 9 March 1990 and chapter 25 of Agenda 21 adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, on 14 June 1992,

Reaffirming that children are a particularly vulnerable section of society whose rights require special protection and that children living under especially difficult circumstances, such as street children, deserve special attention, protection and assistance from their families and communities and as part of national efforts and international cooperation,

Profoundly concerned that the killing of street children and violence against them threaten the most fundamental right of all, the right to life,

Recognizing that all children have the right to health, shelter and education, to an adequate standard of living and to freedom from violence and harassment,

Deeply concerned about the growing number of street children worldwide and the squalid conditions in which these children are often forced to live,

Recognizing the responsibility of Governments to investigate all cases of offences against children and to punish offenders,

Recognizing also that legislation per se is not enough to prevent violation of human rights, including those of street children, and that Governments should implement their laws and complement legislative measures with effective action? inter alia, in the fields of law enforcement and the administration of justice,

Welcoming the efforts made by countries to address the question of street children,

Welcoming also the publicity given to, and the increased awareness of, the plight of street children, and the achievements of non-governmental organizations in promoting the rights of these children and in providing practical assistance to improve their situation, and expressing its appreciation for their continued efforts,

Welcoming further the valuable work of the United Nations Children's Fund and its National Committees in reducing the suffering of street children,

Noting with appreciation the important work carried out in this field by the United Nations, in particular the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme,

Bearing in mind the diverse causes of the emergence and marginalization of street children, including poverty, rural-to-urban migration, unemployment, broken families, intolerance and exploitation, and that such causes are often aggravated and their solution made more difficult by serious socio-economic difficulties,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation for improving the living conditions of children in every country,

Recognizing that the prevention and solution of certain aspects of this phenomenon could also be facilitated in the context of economic and social development,

1. Expresses grave concern at the growing number of incidents worldwide and at reports of street children being involved in and affected by serious crime, drug abuse, violence and prostitution;

2. Urges Governments to continue actively to seek comprehensive solutions to tackle the problems of street children and to take measures to restore their full participation in society and to provide, inter alia, adequate nutrition, shelter, health care and education;

3. Strongly urges Governments to respect fundamental human rights, particularly the right to life, and to take urgent measures to prevent the killing of street children and to combat violence and torture against street children;

4. Emphasizes that strict compliance with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child constitutes a significant step towards solving the problems of street children;

5. Calls upon all States that have not done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

6. calls upon the international community to support, through effective international cooperation, the efforts of States to improve the situation of street children, and encourages States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, in preparing their reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, to bear this problem in mind and to consider requesting, or indicating their need for, technical advice and assistance for initiatives aimed at improving the situation of street children, in accordance with article 45 of the Convention;

7. Invites the Committee on the Rights of the Child to consider the possibility of a general comment on street children;

8. Recommends that the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other relevant treaty-monitoring bodies bear this growing problem in mind when examining reports from States parties;

9. Invites Governments, United Nations bodies and organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate among themselves and to ensure greater awareness and more effective action to solve the problem of street children by, among other measures, supporting development projects that can have a positive impact on the situation of street children;

10. Calls upon special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Subcommission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, within their mandates, to pay particular attention to the plight of street children;

11. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to examine this problem at its forty-ninth session;

12. Decides to consider the question further at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 47/126

18 December 1992 Meeting 92 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/678/Add.2) without vote, 4 December (meeting 59); 62-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.55), orally revised; agenda item 97 (b).

Sponsors: Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Lesotho, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay.

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

In 1992, the Maurice Pate Award, established in 1966(19) to commemorate the first Executive Director of UNICEF, was presented to the Bangladesh Rural Advancement Committee to honour its outstanding service to the poor and most vulnerable populations, children and women. The $25,000 award recognized the Committee's innovative ideas in providing basic education, especially to girls, and health care.(20)

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

Programme expenditures in Africa increased to $284 million in 1992, which represented 38 per cent of total UNICEF programme expenditures.

Africa remained the region of highest priority to UNICEF. Twenty-two countries were affected by emergencies, including military and civil strife, deteriorating economic conditions and environmental degradation leading to drought, massive population displacement, famine and death. Infant and under-five mortality rates remained at 108 and 180 deaths per 1,000 live births, respectively, and African women had the second highest maternal mortality rate in the world, with an average of 626 deaths per 100,000 live births, resulting in more than 140,000 deaths each year.

The main UNICEF response to Africa's needs was through its country programmes which focused on child survival and development and strengthened national capacities to plan, implement, monitor and evaluate programmes for children and women. To counter widespread and recurrent emergencies in Africa, UNICEF rapidly adapted its regular programmes to emergencies as they arose, and incorporated rehabilitation in relief measures.

In the area of child survival, UNICEF placed priority on the reduction of immunizable diseases and diarrhoea using Bamako Initiative activities to help involve the community in the management and financing of health services (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). UNICEF water supply and sanitation activities also addressed hygiene education and community maintenance of water supply systems.

In November, the Organization of African Unity sponsored an International Conference on Assistance to African Children (Dakar, Senegal), outlining the commitments of African countries and donors to meet a series of mid-decade health goals for children and recommend the establishment of a continental follow-up mechanism. The UNICEF Executive Board(21) called on UNICEF, in collaboration with other United Nations agencies, to continue providing emergency assistance to African refugee women and children. It urged the donor community to increase its development cooperation in Africa and encouraged other United Nations agencies, NGOs and multilateral financial institutions to help African countries achieve the goals of the World Summit for Children.

On 30 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/15 on women and children under apartheid, demanding the immediate release of political prisoners and appealing to all countries and United Nations bodies to increase their support for education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities for women and children living under apartheid.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1992, UNICEF programme expenditures in the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $68 million, or 9 per cent of total programme expenditures.

The countries of the region managed in general terms to survive the most acute manifestations of the crisis of the 1980s but it was estimated that by the end of the century, the region's case-load of 195 million poor inhabitants would grow by 4-6 million.

Children, more than any other group, suffered the impact of poverty. Six million children under five years of age were moderately malnourished and one million were severely malnourished. The regional death toll of under five-year-olds was 900,000. Social services remained inadequate for many of the survivors. Some 88 million people were without safe drinking-water, about 139 million did not have basic sanitation services and an estimated 12 million children did not attend school. Twenty-two countries had, however, completed NPAs and regional health ministers had agreed on the need to consolidate targets for universal child immunization. Social mobilization, information and communication continued to rank high among the components of UNICEF assistance.

The Executive Board(22) decided to: consider the question of financial support to the Special Adjustment Facility for Latin America and the Caribbean (SAFLAC); request Latin American and Caribbean Governments to assure the implementation and continuity of projects under SAFLAC; and take up the renewal or expansion of SAFLAC at its next regular session, in 1993.

Asia

UNICEF programme expenditures in Asia totalled $250 million in 1992, or 34 per cent of total expenditures. An analysis of major new trends in UNICEF programmes found that development strategies had not yet made sufficient inroads on the poverty causing malnutrition, disease and neglect among millions of children and women in the region; it reflected on the unique challenge of providing support to countries across the spectrum of socio-economic development. At one end of the spectrum were countries undergoing major structural reforms. In these countries, the indicators for children and women pointed to substantial needs in all sectors. At the other end were countries enjoying robust economic growth and remarkable progress in social services—countries which nevertheless faced the risks of rapidly expanding populations living under marginal circumstances, the negative impact of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), and growing numbers of children in difficult circumstances.

In response to situations of varied scope and dimension, UNICEF helped Governments to maintain and expand the reach of social services while also addressing issues of equal access for communities that were poor or exploited.

Commitments to the World Summit Declaration and Plan of Action continued to be pursued through advocacy, policy dialogue, planning and additional resource mobilization. In China, Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand and Viet Nam, NPAs were an integral part of national development plans, but in low-income countries such as Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Viet Nam and the least developed island countries of the Pacific, there was a need for substantial international support to implement NPAs.

The East Asia and Pacific Regional Office, in cooperation with China and the UNICEF office at Beijing, organized a second regional consultation on the Convention on the Rights of the Child (Beijing, 4-6 August), while in South Asia, UNICEF helped to form small, high-level professional groups to agree on strategies and policy goals for child development. Seven countries in South Asia were implementing NPAs.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1992, UNICEF programme expenditure in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $95 million, which represented 13 per cent of total programme expenditures.

The Middle East and North Africa region was prone to violence and conflict, and man-made emergencies left many children in Djibouti, Iraq, Lebanon, the Sudan, and the West Bank and Gaza in difficult circumstances. UNICEF country programmes in Iraq and the Sudan, in particular, combined emergency operations with normal development activities.

UNICEF-supported work aimed at addressing the psycho-social effects of armed conflict on children in Iraq and Kuwait and a series of regional consultations resulted in a two-year programme to: produce guidebooks for teachers, health and other community outreach workers; create training modules for psychologists; and produce case materials on conflict-induced trauma in children.

Regional activities also focused on the eradication of poliomyelitis, the expansion of measles coverage, the immunization of women with tetanus toxoid and the promotion of safe motherhood. Outbreaks of poliomyelitis occurred in countries with strong prevention programmes and there was concern about slippage in diarrhoeal disease programmes as well. Studies showed a drop in the use of oral rehydration therapy in some countries and the failure to expand its use in others.

Central and Eastern Europe

The Executive Board(23) recognized the need to enhance temporarily the role of UNICEF in Central and Eastern Europe, the Baltic States and the Commonwealth of Independent States, and called for UNICEF activities in the areas of advocacy, technical assistance, training and programme support. It decided that funding for advocacy and policy work would include an additional $1 million for 1992 and $2 million per year for 1993-1994. It authorized the Executive Director to provide on a temporary basis, under exceptional circumstances, technical assistance to non-qualifying countries from supplementary funds.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Immunization

During 1992, immunization coverage was sustained and improved in a majority of countries. Most countries of Asia and the Middle East and North Africa began to implement plans for the eradication of polio and neonatal tetanus and the control of measles. Some countries, mostly in sub-Saharan Africa, were unable to sustain the high levels of immunization coverage achieved in 1990, however, for reasons that included civil unrest, drought and a lack of infrastructure. During 1992, vaccine prices also rose an average of 23 per cent and UNICEF negotiated with suppliers to moderate their increases.

The Children's Vaccine Initiative, which was organized by WHO, UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation in 1991 to develop new and improved vaccines, began work on a more heat-stable polio vaccine and a single-dose vaccine for tetanus.

Meanwhile, UNICEF supported national efforts to strengthen surveillance systems and the reporting of polio, measles and neonatal tetanus. Many countries had already begun to map the incidence of polio and neonatal tetanus to identify high-risk areas where immunization coverage was low.

The Executive Board(24) requested UNICEF to continue to collaborate with other parties in support of the Children's Vaccine Initiative and approved $3 million in additional funds for 1992-1993. It also requested the Executive Director to provide a progress report on the Initiative in 1993.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases

Although the global use of oral rehydration therapy (ORT) had increased from 17 to 38 per cent since 1985, 3 million children still died each year from dehydration caused by diarrhoea and a revitalized programme was needed at global and country levels.

During 1992, with the collaborative support of WHO and UNICEF, local personnel were trained in improved case-management and a series of country-based reviews looked at national plans, goals and targets, as well as the production and availability of oral rehydration salts.

Global and national data indicated that countries must address diarrhoeal disease control with greater specificity and Morocco provided an example of intensified national effort. The King of Morocco declared that deaths due to diarrhoea would be reduced to a minimum within two years and a revised communication strategy focused on family-level decision-making, the social marketing of oral rehydration salts, and the training of health personnel.

Regional meetings of African, Latin American and Asian Governments also identified the control of diarrhoeal diseases as a major area for renewed action.

Acute respiratory infections

Acute respiratory infections, primarily pneumonia, caused the deaths of more than 3.5 million children under five years of age every year.

More than 65 countries in 1992 had plans of action to control acute respiratory infections that included training for medical and paramedical workers and communication activities to improve the response to, and treatment of, pneumonia.

In Latin America, a consultative group was being formed to provide intercountry support for various activities, including surveys, epidemiology, training and communication. In several Asian countries, an integrated package of services was provided for child survival, with a distinct component on acute respiratory infections.

The Executive Board(25) endorsed actions to: support national control programmes and activities; build on existing structures; establish national policies and plans of action; improve the sustainability of control programmes; involve community health workers in the diagnosis and treatment of pneumonia; and ensure the full involvement of mothers and communities in these efforts. The Board decided that UNICEF would continue to offer training and supervision in the standard case-management of acute respiratory infections, provide drugs, develop sound communication strategies, provide technology for the diagnosis and treatment of pneumonia, and try to prevent pneumonia by ensuring access to immunization and by promoting breast-feeding, good nutrition and a healthy environment.

Nutrition

In many countries, there had been slow but significant declines in malnutrition as measured by the numbers of underweight children. The prevalence of protein-energy malnutrition in recent years had fallen in Brazil, China, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Thailand, Venezuela and Zimbabwe, while the situation had remained static in countries such as Bangladesh, Colombia, the Philippines and Rwanda, and deteriorated in several African countries. Wars and domestic conflicts caused famine in Angola, Ethiopia, Liberia, Mozambique, Somalia and the Sudan, while severe drought affected household food security and nutrition in most countries of eastern and southern Africa. Global data indicated that 100 million of the world's 184 million malnourished children lived in South Asia.

UNICEF continued to promote its nutrition strategy throughout the developing world in 1992 although the rapid development of a coherent strategy at the national level was constrained by factors such as: a lack of national consensus on the nature of the nutrition problem; continued marginalization of the problem by Governments, agencies and universities; a lack of recognition of the important role of sectoral policies for nutrition related to agriculture, health, education, water supply and sanitation; and an inadequate understanding of the key role women can play in improving nutrition.

In the UNICEF medium-term plan for 1992-1995, four strategies were selected to help countries achieve nutrition goals. They were: control of the three major forms of micronutrient malnutrition (iron, iodine and vitamin-A deficiencies); protection, promotion and support of breast-feeding and improved child feeding practices; community participation and empowerment through improved assessment, analysis and capacity to design sustainable actions; and improved national nutrition policies emphasizing dialogue, advocacy, training and the use of information systems.

During 1992, 90 developing countries encouraged their hospitals to become "baby-friendly" by providing optimum support for breast-feeding. In more than half of those countries, a total of 767 hospitals were committed to achieving, or had already achieved, "baby-friendly" status. UNICEF found that there was a universal need for retraining health workers to support breast-feeding and, in response to national demand for support, the Fund recruited a full time lactation management specialist to be based at headquarters. UNICEF and WHO enhanced the training curricula for health care professionals and special regional training meetings were held in Central America, North America, South-East Asia, West Africa and China.

The availability of artificial feeding products and utensils within health-care facilities was found to be an obstacle to breast-feeding in many countries; in 1991,(26) the UNICEF Executive Board had called on manufacturers and distributors of breast-milk substitutes to end the distribution of free, low-cost supplies by the end of 1992. The International Association of Infant Food Manufacturers promised that its 29 members would stop providing free and lost-cost supplies to maternity wards in developing countries, provided that Governments prohibited the practice by all manufacturers. The Association later extended its promise to include Eastern Europe and the republics of the former USSR.

Basic education

Of all the major goals for children in the 1990s none was more critical than basic education. After the World Conference on Education for All in 1990, some international donors committed additional resources for education but bilateral donors were slow to respond and those countries in sub-Saharan Africa, Latin America and the Middle East that had lagged in the area still had not developed feasible strategies for achieving universal primary education within the decade.

The UNICEF Executive Board,(27) noting the report of the third meeting of the UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education (Paris, 6-7 May 1992): urged the UNESCO and UNICEF secretariats to appeal to member countries to give education the highest priority; called on heads of Government to assume personal leadership in the achievement of basic education goals for the year 2000; endorsed the analysis and dissemination of key innovations in basic education; and also endorsed the monitoring of progress towards education for all at country levels.

Children in especially difficult circumstances

Armed conflicts in many parts of the world in 1992 continued to put large numbers of children in grave and unusual danger.

Increasingly, the rehabilitation of children suffering from psycho-social stress in particular was incorporated into emergency programmes. UNICEF assisted programmes for psycho-social rehabilitation in 13 countries, including Croatia, Iraq and Liberia, and methods were developed to extend assistance through schools, health care systems, community organizations and mass media.

UNICEF also continued to assist the early detection and community-based rehabilitation of physically disabled children in many countries affected by armed conflict, but its capacity to respond was limited in comparison with the size of the problem.

Continuing studies of child abuse and neglect in industrialized countries indicated that the problems were much more widespread than previously realized; however, they were hardly acknowledged as problems in most developing countries. Few countries had programmes to monitor, respond to or prevent them. However, the increased membership of developing countries in the International Society for Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect indicated a growing interest in the issue, and the increasing attention of WHO and the International Paediatric Association had helped to mobilize the medical community.

Child prostitution, particularly as it related to tourism in South-East Asia and Latin America, and trafficking in children in South Asia, were the subject of regional meetings in 1992. Several regional NGO networks were being organized to combat the problem and UNICEF assisted their efforts through the Campaign to End Child Prostitution in Asian Tourism, the International Catholic Child Bureau, and the International Abolitionist Federation. A number of local NGOs developed education programmes to prevent children being sold or lured into prostitution, and others helped young prostitutes to obtain medical, educational and other services, as well as to protect their rights.

Street children remained one of the largest categories of children in especially difficult circumstances and the killing of street children in Brazil and other Latin American countries drew increased attention to their plight.

UNICEF finances

In 1992, UNICEF income totalled $938 million, $131 million more than in 1991. Income by source included: $688 million from Government contributions, $135 million from non-governmental sources, $95 million from greeting card and related operations, and $19 million from the United Nations system.

Expenditures totalled $922 million, $170 million more than in 1991. Of the total, $836 million was for programme expenditures and $86 million for administrative expenditures.

Budget appropriations

At its 1992 session, the UNICEF Executive Board approved(28) a total of $419,915,000 for general resources funding and a total of $565,356,000 for supplementary funding for programme cooperation. For each region, the respective amounts were: Africa, $178,275,000 and $192,384,000; the Americas and the Caribbean, $65,060,000 and $99,059,000; Asia, $154,201,000 and $238,888,000; and the Middle East and North Africa, $22,379,000 and $35,025,000.

The Board, in a decision regarding the use of global funds,(29) adopted resolutions on the general resources and supplementary funds programme budget estimates for 1992-1993, as well as the supplementary funds programme plan estimates for 1994-1995.

Further, the Board(30) approved the medium-term plan as a framework of projections for 1992-1995, including the preparation of up to $400 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1993.

In another action, the Board(31) approved, on an interim basis, the recommendations of the Executive Director regarding UNICEF recovery policy, and requested him to review all elements of the structure and adequacy of the recovery policy, taking into account the views of delegations.

The Board(32) also noted the financial report and statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1991 and approved recommendations on the structure and format of budget documents.(33)

Organizational questions

The Executive Board(34) noted a report on the composition of all international Professional core staff and international project staff by title, grade, duty station and nationality. It deferred until 1993 a decision on whether to proceed with a review of administrative and management structure at UNICEF headquarters.(35)

Basic cooperation agreement

A report on the standard Basic Cooperation Agreement between UNICEF and Governments was submitted to the March 1992 organizational session of the UNICEF Executive Board.(36)

The Executive Director presented to the Board for its consideration the text of the standard Basic Cooperation Agreement(37) which had been revised in the light of observations made by delegations at the 1991 regular Board session.

The Board took note(38) of the Agreement, and requested the secretariat to continue discussions with concerned Governments.

Greeting Card Operation

During its 1991-92 season,(1) the Greeting Card Operation (GCO) contributed $82.2 million to UNICEF general resources, $5.6 million more than in the previous year. The total number of cards sold was estimated at 150 million.

The Executive Board(39) approved the greeting card and related operations work plan and proposed budget for 1992. It also noted the GCO financial report and accounts for the 1990 season for the year ended 30 April 1991 and the GCO provisional report for the 1991 season (covering 1 May 1991-30 April 1992).(40)

Youth

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,(1) submitted a report in July 1992(2) on policies and programmes involving youth. The report provided an overview of the situation of youth, highlighting critical issues, and analysed the implementation of guidelines(3) for further planning and follow-up in the area of youth. It also discussed channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations and preparations for the tenth anniversary in 1995 of the International Youth Year (IYY).(3)

The report stated that in recent years unemployment and underemployment had worsened among youth in many developing and developed countries. In the countries of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, the rate of youth unemployment was 13 per cent and rising. The least developed countries were worst hit by this problem, which was compounded by stagnant economies, illiteracy and lack of skills. Problems affecting the health and well-being of adolescents, including nutrition, sexually transmitted diseases, alcohol consumption, drug abuse, smoking, early marriages, teenage pregnancy and induced abortion, were widespread and the rising incidence of juvenile delinquency in many countries was precipitated by socio-economic problems. Illiteracy among rural young people in several developing countries remained high.

Analysing implementation of the guidelines, the report stated that the existing global distribution of opportunities and the external debt of many developing countries had caused the retrenchment of youth programmes and policies. Policy implementation for youth had also suffered from a lack of integrated planning and a narrow concept of development that favoured economic dimensions over social needs.

The report observed that the anniversary of IYY would offer an opportunity for active and continued advocacy on behalf of youth and that the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs had begun to prepare for its observance.

On 20 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/7 on human rights and youth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/85 without vote.

Policies and programmes involving youth

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, by which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also resolution 40/14 entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace", adopted on 18 November 1985 by the General Assembly acting as the United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year, by which the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth were endorsed, and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling further its resolution 45/103 of 14 December 1990, in which it decided to devote a plenary meeting at its fiftieth session to youth questions,

Noting that the year 1995 will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Charter of the United Nations and the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year,

Recognizing that, in implementing the guidelines, priority should be given to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, including the right to education and to work, and to the resolution of other urgent problems faced by young people in the present-day world, such as hunger, drug abuse, diseases, including acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), and the deterioration of the environment,

Recalling the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which entered into force on 2 September 1990, the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted by the World Summit for Children on 30 September 1990,

Noting the holding of the Youth Forum of the United Nations System, at Vienna from 27 to 29 May 1991,

Noting also the fifth anniversary of the youth employment programme HOPE '87, and welcoming with appreciation its increasing activities and close collaboration with the United Nations, in particular the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and with the Council of Europe in bringing about employment opportunities for young people, especially in developing countries,

Taking note of the proposals of the ad hoc open-ended working group established by the Commission for Social Development to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26 of 24 May 1990, with regard to achieving the equitability of young persons with disabilities, made at its second session, held at Vienna from 11 to 15 May 1992,

1. Calls upon all States, all United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through the Commission for Social Development, the specialized agencies and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to continue to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote and monitor, by using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as a focal point, the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, specifically on such themes as communication, health, malnutrition, poverty, housing, culture, youth employment, illiteracy, juvenile delinquency, education, leisure-time activities, drug abuse and the environment;

3. Calls upon Member States to enable young people to obtain a modern education on such subjects as environmental and human rights issues;

4. Calls once again upon the United Nations Postal Administration to produce commemorative United Nations stamps in 1995 to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year;

5. Emphasizes the need for a review and appraisal of the progress achieved and the obstacles encountered in the implementation of the guidelines and, on the basis of the evaluation, for preparation of a world youth programme of action to the year 2000 and beyond, with a target orientation and within a specific time-frame;

6. Invites all Member States to consider preparing a national plan of action or a national calendar of events, for 1993-1995, based on an analytical national evaluation of the situation and needs of youth;

7. Calls once again upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17;

8. Invites the regional commissions, as appropriate, together with regional youth and youth-serving organizations, to undertake a comprehensive review of the progress achieved and the obstacles encountered in the regions since 1985 and to propose draft regional youth programmes of action to the year 2000 and beyond;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the preparation of a draft world youth programme of action to the year 2000 and beyond in accordance with proposals to be submitted by Member States, the United Nations and non-governmental youth organizations and in consultation with the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

10. Calls upon youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations system and youth and youth organizations and, especially, to contribute to the preparations for the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year and to the formulation of a world youth programme of action to the year 2000 and beyond;

11. Again invites Governments, whenever possible, to include youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings, thus enhancing and strengthening the channels of communication through the discussion of youth-related issues, with a view to finding solutions to the problems confronting youth in the contemporary world;

12. Invites Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the United Nations Youth Fund, in order to enable it to continue its mandated role and to contribute effectively to the needs of developing countries in the field of youth;

13. Decides to consider the question of policies and programmes involving youth under the item entitled "Social development" at its forty-ninth session on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution.

Ageing persons

Two reports on ageing—implementation of the International Plan of Action⁽¹⁾ and global targets for the year 2001⁽²⁾—were submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly during 1992.

In September, in accordance with Assembly resolutions adopted in 1991,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General presented the report on implementing the 1982 International Plan of Action on Ageing.⁽⁴⁾ The report was before the Assembly at four special meetings of the plenary (15-16 October) devoted to a conference on ageing. The Conference examined the impact of ageing on national life, infrastructure and spending and focused on future strategies and a Proclamation on Ageing was adopted (see below). The Conference was preceded by a non-governmental forum in observance of the International Day for the Elderly, 1 October. The report concluded that the next decade would usher in what it called the age of ageing, during which the world's population would emerge with an elderly population of 10 per cent, projected to increase to 20 per cent and more in subsequent decades. Adjustment of social and economic infrastructures was expected to lag in many places, posing a challenge to individual countries and the international community.

Also in September, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions of 1991,⁽³⁾ as well as an Assembly resolution of 1990,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General presented the report on global targets that gave special attention to practical strategies. The report proposed eight targets for the year 2001, with enabling steps for each one. The target strategies were to: support countries in setting national targets on ageing; generate support for integrating ageing into development plans and programmes; generate support for community-based programmes of care and participation of older persons; improve cross-national research on ageing; include an item on ageing in international events and meetings; establish a global network of senior volunteers for social and economic development; and facilitate closer cooperation among NGOs and intergovernmental organizations on ageing. A guide for setting national targets was included.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/5 without vote.

Proclamation on Ageing

The General Assembly,

Having convened an international conference on ageing on 15 and 16 October 1992 on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Ageing,

Adopts the Proclamation on Ageing, annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Proclamation on Ageing

The General Assembly,

Noting the unprecedented ageing of populations taking place throughout the world,

Conscious that the ageing of the world's population represents an unparalleled, but urgent, policy and programme challenge to Governments, non-governmental organizations and private groups to ensure that the needs of the aged and their human resource potential are adequately addressed,

Conscious also that population ageing in developing regions is proceeding much more rapidly than it occurred in the developed world,

Aware that a revolutionary change in the demographic structure of societies requires a fundamental change in the way in which societies organize their affairs,

Optimistic that the coming decade will see an increase in partnerships, practical initiatives and resources devoted to ageing,

Welcoming the increasing contributions of older persons to economic, social and cultural development,

Welcoming also broad participation in the United Nations programme on ageing,

Recognizing that ageing is a life-long process and that preparation for old age must begin in childhood and continue throughout the life cycle,

Recognizing also that older persons are entitled to aspire to and attain the highest possible level of health,

Recognizing further that with increasing age some individuals will need comprehensive community and family care,

Reaffirming the International Plan of Action on Ageing, which it endorsed in its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, and the United Nations Principles for Older Persons, annexed to its resolution 46/91 of 16 December 1991,

Noting the many United Nations activities that address ageing in the context of development, human rights, population, employment, education, health, housing, family, disability and the advancement of women,

Having considered the challenges inherent in implementing the Plan of Action,

Recognizing the need for a practical strategy on ageing for the decade 1992-2001,

1. Urges the international community:

(a) To promote the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing;

(b) To disseminate widely the United Nations Principles for Older Persons;

(c) To support the practical strategies for reaching the global targets on ageing for the year 2001;

(d) To support the continuing efforts of the Secretariat to clarify policy options by improving data collection, research, training, technical cooperation and information exchange on ageing;

(e) To ensure that the ageing of populations is adequately addressed in the regular programmes of competent United Nations organizations and bodies, and that adequate resources are assigned through redeployment;

(f) To support broad and practical partnerships within the United Nations programme on ageing, including partnerships between Governments, specialized agencies and United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations and the private sector;

(g) To strengthen the Trust Fund for Ageing as a means of supporting developing countries in adjusting to the ageing of their populations;

(h) To encourage donor and recipient countries to include older persons in their development programmes;

(i) To highlight ageing at major forthcoming events, including, in the near future, events in the areas of human rights, the family, population, the advancement of women, crime prevention, youth and the proposed world summit for social development;

(j) To encourage the press and the media to play a central role in the creation of awareness of population ageing and related issues, including the celebration of the International Day for the Elderly on 1 October and the dissemination of the United Nations Principles for Older Persons;

(k) To promote intraregional and interregional cooperation and exchange of resources for programmes and projects on ageing, including those for life-long healthy ageing, income generation and new forms of productive ageing;

(l) To provide the immense human and material resources now urgently needed for adjustments to humanity's coming of age, which can be understood as a demographic phenomenon, but also as a social, economic and cultural one of great promise;

2. Also urges the support of national initiatives on ageing in the context of national cultures and conditions, so that:

(a) Appropriate national policies and programmes for the elderly are considered as part of overall development strategies;

(b) Policies which enhance the role of Government, the voluntary sector and private groups are expanded and supported;

(c) Governmental and non-governmental organizations collaborate in the development of primary health care, health promotion and self-help programmes for the elderly;

(d) Older persons are viewed as contributors to their societies and not as a burden;

(e) The entire population is engaged in preparing for the later stages of life;

(f) Old and young generations cooperate in creating a balance between tradition and innovation in economic, social and cultural development;

(g) Policies and programmes are developed which respond to the special characteristics, needs and abilities of older women;

(h) Older women are given adequate support for their largely unrecognized contributions to the economy and the well-being of society;

(i) Older men are encouraged to develop social, cultural and emotional capabilities which they may have been prevented from developing during bread winning years;

(j) Community awareness and participation is encouraged in the formulation and implementation of programmes and projects with the involvement of older persons;

(k) Families are supported in providing care and all family members are encouraged to cooperate in caregiving;

(l) Local authorities cooperate with older persons, businesses, civic associations and others in exploring new ways of maintaining age integration in family and community;

(m) Decision makers and researchers cooperate in undertaking action-oriented studies;

(n) Policy makers focus attention and resources on tangible opportunities rather than on desirable but unobtainable goals;

(o) International cooperation is expanded to the extent feasible in the context of the strategies for reaching the global targets on ageing for the year 2001;

3. Decides to observe the year 1999 as the International Year of Older Persons, supported by the regular programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 and by voluntary contributions, in recognition of humanity's demographic coming of age and the promise it holds for maturing attitudes and capabilities in social, economic, cultural and spiritual undertakings, not least for global peace and development in the next century.

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/86 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing: integration of older persons in development
The General Assembly,

Mindful of the challenges the ageing of populations poses to all countries,

Noting with appreciation the activities of the global information campaign for the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Ageing and the many observances of the International Day for the Elderly,

Noting with satisfaction the active participation of Member States, specialized agencies, United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations, older persons and experts in developing a practical strategy on ageing in the form of a set of targets on ageing for the year 2001,

Welcoming the convening of the XVth International Congress of Gerontology at Budapest, from 4 to 9 July 1993,

Welcoming with appreciation the participation of older persons in development programmes and projects,

Aware of the plight of older persons, particularly those in developing countries and those in difficult circumstances,

Aware of the heavy obligations on families that provide care to older persons and the need for comprehensive community care programmes,

Aware further of the increasing concern of development agencies for securing the human and financial resources needed for adjusting policies and programmes to population ageing,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the global targets on ageing for the year 2001: a practical strategy and on the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing;

2. Adopts the global targets on ageing for the year 2001 as a practical strategy on ageing, and urges Member States to support that strategy and to consult the guide for setting national targets on ageing;

3. Invites the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, as the lead and coordinating agency for the global targets, to update the target strategies periodically on the basis of achievements and new opportunities and to refine indicators for measuring progress in cooperation with the International Institute on Ageing in Malta and others;

4. Invites the regional commissions to assist Member States in their regions in setting regional targets on ageing for the year 2001, bearing in mind the global targets and the diverse national needs in their regions;

5. Invites the specialized agencies and United Nations bodies to examine technical, organizational and financial means of strengthening the inter-agency consultative process, including the biennial meetings on ageing, and to suggest measures for the consideration of the Administrative Committee on Coordination;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to give all possible support, in the form of both regular and extrabudgetary resources, to the Ageing Unit of the Centre, to enable it to fulfil its mandate as lead agency for the action programme on ageing for 1992 and beyond;

7. Welcomes the support of the United Nations Population Fund, the Government of Sweden and two non-governmental organizations for the research project of the Centre entitled "Developmental Implications of Demographic Change: Global Population Ageing" and invites continuing support for this project as the basis of a global research component at the Centre;

8. Invites Member States to second national experts and junior professional officers to the Ageing Unit of the Centre to support selected target strategies;

9. Requests the Commission for Social Development to convene an ad hoc informal working group at its thirty-third session for the third review and appraisal of the International Plan of Action on Ageing and for proposing measures in support of setting national targets on ageing in the decade ahead;

10. Invites interested Member States and organizations to support the Centre in establishing and maintaining a data bank on ageing policies and programmes so that the data gathered in the quadrennial reviews can be systematized and made available to Member States and others on a continuing basis;

11. Acknowledges with appreciation the major contribution of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to the global information campaign, and requests it to continue its work on ageing during the coming decade;

12. Also acknowledges with appreciation the initiative, expertise and dedication of the non-governmental community, and invites the Centre to explore the feasibility of establishing a non-governmental advisory committee, funded by voluntary contributions, to assist the Secretariat in promoting the United Nations Principles for Older Persons and in implementing the Plan of Action and the target strategies;

13. Commends the International Institute on Ageing on its training programme and related activities, and invites national, regional and international organizations to cooperate closely with the Institute;

14. Urges the United Nations, Member States and non-governmental organizations to support the African Society of Gerontology in developing and implementing a regional programme of activities on ageing;

15. Invites interested Member States and others to explore the feasibility of establishing a training institute on ageing for Latin America and the Caribbean;

16. Also invites Member States generously to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Ageing in order to enable it to continue serving as an operational tool of the United Nations programme on ageing;

17. Invites Member States, corporations and foundations to support the Banyan Fund Association: A World Fund for Ageing;

18. Uses the United Nations Development Programme and other development agencies to include a component on ageing in their regular programmes;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Social development".

Chapter XV

Refugees and displaced persons

During 1992, the world's refugee population increased by almost 2 million, to 18.9 million. In the post-cold war era, resurgent nationalism, together with the economic and social consequences of the collapse of the old world order, had led to a multiplication of conflicts, many of which also resulted from ethnic, tribal or religious tensions.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) undertook to strengthen its emergency preparedness and response capacity, and to couple it with political initiatives to promote the safe and voluntary return of refugees to their countries of origin.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee considered international protection of refugees; the refugee situation in Afghanistan, Africa, Cambodia and Yugoslavia; the follow-up to the International Conference on Central American Refugees; and refugee women and children.

The Nansen Medal for 1992—presented since 1954 in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—was awarded to Dr. Richard von Weizsäcker, President of Germany, for his stand against all forms of intolerance and xenophobia and his support for refugees.

Programme and finances of UNHCR

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its forty-third session (Geneva, 5-9 October 1992), the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme(1) expressed concern about the inadequacy of international protection for various groups of refugees and noted the scale and complexity of the refugee problem, the risk of new refugee situations developing, and the challenges posed to refugee protection by the constantly changing global political, social and economic climate. The Executive Committee deplored ethnic and other forms of intolerance as a major cause of forced migratory movement, and expressed its concern regarding xenophobia in segments of the population in a number of countries receiving refugees and asylum-seekers.

Deploping the tragic events in the former Yugoslavia, which had resulted in the displacement of more than 3 million persons, the Executive Committee urged all Governments and parties concerned to contribute generously to the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Programme of Action and Appeal for Former Yugoslavia, which had been issued on 4 September 1992.

The Committee noted the precarious situation of many refugee women, whose physical safety was often endangered and who did not always have access to basic necessities. It encouraged UNHCR to take further measures to enhance the protection of refugee women and children and welcomed the appointment of a Senior Coordinator for Refugee Children.

The Executive Committee requested the High Commissioner to seek expanded cooperation with other international bodies, such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Food Programme (WFP), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, the International Organization for Migration and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), to expand awareness of the link between refugees and human rights, as well as development and environmental issues.

On 31 July 1992, by decision 1992/304, the Economic and Social Council took note of the High Commissioner's report for 1991/92.(2)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/105.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of her Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner on the work of its forty-third session, and taking note of the statement made by the High Commissioner on 10 November 1992,

Recalling its resolution 46/106 of 16 December 1991,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner, as well as the fundamental importance of the international protection function of the High Commissioner and the need for States to cooperate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this primary and essential responsibility,

Noting with satisfaction that one hundred and fourteen States are now parties to the 1951 Convention and/or the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Welcoming the valuable support extended by Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out her humanitarian tasks,

Noting with concern that the number of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner, as well as of other persons to whom her Office is asked to extend assistance and protection, has continued to increase and that their protection continues to be seriously jeopardized in many situations as a result of non-admission, expulsion, refoulement and unjustified detention, as well as other threats to their physical security, dignity and well-being, and lack of respect for fundamental freedoms and human rights,

Commending the continued efforts of the High Commissioner to improve the situation of refugee women and children, who represent the majority of refugee populations and who, in many cases, are exposed to a variety of difficult situations affecting their physical and legal protection, as well as their psychological and material well-being,

Emphasizing the need for States to assist the High Commissioner in her efforts to find durable and timely solutions to the problems of refugees based on new approaches that take into account the current size and characteristics of these problems and are built on respect for fundamental freedoms and human rights and internationally agreed protection principles and concerns,

Welcoming the commitment of the High Commissioner, bearing in mind her mandate and responsibilities, to explore and undertake activities aimed at preventing conditions that give rise to refugee outflows, as well as to strengthen emergency preparedness and response mechanisms and the concerted pursuit of voluntary repatriation,

Commending those States, particularly the least developed among them, which, despite severe economic and development challenges of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner into their territories, and emphasizing the need to share the burden of these States to the maximum extent possible through international assistance, including development-oriented assistance, and through promotion of durable solutions,

Commending the High Commissioner and her staff for the dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, and paying special tribute to those staff members who have lost their lives in the course of their duties,

1. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the function of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide international protection and the need for States to cooperate fully with the Office in fulfilling this function, in particular by acceding to and fully and effectively implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments;

2. Recognizes the increasing magnitude and complexity of present refugee problems, the risk of further refugee outflows in certain countries or regions and the challenges confronting refugee protection;

3. Emphasizes the need to keep issues related to refugees, displaced persons, asylum-seekers and other migratory flows firmly on the international political agenda, especially the question of solution-oriented approaches to deal with such contemporary problems and their causes;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from taking measures that jeopardize the institution of asylum, in particular by returning or expelling refugees contrary to the fundamental prohibitions against these practices, and urges States to ensure fair and efficient determination procedures for asylum-seekers and to continue to give humane treatment and to grant asylum to refugees;

5. Expresses deep concern regarding persistent problems in some countries or regions, which seriously jeopardize the security or well-being of refugees, including incidents of refoulement, expulsion, physical attacks and detention under unacceptable conditions, and calls upon States to take all measures necessary to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection as well as humane treatment of asylum-seekers in accordance with internationally recognized human rights norms;

6. Acknowledges with appreciation the progress made in the implementation of the Guidelines on the Protection of Refugee Women and calls upon States, the High Commissioner and other parties concerned to cooperate in eliminating all forms of discrimination, sexual exploitation and violence against female refugees and asylum-seekers and in promoting their active involvement in decisions affecting their lives and communities;

7. Welcomes the appointment of a Senior Coordinator for Refugee Children, and reiterates the importance of promoting measures to ensure the protection and well-being of refugee children, in particular unaccompanied minors, in coordination with States and other international, intergovernmental and non-governmental or organizations;

8. Welcomes also the proposal of the High Commissioner to appoint an environmental coordinator responsible for developing guidelines and taking other measures for incorporating environmental considerations into the programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner, especially in the least developed countries, in view of the impact on the environment of the large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner;

9. Reaffirm the importance of attaining durable solutions to refugee problems, including voluntary repatriation, integration in the country of asylum and resettlement in third countries, as appropriate, and urges all States and relevant organizations to support the High Commissioner in her efforts to search for durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons, primarily through the preferred solution of voluntary repatriation;

10. Underlines strongly State responsibility, particularly as it relates to the countries of origin, including addressing root causes, facilitating voluntary repatriation of refugees and the return, in accordance with international practice, of their nationals who are not refugees;

11. Notes the significant organized voluntary repatriation movements that have taken place in 1992, and calls upon all States and relevant organizations to support the High Commissioner in continuing and further reinforcing her efforts to promote conditions conducive to voluntary return in safety and dignity;

12. Urges the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to involve international, national and intergovernmental development agencies, as well as non-governmental agencies, in the planning phases for voluntary repatriation, so as to ensure that basic reintegration assistance is complemented by broader development initiatives focused on the areas of return;

13. Supports the strengthened efforts by the High Commissioner to explore protection and assistance strategies that aim at preventing conditions that give rise to refugee outflows and at addressing their root causes, and urges her to pursue such efforts, bearing in mind fundamental protection principles and her mandate, in close coordination with the Governments concerned and within an inter-agency, intergovernmental and non-governmental framework as appropriate;

14. Welcomes, in this context, efforts by the High Commissioner, on the basis of specific requests from the Secretary-General or the competent principal organs of the United Nations and with the consent of the concerned State, to undertake activities in favour of internally displaced persons, taking into account the complementarities of the mandates and expertise of other relevant organizations;

15. Recognizes the importance of the promotion of refugee law as an element of emergency preparedness, as well as to facilitate prevention of and solutions to refugee problems, and calls upon the High Commissioner to continue to strengthen the training and promotion activities of her Office;

16. Strongly deplores ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of forced migratory movements, and urges States to take all necessary steps to ensure respect for human rights, especially the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

17. Notes the relationship between situations giving rise to refugee flows and lack of respect for human rights, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to increase cooperation with the Commission on Human Rights, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and relevant organizations;

18. Expresses concern regarding xenophobia and racist attitudes in segments of the population in a number of countries receiving refugees and asylum-seekers, which expose them to considerable danger, and, therefore, calls upon States and the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to work actively to promote broader understanding throughout national communities of the plight of refugees and asylum-seekers;

19. Welcomes the progress made by the High Commissioner in her efforts to enhance the capacity of her Office to respond to emergencies, and encourages her to continue to work closely with the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, as well as with United Nations organizations and governmental, inter-governmental or non-governmental bodies, to assure a coordinated and effective response to complex, humanitarian emergency situations;

20. Expresses deep concern at conditions, in a number of countries or regions, which seriously endanger the delivery of humanitarian assistance and the security of the staff of the High Commissioner and other relief workers, deplores the recent loss of lives among the staff involved in humanitarian operations, and calls upon States to take all necessary measures to ensure the safe and timely access for humanitarian assistance and the security of international and local staff undertaking humanitarian work in their countries;

21. Expresses deep appreciation for the generous humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries that, despite limited resources, continue to admit large numbers of refugees;

22. Urges the international community, including non-governmental organizations, in accordance with the principle of international solidarity and in the spirit of burden-sharing, to continue to assist the countries referred to in paragraph 21 and the High Commissioner in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden that the care of refugees and asylum-seekers represents;

23. Calls upon all Governments and other donors to contribute to the programmes of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the need to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors, to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional and timely income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector in order to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner are met.

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/715) without vote, 18 November (meeting 43); 66-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 96. Continuation of UNHCR

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,(3) the Assembly reviewed the arrangements for UNHCR to determine whether the Office should continue beyond 31 December 1993.

On 16 December 1992, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/104.

Continuation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/108 of 7 December 1987, in which it decided to review, not later than at its forty-seventh session, the arrangements for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1993,

Recognizing the need for concerted international action on behalf of the increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

Considering the outstanding work that has been performed by the Office of the High Commissioner in providing international protection and material assistance to refugees and displaced persons as well as in promoting permanent solutions to their problems,

Noting with deep appreciation the effective manner in which the Office of the High Commissioner has been dealing with various essential humanitarian tasks entrusted to it,

1. Decides to continue the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for a further period of five years from 1 January 1994;

2. Decides also to review, not later than at its fifty-second session, the arrangements for the Office of the High Commissioner with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1998.

General Assembly resolution 47/104

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR total voluntary funds expenditure in 1992 amounted to $1,071.9 million. In addition, the United Nations regular budget contribution to UNHCR amounted to $21.2 million. In terms of activities and related expenditure, 1992 was a record year in UNHCR's history, exceeding 1991 expenditure by 24 per cent. In 1992, expenditures under General Programmes amounted to $382.1 million. Expenditures under Special Programmes totalled $689.8 million, with about 45 per cent of that amount relating to UNHCR's activities in the former Yugoslavia. Other important expenditures concerned Indo-Chinese refugees, Afghan and Cambodian repatriation programmes and special emergency programmes in the Horn of Africa. Special appeals were made in 1992 for repatriation (Angola, Cambodia, the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees, Eritrea, Sri Lanka) while others were made for emergencies (Bangladesh, the former Yugoslavia). UNHCR also appealed for funds in cooperation with the United Nations. In 1992, it contributed to consolidated inter-agency appeals issued by the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs and the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Cambodia, the Horn of Africa, the drought emergency in southern Africa and the former Yugoslavia (for details on the activities of the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs, see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Executive Committee in 1991 had approved a budgetary target for General Programmes amounting to $373.1 million for 1992.(4) Projected needs for Special Programmes at that time amounted to $568.1 million, bringing total needs for 1992 to an estimated $941.2 million. An increase in the General Programmes target for 1992 from $373.1 million to $386.4 million, mainly to cover newly identified needs in Africa in addition to measures under the Emergency Fund, was approved by a special session of the Executive Committee on 26 June.(5) Projections made in December 1991 for Special Programmes activities were updated during the first half of 1992 in response to developments in the former Yugoslavia and to meet the needs of the repatriation programme for Afghan refugees.

In October,(1) the Executive Committee approved the country and area programmes and the overall allocations for the 1993 General Programmes, amounting to $378.2 million, including $20 million for the Emergency Fund.

On 17 December,(6) the Executive Committee approved a 1993 General Programmes target of $413.6 million (including $25 million for the Emergency Fund, $20 million for a General Allocation for Voluntary Repatriation and a Programme Reserve of $33.5 million). Projections for 1993 under Special Programmes amounted to $959.7 million, of which $447.6 million was budgeted for the former Yugoslavia.

Accounts

The audited financial statements on funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 1991 showed a total expenditure of $863 million and total income of $952 million.(7)

In October,(1) the Executive Committee noted the observations of the Board of Auditors relating to management issues, especially those dealing with financial management and control systems, and urged UNHCR to enhance its internal control procedures and those of its operational partners.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 47/211, accepted the financial report of the Board of Auditors and a summary of its principal findings, conclusions and recommendations for remedial action(8) and approved the Board's recommendations and conclusions together with the comments contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.(9)

Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters

The Executive Committee's Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters in 1992

(Geneva, 2 October)(10) considered a broad range of issues, including an update on UNHCR programmes and funding; refugee women and children; UNHCR's emergency response capacity; voluntary repatriation; evaluation activities; refugee statistics; the environment; and the status of women in UNHCR.

Refugee assistance and protection

Assistance

During 1992,(1) UNHCR continued to implement the High Commissioner's three-pronged strategy of prevention, preparedness and solutions, as the global refugee situation again deteriorated. While responding to refugee situations in countries of asylum, it also sought to prevent and contain refugee movements. UNHCR began to provide assistance not only to refugees, returnees and displaced persons, but also, in the case of the former Yugoslavia, to people directly threatened by expulsion or ethnic cleansing.

UNHCR was confronted with emergency situations in many parts of the world. It actively pursued durable solutions for refugees, especially through voluntary repatriation, while seeking to interest Governments, development agencies and financial institutions in improving infrastructure in areas of return devastated by war.

The UNHCR Emergency Fund was used frequently in response to emerging refugee situations. It was used in 1992 to assist Somali refugees in Yemen ($3.8 million) and Kenya ($2.5 million), Bhutanese refugees in Nepal ($3.4 million), Sierra Leonean refugees in Liberia ($2.5 million), Mozambican refugees in Zimbabwe ($1.5 million), as well as refugees and displaced persons from Armenia and Azerbaijan ($1.5 million). Total expenditure from the Emergency Fund in 1992 amounted to $19.2 million. In December,(2) the Executive Committee approved an increase, effective 1 January 1993, raising the ceiling of the Fund from $20 million to $25 million, and increasing the amount available for a single emergency in a given year from $6 million to $8 million. Emergency assistance programmes that were funded from special appeals included: the former Yugoslavia, to assist those uprooted by the ongoing conflict ($294.4 million); Bangladesh, to assist a new influx of Rohingya refugees from Myanmar ($18.4 million); and Iraq, for assistance to the Kurdish population in the north of the country ($17.7 million).

Following the emergency phase of a refugee operation, the basic needs of the refugees were met through care and maintenance assistance. During 1992, such assistance amounted to $214.7 million under General Programmes and $91.3 million under Special Programmes. In Africa, care and maintenance programmes continued in Kenya ($59 million), Ethiopia ($29 million), Malawi ($27.4 million) and Guinea ($16.3 million). The situation in the Horn of Africa required large-scale care and maintenance assistance, which was mostly provided in Kenya for Somali refugees. A significant cross-border operation inside Somalia aimed to avert further influxes of refugees into Kenya. Substantial care and maintenance programmes were also implemented in Côte d'Ivoire, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. Elsewhere, care and maintenance assistance continued for Vietnamese in South-East Asian camps and Hong Kong. The largest programmes were in Hong Kong ($17.1 million) and Thailand ($16.4 million). During 1992, however, new arrivals of Vietnamese asylum-seekers virtually ceased. In addition, major programmes were carried out in South-West Asia, particularly in Pakistan where a sizeable Afghan refugee population remained ($24.1 million). In Latin America, the only significant care and maintenance programme was in Mexico for Guatemalan refugees ($3.1 million), pending their voluntary repatriation.

UNHCR also continued its efforts to provide durable solutions to refugees through local integration and resettlement in addition to voluntary repatriation. In 1992, expenditures to promote durable solutions under both General and Special Programmes amounted to some $319 million.

An estimated 2.4 million refugees returned to their homes during the year. Among the most significant repatriation movements were 360,000 persons to Cambodia, principally from Thailand, and 1,274,016 from Pakistan to Afghanistan. Another 250,000 Afghans returned from Iran. About 1.5 million Mozambican refugees were also being prepared for repatriation. Expenditures on voluntary repatriation under both General and Special Programmes totalled $229 million.

UNHCR supported the local settlement of refugees within host countries, obligating some $76 million under General and Special Programmes. Assistance included the promotion of agricultural and non-agricultural activities, improvements in infrastructure, and skills training in Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Senegal. Organized rural settlements were supported in China, Ethiopia, Mexico, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia.

Resettlement was sought for some 42,300 persons in 1992 and, of that number, UNHCR registered 34,510 departures. The main focus for resettlement activity was the Middle East, where UNHCR sought to resettle some 30,000 Iraqi refugees from Saudi Arabia. About 7,200 of them were accepted for resettlement, including almost 3,000 in Iran. More than 5,600 Iraqis and Iranians were resettled from Turkey. In addition to these two operations, some 2,300 refugees from the Middle East and South-West Asia were also resettled. An emergency operation started on 1 October 1992 for Bosnian former detainees whose release was secured by ICRC and who were transferred to Croatia. By the end of the year, about 5,100 had been registered by UNHCR.

In Africa, resettlement efforts remained focused on countries in the Horn of Africa. A total of 6,010 African refugees departed for resettlement during the year.

In South-East Asia, a total of 19,516 refugees from seven countries were resettled during 1992. Global expenditures on resettlement were estimated at $15 million.

In 1992, expenditures on UNHCR assistance activities in Africa totalled $284 million; in the Americas, $50 million; in Asia and Oceania, $175 million; in Europe, $337 million; and in South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, $159 million.

Refugee aid and development

During 1992, UNHCR and the African Development Bank (AfDB) undertook project identification missions in Malawi, Mozambique and the Sudan. UNHCR contributed to the AfDB-financed south-east rangeland rehabilitation project in Ethiopia, and the UNHCR/International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) South Khorasan rangeland rehabilitation and a refugee income-generating project in Iran was being implemented on a reduced scale. An income-generating project for refugee areas in Pakistan continued with a major emphasis on training relevant to repatriation.

Joint UNDP/UNHCR missions to prepare repatriation and reintegration programmes were undertaken in Cambodia and Mozambique.

In October,⁽³⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee urged the High Commissioner to involve international, national, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies in the planning phases of voluntary repatriation.

Assistance to refugees in Africa

In Africa, millions of people had been uprooted from their homes because of civil and ethnic conflict, human rights abuses, drought, and the famine and suffering that accompanied those events. Some had fled to neighbouring African countries, which hosted about 6 million refugees—a third of the world's total refugee population. In 1992, it was estimated that an additional 15 million people had become internally displaced persons in Africa, an almost fourfold increase on the figure for 1980.

Conflicts in a number of countries, coupled with severe drought in southern Africa, once again resulted in major population movements. There were large influxes from Mozambique into Malawi (77,000) and Zimbabwe (39,261), and the continuing conflict in Liberia drove refugees from that country into Côte d'Ivoire (15,000) and Guinea (20,000). Kenya faced a major emergency with the arrival of refugees from Ethiopia (58,000), Somalia (189,000) and the Sudan (21,800). Sudanese refugees also entered northern Uganda (15,000) and the Central African Republic (17,700). In October, Uganda also received 6,000 refugees from north-eastern Rwanda, followed in December by 15,000 refugees from eastern Zaire. Another emergency in December brought Togolese refugees into Benin (180,000) and Ghana (100,000).

The disintegration of government authority and law and order in Somalia left UNHCR with the task of caring for almost 1 million Somali refugees in neighbouring countries.

Despite ongoing crises in the Horn of Africa, some progress was made towards solutions. Discussions continued with Eritrean authorities about UNHCR involvement in the repatriation of Eritrean refugees from the Sudan, and, in Mozambique, the consolidation of the peace process opened the way to repatriation of 1.5 million refugees, the largest such organized movement in UNHCR history.

Events elsewhere were not as positive. The peace process suffered a set-back in Angola, to which some 95,000 persons had already returned, and peace efforts continued to be frustrated in Liberia, Rwanda, southern Sudan and Togo. Landmines and other unexploded ordnance threatened returnees and local populations in Angola, Mozambique and north-west Somalia, where UNHCR was obliged to support mine clearance activities, although not on the scale necessary to ensure the safety of access routes and areas of return.

UNHCR implemented a new cross-mandate and cross-border approach to the delivery of assistance to needy persons living in the same community—an approach that had been adopted in Ethiopia's eastern, southern and Ogaden regions. Under the cross-mandate approach, mixed populations comprising refugees, returnees, internally displaced persons, demobilized soldiers and civilians affected by war and drought received basic food rations, agricultural seeds and veterinary drugs. They also benefited from improved water supplies, rehabilitated schools, and expanded medical clinics. Cross-mandate activities were implemented collectively by the United Nations, non-governmental organizations (NGOS), Government bodies and donors.

The cross-border approach, which was implemented along the borders of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia and the Sudan, was aimed at creating conditions for the voluntary repatriation of refugees and the safe return of internally displaced persons. Some 120 Quick Impact Projects to meet the special needs of returnees in Somalia were launched from Kenya. They covered water, health, agriculture, livestock and infrastructural development needs. The major constraint on this initiative was the lack of security in the region. Efforts were made by the United Nations Operation in Somalia and the United Nations Task Force to improve border security.

In 1992, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, UNHCR, FAO, UNDP, UNICEF, WFP and the World Health Organization made efforts to coordinate humanitarian relief with ICRC and NGOs, particularly in the context of the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa and Drought Emergency Operations in Southern Africa.

Total expenditures in Africa amounted to $284.4 million, of which $187 million was spent under General Programmes and $97.4 million under Special Programmes.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1991,(4) the Secretary-General presented a report describing action taken by the United Nations system and nine Member States to assist refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa.(5)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/107 without vote.

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/108 of 16 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Bearing in mind that most of the affected countries are least developed countries,

Convinced of the necessity to strengthen the capacity within the United Nations system for the implementation and overall coordination of relief programmes for refugees, returnees and displaced persons, welcoming the prospects for voluntary repatriation and durable solutions across the continent,

Recognizing the need for States to create conditions conducive to the prevention of flows of refugees and displaced persons and to voluntary repatriation,

Bearing in mind that the majority of refugees and displaced persons are women and children,

Noting with appreciation the commitment of the countries concerned to do their utmost to facilitate the provision of assistance to the affected populations and to take the necessary measures in this regard,

Realizing the importance of assisting the host countries, in particular those countries that have been hosting refugees for a longer time, to remedy environmental deterioration and the negative impact on public services and the development process,

Recognising the mandate of the High Commissioner to protect and assist refugees and returnees and the catalytic role she plays, together with the international community and development agencies, in addressing the broader issues of development relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

Bearing in mind the necessity of facilitating the work of humanitarian organizations, in particular the supply of food, medicine and health care to refugees, returnees and displaced persons, deploring acts of aggression against personnel of humanitarian organizations, particularly those that have led to the loss of life, and stressing the need to guarantee the safety of the personnel of those organizations,

Deeply concerned about the critical humanitarian situation in African countries, in particular in the Horn of Africa, caused by drought, conflict and population movements,

Welcoming regional efforts to resolve refugees problems, such as the Declaration adopted at the Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the countries of the Horn of Africa, held at Addis Ababa on 8 and 9 April 1992,^a

Taking into account the revised appeal of the Secretary-General for the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa,

Deeply concerned by the massive presence of refugees and externally displaced persons in Djibouti, which represents more than 20 per cent of the total population of the country, and by their uninterrupted influx due to the tragic situation in Somalia,

Deeply concerned also by the serious consequences of the presence of refugees and externally displaced persons for the already difficult economic and social situation in Djibouti, which is suffering from prolonged drought and the negative impact of the critical situation in the Horn of Africa,

Recognizing that more than half of the refugees and externally displaced persons in Djibouti are located in Djibouti City in most serious difficulties and without direct international assistance, exerting an intolerable pressure on the limited resources of the country and the social infrastructure and causing, in particular, serious problems of security,

Also recognizing the need for cooperation between the Government of Djibouti and the High Commissioner and relevant organizations to find alternative solutions for the problem of refugees in Djibouti City and to be able to mobilize the necessary external assistance to meet their specific needs,

Aware that the refugee population in the refugee camps throughout Djibouti is in a precarious situation, facing the threat of famine, malnutrition and disease, and that it needs adequate external assistance for the provision of foodstuff, medical assistance and the necessary infrastructure for shelter,

Deeply concerned about the massive presence of refugees, voluntary returnees, displaced persons and demobilized soldiers in Ethiopia and the enormous burden that this has placed on the infrastructure and meagre resources of the country,

Deeply concerned also about the grave consequences that this has entailed for Ethiopia's capability to grapple with the effects of the prolonged drought and rebuild the economy of the country,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia and of the need for immediate and adequate assistance to refugees, voluntary returnees, displaced persons, demobilized soldiers and victims of natural disasters,

Deeply concerned about the burden that has been placed on the Government and people of Kenya because of the continuing influx of refugees from neighbouring countries that have been stricken by strife and famine,

Recognizing the great contribution and sacrifices that the Government of Kenya has made and continues to make in dealing with this situation while facing deteriorating conditions caused by the impact of the long drought that has affected its own population,

Emphasizing the importance and necessity of continuing assistance to the refugees and displaced persons in Kenya, estimated at over half a million, until such time as this situation changes,

Deeply concerned about the tragic impact that the civil war in Somalia continues to have on the lives of its people, affecting four to five million people who are either refugees in neighbouring countries or internally displaced and are in need of urgent humanitarian assistance,

Aware that the voluntary repatriation of large numbers of Somali refugees in neighbouring countries and elsewhere, as well as the return of internally displaced persons to their homes of origin, would require a planned and integrated international assistance programme designed to cover their basic needs, ensure adequate reception arrangements and facilitate their smooth integration into their respective communities,

Convinced that it is necessary that humanitarian assistance to Somali refugees, returnees and displaced persons be mobilized urgently and delivered without delay in view of the deteriorating situation of the displaced persons and returnees and the mounting pressure the refugees continue to place on the host countries,

Recognizing that the Sudan has been hosting large numbers of refugees over an extended period of time,

Aware of the economic difficulties facing the Government of the Sudan, and the need for adequate assistance for the refugees and displaced persons in the Sudan and the rehabilitation of the areas in which they are located,

Encouraging the Government of the Sudan and the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees for the efforts they have undertaken towards voluntary repatriation of large numbers of refugees to their homelands,

Deeply concerned about the plight of Sudanese refugee children, particularly the problem of unaccompanied minors, and emphasizing the need for their protection, well-being and reunification with their families,

Considering that the repatriation and reintegration of returnees and the relocation of displaced persons are hindered by natural disasters and that the process poses serious humanitarian, social and economic problems to the Government of Chad,

Cognizant of the appeal to Member States and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide the necessary assistance to the Government of Chad to alleviate its problems and improve its abilities to implement the programme of repatriation, reintegration and relocation of voluntary returnees and displaced persons,

Noting with appreciation the continuing mediatory efforts of the Economic Community of West African States to find a peaceful solution to the Liberian crisis, and the important decision incorporated in both the Yamoussoukro IV Accord of 29 October 1991 and the Final Communiqué of the Authority of Heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States of 29 July 1992 aimed at a final settlement of the conflict,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on emergency humanitarian assistance to Liberian refugees, returnees and displaced persons, particularly the need to continue emergency relief operations since the security situation is not yet propitious for the conduct of large-scale voluntary repatriation,

Taking into account the special emergency appeal for displaced persons in Liberia made by the Special Coordinator for Emergency Relief Operations in Liberia,

Deeply concerned about the influx of internally displaced persons, returnees and refugees to Monrovia and the enormous burden this has placed on the infrastructure and fragile economy of the country,

Also deeply concerned that, despite the efforts made to provide the necessary material and financial assistance for the refugees, returnees and displaced persons, the situation still remains precarious and has serious implications for the long-term national development of Liberia, as well as for those West African countries hosting Liberian refugees,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the people and Government of Malawi and the sacrifices they are making in caring for the refugees, given the country's limited social services and infrastructure, and the need for adequate international assistance to Malawi to enable it to continue its efforts to provide assistance to the refugees,

Gravely concerned about the continuing serious social, economic and environmental impact of the massive presence of refugees, as well as its far-reaching consequences for the long-term development process and environmental effects,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations of the 1991 inter-agency mission to Malawi, particularly on the need to strengthen the country's socio-economic infrastructure in order to enable it to provide for the immediate humanitarian relief requirements of the refugees and on the long-term national development needs of the country,

Convinced that, because of the serious economic situation and, in particular, because of the devastating drought in southern Africa, there is an urgent need for the international community to extend maximum and concerted assistance to southern African countries sheltering refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

Welcoming with appreciation the activities of the High Commissioner for the voluntary repatriation and reintegration of South African returnees, and hoping that the obstacles to the return of all refugees and exiles in conditions of safety and dignity will be removed without delay,

Recognizing the need to integrate refugee-related development projects in local and national development plans,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Commends the Governments concerned for their sacrifices, for providing assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and their efforts to promote voluntary repatriation and other measures taken in order to find appropriate and lasting solutions;

3. Expresses deep concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the presence of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons in the countries concerned and the implications for their long-term socio-economic development;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, the specialized agencies of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their assistance in mitigating the plight of the large number of refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

5. Expresses the hope that additional resources will be made available for general refugee programmes to keep pace with refugee needs;

6. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to provide adequate and sufficient financial, material and technical assistance for relief and rehabilitation programmes for the large number of refugees, voluntary returnees and displaced persons and victims of natural disasters;

7. Requests all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay particular attention to the special needs of refugee women and children;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and United Nations humanitarian agencies to continue their efforts to mobilize humanitarian assistance for the relief, repatriation, rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, including those refugees in urban areas;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize adequate financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in rural and urban areas affected by the presence of refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

10. Requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts with the appropriate United Nations agencies and intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations in order to consolidate and increase essential services to refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive and consolidated report on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions", and an oral report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993.

The Americas and the Caribbean

During 1992, progress towards durable solutions for refugees was accompanied by a risk of new movements of asylum-seekers in the Americas and the Caribbean. The situation regarding Haitian asylum-seekers remained a major concern for UNHCR.

Repatriation and local integration continued to be supported, especially in the Central American region through follow-up to the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees (CIREFCA).⁽⁶⁾ In Central America, the international community continued to support the attainment of lasting solutions for refugees, returnees and displaced persons, pledging $82.7 million at the Second International Meeting of the CIREFCA Follow-up Committee (San Salvador, El Salvador, 7-8 April 1992). The Committee decided to extend the CIREFCA Concerted Plan of Action to May 1994 (for more details, see below).

Progress made on peace in El Salvador in January 1992 stimulated the repatriation of 3,204 Salvadorian refugees during the year. In other developments, 2,319 returnees arrived in Guatemala, where UNHCR established field offices at Nenton, Barillas, Cantabal and Betel; and 4,492 Surinamese were voluntarily repatriated from Guyana.

Elsewhere in Latin America, 1,292 refugees were repatriated from various countries to Chile.

Since the 1991 military coup in Haiti,⁽⁷⁾ some 48,000 Haitians had fled the country in search of asylum. Direct arrivals of Haitian, boat people were recorded during 1992 in Cuba (2,451), the Bahamas (1,404), the Dominican Republic (735), Jamaica (142) and Panama (22). The United States continued its policy of interdiction and by May 1992 had transferred to its naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, a total of 41,019 Haitians. Of that number, 11,617 were screened in by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service. Owing to the continuing large-scale influx, the United States began implementing a policy of summary return of all Haitians interdicted on the high seas.

During 1992, total expenditures in the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $50 million, of which $24 million was spent under General Programmes and $26 million under Special Programmes.

Follow-up to the International Conference on Central American Refugees

In August 1992,(8) the Secretary-General reported that significant progress had been made in the Central American peace process and that support for CIREFCA'S objectives had continued (for further details on the Central American peace process, see PART TWO, Chapter II). In describing the contribution of the CIREFCA Concerted Plan of Action,(6) he stated that returnees currently outnumbered refugees in the region and that new CIREFCA initiatives had been designed to address the special needs of women and returnee communities. The First Regional Forum on the Gender Approach to Work with Refugee, Returnee and Displaced Central American Women (Guatemala City, February 1992) aimed at drawing attention to the special protection and assistance needs of uprooted women by including a gender focus in CIREFCA project planning and execution. Quick Impact Projects were being implemented through UNHCR in Nicaragua on behalf of returnee communities and similar projects were being initiated in Belize and Guatemala.

The Second International Meeting of the CIREFCA Follow-up Committee (San Salvador, 7-8 April 1992) adopted a Declaration(9) deciding to extend the process until May 1994 and stressed that during that period attention should be given to sustained support for peace and democracy in the region and to the design of a resource mobilization strategy. The Declaration requested the continued support of the United Nations system through UNHCR, UNDP and the CIREFCA Joint Support Unit, stressing the need for coordination with the other agencies and closer consultation with donors and NGOs. At the meeting, a total of $82.67 million was announced by donors, of which $51.55 million was earmarked for CIREFCA projects and $31.12 million for other initiatives within the framework of CIREFCA. The UNHCR component, covering announcements to both General and Special Programmes, totalled $11.8 million.

In October,(3) the UNHCR Executive Committee expressed support for proposed new inter-agency arrangements by UNHCR and UNDP for technical support and follow-up of CIREFCA which conferred the lead agency role on UNDP.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/103 without vote.

International Conference on Central American Refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 42/110 of 7 December 1987, 42/204 of 11 December 1987, 42/231 of 12 May 1988, 43/118 of 8 December 1988, 44/139 of 15 December 1989, 45/141 of 14 December 1990 and 46/107 of 16 December 1991,

Recalling that the International Conference on Central American Refugees is related to the initiative of the Central American Presidents expressed in the procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting in August 1987, as indicated in the San Salvador communiqué on the Central American refugees, of 9 September 1988,

Recognizing the importance and validity of the Declaration and the Concerted Plan of Action in favour of Central American Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons, adopted at the International Conference on Central American Refugees held at Guatemala City from 29 to 31 May 1989 and the Declaration of the First International Meeting of the Follow-Up Committee of the Conference, especially the framework contained in the Concerted Plan of Action,

Noting with satisfaction the concerted efforts being made by the Central American countries, Belize and Mexico to find lasting solutions to the problems of the refugees, returnees and displaced persons in implementing the aims and objectives of the Concerted Plan of Action as an integral part of efforts to achieve a stable and lasting peace and democratization of the region,

Welcoming the peace agreements achieved in the peace process in El Salvador, whereby efforts are being made to consult with all national sectors, the peace dialogue in Guatemala and the progress being made in Nicaragua in the implementation of its national reconciliation policy and in assistance to the uprooted populations, which continues to encourage movements of voluntary repatriation and settlement of internally displaced persons,

Recognizing the substantial support that, inter alia, the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme, the donor community and national and international non-governmental organizations have given the Conference since its inception,

Taking note of the Declaration of the Second International Meeting of the Follow-Up Committee of the Conference, held at San Salvador on 7 and 8 April 1992,

Convinced that peace, liberty, development and democracy are essential in order to solve the problems of uprooted populations in the region,

1. Takes note of the reports submitted by the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and of the second status report on the implementation of the Concerted Plan of Action of the International Conference on Central American Refugees;

2. welcomes with satisfaction the outcome of the meetings of the Follow-Up Committee of the International Conference on Central American Refugees, held at San José on 2 and 3 April 1991, at San Pedro Sula, Honduras, from 17 to 19 June 1991, at Tegucigalpa on 13 and 14 August 1991, at Managua on 25 and 26 October 1991, at San Salvador on 7 and 8 April 1992 and at Managua on 29 September and 28 October 1992;

3. Urges the Central American countries, Belize and Mexico to continue to implement and follow up the programmes benefiting refugees, returnees and displaced persons in accordance with their national development plans;

4. Reaffirms its conviction that the voluntary repatriation of refugees and the return of displaced persons to their countries or communities of origin is one of the most positive signs of the progress of peace in the region;

5. Expresses its conviction that the processes of return to and reintegration in the countries and communities of origin should take place in conditions of dignity and security and with the necessary guarantees to ensure that the affected populations are included in the respective national development plans;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and other organs of the United Nations system to continue their support for and involvement in the planning, implementation, evaluation and follow-up of the programmes generated through the Conference process;

7. Supports the Governments of the Central American countries, Belize and Mexico in urgently seeking more precise details about the support to be provided by the United Nations Development Programme in the immediate future, once the emergency stage has been completed, with the assistance of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and once the transition towards a process of sustained development of the target populations has been initiated, within the framework of the Conference;

8. Welcomes with satisfaction the progress made in the implementation of the Development Programme for Displaced Persons, Refugees and Repatriated Persons, and urges the Central American countries to continue their determined support to ensure that the Programme achieves its aims;

9. Appeals to the international community, particularly to the donor community, to continue and to strengthen their support for the Conference and to continue complying with the financing offered so as to be able effectively to achieve the goals and objectives of the Concerted Plan of Action, and to consolidate the progress made thus far in humanitarian assistance to refugees and repatriated and displaced persons of the region;

10. Supports the special attention that the Central American countries, Belize and Mexico are giving to the particular needs of refugee, repatriated and displaced women and children and to the measures being adopted to protect and improve the environment and to preserve ethnic and cultural values;

11. Resolves to give its full support to the Declaration of the Second International Meeting of the Follow-Up Committee of the International Conference on Central American Refugees, held at San Salvador on 7 and 8 April 1992 and the communiqués of the meetings of the Follow-up Committee held at Managua on 29 September and 28 October 1992;

12. Supports the initiative of the Governments of the countries of Central America, Belize and Mexico to extend the duration of the Conference process until May 1994, in the light of the new needs that have emerged following the changes in the region;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 47/103

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/715) without vote, 18 November (meeting 43); 31-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.27); agenda item 96.

Sponsors: Argentina, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, Jamaica, Mexico, Morocco, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela. East and South Asia and Oceania

Significant steps were taken in 1992 to implement the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees (CPA), adopted at the 1989 International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees,⁽¹⁰⁾ and the Orderly Departure Programme (ODP) for Vietnamese refugees. Slow but steady progress was also recorded in repatriating refugees from Thailand to the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

During the year, UNHCR was confronted with new refugee problems in South Asia. An influx of Myanmar refugees into Bangladesh, which began in 1991, continued until the summer of 1992. By September, there were 250,877 Myanmar refugees in 20 camps mainly in Cox's Bazaar, a district of Bangladesh. An agreement signed by Bangladesh and Myanmar in April 1992 prepared the way for the voluntary repatriation of the refugees.

A major influx of ethnic Nepalese from Bhutan into Nepal continued, with 65,938 arriving at six camps in south-eastern Nepal during the year. Their needs were addressed with the help of international and local NGOs. Repatriation of the Bhutanese was discussed separately between UNHCR and Bhutan and Nepal.

Since mid-1992, events in Afghanistan had produced a new influx of refugees into India, most of them Hindus or Sikhs. At year's end the number of Afghans in India totalled 11,002. In the course of the year, 28,971 Sri Lanka refugees returned from India and were received at reception centres assisted by UNHCR, but repatriation was suspended in late October 1992 due to problems in securing sea transport.

From 1980 to the end of 1992, a total of 14,723 Lao refugees and asylum-seekers, mainly from Thailand and China, were repatriated to the Lao People's Democratic Republic under UNHCR auspices. More than half were repatriated during 1991 and 1992. At the end of 1992, some 41,000 Lao refugees remained in Thailand and about 2,000 in China. Each person repatriated under UNHCR auspices received a cash grant equivalent to $80 in the country of asylum, followed by $40 and an 18-month rice ration upon arrival in the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

The Secretary-General launched a Consolidated Appeal for the Cambodia Repatriation Operation on 15 March as preparations were made for the repatriation of some 330,000 Cambodian refugees and displaced persons.

The repatriation of Cambodians, carried out within the framework of the Paris Peace accords of 23 October 1991,(11) began on 30 March 1992. On that date, UNHCR closed the last of seven camps for Cambodians in Thailand. By mid-year over 70,000 Cambodians had returned from Thailand.

The UNHCR Executive Committee(3) welcomed progress made at the Fifth Tripartite Thai/Lao/UNHCR Meeting (Rayong, Thailand, 13-14 July 1992) on the repatriation of Lao refugees and asylum-seekers and called on the international community to ensure that all the financial needs of the Cambodian repatriation operation were met.

Under the CPA, a total of 55 Vietnamese asylum-seekers arrived by boat in Hong Kong and in countries of South-East Asia in 1992, compared with 22,422 in 1991. Many factors contributed to the decrease, including developments in Viet Nam, a mass information campaign, and a reduction in cash assistance to asylum-seekers. A total of 16,952 Vietnamese were repatriated voluntarily in 1992 and 9,644 were resettled.

During 1992, expenditures in East and South Asia and Oceania amounted to $175 million, of which $50 million was spent under General Programmes and $125 million under Special Programmes.

Europe

During 1992, refugee and asylum issues continued to be a major concern for European States. By the end of the year, the United Nations was assisting 3,055,000 refugees, displaced persons, and others affected by the war in the former Yugoslavia. A humanitarian airlift to Sarajevo began on 3 July 1992, carrying a daily average of 200 metric tons of food and medical supplies. The operation was interrupted several times due to security incidents. On 29 July, UNHCR convened in Geneva a high-level international meeting on aid to victims of the conflict. It endorsed a Comprehensive Response to the Humanitarian Crisis in the former Yugoslavia, as proposed by the High Commissioner, including respect for human rights and humanitarian law; humanitarian access; preventive and temporary protection; material assistance; special needs; and return and rehabilitation. Implementation was reviewed at follow-up meetings held at Geneva on 4 September, 9 October and 4 December. European countries, responding to UNHCR's appeal to admit persons fleeing the conflict, guaranteed temporary protection to more than 600,000 persons. UNHCR established more than 20 offices in the former Yugoslavia, employing some 600 international and local staff. UNHCR expenditures in 1992 for the former Yugoslavia totalled $297 million.

The magnitude and complexity of the United Nations humanitarian operation in the former Yugoslavia increased dramatically, as reflected by a series of appeals, each with a larger target population and a correspondingly greater appeal total. The first appeal, issued on 3 December 1991, set a target of $24.3 million (for all United Nations agencies), with the number of planned beneficiaries specified at 500,000. By 8 April 1992 the target had risen to $37.5 million and the number of beneficiaries was 650,000. One month later, on 19 May, a revised appeal was issued for $174.5 million, for 1,000,000 beneficiaries. The 4 September appeal set a target of $561.7 million, for 2,780,000 beneficiaries, and the 4 December appeal was issued for 3,055,000 planned beneficiaries with a target of $642.5 million. (For details on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, see PART TWO, Chapter IV.)

In Western Europe, the estimated number of asylum-seekers in 1992 was almost 700,000, compared to 545,000 in 1991. Governments in the region introduced legislation and measures to streamline status determination procedures, and distinguish at an early stage between founded and unfounded applications for asylum. Difficulties in managing the great influx of asylum-seekers in 1992 were aggravated by increasing manifestations of xenophobia and racism, including attacks on reception centres.

UNHCR further established representation in Central and Eastern European States, including the Commonwealth of Independent States, focusing its activities on protection, refugee law promotion and institution-building, with some limited assistance programmes. UNHCR assisted the most destitute asylum-seekers in Moscow through a care and maintenance project. Responding to requests from the Governments of Armenia and Azerbaijan, UNHCR initiated six-month relief projects in each of those States.

During 1992, UNHCR's expenditures in Europe amounted to $337 million, of which $25 million was spent under General Programmes and $312.2 under Special Programmes.

South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

Despite continued civil strife in Afghanistan, some 1.5 million Afghan refugees were voluntarily repatriated from neighbouring countries during 1992 with an expenditure of $48.6 million. UNHCR's programme for returnees within Afghanistan focused on limited emergency rehabilitation related to the need for shelter and irrigation, mainly through food-for-work projects. The withdrawal of most international staff from the country due to unstable conditions prevented the United Nations from addressing reconstruction needs. The situation was aggravated by the internal displacement of hundreds of thousands of persons who fled Kabul during the last quarter of the year.

In December 1992, Afghanistan also became a country of asylum, with an influx of some 50,000 refugees from civil war in Tajikistan. UNHCR provided them with basic emergency assistance. About 500,000 additional persons were displaced inside Tajikistan.

A total of 1,274,000 Afghans in Pakistan benefited from a repatriation scheme under which UNHCR offered a cash grant and wheat provided by WFP. With large-scale repatriation, the number of Afghan refugees in Pakistan declined, and UNHCR closed or merged 157 camp administration units, leaving 190 units at year's end. However, even as Afghans returned home in large numbers, Pakistan received some 80,000 new Afghan refugees from lighting in and around Kabul after a change of regime in April 1992.

In Iran, UNHCR helped Afghan refugees to return home through a network of in-country transit centres, border-exit stations and organized internal transport. Although some 400,000 persons were estimated to have returned to Afghanistan from Iran in 1992, about 2.5 million remained in Iran.

The Executive Committee(3) welcomed the voluntary repatriation to Afghanistan of more than 1 million refugees from Iran and Pakistan during 1992, but noted that humanitarian assistance had been constrained by inadequate funding. Addressing the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, the Committee noted that internal conflicts, insecurity and the disintegration of institutions continued to cause massive displacements, and called on the High Commissioner to continue her initiatives to deal with the root causes of the problem.

By the end of 1992, over 90 per cent of the Iraqi refugees in the western provinces of Iran had returned to Iraq. While 65,000 Kurdish refugees still residing in Iran continued to return to Iraq in small numbers, prospects for the repatriation of 30,000 Iraqi Shiites residing in Iran were remote. In Iraq, UNHCR focused on the needs of returnee villages, many of which had been razed during fighting. Of the 4,000 villages believed to have been destroyed, UNHCR helped to reconstruct about 1,200, and NGOs, 562. After completing a winterization programme, including the supply of adequate shelter, UNHCR phased out its activities in northern Iraq in June 1992.

The Persian Gulf conflict generated new groups of Iraqi refugees in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic. In Kuwait, some 8,000 Iraqis obtained resident permits during the year, while UNHCR continued to cooperate with the Government to find durable solutions for more than 60,000 stateless persons. About 28,000 Iraqis were being accommodated at the Rafha camp in Saudi Arabia. A further 2,100 refugees arrived in the Syrian Arab Republic from northern Iraq during 1992, while some 5,700 persons remained in El Hol refugee camp in El Hassake district.

In Yemen, the number of Somali refugees increased to nearly 51,800, located at an emergency camp in Aden. Construction of a more durable UNHCR camp was under way, however, in the Abyan governorate, 50 kilometres from Aden. Some 250 Ethiopian refugees either repatriated under UNHCR auspices or spontaneously moved to other countries in the region.

The number of refugees in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya continued to grow, with new arrivals from Ethiopia (Eritrea), Liberia, Nigeria, Somalia and the Sudan. The influx of 19,500 Malian refugees to Mauritania brought the total number receiving assistance at Bassikounou, Aghor and Fassala to 38,000. In southern Algeria, about 50,000 refugees from Mali and Niger received assistance.

During 1992, total expenditures in South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East amounted to $159 million, of which $61 million was spent under General Programmes and $98 million under Special Programmes.

Refugee protection

The right to seek and to enjoy asylum, and the corresponding principle of non-refoulement, remained the cornerstone of UNHCR's efforts to ensure that the persons needing international protection received it.

The scale and complexity of population displacements, however, had in some cases placed serious strains on the international system for the protection of refugees, endangering asylum at times. During 1992, UNHCR recognized the need to develop new, complementary protection strategies. They included support for conditions in countries of origin that would allow the safe return of refugees, and efforts to prevent or attenuate conditions that might force people to flee.

An August 1992 note by the High Commissioner on international protection(13) was presented to the UNHCR Executive Committee, summarizing the main protection challenges for UNHCR's activities as reflected in the findings and recommended approaches of a UNHCR Working Group on International Protection. The note discussed, among other matters, UNHCR's activities and competence; new approaches to asylum, prevention and other activities in the country of origin; and solutions with emphasis on voluntary repatriation and concerted regional arrangements.

The Executive Committee reaffirmed the primary importance of the principles of non-refoulement and asylum as basic to refugee protection. It renewed its expressions of concern regarding problems jeopardizing the security of refugees, including numerous incidents of refoulement, expulsion, physical attacks, and detention under unacceptable conditions. It noted that UNHCR's broad humanitarian expertise provided a basis for the exploration of new options in the areas of asylum, prevention and solutions, and in that connection, supported efforts by the High Commissioner to explore further approaches to conditions that gave rise to refugee situations.

The UNHCR Centre for Documentation on Refugees (CDR) houses information relating to those in flight through asylum and resettlement. In 1992, CDR developed its services, publications and databases and responded to more than 1,400 requests for information.

On the publication side, CDR entered its tenth year with the quarterly Refugee Abstracts, and collaboration continued on the International Journal of Refugee Law, published by Oxford University Press. The movement of the CDR literature and legal databases to the UNHCR Local Area Network was initiated and the Government of Canada made possible the addition of continuously updated country databases.

The Subcommittee of the Whole on International Protection of the UNHCR Executive Committee (Geneva, 1 October 1992) discussed the work of the Subcommittee's inter-sessional meetings held for the first time in 1992 (Geneva, 23 January and 13 and 14 April). The meetings covered issues including the protection of refugee women and refugee law promotion, dissemination and training.

International instruments

As at 31 December 1992, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees(14) had been acceded or succeeded to by 112 States as a result of the 1992 accessions by Albania, Cambodia, Honduras and the Republic of Korea and successions by Croatia and Slovenia. The 1967 Protocol(15) to the Convention had 113 States parties as a result of the 1992 accessions and successions by the same States.(16)

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1969 Organization of African Unity Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas to Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San José, Costa Rica.

As at 31 December 1992, there were 38 States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons(17) and 16 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.(18)

Chapter XVI

Drugs of abuse

Drug abuse and illicit trafficking, accompanied by violence and corruption, remained a serious problem worldwide during 1992. National and international drug control measures that Governments had agreed upon in international conventions and resolutions had not yet yielded to universally visible results and their validity continued to be questioned. In its annual report, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) stated, however, that it was not convinced that valid alternatives to present policies had been found that would meaningfully reverse the situation. The Board felt that world-wide efforts to combat drug abuse and trafficking would have to be continuous, balanced and applied in an internationally concerted manner for further results to be achieved. Drug abuse was closely linked to political, social and economic problems and progress in these areas would undoubtedly help to solve the problem. Positive experiences in the fight against drugs were reported in a number of countries, and INCB suggested that those experiences be carefully examined to determine whether they could be duplicated elsewhere. INCB continued to supervise the implementation of drug control treaties as well as the comprehensive survey of the world-wide drug control situation.

The United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) provided leadership and coordination for all United Nations activities against drug abuse and trafficking. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed all United Nations drug control programmes and activities, provided broad policy guidelines and made recommendations to the Economic and Social Council. During the year, the General Assembly passed six resolutions dealing with international drug control.

Drug abuse and international control

UN International Drug Control Programme

United Nations efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking were coordinated under the leadership of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, established in 1991.(1) In its first year, the Programme was able to expand its activities, intensify its contact with Governments, define its priorities and objectives and, given the various mandates entrusted to it, consult extensively with organizations within and outside the United Nations system. The first annual report of the Programme's Executive Director to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs(2) noted that the objective of UNDCP as the coordinating point for comprehensive drug control was for all multilateral and bilateral initiatives to be supportive of an agreed strategy, with UNDCP acting as the international custodian and a source of inspiration. Important developments in the Programme related to its activities in the areas of money-laundering and the control of chemical precursors. It was also able to expand its capacity to analyse the drug problem in all its dimensions and help Governments define comprehensive national strategies and plans for drug control. UNDCP also undertook a pioneering initiative in 1991: the development of a "debt-for-drugs" swap concept.

The annual report detailed the Programme's policy framework, including its integrated approach, coordination measures, technical cooperation, plans and subregional strategies. It also described its programme activities to: strengthen the licit drug control system; prevent and reduce illicit demand for drugs; treat and rehabilitate drug users; eliminate the supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances from illicit sources; and suppress illicit traffic.

In an addendum to the report,(3) the Executive Director outlined the elements of a strategy whereby UNDCP would work in partnership with all countries to prevent and control drug production, trafficking and abuse by increasing awareness of the problem; strengthening national and international drug abuse control; enhancing north-south and south-south cooperation; reconstructing the social and economic fabric of communities disrupted by drug abuse problems; promoting new community partnerships; identifying new directions and concepts through international multidisciplinary discussions; and improving the capacity of countries to prevent drug abuse by applying state-of-the-art techniques to public education. The strategy identified activities for UNDCP in support of these goals.

The role and work of UNDCP was also discussed by the Secretary-General, pursuant to a General Assembly request,(4) in an October report(5) outlining the coordination of drug control activities within the United Nations system between July and December 1991.

Budget and administration

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)(6) considered the administrative and programme costs of UNDCP for the biennium 1992-1993, as well as a note by UNDCP on its programme of future work and priorities.(7) ACABQ was of the opinion that for UNDCP's budget cycle to synchronize with the rest of the United Nations, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs should approve its budget and the administrative and programme support costs in odd-numbered years and prior to the start of the United Nations financial period. ACABQ suggested that every effort should be made to provide it with revised budget estimates for 1992-1993 and proposed estimates for 1994-1995, and that the UNDCP budget should be fully synchronized with the rest of the United Nations system by the 1996-1997 biennium at the latest.

The proposed budget estimate for the 1992-1993 biennium was $168 million, of which $82 million was identified for 1992 and $86 million for 1993 to cover ongoing country and regional projects, new projects, global projects and contingency and field operations support. The Committee also recommended eight new temporary posts, pending the review of UNDCP's administrative structure, and that future budget submissions include detailed information on estimates, sources and components of income.

The Secretariat submitted a note in November,(8) in response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(9) on the administrative and financial arrangements for the UNDCP programme budget for 1992-1993. The Assembly had invited the Secretary-General to consider ways to streamline the proposed structure of UNDCP, and to submit a report at its forty-seventh session. The Secretariat's note indicated that the structure of UNDCP could not be separated from its financial and personnel arrangements, which were still under review. In addition, the ongoing restructuring exercise of the United Nations might have implications for the structure of its office at Vienna. Consequently, it was proposed that the requested report be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

By resolution 47/219 A, section XXII, of 23 December 1992, the General Assembly took note of the note by the Secretariat on the administrative and financial arrangements regarding the Programme.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 14 April,(10) the Commission requested the Executive Director of UNDCP to examine the feasibility of mechanisms to evaluate operational activities relating to narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in each region and to advise the Commission on existing and possible new activities. On the same date, the Commission approved the budget estimates for 1992 and 1993.

On 15 April,(11) the Commission endorsed comments and recommendations contained in the ACABQ report on the proposed administrative and programme support costs of UNDCP and approved, as a temporary procedure, a calendar for budget submissions which stipulated, inter alia, that in the second year of the biennium 1992-1993, the Programme would submit revised budget estimates based on known expenditures and programme performance and delivery during the first year, and projections for the first year of the 1994-1995 biennium.

It also decided that, to assist the Commission in its administrative and budgetary functions, UNDCP should submit documentation outlining general criteria for the use of resources, programme goals and objectives, budgeted operational activities, and trust funds created from voluntary contributions for specific purposes. The Commission decided to convene informal consultations in the fourth quarter of 1992, to discuss revised budget estimates for 1993 to ensure the active involvement of Member States and facilitate approval of the estimates at the Commission's thirty-sixth session. It also decided to review the budget format and methodology at its thirty-seventh session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/101 without vote.

United Nations International Drug Control Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/104 of 16 December 1991, in which it requested that the restructuring process of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme be completed as soon as possible so that the Programme could fulfil its mandate with enhanced effectiveness and efficiency,

Recalling also the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action adopted at its seventeenth special session on 23 February 1990,

Emphasizing that the problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking has to be considered within the broader economic and social context,

Reaffirming the importance of the role of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues, and endorsing paragraph 1 (c) of Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/38 of 21 June 1991,

Recognizing that international cooperation against illicit trafficking should be pursued in full conformity with the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law,

Noting that in the consideration of the programme budget proposals submitted by the Secretary-General for the biennium 1992-1993 full account should be taken of the measures proposed pursuant to resolution 45/179 of 21 December 1990 and Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 13(XXXV), adopted at its thirty-fifth session,

Commending the United Nations International Drug Control Programme for the activities undertaken so far in the performance of the functions entrusted to it,

Considering the need for an evaluation of the problems, achievements and challenges related to drug control programmes, with a view to strengthening international cooperation,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the measures taken to implement resolution 46/104, and welcomes the drug control efforts of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to date;

2. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/38, which calls on the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to give policy guidance to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and to monitor its activities;

3. Urges the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to give special emphasis to the implementation of those issues from the Global Programme of Action identified as priorities by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in its resolution 2(XXXIV), adopted at its thirty-fourth session;

4. Stresses the importance of the smooth functioning of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme for the achievement of the best possible results in the implementation of its mandate;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-general to take, as a matter of urgency, all necessary measures to complete the organizational and administrative structure of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions;

6. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in accordance with the authority delegated to him by the Secretary-General, to coordinate and provide effective leadership for all United Nations drug control activities in order to ensure coherence of actions within the Programme as well as coordination, complementarity and non-duplication of such activities across the United Nations system, and in this context actively to seek cooperation and support for a global approach from other international organizations, non-governmental organizations, bilateral programmes and national institutions;

7. Strongly urges all Governments to provide the fullest possible financial and political support to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in particular by increasing the voluntary contributions to the Programme, with a view to expanding and strengthening its operational activities and technical cooperation, in particular with developing countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on measures taken to implement the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 47/101

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Illicit traffic

Drug law enforcement

A Secretariat report in March presented the results of a study, requested by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, on the nature, frequency and duration of meetings of the Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA), which also covered, because of its similar nature, the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East.(12) The study made proposals for strengthening the capacity of these two subsidiary bodies of the Commission to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking. These proposals covered: the terms of reference and organization of meetings, membership, frequency and duration of meetings, sources of funding, training programmes, reports on illicit traffic and the performance of Commission functions. It was recommended, among other things, that: the Commission should decide that whenever HONLEA meetings take place in a region where other drug law enforcement meetings occur, the regional HONLEA should be convened every other year and UNDCP should participate in the other regional meeting during those years when the regional HONLEA did not meet the Commission should clarify the criteria for membership in each subsidiary body and review its observer list; the subsidiary bodies should monitor the implementation of UNDCP drug law enforcement training programmes at the regional level and make recommendations for enhancing them; subsidiary bodies should report regularly to the Commission on current trends in illicit traffic in the respective regions; the Commission should consider ways of using its subsidiary bodies to monitor implementation of the Global Programme of Action on international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.(13)

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered the Secretariat report and, in particular, the recommendation relating to the frequency of meetings of HONLEA. The Commission was also informed that the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and UNDCP had agreed to rotate their meetings, on a trial basis over a period of two years, among the regions of Africa, Europe, and Latin America and the Caribbean, and had taken initiatives to coordinate regional drug law enforcement meetings. The Customs Cooperation Council (CCC) stressed the need to involve customs officials in all drug law enforcement meetings held at the regional level, whether convened by UNDCP or Interpol.

The Commission agreed that the frequency of meetings of HONLEA should be determined on a regional basis, taking into account country needs and the meetings of other bodies. It also agreed, in view of new trends in illicit traffic in Eastern Europe, that the meeting of HONLEA, Europe, should focus on enhanced cooperation in drug law enforcement between States in Eastern and Western Europe. There was also a consensus that meetings of HONLEA should remain focused on drug law enforcement.

On 15 April,(14) the Commission approved recommendations for the organization of work of its subsidiary bodies, and decided that the fifth meeting of HONLEA, Latin America and the Caribbean, should be held in Mexico.

On the same date, the Commission also decided,(15) pursuant to an invitation and date determined by the Government of Iran, to convene a ministerial-level conference of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, in consultation with UNDCP, and approved a provisional agenda for the proposed conference.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1992/28 without vote.

Improvement of the functioning of the subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme on the nature, frequency and duration of the meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies, requested by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-fourth session, and the comments of the Commission on the report at its thirty-fifth session,

Welcoming the possibility of more active participation of the Customs Cooperation Council and the International Criminal Police Organization in the meetings of subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs,

Aware of the ongoing examination of possible ways of scheduling various regional meetings related to drug law enforcement of United Nations bodies and other inter-governmental organizations so as to increase cooperation between those bodies and organizations and to avoid duplication of effort and overlapping,

1. Decides to approve the application by Iraq for membership in the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East;

2. Endorses in principle that, for the regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies, membership should be based on membership in the respective regional commissions;

3. Reiterates that observer status in all subsidiary bodies of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs is open to all States requesting such status;

4. Decides that in future the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East shall, in principle, meet annually for a period of five days in one of the countries covered by the region of the Subcommission;

5. Confirms that the Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, African Region, the Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Asia and the Pacific Region, and the Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin American and Caribbean Region, shall each continue to be held annually in a country of their respective regions;

6. Decides that the Second Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, European Region, shall convene in 1993 at the United Nations Office at Vienna;

7. Invites the Second Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, European Region, to review its schedule of future meetings, taking into account regional meetings organized by the International Criminal Police Organization;

8. Invites the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue to explore possible means of rationalizing the schedule of regional meetings related to drug law enforcement so as to avoid duplication of effort and possibly free resources that could be used for other meetings;

9. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to examine further, on a regular basis, the functioning of its subsidiary bodies.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/28

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/107) without vote, 27 July (meeting 21); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1992/25); agenda item 20.

By decision 1992/211 of 7 February, the Economic and Social Council decided to cancel the meeting of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, which was scheduled to be held at Vienna on 24 and 25 February 1992.

Implementation of the UN Convention against Illicit Traffic

In response to a 1990 request of the General Assembly(16) the Secretary-General submitted a report(17) in September on the implementation of the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances.(18) He reported that there had been extensive legislative activity to implement the Convention. Implementation laws and regulations of 34 States not yet parties to the Convention, but implementing various provisions thereof, were given to the Secretary-General and published by UNDCP. A number of other States made progress in amending laws and administrative arrangements in line with the provisions of the Convention.

UNDCP provided comprehensive legal assistance to more than 40 States in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, and Latin America and the Caribbean to adjust national laws, policies and infrastructures to implement the requirements and objectives of all the international drug control conventions, particularly the 1988 Convention, and to train judges, prosecutors and investigators to apply the new laws. Assistance was provided through regional workshops which helped States identify and overcome limitations in their legal capacity to implement fully all international drug control conventions. Model legislation was also being developed by UNDCP to accelerate more widespread and uniform implementation while promoting maximum international cooperation. A package of model texts for use in all main legal systems was expected to be completed early in 1993.

In related action, UNDCP reported a trend towards the ratification and implementation of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs,(19) as amended by the 1972 Protocol,(20) and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.(21)

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 15 April,(22) the Commission called upon all States that had not already done so to adopt legislative measures to facilitate mutual legal assistance and establish internal mechanisms for the timely transfer of evidence in investigations, prosecutions and judicial proceedings connected with illicit drug trafficking and related offences. It also urged the international community to conclude bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements for expeditiously processing requests for legal assistance, and requested the Executive Director of UNDCP to include, in the five-year plan for the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, legal cooperation and, in particular, assistance related to illicit drug trafficking and related offences.

On the same date,(23) the Commission noted that the control of money-laundering was an essential element in the struggle against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and invited Member States to bring their legislation into conformity with the 1988 Convention, taking into account the recommendations of the Financial Action Task Force, (established in 1989 by the Group of Seven major industrialized countries and the President of the Commission of the European Communities at the fifteenth annual economic summit) and those contained in the Global Programme of Action. The Commission also invited Member States to consider contributing forfeited property or proceeds to the UNDCP Fund to help it fulfil its mandate. UNDCP was invited to continue developing programmes of technical cooperation that included assistance in drafting or revising legislation, training for investigative and financial personnel, the development of intercountry collaboration and the provision of advice on strategies and techniques.

Also on 15 April(24) the Commission noted the work of CCC with respect to cooperation between customs administrations and international traders and carriers, to combat, inter alia, illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. It called upon all parties to the 1988 Convention that had not already done so to implement fully the provisions of article 17, entitled "Illicit traffic by sea", and encouraged those States not parties to the 1988 Convention to adopt, to the extent possible, the provisions, or equivalent measures, against illicit traffic by sea. The Commission also recommended that UNDCP, in developing its regional programmes, should recognize the importance of technical assistance to States, especially for the development and maintenance of databases or other records of vessels in their registries, and invited States to establish procedural and cooperative measures of the kind developed by CCC to ensure that commercial forms of transport were not used in the commission of drug offences. The Commission also urged States to consider bilateral and regional arrangements to enhance the framework provided in article 17 for cooperation in maritime drug law enforcement.

Also on 15 April,(25) the Commission welcomed the establishment of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice as a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs decided to cooperate actively with this new Commission as well as with the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on Transnational Corporations and other inter-governmental bodies to increase the effectiveness of United Nations activities in areas of mutual concern. It requested the Executive Director of UNDCP to suggest ways in which cooperation could be most effectively realized.(26)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/97 without vote.

Implementation of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/146 of 18 December 1990 and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the importance of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 for improving international cooperation in that field and further strengthening the existing international instruments for the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, namely, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Reaffirming also the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action adopted at its seventeenth special session on 23 February 1990,

Bearing in mind that the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances entered into force on 11 November 1990 and that, so far, sixty-three States have ratified or adhered to that Convention,

Commending the work done by the Secretariat to disseminate the text of the Convention in the official languages of the United Nations, thereby helping to make its provisions more widely known,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 45/146;
2. Urges States that have not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Convention as soon as possible, in order to make its provisions more universally effective;
3. Also urges States to establish the necessary legislative and administrative measures so that their internal juridical regulations may be compatible with the spirit and the scope of the Convention;
4. Invites States, to the extent that they are able to do so, to apply provisionally the measures set forth in the Convention, pending its entry into force for each of them;
5. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;
6. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue to provide legal assistance to Member States that request it in the adjustment of their national laws, policies and infrastructures to implement the international drug control conventions, as well as in the training of personnel responsible for applying the new laws;
7. Expresses its satisfaction at the programme of regional legal workshops initiated by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to assist States in identifying limitations in their legal capacity to implement the relevant international conventions fully and in developing appropriate measures and arrangements to overcome such limitations;
8. Once again requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources and drawing, in particular, on funds available to the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to promote and support public information activities relating to the Convention;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 47/97

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Economic and social consequences of illicit drug trafficking

In compliance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(4) the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered a note by the Executive Director of UNDCP commenting on the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Expert Group to study the economic and social consequences of illicit traffic in drugs, and action envisaged or already taken by UNDCP along lines traced by the Expert Group.(27) He noted that the Expert Group had concentrated on the availability of reliable data for determining the economic and social consequences of illicit drug trafficking and possible measures to address the issue of money-laundering, and had urged the United Nations to develop a comprehensive, unified information system for that purpose. UNDCP felt the Expert Group had underestimated the difficulty and complexity of that task. UNDCP estimated that the development of a comprehensive data system would take years and would first require a detailed cost proposal.

It was noted that the International Drug Abuse Assessment System (IDAAS) was being implemented and its list of country profiles was growing. UNDCP had also undertaken, in January 1992, a project to improve its illicit traffic data and improve cooperation with Interpol and CCC. Progress was also being made on the development of a data system related to precursors. A major worldwide research project on the "socio-economic and political impact of production, trade and use of illicit narcotic drugs" was under way, jointly sponsored by the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) and the United Nations University.

On the question of money-laundering, UNDCP had agreed to collaborate with the Financial Action Task Force on a programme of technical assistance emphasizing advisory services and training, supplemented by assistance to prepare or adapt legislation.

In his report on UNDCP,(2) the Executive Director described the development of a "debt-for-drugs" initiative based on the "debt-for-development" concept (see below).

The Secretary-General, in his report on narcotic drugs,(17) informed the General Assembly of the conclusions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on steps taken with regard to the economic and social consequences of illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The Commission acknowledged difficulties related to data collection and expressed interest in having an estimate of the practical and resource implications of a "truly global effort" to construct a database.

On 15 April,(28) the Commission noted the pioneering initiative of UNDCP in developing the concept of debt swaps for alternative development. Under this initiative, part of the official bilateral debt of heavily indebted countries, in agreement with their creditors, could be set aside in local currency to be used specifically for alternative development activities. The Commission recommended that the Executive Director submit a progress report to the thirty-sixth session.

Implementation of the Global Programme of Action

The Secretary-General continued to monitor implementation of the Global Programme of Action.(13) In compliance with a 1991 General Assembly request,(29) his October report on narcotic drugs(5) discussed efforts by UNDCP, other agencies of the United Nations system and Governments to implement the Global Programme.

Activities of UNDCP concentrated on the servicing of drug control bodies, strengthening of the international system to control licit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, prevention and reduction of illicit demand for such substances, treatment and rehabilitation, the elimination of illicit drug supplies and the suppression of illicit drug traffic. Multisectoral activities were undertaken in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, the Middle East and the Balkans.

Within the United Nations, the Department of Public Information produced 47 radio programmes on various drug control themes, and produced and distributed a television programme—"UN in Action"—on drug rehabilitation in Thailand, to television networks around the world. One 27-minute video, entitled "High Hopes", was produced in English, French and Spanish. Under the crime prevention and criminal justice programme of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, two expert group meetings were convened in October 1991 (Suzdal, Russian Federation, and Bratislava, Czechoslovakia) on issues related to drug control, including money-laundering, tracing and forfeiture of illegal proceeds, monitoring of large-scale transactions, sentencing of drug offenders, and law enforcement intelligence gathering and exchange.

The United Nations Development Programme, as mandated by its Governing Council, was applying the principle of sustainable human development to its drug control priorities and advocacy. It was also collaborating in a four-country joint programming initiative in drug abuse control.

The 1992-1997 medium-term plan of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) was revised to include action in the area of drug control as part of the regular work programme for the 1994-1995 biennium. A project initiated in 1989 to reduce illicit drug demand in Grenada was completed. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) initiated a study of the nature and extent of drug abuse among youth in countries of the ESCWA region and of drug abuse intervention services for youth. A study was also designed on economic and social approaches to the eradication of hashish and opium production and consumption in Lebanon.

UNRISD and the United Nations University were conducting the second phase of a research programme on the socio-economic and political impact of production, trade and use of illicit narcotic drugs. A handbook and two discussion papers from the first phase were published and, in the second phase, 2 out of 10 ongoing country studies were completed.

The United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI) collaborated with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on a drug abuse education and prevention project for high-school students in Malta. UNICRI also prepared educational videotapes to help young people resist pressure to use drugs. It organized two training seminars on prevention and training methodology for health and social workers, and prepared a two-volume handbook on training techniques for the prevention of drug abuse and related phenomena. The Drug Abuse Comprehensive Centre, which began operations in the autumn of 1991, published and distributed the first four issues of its bulletin.

The International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued to expand its programmes on vocational rehabilitation and the social reintegration of recovering addicts in the community and on drug prevention and assistance in the workplace. During the year, ILO was involved in six projects related to drug abuse in the workplace and four projects related to the training of personnel working with drug addicts.

The Remote Sensing Centre in the Research and Technology Development Division of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was involved in a project aimed at refining satellite imagery technology and ground verification procedures for the detection of poppy cultivation.

Drug control-related activities were also carried out by UNESCO, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The Secretary-General also reported on the efforts of Governments to implement the Global Programme of Action. A number of States amended their penal codes to provide for more stringent drug trafficking penalties, and new legislative texts relating to the 1988 Convention were transmitted to the Secretary-General by several States. Governments in all geographical areas reported the implementation of programmes for the treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug abusers, and positive results were reported from the establishment of bilateral and multilateral agreements.

The Executive Director of UNDCP submitted an April report on the five-year plan developed by UNDCP to implement the Global Programme of Action.⁽³⁰⁾ The report proposed global action related to prevention and reduction of drug abuse, treatment and rehabilitation of addicts, control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, suppression of illicit trafficking and money-laundering issues, and strengthening of judicial and legal systems. The report also described master plans for implementing national and regional drug control strategies and the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, which was proclaimed as part of the Global Programme of Action.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs agreed that the five-year plan should not overlap with the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, which outlined activities and strategies for implementation by the various United Nations entities involved in drug abuse control.

United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse

The General Assembly, at its seventeenth special session in 1990, proclaimed 1991-2000 as the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, devoted to implementation of the Global Programme of Action. In the five-year plan to implement the Programme, specific activities were outlined for UNDCP under the general theme "A global response to a global challenge", by which UNDCP would encourage application of the recommendations of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, adopted by the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking,⁽³¹⁾ and support implementation of the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control of 1990,⁽³²⁾ aimed at fulfilling all existing mandates of the United Nations system and related intergovernmental decisions. Information was also being requested from Governments for the compilation of a master directory of national focal points to facilitate the exchange of information. The directory would be supplemented by lists of focal points in relevant intergovernmental organizations and specialized agencies.

In addition, UNDCP would undertake specific activities related to Global Programme targets and priorities established by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. It was also proposed that: a world conference be organized for non-governmental organizations in 1993; the Decade include a strong public information component with close collaboration with the mass media; and well-known individuals become special ambassadors for the Decade.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 15 April,⁽³³⁾ the Commission invited all Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with and support UNDCP in coordinating and implementing the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse. It considered that the Decade, having been proclaimed by the General Assembly as a response to the global challenge of drug abuse, should, where possible, be financed from the regular budget of the United Nations. Member States were invited to make voluntary contributions to strengthen the impact and effectiveness of the Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/102 without vote.

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned that the illicit demand for, production of and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances continue to threaten seriously the socio-economic and political systems and the stability, national security and sovereignty of an increasing number of States,

Reaffirming the principle of shared responsibility of the international community in combating drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Reaffirming also that the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session and the Declaration adopted by the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990, together with the international drug control treaties, provide a comprehensive framework for international cooperation in drug control,

Recognizing the efforts of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to implement its mandates within this comprehensive framework.

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to improve the effectiveness of the regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies and of the Subcommission on Illicit Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East in addressing specific drug law enforcement problems of the various regions,

Emphasizing the need for an analysis of transit routes used by drug traffickers, which are constantly changing and expanding to include a growing number of countries and regions in all parts of the world, particularly those that are vulnerable to illicit transit traffic on account, inter alia, of their geographical location,

Alarmed by the growing connection between drug trafficking and terrorism in various parts of the world,

Recognizing the efforts of countries that produce narcotic drugs for scientific, medicinal and therapeutic uses to prevent the channelling of such substances to illicit markets and to maintain production at a level consistent with licit demand,

Reiterating its condemnation of criminal activities that involve children in the use, production and illicit distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and emphasizing the need for the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and other competent agencies to give high priority to measures designed to address this problem,

Noting the increasing number of States acceding to or ratifying the international drug control treaties, including those that have become States parties to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Reaffirming that all efforts to combat problems related to the consumption, production and manufacture of and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the flow of money related to these activities should be accompanied by effective measures to promote the economic and social development of affected States,

Recalling its resolution 46/103 of 16 December 1991, in which it reiterated its invitation to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to consider, at its thirty-fifth session, the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Expert Group to Study the Economic and Social Consequences of Illicit Traffic in Drugs, together with the comments of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, with a view to recommending appropriate follow-up activity,

Noting also the action taken by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on this issue, including its decision to study the issue again at its thirty-seventh session,

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates its condemnation of the crime of drug trafficking in all its forms, and urges continued and effective international action to combat it, in keeping with the principle of shared responsibility and with full respect for national sovereignty, territorial integrity and the cultural identity of States;

3. Welcomes the initiatives of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to implement its mandates within the framework of the international drug control treaties, the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Global Programme of Action and relevant consensus documents;

4. Supports the focus on national and regional strategies for drug abuse control, particularly the master-plan approach, and urges that the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to keep in mind that these should be complemented with effective inter-regional strategies;

5. Notes with appreciation the activities of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to promote and monitor the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, 1991-2000, under the theme "A global response to a global challenge", including the successful launching by the Programme of the goodwill ambassadors initiative, and invites Governments to cooperate with the Programme in further developing this initiative;

6. Takes note of the recommendation that Governments should establish national focal points or coordinating mechanisms for the Decade;

7. Recommends that Governments cooperate fully with the Coordinator for the Decade to enhance and facilitate the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on progress made in attaining the objectives of the Decade, to be submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council;

8. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in cooperation with relevant agencies, including the United Nations Children's Fund, to study the involvement of children in drug-related criminal activities and the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances by children, with a view to recommending measures that may be taken to address this problem;

9. Welcomes the trend towards ratification and implementation of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

10. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to include in its report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on the implementation of the United Nations Convention against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking of 1988 a section on experience gained to date in implementing the Convention, which should contain recommendations and strategies for its further implementation;

11. Recommends that the United Nations International Drug Control Programme invite the cooperation of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in its activities to counter drug-related criminality, including money-laundering, to ensure complementarity of their efforts and to avoid duplication;

12. Encourages all countries to take action to prevent the illicit arms trade by which weapons are provided to drug traffickers;

13. Expresses its satisfaction with the efforts of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to improve the functioning and impact of the meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies and with its decision that the heads of national drug law enforcement agencies of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean and the Subcommission on Illicit Trafficking and related Matters in the Near and Middle East should continue to meet annually;

14. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in its report on illicit traffic in drugs to analyse world-wide trends in illicit traffic and transit in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including methods and routes used, and to recommend ways and means for improving the capacity of States along those routes to deal with all aspects of the drug problem;

15. Emphasizes the connection between the illicit production and supply of, demand for, sale of and traffic and transit in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the economic, social and cultural conditions of the countries affected and that solutions to these problems must take into account the differences and diversity of the problem in each country;

16. Calls upon the international community to provide increased international economic and technical cooperation to Governments, at their request, in support of programmes for the substitution of illicit crops by means of integrated rural development and alternative development programmes that respect fully the jurisdiction and sovereignty of countries and the cultural traditions of peoples;

17. Takes note of the initiative of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to study the concept of swapping debt for alternative development in the area of international drug abuse control and the decision of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to consider this matter at its thirty-sixth session on the basis of the report of the Executive Director of the Programme;

18. Encourages Governments to nominate experts for the roster to be maintained by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, to ensure that the Programme may draw from the widest pool of expertise and experience in implementing its policies and programmes;

19. Stresses the need for effective action to prevent the diversion for illicit purposes of precursors and other chemicals, materials and equipment frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

20. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its valuable work in monitoring production and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances so as to limit their use to medical and scientific purposes, and for the effective manner in which it has implemented its additional responsibilities under article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances concerning the control of precursors and essential chemicals;

21. Takes note of the conclusions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-fifth session on the economic and social consequences of illicit trafficking;

22. Expresses its satisfaction with efforts being made by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and other United Nations bodies to obtain reliable data on drug abuse and illicit trafficking, including the development of the International Drug Abuse Assessment System, the project to determine possible improvements to the international system for the collection of data on illicit traffic and money-laundering, as well as the programme of technical cooperation with developing countries in collaboration with the Financial Action Task Force, and requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-sixth session on the progress being made in these areas;

23. Notes with satisfaction that the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute will complete its world-wide research study on the economic and social consequences of drug abuse and illicit trafficking in 1993;

24. Recommends to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs that, when it studies the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme on the economic and social consequences of drug abuse and illicit trafficking at its thirty-seventh session, to consider including this issue as an item on its agenda;

25. Appeals to States and the international donor community to increase voluntary contributions to the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to enable it to expand its programmes further;

II

Implementation of the Global Programme of Action against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of the Global Programme of Action;

2. Reaffirms its commitment to implementing the mandates contained in the Global Programme of Action and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control;

3. Notes with satisfaction the framework established by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to monitor implementation of the Global Programme of Action;

4. Calls upon States to take all possible steps to promote and implement individually and in cooperation with other States the mandates and recommendations contained in the Global Programme of Action, with a view to translating the Programme into practical action to the widest possible extent at the national, regional and international levels;

5. Calls upon the United Nations and its relevant bodies, the specialized agencies, other relevant intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to extend their cooperation and assistance to States in the promotion and implementation of the Global Programme of Action;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "International drug control".

Also on 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/99 without vote.

Examination of the status of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the illicit production, trafficking and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances are increasing every day, and that these illicit activities are claiming a growing number of victims,

Considering that, despite the continued and vigorous fight that is being waged by countries at the local, regional, bilateral and multilateral levels and some encouraging developments, the global situation with respect to drug abuse and illicit trafficking continues to worsen,

Convinced that, given the magnitude and global nature of the drug problem, international cooperation in conformity with the international drug control treaties, the Global Programme of Action adopted at its seventeenth special session, the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and other relevant consensus documents is fundamental to confronting this scourge,

Acknowledging that there are obvious links, under certain circumstances, between poverty and the increase in the illicit production and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that policies of alternative economic development can make a contribution in addressing this problem,

Acknowledging the responsibility of Governments in alleviating poverty, reducing the dependency of their citizens on narcotics and narcotics production and enforcing legal measures against narcotics,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/147 of 18 December 1990 and 46/101 of 16 December 1991 concerning respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which are indispensable to establishing a basis for international cooperation in the war against drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Reaffirming also the importance of the role of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control,

Reaffirming further the multifaceted nature of the problem and the principle of shared responsibility for drug abuse control contained in the Declaration adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking,

Convinced of the necessity of further strengthening international cooperation and redoubling efforts to broaden the areas appropriate for this cooperation, taking into account experience gained and the need to renew commitment and establish goals to guide the decisions aimed at eradicating this scourge,

Calling attention to the growing connection between terrorist groups and drug traffickers,

Bearing in mind the commitment made in the Political Declaration adopted at its seventeenth special session to keep under constant review the activities set out in the Global Programme of Action,

1. Decides to hold four plenary meetings, at a high level at its forty-eighth session, to examine urgently the status of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic in and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, with a view to:

(a) Evaluating the implementation by Member States of the Global Programme of Action and making recommendations on improving cooperation in the field of drug abuse control, taking into account the priority given to this issue by the international community;

(b) Identifying those policies on which there has not been satisfactory progress in order to expand and increase the effectiveness of this cooperation and to establish measurable goals and renew commitments;

(c) Promoting the universal ratification of or accession to the international drug control treaties, particularly the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

(d) Encouraging the adoption and implementation of legislative and administrative measures necessary to ensure that national judicial systems are compatible with the spirit and the intent of the treaties and to encourage States that are not yet parties, to the extent they are able, to apply provisionally the provisions of the treaties;

(e) Encouraging the pursuit of trade liberalization measures which will enhance the trading opportunities of all countries affected by the illicit production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

(f) Considering ways to strengthen and enhance international cooperation in programmes of alternative rural development;

(g) Strengthening international cooperation to eradicate the growing and dangerous links between terrorist groups, drug traffickers and their paramilitary gangs, which have resorted to all types of violence, thus endangering the constitutional order of States and violating basic human rights;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to implement the present resolution;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to present, at the next regular session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, an evaluative report containing recommendations on measures to be taken with regard to paragraph 1 of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, its comments regarding the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at the high-level plenary meetings of its forty-eighth session.

Implementation of the System-Wide Action Plan

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Coordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse Control (Vienna, 16 April)(34) considered the review of the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, as requested by the General Assembly.(35) The review, conducted by UNDCP, took account of structural and functional changes resulting from the establishment of UNDCP; deficiencies noted in the original version of the Plan; resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs during the previous two years; revisions outlined in the report of the Secretary-General and integrated into the Plan; the objectives of the Global Programme of Action; and the need to add a chapter on intersectoral activities. To make the Plan a more dynamic, action-oriented document, participants recommended that the five-year plan be used; that activities be grouped under subheadings; and that a system be developed for more inter-agency consultations.

In September,(36) the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting considered modifications to the document, including the incorporation of a new chapter VI, "Multisectoral activities", into the draft. The meeting agreed that the revised draft should be finalized by UNDCP for submission to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-sixth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/100 without vote.

Implementation of the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control and the Global Programme of Action against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances: action by agencies of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/16 of 1 November 1989, 44/141 of 15 December 1989, 45/148 of 18 December 1990, 45/179 of 21 December 1990 and 46/102 of 16 December 1991,

Fully aware that the international community is confronted with the dramatic problem of drug abuse and the illicit cultivation, production, demand, processing, distribution and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that States need to work at the international level as well as individually to deal with this scourge, which has a strong potential to undermine development, economic and political stability and democratic institutions,

Stressing the important role of the United Nations, its relevant bodies and the specialized agencies in supporting concerted action in the fight against drug abuse at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling that in its resolution 44/141 it requested the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to coordinate at the inter-agency level the development of a United Nations system-wide action plan on drug abuse control and that the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990 a report on the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control as an instrument to facilitate coordination, complementarity and non-duplication in drug control activities within the United Nations system,

Affirming the proposals as laid out in the System-Wide Action Plan, and recognizing that further efforts are needed to implement and update it,

Recalling that in its resolution 44/141 it also requested the Administrative Committee on Coordination to make the necessary adjustments to the System-Wide Action Plan annually and requested that the executive heads of United Nations bodies report annually on the progress made in implementing the Action Plan and that the Administrative Committee on Coordination include the information in its annual report, so as to enable the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Economic and Social Council to consider it, within their respective mandates, and to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly,

Expressing concern that there has been limited progress by the agencies of the United Nations system in incorporating within their programmes and activities action aimed at dealing with drug-related problems in the manner envisioned in the System-Wide Action Plan,

Recalling and emphasizing the continuing importance of the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted at its seventeenth special session on 23 February 1990,

Emphasizing the continuing importance and validity of the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, as adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and the Declaration adopted at the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990,

1. Reaffirms the commitment expressed in the Global Programme of Action and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, and calls upon States to take all possible steps to promote and implement, individually and in cooperation with other States, the mandates and recommendations contained in the Global Programme of Action, with a view to translating the Programme into practical action to the widest possible extent at the national, regional and international levels;

2. Calls upon all relevant United Nations agencies, particularly those associated with the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, to establish agency-specific implementation plans to incorporate fully into their programmes all the mandates and activities contained in the System-Wide Action Plan, and to submit a report to the Secretary-General by 1 March 1993 on progress made in establishing such agency-specific plans, for inclusion in an annex to the System-Wide Action Plan;

3. Calls upon the governing bodies of all United Nations agencies associated with the System-Wide Action Plan to facilitate its implementation by designating an agenda item under which the Action Plan may be considered at their next regular meeting;

4. Reaffirms the role of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to coordinate and provide effective leadership for all United Nations drug control activities, in order to ensure coherence of actions within the Programme as well as coordination, complementarity and non-duplication of such activities across the United Nations system;

5. Requests the Administrative Committee on Coordination to give due attention in its work to the coordination of drug control activities and, under the direction of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, to update the System-Wide Action Plan for the consideration of the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993 and of the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, keeping in mind the need to revise and update the Action Plan as necessary, inter alia, by:

(a) The addition of an annex containing agency-specific implementing plans, as noted in paragraph 2 above;

(b) The inclusion of a reference to the important role of the international financial institutions, as noted in chapter II of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, and the ability of such institutions to promote economic stability and undermine the drug industry;

6. Also requests the Administrative Committee on Coordination to review and update, as necessary, the System-Wide Action Plan on a biennial basis, taking into account the need to simplify and streamline its presentation;

7. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and in particular the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, to promote and continuously monitor the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, giving special attention to the System-Wide Action Plan;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on activities undertaken by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and Governments relating to the implementation of the Global Programme of Action.

UN Charter and international law

In his September report on narcotic drugs,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, in responding to a General Assembly request,⁽³⁷⁾ referred to the guiding principles of the United Nations in the fight against drugs as recalled in the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action,⁽¹³⁾ namely: the sovereignty of States; shared responsibility in combating drug abuse and illicit trafficking; non-interference in the internal affairs of States; and the strengthening of cooperation under mutually agreed conditions through bilateral, regional and multilateral mechanisms. Explicit guarantees of these principles were incorporated in the four main international drug control treaties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 47/98 without vote.

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/101 of 16 December 1991,

Conscious that the adoption of the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action at its seventeenth special session, devoted to the question of international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, was an important step in the harmonization of the efforts of all to combat this scourge of mankind,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Convinced that the intensification of international cooperation and concerted action among States is the fundamental basis for confronting the problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Recognizing that the international fight against illicit trafficking should be pursued in full conformity with the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, and the principles of international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, non-interference in the internal affairs of States, and non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations,

1. Reaffirms that the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking should continue to be based on strict respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations;

2. Calls upon all States to intensify their actions to promote effective cooperation in the efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking, so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving this end, and to refrain from using the issue for political purposes;

3. Reaffirms that the international fight against drug trafficking should not in any way justify violation of the principles enshrined in the Charter and international law, particularly the right of all peoples freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, in preparing the report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, and the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, to continue to give due consideration to the principles set out in the present resolution;

5. Decides to consider at its forty-eighth session the question of respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking under the item entitled "International drug control".

Supply and demand

Demand reduction

UNDCP carried out a number of prevention and demand reduction projects during 1991. In Africa, preventive education was a specific element of law enforcement projects in Egypt, Ghana, Kenya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Senegal and the United Republic of Tanzania. Governments in eastern and southern Africa planned the establishment of a drug abuse monitoring system which would, among other things, facilitate prompt responses to new developments. In Latin America, demand reduction programmes were carried out in eight countries, with many activities concentrating on school-age children. Projects in Bolivian and Colombian cities were aimed especially at "street children" and included recreation, counselling, education and vocational training activities. In the Caribbean, prevention programmes were operating in the Bahamas, Belize, the Dominican Republic, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, the Netherlands Antilles, Saint Lucia, and Trinidad and Tobago. A project to produce model prevention materials for use in schools in the eastern Caribbean was completed in collaboration with UNESCO.

In South-East Asia, many highland development projects in Thailand incorporated prevention activities. In Myanmar, the third phase of UNDCP assistance for the period 1986-1991 ended, and a new demand reduction project for Malaysia was to begin in 1992. Several preventive education programmes were designed for the countries of South-West Asia in 1991. A UNDCP mission designed a five-year comprehensive preventive education programme for Bangladesh, Pakistan's integrated drug demand reduction programme was extended to 1994, and Sri Lanka's second three-year project was to begin in 1992. A drug information and reference programme was developed for Afghanistan, and coverage of the drug awareness campaign for Afghan refugees in camps in Peshawar, Pakistan, was widened to include extensive training for teachers, religious leaders and community workers.

UNDCP also assisted national drug testing laboratories with demand reduction activities and supported special courses organized by the International Council on Alcohol and Addictions to upgrade the qualifications of some 170 professionals from 24 countries working in the field of demand reduction.

International drug abuse assessment system

UNDCP continued to develop the International Drug Abuse Assessment System (IDAAS) and its database, which had been expanded through the computerization of information submitted over the previous six years by nations replying to part B (Drug Abuse) of the annual reports questionnaire. A March report(38) on measures to control and reduce illicit demand analysed global reporting patterns and trends related to drug abuse and gave an overview of them by region. The report reflected data on the workings of international drug control treaties, submitted to the Secretary-General in 1991 by 81 countries and territories. Annexes presented data on the reporting pattern, by year, and on the annual prevalence, daily abuse and registered abusers of cannabis, cocaine and heroin. The report also analysed the reporting capacity of Governments and noted that only 34 Governments had responded every year for the previous eight years to part B of the questionnaire and that even they were not always in a position to furnish the information requested.

A March Secretariat report(39) supplemented a 1991 report(40) providing responses to a 1990 questionnaire on progress in the implementation of the first seven targets of the 1987 Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline.(31) Of the replies received, 44 were from Governments, three from intergovernmental organizations and nine from non-governmental organizations. The report found that 39 of the 44 countries reporting had adopted measures to assess drug abuse or collect data, but still needed financial support and human-resource training to help overcome organizational and methodological problems. Activities in the area of preventive education were tar-getted at specific groups and actively pursued by nearly all States in the five regions. States also reported on activities to prevent drug abuse in the workplace, mostly by creating awareness among employers through workshops, conferences or the distribution of information. Most countries were involved in some form of prevention through local community organizations, professional associations, religious groups and international action groups. Leisure-time activities were a major topic in Europe, and most countries in the Americas and in Asia and the Pacific had implemented them, but very few countries in Africa focused on them. The media were considered highly influential, as reflected in the number and wide variety of activities that involved the media in drug control initiatives.

The Secretariat also reported that, based on information available, a data sheet on intergovernmental organizations had been developed for UNDCP inventory, and some 200 non-governmental organizations active in the field of drug and substance abuse issues had also been identified. The process of tabulating and updating information on each of them had started, drawing on data collected from responses to the UNDCP questionnaire on the implementation of the first seven targets of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline. These inventories would be used by UNDCP to improve collaboration, avoid duplication of effort, broaden the information base for the Secretary-General's annual report to the Assembly, and facilitate world-wide dissemination of information on demand reduction activities at the national or regional levels.

Control of illicit supply

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 15 April,(41) the Commission asked UNDCP to consider assisting States, at their request, to evaluate and control the production of both natural narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. It also asked UNDCP to assist in the application of appropriate modern technologies to evaluate, control, and eradicate illicit crop production and assess the possibility of crop substitution or development alternatives.

Also on 15 April,(42) the Commission considered the impact on indigenous peoples and ecosystems of deforestation and other activities to prepare land for illicit drug crops. It urged the Executive Director of UNDCP to convey to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June) the importance of analysing the link between illicit drug production and environmental damage and to report, with the help of the United Nations Environment Programme, to the Commission at its thirty-sixth session.

Narcotic raw material for licit use

In 1992, INCB continued to monitor the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs. It stated that the world consumption of opiates had stabilized at 200 tonnes in morphine equivalent per year, of which codeine accounted for 160 tonnes. Of the principal opiates, consumption increased only for dihydrocodeine and morphine, reaching 18 and 11 tonnes respectively in 1991, the latest year for which complete statistical information was available. The consumption of ethylmorphine and pholcodine decreased, while the use of codeine and opium-based preparations appeared to stabilize.

Recognizing the need for a balance between supply and demand, INCB requested the Governments concerned to avoid overproduction and, in April, the Board organized an informal meeting between the main opiate producers and importers. In collaboration with the World Health Organization, the Board continued to review Governments' methods for estimating medical needs for opiates.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/30 without vote.

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986, 1987/31 of 26 May 1987, 1988/10 of 25 May 1988, 1989/15 of 22 May 1989, 1990/31 of 24 May 1990 and 1991/43 of 21 June 1991,

Emphasizing once again that achieving a balance between the licit supply of opiates and the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes constitutes an important aspect of the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control and that resolving the problem of excess stocks of opiate raw materials is an essential step in that direction,

Noting the fundamental need for international cooperation and solidarity in overcoming the problem of excess stocks, which has been imposing heavy financial and other burdens on the traditional supplier countries,

Having noted the valuable recommendations made by the International Narcotics Control Board in its special reports on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs,

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1991, in particular paragraphs 81 to 88 on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs,

1. Urges all Governments to continue to give serious consideration to ways to bring about rapid improvement in solving the problem of excess stocks of opiate raw materials held by the traditional supplier countries;

2. Requests all Governments to take measures to implement Council resolutions on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs, particularly in the light of the cautionary note contained in paragraph 82 of the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1991 to the effect that, starting in 1992, projected figures show that world production of opiate raw materials may cease to be below global consumption of opiates;

3. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its efforts to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in its special report for 1989 on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs, prepared in conjunction with the World Health Organization;

4. Encourages the International Narcotics Control Board to continue its informal discussions with the main producers of raw materials for opiates and the main importers about the supply and demand question during sessions of the Commission;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/30

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/107) without vote, 27 July (meeting 21); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1992/25); agenda item 20.

Diversion of chemicals for illicit drug production

INCB informed the Commission in February of steps to implement article 12 of the 1988 Convention to prevent the diversion of precursors into illicit traffic and to assess substances for possible inclusion in the Convention Tables.(43) It noted that the Chemical Action Task Force (CATF), established in 1990 by the Group of Seven major industrialized countries, had recommended that 10 additional substances frequently used in the manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances be placed under international control and that Governments take steps to prevent their diversion. The Task Force recommended, among other things: vigilance on the part of commercial operators; administrative surveillance; registration/authorization of commercial exporters; and import and export authorization.

CATF had also recommended that INCB publish detailed information on global trading patterns for those chemicals recommended for control, together with directories of competent administrative and enforcement authorities. A Conference on Chemical Control Operations, organized by the United States, Interpol and INCB in September 1991, recommended, inter alia, the creation of a standard system by which Governments could decide the legitimacy of precursor imports and exports. Consideration was given to the establishment of an electronic communication network linking the secretariat of INCB with Interpol, CCC and the Commission of the European Communities.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 9 April,(44) the Commission decided that N-acetylanthranilic acid, isosafrole, 3,4-methylenedioxypheyl-2-propanone, piperonal and safrole should be included in Table I of the Convention, and that hydrochloric acid, excluding its salts, methyl ethyl ketone (also referred to as 2-Butanone or MEK), potassium permanganate, sulphuric acid, excluding its salts, and toluene should be included in Table II.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/29 without vote.

Measures to prevent the diversion of precursor and essential chemicals to the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned about the diversion of precursor and essential chemicals from commercial channels to the illicit manufacture of heroin, cocaine and other narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recalling the provisions of articles 3 and 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 and Tables I and II of that Convention,

Noting the constructive work of the Chemical Action Task Force established by the heads of State of Government of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries and the President of the Commission of the European Communities at the sixteenth annual economic summit, held at Houston, United States of America, in July 1990, in developing effective procedures to prevent the diversion of precursor and essential chemicals,

Taking note of the recommendations contained in the final report of the Chemical Action Task Force, in particular those on international and domestic trade in substances subject to international control, together with the practical measures for preventing chemical diversion and for developing international cooperation between the competent administrative and law enforcement authorities,

Taking note also of the decision by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-fifth session to add five substances to Table I and five substances to Table II of the 1988 Convention,

Welcoming the outcome of the Conference on Chemical Control Operations convened at Lyon, France, in September 1991 by the Government of the United States of America, in association with the International Narcotics Control Board, the Customs Cooperation Council and the International Criminal Police Organization [see E/CN.7/1992/2, para. 17], and the work that was done subsequently on the establishment of mechanisms for sharing information between the databases of those organizations and the establishment of procedures to verify the authenticity of applications for export authorizations,

Recognizing the importance of close collaboration between Governments and the chemical industry in preventing chemical diversion,

1. Invites all Governments which have not already done so to establish effective legislative, procedural and cooperative measures to implement article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

2. Underlines the importance of applying suitable regulatory measures, in accordance with the provisions of article 18 of the 1988 Convention, to every stage of the receipt, storage, handling, processing and delivery of precursor and essential chemicals in free ports and free trade zones and in other sensitive areas such as bonded warehouses;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to develop suitable model texts for the implementation of articles 3 and 12 of the 1988 Convention, taking into account work already undertaken by organizations and bodies such as the European Economic Community, the Organization of American States and the Chemical Action Task Force;

4. Invites all chemical-manufacturing States to monitor routinely the export trade in precursor and essential chemicals in a way that will enable them to identify changes in export patterns that suggest the diversion of such chemicals into illicit channels;

5. Invites States in which precursor and essential chemicals are manufactured and States in regions in which narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances are illicitly manufactured to establish close cooperation in order to prevent the diversion of precursor and essential chemicals into illicit channels and, if necessary, on a regional basis, to consider the establishment of bilateral agreements or arrangements where appropriate;

6. Urges States that export chemicals essential to the illicit production of heroin and cocaine, namely acetic anhydride, acetone, ethyl ether, hydrochloric acid, methyl ethyl ketone (MEK), potassium permanganate, sulphuric acid and toluene, to establish suitable mechanisms to detect and prevent their diversion and illicit trafficking and, where there is a risk of diversion of or illicit trafficking in those substances, to ensure that:

(a) Exporters of those essential chemicals are identified;

(b) Exporters of those essential chemicals are required to keep detailed records of all export transactions, including details of ultimate consignees, and to make these available for inspection by the competent authorities;

(c) An export authorization is required in respect of any consignments of commercial quantities of those essential chemicals to any State that has been identified as being concerned about the illicit manufacture of heroin or cocaine on its territory or as sensitive as regards the possible diversion of essential chemicals, taking into account the relevant reports of the International Narcotics Control Board, the Customs Cooperation Council and the International Criminal Police Organization;

(d) Applicants for export authorizations are required to provide full details of ultimate consignees and transport arrangements;

(e) The competent authorities, in considering applications for export authorizations, take reasonable steps to verify the legitimacy of transactions, in consultation, where appropriate, with their counterparts in importing countries;

7. Recommends that, if permitted by the basic principles of their legal systems, States should strengthen law enforcement cooperation by applying the technique of controlled delivery at the international level in appropriate circumstances to suspect consignments of precursor and essential chemicals;

8. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in preparing assistance programmes for law enforcement and other agencies in States and regions in which drugs are illicitly manufactured, to give priority to providing resources for improving communications, equipment and training in preventing chemical diversion;

9. Invites the Programme and national laboratories to consider how they might assist in developing reliable field and laboratory testing methods to be used by national law enforcement agencies and laboratories in identifying scheduled chemicals;

10. Invites Member States to consider how to fund the production and distribution of the field testing kit developed by the laboratory of the Programme;

11. Invites the International Narcotics Control Board to consider, in consultation with Governments, the feasibility of compiling and making available to Governments information on the global pattern of trade in scheduled chemicals, bearing in mind the resource implications of such a requirement and the need to protect information of a commercially sensitive nature;

12. Also invites the Board to publish and maintain a directory containing the following information:

(a) The names, addresses and telephone and telefacsimile numbers of the administrative and law enforcement authorities responsible for regulating or enforcing national controls over precursor and essential chemicals;

(b) A summary of the regulatory controls that apply in each State, especially with regard to the importation and exportation of substances listed in Tables I and II of the Convention;

13. Requests the General Assembly to allocate adequate resources from within the existing level of resources of the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the Board and the Programme to discharge their functions under the present resolution and article 12 of the Convention;

14. Commends the Customs Cooperation Council for its work in establishing a discrete tariff code in the Customs Nomenclature for each of the substances specified in Tables I and II of the Convention;

15. Invites the Customs Cooperation Council to establish a discrete tariff code for any new substance commonly used in the manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, the monitoring of which the Board might consider to be justified;

16. Invites Governments to establish close cooperation with the chemical industry with a view to identifying suspicious transactions of precursor and essential chemicals and, where appropriate, to encourage the industry to establish codes of conduct to complement and enhance compliance with regulatory requirements;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/29

30 July 1992 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/107) without vote, 27 July (meeting 21); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1992/25); agenda item 20.

Follow-up action

INCB urged Governments to establish practical mechanisms and procedures to prevent illicit diversion before considering further additions to the Tables. The Board also considered that any future modification of the scope of control would need to be supported by sufficient data on the licit and illicit movements of the substances in question.

Diversion of psychotropic drugs for illicit use

INCB reported that close cooperation with Governments had enabled it to thwart attempts to divert psychotropic substances in Schedule II of the 1971 Convention, mainly methaqualone, fenetylline and secobarbital from licit sources. The Board noted that more than 70 Governments were applying additional control measures for most of the substances in Schedules III and IV, but that some parties to the 1971 Convention had failed for several years to control substances on the Schedules, allowing traffickers to exploit the international control system, particularly in the case of pemoline. In 1991 and 1992, traffickers had manufactured pemoline tablets in India from bulk shipments out of Europe, and the Board noted that this activity had been facilitated by the fact that pemoline was not under national control in India. After the Board's intervention, however, India updated its list of controlled psychotropic substances in October to include pemoline.

Regional issues

Africa

The drug abuse and illicit trafficking situation in Africa continued to deteriorate and the Board warned that if effective action were not taken soon the drug problem would escalate, compounding misery, violence, corruption and instability in the region. Although many African countries had demonstrated their willingness to fight the drug menace, they lacked the necessary resources and needed support to put effective drug control programmes and strategies in place. There were no reliable drug abuse assessments or estimates for the region, but epidemiological studies, with the financial support of UNDCP, were planned.

Cannabis continued to be the most abused drug in Africa and was the focus of a UNDCP mission to Morocco in 1992 to discuss national and international drug control. Cannabis continued to be widely cultivated throughout the region. Several countries reported an increase in cocaine abuse, and the abuse of stimulants remained a major problem in many countries. In general, non-adherence to the 1971 Convention, loopholes in import controls, inadequate pharmaceutical control services, and corruption contributed to the spread of large quantities of psychotropic substances for which there was no medical need, and illicit traffic in pemoline reached enormous proportions. The Board also noted an increase in traffic in khat (Catha edulis), a stimulant drug that was not under international control and was cultivated mainly in Ethiopia, Kenya and Yemen. The International Conference on Drug Abuse Control in East and South Africa, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in January, recommended that khat cultivation, use and trade be under national and international control. The Board observed that there were few drug demand reduction programmes in Africa.

The fifth meeting of HONLEA, Africa, was held at Abuja, Nigeria, from 18 to 22 May 1992.

Asia

East and South-East Asia. Cooperation in drug control between neighbouring countries in the region was supported by UNDCP. Bilateral agreements were signed by China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Thailand, and the first regional Ministerial Conference on the fight against drug abuse was held at Bangkok in March 1992. The region continued to be a major supplier of illicit heroin, with Bangkok the main centre for trafficking by sea and air. Cannabis remained one of the most abused and trafficked substances in the region, with the principal producer countries being the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Philippines and Thailand. Several countries, including Japan, the Philippines and Thailand, were concerned about an increase in abuse and illicit traffic in stimulants, particularly methamphetamine. Increased drug trafficking through China from across its southern border created addiction problems in parts of the country, and the National Narcotics Control Commission was coordinating the fight against illicit cultivation, trafficking and abuse. There were indications that Singapore had become a major centre for money-laundering, and legislation to curb this was under consideration. The Board noted that economic changes in Viet Nam, and proximity to the producer countries of the Golden Triangle, would undoubtedly make the country a target for traffickers as a source of illicit drugs, a transit country and a potential market.

South Asia. The spread of intravenous heroin abuse in north-eastern India remained a major concern. Intravenous drug abuse had been followed by a sharp increase in HIV infection in the States of Manipur and Nagaland and the territory of Mizovam. At least 50 per cent of the heroin abusers in Manipur had been found to be HIV-positive. The Government of Bangladesh was finalizing an amendment to the 1990 Narcotics Control Act that would incorporate provisions of the 1988 Convention and the 1990 South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation Convention with respect to the forfeiture of assets, controlled delivery, extradition and international cooperation. Licit cultivation of cannabis in Bangladesh was stopped in 1990 and there have been no reports of illicit opium cultivation, but it appeared that Bangladesh was being used increasingly as a transit country for illicit drugs. A UNDCP assistance programme for Bangladesh was expected to start in 1993.

Heroin destined for Europe continued to be smuggled across the India-Pakistan border and, with UNDCP assistance, India expected to conduct a complete review of its drug abuse situation. In Nepal, heroin smuggled through India was the most abused drug. Cannabis and cannabis resin were also abused, and the illicit use of psychotropic substances was on the rise. In Sri Lanka, the drug abuse situation among the young continued to worsen and the cultivation of cannabis was increasing.

The seventeenth meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific, was held at Bangkok from 23 to 27 November 1992.

Europe

There was an urgent need for the newly independent States of the former USSR and of Yugoslavia to be integrated into the system of international drug control treaties. Although drug abuse in those States had not reached the levels of Western Europe, recent changes in those countries could affect the drug abuse and illicit trafficking situation in Europe as a whole. The INCB invited Western European countries to help the former socialist countries of the region to create or strengthen drug control administrations.

In Western Europe, with the expected entry into force on 1 January 1993 of the Single European Act, which envisaged the free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, the Board called for the strengthening of control measures within and outside the European Economic Community (EEC). The Board noted with satisfaction directives for monitoring the trade in precursors, the prevention of money-laundering and the establishment of a customs information system. Drug control and cooperation among countries were further strengthened by the establishment of the European Monitoring Centre on Drugs and Drug Addiction and initiatives of the Pompidou Group of the Council of Europe and the Nordic Committee on Narcotic Drugs. A cooperation group of officials responsible for controls in eastern Mediterranean ports was also created. Cannabis continued to be the principal drug of abuse in Europe, although attention was shifting to heroin and cocaine in several countries. LSD abuse seemed to be reappearing in some countries.

In the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), it was difficult to get a clear view of the extent of drug abuse, but there was evidence that cannabis and cannabis resin were abused in most States. Following a fact-finding mission in April, UNDCP assisted several CIS members to draft new laws and regulations, but international assistance was needed to establish national drug control administrations. Most newly independent States lacked customs services and there were no controls at the new borders.

Near and Middle East

Although the abuse of cannabis and cannabis resin was widespread, heroin and opium abuse constituted the main drug problem in the region. Equally disturbing was the illicit cultivation of cannabis and poppies, the illicit production of cannabis resin and opium, the clandestine manufacture of morphine and heroin, and the illicit traffic in cannabis resin and heroin through the Islamic Republic of Iran and Turkey to Western Europe via the Balkan route. Many countries were seriously affected by the illicit traffic in psychotropic substances. Small-scale surveys in refugee camps in Pakistan indicated that heroin addiction among Afghan refugees had reached alarming proportions among women as well as men.

The twenty-ninth session of the Sub-commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, including the Ministerial-level Conference at that session, was held in Iran from 24 to 28 October.

North America

In Canada, cannabis products remained the most easily available and abused drugs, although recent surveys indicated a decline in their abuse. The availability and abuse of cocaine remained high and the use of crack was spreading from larger to smaller cities and towns across the country. The diversion of licit pharmaceuticals was also a significant problem. In April, the Canadian Government announced that it was extending its national drug strategy for an additional five years with increased funding.

Mexico continued to be a major producer of cannabis and, to some extent, opium poppies. In the first nine months of 1992, law enforcement officers eradicated more than 8,000 hectares of poppies—47 per cent more than in 1991. Cannabis and heroin ("black tar") were smuggled across the border into the United States, and a considerable amount of cocaine continued to pass through Mexico. The Mexican Government was drafting legislation that would include measures against money-laundering and the control of precursors and chemicals used in the manufacture of illicit drugs. National studies and surveys showed that, with the exception of cocaine, drug abuse had not increased significantly during the previous five years.

In the United States, drug abuse and trafficking remained a great concern. According to surveys, the number of drug abusers continued to decline, but at a slower pace than in previous years. The number of cannabis users declined, but there was a marked increase in the potency of cannabis on the illicit market. Heroin abuse remained at about the 1988 level, but the abuse of cocaine increased, reversing a downward trend. The abuse of crack stabilized, having fallen by as much as 50 per cent since 1989. A major national trafficking ring, based in Los Angeles, was broken in January 1992. The success of the National Air Interdiction Strategy in the United States forced traffickers to use more complex modes of smuggling, including concealment in commercial maritime cargoes.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Major drug law enforcement efforts in South and Central America and the Caribbean resulted in the reduction of illicit coca bush cultivation; the seizure of large quantities of cocaine; and greater difficulties for traffickers engaged in money-laundering and illicit trafficking in precursors. The countries of the Andean subregion strengthened bilateral cooperation in law enforcement and were developing ways to replace the coca economy with legal economic activities. Traffickers found it more difficult to find alternative routes and secure environments in which to operate. Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay established the Conference of the Operational Forces of the Southern Cone for the exchange of information and for joint operations.

Most countries introduced mechanisms to prevent the diversion of precursors and chemicals to illicit cocaine manufacture, and a number took legal and administrative steps to prevent money-laundering. In February, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, the United States and Venezuela participated in a drug summit in San Antonio, United States, as a follow-up to a 1990 drug summit in Cartagena, Colombia. The San Antonio summit reflected their commitment to work together through drug law enforcement and the administration of justice, economic and financial efforts, drug abuse prevention and demand reduction. Virtually all countries in the region were being used more frequently for the storage and transshipment of illicit drugs and chemicals used for illicit cocaine manufacture.

Cocaine abuse in the region was increasing and drug abuse among street children reached alarming proportions. Illicit poppy cultivation was creating new problems in several countries. The waters of Caribbean island States continued to be used as a significant transshipment route for drugs destined for North America and Europe, and the abuse of cocaine, mainly in the form of crack, had been reported in almost all of the Caribbean countries. The Government of the Bahamas believed that tough legislation, together with strict monitoring of the banking system, had been successful in preventing money-laundering.

The fifth meeting of HONLEA, Latin America and the Caribbean, was held at Acapulco, Mexico, from 28 September to 2 October 1992.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 15 April,(46) the Commission associated itself with the spirit of the Declaration of San Antonio,(47) signed on 27 February 1992, and encouraged States, separately or in groups, to create mechanisms for joint action. It also invited more States to associate themselves with the Declaration.

Oceania

Law enforcement agencies continued to have difficulty securing the isolated coastal areas between Australia and the island countries of the South Pacific against maritime drug trafficking. It appeared that several of the island countries were being used as stepping-stones to move illicit drugs into Australia.

Cannabis remained the most available drug of abuse in Australia, but amphetamine abuse was also widespread. A national drug abuse campaign, launched in 1985, was evaluated in 1988 and in 1991 and appeared to be achieving its objectives. Its main focus was on women and young people. In June, the Australian Government and INCB hosted the region's first international training seminar for drug control officials.

Large-scale illicit cultivation of cannabis continued in New Zealand and increased in Papua New Guinea, where it was used primarily by young people. Large quantities of cannabis were being grown in Papua New Guinea and transhipped to Australia and other countries.

Conventions

INCB reported that, as of 1 November 1992, the number of parties to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs,(19) in its original or amended form, increased to 135. Of that number, 110 were parties to the Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol.(20) Since the Board's 1991 report, Seychelles and Slovenia had become parties to the 1961 Convention and to that Convention as amended. In addition, Burkina Faso, which was already a party to the 1961 Convention, became a party to the Convention in its amended form. The Board was concerned that, 30 years after the Convention's entry into force, 52 States were not parties to it in either its original or amended form. A number of countries did not have comprehensive and up-to-date regulations that conformed to international drug control conventions.

The Board reported that late submissions of statistics and annual estimates of narcotic drugs to the Secretariat by several countries had delayed the detailed analysis necessary for prompt action and control. The Board urged Governments to fulfil their obligations in that regard.

The Board also reported that, as of 1 November 1992, there were 109 parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,(21) including Ireland, the Seychelles and Slovenia, which became parties in 1992. The Board was concerned by the late submission of reports by several parties whose control of the licit movement of psychotropic substances was affected by budgetary constraints. It expressed hope that the Governments concerned would be able to make the necessary budgetary allocations to ensure the full implementation of their obligations under the Convention, including timely compliance with reporting duties.

The 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances(18) entered into force on 11 November 1990. As of 1 November 1992, 67 States and EEC had become parties to it. The Board urged all States which had not done so to become parties to the Convention. It also invited all States, even before the Convention became formally binding on them, to provisionally apply its measures to ensure its universal application.

Organizational questions

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its thirty-fifth session at Vienna from 6 to 15 April 1992.(48) It considered a Secretariat note on its programme of future work and priorities,(7) which examined its new mandates and the provisional agenda for its thirty-sixth session. The Commission also considered the revision of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, programme 28: International Drug Control.(49) The revisions reflected programmatic changes resulting from recent mandates and from the new organizational structure following the creation of UNDCP.

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/279, took note of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its thirty-fifth session and, by decision 1992/277, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-sixth session.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 14 April,(50) the Commission considered that its work programme should allow time for a substantive exchange of views on recent developments in the illicit drug situation and their effects on activities of UNDCP. It decided that starting with its thirty-sixth session, under the agenda item "General debate", there would be sub-items covering general statements, and substantive debate and conclusions leading to the adoption of a text that reflected the main concerns, appraisals and orientations of the Commission with regard to drug abuse issues and the activities of the UNDCP.

International Narcotics Control Board

INCB held its fifty-first session from 6 to 10 January; its fifty-second session from 4 to 15 May; and its fifty-third session from 9 to 26 November, at Vienna.

By decision 1992/278 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Board's 1991 report.(51)

Chapter XVII

Statistics

During 1992, the United Nations continued its statistical work programme, including the improvement of statistical methodology; the collection, compilation and dissemination of international statistical data; support for technical cooperation activities and the promotion of coordination in international statistical work. The Statistics Division of the United Nations Secretariat—part of the newly created Department of Economic and Social Development (DESD)—assumed the functions of the former Statistical Office.

In anticipation of an increased demand for environment statistics and indicators in the wake of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the Statistical Division proposed the establishment of a new branch for environment and energy statistics.

The Secretary-General issued a number of reports on statistical issues and activities for consideration by the twenty-seventh session of the Statistical Commission, to be held in 1993. The Commission, which meets biennially, did not meet in 1992.

UN statistical bodies

Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination of the Statistical Commission held its fifteenth session in New York from 29 June to 1 July 1992.⁽¹⁾ The Working Group made a number of recommendations to the Statistical Commission on strengthening international statistical cooperation and improving the functioning of the international statistical system. It also reviewed progress on the revision of the System of National Accounts (SNA). Recommendations related to the cycle and organization of the Statistical Commission, its Working Group and the Subcommittee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), and coordination among those bodies. Other recommendations dealt with the integration of work programmes, standards, a system of monitoring, and reducing duplication in data collection and processing. The Working Group also reviewed and discussed publications, called for an inventory to be made of the gaps and weaknesses in the international statistical system, and discussed the need for an orderly approach to changes in data collection, including the development of a 10-year plan for methodological work adjustments of nationally supplied statistical data. Aspects of technical cooperation were also addressed.

The Working Group was informed of the status of revisions to SNA being carried out by the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA). ISWGNA's participating organizations were the United Nations Statistical Division, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), the Statistical Office of the Commission of the European Economic Community (EEC) (EUROSTAT) and the United Nations regional commissions. The revised SNA would be presented to the Statistical Commission in 1993.

By decision 1992/210 of 7 February 1992, the Economic and Social Council decided that the Working Group would meet in June/July 1992 instead of in the second half of 1993.

ACC Subcommittee

The ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities held its twenty-sixth session in 1992 (Geneva, 6-10 April).⁽²⁾ The Subcommittee identified four matters to be brought to the attention of ACC: the review of the structure and operation of the Global Statistical System, being carried out by the Statistical Commissions's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination; action taken to improve coordination and cooperation in statistical matters with countries in transition; the initiatives taken on coordination in strategies for statistical development in Africa as reflected in the Strategy for the Implementation of the Addis Ababa Plan of Action for Statistical Development in Africa in the 1990s (see PART TWO, Chapter VI); and plans of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to improve collaboration with members of the Subcommittee on the statistical aspects of UNDP's Human Development Report.

The Subcommittee endorsed a draft policy position for consideration by the Statistical Commission on policies in international organizations concerning adjusting nationally supplied data and making estimates for non-reported data. It reviewed the statistical implications of the single market of EEC; revision of SNA; implications for technical cooperation in statistics of changes in UNDP and United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) policies relating to project execution and agency support costs and the UNFPA Technical Support Services System. The Subcommittee also considered the International Comparison Programme, procedures for adopting joint international statistical standards among two or more organizations, international trade statistics, environment statistics, monitoring achievements of social goals, the base year for international statistics, and preparations for the 1993 session of the Statistical Commission.

The Subcommittee recommended that its next session be held from 7 to 11 June 1993 at Rome, Italy.

Economic statistics

National accounts and balances

ISWGNA completed a report in December(3) on the revision of SNA, which played a major role in macroeconomic description, analysis and policy-making at both the national and international levels. The report included an overview of the revised SNA and described the review process. It showed how the process had initiated parallel revisions of related statistical standards and would result in the development of SNA handbooks containing information on the System, its implementation and special applications. The report summarized the activities of ISWGNA and the Expert Group on SNA coordination (EGC) during 1991-1992.

The sixth meeting of EGC (Aguascalientes, Mexico, 2, 3 and 10 October 1992) discussed the revision of SNA and related technical issues. Participants in an interregional seminar on the revision of SNA (Aguascalientes, 5-9 October) contributed comments on a number of issues, including the process for possible future refinements to SNA.

ISWGNA held a meeting (Paris, 14-16 December), following which it prepared a report(4) reflecting decisions taken at that meeting that affected the second draft of the revised SNA. Those decisions responded to issues brought to ISWGNA's attention through the broad distribution of the revised draft, including comments from statistical offices and other experts, comments from the interregional seminar on the revision of SNA and comments from the sixth meeting of EGC. Major substantive issues dealt with financial intermediation service charges indirectly measured, imputed rent on government buildings, monetary gold, market/non-market output, mineral exploration, consumer subsidies, formal/informal activities and environmental accounting. Technical points addressed included time of recording taxes on income, net worth of quasi-corporations, privately funded pension schemes, the output of non-life insurance and of autonomous pension funds and the time of recording gross fixed capital formation in large equipment.

Price statistics

In a December report,(5) the Secretary-General reviewed progress in phase VI of the International Comparison Programme (ICP), which compared real product and purchasing power in order to assess the relative economic development of countries and other related international comparison issues. Under phase V of ICP, with 1985 as the reference year, published results were available for all six individually conducted regional comparisons. The processing of the world results, covering 63 countries with reference year 1985, was being carried out by EUROSTAT. The processing had generated world results for 53 categories of final expenditure on gross domestic product.

Regarding progress in phase VI, three country groups, OECD, EUROSTAT and ICP Group II (Eastern Europe), had conducted comparisons with reference year 1990. In the developing regions, due mainly to insufficient financial support, a late start implementing phase VI did not permit comparisons to be conducted for 1990. Consequently, the phase VI global comparison would have a later reference year.

The Handbook of the International Comparison Programme(6) was issued in English in November.

Industrial statistics

An October report(7) by the Secretary-General presented an overview of preparatory work relating to the 1993 World Programme of Industrial Statistics at the national and international levels. The report provided a review of current national practices in industrial statistics with respect to the scope and frequency of inquiries covering the industrial sector; summarized stated national intentions regarding participation in the 1993 World Programme; and linked current national statistical programmes planning to take part. The Programme was to encourage the orderly development of national inquiries into the structure and activity of the industrial sector, and to obtain benchmark data. Fifty-six countries had indicated they would participate.

The report discussed two documents being prepared in connection with the 1993 World Programme: a technical report on national strategies for measuring industrial structure and growth and a guide for the conversion from revision 2 to revision 3 of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC) in the compilation and reporting of industrial data.

The role of technical cooperation in industrial statistics in promoting national participation in the Programme was also discussed, including background information, a review of the current situation, and proposals and resources for the Programme.

Environment statistics

The Secretary-General, in a June report,(8) reviewed the ongoing methodological work in environment statistics, and described draft reports on selected topics prepared in the context of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Advancement of Environment Statistics. The Working Group met twice in 1992 (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 17-21 February, and Wiesbaden, Germany, 14-18 December). The report addressed progress made in environmental accounting, in particular the SNA draft handbook of integrated environmental and economic accounting; reviewed progress made in developing and establishing regional and national programmes of environment statistics, and in the programme of work of the United Nations Statistical Division. The Division proposed creating a new branch for environment and energy statistics in anticipation of the increased demand for environmental statistics and indicators following the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII)

UNCED(9) proposed the establishment of national systems of integrated environmental and economic accounting (IEEA) in all countries, which would play an integral part in national development decision-making. The Conference requested the Statistical Division to make available to all Member States the methodologies contained in the SNA Handbook on Integrated Environmental and Economic Accounting, once completed, and to coordinate training of national technical staff for the establishment, adaptation and development of national IEEAs. DESD, of which the Statistical Division was a part, was requested to support the use of sustainable development indicators in national economic and social planning to ensure the integration of IEEAs. The Department was further asked to promote improved environmental, economic and social data collection.

The second meeting of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Environmental Data was convened at Geneva on 21 May under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE). It was decided that work on the survey to compile information on international environmental databases, carried out by EUROSTAT, should continue.

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination(1) requested the Statistical Division to convene a task force on environment statistics. To that end, the Division circulated a questionnaire to explore the planned involvement of international organizations in the areas of environmental statistics and accounting.

International trade and transport statistics

In the area of trade statistics, work continued on methodological development and publications consequent to the publication of the Commodity Indexes for the Standard International Trade Classification, Revision 3.

New projects included research on technical problems related to the rebasing of trade index numbers to a new base year and on possible improvements in the country coverage of samples used in estimating both the regional/world unit value indexes of total imports and manufactured goods exports and of the export price index for machinery and transport equipment.

In the area of international seaborne trade statistics, collection of limited statistical data on goods loaded and unloaded in seaborne trade continued, based on questionnaires sent to countries. The Division also entered into an arrangement with a private firm to make the firm's seaborne trade data available to the United Nations and other selected organizations.

In July,(10) the Secretary-General and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) presented their views on the future relationship between the Standard International Trade Classification and the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System.

Service statistics

In a report on work carried out by national and international agencies in the field of service statistics,(11) the Secretary-General reviewed developments in methodology, application of international classifications and technical cooperation. It considered experience with the use of the International Standard Industrial Classification of all Economic Activities, Revision 3, and the provisional Central Product Classification; summarized national practices in price and volume measures for financial intermediation, business services, education and health services, and public administration; and described progress made in discussions of proposed international guidelines on price and volume measures for services.

The report also summarized the work of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics,(12) a cooperative effort by volunteer statistical agencies to address problems associated with data gaps and conceptual issues. At its seventh meeting (Washington, D.C., 19-23 October), the Voorburg Group emphasized the importance of constructing and implementing a model survey to broaden the Group's experience with issues concerning measurement, classification and data collection.

In addition, the report included information on the methodological work of ECE, EUROSTAT, GATT, IMF, OECD, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Statistical Division to advance service statistics in member countries and described their future plans.

Social and demographic statistics

Population and housing censuses

In December, the Secretary-General reported on progress achieved in the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme,(13) stating that, as at 1 April 1992, 194 out of 232 countries or areas had carried out or planned to have a population and/or housing census during the period 1985-1994. Some of the 1990 round's achievements included an overall improvement in many phases of census-taking, particularly in regard to data processing, owing to the widespread adoption of microcomputers by developing countries. There had also been an increase in the number of housing censuses carried out by countries, mostly in conjunction with population censuses. Preparations for the World Population and Housing Census Programme were discussed.

Civil registration and vital statistics

In 1992,(14) as part of the International Programme for Accelerating the Improvement of Vital Statistics and Civil Registration Systems, missions were carried out by representatives of the Statistical Division to the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) to coordinate efforts and make technical and administrative arrangements for a possible workshop in each region in 1993. Provisional agendas, lists of technical papers to be presented for discussion and their potential authors, and budgets were drawn up, and countries were identified as potential participants.

The Division also issued guidelines for a review and assessment of national civil registration and vital statistics systems in Arabic and French to assist participating countries to prepare their country reports for the workshops.

In the area of methodology the Division undertook a study on national procedures in more than 100 countries or areas for recording vital events on a daily basis and reporting them to the agency or agencies that compiled continuous vital statistics. The study was a supplement to the Handbook of Vital Statistics Systems and Methods, which dealt with issues of layout and content, numbering, filing, storage, retrieval and presentation of records.

Special population groups

Work on special population groups focused on children, persons with disabilities and elderly persons, and involved the development of concepts, definitions and classifications; data-collection strategies and international database development; training manuals and handbooks; and technical cooperation, including training workshops and advisory services.(13)

In 1992, the Statistical Division, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and Thailand, conducted an Interregional Workshop on Developmental Delay and Disability among Children Living in Especially Difficult Circumstances (Bangkok, 9-13 September).

With respect to people with disabilities, the International Disability Statistical Database (DISTAT, version 2) was being prepared for dissemination. DISTAT contained national disability statistics from censuses, household surveys and administrative registries, and presented data on 12 major socio-economic and demographic topics concerning disability. The Statistical Division, in cooperation with Statistics Canada, organized an International Workshop on Development and Dissemination of Statistics on Persons with Disabilities (Ottawa, 13-16 October). The workshop considered national work and the need for international recommendations on disability statistics. It also considered the concerns of producers of disability statistics, regarding the quality of disability data and the need for comparability. With funds from the Swedish International Development Authority, the Division was preparing an efficient and standardized data collection procedure for national and international monitoring and evaluation of World Health Organization (WHO) community-based rehabilitation programmes. It was collaborating with WHO in revising the International Classification of Impairments, Disabilities and Handicaps.

Statistics on women

During 1991-1992,(13) the Statistical Division concentrated on preparing and disseminating version 2 of the Women's Indicators and Statistics Database (WISTAT). WISTAT provided internationally available gender-based statistics in a single, comprehensive, well-documented source, covering 178 countries and areas of the world.

The Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), at its 1992 session,(15) recommended that preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995) should include assembling information and gender-disaggregated statistics for elaborating national reports on the situation of women. Documentation for the Conference should include an updated version of The World's Women, 1970-1990. Trends and Statistics.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

A report by the Secretary-General and the World Bank(16) reviewed progress in implementing the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP), the Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS) and the Social Dimensions of Adjustment Programme (SDA). Five countries (Burkina Faso, Cayman Islands, Guinea, Guyana, Seychelles) joined NHSCP during 1992, bringing to 50 the total number of countries participating.

The review of LSMS and SDA highlighted implementation as well as methodological issues. It underlined the measures taken to build up national capabilities to collect, process and analyse statistical information.

In another report,(17) the Secretary-General and the World Bank addressed the differences and similarities between the three programmes in objectives, characteristics and methodology. It stated that collaboration between NHSCP and LSMS/SDA at the country level was the best strategy to assist countries to address their data requirements for general and specific programmes.

Other statistical activities

Technical cooperation

A summary of technical cooperation programmes in statistics of organizations of the United Nations system and several multilateral organizations during 1989-1992 was presented in a November report(18) by the Secretary-General. The report reviewed the impact of a 1989 General Assembly resolution on operational activities for development(19) and of new agency support cost arrangements on the provision of technical cooperation in statistics. It contained information on the technical cooperation programmes of the United Nations system, and information supplied by EEC and the International Statistics Institute was summarized.

The main objective of the United Nations technical assistance programme (DESD and the regional commissions) was to assist developing countries to strengthen and extend national services and capabilities to collect, process, disseminate and use a broad range of development-related statistics. The programme's expenditures on statistical projects in 1992 totalled some $23.6 million, down from $30.6 million in 1991.

The Secretary-General also reported in December(20) on a programme to monitor the achievement of social goals in the 1990s. The programme was being developed by the United Nations Children's Fund, UNFPA, UNDP and the Statistical Division. The report gave the conclusions of pilot studies carried out in live countries (Ecuador, Kenya, Mali, Mexico, Philippines) and described post-pilot study developments. It also proposed elements of a Statistical Division work programme on monitoring social-goal attainment.

Programme questions

In an overall review of the statistical activities of the United Nations system and other international organizations for the period January 1990 to December 1991, and up to November 1992 for the Statistical Division,(21) the Secretary-General provided information on major achievements, new activities, and activities cancelled or modified significantly.

The Secretary-General also provided updated information on the future activities in statistics of the organizations of the United Nations system and of several international organizations outside the system.(22)

Chapter XVIII

Institutional arrangements

During 1992, the restructuring of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies continued. Following the adoption in April of General Assembly resolution 46/235, which had as its goal the enhancement of the effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, the Council established three new subsidiary bodies and approved the work programmes for their first sessions. The Council's work at its 1992 substantive session was conducted in accordance with newly established guidelines.

Upon consideration of a review of the conditions necessary for the effective functioning of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit, the Council requested the Secretary-General to consider increasing the Unit's resources.

The Administrative Committee on Coordination and the Committee for Programme and Coordination continued efforts to harmonize system-wide work programmes and activities.

Restructuring questions

In 1990, the General Assembly, by a resolution on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic and social fields,⁽¹⁾ had stressed the need for more effective and efficient functioning of the United Nations intergovernmental machinery in order for it to be more responsive to the needs of enhancing international economic cooperation and promoting the development of developing countries. The Assembly had also endorsed a 1990 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽²⁾ by which the Council President was given a mandate to undertake broad consultations with Member States on the matter.

In 1991, the Assembly had adopted certain measures on the restructuring and revitalization of the Council,⁽³⁾ and in April 1992, it adopted further measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 13 April, the General Assembly, at its resumed forty-sixth session, adopted without vote resolution 46/235.

Restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/177 of 19 December 1990 and 45/264 of 13 May 1991 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

1. Adopts the text contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the proposed restructuring measures as contained in the annex to the present resolution and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the action he has taken.

ANNEX

Background

1. At its resumed forty-fifth session, the General Assembly, in the annex to its resolution 45/264 of 13 May 1991, agreed that a review of the functioning of the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council and of the General Assembly should take place during the forty-sixth session of the Assembly. In the same resolution, the Assembly underlined the objectives of the overall exercise as being the enhancement of the effective and efficient functioning of the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations system in the economic, social and related fields in order to be more responsive to the needs of enhancing international economic cooperation and promoting the development of the developing countries.

2. The review at the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly of the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly should be carried out with the objective of possible restructuring and revitalization, and the review of their reporting responsibilities and procedures should be carried out with a view to avoiding duplication, where possible. The review should be on the basis of the criteria listed in paragraph 6 (3) of the annex to resolution 45/264.

Framework

3. Some consideration has been given to the restructuring and revitalization of the subsidiary machinery in the social and related fields in the United Nations. Similar attention should be given to the restructuring and revitalization of the subsidiary machinery of the economic sector of the United Nations, with a view to its strengthening.

4. In accordance with the basic principles and guidelines for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields outlined in resolution 45/264, the following common understanding should guide the entire exercise of the restructuring and revitalization of the subsidiary bodies, with the aim of adopting measures to sustain and strengthen the quality and impact of the output of these bodies:

(a) The issues of which the subsidiary bodies are seized are of vital importance to Member States, especially for the development of developing countries;

(b) The ability of the United Nations system to deal more effectively with such vital issues should help to enhance its relevance and credibility in the economic, social and related fields;

(c) Activities in pursuance of these issues must be implemented in an effective and efficient manner in order to enhance international economic cooperation and to promote, in particular, the development of developing countries;

(d) Subsidiary bodies should provide the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as principal organs of the United Nations responsible for system-wide policies in the economic, social and related fields, with high-quality advice on relevant issues, through analysis and appropriate policy recommendations or options, in order to enable them to guide future work in the United Nations, develop common policies and agree on appropriate actions;

(e) The composition of each subsidiary body that does not have universal participation must be determined with due regard to equitable geographical representation. Members will be eligible for re-election;

(f) In cases where Governments or government-nominated experts are elected to subsidiary bodies, the experts should possess the necessary qualifications and professional or scientific knowledge. Travel and/or daily subsistence allowance to cover the participation of experts shall be financed from the regular budget in accordance with established rules;

(g) No single or uniform approach to restructuring and revitalization is applicable to all subsidiary bodies. Each body must be reviewed on its own merits through an open and thorough process.

Reporting procedures for subsidiary bodies

5. The Economic and Social Council should provide guidance to and follow up the work of its subsidiary bodies whose reports should contain clear and coherent recommendations and proposals to facilitate their consideration by a revitalized Economic and Social Council in a substantive and integrated manner.

Subsidiary bodies identified for restructuring and revitalization

6. Regional commissions

The regional commissions should be enabled fully to play their role under the authority of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. Their effectiveness should be strengthened. The regional commissions, particularly those located in developing countries, should also be strengthened in terms of their activities and participation in operational activities of the United Nations system, bearing in mind the overall objectives of the restructuring and the revitalization process and taking into account paragraph 3 (h) of the annex to General Assembly resolution 45/264. In this context, the regional commissions are requested to provide recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

7. Other subsidiary bodies:

- (a) Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development

- (i) Name: Commission on Science and Technology for Development (New York)

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development and its subsidiary body, the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, will be transformed into a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council.

Such functional commission should examine at its first session the question of funding arrangements and the modalities for the convening of ad hoc panels/workshops which will meet inter-sessionally to examine specific issues of science and technology for development within the framework of General Assembly resolutions 34/218 of 19 December 1979 and 41/183 of 8 December 1986. In this connection, the Commission could consider the practice of the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

- (ii) Membership and participation: fifty-three members elected by the Economic and Social Council for a term of four years. Travel expenses shall be paid by the United Nations for one representative of each of the Member States participating in the Commission.

- (iii) Primary programme objective: as stipulated in General Assembly resolutions 34/218 and 41/183.

- (iv) Nature of output and reporting procedure: report to the Economic and Social Council with policy options and recommendations.

- (v) Frequency and duration of meetings: the Commission will meet once every two years for two weeks.

- (vi) Secretariat support: the Department of Economic and Social Development will serve the Commission and Member States, in particular developing countries, effectively.

- (b) Committee on Natural Resources

- (i) Name: Committee on Natural Resources (New York)

- (ii) Membership and participation: twenty-four government-nominated experts from different Member States, who possess the necessary qualifications and professional or scientific knowledge, who will act in their personal capacities, elected by the Economic and Social Council for a four-year term. Travel expenses and daily subsistence allowance shall be paid by the United Nations for each member of the Committee.

The Committee will have two working groups, one on minerals, and one on water resources.

- (iii) Primary programme objective: current mandate of the Committee on Natural Resources pertaining to minerals and water resources.

The mandate of the Committee on Natural Resources in respect of energy will be assumed by the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development (see (c) below).

- (iv) Nature of output and reporting procedure: report to the Economic and Social Council with policy options and recommendations.

- (v) Frequency and duration of meetings: the Committee will meet once every two years for two weeks.

- (vi) Secretariat support: the Department of Economic and Social Development and any other relevant existing entities of the Secretariat.
- (c) Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy
 - (i) Name: Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development (New York)
 - (ii) Membership and participation: twenty-four government-nominated experts from different Member States, who possess the necessary qualifications and professional or scientific knowledge, who will act in their personal capacities, elected by the Economic and Social Council for a four-year term. Travel expenses and daily subsistence allowance shall be paid by the United Nations for each member of the Committee.
 - (iii) Primary programme objective: the Committee will retain the current mandate of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, including the consideration of its relation to environment and development.
 In addition, it will take over the present mandate of the Committee on Natural Resources pertaining to energy, as defined in Economic and Social Council resolution 1535(XLIX) of 27 July 1970.
 - (iv) Nature of output and reporting procedure: report to the Economic and Social Council with policy options and recommendations.
 - (v) Frequency and duration of meetings: once every two years for two weeks.
 - (vi) Secretariat support: the existing arrangements for servicing the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy may be strengthened through consolidation, in accordance with paragraph 6 (4) of the annex to General Assembly resolution 45/264, to provide adequate technical support to the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development.

Future work

8. The specific regional allocation of seats for each of the bodies mentioned above should be decided upon at the next organizational session of the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with paragraph 4 (e) above

Review

9. Any relevant institutional changes and recommendations by the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development regarding, in particular, the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development shall be considered at the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

10. A review of the implementation of the present exercise, including the consideration of further steps, is to be undertaken during the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly, in accordance with resolution 45/264.

13 April 1992 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/46/L.57/Rev.1), based on informal consultations on draft by Peru (A/46/L.57); agenda item 137.

Financial implications. 5th Committee. A/46/898/Rev.1; S-G, A/C.5/46/83. Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 5th Committee 63; plenary 38, 84.

By decision 47/438 of 22 December, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, deferred until 1993 consideration of a draft resolution(4) on implementation of section II (on the Economic and Social Council) of the annex to a 1977 Assembly resolution on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.(5)

Report of the Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General, in response to the April 1992 Assembly resolution (see above), submitted an October report(6) on the implementation of the result of the restructuring and revitalizing process in the economic, social and related fields. The report also included information on recommendations that had not been implemented as scheduled.

Among the measures adopted for restructuring and revitalizing the Council were: the holding of an organizational session, not to exceed four days, to determine the Council's annual agenda and related organizational matters; the holding of a substantive session of the Council, which would include the high-level (see below), coordination (see below), operational activities, and committee segments; a restructuring of the subsidiary machinery; recommendations on the role of the regional commissions; and streamlining of Secretariat operations. Recommendations received from the five regional commissions on strengthening their role were annexed to the report (for details, see PART TWO, Chapter VI).

Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council

In June 1992, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council,(7) in which he reviewed the implementation of relevant Council resolutions and decisions adopted since 1988. Those resolutions and decisions related to the reorganization of the annual general discussion; in-depth consideration of major policy themes; monitoring of implementation of overall strategies, policies and priorities established by the General Assembly and the Council; the Council's role with regard to operational activities for development; the Council's responsibilities for coordinating the activities of the specialized agencies, United Nations organs and organizations in the economic, social and related fields; recommendations and steps taken to improve working methods and organization of work;

the consolidation of similar issues under a single agenda item; the calendar of conferences; documentation; election of the Bureau of the Council; preparations for the organizational session; and Secretariat support.

On 31 July 1992, by decision 1992/303, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Establishment of new subsidiary bodies

In April 1992, in accordance with the General Assembly's earlier resolutions on restructuring (see above), the Economic and Social Council established a functional Commission on Science and Technology for Development, an expert Committee on Natural Resources, replacing the Council's standing Committee of the same name, and a Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development. In July, the Council reaffirmed the mandates of the new subsidiary bodies and approved the draft provisional agendas and programmes of work for their first sessions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (April)

At its resumed organizational session, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1992/218.

Establishment of new subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

At its 7th plenary meeting, on 30 April 1992, the Economic and Social Council, recalling General Assembly resolution 46/235 of 13 April 1992 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, decided:

- (a) To abolish its Committee on Natural Resources;
- (b) To establish a functional Commission on Science and Technology for Development, a Committee on Natural Resources and a Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/235;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, for approval by the Council at its substantive session of 1992, the consolidated mandates of the new subsidiary bodies, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 46/235;
- (d) To hold elections for the membership of the bodies mentioned above at its substantive session of 1992, as an exceptional measure;
- (e) To request the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at its substantive session of 1992, a draft provisional agenda for the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and recommendations for the programme of work of the Committee on Natural Resources;
- (f) That the Commission on Science and Technology for Development should hold its first session from 12 to 23 April 1993 and that the Committee on Natural Resources should hold its first session from 22 March to 2 April 1993.

Economic and Social Council decision 1992/218

30 April 1992 Meeting 7 Adopted without vote
Draft by Vice-President (E/1992/L.18), orally revised and orally amended by United Kingdom; agenda item 2.

(See Appendix III for the regional allocations of seats in the three new subsidiary bodies of the Council.)

Note of the Secretary-General (June). In June, (8) the Secretary-General submitted for consideration by the Economic and Social Council a note containing the proposed consolidated mandates of the new subsidiary bodies of the Council. It also contained the draft provisional agendas and documentation for the first sessions of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and of the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and recommendations for the programme of work of the Committee on Natural Resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 31 July, Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1992/62.

Establishment of new subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council,
Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 46/235 of 13 April 1992,

Reaffirming also its decision 1992/218 of 30 April 1992,
Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on the proposed consolidated mandates of the new subsidiary bodies of the Council,

Bearing in mind that these new subsidiary bodies will contribute to the efforts of the international community towards sustainable development,

1. Reaffirm the mandates of the new subsidiary bodies, namely, the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, as set forth in the relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, including General Assembly resolution 46/235;

2. Approves the draft provisional agendas and programmes of work for the first sessions of the new subsidiary bodies, as contained in the note by the Secretary-General;

3. Requests those bodies to make recommendations, at their first sessions, about their future work programmes, taking into account their respective mandates and the follow-up of the relevant provisions of Agenda 21 as may be approved by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

4. Invites the General Assembly, in accordance with paragraph 9 of the annex to its resolution 46/235, to consider, at its forty-seventh session, any relevant institutional changes and recommendations made by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session and by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development regarding, in particular, the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development,

1992 sessions

Agendas

On 6 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted a five-item agenda for its organizational session,(1) on 29 April a three-item agenda(2) and on 28 May a two-item agenda for its resumed organizational session.(3)

On 7 February, by decision 1992/205, the Council approved the provisional agenda for its 1992 substantive session, including the high-level, operational activities and coordination segments. It also adopted the agenda of items for consideration by its Economic and Social Committees.

On 29 June, by decision 1992/223, the Council adopted the agenda for its 1992 substantive session and approved the organization of work.(4) On 30 June, it decided to consider under agenda item 2 on the adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters, the question of post-United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) institutional arrangements, as requested in a 25 June letter to the Secretary-General from the United States.(5) On 6 July, it adopted the agenda and proposals for the organization of work for the high-level segment of its session.(4)

(For agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

Resumption of organizational session

On 30 April, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1992/219 without vote.

Resumption of the organizational session for 1992 of the Economic and Social Council

1. At its 7th plenary meeting, on 30 April 1992, the Economic and Social Council, in the spirit of the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, as provided for in General Assembly resolutions 45/264 of 13 May 1991 and 46/235 of 13 April 1992, and in response to the request of the Commission on Human Rights contained in Commission decision 1992/117 of 5 March 1992, decided, as an exceptional measure and without prejudice to the content of Assembly resolution 45/264, to resume its organizational session on 28 and 29 May 1992 to assure the continued, timely and efficient functioning of its subsidiary bodies.

2. The Council, at its resumed organizational session, would consider and decide on provisional administrative measures related to the mandates adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session, which would apply on a temporary basis until the Council had taken a formal decision on those mandates at its substantive session of 1992, it being understood that the provisional administrative measures should not be construed or interpreted as a confirmation of the mandates and that the mandates could not be confirmed before the Council held a substantive discussion on them.

3. The Council stressed that that decision had been taken on the clear understanding that it responded to the requirements of an exceptional situation resulting from the reorganization of its work. It was thus understood that the decision should by no means constitute a precedent and that it was the intention of the Council to ensure that, in the future, administrative arrangements for the implementation of activities related to Council mandates had to be initiated after, and on the basis of, substantive consideration and express approval of each specific mandate by the Council. It was agreed that the need for strictly observing that practice would be of paramount concern in the organization of all future work of the Council and of its subsidiary bodies, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 45/264.

4. Provisional administrative arrangements decided upon by the Council at its resumed organizational session to facilitate the activities of special rapporteurs/representatives and working groups would be automatically terminated if their corresponding mandates were not confirmed by the Council at its substantive session of 1992.

5. The Council, at its resumed organizational session, would consider and decide on the regional allocation of seats in the three subsidiary bodies which the General Assembly in its resolution 46/235 had requested it to establish, namely, the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development.

6. The Council decided that nothing contained in the present decision was to be considered in any way to prejudge or determine the substantive discussion of human rights, including the question, of mandates, to be held at the substantive session of 1992 of the Council.

7. The Council also decided to consider, at its resumed organizational session, subjects that merited urgent consideration, referred to it by its other subsidiary bodies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In April, the Council adopted decision 1992/217 without vote.

Programme of work for the substantive session of 1992 of the Economic and Social Council

I

Programme of work of the Council

At its 7th plenary meeting, on 30 April 1992, the Economic and Social Council, having reviewed the preparations for its substantive session of 1992, decided that, as an exceptional measure and without prejudice to the content of General Assembly resolution 45/264 of 13 May 1991, the programme of work for the substantive session should be as follows:

29 June	Opening of the session and adoption of the agenda
30 June-2 July	Committee segment (Economic and Social Committees)
6-8 July	High-level segment
9-10 and 13-14 July	Coordination segment
15-17 July	Operational activities segment Committee segment (Social Committee)
20-24 and 27-28 July	Committee segment (Economic and Social Committees)
29-30 July	Plenary meetings
31 July	Conclusion of the work of the Council

II

High-level segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council decided that:

(a) The meeting of 6 July would be reserved for statements by Ministers and other high-level representatives;

(b) The one-day policy dialogue with executive heads of multilateral financial and trade institutions of the United Nations system would take place on 7 July and executive heads would be requested to circulate their statements beforehand;

(c) Heads of delegation would be requested to make no more than three interventions of no longer than five minutes each during the three-day period, and would be requested to circulate their main statements beforehand. A press conference or briefing session with the media would be organized for heads of delegation who desire it;

(d) The high-level segment would take place in the Economic and Social Council Chamber, which was a suitable venue for round-table discussions and dialogue among the participants. Throughout the segment, the President of the Council would be expected to take a leading role in stimulating interaction among the participants, summarizing the discussions as they progressed and initiating the successive stages of the dialogue.

III

Coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, recalling its decision 1992/204 of 7 February 1992 on the coordination segment of the Council of 1992, decided that:

(a) The Bureau, with the assistance of the Secretariat, would identify a number of executive heads of specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system who would be specifically invited to take part in the discussion of the two themes to be considered under the segment. The President of the Council would then address a personal invitation to the executive heads concerned;

(b) Executive heads would be requested to have their statements circulated beforehand;

(c) The segment would begin with précis presentations of the statements of the executive heads most concerned with the subject-matter; their remarks would focus on the theme at hand;

(d) Executive heads would be encouraged to identify coordination problems in the course of their interventions, including problems created by a lack of adequate coordination within Governments at the national level;

(e) Without prejudice to the rights of all States to participate in the discussion, the regional and interest groups represented at the Council would be encouraged to select from among their number "discussion leaders" to undertake the necessary research work on the themes under discussion;

(f) The segment would conclude with recommendations to the organizations of the United Nations system related to the two themes under discussion.

Economic and Social Council decision 1992/217

Adopted without vote

Draft by Acting President (E/1992/L.17), based on informal consultations; agenda item 2.

Segments of substantive session

In 1991,(6) the General Assembly had decided that the substantive session of the Council should contain a high-level segment of four days open to all Member States, with ministerial participation, devoted to the consideration of major economic and/or social policy themes. It should further include a segment on coordination of the activities of United Nations agencies, organizations and bodies. Also included should be an operational activities segment of two to three days, focusing in particular on follow-up of policy recommendations and decisions of the Assembly and coordination of operational activities on a system-wide basis; and a committee segment devoted to consideration of specific economic, social and related issues in two separate committees to consider and take decisions on reports of subsidiary bodies of the Council.

In 1992, the operational activities segment did not result in policy recommendations and the experience of the committee segment suggested strongly, according to the Secretary-General in his October report(7) on restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields (see above), that further consideration needed to be given to the agenda before the Council's Economic and Social Committees as well as to their methods of work.

High-level segment

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/203 of 7 February 1992, decided that the high-level segment of its substantive session should be devoted to the consideration of the following major theme: "Enhancing international cooperation for development: the role of the United Nations system"; that, without prejudice to the provisions of the 1991 General Assembly resolution on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,(6) the duration of the high-level segment with ministerial participation should be one to three days; and to invite the Secretary-General to provide his views and recommendations on the selected theme. By decision 1992/205 of the same date, the Council approved the provisional agenda for the high-level segment of 1992.

On 6 July, by decision 1992/223, the Council adopted the agenda and proposals for the organization of work for the high-level segment.

In his October report on restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,(7) the Secretary-General stated that the Council's first experiment with holding a high-level segment had been successful, but in order to enhance its value, it might be necessary to devote less time to formal statements and more time to debate. Statements should be circulated in advance and it would seem best to continue to limit the segment to one theme. A consensus emerged that the subject of the role of the United Nations system in enhancing economic cooperation for development needed to be pursued (see PART THREE Chapter I); an Ad Hoc Open-Ended Working Group was established to continue deliberations on the matter.

Coordination segment

On 7 February, by decision 1992/204, the Economic and Social Council decided that its coordination segment in 1992 should be devoted to coordinating the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies related to the following themes—assistance in the eradication of poverty and support to vulnerable groups, and prevention and control of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and programmes addressed to the mitigation of its negative socio-economic consequences—and decided to request the President of the Council and other members of the Bureau to finalize arrangements for the coordination segment on the basis of consultations with members of the Council.

In accordance with the 1991 Assembly resolution on restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations,(6) the Secretary-General presented to the Council in 1992 a report on each of the two themes(8) selected for the Council's 1992 coordination segment. Although the Council did not adopt formal recommendations as a result of its discussions on the segment, the President on his own authority made statements on both themes which contained recommendations in a number of areas to be forwarded to the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system for review. As the President's statements did not reflect a formal conclusion of the Council, the Secretary-General said in his October report on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,(7) the outcome of the coordination segment was not as authoritative as it might have otherwise been.

Report for 1992

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its organizational, resumed organizational and substantive sessions in 1992 was summarized in its report to the General Assembly.(9)

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 47/433, by which it took note of chapters I, V (sections B, C, E, F and H), VII and IX of the Council's report. On 23 December, the Assembly adopted two decisions by which it took note of the chapters of the report as follows: chapters I, V (sections B to D) and IX, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee (decision 47/461), and chapters I, V (sections C and G), VIII and IX (decision 47/462).

Cooperation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

NGO Unit

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(10) the Secretary-General submitted a June 1992 report to the Economic and Social Council,(11) in which he reviewed the conditions necessary for the effective functioning of the Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO) Unit of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Development. The Unit acted as substantive secretariat of the Committee on NGOs and of related meetings. It also assisted the Committee and the Council in implementing the 1968 Council resolution on arrangements for consultations with NGOs(12) and acted as the focal point within the Secretariat for providing advice and information to Secretariat officials, the United Nations system, Member States and outside users, with regard to NGOs. In 1991, the Committee on NGOs had strongly recommended an urgent review of the grave situation with regard to the staff resources of the Unit in view of the ever-expanding volume of documentation and the constant increase in the number of NGOs in consultative status with the Council, which resulted in extended demands on the Unit.(13)

In his report, the Secretary-General examined the functions of the Unit, its increased workload and existing staff resources. He suggested that a discussion of the matter by the Council would be useful in defining the means for ensuring the Unit's effective functioning.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1992/39.

Review of the conditions necessary for the effective functioning of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Having regard to Article 71 of the Charter of the United Nations which provides that the Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence,

Recalling General Assembly decision 46/431 of 17 December 1991,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1296(XLIV) of 23 May 1968 containing arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations, paragraph 43 of which provides that the Secretariat should be so organized as to enable it to carry out the duties assigned to it concerning the consultative arrangements,

Considering the unique role played by the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Development of the Secretariat as the focal point for cooperation between the United Nations and the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council,

Considering also the increasing importance of the role and activities of the non-governmental organizations in consultative status, particularly with regard to United Nations conferences and their related preparatory activities,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the conditions necessary for the effective functioning of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit prepared in pursuance of General Assembly decision 46/431,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with concern that, as documented in the report of the Secretary-General, the workload of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Development of the Secretariat has consistently increased over the years, while resources have remained at the same level since 1947, when the Unit was established;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to respond to the needs of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit and to adopt appropriate measures, to the extent possible within existing resources during the biennium 1992-1993, to address the problems posed by the situation, in particular relating to the resources required for the Unit to carry out its functions effectively;

4. Also invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a brief report on actions taken in 1992 and those planned for 1993 as short-term solutions to improve the situation of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to consider, to the extent possible within existing resources, increasing the human and financial resources of the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit in order to enable it to fulfil its mandate under Economic and Social Council resolution 1296(XLIV) within the framework of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993, through the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations.

Report of the Secretary-General (November). In response to the Council's July resolution, the Secretary-General submitted a November report to the General Assembly on the functioning of the NGO Unit.(14) He said he had given careful consideration to the request to respond to the Unit's needs and adopt measures during the biennium 1992-1993 to address its problems. He had decided to allocate to the Unit, through redeployment of existing resources, one Professional post at the P-2 level and one General Service post, thus augmenting its resources by 33 per cent. With those additional resources, the Unit should be able to cope with its responsibilities more effectively in the future.

By decision 47/433 of 18 December 1992, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Request from NGOs for hearings

The Committee on NGOs met in New York on 25 June 1992 to hear requests from NGOs in consultative status, category I, to address the Economic and Social Council or its sessional committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. The Committee recommended that 14 NGOs be heard.(15) The Council approved their requests on 29 June, by decision 1992/223.

Intergovernmental organizations

Regional Organization for Protection of the Marine Environment

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1992/265 on the participation of intergovernmental organizations in its work, decided that the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment might participate on a continuing basis, without the right to vote, in Council deliberations on questions within the scope of its activities.

Other organizational matters

Amendments to rules of procedure

On 7 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/2 without vote.

Amendments to the rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council

Adopts the following amendments to the rules of procedure of the Council:

(a) Replace rule 1 by the following text:

“Organizational and substantive sessions

“Rule 1

“The Council shall normally hold an organizational session and one substantive session each year.”

(b) Replace rule 2 by the following text:

“Dates of convening and adjournment

“Rule 2

“Subject to rule 3, and following a meeting early in the year for the purpose of electing the President and the Bureau, the organizational session shall be convened on the first Tuesday in February and resumed at the end of April. The substantive session shall take place between May and July and shall be adjourned at least six weeks before the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly.”

(c) Replace rule 9, paragraphs 1 and 4, by the following text:

“Drawing up of the provisional agenda

“Rule 9

“1. The Secretary-General shall draw up the provisional agenda for each session of the Council. He shall submit to the Council:

“(a) The provisional agenda for the organizational session at least three weeks in advance of the opening of that session;

“(b) The provisional agenda for the substantive session at the organizational session.

“4. The agenda for the organizational session shall include the consideration of the provisional agenda for the substantive session of the Council.”

Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/2

7 February 1992 Meeting 3 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1992/L.11); agenda item 2.

Election of the Bureau

On 29 April, by decision 1992/215, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of the item on the election of its Bureau until its substantive session. On 29 June, the Council elected Poland Council President to replace Yugoslavia which had been elected President on 27 January but had resigned.

Calendar of meetings

On 7 February, by decision 1992/214, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of a provision of a 1991 General Assembly resolution on the pattern of conferences,⁽¹⁶⁾ granted authority to its Bureau to approve inter-sessional departures from its approved calendar of conferences and meetings in respect of its subsidiary bodies when the Council was not in session and after consultation with the Committee on Conferences.

Summary records

On 30 July, by decision 1992/288, the Economic and Social Council decided to discontinue, from 1993, summary records for its sessional committees, the regional commissions and the following other subsidiary bodies: Commission for Social Development; Commission on the Status of Women; Commission on Narcotic Drugs; Commission on Science and Technology for Development; Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice; Committee on NGOs; Committee on Natural Resources; Committee for Programme and Coordination; Commission on Transnational Corporations; and Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development.

1993 work programme

By decision 1992/209 of 7 February, the Economic and Social Council took note of a list of questions for inclusion in its programme of work for 1993: major policy themes (environment and development, population, development and socio-economic indicators) and items for the substantive session, including programme and coordination questions; operational activities for development; regional cooperation; development and international economic cooperation; special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance; the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000); NGOs; human rights; advancement of women; social development; the world social situation; and narcotic drugs.

Coordination in the UN system

ACC activities

In 1992, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) reviewed its methods of work and functioning in the context of the new challenges which the 1990s posed for international cooperation and the need to strengthen policy coordination at both national and international levels.⁽¹⁾ It agreed on a number of guidelines. The Secretary-General would submit for discussion by ACC any programme or proposal of a general or system-wide nature and would keep the Economic and Social Council and specialized agencies fully apprised of the outcome of consultations held with the agencies concerned. Members of ACC would carry out the necessary consultations within the ACC framework when launching, on their own initiative, an operation requiring contributions by its members. They would convey to their deliberative organs major initiatives within the United Nations system of particular relevance to their organizations. ACC also agreed on measures to improve its working procedures.

ACC further extensively discussed follow-up to UNCED, held in June 1992, with particular focus on Agenda 21 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). It established a Task Force on Environment and Development, under the chairmanship of the Director-General of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, to prepare proposals for follow-up. On the Task Force's recommendation, ACC decided to establish an Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development to identify major policy issues relating to UNCED follow-up. The Inter-Agency Committee was to hold its first meeting in 1993.

With the assistance of its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ/OPS), ACC focused on improving the effectiveness of operational activities for development (see PART THREE, Chapter II), with emphasis on field coordination.

Among other issues discussed by ACC were the implications for the United Nations system of the economic and social changes in Eastern and Central Europe and the Russian Federation. An Inter-Agency Task Force on the New Independent States was established in early 1992.

During the year, ACC held two regular sessions (Geneva, 8-10 April, New York, 20-21 October). Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (New York, 10-13 February, Geneva, 25-27 March, 7 and 10 April, New York, 16 and 17 July, 14-16 and 21 and 22 October); CCSQ (Programme Matters) (PROG) (Geneva, 9-11 March); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (FB) (Geneva, 9-13 March, New York, 31 August-4 September); CCAQ (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (PER) (Geneva, 9-11 March, London, 6-10 July); Joint Meeting of CCSQ (PROG) and CCAQ (FB) (Geneva, 11 March); CCSQ (OPS) (Geneva, 16-19 March; New York, 22-25 September).

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, eleventh session (New York, 3 and 4 February); Subcommittee on Nutrition, nineteenth session (Rome, 24-29 February); ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, twenty-first session (Geneva, 3-6 March); second Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on the International Year of the Family (Vienna, 5 and 6 March); sixteenth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Women (Vienna, 9 and 10 March); Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, twenty-sixth session (Geneva, 6-10 April); Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Coordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse Control (Vienna, 16 April, 14-16 September); ACC Task Force on Rural Development, twentieth meeting (New York, 22-24 April); Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Working Group on Demographic Estimates and Projections, seventeenth session (Rome, 23-25 June); second Inter-Agency Consultation on the Follow-up to the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s (Geneva, 25 and 26 June); ACC Ad Hoc Task Force for the International Conference on Population and Development, 1994 (New York, 6 July 1992); Joint United Nations Information Committee, eighteenth session (Rome, 7-9 July); Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (Paris, 5-7 October); ACC Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, thirteenth session (New York, 7-9 October); ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, thirteenth session (30 November-2 December); and tenth Inter-Agency Meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (Vienna, 7-10 December).

Report for 1991

The ACC annual overview report for 1991⁽²⁾ was considered on 11 and 12 May 1992 by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC),⁽³⁾ which welcomed ACC's intention to review its role and functioning, including the functioning of its subsidiary machinery, and stressed the importance of field-level coordination and of the need to improve inter-agency coordination further. Emphasizing that the purpose of ACC's annual overview report was to enable both Member States and ACC to identify and overcome system-wide coordination problems, CPC said a more analytical and forward-looking report was necessary. It also regretted the late issuance of some ACC documentation.

CPC activities

During 1992, CPC met in New York for an organizational meeting on 10 April, for its thirty-second session from 11 to 22 May and for its resumed thirty-second session from 31 August to 18 September.(3)

The Committee reviewed its work programme and suggestions on the timing and duration of its session. It considered the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1990-1991; proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1992-1997; coordination questions; and reports of the Joint Inspection Unit.

It also considered questions related to the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993; an outline of the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995; and the methodology for preparing the programme budget (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July, by decision 1992/302, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of CPC on the first part of its thirty-second session(3) and endorsed its recommendations. It also took note of the annual overview report of ACC for 1991(2) and of the report of the Chairmen of CPC and ACC on the twenty-sixth series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees held in October 1991.(4)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 47/214, section IV, the General Assembly emphasized the need for enhanced coordination in the United Nations system; endorsed CPC's recommendations on the annual overview report of ACC for 1991; and took note of CPC's decision to propose to ACC that the twenty-seventh series of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC, tentatively scheduled for 1993, discuss the results of UNCED and their implications for the United Nations system.

By decision 47/458, the Assembly decided that CPC should meet for one week in May 1993 and for three weeks in August/September 1993.

Work programmes of the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly

The General Assembly, on 18 December 1992, by decision 47/432, approved the organization of work of the Third Committee and its draft biennial programme of work for 1993-1994. On 22 December 1992, by decision 47/440, the Assembly decided to defer further consideration of the draft biennial programme of work for the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for 1993-1994.

PART FOUR

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

Questions relating to decolonization

During 1992, the United Nations continued its efforts to eliminate colonialism in all its forms and manifestations. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (the Committee on colonial countries) held its session in New York (5 February-1 June and 20 July-7 August), at which it considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Committee examined decolonization in general as well as individual Non-Self-Governing Territories.

1960 Declaration on colonial countries

The United Nations, in 1992, reaffirmed the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽¹⁾ as the basis for the decolonization process.

Plan of Action for the Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

In accordance with the Plan of Action adopted by the General Assembly in 1991⁽²⁾ for the Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), which the Assembly had declared in 1988,⁽³⁾ the Committee on colonial countries organized a seminar in the Caribbean region to review the special development needs of island territories (St. George's, Grenada, 17-19 June 1992). The seminar was attended by representatives from the Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs) of Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, Turks and Caicos Islands and United States Virgin Islands and focused on a broad range of economic and social conditions, including: problems of small, structurally open economies; food production; tourism development; development of offshore financial centres; drug trafficking and money laundering; development of financial management expertise; industrial development; human resources development; environmental issues; disaster preparedness and relief; the role of specialized agencies, international and regional organizations in economic and social development; and the provision of technical assistance. It also considered regional cooperation concerning the preservation and protection of marine resources from over-exploitation; sea and air transport; higher education; research and development; and regional pooling arrangements for sharing special skills and expertise. On 19 June, the seminar adopted a final document summarizing its discussions and recommendations which was contained in the Committee's report on the seminar.⁽⁴⁾ The seminar's guidelines and rules of procedure were contained in a separate report to the Committee on colonial countries.⁽⁵⁾

On 4 August,⁽⁶⁾ the Working Group of the Committee on colonial countries decided to recommend to the Committee that the conclusions and recommendations of the seminar be taken into account in considering the situation in the Caribbean Territories. Noting that the Plan of Action for the Decade provided for the holding of seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions alternately, the Working Group decided to recommend that the Committee organize a seminar in the Pacific region in 1993 to consider issues relating to the Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Working Group further decided to recommend that the Committee invite United Nations organs, agencies and institutions to inform the Secretary-General of actions taken in implementing a 1991 Assembly resolution relating to the Plan of Action.⁽²⁾ The Committee on colonial countries approved those recommendations without objection.⁽⁷⁾

Committee on colonial countries

The Committee on colonial countries held its 1992 session in two parts, with a total of 14 meetings from 5 February to 1 June and from 20 July to 7 August in New York,⁽⁷⁾ at which it considered aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It considered the reports of its Working Group,⁽⁶⁾ a report of an open-ended Working Group on improving the efficiency of the Committee's work⁽⁸⁾ and five reports of the newly merged Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance (formerly the Subcommittee on Small Territories and the Subcommittee on Petitions, Information and Assistance) on the dissemination of information on decolonization,⁽⁹⁾ examination of petitions,⁽¹⁰⁾ Pitcairn,⁽¹¹⁾ St. Helena,⁽¹²⁾ and 10 other small Territories.⁽¹³⁾

In February, (14) the United States informed the General Assembly that it had decided to suspend its cooperation with the Special Committee, claiming that it had focused on an outmoded agenda instead of new approaches aimed at addressing the specific needs of the few remaining NSGTs.

Implementation of the Declaration

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/23 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, most recently resolution 46/71 of 11 December 1991, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism is one of the priorities of the Organization for the decade that began in 1990,

Deeply conscious of the need to take, speedily, measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism by the year 2000, as called for in its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the elimination of colonialism, as well as of the need for the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of basic human rights,

Conscious that the success of national liberation struggles and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Noting also with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of some administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Aware of the pressing need of newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Aware also of the pressing need of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, including particularly the small island Territories, for economic, social and other assistance from the United Nations and the organizations within its system,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization, including its resolution 43/47 in which it declared the decade that began in 1990 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in any form or manifestation—including racism, apartheid and economic exploitation, as well as policies and practices to suppress legitimate national liberation movements—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its support for the struggle of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1992, including the programme of work envisaged for 1993;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the activities of those foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration as well as the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that no activity of foreign economic and other interests in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration hinders the peoples of those Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence;

9. Strongly condemns any nuclear collaboration with the Government of South Africa and calls upon any States that are so involved to cease all such collaboration forthwith;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers to terminate military activities in the Territories under their administration and to eliminate military bases there in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and urges them not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories and requests that the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multi-lateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration and to carry out those actions approved by the General Assembly regarding the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of regular visiting missions, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

13. Also calls upon the administering Powers to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to receive visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

14. Further calls upon the administering Powers that have not participated in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1993 session;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide economic, social and other assistance to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to continue to do so, as appropriate, after they exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the other resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Implementation by international organizations

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1991,(15) the Secretary-General submitted a June report with a later addendum(16) containing summaries of information submitted by five specialized agencies on action taken to implement the Declaration.

In November,(17) the Secretary-General submitted a report on cooperation and coordination of specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to NSGTs, as requested by the Assembly in 1991.(18) He discussed their participation in the Assembly's Fourth (Decolonization) Committee, cooperation and coordination among them and action taken by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Secretary-General noted that the UNDP Governing Council, on 14 February 1992, had approved the extension of the first country programme for Anguilla(19) and on 26 May had approved the second country programme for Anguilla, the third country programmes for Montserrat and Tokelau and the fifth multi-island programme for countries of the Eastern Caribbean, including Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands and Montserrat.(20) On the same date, the Council noted extensions of the second country programmes for the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands and the Turks and Caicos Islands and of the intercountry programme for Latin America and the Caribbean. The Secretary-General's report contained tables presenting an overview of the assistance extended in 1991 by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations to non-Member countries, including NSGTs, as well as UNDP indicative planning figures from 1972 to 1996 for NSGTs in Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean.

Report of the Acting President of the Economic and Social Council. In a June report,(21) the Acting President of the Economic and Social Council presented an overview of continuing consultations with the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid on the implementation of the Declaration by the United Nations system. While drawing attention to the extremely fragile economies of the small island Territories, the Acting President appealed to the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to expand and increase their assistance programmes to all Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. Consultations between the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Acting President focused on recent developments in South Africa and action taken by the international community. The Chairman said that strengthened assistance to disadvantaged segments of the society was crucial in preparing South Africans to fully participate in rebuilding their country. The Chairman and the Acting President considered that a large trained cadre of black South Africans would play a critical role in facilitating a smooth transition to a post-apartheid society.

In July,(22) the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries stated that his consultations with the Acting President on the topic were set out in the June report.(21)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July 1992, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/59 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Acting President of the Economic and Social Council on consultations held with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Having heard the statement made by the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on the subject, including in particular Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/68 of 26 July 1991,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to assist in the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations bodies,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, containing the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Recognizing that permanent peace and stability in southern Africa can only be achieved when the system of apartheid in South Africa has been eradicated and South Africa has been transformed into a united, democratic and non-racial country, and reiterating, therefore, that all the necessary measures should be adopted at the present time to bring a speedy end to the apartheid system in the interest of all the people of southern Africa, the African continent and the world at large,

Deeply concerned that the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples have not been fully achieved,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the Non-Self-Governing small island Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes and cyclones, and recalling relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Also bearing in mind the conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations, held in New York from 25 to 29 June 1990,^a

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/70 of 11 December 1991 on cooperation and coordination of specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting with appreciation that assistance has continued to be extended to refugees from southern Africa through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Acting President of the Economic and Social Council, and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspiration of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate in varying forms and degrees with the United Nations and the regional organizations concerned in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other related resolutions of the United Nations system;

6. Requests the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations to strengthen existing measures of support and formulate additional programmes of assistance to the remaining Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories within the framework of their respective mandates;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as international and regional organizations, to take appropriate measures within their spheres of competence in order to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of those Territories;

8. Also requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in formulating their assistance programmes, to take due account of the text entitled "Challenges and opportunities: a strategic framework", which was adopted unanimously by the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations;

9. Welcomes the continued initiative exercised by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in coordinating the activities of the specialized agencies in extending effective assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, and calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the Non-Self-Governing Territories affected by natural disasters;

10. Urges the administering Powers concerned to facilitate the participation of the representatives of the Governments of Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories at the relevant meetings and conferences of the agencies and organizations so that the Territories may draw the maximum benefits from the related activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

11. Urges the governing bodies of those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of their regular sessions a separate item on the progress made and action to be taken by their organizations in the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

12. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations resolutions and to submit the proposals as a matter of priority to their governing and legislative organs;

13. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to adhere to the Programme of Action contained in the Declaration on

Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, in particular with regard to increased support for the opponents of apartheid, the use of concerted and effective measures aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid and ensuring the non-relaxation of existing measures to encourage the South African regime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes;

14. stresses, in the context of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, the need for the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable them to rebuild their economies, which have been adversely affected by South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization, to withstand any further such acts and to continue to support the people of South Africa;

15. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussion held on the subject at the substantive session of 1992 of the Economic and Social Council;

16. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue to maintain close contact on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to report thereon to the Council;

17. Also requests the President of the Council to maintain contact with the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, which is the focal point for the international campaign against apartheid, and to report thereon to the Council as appropriate;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution, with particular attention to coordination and integration arrangements for maximizing the efficiency of the assistance activities undertaken by various organizations of the United Nations system, and to report thereon to the Council at its substantive session of 1993;

19. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November 1992, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/16 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Having considered the reports submitted on the question by the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, as well as all its other resolutions on this subject, including, in particular, resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991, endorsing the Plan of Action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Recalling also its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, the annex to which contains the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity,

Deeply concerned that the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples have not been fully achieved,

Recognizing that permanent peace and stability in southern Africa can only be achieved when the system of apartheid in South Africa has been eradicated and South Africa has been transformed into a united, democratic and non-racial country, and reiterating therefore that all the necessary measures should be adopted at the present time to bring a speedy end to the apartheid system in the interest of all the people of southern Africa, the African continent and the world at large,

Noting that the large majority of the remaining colonial Territories are small island Territories.

Recalling its resolution 43/189 of 20 December 1988, concerning specific measures in favour of island developing countries,

Bearing in mind the conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations held in New York from 25 to 29 June 1990,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee concerning the access of colonial Territories to programmes of the United Nations system,

Noting the assistance extended thus far to colonial Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and considering that such assistance should be expanded further, commensurate with the pressing needs of the peoples concerned for external assistance.

Stressing the importance of securing necessary resources for funding expanded assistance programmes for the peoples concerned and the need to enlist the support of all major funding institutions within the United Nations system in that regard,

Noting with serious concern the continuing effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization that have been committed by South Africa against neighbouring independent African States,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full implementation, without further delay, of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the extension of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories,

Expressing its appreciation to the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community, as well as other regional organizations, for the continued cooperation and assistance they have extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in this regard.

Concerned by the fact that not all Member States have adhered to the measures provided for in the Programme of Action contained in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa and have thus continued or re-established relations with South Africa in a number of fields,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance that is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of assistance programmes to the peoples concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes and cyclones, and recalling relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/70 of 11 December 1991 on cooperation and coordination of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question;

2. Takes note of the report of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples on his consultations with the Acting President of the Economic and Social Council, and endorses the observations and suggestions arising therefrom;

3. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the full implementation, without further delay, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions;

5. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security, Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspiration of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension of all necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as international and regional organizations, to examine and review conditions in each Territory so as to take appropriate measures to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of the Territories;

8. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen measures of support and formulate adequate programmes of assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

9. Also requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide, through an inter-agency framework, the assistance necessary to small island Territories to alleviate the adverse conditions arising from the interplay of factors relating mainly to their size and geographical location;

10. Further requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in formulating their assistance programmes, to take due account of the conclusions and recommendations, entitled "Challenges and opportunities: a strategic framework", of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations held in New York in June 1990;

11. Once again requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all humanitarian, material and moral assistance to Namibia and all newly independent and emerging States so as to enable them to consolidate their political independence and achieve genuine economic independence;

12. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in cooperation with the regional and other organizations where appropriate, to submit to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, particularly specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

13. Recommends that the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund draw the attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution and consider introducing flexible procedures to prepare specific programmes for the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

14. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

15. Welcomes the continued initiative exercised by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in coordinating the activities of the agencies in extending effective assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in those Non-Self-Governing Territories affected by natural disasters;

16. Urges the administering Powers concerned to facilitate the participation of the representatives of the Governments of Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories in the relevant meetings and conferences of the agencies and organizations so that the Territories may draw the maximum benefits from the related activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

17. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to adhere to the Programme of Action contained in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, in particular with regard to increased support for the opponents of apartheid, the use of concerted and effective measures aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid, and ensuring the non-relaxation of existing measures to encourage the South African regime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes;

18. Stresses, in the context of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, the need for the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable them to rebuild their economies, which have been adversely affected by acts of aggression and destabilization by South Africa, to withstand any further such acts and to continue to support the people of South Africa;

19. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund established by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, with the common objective of providing emergency assistance to the front-line States and national liberation movements struggling against the apartheid regime, and in other measures taken by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of African Unity;

20. Urges all States, especially those that have economic, financial or other links to South Africa, to adhere fully to the Programme of Action contained in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa until the establishment of a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa;

21. Recommends that all Governments intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

23. Commends the Economic and Social Council for its debate and its resolution 1992/59 of 31 July 1992 on this issue and requests it to continue, as appropriate, to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

24. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the governing bodies of the appropriate specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations so that those bodies take the necessary measures to implement the resolution, and also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

26. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Cooperation and coordination of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/70 of 11 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation and coordination of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Aware that, in addition to general problems facing developing countries, the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, many of which are small island Territories, also suffer handicaps arising from the interplay of such factors as their size, remoteness, geographical dispersion, vulnerability to natural disasters, lack of natural resources, shortage of administrative personnel and migration, particularly of personnel with high-level skills,

Recalling resolution 24(XI) of 22 November 1988, on the Programme of Assistance to Small Island Developing Countries, adopted by the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee at its eleventh session, in which the Committee directed its secretariat to continue to examine the access of the non-independent Caribbean countries to programmes and activities of the United Nations system with the aim of identifying areas within that system which could provide technical and other assistance to those countries in the furtherance of their development process, and other resolutions of the Committee,

Mindful of the growing importance that the General Assembly attaches to the contributions of the specialized agencies and the international institutions to the economic and social development of Non-Self-Governing Territories, and the role being played by the United Nations Development Programme and the specialized agencies in that regard,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the specific problems and needs of island developing countries,^a

Noting that several of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Caribbean may reach net contributor status during the fifth programming cycle of the United Nations Development Programme (1992-1996) under the current criteria for the allocation of Programme-funded country programmes,

Recalling also the plan of action contained in Agenda 21,^b adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the contributions being made to Non-Self-Governing Territories by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations and urges them to intensify their assistance to those Territories;

3. Takes note of the recommendation contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the specific problems and needs of island developing countries, prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, regarding the establishment of a family of indicators of vulnerability of island developing countries;

4. Recommends that the specialized agencies and the international institutions consider the question of the cooperation and coordination of assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories within the context of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and its subsidiary bodies;

5. Welcomes the statements made by the representatives of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Development Programme,^c and invites other specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations to participate in future debates of the General Assembly on the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, with a view to apprising the Assembly of their development programmes in those Territories and thereby facilitating more informed comments on their work;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to keep this question under review.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

In 1992,(7) the Committee on colonial countries considered foreign economic and other interests which impeded implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat on economic conditions and foreign activities in Anguilla,(23) Bermuda,(24) the Cayman Islands,(25) Montserrat,(26) the Turks and Caicos Islands(27) and the United States Virgin Islands.(28)

The Committee drafted a resolution on the activities of foreign interests which it recommended to the General Assembly for adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 47/15 by recorded vote.

Activities of those foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of those foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as all its other resolutions on this subject, including, in particular, resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991, endorsing the Plan of Action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that those economic and other activities which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstruct efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and in colonial Territories are in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Seriously concerned about the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural resources that are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, as well as their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, thus depriving them of their right to control the resources of their Territories and impeding the realization by those peoples of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Bearing a mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity,

Gravely concerned that certain countries, transnational corporations and international financial institutions have continued their economic relations with South Africa,

Recognizing the crucial and decisive role that the imposition of international sanctions has played in applying the necessary pressure on the South African regime to undertake significant measures towards the eradication of apartheid,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

3. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms its concern over the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural resources that are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, as well as their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, thus depriving them of their right to control the resources of their Territories and impeding the realization by those peoples of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence;

5. Condemns the activities of those foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

6. Strongly condemns the collaboration with the South African regime by certain countries as well as transnational corporations that continue to make new investments in South Africa and supply the racist regime with armaments, nuclear technology and all other materials that are likely to buttress it and thus aggravate the threat to peace in the region;

7. Calls upon all States to maintain the existing measures against the apartheid regime as specified in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, annexed to General Assembly resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989;

8. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

9. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regime of South Africa;

10. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories by foreign economic interests, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

11. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take all possible measures to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

12. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory and unjust wage systems or working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of those activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

15. Appeals to mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and in the struggle against apartheid and the mobilization of international public opinion against the policy pursued by the South African apartheid regime and to oppose the relaxation of existing measures against the regime, in order to accelerate the process of constitutional change with the aim of establishing a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa;

16. Decides to continue to monitor closely the situation in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of the indigenous peoples and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories, in order to facilitate and accelerate the exercise by the peoples of those Territories of their right to self-determination and independence;

17. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Military activities in colonial countries

In 1992, the Committee on colonial countries again considered military activities by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might impede the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda,(29) Guam(30) and the United States Virgin Islands.(31)

The Committee drafted a decision on military activities in colonial countries(32) which it recommended to the General Assembly for adoption.

On 21 August,(33) the Chairman of the Committee transmitted to the Security Council the text of that decision,(32) drawing particular attention to paragraph 7, which urged the Council to consider, as a matter of urgency, the report of the Security Council Committee established in 1977(34) and to adopt further measures to widen the scope of another 1977 Council resolution(35) to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Committee further called for scrupulous observance of a 1984 Council resolution(36) in which the Council enjoined Member States from importing armaments from South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted decision 47/409 by recorded vote.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 61st plenary meeting, on 16 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples' and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration, should be withdrawn and that no further entrenchment should be condoned.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States, and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all those military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration that might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly welcomes the important changes taking place in South Africa aimed at facilitating the commencement of substantive constitutional negotiations. The Assembly notes that, these developments notwithstanding, apartheid remains firmly entrenched and that as a result there is a continuing threat to the peace and security of the region.

"6. The General Assembly notes with grave concern revelations of covert funding and collusion by the South African regime with certain political organizations and reports of the involvement of its security forces in perpetrating acts of violence.

"7. The General Assembly condemns the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain countries, which constitutes a violation of the military embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, and which poses a threat to international peace and security. The Assembly urges the Council to consider, as a matter of urgency, the report of the Security Council Committee established under its resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and to adopt further measures to widen the scope of Council resolution 418(1977) in order to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Assembly calls for an immediate end to all forms of such collaboration. The Assembly further calls for the scrupulous observance of resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984, in which the Council enjoined Member States to refrain from importing armaments from South Africa.

"8. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the South African regime, with its infamous record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission. The Assembly condemns the continuing support to the South African regime in the military and other fields. In this context, the Assembly expresses its concern at the grave consequences for international peace and security of the collaboration between the apartheid system in South Africa and certain Western Powers and other countries in the military and nuclear fields. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such collaboration and, in particular, to halt the supply to the apartheid system of equipment, technology, materials and training enabling the regime to increase its capability to manufacture nuclear weapons.

"9. The General Assembly strongly condemns the continuing collaboration of certain countries with the racist regime in the military and nuclear fields and expresses its conviction that such collaboration is in contravention of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) and undermines international solidarity against the apartheid regime. The Assembly thus calls for the termination forthwith of all such collaboration.

"10. The General Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of the Declaration on South Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-seventh ordinary session, held at Abuja, Nigeria, from 3 to 5 June 1991,^a the report of the Tenth Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Accra from 2 to 7 September 1991,^b and the Communiqué adopted by the Heads of Government of the countries of the Commonwealth at their meeting held at Harare from 16 to 22 October 1991.^c

"11. The General Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the oppressive policies of the apartheid regime in South Africa to flee into the neighbouring States and for the purpose of resettlement of those who are returning.

"12. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of the local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"13. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"14. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session."

Information dissemination

The Committee on colonial countries, acting on the recommendation of its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance,⁽⁹⁾ adopted recommendations for the dissemination of information on decolonization. It requested the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) to intensify its publicity on decolonization; disseminate this information more widely; and produce new visual material on problems of decolonization. The Committee also requested DPI to provide it with reports from United Nations information centres about the dissemination of information on decolonization and appealed to the mass media to also support the peoples of colonial countries by addressing decolonization issues. The Committee also called on DPI, in cooperation with the United Nations Department of Political Affairs, to increase its speaking engagements at universities and to intensify their cooperation with non-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/24 by recorded vote.

Dissemination of information on decolonization
The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 46/72 of 11 December 1991,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims of the Declaration and mindful of the role of world public opinion in effectively assisting the peoples of the colonial Territories to achieve self-determination and independence,

Noting that while censorship laws have been repealed, existing legislation and other measures still curtail the freedom of the press in South Africa,

Aware of the importance of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it important for the United Nations to continue to play an active role in the process of decolonization and to intensify its efforts to ensure the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with a view to further mobilizing international public opinion in support of complete decolonization by the year 2000;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia;

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series, and to increase the information on all the Territories under consideration by the Special Committee, selecting appropriate material for wider dissemination by reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full cooperation of the administering Powers in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the decolonization-oriented activities of all United Nations information centres;

(d) To maintain a working relationship with the Organization of African Unity and appropriate regional and intergovernmental organizations, particularly in the Pacific and Caribbean regions, by holding periodic consultations and exchanging information;

(e) To solicit, in consultation with United Nations information centres, assistance in the dissemination of information on decolonization from non-governmental organizations;

(f) To continue to produce comprehensive press releases for all meetings of the Special Committee and its subsidiary bodies;

(g) To ensure that the necessary facilities and services to that end are made available;

(h) To report to the Special Committee on measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations with a special interest in decolonization, to undertake or intensify, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Puerto Rico

In 1992, the Committee on colonial countries endorsed the recommendation made by the open-ended Working Group(8) that the Committee defer until 1993 consideration of its decision of 15 August 1991(37) by which it deplored the fact that the United States Congress had not adopted a legal framework for holding a referendum to enable the people of Puerto Rico to determine their political future. The Committee also endorsed the Group's suggestion that requests for hearings be given due consideration by the Committee. Accordingly, the Committee, during its July session, heard 19 representatives of organizations from Puerto Rico.

In July,(38) the Committee's Rapporteur drew attention to related reports prepared in 1982,(39) 1984,(40) 1985,(41) 1986,(42) 1987,(43) 1988,(44) 1989,(45) 1990(46) and 1991,(47) as well as a study prepared by him in 1985.(41)

New Caledonia

During its consideration of New Caledonia, the Committee on colonial countries had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat(48) on recent political and economic developments. It recalled that under the provisions of the 1988 Matignon Agreement,(49) a self-determination referendum would be held in 1998 following a 10-year period of development aimed at effecting more equitable economic distribution between the indigenous Melanesians, known as Kanaks, who comprised about 45 per cent of the population, and persons of European origin, mainly French.

The Committee to Monitor the Matignon Agreement, at its third meeting (Paris, 17 and 18 October 1991), agreed that progress was being made in economic and social areas but stressed the need for France to increase its efforts to bring about more equitable economic distribution and provide education and training that would enable Kanaks to participate equally in the economy and Government of the Territory. As to political developments, the review of electoral rolls and preparation of voter lists was continuing with the help of magistrates from France.

The paper noted that for many years the majority of Kanaks had been dependent for their livelihood on subsistence agriculture because the mining sector and most land suitable for commercial agriculture were controlled by inhabitants of European origin. As called for by the Matignon Agreement, a large proportion of government development funds were being channelled to areas inhabited by Kanak majorities. Development projects included the construction of roads, schools, colleges, medical centres, hotels and housing as well as electrification and the laying of telephone lines and water distribution systems. Under land redistribution projects, from 1988 to 1991, 62,500 hectares of land were redistributed, of which 75 per cent went to Kanaks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 47/26 without vote.

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia, Reaffirming the right of peoples to self-determination' as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations.

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Noting the importance of the positive measures being pursued in New Caledonia by the French authorities, in cooperation with all sectors of the population, to promote political, economic and social development in the Territory, including measures in the area of environmental protection and action with respect to drug abuse and trafficking, in order to provide a framework for its peaceful progress to self-determination,

Noting also, in this context, the importance of equitable economic and social development, as well as continued dialogue among the parties involved in New Caledonia in the preparation of the act of self-determination of New Caledonia,

1. Approves the section of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia;

2. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia, to maintain their dialogue in a spirit of harmony;

3. Invites all the parties involved to continue promoting a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory towards an act of self-determination in which all options are open and which would safeguard the rights of all New Caledonians;

4. Welcomes measures taken recently and those anticipated to strengthen and diversify the New Caledonian economy in all fields;

5. Also Welcomes the call by the Committee to Monitor the Matignon Agreement, at its meeting held in Paris on 17 and 18 October 1991, for greater progress in housing, employment, training, education and health care in New Caledonia;

6. Commends the decision to establish a Melanesian cultural centre as a contribution to preserving the indigenous culture of New Caledonia;

7. Takes note of the recent positive initiatives aimed at protecting New Caledonia's natural environment, notably the "Zonéco" operation designed to map and evaluate marine resources within the economic zone of New Caledonia;

8. Acknowledges the close links between New Caledonia and the peoples of the South Pacific and the positive actions being taken by the French authorities to facilitate the further development of those links, including the development of closer relations with the member countries of the South Pacific Forum;

9. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Other general questions

Scholarships

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a General Assembly request of 1991,(1) reported in September 1992(2) on offers made by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs. Five Member States informed the Secretary-General of scholarships offered to inhabitants of NSGTs during the 1991-1992 or 1992-1993 academic year. Australia had granted awards to 15 students from New Caledonia to attend Australian institutions of higher education; Barbados had awarded a total of 14 scholarships to nationals from NSGTs of the Caribbean; Cyprus offered one scholarship at the Cyprus Forestry College; New Zealand had granted study awards to 7 students from New Caledonia and to 13 from Tokelau; and the United Kingdom had offered a total of 159 scholarships to students from British dependent Territories.

Between 1 October 1991 and 30 September 1992, the Secretariat had received requests from 42 students for information on the availability of scholarships. None were inhabitants of NSGTs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 47/17 without vote.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/66 of 11 December 1991,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;

4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Information to the United Nations

States responsible for the administration of NSGTs continued to inform the Secretary-General about the Territories' economic, social and educational conditions under the terms of Article 73 e of the United Nations Charter (see APPENDIX II). In reports to the Committee⁽³⁾ and the General Assembly,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General listed the date of receipt of the information provided by the administering States and the period covered by their reports. In 1992, he stated that he had received information with respect to the following NSGTs:

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Gibraltar, St. Helena

United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 47/14 by recorded vote.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Special Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 46/63 of 11 December 1991, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Stressing the importance of timely transmission by the administering Powers of adequate information under Article 73 e of the Charter, in particular in relation to the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers on the Territories concerned,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit or continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources in connection with the preparation of the working papers relating to the Territories concerned;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Visiting missions

The Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, as requested by the Committee in 1991,⁽⁵⁾ held consultations with representatives of the administering Powers on the question of sending visiting missions to NSGTs. The Chairman reported in July 1992⁽⁶⁾ that he had also informed the Powers of progress in the reforms that the Committee had initiated to improve its efficiency and methods of work. One administering Power indicated that the possibility of a further visiting mission to the Territory under its administration was under review by the leaders of that Territory. Another stated that missions should be studied on a case-by-case basis to determine their objectives and assess whether they would be productive. The United Kingdom stated that it saw no case for missions by the Committee on colonial countries to its dependent Territories.

On 28 July,(7) the Committee adopted a resolution on the question of sending missions to Territories, stressing the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to facilitate full implementation of the 1960 Declaration,(8) calling on the administering Powers to continue to cooperate by receiving United Nations missions in the Territories under their administration and to participate in the work of the Committee, and requesting its Chairman to continue consultations with those Powers and to report to the Committee thereon.

Other colonial Territories

East Timor

During its consideration of East Timor, the Committee on colonial countries heard statements by Portugal as the administering Power, Indonesia and 23 petitioners.

The Committee had before it a July working paper(1) prepared by the Secretariat reviewing political developments, the human rights situation, economic and social conditions and other developments. It also outlined United Nations consideration of the question.

Regarding the comprehensive settlement of the question of East Timor, it was noted that the Secretary-General had been in contact with the parties concerned with a view to reactivating a dialogue that could lead to a settlement. The Governments of Indonesia and Portugal had presented proposals and views on a dialogue to the Secretary-General, who continued his efforts to obtain an agreement on the modalities and format of such talks.

Acting on the proposal of its Chairman, the Committee decided without objection to continue consideration of the item at its next session, subject to any directives by the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 47/402 of 18 September 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, deferred consideration of the item on East Timor to its forty-eighth (1993) session.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Committee on colonial countries again considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) in 1992. The United Kingdom, the administering Power concerned, did not participate in the consideration of the item. The Committee acceded to a request from Argentina to participate. It had before it a July working paper, (2) prepared by the Secretariat, which described political developments and economic, social and educational conditions in the islands and also discussed consideration of the question by the United Nations and the Organization of American States.(3) In September 1991,(4) Argentina and the United Kingdom had signed an agreement revising the terms of the Madrid Agreement of 1990, which dealt with the Interim Reciprocal Information and Consultation System as it applied to military vessels.(5)

By a vote of 20 to 0 with 3 abstentions, the Committee adopted a resolution on the question on 29 July(6) that requested Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the current process of dialogue and cooperation by resuming negotiations to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the islands; reiterated its firm support for the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General in assisting the parties; and decided to keep the issue under review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November 1992, the General Assembly, by decision 47/408, decided to defer consideration of the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth (1993) session.

Western Sahara

Security Council consideration. As requested by the Security Council in 1991,(7) the Secretary-General, in February 1992, submitted a further report on the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO).(8) The report described the military aspects of MINURSO and all other aspects of the operation, including developments since his last report to the Council in December 1991.(9) The Secretary-General noted that the referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara should have taken place in January 1992. However, it had not been possible to proceed with the original timetable, in view of continuing problems and differences of interpretation by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO) regarding the implementation of the Secretary-General's settlement plan,(10) approved by the Council in April 1991.(11) He proposed a three-month target period for resolving all outstanding issues blocking the plan's implementation, after which he would report further to the Security Council, not later than the end of May 1992. If by that date no agreement had been reached on implementing the existing plan, he said it would be necessary to consider alternative courses of action and possibly adopt a new approach. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General recommended that the current level of MINURSO activity be maintained and that the mandate of its military elements continue to be restricted to verifying the cease-fire and cessation of hostilities in the areas defined in September 1991.(12)

On 25 March 1992,(13) the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council had taken note of his February report on MINURSO and reiterated their support for his efforts and the efforts to be made by the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Western Sahara to accelerate the implementation of the settlement plan.

In May,(14) the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a further report on the situation in Western Sahara in which he addressed the current status of the plan in its military and other aspects. The Secretary-General stated that the role of the MINURSO military unit was essentially limited to monitoring and verifying the cease-fire into which Morocco and the Frente POLISARIO had entered. He said the Special Representative had toured the mission area and neighbouring countries from 19 to 30 April 1992, meeting with the King of Morocco, the Secretary-General of the Frente POLISARIO and the Heads of State of Algeria and Mauritania. Based on his initial contacts with the parties, the Special Representative concluded that their respective positions remained far apart and that their differences had continued to present serious obstacles to the implementation of the settlement plan. At the same time, he was encouraged to find that both parties remained committed to the plan as a framework for a solution to the Western Sahara conflict. Algeria and Mauritania promised him their full support and cooperation to overcome existing obstacles and facilitate the execution of the plan.

The Secretary-General also stated that regardless of the progress of the current talks, he remained convinced of the need to maintain the military strength of MINURSO in Western Sahara to adequately monitor the cease-fire. He recommended that the Council extend MINURSO's mandate until the end of August. He hoped that by then substantial progress would have been made to prepare the ground for a referendum. If by that time, however, the peace process remained deadlocked, despite the efforts of the Special Representative, the Security Council might wish to consider a different approach.

The President of the Security Council, in June,(15) informed the Secretary-General that the Council members welcomed the fact that the two parties had agreed to engage in discussions with the Special Representative, with a view to reactivating the settlement plan. They reaffirmed their support for the efforts which the Secretary-General and his Special Representative were making and asked him to submit a further progress report on implementation of the plan. The members of the Council shared the Secretary-General's views on the need to maintain the presence of MINURSO personnel in Western Sahara to monitor the cease-fire.

As requested, the Secretary-General submitted a further progress report on the situation on 20 August 1992.(16) He reported that the Special Representative had had talks with both parties beginning in mid-June, meeting separately with them at Geneva, in the mission area and finally in New York, where the talks concluded on 2 July. The talks had focused on safeguards to protect the political, economic, social and other rights and liberties of the losing side in the referendum, whatever the outcome. The talks were expected to create a climate of mutual trust and confidence in which obstacles to the referendum, such as the criteria for eligibility to vote, could be overcome. Both parties agreed to engage in a new round of talks with the Special Representative, this time devoted to the interpretation of the criteria for eligibility to vote as contained in a 1991 report of the Secretary-General.(9) Morocco had accepted those criteria, despite reservations on provisions which it found to be unnecessarily restrictive. However, the Frente POLISARIO had rejected those criteria on the grounds that they would unduly enlarge the electoral body beyond the voters included in the 1974 census. Nevertheless, the Frente POLISARIO had gradually reassessed its position in the light of the Special Representative's efforts to relaunch the settlement plan. Without prejudice to its position on the criteria, the POLISARIO Front agreed to support the efforts of the Special Representative to ensure that both parties arrived at the same interpretation of all criteria. The Secretary-General stated that he intended to submit a further report to the Council before the end of September, focusing on the results of the next round of talks by his Special Representative and the parties, which were due to begin on 24 August. He proposed maintaining the existing deployment and staffing of MINURSO.

On 31 August,(17) the President of the Security Council stated that the Council members hoped both parties would cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and the Special Representative in their efforts to achieve speedy progress in implementing the plan and strongly urged the parties to make extraordinary efforts to ensure the plan's success. The Council members looked forward to receiving a further progress report before the end of September.

The Secretary-General, on 2 October,(18) reported to the Council that talks concerning the interpretation of the criteria for eligibility to vote, held from 25 August to 25 September, were inconclusive, and that he had agreed with a proposal by the Special Representative to hold further consultations to clarify unresolved questions. In addition, there were plans to try to determine with the parties whether a meeting of tribal chiefs could help resolve the problems impeding implementation of the settlement plan. The Secretary-General proposed postponing his report to the Council pending the close of these consultations. Replying to the Secretary-General, the Council, on 8 October,(19) welcomed the plan to explore with the parties a meeting of tribal chiefs and emphasized the urgency of the pending questions being settled. It awaited a further progress report from the Secretary-General.

On 22 December,(20) the Secretary-General informed the Council that it was not possible to hold a consultative meeting of tribal chiefs due to discrepancies regarding the notion of tribal chiefs. In addition, despite the efforts of the Special Representative, agreements among all concerned on the major aspects of the settlement plan had not been reached. The Secretary-General stated that he felt obliged to take concrete steps towards holding the referendum and would set forth the necessary steps to do so in January 1993.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee heard the views of one representative of the Frente POLISARIO and considered a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on developments in Western Sahara.(21) The paper discussed General Assembly consideration of the question in 1991, activities of the Secretary-General's good offices and political and other developments from August 1991 to July 1992.

General Assembly consideration. The Assembly's Fourth Committee heard statements by four petitioners on behalf of the Frente POLISARIO, the Western Sahara Awareness Project, the Sahara Fund and Brown University (Providence, United States).(22)

As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(23) the Secretary-General reported in October 1992(24) on the situation in Western Sahara and described the activities he had taken from 24 October 1991 to 2 October 1992 towards a settlement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 47/25 without vote.

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 46/67 of 11 December 1991,

Recalling also the agreement in principle given on 30 August 1988 by the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to the proposals of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in the context of their joint mission of good offices,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 658(1990) of 27 June 1990, 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, and 725(1991) of 31 December 1991, relating to the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling with satisfaction the entry into force of the ceasefire in Western Sahara on 6 September 1991, in accordance with the proposal of the Secretary-General accepted by the two parties,

Noting with satisfaction the appointment on 23 March 1992 of Mr. Sahabzada Yaquub-Khan as Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Western Sahara,

Taking note with satisfaction of the section on Western Sahara in the Final Document of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,^a

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Pays tribute to the Secretary-General for his action with a view to settling the question of Western Sahara by the implementation of the settlement plan;

3. Reiterates its support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and supervision by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, in conformity with resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991) by which the Security Council adopted the settlement plan for Western Sahara;

^aA/47/675-S/24816.

4. Endorses the contents of the letter dated 31 August 1992 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General in which the members of the Council informed the Secretary-General that they shared his views on the necessity of the two parties scrupulously abiding by the cease-fire and abstaining from any provocative behaviour endangering the settlement plan, and expressed their hope that both parties would extend their full cooperation to the Secretary-General and the Special Representative in their efforts to achieve speedy progress in the implementation of the plan and would make extraordinary efforts to ensure the success of the plan;

5. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara, bearing in mind the ongoing referendum process, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 47/25

25 November 1992 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/47/648) without vote, 3 November (meeting 8); draft by Chairman (A/C.4/47/L.2); agenda item 18.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 4th Committee 2-8; plenary 72.

Financing of MINURSO

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September 1992, the General Assembly adopted decision 46/481 by which it included in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh (1992) session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

Report of the Secretary-General. In December, (25) the Secretary-General submitted a report on financing MINURSO in which he discussed the status of assessed contributions, voluntary contributions, the financial performance report on MINURSO from 17 May 1991 to 30 November 1992 and cost estimates for the period from 1 December 1992 to 30 November 1993. Annexed to the report were statistical tables.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1992, the General Assembly adopted decision 47/451 A, by which it authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to the amount of $7.1 million gross ($6.8 million net) for the maintenance of MINURSO for the period ending 28 February 1993 and that the amount be provided from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation provided for the Mission. It deferred the question of financing the Mission until its resumed forty-seventh session.

Other Territories

The Committee on colonial countries also dealt with the following 13 island Territories and had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat describing constitutional and political developments and economic and social conditions in them: American Samoa, (26) Anguilla, (27) Bermuda, (28) British Virgin Islands, (29) Cayman Islands (30) Guam, (31) Montserrat, (32) Pitcairn, (33) St. Helena, (34) Tokelau, (35) Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see Chapter II of this section), Turks and Caicos Islands (36) and United States Virgin Islands. (37) It also considered a working paper on Gibraltar. (38)

The Committee allocated the item to its Subcommittee on Small Territories (39) for preliminary consideration and subsequently took up the item between 1 June and 29 July. It adopted a consolidated draft resolution, the first part of which dealt with decolonization in general and the second with 10 specific Territories, and two draft decisions, one on Pitcairn and the other on St. Helena, as recommendations to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolutions 47/27 A and B without vote.

Questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

A General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, those resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolution,

Recalling also its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, containing the principles which should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of those Territories, in view of the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by the year 2000,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of promoting economic stability and diversifying and strengthening further the economies of the respective Territories as a matter of priority.

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide a means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending further visiting missions to those Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers should be kept under review,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, as well as regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank,

Bearing in mind the fragile economy of the small Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters and environmental degradation, and recalling General Assembly resolutions and the recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations, held in New York from 25 to 29 June 1990,^a

Recalling the conclusions and recommendations of the United Nations regional seminars on decolonization held in 1990 in observance of the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the position taken by the territorial Governments contained in the reports of the seminars,^b

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of those Territories to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirm also that it is ultimately for the people of those Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, in that connection, calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments, to facilitate programmes of political education in the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination, in conformity with the legitimate political status options clearly defined in General Assembly resolution 1541(XV);

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers to create such conditions in the Territories as will enable their people to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

5. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way serve as a pretext to delay the speedy exercise by the peoples of those Territories of their inalienable right to self-determination;

6. Reaffirm the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of those Territories, and recommends that priority should continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

7. Urges the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments concerned, to take or continue to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of those Territories to own, develop or dispose of the natural resources of those Territories, including marine resources, and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources;

8. Also urges the administering Powers to take all necessary measures to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories under their administration against any environmental degradation, and requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in those Territories;

9. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to take all necessary measures, in cooperation with the respective territorial Governments, to counter problems related to drug trafficking;

10. Urges the administering Powers to foster or continue to foster close relations between the Territories and other island communities in their respective regions, and to promote cooperation between the respective territorial Governments and regional institutions, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

11. Also urges the administering Powers to cooperate or continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in its work by providing timely and up-to-date information for each Territory under their administration, in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter, and by facilitating the dispatch of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information thereon and to ascertain the wishes and aspirations of the inhabitants;

12. Appeals to the administering Powers to continue or to resume their participation in future meetings and activities of the Special Committee and to ensure the participation in the work of the Special Committee of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

13. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to achieve the eradication of colonialism by the year 2000, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the action of the Special Committee towards the attainment of that objective;

14. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to initiate or to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territories;

15. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in formulating their assistance programmes, to take due account of the text entitled "Challenges and opportunities: a strategic framework", which was adopted unanimously by the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations;

16. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of the question of the small Territories and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

B

Individual Territories

I. American Samoa

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United States of America as the administering Power,^c

Noting the establishment of a new Political Status and Constitutional Review Commission by the Governor and the Fono, the legislature of the Territory,

Noting the need to diversify and develop the economy of the Territory through the expansion of the existing small and service-oriented industries as well as through the development of commercial fishing and the tourism industry,

Noting also the devastation caused by hurricane Val in December 1991 and the recovery efforts of the territorial Government in conjunction with the administering Power and the international community,

Recalling the dispatch in 1981 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

1. Welcomes the establishment of a new Political Status and Constitutional Review Commission created under executive order by the Governor in August 1992;

2. Calls upon the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to continue to promote the economic and social development of the Territory in order to reduce its heavy economic and financial dependence on the United States of America;

3. Urges the administering Power to continue to support measures by the territorial Government aimed at promoting the diversification of the economy and the development of the existing industries, particularly commercial fishing and tourism;

4. Calls upon the administering Power to continue to provide the Territory with the necessary assistance, through a number of its agencies, to reconstruct the many public facilities and thousands of family dwellings destroyed or heavily damaged by hurricane Val;

5. Notes that a period of eleven years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory.

II. Anguilla

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power,^d

Aware of the desire of the people of Anguilla for a higher level of self-government,

Taking note of the statement by the administering Power that it would help the people of Anguilla to become independent when and if that was their constitutionally expressed wish,

Noting the reaction of the political leaders to the abolishment of the death penalty by the administering Power and the statement of the Chief Minister on this question,

Noting the admission of the Territory as an observer in the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States in 1991,

Noting that the unemployment rate in the Territory fell from 27 per cent in 1984 to 1.1 per cent in 1989, that salaries and allowances in the public sector have risen substantially since 1984 and that the number of posts has increased by 34 per cent since 1985,

Aware of the inability of Anguilla's educational system to alleviate the problem of scarcity of skilled national personnel, particularly in the fields of economic management and tourism, and that educational reform is of paramount importance to the achievement of the long-term economic goals of the Territory,

Noting further that the Government's Public Sector Investment Programme for 1991-1995, estimated at 35 million United States dollars, is expected to be financed by external donors through grants and concessional loans,

Taking into account the main development objectives established by the Territory's Executive Council, namely, the improved management of the economy through a more efficient public sector, the strategic development of human resources through the reform of the educational and training systems and the development of integrated policies of physical infrastructural improvements, as well as the preservation of the natural environment,

Recognizing the contribution of the marine resources of Anguilla to its local economy,

Recalling the dispatch in 1984 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

1. Takes note of the statement of the Chief Minister that the Government of Anguilla has no intention of moving towards independence during its current term of office;

2. Notes with concern that the administering Power continues to deny further delegation of competence over the special areas of responsibility of the Governor to ministers of the territorial Government prior to setting a time-frame for independence;

3. Calls upon the administering Power to consult with, and take into account the wishes of, the Government and the people of Anguilla prior to taking any decision likely to impact on their livelihood;

4. Welcomes the admission of the Territory as an observer in the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, and requests the administering Power to facilitate the Territory's participation in other regional and/or international organizations;

5. Commends the territorial Government for the virtual full-employment situation prevailing in the Territory, and for the increases in the salaries and number of posts in the public sector over the past years;

6. Notes with concern the incapacity of Anguilla's educational system to supply the Territory's labour market with skilled managers, particularly in the areas of economic management and tourism;

7. Calls upon the administering Power, as well as other Member States and international organizations, to afford or continue to afford the Government of Anguilla training possibilities for its staff in that respect;

^c A/C.4/47/SR.7.

8. Invites the international donor community to contribute generously to the Government's Public Sector Investment Programme for 1991-1995 and to grant the Territory all possible assistance to enable it to reach the main development objectives established by the Executive Council of the Territory;

9. Welcomes the measures taken by the territorial Government to protect and conserve marine resources and to control the activities of foreign fishermen operating illegally in the area;

10. Calls upon the administering Power to provide the Territory with the necessary assistance to mitigate the adverse effects of hurricane Hugo and to facilitate the provision of additional assistance and funds from international organizations and specialized agencies to the Territory;

11. Notes that a period of eight years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory and calls upon the administering Power to facilitate the dispatch of a further visiting mission to Anguilla.

III. Bermuda

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power,^d

Noting with satisfaction the programme of Economic Stability and Responsible Management undertaken by the Government and the steps taken to offset a decline in revenue from tourism,

Noting a marked increase in unemployment in the Territory,

Noting with concern an increase in the illegal drug trade in the Territory,

Reaffirming its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territory could, in certain circumstances, constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Noting that the Territory has never been visited by a United Nations visiting mission,

1. Expresses the view that it is ultimately for the people of Bermuda to decide their own future;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the territorial Government in the implementation of its programme of Economic Stability and Responsible Management with a view to reducing the impact of the recession on the economy of the Territory and the unprecedented increase in unemployment;

3. Calls upon the administering Power to continue to take all necessary measures, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to counter problems related to drug trafficking;

4. Also calls upon the administering Power to ensure that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territory would not constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples nor hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Further calls upon the administering Power to facilitate the dispatch of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory.

IV. British Virgin Islands

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power,^d

Noting the participation of the Territory as an associate member in some regional and international organizations,

Noting also the application of the Territory for membership in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Taking into account that, according to the annual report of the Caribbean Development Bank for 1990, there has been sustained growth in the economy of the Territory, and noting the measures taken by the territorial Government to develop the agricultural and industrial sectors,

Noting that the Territory might graduate to net-contributor status in the fifth programming cycle of the United Nations Development Programme, thereby requiring the Territory to contribute to the financing of its projects,

Noting also that the Caribbean Development Bank has reported that the scarcity of skilled manpower is the single most important constraint to the realization of the full development potential of the economy of the Territory,

Noting further that the United Nations Children's Fund is considering the continuation beyond 1992 of its five-year Multi-island Programme, which has funded educational projects in the British Virgin Islands,

Recognizing the measures being taken by the territorial Government to prevent drug trafficking and money laundering,

1. Welcomes the admission of the British Virgin Islands as an associate member of the Caribbean Community;

2. Reiterates its call upon the administering Power to facilitate the admission of the Territory to associate membership in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as its participation in other regional and international organizations;

3. Calls upon the administering Power to provide the Territory with the necessary assistance to mitigate the adverse effects of hurricane Hugo and to facilitate the provision of additional assistance and funds to the Territory from international organizations and specialized agencies;

4. Welcomes the efforts by the territorial Government to raise the quality of the labour force and to meet the trained labour requirements of the public service through its development plan for education;

5. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme to continue its technical assistance to the British Virgin Islands, bearing in mind the vulnerability of the Territory to external economic factors and the scarcity of skilled workers in the Territory;

6. Expresses its satisfaction at the consideration being given by the United Nations Children's Fund to the continuation of its five-year Multi-island Programme aimed at improving education, health and social services in the Territory;

7. Urges the regional and international financial institutions as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to assist the Government of the British Virgin Islands in identifying its medium- and long-term needs and to increase their participation in the full recovery of the Territory;

8. Notes with satisfaction the measures being taken by the territorial Government to prevent drug trafficking and money laundering, and urges the administering Power to continue its assistance to the Territory in those endeavours;

9. Notes with regret that a period of sixteen years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory and appeals to the administering Power to facilitate the dispatch of such a mission.

V. Cayman Islands

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power,^d

Noting the completion of the constitutional review exercise in the Cayman Islands, as well as the established timetable for the bringing into force of the amended Constitution,

Aware that the general election in the Territory is scheduled for November 1992,

Noting the measures being taken by the territorial Government to promote agricultural production with a view to reducing the heavy dependence of the Territory on imported provisions,

Expressing its concern that property and land continue to be owned and developed largely by foreign investors,

Noting that an increased proportion of the labour force of the Territory consists of expatriates and that there is a need for the training of nationals in the technical, vocational, managerial and professional fields,

Noting also the action taken by the territorial Government to implement its localization programme to promote increased participation of the local population in the decision-making process in the Cayman Islands,

Noting further the policy of the territorial Government to control the growth and to upgrade the efficiency of the public service,

Noting with concern the vulnerability of the Territory to drug trafficking and related activities,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the territorial Government, the Governments of other countries of the region, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to prevent and repress illicit activities such as money laundering, funds smuggling, false invoicing and other related frauds, as well as the use of and trafficking in illegal drugs,

Recalling the dispatch in 1977 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

1. Requests the administering Power to expedite the bringing into force of the amended Constitution, in close cooperation with the territorial Government and in conformity with the wishes and aspirations of the Caymanian population, with a view to enabling the people of the Cayman Islands to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the general election in the Territory is scheduled for November 1992 and requests the administering Power, in close cooperation with the territorial Government, to continue the efforts aimed at ensuring that a free and fair general election is conducted in the Cayman Islands;

3. Calls upon the administering Power, in consultation with the territorial Government, to continue to promote the agricultural development of the Cayman Islands with a view to reducing the dependence of the Territory on imported food supplies;

4. Urges the administering Power, in consultation with the territorial Government, to continue to facilitate the expansion of the current programme of securing employment for the local population, in particular at the decision-making level;

5. Requests the administering Power, in consultation with the territorial Government, to provide the assistance necessary to enhance the efficiency of the public service;

6. Calls upon the administering Power, to continue to take all necessary measures, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to counter problems related to money laundering, funds smuggling and other related crimes, as well as drug trafficking;

7. Notes with regret that a period of fifteen years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory, and appeals to the administering Power to facilitate the dispatch of such a mission.

VI. Guam

The General Assembly:

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United States of America, as the administering Power,^c

Recalling that the second round of negotiations between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Guam aimed at transferring land and facilities at the Naval Air Station, Agaña, opened in July 1991,

Aware that large tracts of land in the Territory continue to be reserved for the use of the Department of Defense of the administering Power,

Cognizant that the administering Power has undertaken a programme of transferring surplus federal land to the Government of Guam,

Cognizant also of the potential for diversifying and developing the economy of Guam through commercial fishing and agriculture,

Mindful of discussions between the Guam Commission on Self-Determination and the executive branch of the administering Power on the draft Guam Commonwealth Act, which were recently concluded and will lead to consideration of the measure by the legislative branch of the administering Power,

Recalling that, in referendums held in Guam in 1987, a draft Commonwealth Act was endorsed by the people of Guam that, upon expeditious enactment by the Congress of the United States of America, would reaffirm the right of the people of Guam to draft their own constitution and to govern themselves,

Recalling the dispatch in 1979 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

1. Calls upon the administering Power to continue to ensure that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territory should not constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples nor hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination, including independence, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Also calls upon the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to continue to expedite the transfer of land to the people of the Territory and to take the necessary steps to safeguard their property rights;

3. Notes that discussions held since 1990 between the Government of the United States of America and the Guam Commission on Self-Determination have resulted in qualified agreements on the provisions of the Guam Commonwealth Act, including agreements to disagree on several substantive portions of the Guam proposal, which are to be forwarded to the Congress of the United States for consideration;

4. Urges the administering Power to continue to support appropriate measures by the territorial Government aimed at promoting growth in commercial fishing and agriculture;

5. Reiterates its request to the administering Power that it continue to recognize and respect the cultural and ethnic identity of the Chamorro people, the indigenous inhabitants of Guam;

6. Notes that a period of thirteen years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory.

VII. Montserrat

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power,^d

Recalling the devastation caused by hurricane Hugo in September 1989 and the recovery efforts of the territorial Government in conjunction with the administering Power and the international community,

Taking into account the membership of Montserrat in regional and international bodies and the outstanding request of the Territory for readmission to associate membership in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting the general elections held in Montserrat on 8 October 1991 and the election of a new Chief Minister,

Noting also that it is the policy of the territorial Government, while considering that independence is inevitable, to pursue a gradual approach to preparing the people of Montserrat for independence,

Noting further that, according to the Eastern Caribbean Central Bank, the economy of the Territory has continued its recovery,

Taking note of the statement of the Chief Minister at the Fifteenth Annual Miami Conference on the Caribbean, held at Miami from 2 to 6 December 1991, that the offshore financial services industry requires little or no natural resources and could make a substantial contribution to small island countries,

Noting the policy of the territorial Government to replace expatriates with suitably trained and qualified nationals,

Noting also that planned developments in the Territory aimed at enhancing the island's attractiveness as a tourist destination may impact negatively on the environment, in the absence of effective natural resource management,

Recalling that the last United Nations visiting mission to the Territory took place in 1982,

1. Urges the administering Power to continue to intensify and expand its programme of aid in order to accelerate the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the Territory;

2. Reiterates its call upon the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to take, as a matter of urgency, the necessary steps to facilitate the readmission of Montserrat as an associate member of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

3. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as regional and other multilateral financial institutions, to continue to expand their assistance to the Territory in the strengthening, development and diversification of the economy of Montserrat in accordance with its medium- and long-term development plans, as well as in alleviating the devastation caused by hurricane Hugo;

4. Requests the administering Power to continue to facilitate the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as regional and multilateral financial institutions, to the Government of Montserrat;

5. Calls upon the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to assist the Territory in its efforts to implement an ecotourism strategy aimed at developing its natural resources in a manner consistent with environmental considerations;

6. Notes with satisfaction the measures being taken by the territorial Government, in cooperation with the administering Power, to restore the Territory's offshore financial services industry;

7. Urges the administering Power to continue its assistance to the Territory in the prevention of drug trafficking and money laundering;

8. Also urges the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to provide the necessary assistance for the training of local personnel in the skills essential to the development of the Territory and to encourage skilled workers to remain in the Territory;

9. Notes with regret that a period of ten years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory and calls upon the administering Power to facilitate the dispatch of a visiting mission to Montserrat.

VIII. Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of New Zealand, the administering Power,^e

Noting the continuing devolution of power to the local authority, the General Fono (Council), and mindful that the cultural heritage and traditions of the people of Tokelau should be taken fully into account in the evolution of the political institutions of Tokelau,

Noting also the endeavours of Tokelau to develop its marine and other resources and its efforts to diversify the income-earning ability of its population,

Noting further the concern of the people of the Territory regarding the serious consequences of changes in climatic patterns on the future of Tokelau,

Welcoming the information that Tokelau, while wishing to preserve the benefits of its current relationship with New Zealand, is exploring ways of achieving greater political and administrative autonomy,

Noting with appreciation the assistance extended to Tokelau by the administering Power, other Member States and International organizations, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and its preparation of a third country programme for Tokelau for the period 1992-1996,

1. Encourages the Government of New Zealand, the administering Power, to continue to respect fully the wishes of the people of Tokelau in carrying out the political and economic development of the Territory in such a way as to preserve their social, cultural and traditional heritage;

2. Calls upon the administering Power, in consultation with the General Fono (Council), to continue to expand its development assistance to Tokelau in order to promote the economic and social development of the Territory;

3. Notes that the plan to transfer the Office for Tokelau Affairs from Apia to Tokelau is being pursued within the context of the exploration of ways of achieving greater political and administrative autonomy, and invites the administering Power to continue to provide maximum assistance in this regard;

4. Invites all governmental and non-governmental organizations, financial institutions, Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to grant or to continue to grant Tokelau special emergency economic assistance to mitigate the effects of cyclonic storms and to enable the Territory to meet its medium- and long-term reconstruction and rehabilitation requirements and address the issues of changes in climatic patterns.

IX. Turks and Caicos Islands

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power,^d

Noting the territorial Government's plan to reform the public service to enhance its efficiency,

Noting also the administrative steps taken by the territorial Government to implement its policy of localization of employment,

Noting further the Government's expressed need for 11.5 million United States dollars per year in development assistance to achieve its stated goal of economic independence by the year 1996,

Noting the Government's efforts to set up a Turks and Caicos development corporation,

Noting further that the agricultural sector is small and limited to subsistence farming for the local market and that 90 per cent of the food consumed in the Territory is imported,

Concerned at the continued decline of fisheries and marine production in relative terms in the past year,

Noting the Chief Minister's attendance at the Twelfth Meeting of the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community, held at Basseterre, Saint Kitts and Nevis, from 2 to 4 July 1991,

1. Calls upon the territorial Government to promote alternative employment opportunities for those civil servants whose employment would be terminated as a result of the public service reform and the planned reduction of employees in the service;

2. Also calls upon the territorial Government to ensure that the employment of expatriates in the Territory's labour force is not prejudicial to the recruitment of suitably qualified and available islanders;

3. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other institutions of the United Nations system to explore concrete ways of assisting the Turks and Caicos Government to reach its stated goal of achieving economic independence by 1996;

4. Urges the administering Power to study favourably, in cooperation with the territorial Government, the needs of the Territory in this respect with a view to meeting those needs;

5. Invites international financial institutions and donor organizations, including the European Investment Bank and the Commonwealth Development Corporation, to provide the Territory with the necessary assistance for the setting up and/or operation of the Turks and Caicos Development Corporation;

6. Urges the administering Power and the relevant regional and international organizations to assist the territorial Government in increasing the efficiency of the agricultural and fisheries sectors;

7. Also urges the administering Power and the relevant regional and international organizations to support the efforts of the territorial Government to address the problem of environmental pollution and degradation;

8. Notes the admission of the Turks and Caicos Islands as an associate member of the Caribbean Community and invites other regional and international organizations to consider granting the Territory a similar status should the territorial Government so request;

9. Notes with regret that a period of twelve years has elapsed since a United Nations mission visited the Territory and appeals to the administering Power to facilitate the dispatch of such a mission.

X. United States Virgin Islands

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United States of America, as the administering Power,^e

Having heard the statement of the representative of the Government of the United States Virgin Islands,^d

Noting that legislation has been approved in the Virgin Islands Senate and signed into law by the Governor of the Territory to conduct a referendum on political status in 1993,

Noting also that the extension to ninety days of the residency requirement for voting has not addressed the concerns of the representatives of the territorial Government and those of the Commission on Status and Federal Relations regarding eligibility to participate in a referendum on self-determination,

Noting further that legislation has been proposed in the United States Congress to transfer Water Island to the Territory at the end of 1992, and that the issue remains under consideration,

Noting the position of the judicial authorities of the United States of America regarding the issue of the West Indian Company's title and rights to the reclamation and development of the submerged land at Long Bay in the Charlotte Amalie Harbour,

Noting also the continuing interest of the territorial Government in seeking associate membership in the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and observer status in the Caribbean Community, and its inability, for financial reasons, to participate in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization,

Noting further the expressed concerns of the Virgin Islands Government and people of the Territory over the vacancy of the District Court judgeship and their wish for the appointment of Virgin Islanders to other top posts in the judicial system,

Recalling the dispatch in 1977 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory and the outstanding request by the territorial Government for a United Nations mission to the Territory to observe the referendum process,

1. Requests the administering Power to provide the fullest cooperation and assistance to the territorial Government and the Commission on Status and Federal Relations in their review of the residency requirement for those eligible to participate in a genuine exercise of the right to self-determination in the United States Virgin Islands;

2. Invites the administering Power, as a matter of urgency, to facilitate the termination of Federal ownership of Water Island at the end of 1992;

3. Notes that a nominee has been named for a district court judgeship and that the district court judge on Saint Croix is a Virgin Islander;

4. Reiterates its request to the administering Power to facilitate as appropriate the participation of the Territory in the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and the Caribbean Community, as well as in various international and regional organizations, including the Caribbean Group for Cooperation in Economic Development of the World Bank, in accordance with the policy of the administering Power and the terms of reference of such organizations;

5. Calls upon the administering Power to respond favourably to the request of the territorial Government for the dispatch of a United Nations visiting and observer mission to the Territory.

Gibraltar

On 25 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted decision 47/411 without vote.

Question of Gibraltar

At its 72nd plenary meeting, on 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 46/420 of 11 December 1991 and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1984 stipulates, inter alia, the following:

'The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution', takes note of the fact that, as part of this process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs have held annual meetings alternately in each capital, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

General Assembly decision 47/411

Pitcairn

The Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance noted with regret that the United Kingdom, the administering Power concerned, did not participate in its deliberations on Pitcairn and appealed to the United Kingdom to reconsider its position and resume its participation in the Committee on colonial countries.(40)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted decision 47/412 without vote.

Question of Pitcairn

At its 72nd plenary meeting, on 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, having examined the situation in Pitcairn, reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Pitcairn to self-determination in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, which fully applies to the Territory. The Assembly further reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory. The Assembly urges the administering Power to continue to respect the very individual lifestyle that the people of the Territory have chosen and to preserve, promote and protect it. The Assembly requests the Special Committee on the situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine the question of Pitcairn at its next session and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session."

St. Helena

The Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance noted with regret that the United Kingdom, the administering Power concerned, did not participate in its deliberations on St. Helena and appealed to the United Kingdom to reconsider its position and resume its participation in the Committee on colonial countries.⁽⁴¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted decision 47/413 by recorded vote.

Question of St. Helena

At its 72nd plenary meeting, on 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having examined the question of St. Helena, reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The Assembly urges the administering Power, in consultation with the Legislative Council and other representatives of the people of St. Helena, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory and, in that connection, reaffirms the importance of promoting an awareness among the people of St. Helena of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination.

"2. The General Assembly reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory and calls upon the administering Power to continue, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to strengthen the economy, to encourage local initiative and enterprise and to increase its assistance to diversification programmes with the aim of improving the general welfare of the community, including the employment situation of the Territory.

"3. The General Assembly urges the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to continue to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to own and dispose of the natural resources of the Territory, including marine resources, and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources.

"4. The General Assembly reaffirms that continued development assistance from the administering Power, together with any assistance that the international community might be able to provide, constitutes an important means of developing the economic potential of the Territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly, in that connection, welcomes the assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme and invites other organizations of the United Nations system to assist in the development of the Territory.

"5. The continued presence of military facilities in the Territory prompts the General Assembly, on the basis of previous United Nations resolutions and decisions concerning military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, to urge the administering Power to take measures to avoid the involvement of the Territory in offensive acts or interference against neighbouring States.

"6. The General Assembly considers that the possibility of dispatching a United Nations visiting mission to St. Helena at an appropriate time should be kept under review, and requests the Special Committee on the situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine the question of St. Helena at its next session and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session."

General Assembly decision 47/413

Chapter II

International Trusteeship System

The Trusteeship Council continued during 1992 to supervise, on behalf of the Security Council, the one Trust Territory remaining under the International Trusteeship System—Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a strategic territory administered by the United States.

The Trusteeship Council, composed of five members—China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States—held its fifty-ninth regular session in 1992.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

In 1992, Palau was the last remaining entity of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands still under the 1947 Trusteeship Agreement,⁽¹⁾ which had designated the United States as the Administering Authority of the Territory. The Security Council, in December 1990,⁽²⁾ had determined that, in view of the entry into force of new status agreements between the United States and the other three entities of the Trust Territory—the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and the Northern Mariana Islands⁽³⁾—the objectives of the Trusteeship Agreement had been fully attained, and that the applicability of the Agreement to them had terminated.

Palau, located in the Western Caroline Islands, is composed of several islands with a total land area of 492 square kilometres. The estimated 1992 population was 16,386, two thirds of which lived in the capital, consisting of Koror and several adjacent islands.

In a working paper submitted to the Trusteeship Council in May 1992,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretariat described conditions in the Trust Territory, covering political, economic, social and educational developments.

Political status of Palau

A proposed Compact of Free Association between Palau and the United States would recognize Palau as fully self-governing, while the United States would remain responsible for its defence. However, because the Compact would conflict with the non-nuclear provisions of Palau's Constitution, local courts ruled that it would need to be approved by 75 per cent of the voters—the same margin required for a constitutional amendment. In none of the seven plebiscites (February 1983,⁽⁵⁾ September 1984,⁽⁶⁾ February and December 1986,⁽⁷⁾ June and August 1987⁽⁸⁾ and February 1990⁽⁹⁾) was the required 75 per cent vote obtained.

Constitutional and political developments

In 1992, Palau held talks with the United States on possible modifications to the Compact of Free Association. Palau had written to the Administering Authority in October 1991 recommending three modifications: separation of the nuclear provision from the Compact for discussion at a later stage, thereby allowing the Compact to be approved by a simple majority vote; reassessment by the United States of its operating rights and military land requirements; and reduction of the term of the Compact from 50 years to 15.⁽⁶⁾

The United States responded that it was unable to accept the first proposal since the nuclear clause, in its view, was an integral part of the Compact. In response to the two other proposals, the United States reiterated its belief that a military presence in Palau was highly unlikely to be required in future, but promised full prior consultations with Palau to address defence issues. It further noted that if the duration of the Compact were shortened, then the trust fund for long-term development would have to be proportionately reduced, and that new funding for the Compact would require offering reductions elsewhere in the United States budget under the 1990 Budget Enforcement Act, to which there would be strong domestic opposition. The United States concluded by noting three possibilities for Palau's future political status—the existing Compact, independence and a renegotiated, modified Compact—and by recording its full support for the current Compact.

On 14 April, representatives of 3,300 petitioners presented to the President and leaders of the Palau National Congress (Olbiil Era Kelulau) a petition to amend Palau's Constitution to allow passage of the Compact of Free Association, including the section allowing the United States to operate nuclear-powered vessels in Palau's waters, with a simple majority. The petitioners requested a vote within 90 days following the presentation of their petition. The President scheduled a vote on 13 July, which the Supreme Court then enjoined. The National Congress subsequently enacted legislation calling for a vote on the amendment on 4 November, the same time as Palau's general election. On that date, Palauan voters approved the amendment.(10)

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries)(11) on 1 June decided to defer consideration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to its 1993 session since discussions were under way between the Administering Authority and the Trust Territory to find a solution to the future political status of the Territory. That decision was based on a recommendation of an open-ended Working Group, established in 1992 to make recommendations on improving the efficiency of the Committee's work.(12)

General Assembly consideration. On 6 October, the Chairman of the General Assembly's Fourth (Decolonization) Committee suggested that the Committee take note of the recommendation of the Committee on colonial countries to defer consideration of the Trust Territory until 1993. The Committee decided to do so.(13)

Visiting mission

In accordance with a 1991 Trusteeship Council resolution,(14) a visiting mission was dispatched to Palau in March 1992.

Report of the Visiting Mission. The Council's 1992 Visiting Mission(6) was composed of four Council members—one representative each from China, France, the Russian Federation and the United Kingdom—and two representatives of countries of the region that were not Council members—the Federated States of Micronesia and Papua New Guinea. The visit began on 25 March at Koror, Palau, and lasted until 1 April. The Mission held meetings concerning political, economic and social development with Palauan officials.

The Mission expressed the hope that the impasse concerning the future political status of Palau could be resolved speedily so that the Security Council and Trusteeship Council could proceed to terminate Palau's trusteeship status.

The 1990 Order by the United States Secretary of the Interior (Secretary's Order 3142)(15) defining the responsibilities of the Administering Authority and the Trust Territory, established the presence of a representative of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in Koror to carry out liaison between the two parties, and provided for Palau, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), to develop a master national development plan to be the framework for its future economic development. The Order contained a number of fiscal measures restricting Palau's ability to borrow money from outside sources or to enter into business agreements with foreign partners. The Mission noted that Palauans viewed the Order as a major impediment to economic and social development and charged that it hindered their ability to manage the national and state budgets.

The Administering Authority, asked by the Mission to clarify the issue, replied that the Order had been intended in part to ensure that appropriations would be made only when funds were available and that they would be used for the purpose for which they were earmarked. The United States pointed out that a number of lawsuits had been filed by creditors of Palau seeking to put a lien on the financial assistance it provided to the Territory.

The Mission was left with three main impressions regarding the Order: it was in Palau's own interest, as a potential borrower of external funds for development, that its financial affairs should be in order and past borrowings repaid; there might be either a misunderstanding of parts of the Order or insufficiently close day-to-day consultations on their precise implications; and the Mission did not doubt that the Administering Authority needed to fulfil its responsibilities for Palau's foreign relations and its financial standing. The Mission's view was that it was important, nevertheless, to prepare for the day when Palau's political status was resolved and to ensure its ability immediately to assume its responsibilities.

The Mission also examined issues relating to health care, law and order, educational development, land claims and disputes, illegal fishing by foreigners in Palau's waters and the environment.

Trusteeship Council consideration. In May,(16) the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council a report by the United States on the administration of the Trust Territory for the year ending 30 September 1991.

The Council held its fifty-ninth regular session in New York from 26 May to 2 June and on 21 December.(17)

On 2 June, the Council adopted the conclusions and recommendations prepared by its Drafting Committee (China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom). Taking note of a 1986 Trusteeship Council resolution(18) and a 1990 Security Council resolution(2) on the Trust Territory, the Trusteeship Council expressed hope that the people of Palau would soon be able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and that it would be possible to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement.

It also expressed the hope that progress would continue to be made in economic and social development, and noted the assurances by the Administering Authority that it would continue to do what it could to assist the people of the Territory to attain greater self-sufficiency through responsible economic development. The Council noted Palau's concern regarding the implementation of Secretary's Order 3142, and hoped that the need for the Order would be diminished. It noted with satisfaction the Administering Authority's assurances that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations and the Trusteeship Agreement, and further noted that the United States had no plans to establish military bases in Palau.

The Council heard one petitioner on various issues concerning conditions in and the future status of the Trust Territory and took note of three written communications.

On 21 December, the Council adopted its report to the Security Council, which also covered its twenty-first (1991) special session.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1992, the Trusteeship Council adopted resolution 2195(LIX) without vote.

Report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, 1992
The Trusteeship Council,

Having examined at its fifty-ninth session the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, 1992,

Having heard the statements made by its members concerning the report,

1. Approves the report of the Visiting Mission;
2. Expresses its appreciation of the work accomplished by the Visiting Mission on its behalf;
3. Decides that it will continue to take the recommendations, conclusions and observations of the report of the Visiting Mission into account in future examination of matters relating to the Trust Territory;
4. Invites the Administering Authority to take into account the recommendations and conclusions of the Visiting Mission as well as the comments made thereon by the members of the Trusteeship Council.

Trusteeship Council resolution 2195(LIX)

29 May 1992 Meeting 1694 Adopted without vote

4-nation draft (T/L.1282), orally revised; agenda item 5.

Sponsors: China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom.

Other aspects of the International Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

Under a scholarship programme launched by the General Assembly in 1952,(1) 11 Member States had in past years made scholarships available for students from Trust Territories: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, the former USSR and Yugoslavia. In a report to the Trusteeship Council covering the period from 2 May 1991 to 15 May 1992,(2) the Secretary-General stated that he had requested up-to-date information on scholarships for students from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, but had received no response. On 27 May,(3) the Council took note of the report.

Information dissemination

The United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) in 1992 continued to disseminate information on the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. Those activities were described in a report of the Secretary-General covering the period from 1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992.(4) The information, including printed materials and audio and video programmes, were aimed at enlightening the people about their right to self-determination. DPI during the year mailed 97 questionnaires to recipients of United Nations information in the Territory soliciting feedback.(5) The Secretary-General reported that response to a similar mailing in 1991 had been poor.

The representatives of China and the United Kingdom to the Trusteeship Council voiced concern over the failure to elicit a large return of responses to the DPI questionnaire and over DPI's efforts to improve its distribution of information in the Territory. The Russian Federation expressed similar views.(3)

On 27 May, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Cooperation with the Committee on colonial countries

At its 1992 session, the Trusteeship Council considered the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory together with cooperation with the Committee on colonial countries.(3)

During the discussion, Papua New Guinea said it interpreted the General Assembly's 1988 declaration of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000)(6) and its plan of action(7) to include Palau, giving added reason for cooperation among United Nations organs dealing with those issues. (For further details on the Decade, see Chapter I of this section.) It suggested that the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries should be requested to address the Council. The Russian Federation expressed hope that cooperation would continue between the two bodies.

On 2 June,(3) the Trusteeship Council drew the Security Council's attention to its conclusions and recommendations concerning the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and to the statements made by the Council's members on those questions.

Cooperation with CERD and the Decade against racial discrimination

In 1992, the Trusteeship Council considered the question of cooperation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) together with the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see also PART THREE, Chapter X). During the debate, the Russian Federation expressed regret that the Council had not yet demonstrated good will regarding cooperation with other bodies, and said cooperation with CERD should have been established. On 28 May,(3) the Council took note of that statement.

PART FIVE

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1992, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) continued its deliberations on 10 contentious cases. Three new disputes were referred to the Court, and two cases were removed from its list. The Court delivered two Judgments and 12 Orders.

Bulgaria, Madagascar and Hungary deposited with the Secretary-General, in June, July and October, respectively, a declaration recognizing as compulsory the jurisdiction of the Court, as contemplated by Article 36 of the Statute of the Court.

In a statement read on his behalf at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June), the President of the Court drew attention to the role of ICJ in relation to the environment and sustainable development. On 21 October, he addressed the General Assembly on the work of the Court.

Judicial work of the Court

In 1992, the President made two Orders recording the discontinuance of proceedings in the cases concerning Passage through the Great Belt (Finland v. Denmark) and Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras), directing their removal from the Court's list. The Court also made an Order on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's request for an indication of provisional measures in each of the cases concerning Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America). It gave a Judgment on the preliminary objections filed by Australia in the case concerning Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia). A Chamber of the Court delivered its Judgment in the case concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras: Nicaragua intervening), and the Court and its President made several Orders on the conduct of proceedings in pending cases.

In a dispute concerning the projected diversion of the Danube, Hungary presented to ICJ an Application against the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, inviting the latter to accept the Court's jurisdiction. In accordance with Article 38 of the Rules of Court, the Application was transmitted to the Government of that Federal Republic for its consent.

The 1992 activities of ICJ were described in two reports to the General Assembly, covering the periods 1 August 1991 to 31 July 1992⁽¹⁾ and 1 August 1992 to 31 July 1993.⁽²⁾ By decision 47/405 of 21 October 1992, the Assembly took note of the 1991/92 report.

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras)

The proceedings instituted by Nicaragua against Honduras alleging border and transborder armed actions had been before the Court since 1986.⁽³⁾ The time-limits for the written proceedings were fixed in April 1989. An Order in August extended the time-limit for Nicaragua and reserved the question of extending that for Honduras. Nicaragua filed its Memorial within the prescribed time-limit. In December 1989, both Parties transmitted to the Court the text of an agreement for an extra-judicial settlement of the dispute and requesting postponement of the date for fixing the time-limit for the Honduran Counter-Memorial until June 1990. It was so decided by a Court Order of December 1989. The Parties subsequently informed the President of the Court that, for the time being, they did not desire a new time-limit for the Counter-Memorial to be fixed. The President so advised the Court.

On 11 May 1992, Nicaragua informed the Court that because the Parties had reached an out-of-court agreement aimed at good-neighbourly relations it had decided to renounce all further right of action based on the case and did not wish to go on with the proceedings. Within the time-limit (25 May 1992) fixed by the President of the Court, Honduras, by a letter of 14 May, advised the Court that it did not oppose discontinuance of the proceedings. Consequently, the Court, on 27 May, made an Order⁽⁴⁾ recording the discontinuance of the proceedings and directing the removal of the case from the Court's list.

Maritime delimitation in the area between Greenland and Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway)

Denmark, in 1988, had instituted proceedings against Norway, requesting the Court to decide where a single line of delimitation should be drawn between Denmark's and Norway's fishing zones and continental shelf areas in the waters between the east coast of Greenland and the Norwegian island of Jan Mayen.

Taking into account an agreement between the Parties that there should be a Reply and a Rejoinder to a 1989 Memorial of Denmark and a 1990 Counter-Memorial of Norway, the President of the Court, by a June 1990 Order, fixed 1 February and 1 October 1991 as the time-limits for, respectively, the Reply of Denmark and the Rejoinder of Norway. Both were filed within those time-limits. The Court fixed 11 January 1993 as the date for the opening of hearings in the case.

Aerial incident of 3 July 1988 (Iran v. United States)

Iran, in 1989, had instituted proceedings against the United States, referring to the destruction of an Iranian aircraft on 3 July 1988 and the killing of its 290 passengers and crew by missiles launched in Iranian airspace from the United States guided-missile cruiser USS Vincennes. The time-limits for written proceedings, fixed in a December 1989 Court Order, were extended by an Order in June 1990. The Memorial of Iran was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

In March 1991, within the time-limit fixed for its Counter-Memorial, the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the Court's jurisdiction. By an April Order,⁽⁵⁾ the Court fixed 9 December as the time-limit within which Iran might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on those objections. As requested by Iran, and after the views of the United States had been ascertained, the President of the Court, by Orders of 18 December 1991⁽⁵⁾ and 5 June 1992,⁽⁶⁾ extended that time-limit to 9 June and 9 September 1992, respectively. Iran's written statement was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

Certain phosphate lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia)

In 1989, Nauru had instituted proceedings against Australia in a dispute concerning the rehabilitation of certain phosphate lands mined under Australian administration before Nauruan independence.

As fixed by the Court in July 1989, the time-limits for written proceedings were 20 April 1990 for Nauru and 21 January 1991 for Australia. Within those time-limits Nauru filed its Memorial, while Australia filed certain preliminary objections to the Court's jurisdiction and on the admissibility of the case. Within the time-limit of 19 July 1991, fixed by an Order of the previous February,⁽⁵⁾ Nauru filed its observations and submissions on those objections.

Hearings on the issues of jurisdiction and admissibility were held in November 1991. On 26 June 1992, at a public sitting, the Court delivered a Judgment on the Preliminary Objections,⁽⁷⁾ the operative paragraph of which read as follows:

The Court,

(1) (a) rejects, unanimously, the preliminary objection based on the reservation made by Australia in its declaration of acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court;

(b) rejects, by twelve votes to one, the preliminary objection based on the alleged waiver by Nauru, prior to accession to independence, of all claims concerning the rehabilitation of the phosphate lands worked out prior to 1 July 1967;

In favour: President Sir Robert Jennings; Judges Lachs, Ago, Schwebel, Bedjaoui, Ni, Evensen, Tarassov, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva;

Against: Vice-President Oda;

(c) rejects, by twelve votes to one, the preliminary objection based on the termination of the Trusteeship over Nauru by the United Nations;

In favour: President Sir Robert Jennings; Judges Lachs, Ago, Schwebel, Bedjaoui, Ni, Evensen, Tarassov, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva;

Against: Vice-President Oda;

(d) rejects, by twelve votes to one, the preliminary objection based on the effect of the passage of time on the admissibility of Nauru's Application;

In favour: President Sir Robert Jennings; Judges Lachs, Ago, Schwebel, Bedjaoui, Ni, Evensen, Tarassov, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva;

Against: Vice-President Oda;

(e) rejects, by twelve votes to one, the preliminary objection based on Nauru's alleged lack of good faith;

In favour: President Sir Robert Jennings; Judges Lachs, Ago, Schwebel, Bedjaoui, Ni, Evensen, Tarassov, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva;

Against: Vice-President Oda;

(f) rejects, by nine votes to four, the preliminary objection based on the fact that New Zealand and the United Kingdom are not parties to the proceedings;

In favour: Judges Lachs, Bedjaoui, Ni, Evensen, Tarassov, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva;

Against: President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judges Ago, Schwebel;

(g) upholds, unanimously, the preliminary objection based on the claim concerning the overseas assets of the British Phosphate Commissioners being a new one;

(2) finds, by nine votes to four, that, on the basis of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, it has jurisdiction to entertain the Application filed by the Republic of Nauru on 19 May 1989 and that the said Application is admissible;

In favour: Judges Lachs, Bedjaoui, Ni, Evensen, Tarassov, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva;

Against: President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judges Ago, Schwebel;

(3) finds, unanimously, that the claim concerning the overseas assets of the British Phosphate Commissioners, made by Nauru in its Memorial of 20 April 1990, is inadmissible.

Judge Shahabuddeen appended a separate opinion to the Judgment. President Sir Robert Jennings, Vice-President Oda and Judges Ago and Schwebel appended dissenting opinions.

By an Order of 29 June 1992,(8) the President of the Court, having ascertained the views of the Parties, fixed 29 March 1993 as the time-limit for the Australian Counter-Memorial.

Territorial dispute (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Chad)

In this case, before the Court since 1990, each Party had duly filed a Memorial in 1991 within the prescribed time-limit. Within the further time-limit of 27 March 1992, fixed by the President of the Court in an August 1991 Order,(9) each Party filed a Counter-Memorial. By an Order of 14 April 1992,(10) the Court decided to authorize the presentation by each Party of a Reply within the same time-limit, and fixed 14 September 1992 as that time-limit. Both Replies were filed accordingly.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya chose José Sette-Camara to sit as Judge ad hoc in the case. Chad had chosen Judge ad hoc Abi-Saab in 1990.

East Timor (Portugal v. Australia)

In 1991,(9) Portugal had instituted proceedings against Australia in a dispute concerning certain activities of Australia with respect to East Timor. Portugal claimed that Australia, by negotiating with Indonesia an agreement signed on 11 December 1989 relating to the exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf in the area of the Timor Gap, had caused legal and moral damage to the people of East Timor and Portugal, which would become material if the exploitation of hydrocarbon resources began there.

In a May 1991 Order,(9) the President of the Court fixed 18 November 1991 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Portugal and 1 June 1992 for a Counter-Memorial by Australia. Both were filed within the prescribed time-limits. By an Order of 19 June 1992,(11) the Court fixed 1 December 1992 as the time-limit for the filing of a Reply by Portugal and 1 June 1993 for a Rejoinder by Australia. The Reply by Portugal was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

Portugal chose António de Arruda Ferrer-Correia and Australia chose Sir Ninian Stephen, to sit as Judges ad hoc in the case.

Maritime delimitation (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal)

When proceedings were instituted against Senegal in this case in 1991, proceedings were still in progress in a case instituted by Guinea-Bissau against Senegal in 1989 concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989 (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal).(5)

Guinea-Bissau claimed that the result of the Arbitration was not such as to make possible a definitive delimitation of all the maritime areas over which the Parties had rights, and asked the Court to adjudicate and declare what should be the line delimiting all the maritime territories appertaining respectively to Guinea-Bissau and Senegal.

However, as was made clear in the Application instituting the new case, the question of the Court's jurisdiction to entertain it would appear in a different light according to the Court's decision in the first case, on the validity of the Award of 31 July 1989. Accordingly, with the agreement of the Parties, no action was taken to fix time-limits for the pleadings in the new case, pending the Court's decision in the first case. Following the 1991 Judgment in the case concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989 (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal),(5) the President of the Court met with the two Parties in February 1992. They asked that no time-limit be fixed for the initial pleadings of the case, pending the outcome of negotiations on the question of maritime delimitation. The negotiations were to continue for six-months, after which, if they had not been successful, a further meeting would be held with the President. As no indications were received from the Parties as to the state of their negotiations, the President on 6 October, met with the agents of the parties who stated that some progress had been made toward an agreement. The President agreed to their request to allow a further period of three months, with a possible further extension of three months, to continue the negotiations.

Passage through the Great Belt (Finland v. Denmark)

Finland had instituted proceedings against Denmark in 1991 in a dispute concerning the passage of oil rigs through the Great Belt (Store Bælt—one of the three straits linking the Baltic to the Kattegat and then to the North Sea).(9) The Court had by a July 1991 Order(12) fixed 30 December 1991 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Finland and 1 June 1992 for a Counter-Memorial by Denmark. Both were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

In September, Finland notified the Court that it had discontinued the case as the dispute had been settled through negotiations. Subsequently, Denmark stated that it had no objections to the discontinuance. On 10 September 1992, the President of the Court made an Order(13) placing the discontinuance on record and removing the case from the Court's list.

Maritime delimitation and territorial questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain)

Qatar had instituted proceedings in 1991 against Bahrain in respect of disputes relating to sovereignty over the Hawar islands, sovereign rights over the shoals of Dibal and Qit'at Jaradah and the delimitation of the maritime areas of the two States.(12)

In August 1991, Bahrain contested the basis of jurisdiction invoked by Qatar. By an October 1991 Order,(12) the President of the Court decided that written proceedings should first be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and of the admissibility of the Application. He fixed 10 February 1992 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Qatar and 11 June 1992 for a Counter-Memorial by Bahrain. Both were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

By an Order of 26 June 1992,(14) the Court directed that a Reply and a Rejoinder be filed, and fixed 28 September 1992 as the time-limit for the Reply of Qatar and 29 December 1992 for the Rejoinder of Bahrain. Both were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

Qatar chose José Maria Ruda, and Bahrain chose Nicolas Valticos, to sit as Judges ad hoc in the case.

Questions of interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the aerial incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States)

On 3 March 1992, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya filed in the Registry of the Court two separate Applications instituting proceedings against the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of a dispute over the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Civil Aviation,(15) which arose from its alleged involvement in the crash of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on 21 December 1988.

In the applications, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya referred to the charging and indictment of two of its nationals by the Lord Advocate of Scotland and by a United States Grand Jury, respectively, with having caused a bomb to be placed aboard Pan Am flight 103. The bomb subsequently exploded, causing the aircraft to crash, killing all persons aboard. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya pointed out that the alleged acts constituted an offence within the meaning of Article 1 of the 1991 Montreal Convention, which it claimed was the only appropriate Convention in force between the Parties. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya claimed that it had fully complied with its own obligations under that instrument, Article 5 of which required a State to establish its own jurisdiction over alleged offenders present in its territory in the event of their non-extradition. As there was no extradition treaty between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the other parties, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was obliged under the Convention to submit the case to its authorities for prosecution.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya contended that the United Kingdom and the United States were in breach of the Montreal Convention through rejection of its efforts to resolve the matter within the framework of international law, including the Convention itself, in that they were placing pressure on it to surrender the two Libyan nationals for trial. According to the Applications, it had not been possible to settle by negotiation the disputes that had thus arisen, nor had the parties been able to agree upon the organization of an arbitration to hear the matter. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya therefore submitted the disputes to the Court on the basis of Article 14, paragraph 1, of the Montreal Convention.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had complied fully with all of its obligations under the Convention and that the United Kingdom and the United States had breached, and were continuing to breach, the Convention and were under a legal obligation to cease and desist from such breaches and from the use of force or threats against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also made two separate requests to the Court to indicate provisional measures to enjoin the United Kingdom and United States from taking any action to coerce or compel it to surrender the accused individuals to any jurisdiction outside of the Jamahiriya, and to ensure that no steps were taken to prejudice its rights with respect to legal proceedings that were the subject of the Jamahiriya's Applications.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya chose Ahmed S. El-Kosheri to sit as Judge ad hoc in both cases.

At five public sittings held on 26, 27 and 28 March, both Parties in each of the two cases presented oral arguments on the request for the indication of provisional measures. By two Orders of 14 April 1992,(16),(17) the Court found, by 11 votes to 5, that the circumstances of the case were not such as to require the exercise of its power to indicate provisional measures. Acting President Oda and Judge Ni each appended a declaration to the Order of the Court; Judges Evensen, Tarasov, Guillaume and Aguilar Mawdsley appended a joint declaration. Judges Lachs and Shahabuddeen appended separate opinions, and Judges Bedjaoui, Weeramantry, Ranjeva, Ajibola and Judge ad hoc El-Kosheri appended dissenting opinions to the Orders.

By Orders of 19 June 1992,(18),(19) the Court fixed 20 December 1993 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and 20 June 1995 for Counter-Memorials by the United Kingdom and United States, respectively.

Oil platforms (Iran v. United States)

On 2 November 1992, Iran filed in the Registry of the Court an Application instituting proceedings against the United States regarding a dispute in which Iran alleged that the destruction of three offshore oil production complexes owned and operated by the National Iranian Oil Company by several United States warships on 19 October 1987 and 18 April 1988, constituted a breach of international law and the 1955 Iran/United States Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights. Iran requested the Court to rule on the matter.

By an Order of 4 December 1992,(20) the President of the Court fixed 31 May 1993 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Iran and 30 November 1993 for a Counter-Memorial by the United States.

Land, island and maritime frontier dispute
(El Salvador/Honduras: Nicaragua intervening)

El Salvador and Honduras had, in 1986,(21) submitted a frontier dispute to the Court which had acceded to their request for a Special Chamber to deal with the case. Both Parties duly filed their Memorials in 1988. By Orders of January and December 1989, the Court had extended time-limits for the filing of Counter-Memorials and Replies, which were subsequently filed within the prescribed time-limits.

In November 1989, Nicaragua addressed an Application to the Court for permission to intervene in the case, its object being the protection of the legal rights of Nicaragua in the Gulf of Fonseca and adjacent maritime areas. Permission was granted by a September 1990 Judgment of the Chamber. The written statement by Nicaragua and the written observations thereon by the two Parties were filed in 1990 and 1991,(12) respectively, within the time-limits fixed in a September 1990 Order of the Chamber.

Having heard oral arguments in the case between 15 April and 14 June 1991, the Chamber, at a public sitting of 11 September 1992, delivered its Judgment,(22) the operative paragraphs of which read as follows;

425. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 68 to 103 thereof,
The Chamber,
Unanimously,

Decides that the boundary line between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Honduras in the first sector of their common frontier not described in Article 16 of the General Treaty of Peace signed by the Parties on 30 October 1980, is as follows:

From the international tripoint known as El Trifinio on the summit of the Cerro Montecristo (point A on Map No. I annexed;^a coordinates: 14°25'10" N, 89°21'20" W), the boundary runs in a generally easterly direction along the watershed between the rivers Frío or Sesecapa and Del Rosario as far as the junction of this watershed with the watershed of the basin of the quebrada de Pomola (point B on Map No. I annexed; coordinates: 14°25'05" N, 89°20'41" W); thereafter in a north-easterly direction along the watershed of the basin of the quebrada de Pomola until the junction of this watershed with the watershed between the quebrada de Cipresales and the quebrada del Cedrón, Peña Dorada and Pomola proper (point C on Map No. I annexed; coordinates: 14°25'09" N, 89°20'30" W); from that point, along the last-named watershed as far as the intersection of the centre-lines of the quebradas of Cipresales and Pomola (point D on Map No. I annexed; coordinates: 14°24'42" N, 89°18'19" W); thereafter, downstream along the centre-line of the quebrada de Pomola, until the point on that centre-line which is closest to the boundary marker of Pomola at El Talquezalar; and from that point in a straight line as far as that marker (point E on Map No. I annexed; coordinates: 14°24'51" N, 89°17'54" W); from there in a straight line in a south-easterly direction to the boundary marker of the Cerro Piedra Menuda (point F on Map No. I annexed; coordinates: 14°24'02" N, 89°16'40" W), and thence in a straight line to the boundary marker of the Cerro Zapotal (point G on Map No. I annexed; coordinates: 14°23'26" N, 89°14'43" W); for the purposes of illustration, the line is indicated on Map No. I annexed.

426. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 104 to 127 thereof,
The Chamber,
Unanimously,

Decides that the boundary line between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Honduras in the second sector of their common frontier not described in Article 16 of the General Treaty of Peace signed by the Parties on 30 October 1980, is as follows:

From the Peña de Cayaguanca (point A on Map No. II annexed; coordinates: 14°21'54" N, 89°10'11" W), the boundary runs in a straight line somewhat south of east to the Loma de Los Encinos (point B on Map No. II annexed; coordinates: 14°21'08" N, 89°08'54" W), and from there in a straight line to the hill known as El Burro or Piedra Rajada (point C on Map No. II annexed; coordinates: 14°22'46" N, 89°07'32" W); from there the boundary runs in a straight line to the head of the quebrada Copantillo, and follows the middle of the quebrada Copantillo downstream to its confluence with the river Sumpul (point D on Map No. II annexed; coordinates: 14°24'12" N, 89°06'07" W), and then follows the middle of the river Sumpul downstream to its confluence with the quebrada Chiquita or Oscura (point E on Map No. II annexed; coordinates: 14°20'25" N, 89°04'57" W); for the purposes of illustration, the line is indicated on Map No. II annexed.

The Chamber,
Unanimously,

Decides that the boundary line between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Honduras in the third sector of their common frontier not described in Article 16 of the General Treaty of Peace signed by the Parties on 30 October 1980, is as follows:

From the Pacacio boundary marker (point A on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'28" N, 88°49'18" W) along the rio Pacacio upstream to a point (point B on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'38" N, 88°48'47" W), west of the Cerro Tecolate or Los Tecolates; from there up the quebrada to the crest of the Cerro Tecolate or Los Tecolates (point C on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'33" N, 88°48'18" W), and along the watershed of this hill as far as a ridge approximately 1 kilometre to the north-east (point D on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'48" N, 88°47'52" W); from there in an easterly direction to the neighbouring hill above the source of the Torrente La Puerta (point E on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'48" N, 88°47'31" W) and down that stream to where it meets the river Gualsinga (point F on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'19" N, 88°47'01" W); from there the boundary runs along the middle of the river Gualsinga downstream to its confluence with the river Szalapala (point G on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'12" N, 88°46'58" W), and thence upstream along the middle of the river Szalapala to the confluence of the quebrada Llano Negro with that river (point H on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°07'11" N, 88°44'21" W); from there south-eastwards to the top of the hill (point I on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°07'01" N, 88°44'07" W), and thence south-eastwards to the crest of the hill marked on the map as a spot height of 1,017 metres (point J on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'45" N, 88°43'45" W); from there the boundary, inclining still more to the south, runs through the triangulation point known as La Canada (point K on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°06'00" N, 88°43'52" W) to the ridge joining the hills indicated on the map as Cerro El Caracol and Cerro El Sapo (through point L on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°05'23" N, 88°43'47" W) and from there to the feature marked on the map as the Portillo El Chupa Miel (point M on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°04'35" N, 88°44'10" W); from there, following the ridge, to the Cerro El Cajete (point N on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°03'55" N, 88°44'20" W), and thence to the point where the present-day road from Arcatao to Nombre de Jesús passes between the Cerro El Ocotillo and the Cerro Lagunetas (point O on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°03'18" N, 88°44'16" W); from there south-eastwards to the crest of a hill marked on the map as a spot height of 848 metres (point P on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°02'58" N, 88°43'56" W); from there slightly south of eastwards to a quebrada and down the bed of the quebrada to its junction with the Gualcuquín river (point Q on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°02'42" N, 88°42'34" W); the boundary then follows the middle of the Gualcuquín river downstream to the Poza del Cajon (point R on Map No. III annexed; coordinates: 14°01'28" N, 88°41'10" W); for purposes of illustration, this line is shown on Map No. III annexed.

428. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 186 to 267 thereof, The Chamber,

By four votes to one,

Decides that the boundary line between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Honduras in the fourth sector of their common frontier not described in Article 16 of the General Treaty of Peace signed by the Parties on 30 October 1980, is as follows:

From the source of the Orilla stream (point A on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°53'46" N, 88°20'36" W) the boundary runs through the pass of El Jobo to the source of the Cueva Hedionda stream (point B on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°53'39" N, 88°20'20" W), and thence down the middle of that stream to its confluence with the river Las Cañas (point C on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°53'19" N, 88°19'00" W), and thence following the middle of the river upstream as far as a point (point D on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°56'14" N, 88°15'33" W) near the settlement of Las Piletas; from there eastwards over a col indicated as point E on Map No. IV annexed (coordinates: 13°56'19" N, 88°14'12" W), to a hill indicated as point F on Map No. IV annexed (coordinates: 13°56'11" N, 88°13'40" W), and then north-eastwards to a point on the river Negro or Pichigual (marked G on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°57'12" N, 88°13'11" W); downstream along the middle of the river Negro or Pichigual to its confluence with the river Negro-Quiaqara (point H on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°59'37" N, 88°14'18" W); then upstream along the middle of the river Negro-Quiaqara as far as the Las Pílas boundary marker (point I on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 14°00'02" N, 88°06'29" W), and from there in a straight line to the Malpaso de Similatón (point J on Map No. IV annexed; coordinates: 13°59'28" N, 88°04'22" W); for the purposes of illustration, the line is indicated on Map No. IV annexed.

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez;

Against: Judge ad hoc Valticos.

429. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 268 to 305 thereof, The Chamber,

Unanimously,

Decides that the boundary line between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Honduras in the fifth sector of their common frontier not described in Article 16 of the General Treaty of Peace signed by the Parties on 30 October 1980, is as follows:

From the confluence with the river Torola of the stream identified in the General Treaty of Peace as the quebrada de Mansupucagua (point A on Map No. V annexed; coordinates: 13°53'59" N, 87°54'30" W) the boundary runs upstream along the middle of the river Torola as far as its confluence with a stream known as the quebrada del Arenal or quebrada de Aceituno (point B on Map No. V annexed; coordinates: 13°53'50" N, 87°50'40" W); thence up the course of that stream as far as a point at or near its source

430. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 306 to 322 thereof, The Chamber,
Unanimously,

Decides that the boundary line between the Republic of El Salvador and the Republic of Honduras in the sixth sector of their common frontier not described in Article 16 of the General Treaty of Peace signed by the Parties on 30 October 1980, is as follows:

From the point on the river Goascorán known as Los Amates (point A on Map No. VI annexed; coordinates: 13°26'28" N, 87°43'25" W), the boundary follows the course of the river downstream, in the middle of the bed, to the point where it emerges in the waters of the Bahía La Unión, Gulf of Fonseca, passing to the north-west of the Islas Ramaditas, the coordinates of the end-point in the bay being 13°24'26" N, 87°49'05" W; for the purposes of illustration, the line is indicated on Map No. VI annexed.

431. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 323 to 368 thereof, The Chamber,

1. By four votes to one,

Decides that the Parties, by requesting the Chamber, in Article 2, paragraph 2, of the Special Agreement of 24 May 1986, "to determine the legal situation of the islands ...", have conferred upon the Chamber jurisdiction to determine, as between the Parties, the legal situation of all the islands of the Gulf of Fonseca; but that such jurisdiction should only be exercised in respect of those islands which have been shown to be the subject of a dispute;

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judge ad hoc Valticos;

Against: Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez.

2. Decides that the islands shown to be in dispute between the Parties are:

(i) by four votes to one, El Tigre;

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judge ad hoc Valticos;

Against: Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez;

(ii) unanimously, Meanguera and Meanguerita.

3. Unanimously,

Decides that the island of El Tigre is part of the sovereign territory of the Republic of Honduras.

4. Unanimously,

Decides that the island of Meanguera is part of the sovereign territory of the Republic of El Salvador.

5. By four votes to one,

Decides that the island of Meanguerita is part of the sovereign territory of the Republic of El Salvador;

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judge ad hoc Valticos;

Against: Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez.

432. For the reasons set out in the present Judgment, in particular paragraphs 369 to 420 thereof, The Chamber,

1. By four votes to one,

Decides that the legal situation of the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca is as follows: the Gulf of Fonseca is an historic bay the waters whereof, having previously to 1821 been under the single control of Spain, and from 1821 to 1839 of the Federal Republic of Central America, were thereafter succeeded to and held in sovereignty by the Republic of El Salvador, the Republic of Honduras, and the Republic of Nicaragua, jointly, and continue to be so held, as defined in the present Judgment, but excluding a belt, as at present established, extending 3 miles (1 marine league) from the littoral of each of the three States, such belt being under the exclusive sovereignty of the coastal State, and subject to the delimitation between Honduras and Nicaragua effected in June 1900, and to the existing rights of innocent passage through the 3-mile belt and the waters held in sovereignty jointly; the waters at the central portion of the closing line of the Gulf, that is to say, between a point on that line 3 miles (1 marine league) from Punta Amapala and a point on that line 3 miles (1 marine league) from Punta Cosigüina, are subject to the joint entitlement of all three States of the Gulf unless and until a delimitation of the relevant maritime area be effected;

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Judge ad hoc Valticos; Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez;

Against: Vice-President Oda.

2. By four votes to one,

Decides that the Parties, by requesting the Chamber, in Article 2, paragraph 2, of the Special Agreement of 24 May 1986, "to determine the legal situation of the maritime spaces", have not conferred upon the Chamber jurisdiction to effect any delimitation of those maritime spaces, whether within or outside the Gulf;

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Vice-President Oda; Judge ad hoc Valticos;

Against: Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez.

3. By four votes to one,

Decides that the legal situation of the waters outside the Gulf is that, the Gulf of Fonseca being an historic bay with three coastal States, the closing line of the Gulf constitutes the baseline of the territorial sea; the territorial sea, continental shelf and exclusive economic zone of El Salvador and those of Nicaragua off the coasts of those two States are also to be measured outwards from a section of the closing line extending 3 miles (1 marine league) along that line from Punta Amapala (in El Salvador) and 3 miles (1 marine league) from Punta Cosigüina (in Nicaragua) respectively; but entitlement to territorial sea, continental shelf and exclusive economic zone seaward of the central portion of the closing line appertains to the three States of the Gulf, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua; and that any delimitation of the relevant maritime areas is to be effected by agreement on the basis of international law.

In favour: Judge Sette-Camara, President of the Chamber; President Sir Robert Jennings; Judge ad hoc Valticos; Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez;
Against Vice-President Oda.

Vice-President Oda appended a declaration to the Judgment. Judges ad hoc Valticos and Torres Bernárdez appended separate opinions. Vice-President Oda appended a dissenting opinion.

Other questions

Role of the Court

In a June report on preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping,(23) prepared pursuant to a statement adopted by the first summit meeting of the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government on 31 January 1992,(24) the Secretary-General proposed steps to reinforce the role of ICJ. He recommended that all Member States accept the general jurisdiction of the Court under Article 36 of its Statute (see APPENDIX II), without any reservation, before the end of the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999), declared by the General Assembly in 1989,(25) and that they agree to a comprehensive list of matters for submission to ICJ and withdraw their reservations to its jurisdiction in the dispute settlement clauses of multilateral treaties. The Secretary-General also recommended that when submission of a dispute to the full court was not practical, the Chambers jurisdiction should be used. He called on States to support the Trust Fund established to assist countries unable to afford the cost involved in bringing a dispute to the Court and urged such countries to take advantage of the Fund (see below).

The Court took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Trust Fund to Assist States in the Settlement of Disputes

In October 1992,(26) the Secretary-General reported on the activities of the Secretary-General's Trust Fund to Assist States in the Settlement of Disputes through ICJ, established in 1989 under the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations to provide a practical means of overcoming financial obstacles to the judicial settlement of legal disputes by offering limited financial assistance to States to encourage them to reach a solution of their disputes through ICJ. The Secretary-General reported that in 1991 the Fund awarded limited amounts of money to two developing countries to defray expenses in their disputes. He stated that 34 States had contributed $583,705 to the Fund since its creation. Annexed to the report was the Fund's terms of references, guidelines and rules.

On 21 October, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 47/406.

Request for an advisory opinion

In July, the Ibero-American Summit of Heads of State and Government (Madrid, Spain, 23-24 July 1992)(27) decided to ask the General Assembly to request an advisory opinion from ICJ on the conformity with international law of certain acts involving the extraterritorial exercise of the coercive power of a State and the subsequent exercise of its criminal jurisdiction, and called for the item to be included in the Assembly's 1992 agenda.

On 23 November, by decision 47/402, the Assembly, acting on a request from Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Spain, Uruguay and Venezuela,(28) included the item in its 1992 agenda and allocated it to its Sixth (Legal) Committee. On 25 November, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee,(29) the Assembly decided to continue consideration of the item and include it in the provisional agenda of its 1993 session (decision 47/416).

Chapter II

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1992, the General Assembly, its Sixth (Legal) Committee and the International Law Commission continued to consider legal aspects of international political and state relations.

The International Law Commission took up the question of an international criminal jurisdiction in the context of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. It further considered State responsibility and international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law. The Assembly, in November, requested the Commission to elaborate a draft statute for an international criminal court as a matter of priority beginning in 1993 (resolution 47/33).

Also in November, the Assembly urged States to ensure compliance with the existing international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, to incorporate the relevant legal provisions into their military manuals and to ensure their effective dissemination (47/37). It appealed to all States parties to the 1949 Geneva Conventions that had not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the additional Protocols I and II (47/30). Alarmed by repeated acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, the Assembly urged States to enforce the international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and to ensure the protection, security and safety of such personnel (47/31). In other action, it urged States, in applying the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and corresponding provisions of other agreements, to accord full facilities to consular officers in the performance of their functions (47/36).

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission (ILC), at its forty-fourth session (Geneva, 4 May-24 July 1992),⁽¹⁾ continued work on the progressive development and codification of international law. The Commission held 42 public meetings; in addition, its newly appointed Drafting Committee held 27 meetings, the Enlarged Bureau of the Commission, 3, and the Bureau's Planning Group, 11.

In 1992, ILC considered an international criminal jurisdiction in the context of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, State responsibility for wrongful acts and international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law.

The Commission did not take up proceedings in 1992 on sets of draft articles provisionally adopted by ILC in 1991 on the law of non-navigational uses of international watercourses⁽²⁾ and on the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind,⁽³⁾ pending receipt of comments and observations thereon, which the General Assembly in 1991⁽⁴⁾ had urged Governments to submit by 1 January 1993. The Commission decided not to pursue further, during the current term of office of its members, the second part of the topic "Relations between States and international organizations", unless the Assembly decided otherwise. The Assembly endorsed that decision in resolution 47/33. ILC continued in 1992 to cooperate with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the European Committee on Legal Cooperation and the Inter-American Juridical Committee.

In accordance with an Assembly request (resolution 47/33), the Secretariat prepared for ILC's attention a topical summary of the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee discussion in 1992⁽⁵⁾ on ILC's report for that year.

The twenty-eighth session of the International Law Seminar—for postgraduate students and young professors or government officials dealing with international law—was held during the ILC session (Geneva, 1-19 June), with 4 United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) fellows and 21 other participants, of different nationalities and mostly from developing countries. The participants attended ILC meetings and lectures. Austria, Denmark, Finland, France, Hungary, Jamaica, Morocco, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom had made voluntary financial contributions, thus making it possible to award 15 full fellowships and 1 partial fellowship. Since the first seminar in 1964, fellowships had been awarded to 324 of the 619 participants representing 147 nationalities.

International criminal jurisdiction

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1991,⁽⁴⁾ ILC considered in 1992⁽¹⁾ the question of an international criminal jurisdiction in the context of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. The draft Code, originally prepared by ILC in 1954,⁽⁶⁾ defined offences which were crimes under international law and for which the responsible individual was to be punished.

The Commission had before it the tenth report⁽⁷⁾ on the draft Code, submitted by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Doudou Thiam (Senegal), which covered certain objections to the possible establishment of an international criminal jurisdiction and presented prospective draft provisions dealing with the law to be applied by the court, the jurisdiction of the court ratione materiae, complaints before the court, proceedings relating to compensation for injury, handing over the alleged offender to the court and the double-hearing principle.

Following examination of the Special Rapporteur's report, the Commission set up, on 19 May, a Working Group which proposed establishing an international criminal court by a statute in the form of a treaty agreed to by States parties, which, at least in the first phase of its operations, should exercise jurisdiction over only private persons as distinct from States. It proposed that the court's jurisdiction be limited to international crimes defined in specified international treaties, including but not limited to the crimes defined in the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, and that a State should be able to become a party to the statute without becoming a party to the Code. Other proposals dealt with the court's structure and other mechanisms. The Working Group recommended that the Commission endorse its proposals as set out in its report, which was annexed to ILC's report on its 1992 session.

On 17 July, the Commission accepted the Working Group's proposals as a basis for future work and concluded that through the Special Rapporteur's ninth⁽³⁾ and tenth⁽⁷⁾ reports and the Working Group's report it had concluded its task of analysing the establishment of an international criminal court or other criminal trial mechanism, entrusted to it by the Assembly in 1989.⁽⁸⁾ It further concluded that a structure such as that suggested by the Working Group could be workable and that further work on the issue required a renewed mandate from the Assembly.

State responsibility for wrongful acts

In 1992, ILC considered State responsibility for wrongful acts on the basis of the third⁽⁹⁾ and fourth⁽¹⁰⁾ reports by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Gaetano Arangio-Ruiz (Italy), which dealt with countermeasures—consequences of an intentionally wrongful act—and contained draft articles on countermeasures by an injured State (article 11) conditions of resort to countermeasures (article 12) proportionality (article 13) and prohibited countermeasures (article 14), as well as a possible new article on the question of a plurality of injured States (article 5 bis). The Commission referred the articles to its Drafting Committee.

The Drafting Committee, in a July report,⁽¹¹⁾ set forth draft articles it had adopted on first reading which were contained in the Special Rapporteur's preliminary⁽¹²⁾ and second⁽¹³⁾ reports of 1988 and 1990, respectively. Those articles related to cessation of wrongful conduct (article 6), reparation (article 6 bis), restitution in kind (article 7) compensation (article 8), satisfaction (article 10), and assurances and guarantees of non-repetition (article 10 bis) of Chapter Two (Legal consequences deriving from an international delict) of Part Two of the draft articles. The Committee also adopted on first reading a new paragraph 2 to be included in article 1. In line with its policy of not adopting articles not accompanied by commentaries, ILC took note of the July report and decided to defer action on it until its next session.

International liability

Draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law continued to be considered by ILC in 1992 on the basis of the eighth report⁽¹⁴⁾ of its Special Rapporteur on the subject, Julio Barboza (Argentina). The Special Rapporteur briefly reviewed the status and purpose of the articles proposed so far and indicated that, apart from the first nine articles then before the Drafting Committee, the other articles that had been proposed were merely exploratory, except for article 10 on the principle of non-discrimination, a principle which was generally supported by the Commission. He presented a more extensive examination of the development of the principle of prevention and proposed nine articles thereto dealing with preventive measures (article 1), notification and information (article 2), national security and industrial secrets (article 3), prior consultation on activities with harmful effects (article 4), alternatives to an activity with harmful effects (article 5) activities involving risk: consultations on a regime (article 6), initiative by the affected State (article 7), settlement of disputes (article 8) and factors involved in a balance of interest (article 9). The Special Rapporteur made further proposals on some of the terms used in article 2, such as the concepts of risk and harm.

Due to uncertainties among members of the Commission, ILC on 16 June established a Working Group to examine general matters relating to the scope, the approach to be taken and the possible direction of future work on the topic. On the basis of the Working Group's recommendations, ILC adopted a decision requesting the Special Rapporteur to examine further the issue of prevention only in respect of activities having a risk or causing transboundary harm and to propose a revised set of draft articles to that effect.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 47/33 without vote.

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-fourth session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-fourth session,

Emphasizing the need for the progressive development of international law and its codification in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to give increased importance to its role in relations among States,

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contribution to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Recognizing the role of the International Law Commission in the fulfilment of the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Taking note with appreciation of the sections of the report of the International Law Commission concerning the question of the possible establishment of an international criminal jurisdiction and noting the debate in the Sixth Committee pertaining to this question,

Considering that experience has demonstrated the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention on each of the main topics dealt with in the report, and that this process is facilitated when the Commission indicates specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments are of particular interest for the continuation of its work,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-fourth session;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at that session;

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme;

2. Takes note with appreciation of chapter II of the report of the International Law Commission, entitled "Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind", which was devoted to the question of the possible establishment of an international criminal jurisdiction;

5. Invites States to submit to the Secretary-General, if possible before the forty-fifth session of the International Law Commission, written comments on the report of the Working Group on the question of an international criminal jurisdiction;

6. Requests the International Law Commission to continue its work on this question by undertaking the project for the elaboration of a draft statute for an international criminal court as a matter of priority as from its next session, beginning with an examination of the issues identified in the report of the Working Group and in the debate in the Sixth Committee with a view to drafting a statute on the basis of the report of the Working Group, taking into account the views expressed during the debate in the Sixth Committee as well as any written comments received from States, and to submit a progress report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. Endorses the decision of the International Law Commission not to pursue further, during the present term of office of its members, the consideration of the second part of the topic "Relations between States and international organizations";

8. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the International Law Commission to improve its procedures and methods of work;

9. Requests the International Law Commission:

(a) To consider thoroughly:

(i) The planning of its activities and programme for the term of office of its members, bearing in mind the desirability of achieving as much progress as possible in the preparation of draft articles on specific topics;

(ii) Its methods of work in all their aspects, bearing in mind that the staggering of the consideration of some topics might contribute, inter alia, to a more effective consideration of its report in the Sixth Committee;

(b) To continue to pay special attention to indicating in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest for the continuation of its work;

10. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of the duration of its session, as presented in paragraph 377 of its report, and expresses the view that the requirements of the work for the progressive development of international law and its codification and the magnitude and complexity of the subjects on the agenda of the Commission make it desirable that the usual duration of its sessions be maintained;

11. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

12. Again draws the attention of Governments to the importance, for the International Law Commission, of having their views on the draft articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses and on the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, adopted on first reading by the Commission, and urges them to present in writing their comments and observations by 1 January 1993, as requested by the Commission;

13. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and expresses the hope that every effort will continue to be made by the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to provide the seminars with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly, together with such written statements as delegations may circulate in conjunction with their oral statements, and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate;

15. Recommends the continuation of efforts to improve the ways in which the report of the International Law Commission is considered in the Sixth Committee, with a view to providing effective guidance for the Commission in its work;

16. Also recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly commence on 25 October 1993.

International State relations and international law

Prevention of terrorism

Terrorism in all its aspects remained a concern of the United Nations in 1992.

Acting on allegations of involvement by nationals of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in two aerial incidents (see PART ONE, Chapter I)—the crash in December 1988 of Pan American flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, and the attack in September 1989 on Union de transports aériens flight 772 over the Ténéré desert in the Niger—the Security Council, in January, urged the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to respond to requests by France, the United Kingdom and the United States in connection with those incidents (resolution 731(1992)). In March, the Council imposed an air and arms embargo against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (resolution 748(1992)).

Protection of the environment in times of armed conflict

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(1) the Secretary-General in July(2) presented information received by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict. ICRC reviewed the existing law on the subject and described related work carried out under its auspices. In 1992, ICRC convened a meeting of experts (Geneva, 27-29 April) to define the content of existing law, identify problems in its implementation and any gaps it might have and determine what action needed to be taken. The experts concluded that there was a general interest in preserving the environment and encouraged ICRC to carry on its work to clarify and, where necessary, develop rules to protect the natural environment in times of armed conflict. ICRC decided to continue to consult experts in order to study specific and unresolved matters and to set up a programme of further activities. In particular, it was ready to work on preparing a handbook of model guidelines for military manuals.

Other action. The Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (Geneva, 14-18 September),(3) adopted by the Assembly in 1976(4) and in force since 1978,(5) (see PART ONE, Chapter II), declared that all research and development on environmental modification techniques as well as their use should be dedicated solely to peaceful ends. It noted that the Assembly's Sixth Committee and the experts' meetings of ICRC would address the laws of armed conflict as they pertained to the environment and expressed support for those efforts.

The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June)(6) proclaimed that warfare was inherently destructive of sustainable development and that States should therefore respect international law providing protection for the environment in times of armed conflict and cooperate further in its development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/37 without vote.

Protection of the environment in times of armed conflict

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the use of certain means and methods of warfare may have dire effects on the environment,

Recognizing also the importance of the provisions of international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict and, in particular, both the rules of universal applicability laid down in the Hague Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, of 18 October 1907, with the Regulations annexed thereto, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and the applicable rules of the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), of 1977, and of the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, of 1976,

Expressing its deep concern about environmental damage and depletion of natural resources, including the destruction of hundreds of oil-well heads and the release and waste of crude oil into the sea, during recent conflicts,

Noting that existing provisions of international law prohibit such acts,

Stressing that destruction of the environment, not justified by military necessity and carried out wantonly, is clearly contrary to existing international law,

Concerned that the provisions of international law prohibiting such acts may not be widely disseminated and applied,

Noting the work on environmental protection carried out within the United Nations system and at meetings and symposia on the subject,

Taking note of the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques,

Taking note also of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development at Rio de Janeiro on 14 June 1992, in particular its principle 24 thereof, and other relevant decisions of the Conference,

Expressing its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly decision 46/417 of 9 December 1991,

Welcoming the activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross in this field, including plans to continue its consultation of experts with an enlarged basis of participation and its readiness to prepare a handbook of model guidelines for military manuals,

1. Urges States to take all measures to ensure compliance with the existing international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict;

2. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the relevant international conventions;

3. Urges States to take steps to incorporate the provisions of international law applicable to the protection of the environment into their military manuals and to ensure that they are effectively disseminated;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to report on activities undertaken by the Committee and other relevant bodies with regard to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, under the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law", a report on activities reported by the Committee.

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,(7) the Secretary-General in July(8) submitted information received from 10 Member States on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims.(9) As at 2 July 1992, 115 States had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts). Seven States—Brazil, Croatia, Kazakhstan, Madagascar, Portugal, Slovenia and Turkmenistan—did so in 1992. All of these parties—except 12—also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States—France and the Philippines—adhered only to Protocol II. By 31 December, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Egypt, Kyrgyzstan and Zimbabwe had also become parties to the two Protocols.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/30 without vote.

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979, 37/116 of 16 December 1982, 39/77 of 13 December 1984, 41/72 of 3 December 1986, 43/161 of 9 December 1988 and 45/38 of 28 November 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments, pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Noting with satisfaction that, pursuant to article 90 of Additional Protocol I, the International Fact-Finding Commission has become operational,

Stressing the need for consolidating and implementing the existing body of international humanitarian law and for the universal acceptance of such law,

Mindful of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross in offering protection to the victims of armed conflicts,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and to disseminate knowledge of the two additional Protocols,

1. Appreciates the virtually universal acceptance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the increasingly wide acceptance of the two additional Protocols of 1977;

2. Notes, however, the fact that, in comparison with the Geneva Conventions, the number of States parties to the two additional Protocols is still limited;

3. Appeals to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties also to the additional Protocols at the earliest possible date;

4. Calls upon all States which are already parties to Protocol I, or those States not parties, on becoming parties to Protocol I, to consider making the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the status of the additional Protocols based on information received from Member States;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts".

Jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(10) the Secretary-General in August(11) presented comments received from 19 Governments on draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, which were adopted on second reading by ILC in 1991.(12)

Working Group report. By a 1991 resolution,(10) the Assembly decided to establish, in 1992, an open-ended Working Group of the Sixth Committee to examine issues relating to the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property and to explore the convening of an international conference, to be held in 1994 or later, to conclude a convention on the topic. The Working Group held 10 meetings between 25 September and 6 November, during which it discussed the main issues concerning the draft articles, identified by its Chairman as follows: the definitions contained in article 2 on use of terms, particularly the definitions of "State" and "commercial transaction"; the question of State immunity from measures of constraint in connection with proceedings before a court (part IV of the draft); and cases in which State immunity could not be invoked as provided for in part III of the draft. A summary of views exchanged on the draft articles was annexed to the Working Group's report,(13) as was a proposal on the settlement of disputes. The Group explored ways of reconciling the divergent views expressed during the first phase of the proceedings. The Chairman made proposals on the draft articles, and, although none of them elicited general support and several gave rise to objections or reservations, the Working Group felt that they deserved serious consideration to determine whether they could pave the way towards compromise solutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted decision 47/414, whereby it took note of the report of the Working Group(13) and decided to reestablish it in 1993 to continue its consideration of issues of substance arising out of the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities in order to facilitate the successful conclusion of a convention through the promotion of general agreement. It decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth (1993) session.

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1992(1), the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: 165 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations,(2) with Croatia and Slovenia succeeding and Azerbaijan, Grenada, Latvia, Lithuania, Namibia, Suriname and Uzbekistan acceding in 1992; 46 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality,(3) with Suriname and Switzerland acceding in 1992; and 59 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes,(3) with Slovenia succeeding and Suriname acceding during the year.

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations(4) had 144 parties, with Croatia and Slovenia succeeding and Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Barbados, Grenada, Latvia, Lithuania, Namibia, Uzbekistan and Viet Nam acceding in 1992; 36 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality,(5) with Switzerland acceding; and 44 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.(5)

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents,(6) had 83 States parties, with Croatia and Slovenia having succeeded and Cameroon and Latvia having acceded in 1992.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly requests of 1987(7) and 1990,(8) the Secretary-General, in January 1992, requested States to submit information on serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and on action taken to bring offenders to justice. In August, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report, with later addenda,(9) containing an analytical summary and the texts of the information received. A total of 82 new cases of violations, as well as additional information on previous cases, were reported by States during the period 1 October 1991 to 18 September 1992. No views were received with respect to enhancing diplomatic protection.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/31 without vote.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Conscious of the need to develop and strengthen friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Alarmed by the repeated acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which endanger or take innocent lives and seriously impede the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Concerned at the failure to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Concerned also at the abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, particularly if acts of violence are involved,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate measures as required by international law, including measures of a preventive nature, and to bring offenders to justice,

Welcoming measures already taken by States to this end in conformity with their international obligations,

Convinced that the role of the United Nations, which includes the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in later Assembly resolutions, is important in promoting efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;
3. Urges States to observe, implement and enforce the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to ensure, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above officially present in territories under their jurisdiction, including practical measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials;
4. Also urges States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above and to bring offenders to justice;
5. Recommends that States should cooperate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State, with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to the exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;

6. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;
7. Also calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of their international obligations concerning the protection of the missions or the security of the representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General, when he deems it appropriate, to offer his good offices to the States directly concerned;

8. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 42/154 of 7 December 1987;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to issue a report on the item, in accordance with paragraph 12 of resolution 42/154, containing also an analytical summary of the reports received under paragraph 8 above, on an annual basis, as well as to proceed with his other tasks pursuant to the same resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives".

Consular relations

Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(10) the Secretary-General in July submitted a report, with a later addendum,(11) containing the views of six States on a 1990 proposal,(12) submitted by Austria and Czechoslovakia, concerning the elaboration of an additional protocol on consular functions to the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.(4)

As requested by the Assembly in 1991,(10) the Sixth Committee held informal consultations to examine the proposal on the additional protocol at eight meetings convened between 22 September and 29 October 1992.(13)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 47/36 without vote.

Additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/47 of 28 November 1990 and 46/61 of 9 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the replies received from Member States and other States parties to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations concerning an additional protocol on consular functions to that Convention,

1. Notes with appreciation the valuable work done during its forty-fifth, forty-sixth and forty-seventh sessions on the basis of the proposal concerning the elaboration of an additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations;

2. Urges States, in applying the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and corresponding provisions of other agreements, to accord full facilities to consular officers in the performance of their functions;

3. Taking note of the report of the Sixth Committee on the matter.

Status of the diplomatic courier and bag

As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,(14) the Sixth Committee continued, at eight meetings held between 22 September and 6 November 1992, informal consultations to study the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and the draft optional protocols thereto,(15) on which ILC had completed a second reading in 1989.(16) The Committee also examined how to deal further with the draft instruments, with a view to facilitating a decision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted decision 47/415, by which it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth (1995) session the item entitled "Consideration of draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and of the draft optional protocols thereto".

Treaties and agreements

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations(1) was ratified in 1992 by Belgium and Greece.(2) As at 31 December, 18 States had ratified or acceded to the Convention, which had not yet entered into force.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1992, some 1076 international agreements and 230 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 505 registrations of formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performs depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1992, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed in 1978, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 were issued:

1099, 1100, 1168, 1179, 1204, 1223, 1245, 1248, 1252, 1258, 1259, 1261, 1263, 1276, 1281, 1283, 1287, 1290, 1302, 1305, 1306, 1309, 1310, 1311, 1312, 1313, 1314, 1319, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1330, 1331, 1332, 1335, 1336, 1339, 1340, 1341, 1343, 1344, 1345, 1346, 1347, 1348, 1350, 1351, 1352, 1355, 1357, 1359, 1360, 1365, 1369, 1371, 1372, 1382, 1383, 1384/85, 1391, 1420.

Multilateral treaties

New multilateral treaties concluded under United Nations auspices

The following treaties, concluded under United Nations auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General during 1992:(2)

Agreement establishing the Fund for the Development of the Indigenous Peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean, concluded at Madrid, Spain, on 24 July 1992

International Sugar Agreement, 1992, concluded at Geneva on 20 March 1992

Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes, concluded at Helsinki, Finland, on 17 March 1992

Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents, concluded at Helsinki on 17 March 1992

United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, concluded at New York on 9 May 1992

Agreement on the Conservation of Small Cetaceans of the Baltic and North Seas, opened for signature at New York on 17 March 1992

Amendment to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, adopted at the Fourth Meeting of the Parties at Copenhagen, Denmark, on 25 November 1992

Amendment to article 8 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1966, adopted on 15 January 1992 at the twenty-second meeting of the Fourteenth Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention

Amendments to articles 17 (7) and 18 (5) of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the Conference of the States Parties on 9 September 1992

Multilateral treaties

deposited with the Secretary-General

The number of multilateral treaties for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions stood at 432 at the end of 1992. During the year, 408 signatures were affixed to treaties for which he performed depositary functions and 782 instruments of ratification, accession, acceptance and approval or notification were transmitted to him. In addition, he received 200 communications from States expressing observations or declarations and reservations made at the time of signature, ratification or accession.

The following multilateral treaties in respect of which the Secretary-General acts as depositary came into force during 1992:(2)

United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, 1978, concluded at Hamburg, Germany, on 31 March 1978
Third extension, under Resolution No. 355, adopted by the International Coffee Council on 27 September 1991, of the International Coffee Agreement, 1983, adopted by the International Coffee Council on 16 September 1982, as further extended

International Coffee Agreement, 1983, adopted by the International Coffee Council on 16 September 1982, as further extended under Resolution No. 355 of 27 September 1991

Terms of Reference of the International Copper Study Group, adopted on 24 February 1989 by the United Nations Conference on Copper, 1988

Amendment to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, adopted at the Second Meeting of the Parties at London on 29 June 1990

Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal, concluded at Basel, Switzerland, on 22 March 1989

Regulation No. 89: Uniform Provisions concerning the approval of:
I. Vehicles with regard to limitation of their maximum speed;
II. Vehicles with regard to the installation of a speed limitation device (SLD) of an approved type;

III. Speed limitation devices (SLD)

Regulation No. 90: Uniform provisions concerning the approval of replacement brake lining assemblies for power-driven vehicles and their trailers

Chapter III

Law of the sea

The year 1992 marked the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. Since its adoption, its impact on State practice worldwide showed a remarkable convergence of acceptance of its concepts, principles and basic provisions, given the fact that it had not yet entered into force.

The United Nations system was undertaking a number of initiatives to promote universal acceptance of the Convention, to facilitate the actions required following its eventual entry into force and to ensure that international cooperation in ocean affairs evolved in a coherent manner.

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/65 containing a call on States that had not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention to allow the effective entry into force of the new legal regime for the uses of the sea and its resources.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

The number of ratifications of or accessions to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea increased to 53 during 1992 (51 ratifications, 2 accessions) with the receipt of instruments of ratification by Costa Rica and Uruguay.⁽¹⁾ The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982,⁽²⁾ would enter into force 12 months following receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

The signatories to the Convention numbered 159 when the period for its signature closed in 1984.⁽³⁾ Owing to the merger in 1990 of Democratic Yemen and Yemen (both of which were signatories) into one State, as well as to the accession of the German Democratic Republic (a signatory) to the Federal Republic of Germany (a non-signatory), that number became 157 as from 31 December 1991.⁽⁴⁾

Developments relating to the Convention

Pursuant to a 1991 resolution of the General Assembly,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in 1992 submitted to it two reports on the law of the sea.

The first report, dated 5 November,⁽⁶⁾ reviewed progress made in implementing the legal regime embodied in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea since its adoption in 1982 to its tenth anniversary in 1992. Material for the report and a book to commemorate the anniversary was drawn from contributions presented by 17 experts representing all the regions of the world who met in New York from 27 to 29 January. The report gave an overview of the current status of the Convention; its impact on State practice with respect to 13 key subjects covering the major maritime zones or areas defined by the Convention, the rights of land-locked States, environmental protection and marine scientific research; and global, regional and subregional cooperation based on the Convention.

The report observed a striking degree of convergence of practice towards accepting the Convention's concepts, principles and basic provisions as they related to the territorial sea, the regime of straits used for international navigation, the archipelagic waters, the exclusive economic zone and the protection and preservation of the marine environment. Progress had been slow or lacking, however, in such areas as the new criteria for defining the continental shelf, access to resources in the exclusive economic zones of other States, control of certain types of pollution, the transfer of technology and the right of transit for land-locked States. The international regime for the development of mineral resources of the deep seabed remained unaccepted by the industrialized States. In addition, the introduction of the 200-mile exclusive economic zone resulted in increased fishing activities on the high seas by distant-water-fishing States. This in turn led to new problems, such as large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing of stocks straddling the 200-mile limit (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). Those exceptions notwithstanding, the overall assessment was that the Convention, even before entering into force, had already played a significant role in maintaining international stability and promoting peaceful relations among States in respect of the uses of the seas and oceans.

The second report, dated 24 November,⁽⁷⁾ summarized developments in 1992 relating to the Convention. Part One reviewed the status of the Convention, its impact on State practice and national policy, dispute settlement, criminal law enforcement, the main trends in cooperation on ocean affairs, marine environmental law and policy, conservation and management of living marine resources, marine scientific research and the work of the Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. Part Two outlined the activities of the Secretariat's Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea (see below).

States continued to adopt or modify legislation in accordance with the provisions of the Convention relating to the outer limits of the various maritime zones and to the passage of ships through territorial seas or straits used for international navigation. By the end of 1992, the number of States claiming a 12-mile territorial sea, measured from baselines, had increased from 113 to 114, those claiming a 24-mile contiguous zone had increased from 33 to 38 and those claiming a 200-mile exclusive economic zone had increased from 82 to 86; 42 States based their continental shelf on a depth of 200 metres or on the exploitability criterion, whereas 21 established theirs to the outer edge of the continental margin or to 200 miles. In addition, 16 States had claimed archipelagic status, although not all had specified archipelagic baselines. Of note was the continued interest of the Russian Federation in developing the northern sea route (from the Novaya Zemlya Straits to the Bering Strait) as a viable north-east passage for international shipping, for which non-discriminatory rules applicable to domestic and foreign shipping had been promulgated to ensure safe navigation and prevent pollution.

In view of the political and economic changes that had taken place in the 10 years since the adoption of the Convention, the Secretary-General had taken the initiative of convening informal consultations aimed at achieving universal participation in the Convention. In the course of those consultations, which began in 1990, nine items relating to the regime for deep-seabed mining as contained in the Convention were identified as problem areas, particularly for industrialized States: costs to States parties, the Enterprise (see below), decision-making, the review conference, technology transfer, production limitation, the compensation fund, the financial terms of contracts and environmental considerations. The last item, no longer considered controversial in 1992, was removed from the list.

Disputes over maritime delimitation continued to be settled by negotiation, interim solutions, arbitration and the International Court of Justice (ICJ). Examples of negotiated settlement included the agreements delimiting the continental shelf between Belgium and the United Kingdom and between France and the United Kingdom. As an interim measure, the use of provisional lines, adopted for the purposes of the 1987 Treaty on Fisheries (concluded by certain central Pacific island States, Australia, New Zealand and the United States), was encouraged in the 1992 Niue Treaty on Cooperation in Fisheries Surveillance and Law Enforcement in the South Pacific Region (see below). A dispute between Canada and France over the waters surrounding St. Pierre et Miquelon was settled by the International Arbitral Tribunal, which rendered its award on 10 June 1992 delimiting a single maritime boundary, as requested by the parties. The decision created for France a zone of 3,607 square miles extending 12 miles to the east of the islands, 24 miles to the west and 200 miles to the south in a narrow corridor 10.5 miles wide.

Pending with ICJ were several delimitation cases, including the 1991 application of Guinea-Bissau for the delimitation of "the whole of the maritime territories" of Guinea-Bissau and Senegal.⁽⁸⁾ In September 1992, ICJ delivered its Judgment on the land, island and maritime frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras, with Nicaragua intervening. It decided that the Gulf of Fonseca was a historic bay held in sovereignty jointly by the three countries, but excluding the existing three-mile belt held under the exclusive sovereignty of each. The Bay, including the three-mile belt, continued to be subject to the right of innocent passage. The waters at the central portion of the Gulf's closing line were subject to the joint entitlement of all three States unless and until a delimitation was effected. As to the waters outside the Gulf, the closing line would constitute the baseline; all three States were entitled to territorial sea, continental shelf and exclusive economic zone. Also in September 1992, the 1991 case concerning "passage through the Great Belt" (Finland v. Denmark),⁽⁹⁾ a dispute over the passage of oil rigs through the Belt that generated considerable debate on the regime for international straits and on the definition of ships, was removed from the ICJ list. (For details on the ICJ cases, see PART FIVE, Chapter I.)

Of the nine coastal States in South-East Asia, seven claimed an exclusive economic zone. However, since the entire region is geologically one single continental shelf (the Sunda Shelf), there were several potential conflict areas: the Spratly Islands (Nansha) in the South China Sea, the Gulf of Tonkin, the Gulf of Thailand, the Celebes Sea, the Natuna Islands, the Straits of Malacca and the Timor Sea. The complex situation surrounding the Spratly Islands—China, Taiwan and Viet Nam claimed sovereignty over the whole archipelago, while Brunei Darussalam, Malaysia and the Philippines claimed various atolls lying within their exclusive economic zones—was brought to the fore following China's adoption of legislation in February designating the islands as Chinese territory and the subsequent award of an offshore exploration contract in an area also claimed by Viet Nam.

Various informal meetings held on the issue of managing conflicts in the region highlighted the value of intraregional consultations as the most viable means of resolving threats to regional peace. Such meetings paved the way for the adoption by the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) of the Declaration on the South China Sea (Manila, Philippines, 22 July),⁽¹⁰⁾ calling on the six parties to the Spratly Islands dispute—three of them ASEAN members—to apply the principles of the 1976 Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in South-East Asia (see PART ONE, Chapter II) as the basis for establishing a code of international conduct over the South China Sea.

In the area of criminal law enforcement, commitments by Governments to promote regional cooperation on the control of drug traffic by sea were contained in such 1992 documents as the Declaration of San Antonio (27 February), the South Pacific Forum Communiqué (9 July) and the Declaration of the South China Sea, by which the ASEAN members had resolved to collaborate on anti-piracy operations and in the campaign against drug trafficking.

The year saw a number of new international agreements, rules, standards and policy instruments that served to complement the Convention on the Law of the Sea with respect to the protection and sustainable development of the marine and coastal environment and its resources. Among them were two major global conventions: the Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity. A prominent development was the adoption by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) of Agenda 21, which included a chapter on the protection of the oceans and development of their living resources that was applauded for being detailed and comprehensive, for including forward-looking initiatives and for supporting and building on the Convention on the Law of the Sea. (For details on these conventions and Agenda 21 see PART THREE, Chapter VIII.)

Three new regional conventions were agreed upon in 1992: the Convention on the Protection of the Black Sea against Pollution, with three protocols and four resolutions, signed by Bulgaria, Georgia, Romania, the Russian Federation, Turkey and Ukraine (Bucharest, Romania, 21 April); the Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea Area (Helsinki, Finland, 9 April) to replace a similar convention of 1974; and the Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North-East Atlantic, adopted by 14 European countries and the European Economic Community (September), to replace the 1972 Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping from Ships and Aircraft (Oslo Dumping Convention) and the 1974

Paris Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution from Land-based Sources.

Recent revelations of nuclear dumping and other munitions disposal in European waters, as well as by the growing number of decommissioned nuclear submarines, underscored the need for an international convention on nuclear safety. This was affirmed by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) (Vienna, 22-26 February) and by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (Helsinki, 9 and 10 July).

The rapid response of the international community to conservation issues relating to marine living resources was evident at the global and regional levels. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) stressed that the most important issue was the growing demand for fish in a situation where major fisheries were over-fished. Increasingly complex challenges demanded that fisheries management encompass biological, ecological, economic and social aspects; command a higher political and financial priority in many developing countries; and deal with issues as matters for regional or subregional cooperation. In this connection, the Secretary-General's recommendations on cooperation in fisheries in Africa had wide application (see PART TWO, Chapter VI). The International Conference on Responsible Fishing (Cancun, Mexico, 6-8 May) emphasized the need for fishing to develop within a comprehensive and balanced system (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

Regarding regional agreements, Canada, Japan, the Russian Federation and the United States signed the Convention for the Conservation of Anadromous Stocks in the North Pacific Ocean (Moscow, 11 February). That Convention, prohibiting directed fishing for anadromous fish, was of interest because of possible precedents for the definition of "directed fishing" (fishing targeted at a particular species or stock of fish), "incidental taking" (catching, taking or harvesting a species or stock of fish while conducting directed fishing for another species or stock) and "ecologically related species" (living marine resources associated with anadromous stocks found in the Convention area, including but not restricted to both predators and prey), and the relationship among the three.

The twenty-third South Pacific Forum (Honiara, Solomon Islands, 8 and 9 July),⁽¹¹⁾ by its final communiqué, underlined the importance of cooperation in and coordination of maritime surveillance for the enforcement of fisheries regulations. The adoption of the Niue Treaty on Cooperation in Fisheries Surveillance and Law Enforcement in the South Pacific Region illustrated the determination of the Pacific island States to expand such cooperation. Based on article 73 of the Convention on the Law of the Sea, the Treaty addressed cooperation in implementing harmonized minimum terms and conditions of access, information exchange, surveillance, prosecutions and penalty enforcement.

The FAO Technical Consultation on High Seas Fishing (Rome, 7-15 September) agreed on the need for accurate statistical reporting on fisheries in all waters, particularly on the high seas, for monitoring and evaluating catches and as an essential instrument for research and management.

As to marine scientific research, chapter 17 of UNCED'S Agenda 21 was unique in that it contained a separate programme area to deal directly with the scientific uncertainties and challenges for international cooperation in marine sciences and services. The sponsoring bodies of the Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (the United Nations, UNEP, IAEA, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, WMO, IMO) were considering how best to pursue the work of assessing the state of marine and coastal environments both globally and regionally.

Vandalism and theft of expensive equipment deployed in international waters for climate study purposes underscored persistent questions regarding the legal status of ocean-data acquisition systems, whether drifting or moored, surface or sub-surface instrumentation. According to the Executive Council of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (a body with functional autonomy within the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization), the Convention on the Law of the Sea would be insufficient for developing the proposed Global Ocean Observing System, given its heavy dependence on automated equipment.

Preparatory Commission

During 1992, the Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its tenth session at Kingston, Jamaica (24 February-13 March), and a meeting in New York (10-21 August).⁽⁷⁾ Among the matters considered were the implementation of resolution II on the registration of pioneer investors in deep-seabed mining, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982,⁽¹²⁾ and preparation of draft agreements, rules, regulations and procedures.⁽¹³⁾

The General Committee, acting on behalf of the Preparatory Commission as the executive organ for the implementation of resolution II, adopted an Understanding on the Fulfilment of Obligations by the Registered Pioneer Investor for each of two pioneer investors registered in 1991:⁽¹⁴⁾ the China Ocean Mineral Resources Research and Development Association and its certifying State—China—on 12 March; and the InterOceanmetal Joint Organization and its certifying States—Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Russian Federation—on 18 August.

The General Committee approved the recommendations of the Group of Technical Experts, which met in New York between 18 and 20 February to review documents submitted jointly by three registered pioneer investors—France, Japan and the Russian Federation—on the preparatory work concerning the exploration of reserved areas in the central region of the north-east Pacific, consisting of six sectors that constituted a total area of 71,570 square kilometres, including the area of 52,300 square kilometres contributed by the pioneer investors. The Group's recommendations specified details for the implementation of stage I of the exploration plan, which was ready to be undertaken.

The General Committee considered and took note of the periodic reports submitted by the certifying States of the first group of pioneer investors (France, India, Japan, Russian Federation). It took note of the report of the Training Panel on its third meeting, approved its recommendations and designated the six candidates recommended for the training programmes offered by France and Japan. It also took note of a communication on the training programmes offered by India and the Russian Federation.

Concerning preparation of the draft rules of procedure for the organs of the International Seabed Authority, the Plenary of the Preparatory Commission completed its consideration of the draft Agreement between the International Seabed Authority and the Government of Jamaica regarding the Headquarters of the International Seabed Authority; the draft Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Seabed Authority; and the draft Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority.

The Preparatory Commission decided to hold its eleventh session at Kingston, Jamaica, from 22 March to 2 April 1993.

Special Commissions

The Preparatory Commission's four Special Commissions⁽⁷⁾ continued to work in accordance with their respective mandates.

Developing land-based producer States

Special Commission 1 completed work on the three "hard-core" issues entrusted to it: criteria for identifying developing land-based producer States likely to be or actually affected by seabed production; assistance for such States, including the establishment of a compensation fund; and the effects of subsidized seabed mining. The 17 provisional conclusions and their annexes, forming the basis of recommendations to the Authority, were reviewed by the Chairman's negotiating group. Having examined the background paper on projection of demand, supply and price of metals contained in polymetallic nodules, Special Commission 1 completed consideration of all items on its work programme.

The Enterprise

Special Commission 2 continued preparations for the early entry into operation of the Enterprise—the operational arm of the Authority—which was to begin functioning upon the Convention's entry into force.

The Special Commission focused on working papers and documents on the structure and organization of the Enterprise, as provided for by the Convention on the Law of the Sea, on suggestions to facilitate discussion on transitional arrangements, on joint venture as an operational option at the initial stage of operation and on the Preparatory Commission's training programme. It agreed on the contents of its draft final report.

The Special Commission also considered the draft final report of its Advisory Group on Assumptions, which concluded that there was a need for continuity in its work and suggested that its successors should concentrate, inter alia, on periodic analysis of world markets and metal prices and their trends and forecasts, collection of information on and evaluation of technological developments, and assessment of the state of knowledge of deep-sea environments and possible impacts of mining activities.

Seabed mining code

Special Commission 3, charged with preparing the rules, regulations and procedures for the exploration and exploitation of the deep seabed (the seabed mining code), completed consideration of the draft regulations on accounting principles and procedures relating to the financial terms of contracts between the Authority and its contractors, as well as those on labour, health and safety standards. It thus concluded the final examination of all parts of the draft code. In August, the Special Commission began consideration of its draft final report.

International Tribunal

Special Commission 4, charged with the practical arrangements for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, completed its review of the revised draft Headquarters

Agreement between the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Federal Republic of Germany. It adopted the draft Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Tribunal. It also decided to survey its draft final report, including pending issues, at its eleventh (1993) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/65 by recorded vote.

Law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, including resolution 46/78 of 12 December 1991, on the law of the sea,

Recognizing that, as stated in the third preambular paragraph of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Convinced that it is important to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith and to apply them in a manner consistent with that character and with their object and purpose,

Emphasizing the need for States to ensure consistent application of the Convention, as well as the need for harmonization of national legislation with the provisions of the Convention,

Considering that, in its resolution 2749(XXV) of 17 December 1970, it proclaimed that the seabed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction (hereinafter referred to as "the Area"), as well as the resources of the Area, are the common heritage of mankind,

Recalling that the Convention provide:; the regime to be applied to the Area and its resources,

Recalling with satisfaction the expressions of willingness to explore all possibilities of addressing issues of concern to some States in order to secure universal participation in the Convention,

Recognizing the need for cooperation in the early and effective implementation by the Preparatory Commission of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made in the Preparatory Commission since its inception, including the registration of six pioneer investors and the designation by the Preparatory Commission of reserved areas for the International Seabed Authority from the application areas submitted by the pioneer investors pursuant to resolution II, bearing in mind that such registration entails both rights and obligations for pioneer investors,

Noting the increasing needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance in the implementation of the Convention and in their developmental process for the full realization of the benefits of the comprehensive legal regime established by the Convention,

Concerned that the developing countries are as yet unable to take effective measures for the full realization of these benefits owing to the lack of resources and of the necessary scientific and technological capabilities,

Recognizing the need to enhance and supplement the efforts of States and competent international organizations aimed at enabling developing countries to acquire such capabilities,

Recognizing also that the Convention encompasses all uses and resources of the sea and that all related activities within the United Nations system need to be implemented in a manner consistent with it,

Deeply concerned at the current state of the marine environment,

Mindful of the importance of the Convention for the protection of the marine environment,

Noting with concern the use of fishing methods and practices, including those aimed at evading regulations and controls, which can have an adverse impact on the conservation and management of living marine resources,

Considering the need for effective and balanced conservation and management of living marine resources, giving full effect to the relevant provisions in the Convention,

Taking note of activities carried out in 1992 under programme 10 (Law of the sea and ocean affairs) in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, taking into account the restructuring of the Secretariat of the Organization, and of the report of the Secretary-General, prepared pursuant to paragraph 23 of General Assembly resolution 46/78,

Noting with satisfaction the special report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to paragraph 22 of General Assembly resolution 46/78, on the progress made in the implementation of the comprehensive legal regime embodied in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, in the light of the tenth anniversary in 1992 of its adoption,

1. Recalls the historic significance of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, especially on the occasion of the tenth anniversary in 1992 of its adoption, as an important contribution to the maintenance of peace, justice and progress for all peoples of the world;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the increasing and overwhelming support for the Convention, as evidenced, inter alia by the one hundred and fifty-nine signatures and fifty-three of the sixty ratifications or accessions required for entry into force of the Convention;

3. Invites all States to make renewed efforts to facilitate universal participation in the Convention;

4. Notes with appreciation the initiative of the Secretary-General to promote dialogue aimed at addressing issues of concern to some States in order to achieve universal participation in the Convention;

5. Recognizes that political and economic changes, including particularly a growing reliance on market principles, underscore the need to re-evaluate, in the light of the issues of concern to some States, matters in the regime to be applied to the Area and its resources, and that a productive dialogue on such issues involving all interested parties would facilitate the prospect of universal participation in the Convention, for the benefit of mankind as a whole;

6. Calls upon all States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention at the earliest possible date to allow the effective entry into force of the new legal regime for the uses of the sea and its resources and calls upon all States to take appropriate steps to promote universal participation in the Convention, including through dialogue aimed at addressing the issues of concern to some States;

7. Calls upon all States to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith and to apply them in a manner consistent with that character and with their object and purpose;

8. Also calls upon States to observe the provisions of the Convention when enacting their national legislation;

9. Notes the progress being made by the Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea in all areas of its work;

10. Recalls the Understanding on the Fulfilment of Obligations by the Registered Pioneer Investors and their Certifying States adopted by the Preparatory Commission on 30 August 1990, as well as the understandings adopted on 12 March 1992 and 18 August 1992;

11. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in support of the Convention and for the effective execution of programme 10 (Law of the sea and ocean affairs) in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, and requests him, in the execution of programme 10, to continue to provide an effective response to the increased needs of States for assistance in the implementation of the Convention;

12. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the report prepared pursuant to paragraph 23 of General Assembly resolution 46/78 and requests him to carry out the activities outlined therein, as well as those aimed at the strengthening of the legal regime of the sea, special emphasis being placed on the work of the Preparatory Commission, including the implementation of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea;

13. Welcomes regional efforts being undertaken by developing countries to integrate the ocean sector in national development plans and programmes through the process of international cooperation and assistance, in particular the initiatives mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General;

14. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to assist States in the implementation of the Convention and in the development of a consistent and uniform approach to the legal regime thereunder, as well as in their national, subregional and regional efforts towards the full realization of the benefits therefrom, and invites the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to cooperate and lend assistance in these endeavours;

15. Urges interested Member States, in particular States with advanced marine capabilities, to review relevant policies and programmes in the context of the integration of the marine sector in national development strategies, and to explore prospects for intensifying cooperation with developing countries, including those of regions active in this field;

16. Requests the competent international organizations, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other multilateral funding agencies, in accordance with their respective policies, to intensify financial, technological, organizational and managerial assistance to the developing countries in their efforts to realize the benefits of the comprehensive legal regime established by the Convention and to strengthen cooperation among themselves and with donor States in the provision of such assistance;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep under review, in cooperation with States and the competent international organizations, the measures being undertaken and any necessary follow-up action, in order to facilitate the realization by States of the benefits of the comprehensive legal regime established by the Convention and to report thereon periodically to the General Assembly;

18. Approves the decision of the Preparatory Commission to hold its eleventh regular session at Kingston from 22 March to 2 April 1993 and to hold, as appropriate, a summer meeting in New York in 1993;

19. Recognizes that the protection of the marine environment will be significantly enhanced by the implementation of applicable provisions of the Convention;

20. Reiterates its call to States and other members of the international community to strengthen their cooperation and to take measures with a view to giving full effect to the provisions in the Convention on the conservation and management of living marine resources, including the prevention of fishing methods and practices which can have an adverse impact on the conservation and management of living marine resources and, in particular, to comply with bilateral and regional measures applicable to them aimed at effective monitoring and enforcement;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on developments pertaining to the Convention and all related activities and on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Law of the sea".

General Assembly resolution 47/65

Also on 22 December, the Assembly, in resolution 47/192, reaffirmed that the work and results of a conference on straddling and highly migratory fish stocks, to be convened in 1993, should be fully consistent with the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, in particular the rights and obligations of coastal States and States fishing on the high seas, and that States should give full effect to the high seas fisheries provisions of the Convention with regard to fisheries populations whose ranges lay both within and beyond exclusive economic zones (straddling fish stocks) and highly migratory fish stocks.

Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

Under a new organizational arrangement in the United Nations Secretariat, the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea was integrated, effective 1 March 1992, with the Office of Legal Affairs as its Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea.⁽⁷⁾ The programme on the law of the sea and ocean affairs, including its subprogramme on structure and priorities, as set out under programme 10 of the medium-term plan for 1992-1997,⁽¹⁵⁾ remained unchanged.

During 1992, the Division continued to provide direct assistance, on request, to Member States and intergovernmental organizations. It assisted the members of the Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Cooperation process (comprising the African and Asian States bordering the Indian Ocean) and its secretariat, and assisted in preparations for the eighth meeting of its Standing Committee (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 26-30 October). At the request of Côte d'Ivoire, the Division organized an interministerial meeting there (Abidjan, 30 September-3 October) that adopted a programme recommending an integrated marine policy aimed at the better use of that country's national resources and marine environment. The Division contributed two papers on conflict resolution and possible cooperation in marine affairs to the seventh International Conference on Peace and Security in Southern Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 20-24 July).

As to policy formulation, planning and management relating to coastal areas and exclusive economic zones, the Division cooperated in organizing an International Conference on Ocean Management in Global Change (Genoa, Italy, 22-26 June), which emphasized the relationship between resource development and environmental protection, with particular attention to the results of UNCED. It also provided technical advice to the Marine Institute, Newfoundland, Canada, for the design and implementation of a simulation exercise in sea-use planning.

The Division contributed special papers and studies on issues related to the Convention on the Law of the Sea for conferences, seminars and workshops, such as the sixteenth annual seminar, titled "National Energy Policy and the Oceans", organized by the Center for Ocean Law and Policy (Key Largo, United States, 9-11 January) and the twelfth Training Programme on Management and Conservation of Marine Resources within the Exclusive Economic Zone, organized by the International Ocean Institute (Halifax, Canada, 27 and 28 July).

Other activities included the further development of the computerized Law of the Sea Information System, composed of a group of databases, each containing information on different aspects of the law of the sea; the extensive revision of the Country Marine Profile Database and the National Marine Legislation Database in the light of recent changes in the United Nations membership; expansion of the holdings and services of the Law of the Sea Library through acquisitions of the latest publications and the continued updating of the Library Bibliographic Information System, a computerized database of the Library's holdings, which was being expanded to include the library holdings of the Kingston Office of the Law of the Sea; and publication of two issues of the Law of the Sea Bulletin(16) in English, French and Spanish.

The Division maintained close cooperation with other Secretariat units, as well as with agencies and other bodies within the United Nations system, in matters relating to sea law and other marine affairs.

The Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea—established in 1981(17) and presented annually in honour of the first President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea—was awarded to Igor Vio, assistant lecturer on the law of the sea, University of Rijeka, Croatia.

Chapter IV

Other legal questions

In 1992, the United Nations continued to work on various aspects of international law and international economic law.

The Secretary-General noted that the first summit meeting of the Security Council at the level of Heads of State and Government, in January 1992, represented an unprecedented recommitment, at the highest political level, to the purposes and principles of the Charter. He noted in his report "An Agenda for Peace" that preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building offered a coherent contribution towards securing peace in the spirit of the Charter. It was time, he stated, to move towards the realization of the Organization's vast potential and bring new life to the Charter.

The General Assembly, in November, requested the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to give priority, in 1993, to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations and to continue its work on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States (resolution 47/38). The Assembly expressed hope that the host country of the United Nations Headquarters, the United States, would continue to take all measures necessary to prevent interference with the functions of permanent missions to the United Nations and welcomed a recent lifting of travel restrictions by the host country on mission personnel and United Nations Secretariat staff members of certain nationalities. It urged the host country to continue to abide by its obligations to the United Nations and the missions accredited to it (resolution 47/35). Also in November, the Assembly adopted the programme of activities for the second term (1993-1994) of the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999) (resolution 47/32).

Legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered during the year by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth (Legal) Committee of the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of the Commission's adoption, in 1992, of the Model Law on International Credit Transfers and of the Legal Guide on International Countertrade Transactions. It noted with satisfaction the entry into force on 1 November 1992 of the 1978 United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea (Hamburg Rules) and requested the Secretary-General to increase efforts to promote wider adherence to the Convention (resolution 47/34).

International organizations and international law

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (see p. 3) said that the first summit meeting of the Security Council at the level of Heads of State and Government represented the start of a new phase in the history of the Organization. He said that with the end of the bipolar era, States saw the United Nations once again as an international instrument capable of maintaining international peace and security, of advancing justice and human rights, and of "achieving social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom". Never before had the United Nations been so action-oriented, actively engaged and widely expected to respond to needs both immediate and pervasive.

The Secretary-General noted that the Security Council's workload, compared with that of the cold-war period, had increased dramatically to the point where it was administering 12 peace-keeping operations in various regions, with nearly 40,000 military personnel at an estimated cost of some $3,000 million in the current 12-month period. The responsibilities of the Secretariat had also expanded in terms of diplomatic missions of fact-finding, representation and good offices undertaken on the Secretary-General's behalf. He noted that available resources had not paralleled the rapid expansion of these activities and he had therefore initiated a restructuring of the Secretariat to make the most effective use of resources through the rationalization and streamlining of structures and procedures, together with managerial improvements.

To enable the Secretariat to respond swiftly and efficiently to the mandates of the Security Council and the General Assembly concerning the maintenance of international peace and security, the Secretary-General stated that his aim was to enhance its capacity for good offices, preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, research and analysis and early warning, as well as to strengthen its planning and managerial capability in peace-keeping. A primary objective was a more effective Organization-wide distribution of responsibilities and a balance between functions performed at Headquarters and those carried out by the regional commissions and other United Nations organs and programmes. He firmly believed that the focus of the United Nations must remain in the field, where economic, social and political decisions took effect.

The Secretary-General said that the Organization's responsibilities and commitments in the political and security areas should not be pursued at the expense of responsibilities for development. It was essential that they be carried out in an integrated, mutually supportive way. In his June report, "An Agenda for Peace",⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council invite a reinvigorated and restructured Economic and Social Council to provide reports, in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter, on those social and economic developments that might threaten international peace and security. He said that the United Nations must foster, through peace-building, the process of democratization in situations characterized by long-standing conflicts, both within and among nations. He said he was committed to reforming the Organization to ensure that each of its organs fulfilled its capabilities as envisioned in the Charter. The pace of reform, he stressed, must increase if the United Nations was to stay ahead of history.

Special Committee on the Charter

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization⁽²⁾ (New York, 3-21 February 1992) continued to discuss proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security, together with its examination of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, as requested by the General Assembly in 1991.⁽³⁾

Concerning the maintenance of international peace and security, the Committee had before it two working papers submitted by the Russian Federation. One proposed new issues for consideration by the Committee,⁽⁴⁾ and the other contained a draft declaration on improved cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations.⁽⁵⁾ The Committee also examined: a working paper submitted by 41 States on provisions of the United Nations Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter;⁽⁶⁾ a 1991 proposal by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dealing with enhancing the effectiveness of the Security Council in regard to the maintenance of international peace and security;⁽⁷⁾ and a working paper submitted by Cuba on strengthening the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security.

In considering the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, the Committee discussed a draft text submitted by Guatemala in 1990 proposing conciliation rules for the United Nations.⁽⁸⁾ The Committee completed a first reading of the draft rules which dealt with their application; the initiation of conciliation proceedings; cases in which more than one State had the same interest; the number of conciliators; the appointment of conciliators; rules applicable to conciliation by a sole conciliator; rules applicable to conciliation by commission; and rules applicable to all conciliation proceedings conducted in accordance with the rules. Guatemala offered to submit, at a later stage, a revised draft of its proposal taking into consideration the comments made on the articles at the Special Committee's 1992 session.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his June report, "An Agenda for Peace",⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General addressed various issues relating to the Charter and to strengthening the role of the Organization, inter alia, in the context of the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States.

Egypt chaired the informal open-ended Working Group on the report. It was stressed that the Group's mandate did not conflict with that of the Special Committee and that every effort would be made to avoid conflict between them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 47/38 without vote.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its relevant resolutions adopted at subsequent sessions,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth and forty-seventh sessions, as well as the views and comments expressed on them by Member States,

Noting the recommendations relevant to the work of the Special Committee contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in the light of the debate within the United Nations, particularly within the General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the work of its session held in 1992,

Mindful of the desirability of further work being done by the Special Committee in the fields of the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Bearing in mind various proposals presented to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session aimed at strengthening the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization;

2. Decides that the Special Committee will hold its next session from 1 to 19 March 1993;

3. Requests the Special Committee, at its session in 1993, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 4 below:

(a) To accord priority to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations and, in this context:

(i) To continue its consideration of the proposal on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations;

(ii) To continue its consideration of the proposal on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter;

(iii) To consider other specific proposals relating to the maintenance of international peace and security already submitted to the Special Committee or which might be submitted to the Special Committee at its session in 1993;

(b) To continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and, in this context:

(i) To consider the proposal on United Nations rules for the conciliation of disputes between States;

(ii) To consider other specific proposals relating to the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States already under consideration in the Special Committee or those that might be submitted to the Special Committee at its session in 1993;

(c) To consider various proposals with the aim of strengthening the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness;

4. Also requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever that has significance for the outcome of its work;

5. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States in its meetings, including those of its working group, and also decides that the Special Committee shall be authorized to invite other States or intergovernmental organizations to participate in the debate in plenary meetings of the Special Committee on specific items where it considers that such participation would assist in its work;

6. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Host country relations

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of 1991,(9) the Committee on Relations with the Host Country in 1992 continued to consider various aspects of relations between the United Nations diplomatic community and the United States, its host country. At four meetings between 22 April and 27 October, the Committee considered: host country travel regulations; entry visas issued by the host country; the acceleration of immigration and customs procedures under issues arising in connection with the implementation of the 1947 Headquarters Agreement between the United Nations and the United States;(10) the responsibilities of permanent missions to the United Nations and their personnel, in relation to financial indebtedness in particular; and matters related to insurance, education and health. Summaries of the Committee's deliberations were contained in its 1992 report to the Assembly.(11) The Working Group on Indebtedness, established in 1991,(12) met on 12 March and 9 June.

At the end of 1991, travel restrictions imposed on United Nations staff members of Vietnamese nationality and their dependents were lifted. On 24 April 1992, all travel restrictions on members of the permanent missions of Belarus and Ukraine, as well as on United Nations staff members of those nationalities, were removed by the host country. Effective 13 July, all restrictions on travel to closed areas in the United States to which Russian Federation mission personnel and their dependents were subject were abolished. In September, all travel restrictions on members of the permanent mission of Georgia and Georgian nationals who were Secretariat staff members were also removed. Additionally, the United States lifted the numerical ceilings imposed on staff levels of the permanent missions of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine.

Iraq urged the host country to remove the freeze on its liquid assets in the United States to enable its mission to pay staff salaries and rents. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that its officials continued to have difficulties obtaining United States entry visas when coming to New York to participate in United Nations meetings. The United States observed that the permanent mission of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had not provided documentation on any discriminatory delay in the issuance of visas and the United States was ready to respond in writing should such documentation be furnished. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya further informed the Committee that the United States had reduced its mission personnel in New York by 25 per cent. In reply, the United States noted that the reduction of personnel was in compliance with Security Council resolution 748(1992) (see PART ONE, Chapter I). Cuba alleged that 13 new incidents of provocation and harassment had taken place against its permanent mission and staff. In response, the United States stated that there was no hostility and observed a difference of opinion about what constituted democratic process and freedom of speech. The United Republic of Tanzania expressed concern in the Committee over insurance arrangements in the host country governing motor vehicles for missions and their personnel, which it termed onerous.

The problem of indebtedness was seen by the host country as a priority issue. It was noted that when a diplomat, a diplomatic mission or a staff member of the Secretariat failed to pay just debts, this reflected poorly on the entire United Nations community. In the view of the United States, a failure to satisfy debts could give rise to the expulsion of members of a mission on the grounds of abuse of residence.

In April, the United States introduced to the Committee the newly appointed New York City Commissioner for the United Nations and Consular Corps, Nadine B. Hack, who succeeded Paul O'Dwyer.

Among the recommendations and conclusions approved on 27 October, the Committee anticipated that the host country would continue to take all measures necessary to prevent interference with the functioning of missions; expressed hope that remaining travel restrictions would be removed by the host country as soon as possible; and reminded missions and their personnel of their financial obligations, while expressing strong support for the continued efforts of the Working Group on Indebtedness to find a solution to this problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 47/35 without vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Noting the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding which has guided the deliberations of the Committee on issues affecting the United Nations community and the host country,

Welcoming the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 55 of its report;

2. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interests of the United Nations and all Member States, and expresses the hope that the host country will continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country and hopes that outstanding problems raised at the meetings of the Committee will be duly resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

4. Welcomes the recent lifting of travel controls by the host country with regard to certain missions and staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities, and urges the host country to continue to abide by its obligations to the United Nations and the missions accredited to it;

5. Notes the establishment by the Committee of a working group to consider problems of financial indebtedness and stresses the importance of efforts undertaken in this regard;

6. Stresses the importance of a positive perception of the work of the United Nations, and urges that efforts be continued to build up public awareness by explaining, through all available means, the importance of the role played by the United Nations and the missions accredited to it in the strengthening of international peace and security;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

8. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

United Nations Decade of International Law

The General Assembly in 1989(13) had declared the United Nations Decade of International Law

(1990-1999) to promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law; promote means for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to, and full respect for, the International Court of Justice (ICJ); encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification; and encourage its teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation. The Assembly had adopted the programme of activities for the first term of the Decade (1990-1992) in 1990.(14)

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1991,(15) the Secretary-General submitted, in August 1992, a report with a later addendum(16) summarizing replies received from States and international organizations on steps taken to implement the programme of activities for the first term of the Decade (1990-1992), and views on possible activities for the second term (1993-1994). The report described new activities of various United Nations bodies related to the progressive development of international law and its codification.

Sixth Committee action. The Sixth Committee's Working Group on the Decade, established in 1990 pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 1989(13) with a view to preparing recommendations on the programme for the activities for the Decade, held 14 meetings between 28 September and 6 November 1992. The Working Group discussed the implementation of the programme of activities for the first term (1990-1992) of the Decade and the Secretary-General's report. Annexed to the report of the Working Group(17) was the programme of activities for the second term (1993-1994), which the Assembly adopted by resolution 47/32.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 47/32 without vote.

United Nations Decade of International Law
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989 by which it declared the period 1990-1999 the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Recalling also that the main purposes of the Decade, according to resolution 44/23, should be, inter alia:

(a) To promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law;

(b) To promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice;

(c) To encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification;

(d) To encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law,

Recalling further its resolution 45/40 of 28 November 1990, to which was annexed the programme for the activities to be commenced during the first term (1990-1992) of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Expressing its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to resolution 46/53 of 9 December 1991,

Recalling that the Sixth Committee established at the forty-fifth session the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law with a view to preparing generally acceptable recommendations on the programme of activities for the Decade,

Noting that the Sixth Committee reconvened the Working Group at the forty-sixth and the forty-seventh sessions to continue its work in accordance with resolutions 45/40 and 46/53,

Having considered the report of the Working Group submitted to the Sixth Committee,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Sixth Committee for the elaboration, within the framework of its Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law, of the programme for the activities to be commenced during the second term (1993-1994) of the Decade, and requests the Working Group to continue its work at the forty-eighth session in accordance with its mandate and methods of work;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to States and international organizations and institutions that have undertaken activities in implementation of the programme for the first term (1990-1992) of the Decade, including sponsoring conferences on various subjects of international law;

3. Adopts the programme for the activities to be commenced during the second term (1993-1994) of the Decade as an integral part of the present resolution, to which it is annexed;

4. Invites all States and international organizations and institutions referred to in the programme to undertake the relevant activities outlined therein and, as appropriate, to submit to the Secretary-General interim or final reports for transmission to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session or, at the latest, its forty-ninth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, on the basis of such information, a report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the programme;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to supplement his report, as appropriate, with new information on the activities of the United Nations relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification and to submit it to the General Assembly on an annual basis;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report containing the plan referred to in section V, paragraph 3, of the programme for the second term of the Decade;

8. Encourages States to disseminate at the national level, as appropriate, information contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Appeals to States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations working in the field of international law and to the private sector to make financial contributions or contributions in kind for the purpose of facilitating the implementation of the programme;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of States and international organizations and institutions working in the field of international law the programme annexed to the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law".

ANNEX

Programme for the activities for the second term (1993-1994) of the United Nations Decade of International Law

I. Promotion of the acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law

1. The General Assembly, bearing in mind that maintenance of international peace and security is the underlying condition for the success of the implementation of the programme for the United Nations Decade of International Law, calls upon States to act in accordance with international law, and particularly the Charter of the United Nations, and encourages States and international organizations to promote the acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law.

2. States are invited to consider, if they have not yet done so, becoming parties to existing multilateral treaties, in particular those relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification. International organizations under whose auspices such treaties are concluded are invited to indicate whether they publish periodic reports on the status of ratifications of and accessions to multilateral treaties, and if they do not, to indicate whether in their view such a process would be useful. Consideration should be given to the question of treaties which have not achieved wider participation or entered into force after a considerable lapse of time and the circumstances causing the situation.

3. States and international organizations are encouraged to provide assistance and technical advice to States, in particular to developing countries, to facilitate their participation in the process of multilateral treaty-making, including their adherence to and implementation of multilateral treaties, in accordance with their national legal systems.

4. States are encouraged to report to the Secretary-General on ways and means provided for in the multilateral treaties to which they are parties, regarding the implementation of such treaties. International organizations are similarly encouraged to report to the Secretary-General on ways and means provided for by the multilateral treaties concluded under their auspices, regarding the implementation of such treaties. The Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on the basis of this information and to submit it to the General Assembly.

II. Promotion of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice

1. States, the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations, including the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, as well as the International Law Association, the Institute of International Law, the Hispano-Luso-American Institute of International Law and other international institutions working in the field of international law, and national societies of international law, are invited to study the means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice, and to present suggestions for the promotion thereof to the Sixth Committee.

2. Taking into account the suggestions mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present section and with due regard to the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", the Sixth Committee should consider, where appropriate, on the basis of a report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, or of the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law, the following questions:

(a) Strengthening the use of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes, with particular attention to the role to be played by the United Nations, as well as methods for early identification and prevention of disputes and their containment;

(b) Procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes arising in specific areas of international law;

(c) Ways and means of encouraging greater recognition of the role of the International Court of Justice and its wider use in the peaceful settlement of disputes;

(d) Enhancement of cooperation of regional organizations with the United Nations system of organizations in respect of the peaceful settlement of disputes;

(e) Wider use of the Permanent Court of Arbitration.

III. Encouragement of the progressive development of international law and its codification

1. International organizations, including the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations, are invited to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations summary information regarding the programme and results of their work relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification, including their suggestions for future work in their specialized field, with an indication of the appropriate forum to undertake such work. Similarly, the Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on the relevant activities of the United Nations, including those of the International Law Commission. Such information should be presented in a report by the Secretary-General to the Sixth Committee.

2. On the basis of the information mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present section, States are invited to submit suggestions for consideration by the Sixth Committee and, as appropriate, recommendations. In particular, efforts should be made to identify areas of international law which might be ripe for progressive development or codification.

3. The Sixth Committee should study, taking into account General Assembly resolution 684(VII) of 6 November 1952, its coordinating role with respect, inter alia, to the drafting of provisions of a legal nature and the consistent use of legal terminology in international instruments adopted by the General Assembly. States are invited to present proposals in this regard to the Sixth Committee.

4. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization should continue to study possible measures to strengthen the United Nations system for the maintenance of international peace and security. In that context, the Special Committee should take note of the Secretary-General's report entitled "An Agenda for Peace" in the light of the debate within the United Nations, particularly within the General Assembly.

IV. Encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law

1. The Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law should, in the context of the Decade, continue to formulate, as appropriate and in a timely manner, relevant guidelines for the Programme's activities and report to the Sixth Committee on the activities carried out under the Programme in accordance with such guidelines. Special emphasis should be given to supporting academic and professional institutions already carrying out research and education in international law, as well as to encouraging the establishment of such institutions where they might not exist, particularly in the developing countries. States and other public or private bodies are encouraged to contribute to the strengthening of the Programme.

2. States should encourage their educational institutions to introduce courses in international law for students studying law, political science, social sciences and other relevant disciplines; they should study the possibility of introducing topics of international law in the curricula of schools at the primary and secondary levels. Cooperation between institutions at the university level amongst developing countries, on the one hand, and their cooperation with those of developed countries on the other, should be encouraged.

3. States should consider convening conferences of experts at the national and regional levels in order to study the question of preparing model curricula and materials for courses in international law, training of teachers in international law, preparation of textbooks on international law and the use of modern technology to facilitate the teaching of and research in international law.

4. States, the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations should consider organizing seminars, symposia, training courses, lectures and meetings and undertaking studies on various aspects of international law.

5. States are encouraged to organize special training in international law for legal professionals, including judges, and personnel of ministries of foreign affairs and other relevant ministries as well as military personnel. The United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Hague Academy of International Law, regional organizations and the International Committee of the Red Cross are invited to continue cooperating in this respect with States.

6. Cooperation among developing countries, as well as between developed and developing countries, in particular among those persons who are involved in the practice of international law, for exchanging experience and for mutual assistance in the field of international law, including assistance in providing textbooks and manuals of international law, is encouraged.

7. In order to make better known the practice of international law, States and international and regional organizations should endeavour to publish, if they have not done so, summaries, repertories or yearbooks of their practice.

8. States and international organizations should encourage the publication of important international legal instruments and studies by highly qualified publicists, bearing in mind the possibility of assistance from private sources.

9. Other international courts and tribunals, including the European Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, are invited to disseminate more widely their judgements and advisory opinions, and to consider preparing thematic or analytical summaries thereof.

10. International organizations are requested to publish treaties concluded under their auspices, if they have not yet done so. Timely publication of the United Nations Treaty Series is encouraged and efforts directed towards adopting an electronic form of publication should be continued. Timely publication of the United Nations Juridical Yearbook is also encouraged.

V. Procedures and organizational aspects

1. The Sixth Committee, working primarily through its Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law and with the assistance of the Secretariat, will be the coordinating body of the programme for the Decade. The question of the use of an intra-sessional, inter-sessional or existing body to carry out specific activities of the programme may be considered by the General Assembly.

2. The Sixth Committee is requested to continue to prepare the programme of activities for the Decade.

3. The Secretariat, on the basis of informal consultations with the members of the Sixth Committee, should draw up a preliminary operational plan for a possible United Nations congress on public international law, based on the proposal that the congress should be held in 1994 or 1995, and within existing resources and assisted by voluntary contributions, and submit it to the Sixth Committee for consideration by general agreement at the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly.

4. All organizations and institutions referred to and invited to submit reports to the Secretary-General under sections I to IV above are requested to submit interim or final reports preferably at the forty-eighth session but not later than the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly.

5. States are encouraged to establish, as necessary, national, subregional and regional committees which may assist in the implementation of the programme for the Decade. Non-governmental organizations are encouraged to promote the purposes of the Decade within the fields of their activities, as appropriate.

6. It is recognized that, within the existing overall level of appropriations, adequate financing for the implementation of the programme for the Decade is necessary and should be provided. Voluntary contributions from Governments, international organizations and other sources, including the private sector, would be useful and are strongly encouraged. To this end, the establishment of a trust fund to be administered by the Secretary-General might be considered by the General Assembly.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 6th Committee 34-37; plenary 73.

Observer status of national liberation movements

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1990,(18) the Secretary-General submitted, in July 1992,(19) a report containing replies from live Governments on the implementation of that resolution, concerning the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 47/29 by recorded vote.

Observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/167 of 15 December 1980, 37/104 of 16 December 1982, 39/76 of 13 December 1984, 41/71 of 3 December 1986, 43/160 B of 9 December 1988 and 45/37 of 28 November 1990,

Recalling also its resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the resolution of the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations relating to the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States,

Noting that the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, of 14 March 1975, regulates only the representation of States in their relations with international organizations,

Taking into account the current practice of inviting the above-mentioned national liberation movements to participate as observers in the sessions of the General Assembly, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in the work of the conferences held under the auspices of such international organizations,

Convinced that the participation of the national liberation movements referred to above in the work of international organizations helps to strengthen international peace and cooperation,

Desirous of ensuring the effective participation of the above-mentioned national liberation movements as observers in the work of international organizations and of regulating, to that end, their status and the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions,

Noting that many States have recognized those national liberation movements and have granted them facilities, privileges and immunities in their countries,

1. Calls upon all States that have not done so, in particular those which are host to international organizations or to conferences convened by, or held under the auspices of, international organizations of a universal character, to consider as soon as possible the question of ratifying, or acceding to, the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

2. Urges the States concerned to accord to the delegations of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States and accorded observer status by international organizations, the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions, in accordance with the provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of 1990(20) the Secretary-General submitted, in August 1992, a report(21) on cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC), an organization which the Assembly had invited to participate in its sessions and work in the capacity of a permanent observer in 1980.(22)

The report reviewed the activities of the Committee in the context of a 1987 programme of cooperation in the following areas: cooperative framework; representation at meetings and conferences; role of the United Nations and the United Nations Decade of International Law; promoting wider use of ICJ; measures designed to further the work of the Sixth Committee; measures to promote ratification and implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;(23) international economic cooperation for development; refugees; zones of peace and international cooperation; and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs. The Committee also dealt with criteria for the distinction between terrorism and the struggle for liberation and the deportation of Palestinians as a violation of international law, particularly the 1949 Geneva Conventions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 October 1992, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/6 without vote.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/38 of 18 November 1981, 37/8 of 29 October 1982, 38/37 of 5 December 1983, 39/47 of 10 December 1984, 40/60 of 9 December 1985, 41/5 of 17 October 1986, 43/1 of 17 October 1988 and 45/4 of 16 October 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee,

Having heard the statement made on 21 October 1992 by the Secretary-General of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee on the steps taken by the Consultative Committee to ensure continuing, close and effective cooperation between the two organizations,^a

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee towards strengthening the role of the United Nations and its various organs, including the International Court of Justice, through programmes and initiatives undertaken by the Consultative Committee;

3. Notes with satisfaction the commendable progress achieved towards enhancing cooperation between the United Nations and the Consultative Committee in wider areas;

4. Notes with appreciation the decision of the Consultative Committee to participate actively in the programmes of the United Nations Decade of International Law;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Consultative Committee;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee".

International economic law

In 1992, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly.

International trade law

Report of UNCITRAL

At its twenty-fifth session (New York, 4-22 May 1992), UNCITRAL adopted a draft Model Law on International Credit Transfers, which was annexed to its report on the session,(1) and, a Legal Guide on International Countertrade Transactions. The Commission also examined international countertrade; legal problems of electronic data interchange; procurement; guarantees and stand-by letters of credit; Interpretation of Commercial Terms, (INCOTERMS) 1990; case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT); coordination of work; status of conventions; training and assistance; and relevant General Assembly resolutions. In addition, in accordance with a Secretariat proposal of 1991,(2) the Commission organized, in the context of the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999) (see above), the UNCITRAL Congress on International Trade Law under the theme of uniform commercial law in the twenty-first century (New York, 18-22 May 1992). The Congress dealt with the process and value of unification of commercial law; sale of goods; supply of services; payments; credits and banking; electronic data interchange; transport; dispute settlement; and the future role of UNCITRAL. The Commission noted the publication of a bibliography⁽³⁾ of recent writings related to its work.

As in previous years, UNCITRAL's annual report was forwarded to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for comments.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1991,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported, in September 1992,⁽⁵⁾ on providing travel assistance to least developed countries (LDCs) that were Commission members to enable them to attend UNCITRAL meetings and working groups, and on the feasibility of UNCITRAL holding consecutive meetings of its working groups to lessen travel expenses. The Secretary-General drew attention to discussion on the rationalization of UNCITRAL'S work during its 1992 session,⁽¹⁾ wherein it was observed that holding consecutive working group meetings was impracticable. It was noted that because of the nature of the work assigned to each working group, delegations were usually composed of different experts. It was further noted that if working groups met consecutively, experts might be away from their duty stations for too long. In addition, States might be encouraged to retain experts already present for a particular working group meeting for a subsequent meeting, even though they might not have the appropriate expertise.

UNCITRAL was in general agreement with efforts to find ways of assisting developing countries, and LDCs in particular, and expressed the view that assistance would have to be considered in the context of the overall budget. It was noted that recommendations on the subject might require consideration by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

Referring to the Secretary-General's report, the Sixth Committee Chairman suggested in October⁽⁶⁾ that the Fifth Committee consider the matter of granting travel assistance to least developed and other developing countries and take a substantive decision on it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/219 A, section XXX.

Granting of travel assistance to least developed and other developing countries that are members of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law
[The General Assembly...]

Decides to defer consideration of this question until resumed forty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/835) without vote, 20 December (meeting 51); draft based on informal consultations on reports of the Secretary-General (A/46/349, A/47/454, A/C.5/47/CRP.1); agenda item 104.

Unification of trade law

International credit transfers

In considering the draft Model Law on International Credit Transfers in 1992, the Commission had before it a Secretariat note⁽⁷⁾ containing suggestions for the final review of its text. The most important problems identified by the Secretariat related to the various time-periods during which the receiving bank must perform a certain number of actions.

By a decision of 15 May, the Commission, after considering the text of the draft Model Law, adopted the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Credit Transfers, as annexed to its 1992 report.⁽¹⁾ By that decision, UNCITRAL requested the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the Model Law, together with the travaux préparatoires from its twenty-fourth⁽²⁾ and twenty-fifth sessions,⁽¹⁾ to Governments and other interested bodies, and recommended that all States give due consideration to the Model Law when enacting or revising their laws, given the need for uniformity of the law applicable to international credit transfers.

International countertrade

In 1992, the Commission had before it draft material for the Legal Guide on International Countertrade Transactions, including a covering report and draft chapters dealing with: the origin and purpose of the guide; the scope and terminology of the guide; contracting approach; countertrade commitment; general remarks on drafting; type, quality and quantity of goods; pricing of goods; participation of third parties; payment; restrictions on resale of goods; liquidated damages and penalty clauses; security for performance; failure to complete countertrade transaction; choice of law; settlement of disputes; draft illustrative provisions and chapter summaries.⁽⁸⁾

On 12 May, the Commission adopted the UNCITRAL Legal Guide on International Countertrade Transactions; invited the General Assembly to recommend the use of the Legal Guide for international countertrade transactions and requested the Secretary-General to take effective measures for its widespread distribution and promotion. The Secretariat was requested to edit the text and to publish it expeditiously UNCITRAL decided that the publication containing the Legal Guide should include an invitation to readers to send their comments to the Secretariat.

Electronic data interchange

UNCITRAL had before it in 1992 a report(9) of the Working Group on International Payments—which had been renamed the Working Group on Electronic Data Exchange—on the work of its twenty-fourth (1992) session. The report contained recommendations for future work by the Commission with respect to the legal issues of electronic data interchange (EDI). The report suggested that any related future work by UNCITRAL should be aimed at the increased use of EDI.

The Working Group recommended that the Commission prepare legal norms and rules on the use of EDI in international trade that were sufficiently detailed to provide practical guidance to EDI users as well as to national legislators and regulatory authorities.

UNCITRAL endorsed the Working Group's recommendations and entrusted it with preparing legal rules on EDI. It decided that the Secretariat should: continue to monitor legal developments in other organizations such as the Economic Commission for Europe, the European Communities and the International Chamber of Commerce; facilitate the exchange of relevant documents between the Commission and those organizations; and report to the Commission and its relevant Working Groups on the work accomplished within those organizations.

Procurement

The Commission considered the 1991 reports of the Working Group on the New International Economic Order(10) as they pertained to draft articles 28-35 and 1-27 of the Model Law on Procurement.

UNCITRAL accepted the Working Group's recommendation that priority be given to preparing a commentary to guide legislatures preparing legislation based on the Model Law, but that this should not delay the completion of the Model Law. The Commission also noted that the draft commentary would be prepared by the Secretariat and that a small and informal ad hoc working party of the Working Group would be convened to review it.

Noting that the preparation of a Model Law on procurement was urgently needed, given that an increasing number of States were considering reforming their procurement laws, the Commission requested the Working Group to proceed with its work expeditiously so that it could consider the draft Model Law at its 1993 session.

At its fifteenth (1992) session (New York, 22 June-2 July), the Working Group adopted 41 draft articles of the Model Law on Procurement, which were annexed to its report.(11)

Guarantees and stand-by letters of credit

The Commission considered the reports of its Working Group on International Contract Practices at its sixteenth(12) (1991) and seventeenth(13) (1992) sessions, during which it examined draft articles 1 to 13 and 14 to 27 of a uniform law on international guarantee letters, respectively. The Commission noted that the Working Group had requested the Secretariat to prepare a revised draft of articles 1 to 27. It further noted that, when discussing the appropriateness of including provisions on conflicts of law and jurisdiction in the uniform law, the Working Group had requested the Secretariat to consult with the Hague Conference on Private International Law on possible methods of cooperation. UNCITRAL asked the Working Group to continue to carry out its task expeditiously.

INCOTERMS 1990

UNCITRAL agreed that INCOTERMS 1990 had succeeded in providing a modern set of international rules for interpreting the most commonly used terms in international trade. It noted with appreciation that the new method of presenting INCOTERMS 1990 facilitated their reading and understanding. Several delegations reported that INCOTERMS 1990 was already widely used in their countries. On 12 May, the Commission commended the use of INCOTERMS 1990 in international sales transactions.

Coordination of work

The Commission had before it a note by the Secretariat on assistance by multilateral organizations and bilateral aid agencies in modernizing commercial laws in developing countries.(14) It was noted that assistance was typically provided in the form of experts and funding for projects and that those activities concentrated on: investment laws; intellectual property law; maritime legislation; and laws and regulations in areas such as taxation, insurance, customs, procurement and export and import trade.

The note recommended that the Commission ask the Secretariat to continue to monitor the work of the multilateral organizations and bilateral aid agencies and recommend to those that had not provided assistance to consider doing so. In addition, UNCITRAL might urge greater cooperation and consultation between it and the organizations and aid agencies when executing projects to modernize commercial law in developing countries.

Training and assistance

The Commission had before it a note by the Secretariat(15) describing UNCITRAL's continued cooperation and participation in seminars and symposia on international trade law. In 1992, a seminar on international commercial arbitration (Mexico City, 20 and 21 February), jointly organized by the Mexican Ministry of External Relations and the secretariat of the Commission, presented lectures on various legal texts by four experts from Mexico, a consultant and a member of UNCITRAL.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 47/34 without vote.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-fifth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development and from different legal systems in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-fifth session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, particularly as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

Concerned about the relatively low incidence of expert representation from developing countries at sessions of the Commission and particularly of its working groups during recent years, due in part to inadequate resources to finance the travel of such experts,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-fifth session;

2. Takes note with particular satisfaction of the completion and adoption by the Commission of the Model Law on International Credit Transfers;

3. Recommends that, in view of the current need for uniformity of the law applicable to international credit transfers, all States give due consideration to the enactment of legislation based on the Model Law;

4. Takes note with particular satisfaction of the completion and adoption by the Commission of the Legal Guide on International Countertrade Transactions;

5. Recommends the use of the Legal Guide to parties involved in international countertrade transactions;

6. Recommends also that all efforts be made to ensure that the Legal Guide becomes generally known and available;

7. Notes with satisfaction the entry into force on 1 November 1992 of the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, 1978 (Hamburg Rules), and requests the Secretary-General to make increased efforts to promote wider adherence to the Convention;

8. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law and, in this connection, recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, continue to maintain close cooperation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

9. Reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and assistance in the field of international trade law and the desirability for it to sponsor seminars and symposia to provide such training and assistance, and, in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing two seminars on international trade law, the first held at Suva, from 21 to 25 October 1991, and the second at Mexico City, on 20 and 21 February 1992, and to the Governments whose contributions enabled the seminars to take place;

(b) Invites Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund for the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries, and in the award of fellowships to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

10. Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing, as a contribution to the activities of the United Nations Decade of International Law, a Congress under the theme "Uniform commercial law in the twenty-first century", held in New York from 18 to 22 May 1992, during the last week of the twenty-fifth session of the Commission, which provided a useful assessment of the progress made to date in the unification and harmonization of international trade law and will assist the Commission and other organizations involved in the unification and harmonization of international trade law in laying out the course of their future work;

11. Repeats its invitation to those States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the conventions elaborated under the auspices of the Commission;

12. Requests the Fifth Committee, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States, to continue to consider granting travel assistance, within existing resources, to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, as well as, on an exceptional basis, to other developing countries that are members of the Commission at their request, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to enable them to participate in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups;

13. Recommends that the Commission pay special attention to the rationalization of the organization of its work and consider all possibilities for rationalization, in particular the holding of consecutive meetings of its working groups;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of paragraphs 12 and 13 above to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

General Assembly resolution 47/34

PART SIX

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations financing and programming

In 1992, the United Nations continued to operate under difficult financial conditions brought about by the non-payment of assessed contributions by a number of Member States. The problem was exacerbated further by the rapidly rising number of peace-keeping activities throughout the world.

The General Assembly took action towards improving the ability of the Organization to finance its peace-keeping activities more effectively, by authorizing the establishment of a Peace-keeping Reserve Fund, at a level of $150 million (resolution 47/217). It called on the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee to examine the current placement of Member States in the groups for the apportionment of peace-keeping expenses, with a view to establishing standard criteria for all future operations (47/218). The Assembly also considered proposals by the Secretary-General to stabilize the financing of peace-keeping operations, as outlined in "An Agenda for Peace" (see PART ONE, Chapter I).

The Assembly increased appropriations to the 1992-1993 approved programme budget to $2.5 billion. Total budget appropriations for 1993 alone were $1.3 billion. Original income estimates for the biennium were also revised upwards to $471 million (47/220 A and B).

The Committee on Contributions made recommendations regarding the assessed contributions of 18 new Member States, which the Assembly subsequently adopted (decision 47/456).

The Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements for the period ended 31 December 1991 for the United Nations and eight development and humanitarian assistance programmes, as well as the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors (47/211). By the same resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare separate financial reports and statements for peace-keeping operations for submission in 1993.

United Nations financing

Financial situation

The precarious financial condition of the United Nations, brought on by the non-payment of dues

by a number of Member States, was the subject of several reports of the Secretary-General in 1992. The problem had become worse due to the rising quantity and growing complexity of tasks in the areas of peace-keeping and conflict resolution. If Member States did not promptly provide the resources needed for those expanded responsibilities, it might not be possible to maintain the Organization's operations, the Secretary General said in May.⁽¹⁾

The level of outstanding contributions, both to the regular budget and to peace-keeping operations, continued to rise dramatically throughout 1992. As at 30 April, unpaid contributions totalled $1,898.7 million, virtually double the amount outstanding six months before. That figure comprised $1,093.4 million due to the regular budget, of which $416 million was outstanding for 1991 and prior years, and $805.3 million for peace-keeping.

At the end of April 1992, just 34.7 per cent of the 1992 regular budget assessments had been paid, with only 39 Member States having fully paid their assessment for 1992 and prior years. Sixty-five Members had made no payment at all and 74 owed more than their current year's assessment. A total of 124 Member States had failed to meet the statutory financial obligation under the Charter to pay their assessed contributions to the regular budget in full and on time.

On average, only 36.3 per cent of the first assessment for newly established peace-keeping operations was paid at the end of the operations' first three months, and only 56.8 per cent was paid after six months. As a result, short-term loans between certain peace-keeping accounts continued to be necessary in 1992 to cover daily operational requirements. However, such short-term borrowing mechanisms were inadequate, in the face of the cash required, particularly for the operations in Cambodia and the former Yugoslavia.

By mid-July,⁽²⁾ only 52 Member States had paid in full their dues to the regular budget, and unpaid assessed contributions totalled $908.5 million. Outstanding contributions to peace-keeping operations amounted to $844.4 million. Considering regular budget and peace-keeping operations together, for both receipts and disbursements, a deficit of about $55 million was projected for November, to reach $81 million by the end of December. At that time, the Secretary-General said, it would not be possible to effect short-term loans from peace-keeping operations to the regular budget and, without an immediate inflow of cash, the Organization would have to cease operations.

In October,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the pattern of contribution collection had continued to fluctuate widely from month to month, requiring him to borrow again from peace-keeping funds to provide for the Organization's daily operations in August and September. At the time of the report, it was estimated that, given anticipated payments in October, November and December totalling some $308 million, the United Nations would end the year with a deficit of $12 million in its regular budget. An improvement in collections in the first six months of 1992 had been more than offset by poor collections in the third quarter, resulting in a much worse than average collection pattern as at 30 September.

With three months left in 1992, unpaid contributions to the regular budget stood at a cumulative total of $826.3 million for the current and prior years, equalling 80 per cent of the 1992 regular budget. In the previous year at that same time, total contributions outstanding had represented 75 per cent of the 1991 assessment. More Member States actually paid their dues to the regular budget in 1992 than in 1991 or 1990; however, non-payment by the third major contributor in 1992 had served to widen the margin of total uncollected funds beyond that of the prior year.

As at 31 December 1992, $500,607,665 was outstanding to the regular budget, of which $403,859,879 was due for 1992 and $96,747,786 for past years.⁽⁴⁾ Outstanding contributions to peace-keeping operations totalled approximately $664.3 million.

At the end of the year, there were nine such operations financed from assessed contributions: the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL), the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM). Of the three recently completed operations, the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIIMOG) and the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) still had outstanding contributions due to their accounts, totalling $13.8 million, while the account of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG) showed a surplus for 1992 of some $6.6 million (for further financing of UNTAG, see below). Not included was the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), which was financed from voluntary contributions.

In his October report,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General stressed that an immediate and continuing cash inflow was needed for the Organization to survive; if it could not collect its debts, it would be unable to pay its creditors. The United Nations was obliged to pay back any balances of appropriations remaining at the end of a financial period, but in recent years, the General Assembly had suspended such obligations on a number of occasions and allowed the withholding of payments to Member States totalling some $350 million. A further $75 million could become available in residual balances of UNTAG and UNIIMOG, although some of that had been proposed for transfer to a peace-keeping reserve fund. About $200 million was due to troop-contributing countries, and there were other routine balances due to creditors, in all funds, which were expected to total between $150 million and $200 million by year-end. If outstanding assessed contributions were to be paid in full, the Organization could pay all those debts and have enough left to replenish its Working Capital Fund.

The persistent financial difficulties were becoming politically incongruous—as both the regular and peace-keeping budgets were adopted by the consensus of Member States—as well as increasingly damaging to the implementation of mandated programmes, since severe monetary concerns had taken on an inordinately important role in the choice of activities and priorities. Should the Assembly choose to revise the basic membership principles and financial regulations derived from the relevant Articles of the Charter, the Secretariat would assist Member States to the best of its ability. Until then, full and timely payment by all Members of their assessed contributions was the only solution.

The proposals made by the Secretary-General in November 1991⁽⁵⁾ to alleviate the financial situation of the Organization were reviewed in an annex to his October 1992 report. They included charging interest on assessed contributions not paid on time; suspending certain financial regulations to permit retention of budgetary surpluses; increasing the Working Capital Fund to $250 million and endorsing the principle that the Fund's level should be about 25 per cent of the annual regular budget; establishing a temporary peace-keeping reserve fund at a level of $50 million (see below); and authorizing the Secretary-General to borrow commercially, should other sources of cash be inadequate.

Other proposals included the creation of a humanitarian emergency fund in the order of $50 million, which was implemented in the form of the creation of a Central Emergency Revolving Fund that became operational in May 1992 (see PART THREE, Chapter III), and the establishment of a United Nations Peace Endowment Fund, with an initial target of $1 billion. In "An Agenda for Peace" (see PART ONE, Chapter I), the Secretary-General further proposed the establishment of a revolving peace-keeping reserve fund.

Responding to these proposals, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) said the establishment of a revolving peace-keeping reserve fund would have to be considered in the light of the proposals to increase the Working Capital Fund and the possible establishment of a reserve for peace-keeping operations.⁽⁶⁾ Moreover, it pointed out that the proposal was not in conformity with the financial regulations and budgetary process. With regard to the reporting of outstanding contributions in lump sums—comprising both regular budget and peace-keeping funds—ACABQ felt that it concealed year-to-year changes in the amounts of contributions received, as well as the amounts in arrears relative to the outstanding contributions in the current year; thus, the method failed to reflect clearly the financial situation. ACABQ recommended that future submissions should report the balance due as at 1 January of the current year, in addition to the balance due as at the date of reporting, separately for the regular budget and for assessed peace-keeping operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 46/476 of 14 September 1992, at its resumed forty-sixth session, the General Assembly, decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh session the item on the current financial crisis of the United Nations.

On 23 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/215 without vote.

Improving the financial situation of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, Article 17, paragraph 1, which states that the General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization, and Article 17, paragraph 2, which stipulates that the expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the Assembly,

Recalling also the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and particularly regulation 5.4, according to which contributions and advances shall be considered as due and payable in full within thirty days of the receipt of the communication of the Secretary-General,

Expressing its appreciation to those Member States that pay their assessed contributions in full and on time,

Recognizing that while the level of outstanding contributions to the regular budget and peace-keeping operations has remained significant in 1992, there has been progress in the pattern of payments by Member States, notably for peace-keeping operations,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and its resolutions 45/236 A and B of 21 December 1990 on the current financial crisis and financial emergency of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financial situation and on possible measures to address the financial problems of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth and forty-seventh sessions;

2. Also takes note of the related observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the provision of information on the financial situation of the Organization on a regular basis, and requests the Secretary-General to continue providing such information as often as necessary, through specific reports and through reports on the status of contributions, and to include in those reports information on arrears and outstanding contributions in relation to assessments, on the cash flow situation of the Organization and on any possible additional elements which would enable Member States to be fully apprised of the various aspects of the financing of United Nations activities, including consolidated information on a biannual basis on the amounts owed to each troop-contributing country based on existing data;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to increase his efforts in encouraging Member States to meet their financial obligations towards the Organization with regard to all outstanding assessed contributions to the regular budget and all peace-keeping operations, as requested in resolutions 45/236 A and B, and to reflect the results in the reports mentioned in paragraph 3 above;

5. Expresses its concern that the financial situation of the Organization has remained uncertain and precarious during the year 1992 and that late payments or non-payments of assessed contributions to the regular budget and peace-keeping accounts over the years by a majority of Member States have resulted in the depletion of reserves and cash flow problems;

6. Regrets that the Organization has to operate with large arrears and unpaid contributions, and notes with concern that ad hoc measures had to be adopted during 1992, including borrowing from peace-keeping funds and delays in reimbursement to troop contributors, in addition to the previous suspension on a number of occasions of the Financial Regulations requiring the surrendering to Member States of remaining balances of appropriations;

7. Reaffirms that all Member States have the obligation to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time;

8. Notes that if all outstanding assessed contributions were to be paid in full, the Organization could reimburse Member States and replenish its reserves;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake a study of the United Nations financial and budgetary practices, drawing upon the experiences of other organizations within the system, particularly the calendar for the consideration and adoption of the programme budget and the timing of issuance of assessments, with a view to facilitating timely and full payments by Member States;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to make proposals for possible systems of incentives for implementation on or before 1 January 1995, taking into account proposals made by Member States during the forty-seventh session, in order to encourage Member States to pay all their assessments in full and on time, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, and in this connection requests the Secretary-General to consider proposing revisions to the relevant Financial Regulations and Rules;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the contingency measures taken to face cash shortages in the Organization;

12. Takes note of the proposal of the Secretary-General for an increase in the level of the Working Capital Fund and the observations of the Advisory Committee in this regard and decides to revert to this matter, if necessary, at the forty-eighth session;

13. Emphasizes the need to continue to ensure overall efficient and prudent management by the Secretary-General of all the resources of the Organization entrusted by Member States for the implementation of all its mandates and, in particular, stresses the need to ensure full accountability and responsibility in the management and use of these resources;

14. Notes with concern that the lack of cash reserves and the cash flow problems have a negative impact on the capacity of the Secretariat to manage the Organization;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to strengthen, inter alia, through the application of the integrated management information system, the central management of all cash resources available within the Organization, including optimizing the use of available cash, taking into account resources earmarked for discharging unliquidated obligations and those appropriated for implementing multi-year projects under the General Fund;

16. Decides to consider in the future the agenda items entitled "Current financial crisis of the United Nations" and "Financial emergency of the United Nations" under one agenda item entitled "Improving the financial situation of the United Nations";

17. Invites the Secretary-General to submit a report on the financial situation of the Organization no later than 15 November 1993;

18. Also decides to consider the financial situation of the Organization as and when required.

General Assembly resolution 47/215

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/816) without vote, 20 December (meeting 51); draft by Sweden (A/C.5/47/L.25); agenda items 106 & 107. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 4-10, 51; plenary 94.

Establishment of a Peace-keeping Reserve Fund

In a November 1991 report on the financial situation of the Organization,⁽⁵⁾ as well as in "An Agenda for Peace", the Secretary-General proposed establishing a temporary Peace-keeping Reserve Fund, at a level of $50 million, to meet initial expenses of peace-keeping operations pending receipt of assessed contributions. The General Assembly, in December, established such a Fund at a level of $150 million, as a cash-flow mechanism to ensure the Organization's rapid response to the needs of peace-keeping operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/217 without vote on 23 December 1992.

Establishment of a Peace-keeping Reserve Fund

The General Assembly,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace",

Having considered with appreciation also the reports of the Secretary-General, including his report on the work of the Organization, and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting that the Organization is confronted with increasing demands and challenges in the area of peace-keeping operations,

Recognizing the unpredictable nature of peace-keeping operations and the consequent necessity of giving the Secretary-General adequate resources to respond in a timely manner to a crisis,

Recognizing also that it is essential to provide peace-keeping operations, especially in their start-up phases, with the necessary financial resources to enable the timely, full and effective implementation of their mandates,

Decides:

(a) To establish under the authority of the Secretary-General effective 1 January 1993 a Peace-keeping Reserve Fund as a cash flow mechanism to ensure the rapid response of the Organization to the needs of peace-keeping operations;

(b) To authorize the Secretary-General to advance from the Fund such sums as may be necessary to finance:

(i) Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses relating to peace-keeping operations within the commitment authority established by the General Assembly;

(ii) Budgetary appropriations, including start-up costs, approved by the General Assembly for new, expanded or renewed peace-keeping operations pending the collection of assessed contributions;

(c) That the advances authorized in accordance with subparagraph (b) above shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for these purposes;

(d) That the level of the Fund shall be 150 million United States dollars;

(e) That Member States' shares of the Fund shall remain fixed and shall be calculated on the basis of the ad hoc apportionment as set out in General Assembly resolution 45/247 of 21 December 1990;

(f) That the Fund shall be financed as follows:

(i) By the transfer of the balance for the excess of income over expenditures in the special accounts for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group and the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group after the credits to Member States have been applied in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 45/265 of 17 May 1991, 47/206 and 47/207 of 22 December 1992, based on the latest rates of apportionment applied for the Transition Assistance Group and the Military Observer Group;

- (ii) By the transfer of whatever portion of the amount of 154,881,112 dollars retained in the General Fund pursuant to General Assembly resolution 42/216 A of 21 December 1987 is needed for each Member State to reach its fixed share of the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund based on the ad hoc apportionment set out in General Assembly resolution 45/247;

(g) That States which become Members of the United Nations following the date of the adoption of the present resolution and which do not have a claim to a share in the Fund shall contribute to the Fund in accordance with the scale of apportionment for peace-keeping operations in effect on the date of their first assessment for United Nations peace-keeping operations;

(h) That all outstanding contributions to the United Nations Transition Assistance Group and/or the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group at the date of the final liquidation of these accounts shall be transferred as receivable assets to the Fund:

- (i) (i) That the sum referred to in subparagraph (f) (i) above shall become credits available to Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full to the United Nations Transition Assistance Group and/or the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group upon the liquidation of the Fund;

- (ii) That the sum referred to in subparagraph (f) (ii) above shall reduce the credits available to Member States in the General Fund by the amounts transferred to the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund and shall become credits to Member States which have no unpaid assessed contributions to the regular budget for the biennium 1986-1987, upon the liquidation of the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund;

(j) To address the issue of the imputation of interest income earned in the Fund at the earliest opportunity during its forty-seventh session;

(k) That the Fund shall be administered in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, without prejudice to the funding of the activities of the regular budget;

(l) To request the Secretary-General to report on actions taken to implement the present resolution at the earliest opportunity during its forty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 47/217

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Financing of peace-keeping operations

At its resumed forty-sixth session, on 14 September 1992, the General Assembly, by decision 46/480, included in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh session an item on administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations.

Apportionment of costs

In September 1992, the Secretary-General reported on the composition of the existing groups of Member States for the apportionment of the costs of peace-keeping operations financed through assessed contributions. (7) The report was submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 46/240 of 22 May 1992 (see PART TWO, Chapter II), which, as well as defining the ad hoc arrangement for the financing of ONUSAL, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on anomalies in the allocation of countries to the four groups created to define the amount of payments assessed for peace-keeping operations. First specified in 1973(8) and again in March 1989,(9) the groups were subsequently adjusted by the Assembly in December 1989(10) and in 1991.(11)

The original four groups consisted of the States which were: (1) permanent members of the Security Council; (2) specifically named economically developed Member States not permanent members of the Council; (3) economically less developed Member States; and (4) economically less developed Member States that were specifically named. The methodology used to establish those groups was aimed at producing the following results: Member States in the fourth group would pay 10 per cent of their assessment rates established for the regular budget; those in the third group would pay 20 per cent; the second group would pay 100 per cent and the first group would pay 100 per cent plus the amounts not otherwise apportioned. Within each group, according to the terms of the 1973 resolution, the amount appropriated was to be distributed among the respective group members on the basis of the relative weight of each group member's regular rate of assessment in relation to the total rate for the group. Since 1989, the composition of the groups had changed due to a number of transfers among the groups by various countries and the increase in the number of Member States. The resulting composition of the groups, along with the current assessment rates, were reflected in an annex to the Secretary-General's report.

In addressing anomalies in the allocation of countries to the four groups, the Secretary-General said the Assembly might consider automatically allocating least developed countries (LDCs) to the fourth group. It might also consider allocating to that group LDCs only. Currently, 14 Member States were included which were not in that category. Another suggestion was to establish a fifth group for LDCs alone. More generally, the issue could perhaps be addressed by increasing the number of groups. The per capita income of countries was suggested as a criterion for determining and eliminating such anomalies.

By a letter of 14 September to the Secretary-General, transmitted to the Fifth Committee in October,(12) Czechoslovakia requested that it be moved from the second group, which it had occupied since 1973, to the third. It said its economic situation had undergone a number of negative changes. Currently, it was passing through the first stage of its economic reform, amidst a disintegrating market of the former Council for Mutual Economic Assistance. Its national income per capita had fallen to $1,794 in 1991, from $2,435 in 1990.

Reimbursement of troop-contributing States

In a December 1992 report, the Secretary-General reviewed the rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States,(13) pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request.(14) The standard rates, initially established in 1974,(15) had been revised several times, most recently in 1991.(16)

Under current rates, $988 was paid per person per month for salary and allowances of all ranks. Supplementary pay for specialists was $291 per person per month; specialists comprised 25 per cent of logistics contingents and 10 per cent of other contingents. A usage factor of $65 was given for personal clothing, gear and equipment for all ranks, and $5 was allowed for personal weaponry, including ammunition, for all ranks, per person per month. Those rates became applicable to UNDOF, UNIFIL and UNIKOM on 1 July 1991. They were also applied to the newly established peace-keeping operations since their inception, namely MINURSO, UNTAC, UNPROFOR, UNOSOM and the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia.

The initial introduction of standard rates of reimbursement established the amounts payable, on an equal basis, to Governments for their troops that served in peace-keeping forces. In formulating the rates, three points were considered: troops serving side-by-side should be reimbursed on the same basis for identical services; no Government should receive a higher reimbursement than its actual cost; and some Governments would not be fully reimbursed based on any standard cost-reimbursement formula, but should receive at least that which was paid as actual overseas allowance.

As the current standard rates of reimbursement did not fully compensate all Governments for their troop costs, the overflow was absorbed by the respective troop-contributing States themselves, through what was referred to as the absorption factor.

The current review utilized information based on military salary scales in effect as of December 1991. Information was requested by the Secretary-General from 57 Member States, of which 17 were providing troops to peace-keeping operations and 40 were providing military observers only. Of the 20 States that replied, 11 were providing troops in December 1991, with the standard rates of reimbursement being applicable to 9.

It was found that the average cost for pay and allowances in December 1991 ranged from $797 to $9,845 per person per month, with an overall average of $4,559 and a median of $4,217. The comparable overall average cost from a 1989 survey was $2,297 and the median cost, $2,356. The distribution in 1991 indicated a range of absorption factors, borne by the troop-contributing Governments in respect of pay and allowances, from a high of 89.2 per cent to a low of -33.1 per cent, with an overall average of 63.3 per cent and a median of 74.8 per cent.

The Secretary-General noted that although the overall average absorption factor had risen to 63.3 per cent in 1991, up from 49.3 per cent in 1988 (after eliminating the highest and lowest absorption factors), no clear-cut conclusion could be drawn since the composition and ranking of troop-contributing States for both years were not the same. Regarding the consideration that the reimbursement rates should at least cover the actual overseas allowance paid by States to their troops, it was pointed out that three of the nine States were not being fully reimbursed for such allowance. The overall average monthly overseas allowance (excluding salary) paid by troop-contributing States to their troops amounted to $865, while the average United Nations reimbursement for troop costs (including basic pay and supplementary allowance for a limited number of specialists) was $1,048.

Support account for peace-keeping operations

In a November 1992 report,(17) the Secretary-General discussed the support account for peace-keeping operations, established effective 1 January 1990. The operation of the account became effective on 1 May 1990 by incorporating the resources relating to the overload posts that were funded from the separate budgets of the five peace-keeping operations financed, at that time, outside the scope of the United Nations regular budget, namely, UNDOF, UNFICYP, UNIFIL, UNIIMOG and ONUCA. The account was intended to meet the needs at Headquarters for the support of ongoing peace-keeping operations, as well as some of the additional workload associated with the pre-implementation phase of prospective ones. It was envisaged that additional posts would be provided from the account to meet the increased workload created by new peace-keeping operations.

Income credited to the account from its inception until 31 December 1992 totalled $25,125,392, as at 30 September 1992, while expenditures were estimated at $22,664,739 (including projected expenditure of $2,778,900 for the period from 1 October to 31 December 1992), leaving an unencumbered balance of $2,460,653.

Resources from the account were provided to the Departments of Peace-keeping Operations and Administration and Management, the Executive Office of the Secretary-General and the Office of Legal Affairs, in order to cope with the increased number of good offices, peace-making and peace-keeping activities. However, as all requests for new posts and temporary assistance required ACABQ approval, they were often granted some time after their submission. Consequently, the staff shortage was most critical during periods of intensive activity; i.e., when new peace-keeping operations were being established. Therefore, the Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly allow him, through the Controller, to authorize the use of temporary assistance when there was a demonstrated need, and to report on it to ACABQ within two months of authorization.

The Secretary-General also recommended that common service costs connected with posts financed from the account, which were currently charged to the regular budget, be charged to the support account as of January 1994. In addition, he suggested maintaining the current funding arrangements for the support account through the provision in each of the budgets of the peace-keeping operations of an amount equal to 8.5 per cent of the cost of the civilian component of the missions.

ACABQ, in December, (18) reported that it had had difficulty in assessing the appropriateness of the current funding arrangements in the absence of detailed information on the criteria for establishing posts or providing temporary assistance, and noted a need for more transparency in the use of posts and temporary assistance financed from the account. It expressed the view that the application of an across-the-board percentage did not reflect the varied requirements of different peace-keeping operations and that the current rate of 8.5 per cent of the civilian component of each operation in the mission area was high.

With regard to the common service costs attributable to the posts financed from the support account, which would have resulted in an additional amount of $1,138,400, currently absorbed by the regular budget, being charged to the account, ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General that those costs be charged to the support account. It recommended, however, that this be effective 1 January 1993, rather than 1 January 1994.

The Advisory Committee also questioned the use of resources from the support account for the increased number of good offices of the Secretary-General, peacemaking and other related activities which, it said, appeared to relate to core functions under international peace and security. The account should not be seen as a reserve fund to finance new posts as requested; rather, it was a mechanism for distributing the costs of overload posts among peace-keeping operations. In view of those observations, it was time to consider alternative arrangements for the support of peace-keeping operations. The Secretary-General was requested to submit proposals to the Advisory Committee at its spring 1993 session, indicating how such arrangements could operate.

Financing of UNFICYP

In a December report to the Security Council (19) on the financing of UNFICYP, the Secretary-General reiterated the Secretariat's prediction that unless financing was assured by assessed contributions, it would prove impossible to maintain the Force. Since agreement did not exist in the Council for a decision on a change in UNFICYP financing, he was pursuing consultations on restructuring the Force, which were welcomed by the Council in resolution 796(1992). (For details, see PART TWO, Chapter III; for financing of other peace-keeping operations, see respective chapters.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/218 without vote.

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the existing groups of Member States for the apportionment of the costs of peace-keeping operations financed through assessed contributions,

Also having considered the note by the Secretary-General transmitting a communication from Czechoslovakia to the Fifth Committee,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of peace-keeping operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, entitled "General principles to serve as guidelines for the sharing of the costs of future peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures",

Recalling its resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, in which the composition of groups for the assessment of contributions to the United Nations Emergency Force is set out, and its subsequent resolutions relating to the composition of groups, the latest of which is resolution 47/41 of 1 December 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia.

Also recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by peace-keeping operations, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the facts that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations, Reaffirming that the financing of peace-keeping operations is the collective responsibility of all Member States, in accordance with Article 17; paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations.

I

Recalling paragraph 6 of its resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force,

1. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of the appropriations referred to in General Assembly resolutions 46/233 of 19 March 1992, 46/222 B and 46/240 of 22 May 1992, 46/195 B of 31 July 1992 and 47/41 of 1 December 1992, that:

(a) San Marino shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and that its contributions to the financing of peace-keeping operations shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions to be adopted by the Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

(b) Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232, that their contributions to the financing of peace-keeping operations shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions to be adopted by the Assembly regarding the scale of assessments, and that the assessment rate of the Russian Federation shall be based on its relevant regular budget assessment rates;

2. Takes note of the fact that Czechoslovakia will cease to exist as at 31 December 1992;

II

Recognizing that the composition of groups for the apportionment of peace-keeping expenses presently applied constitutes an ad hoc arrangement,

Noting that the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the existing groups of Member States for the apportionment of the costs of peace-keeping operations financed through assessed contributions has not addressed all the aspects in the allocation of countries to the four groups as set out in the relevant General Assembly resolutions for the financing of peace-keeping operations

Requests the Chairman of the Fifth Committee to call together an open-ended working group of the Fifth Committee during the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly to examine the placement of Member States in the groups for the apportionment of peace-keeping expenses, with the objective of establishing standard criteria, in order to ensure that that placement is applied in a consistent manner which could be used to allocate Member States to the groups for all future peace-keeping operations, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

III

Recalling its resolutions 44/192 A to C of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peace-keeping operations and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Also having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peace-keeping operations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peace-keeping operations, and concurs with the observations and recommendations contained in the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, and requests the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

3. Encourages those Member States which have not yet responded to the questionnaire sent out by the Secretary-General requesting information on military salary scales in effect as at December 1991 to do so as rapidly as possible;

4. Notes with concern that, in consequence of the shortfall of financial contributions, troop-contributing States are not being reimbursed to the full extent of the established rates for some operations;

5. Reaffirms its request that the Secretary-General, to the extent possible, make payment of arrears due to current and former troop-contributing States;

6. Invites the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer, to continue the strengthening and reform of the Secretariat units dealing with peace-keeping operations, so that they can deal effectively and efficiently with the planning, launching, ongoing management and termination of those operations;

7. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time, and encourages those States which can do so to make voluntary contributions acceptable to the Secretary-General;

8. Notes that the reports requested of the Secretary-General on the reserve stock of commonly used equipment and supply items and the use of civilians in peace-keeping operations, in paragraph 13 of General Assembly resolution 45/258, have not been submitted, and requests that these reports be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

9. Also notes that the report requested of the Secretary-General in paragraph 14 of General Assembly resolution 45/258 on a review of the present practices and approaches regarding the calculation of expenditures incurred by the United Nations in the conduct of peace-keeping operations, including the financial arrangements of the Organization with Governments in respect of such calculations, has not yet been submitted, and requests that this report be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations";

IV

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Operation in Cyprus and the decision of the Security Council as contained in its resolution 796(1992) of 14 December 1992,

Noting the appeal of the Secretary-General to all Member States to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account for the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, Invites all States Members of the United Nations to respond positively to the appeal of the Secretary-General for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus.

General Assembly resolution 47/218

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/832) without vote, 21 December (meeting 52); draft by Canada (A/C.5/47/L.19) based on informal consultations, orally revised; agenda item 124.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 4-10, 34, 42, 45, 50, 52; plenary 94.

Financing of UNTAG

On 14 September, the General Assembly, by decision 46/479, included the financing of UNTAG, established under a 1978 Security Council resolution to ensure the independence of Namibia,(20) in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh session.

According to an October 1992 report of the Secretary-General on the status of UNTAG's finances,(21) total cumulative income of UNTAG as at 30 September amounted to $415,898,456. Portions of UNTAG property retained by the United Nations, with a residual value of $14,505,309, were utilized in other peace-keeping operations, for which $12,719,989 had been credited as miscellaneous income to the UNTAG Special Account as at 30 September. The estimated operating costs of UNTAG were reduced to $366,388,371 as at the same date. The unutilized balance in the Account amounted to $44,544,408.

The Secretary-General recommended that from that balance, $2,006,977—representing the unencumbered balance of appropriations ($1,952,629) and additional voluntary contributions in cash ($54,348)—be credited to Member States, and that the $42,537,431 remaining in the Special Account—consisting of interest ($33,832,418) and additional miscellaneous income ($11,023,949), with outstanding contributions amounting to $2,318,936—be retained until a decision was taken by the Assembly on the proposed peace-keeping reserve fund.

The Secretary-General further recommended that the shortfall of $3,351,395 for funding the repatriation of some 45,000 Namibians by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) be charged to the Special Account.

ACABQ in December(22) endorsed those recommendations, with the exception of reimbursement to UNHCR for the repatriation of Namibians, as representatives of the Secretary-General had informed the Committee that the UNHCR deficit had been covered by voluntary contributions from two Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/207 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group, the report of the Board of Auditors on the audit of the Special Account for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Transition Assistance Group for a period of up to twelve months, as well as Council resolutions 629(1989) of 16 January 1989 and 632(1989) of 16 February 1989,

Recalling its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 on the financing of the Group and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 45/265 of 17 May 1991,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Group, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of the Group,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions in cash and in kind have been made to the Group,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in full;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the financing by two Member States through voluntary contributions of the shortfall of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the repatriation of Namibians, and decides that the corresponding amount in the Special Account for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group shall be transferred to the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund;

4. Decides that 2,006,977 United States dollars, representing the unencumbered balance of appropriations (1,952,629 dollars) and the additional voluntary contributions in cash (54,348 dollars), in the Special Account shall be credited to Member States;

5. Decides also to transfer any additional amount remaining in the Special Account after liquidation of obligations owed to Member States to the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund.

General Assembly resolution 47/207

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/822) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Kenya (A/C.5/47/L.14); agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 46, 50; plenary 93.

Efficiency review

In July,(23) the Secretary-General presented to the Fifth Committee a report on the financial implications of the restructuring of the Secretariat of the Organization, pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution(24) and resolution 46/232 of 2 March 1992. The Committee considered the report under the agenda item on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, in conjunction with the programme budget for the 1992-1993 biennium (see below).

Revised estimates for 27 sections of the programme budget for the biennium were submitted to the General Assembly as the result of the restructuring effort begun in February 1992 by the Secretary-General. The restructuring involved changes in the organizational structure at Headquarters, the abolition of a number of high-level posts and the redistribution of Professional and General Service posts (for further details, see PART SIX, Chapter II). The programme of activities adopted by the Assembly for the 1992-1993 budget were not directly affected by this restructuring.

The restructured and consolidated entities involved 25 of the 41 sections of the programme budget and represented $1,148,633,900, or 48.1 per cent, of the regular budget for 1992-1993. The revised estimates related only to the offices and departments affected by the first phase of restructuring.

Annexed to the report were tables showing the composition of new budget sections; revised estimates and revised staffing tables by section; and a breakdown of the redeployments of posts.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to approve transfers between budget sections of the 1992-1993 programme budget, and estimated the net reduction from those transfers and from the savings generated by the abolition of high-level posts at $4,307,500.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), in the report on its 1992 session,(25) recommended that the Assembly endorse the proposed reduction in the number of high-level posts. It expressed regret at the lack of information on the programmatic aspects of the revised estimates and recommended that such information be provided to the Assembly.

In August,(26) the Secretary-General reported on the prototype of a new budget format, in accordance with a 1991 resolution,(27) by which the Assembly had endorsed recommendations of CPC calling for a restructured format to provide more information on the programmatic content of the budget, greater transparency to Member States, optimum use of resources and more flexibility. To that end, a seminar was held (Mohonk, United States, 22-28 April) to review the methodology used in preparing the programme budget. It was attended by 26 participants, all current and past members of CPC and ACABQ. The Secretary-General's report reflected the outcome of the seminar and made a number of proposals for the new format, as well as a prototype of a section of the proposed programme budget.

Commenting in October on the Secretary-General's revised estimates resulting from restructuring,(28) ACABQ said its consideration of the report had been hampered in large part by the lack of information therein, especially regarding the Secretary-General's statement that programme activities were not directly affected, as well as lack of information about the analysis preceding the restructuring process. It was essential, the Advisory Committee said, that such reports contain the necessary clarification and justification to enable the Assembly to determine the impact of the restructuring exercise on the effective and efficient use of resources.

In December,(29) ACABQ commented on the prototype of the new budget format. It welcomed the changes, which it believed would greatly simplify the budget document; it intended to comment on them in greater detail when examining the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/212 A without vote.

Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986, 42/211 of 21 December 1987, 43/213 of 21 December 1988, 44/200 A to C of 21 December 1989 and 45/254 A to D of 21 December 1990 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/232 of 2 March 1992 on the revitalization of the Secretariat,

Recalling its resolutions 46/185 A to C of 20 December 1991 on questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 and 46/186 A to C of 20 December 1991 on the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993,

Having considered the documents submitted under the items on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and on the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993,

Also having considered the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its thirty-second session and the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

1. Reaffirms that the search for efficiency initiated through resolution 41/213 is a continuing process;

2. Notes that workload standards and other management techniques which are of crucial importance to the determination of the resources required for the fulfilment of mandates in the various domains of activity of the Organization remain unutilized;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to develop such standards and to use them to the extent possible for his preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995, as well as for the submission of statements of programme budget implications, revised estimates and other documents related to the use of resources of the Organization;

4. Emphasizes that the presentation of extrabudgetary resources in the programme budget, in relation to posts, priorities and other aspects of the functioning of the Organization, needs to be further improved, and, in particular, that it is necessary to present in the programme budget data on the actual amount of extrabudgetary resources received and utilized during the previous period, as well as to improve the quality of the forecasts for such resources;

II

1. Stresses that the restructuring of the Secretariat should be in conformity with the objectives and guidelines/principles set out in its resolution 46/232 and in close consultation with Member States and relevant intergovernmental bodies;

2. Reaffirms the role of the General Assembly with regard to the structure of the Secretariat, including the creation, suppression and redeployment of posts financed from the regular budget of the Organization, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the Assembly with comprehensive information on all decisions involving established and temporary high-level posts, including equivalent positions financed from the regular budget and extrabudgetary resources;

3. Takes note of the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination;

4. Concurs with relevant comments and observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Regrets that the report of the Secretary-General on revised estimates does not include information on the programmatic aspects and implications of the restructuring as requested in resolution 46/232;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee for Programme and Coordination and other concerned intergovernmental bodies with all relevant information which will enable them to identify and analyse the programmatic aspects and consequences of the restructuring of the Secretariat in the areas of their competence and invites them to submit their comments and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

7. Takes note of the current revised estimates arising from the initial phase of the restructuring of the Secretariat, including the proposals for transfers of resources among sections, on the understanding that, pending the work of the relevant intergovernmental bodies, the Secretary-General will submit to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, early in 1993 revised estimates of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit in these revised estimates all the revisions in the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 associated with the restructuring process as well as the programmatic aspects and justifications of the restructuring of the Secretariat requested in resolution 46/232;

9. Decides, with regard to the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination contained in paragraph 261 of its report, to consider early in 1993 the proposed reduction of high-level posts contained in the current revised estimates, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, in the context of the revised estimates referred to in paragraph 8 above, his proposals for the number and distribution of high-level posts in the Secretariat for the remaining part of the 1992-1993 biennium;

III

1. Endorses the proposed new budget format and the related conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and invites the Secretary-General to continue improving the presentation of the programme budget, notably in terms of facilitating a comparison of appropriations and actual level of expenditure by object;

2. Regrets that the note by the Secretary-General on procedures and norms for changes in the staffing table does not contain proposals for improving the current methods and processes;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to improve the presentation and justification of the changes in the staffing table of the Organization that he may propose in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on all issues related to the creation, suppression, reclassification and redeployment of posts;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit an analytical report on all aspects of the restructuring of the Secretariat, including its effects on programme delivery, to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, in the context of the implementation of resolutions 41/213, 44/211, 43/213, 44/200 A to C, 46/232 and the present resolution.

UN budget

Budget for 1992-1993

Appropriations

In December, the General Assembly adopted revisions to the 1992-1993 programme budget approved in 1991,(1) increasing it by $78,804,300 to a total of $2,468,039,200. In approving the increase, the Assembly followed the recommendations of the Fifth Committee on revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General, as well as on programme budget implications adopted by the Assembly under items considered by other Main Committees or in respect of items dealt with in plenary meetings.

The largest increases were for the following activities: $27.9 million under staff assessment; political affairs, $13.9 million; common support services, $13.1 million; human rights and humanitarian affairs, $8.7 million; international cooperation for development, $7.7 million; capital expenditures, $3.3 million; public information and special expenses, $2.6 million each; and international justice and law, $2.1 million. Reductions of $2.5 million were made in the budget section covering regional cooperation for development, and $0.6 million under overall policy-making, direction and coordination.

In his first performance report on the programme budget for 1992-1993,(2) submitted to the Fifth Committee in December, the Secretary-General said that an increase in net requirements of $38,691,800, or 2 per cent, was needed over the originally approved amount of $1,940,021,600. The increase reflected the actual experience in 1992 regarding salary costs, inflation and rates of exchange; projections for 1993 in terms of inflation and on the basis of the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) (see PART SIX, Chapter II) to the Assembly at its 1992 session; additional provisions in connection with the implementation of decisions of policy-making organs which could not be deferred to the 1994-1995 biennium; and the net effect of transfers between sections due to the restructuring of the Secretariat.

With regard to the impact of the first phase of the restructuring of the Organization, the report was written under the assumption that the Assembly would approve the transfers between sections proposed by the Secretary-General in his revised estimates (3) (see above), but would postpone action on the question of high-level posts addressed therein. Those transfers were proposed in connection with the establishment of five new budget sections corresponding to five newly created or expanded departments. The proposed redeployment of resources to those new sections represented 75 per cent of the biennial appropriations released under 14 of the initial budget sections following their discontinuation as of 30 June 1992. That operation required a comparatively small increase of $134,500, reflecting transfers of posts between duty stations.

The report detailed the impact of decisions of policy-making organs; other changes, including unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; changes in the operational rates of exchange and rates of inflation; and adjustments to standard costs.

In a 19 December note,(4) the Secretariat informed the Fifth Committee that an additional amount of $121,300 was required as a result of the recasting of requests for additional resources contained in statements of programme budget implications and revised estimates presented to the Committee at its current session. The recasting took place to bring the amounts approved by the Committee into line with the operational rates of exchange, inflation assumptions and other adjustments reflected in the first performance report adopted by the Fifth Committee after taking account of the related recommendations of ACABQ.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/220 A without vote.

Revised budget appropriations for the biennium 1992-1993

The General Assembly

Resolves that, for the biennium 1992-1993, the amount of 2,389,234,900 United States dollars appropriated by its resolution 46/186 A of 20 December 1991 shall be increased by 78,804,300 dollars as follows:

Financing 1993 appropriations

The General Assembly specified in December 1992 that for 1993, total budget appropriations were $1,273,421,750; i.e., one half of the total funds approved for the 1992-1993 biennium, plus an additional $78,804,300 approved under resolution 47/220 A for the revised 1992-1993 appropriations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 23 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/220 C.

Financing of appropriations for the year 1993

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the year 1993:

1. Budget appropriations in a total amount of 1,273,421,750 United States dollars, consisting of 1,194,617,450 dollars, being half of the appropriations initially approved for the biennium 1992-1993 by General Assembly resolution 46/186 A of 20 December 1991, plus 78,804,300 dollars, being the increase in the appropriations approved during the forty-seventh session by resolution A above, shall be financed in accordance with regulations 5.1 and 5.2 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, as follows:

(a) 40,176,315 dollars, consisting of:

(i) An amount of 28,368,850 dollars, which is the net of 34,643,650 dollars, being half of the estimated income approved for the biennium 1992-1993 by its resolution 46/186 B of 20 December 1991 other than staff assessment income, offset by an amount of 6,274,800 dollars, being the decrease in estimated income other than staff assessment income approved by resolution B above;

(ii) 11,807,465 dollars, being the balance of the surplus account as at 31 December 1991;

(b) 1,233,245,435 dollars, being the assessment on Member States in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992 on the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

2. There shall be set off against the assessment on Member States in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund in the total amount of 218,040,900 dollars, consisting of:

(a) 189,963,000 dollars, being half of the estimated staff assessment income approved by resolution 46/186 B;

(b) Plus 28,077,900 dollars, being the estimated increase in income from staff assessment approved by the Assembly in its resolution B above.

General Assembly resolution 47/220 C

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/835) without vote, 22 December (meeting 53); draft contained in report of Committee (A/C.5/47/L.20); agenda item 104.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 14-17, 19, 20, 23, 28, 29, 31, 32, 35, 37-40, 42-45, 47, 49-53; plenary 94.

1992-1993 income sources

In December, the General Assembly approved an increase of $21,803,100 in estimated income for 1992-1993, raising the total to $471,016,400. The increase resulted from an additional $28,077,900 in staff assessment, partly offset by a reduction of $3,149,600 in general income (reimbursement for services provided to specialized agencies, income from rental of premises, contributions from non-member States, and television and related services) and a $3,125,200 reduction in income from services to the public.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/220 B.

Revised income estimates for the biennium 1992-1993

The General Assembly

Resolves that, for the biennium 1992-1993, the estimates of income of 449,213,300 United States dollars approved by its resolution 46/186 B of 20 December 1991 shall be increased by 21,803,100 dollars as follows:

Questions related to the 1992-1993 programme budget

The General Assembly in December adopted an omnibus resolution (47/219 A) on a number of questions related to the 1992-1993 programme budget. (Several of those questions are discussed in PART SIX, Chapters II and III.)

Report of ACABQ

During 1992, ACABQ met in three special sessions (New York, 10-14 February; 9-13 March; 6-17 July) and in regular session (New York, 7 April-22 May; The Hague, Netherlands, 26 and 27 May; Copenhagen, Denmark, 28 and 29 May; Geneva, 1-12 June).(5)

The Advisory Committee met with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and submitted to the UNDP Governing Council at its May 1992 session a report dealing with revised budget estimates for 1992-1993; a report on the Commonwealth of Independent States and the Baltic States; and trust funds established by the Administrator in 1991.

In May, ACABQ met with the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to submit a report dealing with the proposed format of future global funds programme budgets; criteria for core versus project posts; budget format for country programme recommendations; revisions to the budget format for the administrative and programme support budget; structure and format of income projections and of the financial medium-term plan; review of the UNICEF job classification system; recovery of costs for prorated project posts and incremental field overheads on supplementary-funded programmes and report on headquarters office accommodation.

At a meeting with representatives of the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the Advisory Committee concurred with a request to transfer credits among programmes.

ACABQ also met with the Acting Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) to consider the 1992 budget proposals for the Institute. It noted that an advance of some $2 million from the United Nations had been included in those proposals. Upon being informed that the United Nations had been paying costs which UNITAR could not meet from voluntary contributions, the Advisory Committee expressed its concern to the Secretary-General about the legislative basis for such financing. It requested the Secretary-General to have UNITAR submit a revised budget and to submit on a priority basis a report on the Institute's future role in United Nations training programmes.

ACABQ considered the administrative and programme support costs of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme for the first time for the 1992-1993 biennium. It also considered a proposal from UNHCR that it avail itself of office space offered by Switzerland.

During its sessions in New York, the Advisory Committee examined a number of reports related to peace-keeping matters. At its April/May session, it dealt with questions related to the regular budget and to other issues, including administrative and budgetary coordination and a coordinated interagency procurement system.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section I, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note with appreciation of ACABQ's first report.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

By a 12 October note,(6) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Fifth Committee a recommendation by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) for a subvention of $220,000 from the United Nations regular budget.

In 1991,(7) the General Assembly had approved a subvention of $440,000 to cover the Institute's 1992-1993 budget, of which $220,000 had been earmarked for each year of the biennium. The request was made in accordance with an ACABQ recommendation that, notwithstanding the inclusion of that amount in the 1992-1993 programme budget, a formal request for a subvention for 1993 would have to be made to the General Assembly.

Included in the recommendation was a status report on the financial situation of the Institute, pursuant to a 1989 Assembly request.(8) At the start of 1992, $357,100 was available. Income for the year was estimated at $857,300, including $573,500 from voluntary contributions and the $220,000 subvention from the United Nations regular budget, while estimated expenditures amounted to $1,091,900, including $38,900 for programme support costs.

The Fifth Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee approve the recommendation for a $220,000 subvention on the understanding that the level of support costs charged to UNIDIR would be kept under review. No additional appropriations would be required under the 1992-1993 programme budget.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section III, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's note and decided to keep under review the level of support costs charged to UNIDIR.

Revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council decisions

Additional requirements resulting from resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 1992 session totalled $2,158,900 for 1992-1993 and $5,132,800 for 1994-1995. The requirements covered both substantive ($3,183,700) and conference-servicing ($4,108,000) costs. Accordingly, revised estimates were submitted to the Fifth Committee by the Secretary-General in an October 1992 report.(9) Additional requirements for activities not provided for in the 1992-1993 programme budget were estimated at $292,500. ACABQ in November(10) stated that it had no objection to those additional requirements.

In December,(11) the Secretary-General sought approval of a further $71,300 for expenditures in connection with the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Pursuant to a Fifth Committee recommendation, the General Assembly, on 23 December 1992, adopted resolution 47/219 A, section IV, without vote.

Revised estimates resulting from resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1992

[The General Assembly ...]

1. Approves the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his report of an additional amount of 292,500 United States dollars under sections 21, 23, 24 and 26 to 28 of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

2. Also approves the additional revised estimates of 71,300 dollars under section 21 submitted by the Secretary-General in the addendum to his report, on the understanding that the Secretary-General will consider possible redeployment in the context of his revised estimates to be submitted to the General Assembly early next year;

ESCAP

In an October report,(12) the Secretary-General requested additional net appropriations of $95,000 for the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) under the regular 1992-1993 budget to cover the costs of consultant services and travel. ACABQ in November(13) saw no need for authorizing an additional $95,000, considering that the restructuring of ESCAP was in process and it was difficult to project any overexpenditure at the present time, and taking into account both the low implementation level under consultancy and the extrabudgetary resources of $37.2 million available to the Commission for 1992-1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 23 December 1992, adopted without vote resolution 47/219 A, section VIII, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Revised estimates under section 24 (Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific)

[The General Assembly ...]

1. Takes note of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his report to appropriate an additional amount of 95,000 dollars under this section and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Recommends that such additional appropriations as may be necessary should be indicated by the Secretary-General in his final performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 under this section;

Crime prevention and criminal justice

According to a November report of the Secretary-General,(14) the activities proposed under the newly established United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme(15) represented a significant expansion of international cooperation in that area, which would call for additional resources. Should the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, which was part of the Division for Social Development of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, become a separate Division, it would remain part of the Centre and would be headed by a Director at the D-2 level.

Additional requirements were projected for staff resources, consultant services, travel and computer equipment, as well as in conjunction with preparations for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (1995). All additional costs were to be absorbed from within overall appropriations.

In November,(13) ACABQ agreed to the overall proposals of the Secretary-General. It trusted, however, that any proposed redeployment of posts for 1993 would be submitted to it for approval, in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, on the Fifth Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/219 A, section IX, without vote.

Revised estimates under section 21D (Crime prevention and criminal justice)

[The General Assembly...]

1. Takes note of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his report and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General to finance the additional requirements for the expansion of the crime prevention and criminal justice programme from within the overall appropriations of sections 21, 23 to 26 and 33 of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

ESCWA

In a November report,(16) the Secretary-General projected savings of approximately $5.6 million at the end of the 1992-1993 biennium due to temporary relocation of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia headquarters from Baghdad, Iraq, to Amman, Jordan, in August 1991.

However, in view of projected additional commitments in relation, inter alia, to late charges for costs incurred at Baghdad, and bearing in mind a possible relocation at the end of the biennium, he proposed that the approved appropriation of $50,381,500 be maintained.

ACABQ, also in November,(11) voiced no objections to the Secretary-General's proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 23 December 1992, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/219 A, section X.

Revised estimates under section 27 (Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia)

[The General Assembly...]

1. Takes note of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his report and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General to reflect the projected savings of 5.6 million dollars for the biennium 1992-1993 in the first performance report on the programme budget for the biennium and to maintain the appropriation approved by the General Assembly under this section (50,381,500 dollars) at the present time, taking into account the projected additional commitments in relation to late charges for costs incurred at Baghdad and the possibility of a relocation of the headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia towards the end of the current biennium;

African Institute for Economic Development and MULPOCs

In a November 1992 report,(17) the Secretary-General dealt with the financial situation of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP) (Dakar, Senegal), established in 1962 by the Conference of Ministers of Economic Planning and Development of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA). Because of a persistent decline in contributions and the complete withdrawal of assistance by UNDP for funding Professional posts, IDEP had come to rely on grants from the United Nations regular budget. Despite IDEP's efforts to reorient its programmes and enlarge its resource base, its financial situation remained fragile, and United Nations assistance would most likely be required for the foreseeable future.

In the proposed programme budget for 1992-1993, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of five new Professional posts in order to strengthen the capacity of ECA's Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCs) in promoting subregional economic cooperation and integration in Africa. Since the outcome of the review of ECA in the context of the ongoing restructuring of offices away from Headquarters was not yet known, it was not possible to submit final proposals regarding additional resources and modifications of administrative and reporting arrangements. For those reasons, the Secretary-General proposed to report on the issue in 1993, in the context of the 1994-1995 proposed programme budget.

ACABQ, in a statement before the Fifth Committee, recalled its comments on the subject contained in its October report(18) on the audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors, where it had stated that it would be necessary to clarify further the role of the ECA secretariat and MULPOCs in programme formulation and implementation, and that every effort should be made to avoid duplication of activities and to clarify further the role of supervising the MULPOCs. The Advisory Committee requested that ECA undertake the necessary corrective measures to resolve those problems and to take into account the findings of the Board of Auditors of deficiencies in the MULPOCs, which it said were due in part to the lack of adequate supervision.

The General Assembly, in resolution 47/219 A, section XII, endorsed the Secretary-General's proposals and the observations of ACABQ.

Human rights

In December,(19) the Secretary-General submitted a request to the General Assembly for additional appropriations of $1,650,400 for the section of the 1992-1993 programme budget covering human rights. That amount consisted of $760,000 for the expanding work programme of the Centre for Human Rights, including special rapporteurs, and $890,400 for the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, appointed in August 1992.

In an oral report before the Fifth Committee in October, the Chairman of ACABQ said the Advisory Committee was not convinced that adequate justification had been made in terms of workload for the redeployment of 16 Professional posts to the Centre, with the exception of the 5 posts to assist the Special Rapporteur to investigate the situation in the former Yugoslavia. He recommended a comprehensive review of the transfer of posts, and further recommended that the Secretary-General's request for an additional $760,000 not be approved, and that it should be justified in the context of the budget performance report. ACABQ did, however, recommend the approval of $890,000 to support the work of the Special Rapporteur.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, pursuant to a Fifth Committee recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/219 A, section XVI, without vote.

Revised estimates under section 28 (Human rights)

[The General Assembly ...]

1. Takes note of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his report and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General, on the understanding that, with regard to his request for 760,000 dollars, he would implement, within the overall level of the revised appropriation for the biennium 1992-1993, the other activities of the Centre for Human Rights, for which he has requested additional resources and would report to the General Assembly in the final performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

Commission of experts on violations of international law in the former Yugoslavia

In December,(20) the Secretary-General requested that an additional amount of $681,900 be appropriated to cover the 1992-1993 programme budget costs for the newly established Commission of Experts on violations of international law committed in the former Yugoslavia, established by the Security Council in 1992 (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). The Secretary-General believed that those requirements should be treated outside the procedure related to the contingency fund.

On a full-cost basis, requirements for the Commission were estimated at $1,238,700 for 1992-1993, which were to be met as far as possible through existing resources. The Secretary-General pointed out that the estimate of $681,900 did not anticipate requirements that might arise from decisions the Commission might take at its meeting to be held from 14 to 18 December 1992 or at subsequent meetings on investigations in the former Yugoslavia, such as the examination of mass grave sites or other activities pursuant to requests made by other bodies such as the Commission on Human Rights.

In an oral report to the Fifth Committee in December, the Chairman of ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal. However, bearing in mind the small amount required in respect of data-processing services, rental and maintenance of office equipment, supplies and office automation equipment, he recommended that the Assembly decrease the additional appropriation by $35,200, to $646,700.

By resolution 47/219 A, section XVII, adopted on 23 December on the Fifth Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly took note of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General and the recommendations of ACABQ. It approved an additional appropriation of $646,700 on the understanding that the requirements would be treated outside the contingency fund.

Committee for Programme and Coordination

CPC/ACC joint meetings

Programme budget implications arising from the report of CPC on its 1992 session (see PART THREE, Chapter XVIII) were submitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in October⁽²¹⁾ and December.⁽²²⁾ The December statement projected requirements of an additional $135,000 under the 1992-1993 programme budget if the twenty-seventh series of Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) were to be held at Rome in 1993. Those funds were to be used to reimburse the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) for conference-servicing costs.

In an oral statement before the Fifth Committee in December, ACABQ recommended that the Secretariat make every effort to persuade FAO not to seek such reimbursement, since ACC would be meeting at Rome at the invitation of FAO. The Advisory Committee noted that there would be no reimbursement of travel costs for the joint meetings in 1993 since the respective appropriation had been used up in 1992. The Chairman of CPC informed the Fifth Committee that he had sent a letter on behalf of the Committee to the Secretary-General stating that CPC members would prefer the next joint meetings to be held in New York.

By resolution 47/219 A, section XX, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly took note of the information provided by the Secretary-General and the observations made by CPC and ACABQ. The Assembly recommended that the next series of joint meetings take place in New York.

Travel expenses

By decision 47/458 of 23 December 1992, the General Assembly decided that CPC should meet for its 1993 session for one week in May and for three weeks in August/September.

In a December statement,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General indicated additional requirements of $86,400 under the 1992-1993 budget to cover travel expenses of representatives to the second part of CPC's 1993 session.

In an oral statement before the Fifth Committee, ACABQ concurred with those estimates.

The General Assembly, by resolution 47/219 A, section XXV, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the statement of programme budget implications on the subject and approved an additional appropriation of $86,400 under section 1 (Overall policy-making, direction and coordination) of the programme budget for 1992-1993.

Contingency fund

The contingency fund was established under a 1986 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁴⁾ to accommodate additional expenditures for each biennium derived from mandates not provided for in the budget or from revised estimates. For 1992-1993, the fund level was set at $19 million, or 0.75 per cent of the overall programme budget,⁽²⁵⁾ revised in 1991 to $18 million.⁽²⁶⁾

The Fifth Committee, in 1992, approved revised estimates in the amount of $3,529,400, to be appropriated to 11 budget sections, which left the fund with a balance of $11,707,700. The Secretary-General, in a December consolidated statement of programme budget implications and revised estimates falling under the guidelines for the fund,⁽²⁷⁾ proposed that the Committee request the Assembly to take note of that balance. ACABQ, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee, recommended acceptance of the proposals in the Secretary-General's report. However, it noted that not included in the balance was an amount of $5.3 million, which represented cost estimates of some programme budget implications which the Committee had decided to refer to the resumed forty-seventh session of the Assembly in 1993 and which related mainly to institutional arrangements for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) and Department of Public Information offices.

By resolution 47/219 A, section XXVIII, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, noted that a balance of $11,753,700 dollars remained in the contingency fund.

1990-1991 programme budget

Final appropriations

In 1991, the General Assembly had approved final appropriations for 1990-1991 in a total net amount of $1,767,318,300.(28) In addition, the Assembly had provided that up to $13,867,100 net might be committed in respect of the regular budget for the biennium with the prior concurrence of ACABQ, a mechanism intended to enable the Advisory Committee to determine the actual level of commitments after review of any additional information justifying such a commitment.

In February 1992, the Secretary-General submitted a report on programme budget performance for 1990-1991 (29) covering overall policy-making, direction and coordination; political and Security Council affairs and peace-keeping activities; economic, social and humanitarian activities; international justice and law; public information; common support services; special expenses; staff assessment; capital expenditures; and income sections.

In the Secretary-General's December report on final appropriations for 1990-1991 on an ex post facto basis.(30) he indicated that he had sought the concurrence of the Advisory Committee to enter into commitments of $11,971,200 net over the amount approved by the Assembly, that raised final expenditures to $1,779,289,500 which included some $55.8 million in unliquidated obligations. It was anticipated that a reduction of $3 million in unliquidated obligations would leave a net amount of $8,971,200 to be appropriated and assessed to Member States in 1993. Within that amount there were several items, totalling $1.5 million, where it was already known that delivery of goods or services under the terms of the contracts would not be made before the end of the year. The Secretary-General therefore requested that, on an exceptional basis, the period stipulated in financial regulation 4.3, i.e., 31 December 1992, be extended to 31 December 1993 in respect of unliquidated obligations in the amount of $1.5 million.

ACABQ, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee in December, recommended that those unliquidated obligations be cancelled and reobligated to the 1992-1993 programme budget. The Advisory Committee did not believe that sufficient effort had been made to deal with the question of unliquidated obligations and, accordingly, also recommended that the balance of $7,471,000 not be approved for appropriation and assessment to Member States for 1990-1991, and that a final determination of the level of additional appropriations, on an ex post facto basis if necessary, be reviewed at the resumed forty-seventh session of the Assembly in 1993.

On 22 December 1992, by decision 47/453, the General Assembly accepted the recommendations of ACABQ with regard to unliquidated obligations and decided to revert to the question of final appropriations for 1990-1991 at its resumed forty-seventh session.

1994-1995 proposed programme budget

A proposed programme budget outline for the 1994-1995 biennium, with total appropriations estimated at $2,410 million, was submitted by the Secretary-General in August 1992,(31) in accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution.(24) The proposed outline related to a biennium which would reflect fully the effects of the restructuring of the Secretariat during 1992 (see above). It also reflected changes in the preparation of the programme budget proposed by the Secretary-General to the Assembly at its current session, as had been requested in 1991.(32) The calculation rested on a comparison at current rates between projected estimates for 1994-1995 and a resource base represented by the projected level of the current budget as at the end of the 1992 Assembly session.

The preliminary estimate of resources of $2,410 million given by the Secretary-General represented a growth rate of 0.2 percent over the anticipated revised appropriation for the 1992-1993 budget, estimated at $2,406 million, or $16.8 million above the initial appropriation. The 1994-1995 estimate was $20.8 million, or 0.9 per cent, higher than the initial appropriation for 1992-1993 approved by the Assembly in 1991.(1)

The actual resource growth for 1994-1995, projected at $4 million, was the net result of additional requirements estimated at $152.4 million; discontinuation of non-recurrent provisions, totalling $153 million, included in the anticipated revised appropriation for 1992-1993; and technical adjustments, i.e., a $4.6 million provision for the delayed impact of 1992-1993 growth. No significant changes in staffing levels were projected for 1994-1995, and no provision was made in the preliminary estimates for inflation or currency fluctuations.

With regard to priorities, increases in the share of resources were allocated to four areas: overall policy-making, direction and coordination; political affairs; international cooperation for development; and human rights and humanitarian affairs. More precise priorities among programmes and types of activity were to be presented in the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995.

The Secretary-General recommended that the level of the contingency fund be maintained at 0.75 per cent, the same percentage as for the two preceding bienniums. Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, CPC(33) recommended that the priorities of the outline be considered further by the Assembly in light of broad trends as derived from the mandates of the legislative organs, as well as the views expressed by Member States, as requested in two 1990 Assembly resolutions.(34)

In a December 1992 report,(35) ACABQ recommended a reduction of $23.6 million, lowering the preliminary estimates to $2,386.4 million, then adjusted them upward to $2,702.7 million, after recosting them at revised 1992-1993 and at 1994-1995 rates.

ACABQ's lower preliminary estimates resulted mainly from its recommendation that additional requirements of $28 million for preventive diplomacy and peace-making missions not be included in the 1994-1995 outline. The Advisory Committee believed that by their very nature, those activities were generally unpredictable and that the Assembly, in its 1991 resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses,(36) had adequately provided for any unexpected activity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/213.

Proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1994-1995

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, by which, inter-alia, it requested the Secretary-General to submit in off-budget years an outline of the programme budget for the following biennium,

Recalling also its resolution 43/214 of 21 December 1988 on the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1990-1991 and use and operation of the contingency fund and its resolution 45/255 of 21 December 1990 on the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1992-1993,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, and the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms that the proposed programme budget outline shall contain, in accordance with the provisions of annex I to resolution 41/213, an indication of (a) a preliminary estimate of resources to accommodate the proposed programme of activities during the biennium; (b) priorities reflecting general trends of a broad sectoral nature; (c) real growth, positive or negative, compared with the previous budget; and (d) the size of the contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources;

2. Reaffirms also that the outline should provide a greater level of predictability of resources required for the following biennium, promote a greater involvement of Member States in the budgetary process and thereby facilitate the broadest possible agreement on the programme budget;

3. Notes that the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1994-1995 takes into account the budgetary aspects of the restructuring of the Secretariat;

4. Approves the methodological changes reflected in the report of the Secretary-General and recognizes that further improvements in the preparation and presentation of the outline may be required;

5. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of paragraphs 6 to 11 below;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to prepare the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 on the basis of the total preliminary estimate provided by the Advisory Committee of 2,386,400,000 United States dollars at the initial 1992-1993 rates, to be adjusted at revised 1992-1993 rates;

7. Reaffirms the need for a comprehensive and satisfactory solution to the problem of controlling the effects of inflation and currency fluctuation on the budget of the United Nations;

8. Decides that the contingency fund of the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 shall be established at the level of 0.75 per cent of the preliminary estimate of resources for the biennium 1994-1995, to be recosted at 1994-1995 rates;

9. Recalls, in this regard, that a review of the level and use and operation of the contingency fund, as well as the procedures for the provision of statements of programme budget implications, shall be undertaken by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

10. Takes note of the proposals contained in paragraphs 10 to 12 of the report of the Secretary-General, paragraph 223 of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the views expressed by Member States on priorities, and requests the Secretary-General, when preparing the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995, to give particular attention to them and to the priorities contained in the introduction to the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolutions 45/253 and 45/255 of 21 December 1990;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 in accordance with the present resolution and all resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly pertinent to the new budgetary process.

Contributions

Scale of assessments

The Committee on Contributions, at its fifty-second session (New York, 15 June-2 July 1992),⁽¹⁾ made recommendations on the amount 18 new Member States were to be assessed for contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations.

Of those, Estonia,⁽²⁾ Latvia⁽³⁾ and Lithuania,⁽⁴⁾ which had joined the Organization in 1991, were recommended to be assessed 0.07, 0.13 and 0.15 per cent, respectively, for the 1992, 1993 and 1994 regular budgets. Twelve Member States admitted to the Organization in 1992 (see PART TWO, Chapter IV) received assessment recommendations for 1993 and 1994: Armenia (0.13 per cent), Azerbaijan (0.22 per cent), Bosnia and Herzegovina (0.04 per cent), Croatia (0.13 per cent), Kazakhstan (0.35 per cent), Kyrgyzstan (0.06 per cent), Republic of Moldova (0.15 per cent), San Marino (0.01 per cent), Slovenia (0.09 per cent) Tajikistan (0.05 per cent), Turkmenistan (0.06 per cent) and Uzbekistan (0.26 per cent). Of those 12, the eight that had been members of the former USSR and San Marino were recommended to pay nine twelfths of their suggested rates for 1992, while the three that had been republics of the former Yugoslavia were recommended to pay seven twelfths for 1992.

In considering the rates for the 15 successor States to the former USSR, the Committee adopted a uniform approach. It dealt with them on the basis of 10.90 per cent, representing the combined rates of Belarus, Ukraine and the former USSR, adopted by the Assembly in 1991⁽⁵⁾ and national income and population statistics. Included in the consideration was Georgia, owing to its 6 May 1992 application for United Nations membership⁽⁶⁾ and its relationship with the former USSR. Georgia was subsequently granted United Nations membership by General Assembly resolution 46/241 of 31 July. Its rate of assessment was recommended to be set at 0.21 per cent for 1993 and 1994. For 1992, its proportional rate was to equal the number of calendar months of full membership multiplied by one twelfth of 0.21 per cent, and its actual assessments were to be deducted from those of the Russian Federation for that year.

The rates for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Slovenia were based on similar calculations that took into account the 0.42 per cent rate adopted by the Assembly for the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. For Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, recommendations for assessment in 1993-1994 were 0.48, 6.71, and 1.87 per cent, respectively. For 1992, the Committee said Belarus and Ukraine should be assessed at the rates adopted for them by the Assembly in 1991,⁽⁵⁾ i.e., 0.31 and 1.18 per cent, respectively.

In making its recommendations for each of the above Member States, the Committee considered national income and population data available from the Statistical Division of the United Nations. In addition, it contacted separately eight States of the former USSR as well as the three new Member States that had been part of the former Yugoslavia to request relevant national income and population statistics. Responses of varying completeness were received from three Member States.

Scale methodology

The Committee on Contributions, at its 1992 session, prepared illustrative scales of assessment as requested by the Assembly in 1991.⁽⁷⁾ In doing so, it analysed the following elements: use of uniform exchange rates; debt-adjusted income; the low per capita income allowance formula; and a method for phasing out the scheme of limits. The Committee also examined possible improvements of the methodology for future scales, including adjustments to national and per capita income; the application of price-adjusted exchange rates (PARE) used for countries that demonstrated extremely large discrepancies between exchange rate movements over time and changes in domestic prices; and alternative methodologies. Exploration of alternative approaches had been requested by the Assembly, also in 1991.⁽⁸⁾ They included: division of the budget into parts, one according to capacity to pay and the other(s) according to other criteria; incorporation of an element of weighted voting; division of the membership into groups for determining contributions; equal-share apportionment; and relating costs to benefits derived by Member States from the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, adopted decision 47/456 by recorded vote.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decides to adopt the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions with respect to the rates of assessment of Member States contained in paragraphs 51 to 64 of the report of the Committee on Contributions; paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 is amended accordingly.

General Assembly decision 47/456

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 104-16-34 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/833) by recorded vote (62-15-19), 21 December (meeting 52); draft by Barbados (A/C.5/47/L.29); agenda item 111. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 17-20, 23-27, 36-38, 44, 45, 52; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Canada, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Iceland, Latvia, Lithuania, New Zealand, Norway, Republic of Moldova, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine.

Abstaining: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Dominica, Fiji, France, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Israel, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Liechtenstein, Madagascar, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Trinidad and Tobago.

The Legal Counsel, speaking before the Fifth Committee, said the treatment of Belarus and Ukraine as new Member States for the purposes of assessment was neither consistent with the 1991 Assembly resolution on the scale of assessments,⁽³⁾ nor with rule 160 of the Assembly's rules of procedure.

Budget contributions in 1992

Of the $1,476,855,541 in contributions payable to the United Nations regular budget as at 1 January 1992, $976,247,876 had been collected from Member States by 31 December, leaving $500,607,665 outstanding.⁽⁹⁾ Of the total, $1,037,471,596 was due for 1992 alone, while $439,383,945 was outstanding from previous years. In addition, non-member States owed $3,835,466 for their share of United Nations activities in which they participated. Of that amount—which comprised $3,453,448 for 1992 and $382,018 from past years—$377,066 was outstanding as at 31 December 1992.

On 4 February,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General informed the President of the General Assembly that 20 Member States—Benin, Cambodia, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Guatemala, Haiti, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Nicaragua, the Niger, Panama, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone and South Africa—were over two years in arrears in the payment of their budget contributions. By four more letters, dated 13 April,⁽¹¹⁾ 18 June,⁽¹²⁾ and 24⁽¹³⁾ and 25 August,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the necessary payments had been made by Benin, El Salvador, Guatemala, Mauritania, Nicaragua and Panama. By a letter of 15 September,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that at that time, 12 Member States were in arrears—Cambodia, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Haiti, Liberia, the Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone and South Africa. In subsequent letters, of 18,⁽¹⁶⁾ 22⁽¹⁷⁾ and 24 September,⁽¹⁸⁾ 2 October⁽¹⁹⁾ and 16⁽²⁰⁾ and 30 November,⁽²¹⁾ he said the necessary payments had been made by the Central African Republic, Chad, the Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Haiti, Liberia, the Niger, Sao Tome and Principe and Sierra Leone. As a result, those 16 Members had reduced their arrears below the amount required under Article 19 of the Charter, thus regaining voting privileges in the Assembly.

Accounts and auditing

In 1992, the General Assembly accepted the accounts and financial statements for the year or biennium ended 31 December 1991 for the United Nations and eight development and humanitarian programmes, along with conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the comments of ACABQ.

The findings and recommendations of the Board were transmitted by its Chairman to the Assembly on 30 June, three months after having received the accounts from the Secretary-General, who in August submitted a summary of the principal findings of the Board.⁽¹⁾

Financial reports and audited statements were submitted on the United Nations,(2) including the International Trade Centre (ITC)(3) and the United Nations University;(4) UNDP;(5) UNICEF;(6) the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;(7) UNITAR;(8) voluntary funds administered by UNHCR;(9) the United Nations Environment Programme;(10) UNFPA;(11) and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation.(12)

For the 1990-1991 biennium, the Board decided to carry out horizontal studies in three main areas, namely: expendable and non-expendable property; internal audit; and trust funds. Therefore, in addition to the regular coverage of specific areas, the three Board members examined simultaneously the three main areas in most of the organizations under the Board's responsibility; this helped identify commonality of issues throughout the system.

Three of the 10 reports received qualified audit opinions from the Board: the United Nations, UNDP and UNFPA. Also, the Board issued a qualified audit opinion on compliance with the financial regulations and legislative authority of the transactions of UNITAR.

Regarding the United Nations, the Board said the statement fairly portrayed its financial position, subject to the ultimate resolution of unpaid assessed contributions from Member States totalling over $1 billion as at 31 December 1991. The UNDP report received a qualified opinion, due in part to insufficient audit evidence regarding executing agencies at the time the accounts were finalized. Also, as at the end of April 1992, out of a total of 1,358 nationally executed projects, only 21 had sent in the necessary certified reports. The qualified opinion of UNFPA was based on the fact that the Board was not in a position to comment on the fairness of 14.6 per cent of total expenditure because of a lack of adequate audit evidence.

ACABQ submitted its comments on the financial reports and audited financial statements and on the Board of Auditors' reports in October.(13) The Advisory Committee exchanged views with members of the Audit Operations Committee on the format and content of audit reports. In that connection, the Advisory Committee was informed of the Board's intention to review the format of its report. ACABQ said the Board should continue to be fully responsible for deciding the format and content of its report and cautioned against giving the Board too many instructions in that regard.

On the related question of presentation, the Advisory Committee believed that the Board's suggestion to include the liquidity position of each agency and programme in future financial reports and accounts would streamline the audit reports.

Also in October, pursuant to a 1991 Assembly resolution,(14) the Secretary-General submitted a report on measures to facilitate reporting by staff members of inappropriate uses of the Organization's resources, internal controls relating to the payment of allowances and benefits and efforts to recover outstanding excess income tax reimbursements;(15) and another on the administrative system of ITC.(16)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/211.

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial reports and audited financial statements for the period ended 31 December 1991 of the United Nations, including the International Trade Centre and the United Nations University, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, the reports and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors, the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations for remedial action of the Board of Auditors, and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on measures to facilitate reporting by staff members of inappropriate uses of the resources of the Organization, internal controls relating to the payment of allowances and benefits, and efforts to recover outstanding excess income tax reimbursements and the report of the Secretary-General on the administrative system of the International Trade Centre, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 46/183 of 20 December 1991,

Noting the steps taken by executive heads and governing bodies of the United Nations organizations and programmes to give appropriate consideration and attention to the recommendations in earlier audit reports, as commented upon by the Board of Auditors in annexes to its current reports,

Stressing the importance of efficient resource management in all United Nations organizations and programmes,

Concerned about the cases of deficiencies in programme and financial management and inappropriate or fraudulent use of resources reported by the Board of Auditors, and other such alleged cases,

Recognizing that the Board of Auditors conducts its reviews in a comprehensive manner, as stipulated in regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors regarding the aforementioned organizations;

2. Also accepts the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations for remedial action of the Board of Auditors;

3. Notes with concern that the Board of Auditors issued qualified audit opinions on the financial statements of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund, and that it also issued a qualified audit opinion on compliance with the financial regulations and legislative authority of the transactions of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;

4. Approves all the recommendations and conclusions of the Board of Auditors and the comments thereon contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Board of Auditors in a separate document financial reports and financial statements for peace-keeping operations and then to submit the reports and statements together with the recommendations of the Board thereon, to the General Assembly, without precluding the presentation of consolidated financial statements of the United Nations;

6. Requests the Board of Auditors to expand its audit coverage of all peace-keeping operations without reducing the coverage of regular budget and extrabudgetary activities, and decides that any additional costs shall be charged to the peace-keeping budgets concerned;

7. Recalls the importance for the Board of Auditors to provide the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes with an adequate opportunity to comment on its findings, in accordance with the relevant financial regulations and rules, before the Board arrives at its final conclusions and recommendations;

8. Also recalls its resolution 46/183, and in that connection invites the Board of Auditors to continue to include in its report separate sections that contain a summary of recommendations for corrective action to be taken by the United Nations organizations and programmes concerned, with an indication of relative urgency;

9. Takes note with concern of the findings of the Board of Auditors, and requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes:

(a) To strengthen budgetary control in order to avoid over-expenditure of approved budgets or allotments;

(b) To make purchasing policy on the acquisition of goods and services more cost-effective and transparent, inter alia, by reducing the number of exceptions to competitive bidding and ensuring that the reasons for such exceptions are recorded in writing;

(c) To give priority attention to compliance with the recommendations of the Board of Auditors on the hiring, granting of remuneration and performance evaluation of experts, consultants and personnel engaged on a short-term basis;

(d) To install a more effective system of managing and controlling the granting of allowances and benefits to staff members;

(e) To tighten control over the inventory of non-expendable property in all locations, including peace-keeping operations; and to report on these matters to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

10. Reaffirms the importance of timetables for compliance with recommendations of the Board of Auditors approved by the General Assembly, and requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Advisory Committee at its spring session in 1993 and through the appropriate intergovernmental bodies, an action-oriented report outlining steps to be taken in response to the recommendations of the Board, including timetables for their implementation;

11. Notes with appreciation the action taken by the United Nations Development Programme to develop an internal mechanism to follow up on the recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes to ensure that all existing financial and staff regulations and rules are strictly complied with, including those relating to internal control over expenditure and those which assign staff members personal responsibility and accountability in their performance, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on measures taken to strengthen internal controls in those areas where weaknesses have been identified;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to make proposals to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on:

(a) Establishing legal and effective mechanisms to recover misappropriated funds, as recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 53 of its report;

(b) Seeking criminal prosecution of those who have committed fraud against the Organization;

14. Encourages the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes to take urgent steps to strengthen the independence and effectiveness of the internal audit function, to strengthen measures to ensure an adequate response to internal audit findings and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

15. Requests the Board of Auditors to evaluate the extent of compliance with their recommendations, to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session through the Advisory Committee, which shall recommend such measures as it deems appropriate to ensure implementation of those recommendations, and to draw attention to any of those recommendations that have not yet been implemented;

16. Welcomes the identification by the Board of Auditors of areas of horizontal study across the organizations audited, and endorses the intention of the Board to continue this practice in future audits;

17. Invites the Board of Auditors, in the context of regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, to report at its discretion on the efficient and effective utilization of trust funds under the control of the Secretary-General;

18. Also invites the Board of Auditors, in its concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations, to report in a consolidated fashion on major deficiencies in programme and financial management and cases of inappropriate or fraudulent use of resources together with the measures taken by United Nations organizations in this regard;

19. Endorses the efforts of the Panel of External Auditors to ensure that common auditing standards for the United Nations system are consistent with those of recognized international auditing bodies;

20. Urges the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes to accelerate their efforts to develop common accounting standards for the organizations of the United Nations system and to take these standards into account in the preparation of their financial statements for the period ending 31 December 1993;

21. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes to ensure that future presentations of liquidity position should be made in the context of common accounting standards;

22. Notes with concern that the opinion of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements of the United Nations is subject to the ultimate resolution of unpaid assessed contributions from Member States;

23. Calls the attention of the Secretary-General to the implications that the findings of the Board of Auditors about the management of the Organization may have for the image of the United Nations.

General Assembly resolution 47/211

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/827) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Rapporteur (A/C.5/47/L.23), based on informal consultations; agenda item 102.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 5, 6, 8, 10-13, 22, 50; plenary 94.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted decision 47/454 without vote.

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

At its 94th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Requested the Secretary-General to review the operation and effectiveness of each of the specialized administrative and budgetary support units of the Secretariat, including the Management Advisory Service, the Central Evaluation Unit, the Central Monitoring Unit and the Internal Audit Division, with a view to strengthening their efficiency, and to submit a report thereon with recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(b) Decided, without prejudice to its existing relevant resolutions, to consider the roles and coverage of the subsidiary bodies responsible for coordination, administrative questions and budgetary matters, including the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the Board of Auditors, the Joint Inspection Unit and the Committee for Programme and Coordination, with a view to improving the effectiveness of their oversight and coordination mechanisms, and requested the Secretary-General to provide relevant background material together with his views and those of the bodies concerned to the General Assembly as soon as possible, but not later than at its forty-ninth session.

General Assembly decision 47/454

Adopted without vote

United Nations programmes

Programme planning

Medium-term plan 1992-1997

The medium-term plan for 1992-1997, adopted by the General Assembly in 1990(1) and revised in 1991,(2) was the principal policy directive of the United Nations and served as the framework for the formulation of the biennial programme budgets. It covered the entire range of United Nations activities, both global and regional, describing them in major programmes or chapters covering a broad sectoral area, which themselves were broken down into programmes and sub-programmes. The activities were designed to be carried out by various organizations within the United Nations system-the Secretariat, the regional commissions and United Nations agencies. In August 1992,(3) the Secretary-General proposed revisions to the plan and submitted them to CPC at its 1992 session as well as to ACABQ. The Assembly adopted the proposed revisions to 40 programmes, as amended by the Second Committee,(4) CPC and the Committee on Conferences, with additional conclusions annexed to its resolution 47/214 on programme planning (see below).

CPC reviewed 37 of the proposed revisions to the plan.(5) It noted that to a considerable extent, the revisions incorporated the outcome of UNCED (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII), of the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see PART THREE, Chapter IV) and of the first phase of the restructuring of the Organization. It recommended approval of the revisions, on the understanding that further modifications would be made to relevant programmes to take into account decisions made by the Assembly, inter alia on the follow-up of the above-mentioned activities. The Committee also commented separately on the individual revisions proposed to each programme of the plan. With regard to the format of the plan, CPC considered that every effort should be made to maintain the prominent place of the plan as a policy directive. It recommended that a prototype of a possible new format of the plan be presented to it in 1993.

The Committee on Conferences made suggestions and endorsed the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan regarding common support services and conference and library services.(6)

Commenting on the proposed revisions before the Fifth Committee in December, ACABQ noted that the reasons for the proposed revisions were not clearly stated, but it had been informed that it was mainly due to the need to take into account the effect of the restructuring of the Secretariat. The Advisory Committee reiterated its 1990 comments(7) on various aspects of the medium-term plan, its role, quality, content and preparation, including recommendations on such issues as the presentation of substantive and support programmes, the role of intergovernmental bodies in examining the proposed programmes and revisions thereto, and the effect of evaluation on the quality of the plan, which were endorsed by the Assembly that same year.(1)

ACABQ shared the view of many delegations that the time had come for a thorough assessment of the plan and the planning process in the United Nations. It welcomed CPC's proposal that an ad hoc technical seminar of experts be convened on programme planning, to assist in drafting the prototype of a possible new format of the medium-term plan.

By a November 1992 note,(4) the Fifth Committee Chairman presented the views of the General Assembly and its Main Committees on the relevant portions of the proposed medium-term plan.

1990-1991 programme performance

In April 1992,(8) the Secretary-General submitted a report on programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1990-1991, which measured performance by comparing the number of final outputs programmed with the number of those implemented. Of the 7,011 programmed outputs, 6,237 were to be implemented under the 1990-1991 programme budget, and an additional 774 were carried over from previous bienniums. Of those, 5,417—or 77 per cent—were actually implemented during 1990-1991. By category of output, the rate of implementation was as follows: servicing of meetings, 83 per cent; reports, 82 per cent; public information, 77 per cent; publications, 70 per cent; and others—comprising activities which did not fall in the standard categories of outputs mentioned, such as organization of hearings, investigations, studies and consultations, ad hoc meetings, briefings of official visitors and other forms of assistance, responses to government inquiries, including legal opinions, conduct of legal proceedings, etc.—88 per cent.

The overall rate of implementation by the 25 major programmes of the medium-term plan for 1984-1989, extended to 1991, ranged from 65 and 68 per cent in the major programmes of transnational corporations and international trade and development finance, respectively, to 85 per cent and over in major programmes on political and Security Council affairs activities, disaster relief, public information, human settlements, marine affairs and protection and assistance to refugees. As in previous bienniums, the overall implementation rate was considerably affected by the actual delivery of publications, given their weight in the total number of programmed outputs. Similarly, the servicing of meetings and preparation of reports to intergovernmental bodies, the implementation of which was left to the discretion of the Secretariat, weighed heavily in the performance of some major programmes.

Of the total programmed outputs, 10 per cent (703 outputs) were postponed and 13 per cent (891 outputs) were terminated. The postponed outputs were mainly publications (77 per cent). More than half of the terminated outputs were concentrated in UNCTAD, ITC, UNCTAD/the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the regional commissions. The termination of outputs reflected to a large extent the response to political changes and other unforeseen developments.

In addition to the 5,417 outputs implemented, 477 were added to the 1990-1991 programme budget during the biennium, either by intergovernmental bodies or at the initiative of the Secretariat.

While the number of programmed outputs for 1990-1991 was substantially lower than that programmed in 1988-1989, the overall implementation level was higher (77 compared to 74 per cent), mainly on account of a lower percentage of terminations (13 against 15 per cent).

With regard to resource utilization, a total of 60,300 work-months, in terms of Professional staff and consultant services, were reported available to programme managers for the production of 7,011 outputs; of those total work-months, an estimated 17,200 Professional work months, or 28 per cent, were funded from extrabudgetary resources.

Programme performance by each section of the programme budget for 1990-1991 was contained in an addendum to the Secretary-General's report.(9)

Considering the 1990-1991 programme performance report, CPC(5) noted that it did not yet reflect the improvements proposed by the Secretary-General in 1991.(10) It stressed that future reports should balance the current quantitative approach with an analysis that would provide more useful information on implementation of the various activities in the programme budget and on departures from programmed commitments. It agreed that while the counting of outputs implemented against those programmed continued to have a role to play, such statistics were of limited value in providing an overall assessment of programme budget implementation. The Committee noted that global rates of implementation could be misleading when all outputs were treated equally; it expressed the view that only through a differentiation between the diverse activities would the comparison of implementation rates become meaningful. Noting the low implementation rate for publications (70 per cent), it reiterated the need to review the Organization's publication policies.

The Committee stressed the need for a closer link between programme performance and budget performance reports. In that connection, it recalled its recommendations concerning the establishment of a system of accountability, endorsed by the Assembly in 1991.(2)

Programme evaluation

An assessment of the activities exercised in programme evaluation and proposals for strengthening the role of evaluation were contained in an April 1992 report of the Secretary-General.(11) The report covered evaluation activities for 1984-1991, including resources for evaluation.

The report found that the percentage of sub-programmes evaluated was low for most of the organizational entities and that self-evaluation was not yet widely accepted as a useful management tool. Only a small number of organizational entities submitted reports on self-evaluation to their governing bodies, and there were significant differences in the degree of interest shown in in-depth evaluation by intergovernmental and expert bodies.

According to the report, coordination of evaluation with auditing and other disciplines was necessary in order to enhance effectiveness and avoid omissions, and there was a need for balance between internal management-oriented and traditional external evaluations.

The report offered recommendations with regard to self-evaluation, in-depth evaluations, including a timetable for them, resources for evaluation, coordination of activities aiming at improving organizational performance and action requiring the attention of specialized governing bodies.

CPC(5) recommended that the General Assembly, when examining those recommendations, take into account the following: proposals for strengthening evaluation capacity, as suggested in the report, would be reviewed on a case-by-case basis, taking into account CPC's report on the work of its 1990 session(12) and the Secretary-General's restructuring plan for the Secretariat (see above); arrangements for requesting comments from relevant specialized governing bodies on evaluation reports, as well as CPC's conclusions and recommendations, would be adopted on a case-by-case basis.

In general, the Committee concluded that the methodology for self-evaluation and training in programme evaluation needed to be improved and that some central standard-setting was required. Findings from self-evaluation should be reported by programme managers to their respective governing bodies, and reports on the results of self-evaluations should be placed on the agendas of the specialized governing bodies. The mode of transmission to special intergovernmental bodies of in-depth evaluation reports, together with the relevant recommendations of CPC, should be improved.

Accountability of programme managers

In connection with the consideration of the programme budget, CPC, at its 1992 session,(5) recognized the need for direct responsibility of programme managers in the implementation of mandated programmes. It emphasized that responsibility and accountability were essential for progress in implementation of the programme budget, and recalled its 1991 recommendations on the establishment of a system of accountability,(13), which were endorsed by the General Assembly.(2) Such a system, the Committee said in 1991, would provide for a closer linkage between programme performance and budget performance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/214 without vote.

Programme planning

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 37/234 of December 1982, 41/213 of 19 December 1986, 42/211 of 21 December 1987, 43/219 of 21 December 1988, 44/194 of 21 December 1989, 45/253 of 21 December 1990 and 46/189 of 20 December 1991,

Having examined the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,

Having considered the note by the Chairman of the Fifth Committee reporting on the review of the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 by the other Main Committees of the General Assembly,

Having also considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its thirty-second session, the report of the Committee on Conferences and the oral report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having further considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1990-1991 and on the assessment of evaluation activities and proposals for strengthening the role of evaluation;

I

Medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997

1. Adopts the Secretary-General's proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, as amended by the recommendations of the Second Committee, the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Committee on Conferences, and the additional conclusions contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Takes note of the views of the other Main Committees of the General Assembly and the observations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Reaffirms that the medium-term plan is the principal policy directive of the United Nations and shall serve as the framework for the formulation of the biennial programme budgets;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the contribution of the sectoral, regional and central intergovernmental bodies, in particular the Main Committees of the General Assembly, in reviewing and improving the quality of the plan and its revisions;

5. Regrets that there are still considerable practical problems which limit the availability of such contributions;

6. Calls upon intergovernmental bodies to take appropriate measures to ensure their active participation in the review of the medium-term plan and its revisions;

7. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination that a prototype of a possible new format of the medium-term plan should be presented to the Committee at its thirty-third session;

8. Endorses also the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination that an ad hoc technical seminar of experts should be convened in the field of programme planning of the United Nations, without additional cost to the Organization, to assist the Secretariat in the drafting of the prototype of the new format of the medium-term plan;

9. Decides that the prototype, as recommended by the Committee for Programme and Coordination, should take into account the relevant conclusions of the seminar on the prototype of a new budget document and address, in particular, issues concerning the manageability of the drafting and revision process, including the questions of preparation and submission of documentation and the review of programme planning documents by subsidiary intergovernmental machinery;

10. Expresses its concern at the negative impact of late issuance of documentation on the in-depth review of the revisions to the medium-term plan and endorses the related recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination as contained in its report on the work of its thirty-second session;

11. Recommends that, within the framework of the review of the format and structure of the medium-term plan, the seminar give particular attention to ensuring the timeliness of the provision of documentation;

II

Programme performance report

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1990-1991;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the report of the Secretary-General on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1990-1991;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect the improvements proposed in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session in his report on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1992-1993;

III

Programme evaluation in the United Nations

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the assessment of evaluation activities and proposals for strengthening the role of evaluation;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-second session on this question and urges the Secretary-General to improve the methodology for self-evaluation;

IV

Coordination

1. Emphasizes the need for enhanced coordination in the United Nations system and welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to assign a high priority to coordination and to work with the executive heads of the organizations of the system to develop new approaches for collaboration with the purpose of improving the effectiveness and efficiency of coordination;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-second session on the annual overview report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination for 1991;

3. Endorses also the recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-second session on the report of the Secretary-General on the System-wide Plan of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development and invites the Secretary-General:

(a) To launch, at the earliest possible time, the System-wide Plan of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development and the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

(b) To call upon all the relevant executive heads of the United Nations agencies and bodies to accord high priority to the implementation of the Plan and to use it as a guideline for their activities related to African development;

4. Takes note of the preparation of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 and the amendments proposed to the plan by the Committee for Programme and Coordination;

5. Takes note also of the decision of the Committee for Programme and Coordination to propose to the Administrative Committee on Coordination that at the twenty-seventh series of their joint meetings, the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Administrative Committee on Coordination should discuss the results of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and their implications for the United Nations system;

V

Other matters

1. Recalls its resolutions 46/185 B and 46/189 of 20 December 1991, by which it endorsed the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-first session to establish a system of responsibility and accountability of programme managers of the United Nations;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination in its report and invites the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the establishment of such a system.

General Assembly resolution 47/214

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/828) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.18) based on informal consultations; agenda item 105.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 13-17, 19, 20, 24, 28-31, 36, 50; plenary 94.

Joint Inspection Unit

In its report presented to the General Assembly's 1992 session, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) gave an overview of its activities between 1 July 1991 and 30 June 1992.(14) The work programme of the Unit for 1992 was transmitted to the General Assembly by a March note of the Secretary-General.(15) The work programme covered a series of studies on management, programme and policy issues, as well as development cooperation.

In June,(16) the Secretary-General reported on measures taken by participating organizations to enhance consideration of JIU reports by the respective governing bodies, in accordance with a 1990 General Assembly request.(17). The United Nations Secretariat and all United Nations subsidiary bodies and programmes that had their own governing bodies had designated focal points for their relations with JIU. The mechanism for ensuring a thorough consideration of JIU reports by the governing bodies of the participating organizations consisted of the following components: the governing bodies annually considered an agenda item on JIU or, in case of some specialized agencies, a similar sub-item within an agenda item on relations with the United Nations and other international organizations; in most cases, prior to submission to a governing body, JIU reports were reviewed by relevant subordinate committees; JIU reports were presented to a governing body in conjunction with the comments of an executive head and ACC; and a responsible Inspector introduced the report and was present during its consideration.

In August,(18) the Secretary-General submitted a report on implementation of recommendations contained in two JIU reports—a 1989 report on a review of the use of equipment provided to technical cooperation projects in developing countries(19) and a report submitted in 1990 evaluating the programme on joint studies on Latin American economic integration.(20)

In its report,(14) JIU summarized its recent reports on the growing overlap between the remuneration of staff at the lower Professional levels and a broad range of General Service staff (see PART SIX, Chapter II); an assessment of the technical cooperation programme of the International Civil Aviation Organization and the annual deficits of its Administrative and Operational Services Cost Fund; advantages and disadvantages of the post classification system; United Nations system cooperation with multilateral financial institutions; the second report on the cost benefits of office accommodation for the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) at Port-of-Spain, Trinidad and Tobago (see PART TWO, Chapter VI); a revised roundtable process used to assist the LDCs in raising additional funds for technical cooperation; and a note on the contingency margin of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization budget.

JIU also made observations concerning its recommendations and the short- and long-term impact of its work. During the period covered by the report, the Unit continued to maintain contact with the various management and financial entities having similar responsibilities, in particular, ACABQ, ICSC; CPC; the Inter-Agency Meeting on Language Arrangements, Documentation and Publications; and the management, evaluation and audit services of secretariats.

JIU's relations with ACABQ were advanced through joint discussions (Geneva, 8 and 11 June), convened in accordance with a 1991 Assembly decision(21) by which the Advisory Committee was requested to examine the functioning of the Unit and to submit in 1992 recommendations for enhancing its productivity and performance.

Accordingly, ACABQ in December submitted its observations and recommendations on JIU.(22) After discussions with the Inspectors and participating agencies, the Advisory Committee concluded that the problem of enhancing JIU's productivity could be addressed without modifying the basic principles underlying the Unit's existence and functioning. Noting that closer adherence to JIU's statute would result in better functioning, ACABQ grouped its recommendations along the basic areas covered by the articles of the statute, namely: selection and appointment of Inspectors; functions and responsibilities of Inspectors; mode of operation; conditions of service; and administrative, budgetary and financial arrangements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 22 December 1992, adopted without vote resolution 47/201, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Joint Inspection Unit

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 46/446 of 20 December 1991 and its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 45/237 of 21 December 1990,

Having considered the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit on its activities during the periods 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991 and 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992, the work programmes of the Unit for the same periods and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Unit,

Having considered also the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the Joint Inspection Unit, submitted in accordance with decision 46/446,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit for the periods 1990-1991 and 1991-1992, its work programmes for the same periods and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Unit;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the Joint Inspection Unit;

3. Invites the Joint Inspection Unit, in drawing up its work programme for 1993 and its preliminary work programme for 1994-1995, to make proposals to reflect the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and to submit the work programme to the General Assembly as soon as possible;

4. Decides, in accordance with its resolution 46/220 of 20 December 1991, to resume consideration of the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit and that of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions at its forty-eighth session.

General Assembly resolution 47/201

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/818) without objection, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Ghana (A/C.5/47/L.10); agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 37, 42, 43, 50; plenary 93.

On 23 December, by decision 47/460, the Assembly took note of a 1990 report of JIU on extra-budgetary resources of the United Nations.²³

Administrative and budgetary coordination

In November(1) and December 1992,(2) ACC submitted the first two in a series of statistical reports on the budgetary and financial situation of organizations of the United Nations system, as requested by ACABQ.

On 30 September,(3) the Secretary-General submitted a report on accounting standards for common application in the United Nations system, for which the General Assembly had requested the hiring of a consultant in 1991.(4) He stated that ACC's Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary) Working Party on Accounting Standards, open to accounting specialists from all United Nations organizations, at its first (4-6 December 1991) and second (25-27 May 1992) meetings, had drafted and developed further a large number of core provisions for inclusion in the common standards. The Consultative Committee, at its September 1992 session, requested the Panel of External Auditors to examine the draft at its 1992 session in November so that its comments could be taken into consideration at the Working Party's third meeting, scheduled for 1 to 3 December.

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 47/449, took note of the two statistical reports and the Secretary-General's report. It requested the Secretary-General, as Chairman of ACC, to continue submitting the Committee's statistical reports on a biennial basis. It also requested him and the executive heads of United Nations programmes and organizations to complete the draft of common accounting standards, with the Secretary-General reporting on the matter in 1993.

By decision 47/455 of 23 December 1992, the General Assembly approved the biennial work programme of the Fifth Committee for 1993-1994.

Chapter II

United Nations officials

In 1992, the Secretary-General began restructuring the Secretariat, with the creation of new departments, redeployment of posts and a redistribution of resources among various sections of the programme budget for the remaining part of the biennium 1992-1993.

Efforts continued to improve staff distribution with regard to nationality and the status of women in the Secretariat. The General Assembly, by resolution 47/93, urged the Secretary-General to overcome obstacles to improving the status of women in the Secretariat, to accord greater priority to the recruitment and promotion of women, and to increase the number of women from developing countries.

The International Civil Service Commission made several recommendations to the Assembly, including changes in the methodology for conducting salary surveys of the General Service and related categories. The Assembly acted on those recommendations in resolution 47/216.

The number of fatalities among United Nations personnel, including those engaged in peace-keeping operations, was on the rise, a fact which the Assembly strongly deplored. It requested continued efforts to ensure respect for the privileges and immunities of United Nations officials (47/28).

Restructuring of the Secretariat

The Secretary-General, in a February 1992 note,⁽¹⁾ announced a number of changes related to the restructuring of the United Nations Secretariat, with effect from 1 March.⁽²⁾ He stated that the changes in the departments and top echelon of the Secretariat were intended to consolidate and streamline the Organization's activities into well-defined functional categories.

The main aspects of the restructuring included the establishment of a Department of Political Affairs headed by two Under-Secretaries-General (USGs) with clearly defined geographical responsibilities and functions. The new Department would incorporate the activities of the former Office for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services; Office for Research and the Collection of Information; Department of Political and Security Council Affairs; Department for Special Political Questions, Regional Cooperation, Decolonization and Trusteeship; and the Department of Disarmament Affairs.

Also established was a Department of Peace-Keeping Operations, incorporating the former Office of Special Political Affairs. The Department would be headed by a USG and reinforced by an Assistant Secretary-General (ASG).

Various units were incorporated in the Department of Economic and Social Development, headed by a USG. Those units were the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation; Department of International Economic and Social Affairs; Department of Technical Cooperation for Development; Centre for Science and Technology for Development; and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations.

The Department of Humanitarian Affairs was established under a USG. It would draw on the resources of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator and would consolidate existing offices dealing with complex emergencies. The secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction would become an integral part of the Department. The USG would work closely with United Nations organizations and entities, as well as with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the International Organization for Migration and relevant non-governmental organizations. At the country level, the USG would maintain close contact with, and provide leadership to, United Nations resident coordinators on matters relating to humanitarian assistance. He would also assume responsibility for all emergency relief activities currently being undertaken by the Secretariat.

The Department of Administration and Management would include the former Department of Conference Services. The Office of Legal Affairs would incorporate the Office of Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea.

The Secretary-General stated that those changes represented the first phase of restructuring. The regrouping and consolidation of departments entailed a reduction in the number of high-level posts in the Secretariat.

In a December note,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General announced the establishment of three new departments, headed by USGs, as part of the next phase of restructuring. They were: the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, which would provide support for central coordinating and policy-making functions vested in the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies, including the new Commission on Sustainable Development; the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis, which would focus on the compilation and dissemination of economic and social statistics, the analysis of long-term trends, the elaboration of projections, and the assessment of economic and social policies; and the Department for Development Support and Management Services, which would serve as a focal point for providing management services for technical cooperation and act as an executing agency in selected cross-sectoral areas.

He also announced his intention to eliminate four ASG posts in the Department of Administration and Management and to propose the redeployment of a number of high-level posts from administrative to substantive areas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 March, at its resumed forty-sixth session, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/232.

Revitalization of the United Nations Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

Mindful of the vital role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security and in the promotion of international cooperation and development,

Recalling its resolutions on the reform and revitalization of the United Nations,

1. Approves the launching by the Secretary-General of a further process of restructuring and streamlining of the Secretariat, in the exercise of his responsibilities as Chief Administrative Officer of the United Nations, in the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Takes note of positive actions undertaken by the Secretary-General as set out in his document of 21 February 1992 as a first phase of that process;

3. Decides that the restructuring of the Secretariat is a vital part of the reform and revitalization of the United Nations and should be aimed at:

- (a) Enhancing the capacity of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security and in the area of economic and social development, which is of vital concern to the membership as a whole and in particular to the developing countries;

- (b) Ensuring effective implementation of the objectives of the Charter and of the mandates entrusted by the policy-making organs, taking into account the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 adopted by the General Assembly;

- (c) Ensuring transparency in recruitment procedures and practices, including those for senior posts;

- (d) Ensuring that the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity are the paramount considerations in the recruitment and performance of international civil servants;

- (e) Ensuring a more effective application of the principle that the recruitment of staff should be on as wide a geographical basis as possible and that, as a general rule, no national of a Member State should succeed a national of that State in a senior post and there should be no monopoly on senior posts by nationals of any State or group of States;

- (f) Improving the representation and the status of women in the Secretariat, in particular its higher echelons;

- (g) Ensuring the exclusively international character of the staff as set out in the relevant Articles of the Charter and the Staff Rules and Regulations of the United Nations;

- (h) Rationalizing the structure of the Secretariat by dividing its major activities along functional lines in a way that would group them into a limited number of consolidated departments to enable more efficient supervision and control by the Secretary-General and to avoid duplication and enhance the coordination and streamlining of the activities in each sector;

4. Calls upon Member States to provide the conditions for the effective functioning of the Organization, in particular through the fulfilment of their financial obligations as set out in the Charter;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at the earliest opportunity a report on the programmatic impact as well as the financial implications of organizational changes involved in his initiatives and the progress attained in accordance with the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 46/232

2 March 1992 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/46/L.67); agenda item 105.

In resolution 47/212 of 23 December, the Assembly stressed that the restructuring of the Secretariat should be in conformity with the objectives and guidelines set out in its March resolution and in close consultation with Member States and relevant intergovernmental bodies. It reaffirmed its role with regard to the Secretariat's structure, including the creation, suppression and redeployment of posts financed from the United Nations regular budget, and requested the Secretary-General to provide the Assembly with comprehensive information on all decisions involving established and temporary high-level posts. It decided to consider in 1993 the proposed reduction of high-level posts contained in revised estimates of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, and requested the Secretary-General to submit his proposals for the number and distribution of high-level posts in the Secretariat for the remaining part of the biennium 1992-1993.

International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) held two sessions in 1992, its thirty-fifth from 10 to 27 March in New York and its thirty-sixth from 13 July to 7 August in London. The Commission examined issues that derived from General Assembly decisions and resolutions as well as from its own statute. A summary of its deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its eighteenth annual report,⁽¹⁾ on which the General Assembly acted in resolution 47/216. The total financial implications of the Commission's 1992 decisions and recommendations relevant to the United Nations common system were approximately $10 million for 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/216.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the eighteenth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission and other related reports,

Reaffirming its commitment to a single unified United Nations common system of conditions of service,

I

A. Role and functioning of the International Civil Service Commission

Reaffirming that, under article 9 of its statute, the International Civil Service Commission, in the exercise of its functions, shall be guided by the principle set out in the agreements between the United Nations and the other organizations, which aims at the development of a single unified international civil service through the application of common personnel standards, methods and arrangements,

Recalling its request to the Commission to assess the impact on the United Nations common system of resolution No. 1024 of the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union with respect to the payment of the special post allowance, Recalling also its request to the Commission to propose measures to be undertaken by all organizations of the common system to enforce and enhance respect for, and adherence to, the common system of salaries, allowances and conditions of service,

Noting with regret that a further payment of the special post allowance was made to the staff of the International Telecommunication Union in spite of the views expressed by the General Assembly in section II of its resolution 46/191 of 20 December 1991 against such action,

1. Reaffirms the central role of the General Assembly with regard to the elaboration of the conditions of service for the United Nations common system as a whole and that of the International Civil Service Commission as the independent technical body responsible to the Assembly for the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the common system;

2. Notes with satisfaction the efforts made by the Commission to enhance its contacts with the governing bodies, executive heads and staff of organizations of the common system in order to strengthen the cohesiveness and unity of the system and, in this context, to emphasize its advantages;

3. Endorses the views of the Commission concerning the impact on the common system of resolution No. 1024 of the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union with respect to the payment of the special post allowance;

4. Urges the governing bodies and the executive heads of all organizations to ensure that the Commission is invited in its own right to be represented at meetings where proposals pertaining to salaries, allowances, benefits and other conditions of employment are to be discussed;

5. Notes that the Commission will study in 1993 the issues of accelerated language increments and working hours;

B. Staff participation in the work of the Commission

Reaffirming that article 28, paragraph 2, of the statute of the International Civil Service Commission, elaborated in its rules of procedure, provides staff representatives with the right, collectively or separately, to present facts and views on any matter within the competence of the Commission and that staff representatives may attend meetings and may address the Commission on matters on its agenda,

Recalling section II, paragraph 2, of its resolution 45/241 of 21 December 1990, by which it expressed satisfaction with the establishment of a more active dialogue between the Commission and representatives of the organizations and staff, and section I, paragraph 5, of resolution 46/191 A, by which it took note with appreciation of the improvements that have taken place in the functioning of the Commission,

Regrets the suspension of the participation of the staff bodies in the work of the International Civil Service Commission and urges the resumption of the dialogue between the Commission and the staff bodies, which is of fundamental importance for the achievement of the goals of the common system;

C. Biennialization of the programme of work of the Fifth Committee

Welcoming the adaptations that the International Civil Service Commission is making to its work programme in the light of the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee,

Taking note of the conclusions reached in respect of the current work schedule of the Commission as contained in paragraph 29 of its report,

Concurs with the arrangements proposed for dealing exceptionally with the base/floor salary scale on an annual basis and other urgent salary matters on a timely basis as set forth in paragraph 28 of the report of the International Civil Service Commission;

II

Conditions of service of the Professional and higher categories

A. Margin considerations

Recalling its decision that the Noblemaire principle should continue to serve as the basis for the determination of conditions of service of the United Nations common system for staff in the Professional and higher categories,

Recalling also that it had endorsed the methodological approach, as outlined in paragraph 173 (d) of volume II of the fifteenth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission, for the calculation of the net remuneration margin,

Recalling further section IV, paragraph 1, of resolution 46/191 A, by which it decided, without prejudice to previous decisions on the averaging of the margin around the mid-point over a five-year period, that any post adjustment increase in New York which might become due until 1994 might be implemented to the extent that it was compatible with the upper limit of the margin and that, in this regard, it endorsed the procedure proposed for the management of the post adjustment system within the current margin range as contained in paragraph 109 (b) of volume I of the seventeenth annual report of the Commission,

1. Takes note of the conclusions of the International Civil Service Commission as contained in chapter IV, Section A, of its eighteenth annual report regarding the evolution of the margin and its management over the five-year period 1990-1994;

2. Takes note also of the study by the Commission of the methodology for determining the cost-of-living differential between New York and Washington, D.C., in the context of net remuneration margin calculations;

3. Requests the Commission to take into account the views expressed by Member States on the completion of the above mentioned study and to submit a report on the application of the methodology to the General Assembly;

B. Base/floor salary scale

Recalling section I.H, paragraph 1, of its resolution 44/198 of 21 December 1989, by which it approved the establishment of a floor net salary scale by reference to the corresponding base net salary levels of officials in comparable positions serving at the base city of the comparator civil service,

Approves, with effect from 1 March 1993, the revised scale of gross and net salaries for staff in the Professional and higher categories contained in annex I to the present resolution and the consequential amendment to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations as reflected in annex II to the present resolution, and takes note of the views expressed by Member States in this regard, and its linkage with the mobility and hardship matrix referred to in section V of the present resolution;

C. Comparator

Recalling section VI, paragraph 1, of its resolution 46/191 A, by which it endorsed the conclusions of the International Civil Service Commission in respect of a methodology for conducting checks to determine the highest-paid civil service, as contained in annex V to volume I of its seventeenth annual report,

Recalling also that, by section VI, paragraph 2, of its resolution 46/191 A, it invited the Commission to analyse the potential consequences of the Federal Employees Pay Comparability Act of 1990 on the pay levels of the current comparator, the United States federal civil service, providing in the analysis full details of all the special pay systems which have been introduced by the comparator civil service, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session,

Noting that the comparisons with other major international organizations outside the United Nations common system carried out by the Commission in response to a request from the Administrative Committee on Coordination had indicated that the remuneration levels at those organizations were higher than those of the common system,

Reiterates its request to the International Civil Service Commission to complete phase I of its study leading to the identification of the highest-paying civil service, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, and in this context invites the Commission also to study all aspects of the application of the Noblemaire principle with a view to ensuring the competitiveness of the United Nations common system;

D. Rental subsidy scheme

Recalling its request to the International Civil Service Commission to examine experience gained with the functioning of the current rental subsidy scheme at headquarters duty stations as contained in section III, paragraph 5, of its resolution 45/241,

1. Concurs with the conclusions of the International Civil Service Commission as contained in paragraph 130 of its report;

2. Requests the Commission to ensure that the modalities for implementation of the rental subsidy scheme are conveyed to the organizations of the United Nations common system;

E. Special occupational rates

Mindful of its resolutions 46/191 A and B of 20 December 1991 and 31 July 1992, by which it acknowledged that the United Nations common system and the International Civil Service Commission should be responsive to the special needs and concerns of the participating organizations, while emphasizing that such needs and concerns should be addressed within the common system,

Taking note of the views of the Commission concerning the introduction of special occupational rates within the common system, as set out under paragraphs 172 to 175 and 177 of its report and of the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

Stressing that special occupational rates should be introduced only in exceptional cases of proven recruitment and retention difficulties, as determined by the Commission in close cooperation with the organizations concerned,

1. Endorses in principle, the approach outlined by the International Civil Service Commission in paragraph 177 of its report for the introduction of the special occupational rates in the United Nations common system, and requests the Commission to submit recommendations for the consideration of the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

2. Emphasizes that special occupational rates should be subject to the provisions of paragraph 174 of the report of the Commission and should be specific to individual posts where there are demonstrable recruitment and retention problems and should be time limited;

3. Requests the Commission to consider the feasibility and effects of including the special occupational rates in the calculation of the margin and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

F. Dependency allowances

Recalling section I.G, paragraph 4, of its resolution 44/198, by which it requested the International Civil Service Commission to reconsider the methodology for the determination of dependency allowances in the light of the tax practices of the comparator,

Noting the Commission's review of this matter, as contained in paragraphs 178 to 193 of its report,

1. Approves, with effect from 1 January 1993, an increase of 21 per cent in the children's allowance and an increase of 50 per cent in the secondary dependant's allowance, and the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission in respect of eligibility criteria and the maintenance of the local-currency entitlement system;

2. Notes that the Commission will review the level of dependency allowances every two years, in order to ensure, inter alia that all relevant changes in tax and social legislation have been taken into consideration;

G. Conditions of service of assistant secretaries-general and under-secretaries-general and structure of the salary scale

Recalling section V of its resolution 45/241, by which it requested the International Civil Service Commission to reconsider, in a comprehensive manner, the remuneration of staff of the organizations of the United Nations common system at the assistant secretary-general, under-secretary-general and equivalent levels,

Recalling also the recommendations of the Commission as contained in paragraph 173 of volume I of its seventeenth annual report and repeated in paragraph 207 of its eighteenth annual report,

Recalling further section VII of its resolution 46/191 A, by which it deferred a decision on the recommendations of the Commission until its forty-seventh session,

Recalling that, in section IX, paragraph 3, of its resolution 46/191 A, it requested the Commission to include in its work programme a review of the differences between United Nations and United States net remuneration at individual grade levels and to report to it at the earliest opportunity,

Mindful of the proposals of the Secretary-General in respect of the conditions of service of under-secretaries-general and assistant secretaries-general and the reports of the Secretary-General on representation allowances for this category of staff in the United Nations,

Taking note of the views expressed on this question by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the comments of Member States in the Fifth Committee,

Taking note also of the recommendation of the Administrative Committee on Coordination to the Commission concerning the levels of remuneration of staff at the D-1 and D-2 levels and the conclusions of the Commission as contained in paragraph 176 of its report,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, in close cooperation with the organizations, to develop appropriate guidelines for the administration of the revised housing arrangements for eligible officials outlined in paragraph 173 (c) of its seventeenth annual report, taking into account the views expressed by Member States;

2. Decides to revert to the consideration of the conditions of service, including the question of representation allowances, of assistant secretaries-general and under-secretaries-general and equivalent levels at the earliest possible opportunity;

3. Invites the Commission to continue to keep under review the structure of the salary scale at all levels of the Professional and higher categories, taking into account, inter alia, the overall level of the margin as established by the General Assembly and the imbalance between the margin levels for different Professional grade levels, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

III

General Service salary survey methodology

Recalling section XIII, paragraph 4, of its resolution 45/241 and section X of its resolution 46/191 A, by which, inter alia, it requested the International Civil Service Commission to report on its review of the methodology for the conduct of salary surveys of the General Service and related categories at headquarters duty stations,

Taking note of the conclusions of the Commission on the matter as contained in chapter V of its report,

Recalling also its request to the Secretary-General, in section XIII, paragraph 3, of its resolution 45/241, to submit to it at its forty-seventh session a report on procedures whereby the Secretary-General and other executive heads could take measures regarding salary scales of the General Service category at variance with recommendations of the Commission only after consultations with appropriate intergovernmental bodies and the Commission,

1. Endorses the reaffirmation by the International Civil Service Commission of the Flemming principle as enunciated at its fifteenth session as the basis for the determination of conditions of service of the General Service and related categories;

2. Takes note of the decisions of the Commission in respect of the refinements and modifications to the methodology as contained in paragraph 231 of its report, and the procedures for their introduction as outlined in paragraph 232 of its report, on the understanding that such modifications will be taken into account beginning with the salary survey being carried out in Paris;

3. Calls upon all organizations to ensure that interim adjustments to salaries are not resumed until the recommendations from the Commission based on the comprehensive General Service salary survey are acted upon by the organizations;

4. Regrets that it has not so far received the report on procedures to be taken in the event that the implementation of a General Service salary survey is at variance with the recommendations of the Commission, welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to implement resolution 45/241, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the report no later than the forty-ninth session of the Assembly;

IV

Education grant

Recalling section III.B, paragraph 2, of its resolution 43/226 of 21 December 1988, by which it approved as an interim measure the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission for the management of the reimbursement of expenses under the education grant on the basis of different currency areas,

1. Endorses the revised methodology for the determination of the education grant as contained in annex VII to the report of the International Civil Service Commission;

2. Approves increases in the maximum reimbursement levels in five currency areas, as recommended by the Commission in paragraph 252 of its report;

3. Requests the Commission to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the operation of the education grant on the basis of the revised methodology, taking into account the views of Member States on this matter;

V

Mobility and hardship scheme

Recalling section I.E of its resolution 44/198, by which it introduced a mobility and hardship allowance with effect from 1 July 1990 and requested the International Civil Service Commission to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the operation of the allowance and the assignment grant,

Recalling also section V, paragraph 1, of its resolution 46/191 A, by which it requested the Commission to include in its report on the operation of the mobility and hardship allowance a cost-benefit analysis of the operation of that allowance as well as an assessment of the personnel management benefits,

1. Takes note of the conclusions of the International Civil Service Commission in respect of the operation of the mobility and hardship scheme as contained in chapter VII of its report;

2. Concurrs that the existing parameters of the mobility and hardship scheme be maintained;

3. Takes note also of the intention of the Commission to review the operation of the scheme after more experience has been gained in its operation;

4. Requests the Commission to include the following elements in its forthcoming review:

(a) The adjustment procedure which links the mobility and hardship matrix to revisions of the base/floor salary;

(b) The percentage levels attributed to the matrix also in comparison with those applicable in the comparator civil service and in particular those pertaining to the H and A categories;

(c) An analysis of the extent to which each of the component parts that make up the matrix meets the needs of the organizations;

(d) A precise quantification of the cost savings; and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

VI

Status of women in the United Nations system

Recalling section XI of its resolution 45/241, by which it invited the International Civil Service Commission, working together with the organizations of the United Nations common system and with the staff representatives, to examine specific and practical steps to translate into action earlier recommendations and requests relating to the status of women in the United Nations system,

Appreciating the work done by the Commission's Working Group on the Status of Women in the United Nations system, as outlined in chapter VIII of the report of the Commission,

1. Urges the organizations of the United Nations common system to introduce a coherent plan for improving the status of women in each organization in the course of 1993 with full respect for their basic instruments and taking into account the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission, and in this context to give attention not only to the representation, promotion and career progression of women but also to work/family-related issues, spouse employment and the creation of an organizational climate conducive to the equal participation of men and women in the work of the organizations;

2. Requests the Commission to continue to report on a regular basis both on the extent of implementation of previous recommendations in this area and on new initiatives proposed or introduced by the organizations to enhance the status of women in the common system;

Personnel policy considerations

Recalling its requests in section XII, paragraph 1, of its resolution 45/241 and in section VIII of resolution 46/191 A that, as a matter of priority, the International Civil Service Commission resume active consideration of the substantive areas covered under articles 13 and 14 of its statute and, notably, review merit systems and performance appraisal in the common system,

Noting, inter alia, the inclusion of studies on performance appraisal and the recognition of merit in the work programme of the Commission for 1993 and 1994,

Urges the International Civil Service Commission, as a complement to studies being undertaken in the remuneration area, to give equal attention in its work programme to measures designed to promote sound personnel management in the international public service, including recruitment forecasting, human resources planning, performance management and staff development and training.

[See following page for Annex I.]

D = Rate applicable to staff members with a dependent spouse or child.

S = Rate applicable to staff members with no dependent spouse or child.

*This scale represents the result of a consolidation of 6.9 multiplier points of post adjustment into net base salary. There will be consequential adjustments in the lost adjustment indices and multipliers at all duty stations effective 1 March 1993. Thereafter, changes in post adjustment classifications will be effected on the basis of the movements of the newly consolidated post adjustment indices.

General Assembly resolution 47/216

23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/831) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Committee Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.7), following informal consultations; agenda item 113.

Meeting numbers: GA 47th session: 5th Committee 23, 27, 29, 31, 35, 50; plenary 94.

Personnel management

In 1991,(1) the General Assembly had decided to retain on the agenda of its resumed forty-sixth session in 1992 the item on personnel questions. On 14 September 1992, by decision 46/477, the Assembly included the item in the draft agenda of its forty-seventh session.

On 23 December, by decision 47/457 A, the Assembly deferred consideration of the composition of the Secretariat and other personnel questions to its resumed forty-seventh session.

In February, the Secretary-General suspended external recruitment for posts in the Professional category until further notice; exceptions to the suspension were to be limited to an absolute minimum.

In an August report, the Secretary-General stated(2) that competitive examinations had been conducted to fill entry-level posts at the P-3 level, in response to a 1990 General Assembly request.⁽³⁾ The first P-3 level examinations were conducted on an experimental basis in four Member States in 1991: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Italy and Japan. Ninety-two candidates took the examinations; two received offers of appointment in the administration area and two in the economics area. In 1992, a second round of P-3 level examination was held in Finland, Germany, Japan, Russian Federation and the United States. Eighty-three candidates took the examinations in economics, public information, statistics, social affairs and demography. They were subsequently to undergo oral examination and interviews.

In September,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on 13 posts formerly attached to the subprogramme on trade among countries having different economic and social systems of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. He proposed that the posts be extended temporarily through 1993. A final decision on the posts would be taken in the context of a review of the programme budget proposals for 1994-1995.

In October,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted for consideration by the Fifth Committee the views of the staff unions and associations of the United Nations Secretariat, covering security and independence of the international civil service, staff management relations and the restructuring of the Secretariat, career development and training, status of women in the Secretariat, and administration of justice.

Staff composition

In October 1992,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General presented his annual report to the General Assembly on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat-by nationality, gender and type of appointment-for the period 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992. The total number of staff of the United Nations Secretariat as at 30 June 1992 was 13,883, of whom 9,084 were paid from the regular budget and 4,779 from extrabudgetary sources.

Staff in the Professional category and above numbered 3,945; staff in the General Service and related categories numbered 9,017; and project personnel numbered 921.

As at 30 June, there were 29 unrepresented Member States, including 19 newly admitted States and 21 underrepresented Member States. Changes in the representation of Member States resulted not only from the appointments and separations from service of staff, but also from the adjustments of the desirable ranges resulting from an increase or decrease in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution, changes in the number of Member States, variations in the assessed contribution of individual States or in their population, as well as from changes in the status of some staff members.

During the reporting period, 50 women were appointed to posts subject to geographical distribution, representing 39.1 per cent of the 128 appointments made, compared with 57, or 33.5 per cent, during the previous period. As at 30 June, the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution was 797, or 30.6 per cent.

On 23 December, by decision 47/457 A, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, deferred consideration of sub-items (a), composition of the Secretariat, and (c), other personnel questions, of agenda item 112 (Personnel questions) to its resumed session, on the understanding that a working paper prepared by the Committee's Vice-Chairman would constitute a basis for further negotiations on the issue.

Status of women in the Secretariat

During 1992, the Secretary-General submitted two reports on improving the status of women in the United Nations Secretariat.

In a March report to the Commission on the Status of Women,⁽⁷⁾ submitted in response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁾ he provided a statistical update and an evaluation of the status of women in the Secretariat, described institutional arrangements for implementing the action programme for improving that status and summarized the recommendations of the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat.

In higher-level posts (D-1 level and above), women numbered 32, or 8.6 per cent of the total of 372 staff members at those levels as at the end of June 1991. By 31 December 1991, the number of women in posts D-1 and above rose to 35, or 9.3 per cent of the total of 375 posts at those levels. The goal for the number of women occupying higher-level posts was 25 per cent by 1995.

During 1991, the number of women promoted was 45, or 33.6 per cent, as compared with 89 men.

The Steering Committee recommended, with regard to assignment and promotion, that in departments with less than 35 per cent women overall and in those with less than 25 per cent women at levels P-5 and above, qualified women candidates be given priority for promotion and recruitment. To improve the career prospects for secretaries, the Committee recommended that the Secretary-General either promote staff members to the next grade or restructure the occupation, or combine both approaches. Responding to a recommendation of the Committee, the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) was developing procedures to deal with sexual harassment in the Secretariat; three working groups, chaired by the Director of Staff Management, were drafting documents on those procedures.

In an October report on the status of women in the Secretariat,(9) presented in response to a 1991 Assembly request,(8) the Secretary-General described the situation as at 30 June 1992, developments between July 1991 and June 1992, and obstacles to the advancement of women in the Secretariat. An action programme developed to cover the period ending in 1995 was described. The strategy for the programme included the coordination of recruitment, placement and promotion in relation to the filling of vacancies for levels P-3 to D-1, the setting of departmental targets for the following three years and a career development system.

ICSC, in its 1992 report,(10) endorsed the recommendations of its Working Group on the Status of Women in the United Nations system. The recommendations concerned overall strategy/policy, targets for representation, career progression, the General Service category, the Professional category and above, work/family-related issues, child-care, spouse employment, leave arrangements, organizational climate, and monitoring and accountability.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1992/14.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Articles 8 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, and recalling also the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraphs 79, 306, 315, 356 and 358, in which importance is attached to the appointment of women in the Secretariat at senior decision-making and managerial levels,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other bodies that have been adopted since Assembly resolution 2715(XXV) of 15 December 1970, in which the question of the employment of women in the Professional category was first addressed,

Noting with concern that the goal of a 30 per cent participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution by the end of 1990 had not been achieved by the end of 1991,

Bearing in mind the goal of achieving by 1995 an overall participation rate of women of 35 per cent of all posts subject to geographical distribution, set by the General Assembly in resolutions 45/125 of 14 December 1990 and 45/239 C of 21 December 1990, and a participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above, set by the Assembly in resolution 45/239 C, of 25 per cent of the total within the overall participation rate of 35 per cent of posts subject to geographical distribution,

Also bearing in mind that a visible commitment of the Secretary-General is essential to the achievement of the targets set by the General Assembly of an overall participation rate of 35 per cent, and, at the D-1 level and above, of 25 per cent by 1995,

Welcoming the progress report of the Secretary-General concerning the comprehensive study of the barriers to the advancement of women and elements of the action programme for the advancement of women in the Secretariat for the period 1991-1995,

1. Strongly urges the Secretary-General to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, in order to achieve an overall participation rate of 35 per cent by 1995, and a goal of 25 per cent of the total within the overall participation rate of 35 per cent in posts at the D-1 level and above, taking into consideration the need to increase the representation of women from countries with a low representation or no representation of women, especially the developing countries;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to appoint women to senior policy-level and decision-making posts in his next appointments, and to achieve the targets set for the Secretariat by 1995;

3. Also urges the Secretary-General to ensure that achievement of these goals will not be impeded by the temporary suspension of regular recruitment imposed in the context of the current restructuring;

4. Calls upon all Member States to contribute fully to increasing the participation rate of women in the Professional category and above throughout the United Nations system by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates, especially for senior policy-level and decision-making posts, encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat and the executive bodies of the specialized agencies and related organizations, taking into consideration the need to increase the representation of women from countries with a low representation or no representation of women, especially the developing countries;

5. Recommends that all organizations of the United Nations system accord priority to increasing the numbers of women in Professional and senior policy-level and decision-making posts to achieve the same targets set for the Secretariat by 1995;

6. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to regularize the post of Focal Point in the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management of the Secretariat, as well as the establishment of an additional General Service post to assist the official serving as the Focal Point;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the findings of the comprehensive study of the barriers to the advancement of women and a full action programme for the advancement of women in the Secretariat for the period 1991-1995 are submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that his annual report on the status of women in the Secretariat includes strategies and modalities for implementing the action programme and the relevant mandates adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, and to submit the report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session and to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, as well as to those bodies that have administrative, budgetary and personnel responsibilities for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat.

Economic and Social resolution 1992/14

30 July 1992 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1992/105) without vote, 21 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on Women (E/1992/24); agenda item 18.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/93.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also Article 8 of the Charter, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling further the relevant paragraphs of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, especially paragraphs 79, 315, 356 and 358,

Recalling its resolution 2715(XXV) of 15 December 1970, in which it first addressed the question of the employment of women in the Professional category, and all relevant resolutions that have continued to focus on this area since then,

Noting with concern that the goal of a 30 per cent participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution by the end of 1990 was not achieved,

Recalling the goal set in its resolutions 45/125 of 14 December 1990, 45/239 C of 21 December 1990 and 46/100 of 16 December 1991 of a 35 per cent overall participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution by 1995,

Recalling also the goal set in resolution 45/239 C of a 25 per cent participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above by 1995,

Deeply concerned that there are now no women at the under-secretary-general level and only one at the assistant secretary-general level in the Secretariat,

Bearing in mind that a visible commitment by the Secretary-General, especially during the continuing restructuring phase, is essential to the achievement of the targets set by the General Assembly,

Welcoming the evaluation and analysis of the main obstacles to the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat as contained in the report of the Secretary-General.

Welcoming also the action programme outlined in the report of the Secretary-General, designed to overcome the obstacles to the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,

1. Urges the Secretary-General to implement the action programme outlined in his report, designed to overcome the obstacles to the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, noting that his visible commitment is essential to the achievement of the targets set by the General Assembly;

2. Also urges the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, to accord greater priority to the recruitment and promotion of women in posts subject to geographical distribution, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, in order to achieve the goals set in resolutions 45/125, 45/239 C and 46/100 of an overall participation rate of 35 per cent by 1995 and 25 per cent in posts at the D-1 level and above by 1995;

3. Further urges the Secretary-General to use the opportunity offered by the United Nations reorganization process and the establishment of the Commission on Sustainable Development to promote more women into senior-level positions;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to increase the number of women employed in the Secretariat from developing countries and other countries that have a low representation of women;

5. Strongly encourages Member States to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the percentage of women in Professional posts, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and submitting more women candidates, encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat, specialized agencies and regional commissions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to ensure that adequate machinery, with the authority of enforcement and the responsibility of accountability, including a senior-level official devoted to the implementation of the action programme and the recommendations in the report on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, is maintained and strengthened during the course of the programme for the period 1991-1995;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that a progress report is given to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session, and to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

General Assembly resolution 47/93

16 December 1992 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/47/670) without vote, 5 November (meeting 30); 82-nation draft (A/C.3/47/L.21) agenda item 94.

Meeting numbers: GA 47th session: 3rd Committee 19-26, 28, 30; plenary 89.

Staffing tables and workload standards

In August 1992,(11) the Secretary-General submitted a note on procedures and norms for the creation, suppression, reclassification, conversion and redeployment of posts, in response to a 1991 General Assembly request.(12) By its 1991 resolution, the Assembly had endorsed the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) that simpler, more transparent and more rational procedures and norms be developed.

The Secretary-General's note summarized current procedures for changes in the Organization's staffing table and suggested improvements. Proposals for such changes were normally formulated in the context of preparing the biennial programme budget; they reflected the outcome of consultations between departments and Secretariat officials responsible for reviewing budget proposals.

Decisions about creating new posts and redeploying or reclassifying existing posts were based on recommendations by the Compensation and Classification Service of OHRM. Posts were classified on the basis of standards promulgated by ICSC and approved by the Assembly.

According to the report, the application of those procedures had produced uneven results. Changes in the staffing table should be based on agreed workload standards, full and comparable information on the workload for each department and effective application of the classification process. However, workload analysis had only been applied to language services in the Office of Conference Services. There were constraints to extending the analysis to other areas, such as the amount of research required, complex methodology and the need for a data collection system. However, the Secretariat would continue to study methodology, formulation and application of workload standards, which should be viewed as a long-term process.

In December, the Secretary-General presented a report(13) on the elaboration of unified workload standards for conference-servicing staff in the United Nations common system (see next chapter).

Post classification system

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in April 1992 a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on advantages and disadvantages of the post classification system.(14) The report, which had been requested by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, gave the background to the post classification system, described its implementation and concluded that it was a useful management tool.

The report recommended that the capacity of personnel services be reinforced; that training courses for classifiers and programme managers be organized regularly; that automated processes for classification be considered; that the filling of posts, except for certain key positions, be left to programme managers; that the staff at large be informed about the concept of classification; that the reclassification of posts be done by well-trained specialists; that an appeals mechanism be set up; that a study be carried out on attracting qualified staff at P-1 and P-2 entry level; that a more dynamic approach to attracting qualified staff be pursued; and that the possibility of introducing personal promotion and linked grades be studied.

Linked grades would permit staff, when being recruited, to have a notion for a possible career, that is, one entry grade in which the incumbent would stay for a probationary period, and then the formal grade of the post, as classified, given on certain conditions.

The Secretary-General submitted his comments on the JIU report in June(15) and the comments of member organizations of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in December.(16)

Career development

Responding to a 1990 General Assembly request, (17) the Secretary-General submitted an August 1992 report on career development at the United Nations.(18) The report explained the concept and scope of a career scheme; highlighted the integrated nature of the scheme's components; emphasized the role of career development in creating an atmosphere conducive to high staff morale; and outlined an implementation plan.

The report stated that the Secretariat had adopted a long-term approach to establishing a career development system, which reflected the intention of the Secretary-General to adjust, phase by phase, the structure and modus operandi of the Secretariat to the new era the world was entering. The Secretariat had embarked on a multi-year implementation plan, including the conducting of pilot projects. A progress report would be submitted to the Assembly in 1994.

Training

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1990 General Assembly request,(17) submitted an October 1992 report(19) covering training programmes in the Secretariat, evaluation of training, strengthening inter-agency cooperation with regard to training efforts, and budgetary arrangements.

The report stated that the Secretariat had concentrated most of its training resources in the following priority areas: developing a comprehensive management development plan; offering mission-oriented training for specific peacekeeping and peacemaking operations; upgrading professional knowledge and skills in substantive areas; improving the staff's capability to use technological innovations; providing orientation programmes for newly recruited or promoted staff members; and enhancing the linguistic and communication capabilities of United Nations staff. Efforts to strengthen inter-agency cooperation were made through the Subcommittee on Training of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions of ACC; areas in which training efforts could be shared included crisis management, security questions and human rights issues.

While a centralized budgetary process made it possible for all offices to formulate a biennial training plan, it also revealed a serious gap between training requirements and resource availability. Currently, the United Nations devoted only 0.29 per cent of its staff costs to occupational and management training, while comparable entities within the system spent as much as 2 per cent.

The report concluded that training was increasingly important to ensure that staff in political areas developed skills in preventive diplomacy and that staff in the economic and social sectors had strong, substantive, up-to-date expertise. Training should also ensure that a cadre of well-trained, capable staff was developed to provide effective and efficient administration and management.

Staff rules and regulations

In November 1992,(20) the Secretary-General resubmitted an amendment to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations concerning an education grant for staff members serving outside their recognized home country. The amendment, which had been submitted first in 1991(21) without the General Assembly's taking action on it, was intended to delete any references to actual amounts, so as to obviate the need to present an amendment to the Staff Regulations whenever there was a revision to those amounts.

Also in November 1992, the Secretary-General submitted his annual report(22) containing the texts of provisional amendments to the Staff Rules. The changes, applicable to all staff except technical cooperation project personnel and staff specifically engaged for conferences and other short-term services, concerned the application of the Secretary-General's discretion to evaluate the eligibility for permanent appointments of staff members on fixed-term appointments and to waive, totally or partially, the requirement of probationary service; the deletion from a number of rules of references to regular appointments, which were no longer used in the United Nations system; temporary and permanent appointments; the incorporation of agreements reached between organizations of the common system and at staff-management coordination meetings; and staff specifically recruited for service with technical cooperation projects.

In December, the Secretary-General proposed an amendment to paragraph 5 of annex I to the Regulations concerning personnel specifically engaged for short-term missions.(23) He also proposed an amendment to regulation 3.4(a) concerning dependent children's and secondary dependants' allowances.(24)

Staff representation

Cost of staff representation activities

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(25) the Secretary-General submitted a November 1992 report(26) reviewing the nature and level of regular budget funding of Staff Union activities. The report identified the mandates for those activities and described the administrative facilities provided to staff representatives to enable them to carry out their functions.

The report noted that while the Staff Rules provided for both staff-management and staff representation activities, only staff-management activities were budgeted, in the form of travel to the Staff-Management Coordinating Committee. In the 1990-1991 biennium, the amount appropriated for travel totalled $232,900; the resources appropriated for 1992-1993 amounted to $204,500. To decrease expenditures for that item, measures were taken to limit the venues of those meetings to New York and Geneva.

On 23 December 1992, by decision 47/460 A, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report until 1993.

Level of secretaries of intergovernmental organs

Responding to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,(27) the Secretariat submitted an October 1992 note(28) on the level of secretaries of intergovernmental policy-making organs, describing the types of committee secretaries, their functions and levels. The latter were influenced by a variety of factors, including scope of responsibilities, placement of posts within the organizational structure of the Secretariat, and mandates of the committees. The note stated that, subject to any decision the Assembly might take in 1992, the situation would be reviewed in the context of the preparation of the 1994-1995 programme budget.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section VII, the Assembly took note of the Secretariat's note and asked the Secretary-General to review the situation in the context of preparing the programme budget for 1994-1995.

Privileges and immunities

In response to a 1990 General Assembly request,(29) the Secretary-General, on behalf of and with the approval of ACC, submitted an October 1992 report(30) on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations.

During the period 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992, which was marked by complex developments requiring peace-keeping and humanitarian missions, often in areas of military confrontation, there were 11 fatalities among staff members of different organizations. The number of new cases of arrest and detention of officials was less than in the previous reporting period due to a decline in the numbers of arrested staff members of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). Of 66 UNRWA staff members arrested during the reporting period, 49 were subsequently released without charge or trial.

The report also discussed restrictions on official and private travel of officials of the United Nations by host countries. On 23 December 1991, the Secretary-General had received from the United States a note verbale stating that United Nations staff members who were nationals of Viet Nam and their dependents could enjoy unrestricted travel in the United States; however, they would still be required to notify the Department of State of any intended non-official travel, specifically recreational travel.

On 24 April 1992, the United States informed the Secretary-General that, effective immediately, staff members from Belarus and Ukraine would no longer be required to request permission for private recreational travel. Similarly, there would be no restrictions for travel in the United States for staff members from Armenia, Azerbaijan, Estonia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Republic of Moldova, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. On 7 August, the United States said that staff members from the Russian Federation would no longer be required to request such approval; they would have to file a streamlined travel notification form with the United States Mission.

An inter-agency meeting (Geneva, 12-15 May) discussed approaches and procedures to ensure the best possible security arrangements for United Nations staff. The meeting stressed the need to apply a uniform security regime to all United Nations system staff and recommended that, in addition to existing measures, the United Nations Security Coordinator should determine in which countries it was desirable to appoint area coordinators.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 47/28.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, all officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization,

Also recalling that, under Article 100 of the Charter, each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities,

Further recalling the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Development Programme Standard Basic Assistance Agreements,

Stressing that respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies is becoming even more imperative owing to the growing number of assignments entrusted to the organizations of the United Nations system by Member States,

Recalling its resolution 76(1) of 7 December 1946, in which it approved the granting of the privileges and immunities referred to in articles V and VII of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations to all members of the staff of the United Nations, with the exception of those who are recruited locally and are assigned to hourly rates,

Also recalling its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988, to which is annexed the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, including the principle that all persons under arrest or detention shall be provided whenever necessary with medical care and treatment,

Reiterating the obligation of all officials of the Organization in the conduct of their duties to observe fully both the laws and regulations of Member States and their duties and responsibilities to the Organization,

Mindful of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General to safeguard the functional immunity of all United Nations officials,

Mindful also of the importance in this respect of the provision by Member States of adequate and immediate information concerning the arrest and detention of staff members and, more particularly, their granting of access to them,

Bearing in mind the considerations of the Secretary-General to guarantee appropriate standards of justice and due process to United Nations officials,

1. Takes note with grave concern of the report submitted by the Secretary-General on behalf of the members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and of the developments indicated therein;

2. Strongly deplores the unprecedented and still increasing number of fatalities which have occurred among United Nations personnel, including those engaged in peace-keeping operations;

3. Deplores the continuing existence of cases where the functioning, safety and well-being of officials have been placed jeopardy;

4. Condemns and deplores the disregard for Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations displayed by some Member States;

5. Reaffirms in its entirety its resolution 45/240 of 21 December 1990;

6. Reiterates the importance of providing access of United Nations medical teams to detained staff, and requests Member States to facilitate medical care deemed necessary by such teams;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel, as well as those engaged in peace-keeping and humanitarian operations;

8. Reminds host countries of their responsibility for the safety of peace-keeping and all United Nations personnel on their territory;

9. Strongly affirms that disregard for the privileges and immunities of officials has always constituted one of the main obstacles to the implementation of the missions and programmes assigned to the organizations of the United Nations system by Member States;

10. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to continue their efforts to ensure respect for the privileges and immunities of officials, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit, on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, reports thereon to the General Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 47/128

25 November 1992 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/708) without vote, 18 November (meeting 28); draft submitted by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.2) following informal consultations; agenda item 112 (b).

Meeting numbers: GA 47th session: 5th Committee 13, 15-17, 19-22, 25; plenary 72.

In related action, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/72 on the protection of United Nations peace-keeping personnel.

Staff costs

In its 1992 report, (1) ICSC continued to advise the General Assembly on staff salaries and allowances and made recommendations regarding pensionable remuneration and pension entitlements. The Commission continued to monitor the net remuneration margin between officials in comparable positions of the United States Federal Civil Service and the United Nations system. The application of the margin calculation methodology endorsed by the Assembly in 1989(2) resulted in a margin for the 1992 calendar year of 117.6, while the average margin for 1990-1992 was 117.8. The Commission reported to the Assembly that no action was necessary at the current stage in the management of the margin over the five-year period 1990-1994.

ICSC recommended that the current base/floor salary scale be increased by 6.9 per cent through consolidation of post adjustment classes, with effect from 1 March 1993, and, as an exception to the Assembly's 1991 resolution on the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee,(3) that the item be considered on an annual basis. The Commission noted that the financial implication of the salary scale increase for the 10 months of 1993 would be $3,564,000.

Having reviewed the methodology for measuring the cost-of-living differential between New York and Washington, D.C., used in net remuneration margin calculations, the Commission concluded that it was deficient and recommended an alternative methodology.

The Commission also reviewed the operation of the rent subsidy scheme at headquarters duty stations for the period 1983-1991. It recommended maintaining the scheme in its present form. In other action, the Commission invited the Assembly to endorse the introduction of special occupational rates in the common system as a means of addressing recruitment and retention problems for some specialized technical fields. On the basis of a review of the methodology for determining children's and secondary dependants' allowances for the Professional and higher categories, it recommended that, with effect from 1 January 1993, the children's allowance be increased by 21 per cent and the secondary dependants' allowance by 50 per cent, and that the level of dependency allowances be reviewed every two years. The Commission noted that the financial implications of those recommendations amounted to $3.1 million per annum for the common system.

The Secretary-General submitted, in accordance with a 1980 General Assembly resolution,(4) comments on the ICSC report by the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations(5) and by the Coordinating Committee for Independent Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System.(6)

The General Assembly acted on ICSC's recommendations in resolution 47/216.

Honoraria

In 1991,(7) the Secretary-General had proposed a 25 per cent increase in the rates of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations in cases that the General Assembly had already authorized on an exceptional basis, namely, the International Law Commission, the International Narcotics Control Board, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on the Rights of the Child. The Assembly had deferred consideration of the issue.(8)

In November 1992, the Secretary-General, in response to a 1991 Assembly request,(9) submitted a comprehensive study of the question of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations.(10) He reviewed the level of honoraria paid and proposed that the new rates, if approved by the Assembly, would also apply to the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families once the 1990 Convention on the Protection of the Rights of all Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families(11) entered into force. He also reviewed the workload of the committees and commissions concerned and indicated that, should the Assembly approve the proposed 25 per cent increase, additional appropriations of $86,600 would be required in 1993. Also, should the Assembly decide to defray the costs of airfare for spouses of overseas members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) effective 1 January 1993, an additional appropriation of $46,000 would be required in the 1992-1993 programme budget.

ACABQ in December 1992,(12) did not object to the Secretary-General's proposal but noted that there was little evidence to suggest that questions such as whether there might be other bodies within the system eligible for payment of honoraria, or the implications of introducing uniformity into the conditions for the payment of honoraria, had been dealt with.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 47/219 A, section XV.

Comprehensive study of the question of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations
[The General Assembly ...]

1. Decides to postpone to its resumed forty-seventh session the review of the whole question of honoraria;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General, pending the results of the review, to take appropriate measures on an exceptional basis and with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions with regard to paragraph 55 of his report, within the overall framework of the current pertinent resolutions and decisions, recommends that he reflect the measures he takes in the final performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, and decides to revert to this matter again at its forty-eighth session;

Representation allowance

In 1991, the General Assembly had deferred consideration of proposals by the Secretary-General for an increase in representation allowance for USGs and ASGs.(13)

In an October 1992 report,(14) the Secretary-General updated his previous proposal and included an overview of the origins and policies with respect to official hospitality. The report stated that, since 1991, the net remuneration of USGs and ASGs had increased in dollar terms owing to changes in the post adjustment classification of different duty stations. The new period for the staggered increases in the level of the allowance would be 1993-1996 instead of 1992-1996, and the amounts would be established at 60 per cent of one month's net remuneration in 1993, 70 per cent in 1994, 80 per cent in 1995 and 100 per cent starting in 1996.

The Secretary-General also considered hospitality allotments for official functions, the current rates for which had been in effect since January 1984. They were being reviewed by the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Finance.

ACABQ(15) recommended that consideration of the representation allowance be deferred until the restructuring process of the Secretariat was completed.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section XI, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's 1991 reports, recommended that consideration of the question be deferred and that a further review be undertaken in the light of future decisions on restructuring of the Secretariat.

Remuneration of JIU members

In two 1991 reports,(16) the Secretary-General had proposed that the new level of remuneration for inspectors of JIU be established at the top step of the Director (D-2) level of the salary scale for staff in the Professional and higher categories, with a consequent amendment of article 14 of the Statute of JIU, which would require approval by the General Assembly and acceptance by the organizations of the United Nations system. Should the Assembly approve the proposal, with effect from 1 January 1992, the financial implications related to the difference in net remuneration between step IV and step VI of the D-2 level would amount to $51,600 a year for 1992 and 1993.

On 23 December 1992, by decision 47/460 A, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the reports.

Salaries and allowances

Staff assessment

By decision 47/459 of 23 December 1992, taken on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to review all aspects of the question of staff assessment as they affected the budgets of United Nations organizations and programmes, taking into account the views of ICSC and the experience of other organizations of the system, as well as established principles and practices, including the principle of ensuring equality of pay and benefits for all staff members, and to present proposals, through ICSC, in 1993.

Special post allowance

In 1991,(17) the General Assembly had deplored the decision of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), in applying its staff regulation 3.8 (b), to grant a special post allowance to headquarters staff of the Professional and higher categories, contrary to the norms of the common system. The Assembly had requested ICSC to assess the impact of that decision on the common system and to propose measures to enhance respect for and adherence to the common system of salaries, allowances and conditions of service by all governing bodies. Also in 1991,(18) the Assembly had requested ICSC and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to examine the basis for ITU's decision and its implications for the common system.

ICSC, at its 1992 session,(1) reiterated its regret concerning ITU's unilateral action, which should not constitute a precedent. It urged organizations, when confronting problems pertaining to issues falling under the Commission's mandate, to consult with it in a timely manner. ICSC decided to undertake a study of organizations' staff rules and regulations and recommended that the Assembly make it mandatory for all organizations to invite the Commission to be represented at meetings where proposals pertaining to salaries, allowances, benefits and other conditions of employment were being discussed.

The Secretary-General, in a July note,(19) transmitted correspondence from ITU including a 1992 resolution of its Administrative Council accepting the view of ICSC and the Assembly that its action with regard to special post allowances was incompatible with the common system. The Council resolved that any further application of staff regulation 3.8 (b) must be in strict conformity with the wording of that regulation and fully in line with the common system, and that a consultative group be established to study staff issues. It recommended to the Council specific actions, in conformity with the common system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 July, at its resumed forty-sixth session, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 46/191 B.

United Nations common system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/268 of 28 June 1991 and, in particular, 46/191 A of 20 December 1991,

Emphasizing the importance of, and benefits derived from, maintaining a coherent and unified United Nations common system,

Acknowledging that the United Nations common system should be responsive to the special needs and concerns of the participating organizations, while emphasizing that such needs and concerns should be addressed within the common system,

Emphasizing the obligation of all organizations of the United Nations common system to consult and cooperate fully with the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board on matters relating to conditions of service and pensions,

Noting that the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union recognized, in its resolution No. 1024 of 8 July 1992, that the action taken by the Union in regard to a special post allowance was incompatible with the common system,

Considering that the adoption of Administrative Council resolution No. 1024 does not prohibit further payment of the special post allowance,

Recognizing that such payment is in contravention of staff regulation 3.8 (b) of the International Telecommunication Union as well as the accepted norms of the United Nations common system,

Noting with deep concern that prior consultation with the International Civil Service Commission by the International Telecommunication Union as called for in General Assembly resolution 46/191 A, section II, paragraph 7, had not taken place,

1. Strongly deplores the decision of the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to make payment of the special post allowance to headquarters Professional staff in the circumstances described in paragraphs 33 to 35 of the report of the International Civil Service Commission:

2. Determines that such payment is in contravention of General Assembly resolution 46/191 A;

3. Regrets that the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union did not explicitly exclude further payment of the special post allowance;

4. Reiterates its endorsement of the view of the International Civil Service Commission that the action taken by the International Telecommunication Union in regard to special post allowances is incompatible with the common system;

5. Calls upon executive heads and governing bodies of the United Nations common system to respect fully the decisions taken by the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, concerning the conditions of service of the staff, and points out that failure to do so on the part of any organization could prejudice its claim to enjoy the benefits of participation in the common system;

6. Stresses that the action of the International Telecommunication Union should in no way be invoked as a precedent by other organizations or by the Union itself;

7. Calls again upon the organizations of the United Nations common system to refrain from seeking to establish for their staff, whether by provisions in their staff regulations or by other means, additional entitlements and benefits;

8. Requests the executive heads of the participating organizations to consult the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board prior to the submission of proposals relating to staff conditions of service to their respective governing bodies, in order to avoid action inconsistent with the statute of the Commission and the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as accepted by the organizations;

9. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, at its current session, to assess the impact on the common system of resolution No. 1024 of the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union with respect to the payment of the special post allowance, the interpretation of staff rules and the convening of the tripartite consultative group outside the rules of procedure of the Commission, and to recommend in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session appropriate measures to be taken by the Assembly;

10. Also requests the International Civil Service Commission, at its current session, to propose measures to be undertaken by all organizations of the United Nations common system to enforce and enhance respect for, and adherence to, the common system of salaries, allowances and conditions of service, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, as well as on its consideration of the question of the improvement of the responsiveness of the common system to the concerns and needs of the different organizations;

11. Calls upon the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1993, to review and, where appropriate, strengthen the applicable sections of the relationship agreements between the United Nations and member organizations of the United Nations common system, in particular article VIII of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International

Telecommunication Union, in order to enhance comparability and further adherence to the goals and objectives of the common system;

12. Requests the International Telecommunication Union to ensure that any consultative meeting convened pursuant to Administrative Council resolution No. 1024 proceeds with the clear awareness that the General Assembly is the authority for determining conformity with the United Nations common system.

General Service salary survey

In response to a 1990 General Assembly request(20) for a report to be submitted in 1992 on the review of the methodology for the conduct of salary surveys of the General Service and related categories at headquarters duty stations, ICSC in March 1992 established a formal Working Group to review data provided by an informal working group and to report to the Commission on the Flemming principle the modalities for its application and the survey methodology. At its July/August session,(1) ICSC received the report of the Working Group, which conveyed views on the Flemming principle, as well as on the four stages of the survey methodology, namely: the preparation, data-collection, data-analysis and decision phases, including construction of the salary scale.

The Commission took a number of decisions relating to the different phases of the methodology for surveys of the best prevailing conditions at headquarters duty stations. It decided that changes in methodology as a result of its decisions should be incorporated in a revised methodology, and instructed its secretariat to reorder and present for adoption in 1993 a revised methodology. Until that time, any survey preparations should be conducted on the basis of the current methodology, as modified by decisions taken at the current session.

ICSC also agreed on arrangements to review in 1993 the general methodology for surveys of the best prevailing conditions at non-headquarters duty stations.

Grade overlap

For more than a decade, there had been an overlap in the salaries of the senior General Service and junior Professional staff categories in the United Nations system, according to a JIU report transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly in April 1992.(21)

The cause of the overlap lay primarily in the different methodologies used to set and adjust the levels of remuneration. While salaries of Professionals were based on the Noblemaire principle, which compared the salaries of international civil servants with the highest paid civil service of a Member State, salaries of General Service staff were determined on the basis of the best prevailing rates of the local area. The application of those methodologies led to anomalies. It was recognized that the salaries of the United States civil service, the comparator under the Noblemaire principle, were some 28 per cent behind the private sector and that steps were being taken by the United States to rectify the situation over time.

The report noted that the salary overlap was being viewed with increasing concern. In Geneva, for example, the overlap had reached more than three levels in terms of net remuneration and four levels in terms of pensionable remuneration. Such levels of overlap were incompatible with sound management principles and made it impossible to pursue a realistic career development path from the General Service to the Professional category.

JIU also examined the possibility of a one-grade structure as a possible solution to salary overlap. However, there had been continuous resistance to that idea, echoed by the Salary Review Committees in 1956 and 1972, the General Assembly and ICSC. Any action to change the two-grade structure would require well-founded research and a new formula other than the Noblemaire principle which could be applied fairly to the system worldwide.

The report noted with satisfaction a 1990 General Assembly request⁽²⁰⁾ that ICSC consider the relativities between the terms and conditions of staff in the Professional and higher categories and those in other categories.

Commenting on the JIU report,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that salary overlap was by and large limited to headquarters duty stations; that the overlap between senior General Service and junior Professional posts might be more indicative of the overlap found in the labour market between senior clerical and junior management positions rather than functional overlap; and that the JIU report assumed that ICSC would recommend measures to correct the distortions in the current salary system.

In December,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of member organizations of ACC on the JIU report, which emphasized that the problem should be urgently studied by ICSC with a view to developing recommendations for corrective action.

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted correspondence from ITU containing two resolutions adopted by ITU's Administrative Council on the conditions of employment of staff in the General Service and Professional and higher categories. In December,⁽²⁵⁾ at the request of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an FAO Council resolution on remuneration and conditions of service of staff.

Pensions

During 1992, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund increased from 60,183 to 61,968. On 31 December, there were 33,923 periodic benefits in award: 11,264 retirement benefits, 6,093 early retirement benefits, 5,598 deferred retirement benefits, 4,592 widows' and widowers' benefits, 5,679 children's benefits, 642 disability benefits and 55 secondary benefits. In the course of the year, 3,635 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid.

During the same period, the principal of the Fund increased from $9,304,981,285 to $10,246,849,744.

The investment income of the Fund during the year amounted to $899,878,894, comprising $532,179,470 in interest and dividends, $354,646,665 in net profit on sales of investments, and $13,052,759 in other income. After deduction of investment management costs amounting to $12,884,664, net investment income was $886,994,230.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which held its forty-fourth session at Montreal, Canada, from 25 June to 3 July 1992.⁽²⁶⁾

The major items dealt with by the Board were: the comprehensive review of the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the General Service and related categories, which the General Assembly had requested in 1990;⁽²⁷⁾ amendments to the Regulations of the Fund governing the pensionable remuneration and pensions of ungraded officials as requested by the Assembly in 1991;⁽²⁸⁾ additional studies of possible changes in the pension adjustment system, requested by the Assembly in the same resolution; implications for the work of the Board of the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee;⁽²⁹⁾ methodology and actuarial assumptions to be used in the next actuarial valuation of the Fund; a proposed agreement between the Fund and the Inter-American Development Bank on the transfer of pension rights; and matters related to the interpretation and application of the three transfer agreements between the Fund and the former USSR, the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR.

The Board also examined the management of the Fund's investments, financial statements and schedules for the year ending 31 December 1991, and a progress report on administrative and operational changes in the Fund secretariat.

In accordance with rule 4 of the Fund's Regulations, the Board appointed a Standing Committee to act on its behalf when it was not in session.

ACABQ submitted its comments on the Board's report in October.(30)

Pension Fund investments

The market value of the assets of the Fund as at 31 March 1992 was $10,111 million, an increase of $772 million, or 8.3 per cent over the previous year and $771 million above the book value. The total investment return for the year ended 31 March 1992 was 7.6 per cent, which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a "real" rate of return of 4.3 per cent.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world. Investments were held in 38 different currencies and 47 countries; 55 per cent of the assets were exposed to currencies other than the United States dollar, which was the Fund's unit of account. Of the Fund's investments, 65 per cent were in markets outside the United States.

Equities constituted 47 per cent of the assets as at 31 March 1992, an increase from 39 per cent for the previous year; 45 per cent of those were in United States equities and 55 per cent in other equity markets. The bond proportion declined to 37 per cent from 39 per cent, and the breakdown between United States dollar-denominated bonds and other currency bonds was 38 and 62 per cent, respectively. Investments in real estate-related securities amounted to 9 per cent of the portfolio, compared with 10 per cent a year earlier. Short-term investments and reserves, that is, cash and fixed income investments with maturity dates of less than one year, decreased to 7 per cent from 12 per cent a year earlier.

In order to preserve the Fund's principal, the defensive policy adopted in the mid-1980s was continued but slightly changed. It consisted of increasing holdings in selected equities which appeared undervalued and with potential for future appreciation.

As at 30 June 1992, the book value of development-related investments increased by 7.1 per cent over the previous year, from $1,453.2 million to $1,537.6 million. Investments in development institutions amounted to $1,050 million compared with $1,137.2 million a year earlier, a decrease of 7.7 per cent; direct investments in specific developing countries increased by 63.6 per cent to $487.6 million from $298 million. The Fund's direct investments and those through regional development institutions in Africa increased by 32.1 per cent to $191.2 million from $144.7 million; Latin America decreased by 14.4 per cent to $270.8 million from $316.3 million, and Asia increased by 46.8 per cent to $583 million from $397.1 million. The combined development-related assets as at 30 June 1992 represented 16 per cent of the total book value of the Fund.

The Joint Staff Pension Board(26) indicated its concern that outstanding tax claims were having an adverse impact on the Fund's investment returns and requested that detailed information be provided to the General Assembly on the results of negotiations with certain countries regarding tax exemptions for the Fund's investments and on action taken or contemplated when efforts to obtain recognition of tax-exempt status did not succeed. The Board was concerned about investment "opportunity losses" arising from delays in reimbursements of taxes withheld at source by countries which had accepted the tax-exempt status of the Fund and it agreed to advise the Assembly of such delays.

In a September report on the Fund's investments,(31) the Secretary-General noted that, considering the world-wide slowdown in economic growth, the volatility of financial markets, and fluctuations of exchange rates, the investment return of 7.6 per cent for the year ended 31 March 1992, when measured in United States dollars, was satisfactory. The defensive strategy of taking profits where appropriate and increasing investments in those markets and instruments that performed better contributed to the Fund's satisfactory performance. He considered the policy of diversification and careful selection of investment instruments, including consistent investigation of opportunities in developing countries, to be the best way to achieve the goal of preserving the Fund's principal and enhancing its investment return over the medium and long term. He would continue to discharge his fiduciary responsibilities through investment decisions that adhered to the principles of sound investment management and met the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility.

UN common system and pension system

By an October 1992 note,(32) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a statement adopted by ACC in 1992 which emphasized the importance of making the conditions of service of the United Nations common system competitive. ACC believed that early action was needed to avoid individual attempts to remedy the most glaring deficiencies, with the attendant risk to the cohesion of the common system.

Accordingly, ACC requested the Assembly to endorse ICSC's recommendations with regard to base/floor salary scale, mobility and hardship allowances, education grant and dependency allowances; to invite ICSC to pursue its examination of the competitiveness of the common system and, in particular, that of the staff in the Professional and higher categories; and to note ACC's concern that in considering the salary and pension methodologies for the General Service category, any modifications should be technically sound and not result in an erosion of current conditions. It urged that ICSC's recommendations pertaining to the methodology for determining pensionable remuneration be deferred until the results of using the new recommended salary survey methodology were known, and requested the Assembly to consider positively ICSC's recommendations for an increase of between 7 and 11 per cent in the remuneration at the ASG and USG levels, as well as ACC's recommendations to ICSC for increases of 3 and 5 per cent at the levels of D-1 and D-2, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/203 without vote.

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/192 and 46/220 of 20 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1992 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, chapter III of the report of the International Civil Service Commission, the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the Fund, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

Implications for the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board of the biennialization of the work programme of the Fifth Committee

Bearing in mind its resolution 46/220 on the biennialization of the programme of work of the Fifth Committee,

1. Takes note of the decision of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to reschedule the next actuarial valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund to be as of 31 December 1993, instead of as of 31 December 1992, with subsequent valuations being carried out every two years;

2. Takes note also of the additional responsibilities delegated by the Board to its Standing Committee to be carried out in odd-numbered years, as set out in paragraph 14 of the report of the Board;

3. Takes note further of the observations of the Board on the rescheduling of the dates for the next comprehensive review of the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the Professional and higher categories, and of the review of the maximum number of years of creditable contributory service in the Fund;

II

Actuarial matters

1. Takes note of the observations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board in section III.B of its report on the methodology and assumptions to be used in the actuarial valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as at 31 December 1993;

2. Requests the Board to consider the form in which it presents the results of actuarial valuations, taking into account the views of the Committee of Actuaries and the Board of Auditors;

3. Takes note of the observations of the Board in section III.B of its report on matters related to the application of the transfer agreements between the Fund and the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic;

4. Concurrs in the agreement with the Inter-American Development Bank, approved by the Board under article 13 of the Regulations of the Fund, with a view to securing the continuity of pension rights between the Bank and the Fund, as set out in annex IV to the report of the Board;

III

Pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the General Service and related categories

Recalling that in section III of its resolution 45/242 of 21 December 1990, the General Assembly requested the International Civil Service Commission, in full cooperation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, to submit recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, in respect of the comprehensive review of the methodology for determining the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the General Service and related categories,

Also recalling section II of its resolution 46/192,

Further recalling its concurrence with the observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Commission and the Board should aim to eliminate current anomalies in the system without creating new ones,

Recognizing that the Statute of the Commission and the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund define the complementary and essential roles of the Commission and the Board in reviewing issues related to pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions, which are indispensable components of the conditions of service in the United Nations common system, and that pensionable remuneration has a decisive impact on the levels of contributions to be paid into the Fund by member organizations and by participants,

Noting that, based on a pilot study of six locations, the Commission and the Board had concluded that the approach of determining pensionable remuneration and/or pensions by reference to the local practices of employers used in General Service salary surveys should not be pursued further,

Also noting that

(a) The Commission and the Board had concluded that the methodology for determining General Service pensionable remuneration should relate the pensionable remuneration to the net base salaries received while in service,

(b) Regrettably, the Board had not been able to achieve agreement on the modalities for applying such an approach, as reflected in the table in paragraph 76 of the report of the Board and in annex VIII to the report, containing respectively, the positions of the three groups in the Board, together with the proposal of the Chairman of the Board, and the statements of the three groups on the Chairman's proposal,

(c) The Commission, in paragraphs 99 and 100 of its report, had reached conclusions on certain aspects of the methodology, indicated its intention to consider other outstanding aspects in 1993 and concluded that the implementation date for the revised methodology should be 1 January 1994,

Reiterating that the future work of the Board and the Commission should focus on the elimination or significant reduction of the "income inversion anomaly", as described and discussed in paragraphs 73 and 74 of the report of the Board, and in paragraphs 88 to 92 of the report of the Commission,

Reiterating also its appreciation of the complexities and the importance of the issues involved for all parties concerned,

Taking note of the fact that the Board has not yet had an opportunity to consider the conclusions of the Commission, in paragraphs 99 and 100 of the report of the Commission, on certain aspects of the methodology, in the light of the views of the Commission contained in paragraphs 88 to 98 of its report,

1. Endorses the conclusions of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and the International Civil Service Commission that the methodology for determining the pensionable remuneration of staff in the General Service and related categories should relate the levels of pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions to salaries while in service;

2. Endorses also the approach in paragraph 1 above for future work on the various aspects of the matter, as reflected in the proposal of the Chairman of the Board in paragraphs 76 and 77 of the report of the Board, and in the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission in its report;

3. Endorses further the conclusions reached by the Commission on those aspects of the methodology discussed in its report;

4. Requests the Commission, in close cooperation with the Board, as appropriate, to finalize the comprehensive review in 1993, and to submit recommendations on all aspects of the methodology to determine pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions, including the effective date of implementation and transitional measures to protect acquired rights, to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

5. Also requests the Commission to recommend consequential amendments to the staff regulations of the member organizations and the Board to consider amendments to the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, which may be required in order to implement the revised methodology, in their respective reports to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

Pensionable remuneration and pensions of ungraded officials

Recalling section III, paragraph 9, of its resolution 46/192, in which it requested the International Civil Service Commission to recommend guidelines for determining the pension arrangements for ungraded officials who do not become participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund so as to ensure system-wide comparability, as well as appropriate monitoring procedures, and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session and to the governing bodies of the other organizations of the United Nations common system,

Also recalling that, in paragraph 7 the same resolution, the General Assembly requested the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to consider amendments to the Regulations of the Fund to incorporate provisions governing the pensionable remuneration of ungraded officials and to extend the provisions placing a limit on the highest levels of pensions to cover all participants in the Fund, including ungraded officials,

1. Decides to convey to the governing bodies of the other member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund its view that their ungraded officials should become participants in the Fund so as to ensure system-wide comparability and that, if a governing body decides to make arrangements outside the Fund, only the option currently available in the International Civil Aviation Organization, as described in paragraph 64 of the report of the International Civil Service Commission, would be appropriate;

2. Concurs with the decision of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to defer, until its next regular session, in 1994, consideration of an amendment to article 54 of the Regulations of the Fund to incorporate provisions governing the pensionable remuneration of ungraded officials, in order to allow time for the governing bodies of all member organizations of the Fund to take up the matters referred to them by the General Assembly in section III, paragraphs 5 and 6, of its resolution 46/192;

3. Approves, with effect from 1 April 1993, an amendment to article 28 (d) of the Regulations of the Fund, as set out in annex I to the present resolution, to extend the ceiling on pensions to ungraded officials, as well as to other participants who are not currently covered by article 28 (d) of the Regulations but whose pensionable remuneration is greater than that at the D-2 level, top step, in the scale of pensionable remuneration appended to article 54 of the Regulations;

Changes in the pension adjustment system

Recalling section IV, paragraph 31 of its resolution 46/192, in which it approved the longer-term modification of the pension adjustment system that the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board had recommended in 1991,

1. Takes note of the observations of the Board on the additional studies related to that modification, including, in particular, a change in the "120 per cent cap" provision, reviews of the special index for pensioners, the applicability to staff in the General Service and related categories of the longer-term modification of the pension adjustment system, as well as of the observations on the intention of the Board to make recommendations on these matters to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, in 1994;

2. Reiterates its request in section IV, paragraph 6, of its resolution 46/192 that the Board continue to consider economy measures, including, in particular, a change of the "120 per cent cap" provision under the two-track pension adjustment system;

3. Approves, effective 1 April 1993, modification of the schedule for the special adjustment of small pensions under section E of the pension adjustment system, as recommended by the Board in paragraph 104 of its report, and the consequential changes in the pension adjustment system, as set out in annex II to the present resolution;

VI

Other matters

1. Concur with the decisions of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, set out in paragraphs 124 and 125 of its report, to consider again, at its next regular session, in 1994, amendments to article 54 of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund to incorporate therein provisions governing the longevity/merit steps granted by some organizations to their staff, as well as a definition of the pensionable remuneration of staff in the United Nations Field Service category;

2. Takes note of the other matters dealt with in the report of the Board;

VII

Investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and welcomes, in particular, the commitment to global investment as indicated in paragraph 46 of the report of the Board and takes into account the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 23 of its report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

2. Reiterates its request to Member States that do not now grant tax exemptions for the investments of the Fund to make every possible effort to permit such exemptions as soon as possible.

ANNEX I

Amendment to the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Article 28

Retirement benefit

Replace paragraph (d) by the following:

“(d) (i) However, except as provided in (ii) below, the benefit otherwise payable at the standard annual rate in accordance with the applicable provisions of (b) or (c) above to a participant at a level above D-2, top step, of the scale of pensionable remuneration appended to article 54, shall not exceed, as at the time of the participant's separation, the greater of:

“(A) 60 per cent of his pensionable remuneration on the date of separation; or

“(B) The maximum benefit payable under the same provisions of (b) or (c) above to a participant at the level D-2 (top step for the preceding five years of the scale of pensionable remuneration appended to article 54, as adjusted), with 35 years of contributory service, separating on the same date as the participant;

“(ii) However, for a participant separating at the level of Under-Secretary-General, Assistant Secretary-General or their equivalent level to whom the provisions of (i) above are applicable, the benefit payable shall not be less than the benefit that would have been payable to him at the standard annual rate if he had separated from service on 31 March 1986; for participants separating at other levels above D-2, top step, in the scale of pensionable remuneration appended to article 54, to whom the provisions of (i) above are applicable, the benefit payable shall not be less than the benefit that would have been payable to the participant at the standard annual rate if he/she had separated from service on 31 March 1993; for participants who entered or re-entered the Fund at an ungraded level before 1 April 1993, the provisions of (i) above shall not be applicable.”

ANNEX II

Changes in the pension adjustment system

E. Special adjustments for small pensions

Replace paragraph 7 by the following:

“7. Whenever the standard annual rate of a retirement or disability benefit under the Fund's Regulations, before any commutation, is less than the highest dollar amount in the applicable table below, the benefit shall be subject to a special adjustment as follows:

Travel

Standards of accommodation for air travel

Responding to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October 1992 report⁽²⁾ on standards of accommodation for air travel covering the period from 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992. With regard to delegation travel, 31 journeys in first class air accommodation for one representative of each Member State designated as a least developed country (LDC) attending regular, special or emergency sessions of the General Assembly were paid for at a cost of $146,287. With regard to exceptions to the standards of accommodation of staff and others travelling on behalf of the Organization, which the Secretary-General was authorized to make on a case-by-case basis, 112 cases of first class travel and 55 cases of business class travel were authorized at a total additional cost of $199,675, compared with $106,600 for the previous reporting period. That significant increase in exceptions was attributable to the category of "eminent persons", for which in 1991-1992 there were 78 trips costing $91,071, compared with 34 trips costing $34,093 for 1990-1991.

ACABQ recommended that future reports of the Secretary-General on the issue should include information on the source of funding (regular budget, trust funds or the United Nations Development Programme) for the additional cost attributable to the granting of exceptions.⁽³⁾

On 23 December, by decision 47/460 A, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the issue.

Review of travel and related entitlements

In a November 1992 report,⁽⁴⁾ submitted in response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed travel and related entitlements for members of organs and subsidiary organs and staff members of the United Nations. The report noted that the question of travel entitlements was being reviewed in the ACC subsidiary structure. Also, it had proved more difficult than expected to prepare reliable cost estimates relating to proposals under consideration for the travel of Secretariat staff. It was, therefore, considered advisable to postpone the submission of recommendations relating to staff travel to the 1993 Assembly session. Consequently, the major part of the review dealt with the travel of members of United Nations organs and subsidiary bodies.

The report examined the legislative history of such travel, the current provisions for it, and the provisions in other United Nations organizations. It also analysed inconsistencies in current provisions and noted that travel entitlements for members of organs and subsidiary bodies differed considerably from one organization to another and from those of the United Nations. Therefore, it would not be possible in the near future to achieve uniformity and consistency by adapting the provisions of the United Nations to those of the specialized agencies and related organizations.

The Secretary-General said that the Assembly might decide to limit the payment of travel expenses for representatives in subsidiary organs of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to those from LDCs. With regard to the issues of exceptional payment of travel and subsistence expenses to representatives of Member States in CPC, he proposed a number of alternatives. He also proposed that the Assembly examine its past decisions on travel entitlements for representatives in functional commissions of the Council nominated directly by their Governments; provide clarification regarding the travel entitlements for members of the Commission on Crime and Criminal Justice; and address the issue of exceptional travel assistance to representatives from LDCs and other developing countries.

On 23 December, by decision 47/460 A, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report.

Administration of justice

In its annual note to the General Assembly,(1) the United Nations Administrative Tribunal reported that it had rendered 43 judgements during the year in cases brought by staff members against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other United Nations organizations to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related rules and regulations.

The Tribunal met in annual plenary session in New York on 19 November 1992 and held two panel sessions (Geneva, 1 June-2 July; New York, 19 October-20 November).

Chapter III

Other administrative and management questions

In 1992, the Committee on Conferences considered ways to improve the utilization of conference-servicing within the United Nations system. It recommended measures to control and limit documentation, and reviewed the functioning of the Office of Conference Services to ensure the most efficient and cost-effective management. The Committee reviewed requests for changes to the 1992 approved calendar and examined the draft revised calendar for 1993, which was subsequently approved by the General Assembly in December. Action was also taken by the Assembly on a number of issues related to conference-servicing.

The Assembly, in the context of the 1992-1993 programme budget, reviewed the status of the construction of conference facilities at Bangkok, Thailand, and Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; initiatives to enhance the technological infrastructure of the United Nations; and administrative and budgetary arrangements for the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, and the International Computing Centre. The Economic and Social Council examined ways to improve the access of Member States to the United Nations Information System and a study on the harmonization and improvement of the system.

Conferences and meetings

In 1992, the Committee on Conferences examined requests for additions and changes to the approved calendar of conferences for 1992.⁽¹⁾ It also examined the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1993.

The Committee discussed a number of issues related to the calendar, including measures to improve the utilization of conference-servicing resources, the organization of work, and the coordination of all organizational aspects of conference servicing. It also dealt with the need to control the amount of documentation. The Committee reviewed the United Nations publications policy, the workings of the Office of Conference Services, the 1992-1997 medium-term plan, and the organization of work of the Committee on Conferences.

Other matters dealt with in the Committee's September report⁽²⁾ included the feasibility of installing an appropriate signalling system at meetings where time-limits were set for speeches.

The Committee held an organizational session on 17 March and a substantive session from 24 to 28 August.

Mandate of the Committee on Conferences

During the year, the Committee continued its main task of presenting to the Assembly, through the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, a draft calendar of conferences and meetings for the following year or biennium. It also recommended measures to promote the efficiency of the Secretariat in terms of the planning and servicing of meetings and conferences, the provision of documentation, and the efficiency with which intergovernmental bodies utilized the conference-servicing resources available to them, tasks that had been extended to the Committee by the Assembly in 1988.⁽³⁾

At its organizational session in March 1992, the Committee on Conferences agreed that proposed changes to the calendar that did not have programme budget implications could be dealt with by the Secretariat in consultation with the Bureau of the Committee. A number of such proposals were made in 1992.

The Committee approved a two-day extension of the fifth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change, on the understanding that the change would not give rise to administrative or programme budget implications.

In April, the secretariat of the Economic and Social Council informed the Committee that the twenty-eighth session of the Committee for Development Planning (CDP), originally scheduled for New York from 20 to 24 April, would be held in Kuwait City from 18 to 22 April, following Kuwait's offer to host the session. No objection was raised by the Committee, on the further understanding that CDP would waive interpretation and other services for the meeting, which would be conducted in English, and that the Office of Conference Services would not assume any responsibility for the manner and level of servicing of the proposed session.

In April, the Committee was informed of the decision of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) to hold its thirty-sixth session at the headquarters of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) in London, in accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution(4), and of the request that the session be extended by one week. The Committee raised no objections provided the additional costs were met from within the 1992-1993 programme budget.

Also in April, the Committee approved a one-day extension of the meeting of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, originally scheduled to end 15 April, on the understanding that it be serviced from within existing resources.

In May, the Committee approved a request to schedule a resumed session of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in New York from 6 July for up to two weeks, on the understanding that the costs involved in servicing the session would be met from within the overall appropriations for conference servicing.

A request to schedule a reconvened session of the technical meeting for the International Year of the World's Indigenous People at Geneva from 3 to 5 August, following the session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, was also approved, provided it caused no administrative difficulties for the Office of Conference Services and that the costs of servicing the meetings would be met from within overall appropriations for conference servicing.

In June, the Committee approved a request to schedule the sixth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change from 19 to 23 October at Geneva, on the understanding that any additional costs would be met from within the appropriations of the 1992-1993 programme budget.

The Committee received a request in July from the Centre for Human Rights to schedule a one-day conference of the States parties to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, in New York during the second week of September, to consider and vote on a proposed amendment to the Convention. The request was granted, provided the conference-servicing costs involved would be met from within the overall appropriations for conference services and would not give rise to programme budget implications.

Also in July, the Committee approved a two-day meeting of the World Food Council (WFC) Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Council, in New York on 14 and 15 September, on the understanding that additional servicing costs would be met from the overall appropriations for conference services and that travel costs and related expenses would be also met from overall appropriations for that purpose.

Draft revised calendar 1993

From 25 to 27 August, the Committee on Conferences reviewed the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1993. It also considered a consolidated statement of scheduled special conferences for 1993(5) and considered a review of meeting and documentation requirements of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). The Secretariat reported orally on possible alternative scheduling arrangements for the Economic and Social Council.

During the discussion, the Committee noted the overlap of some meetings, particularly the World Conference on Human Rights and the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, meeting concurrently at Vienna, and the Commission on Human Rights at Geneva, which overlapped with the organizational session of the Economic and Social Council in New York.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly adopt the draft revised calendar for 1993 as amended and authorize the Committee to make any necessary adjustments arising from actions taken by the Assembly. It also recommended that the Assembly request all subsidiary bodies to seek the technical advice of the Office of Conference Services on the availability of conference-servicing facilities and resources prior to adjusting the dates and periodicity of future sessions, and that the Executive Board of UNICEF and the Governing Council of UNDP continue to evaluate and reduce, where possible, their meeting and documentation requirements.

The Committee requested the Secretariat to present to the 1992 session of the General Assembly a statement of programme budget implications on the proposed restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

The Committee Chairman was requested to suggest to all organs that they examine a comprehensive list of the reports being requested in draft decisions prior to the end of each regular session, so as to reduce the number and volume of separate reports.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1992/214 of 7 February 1992, the Economic and Social Council, following an invitation by the General Assembly in 1991,(1) granted authority to its Bureau to approve intersessional departures from its calendar of conferences and meetings in respect of its subsidiary bodies when the Council was not in session and after consulting with the Committee on Conferences.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1992, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/202 A without vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 43/222 B of 21 December 1988 and 46/190 of 20 December 1991,

1. Approves the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1993 as submitted and amended by the Committee on Conferences;
2. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make adjustments in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1993 that may become necessary as a result of action and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;
3. Urges all subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council to seek the technical advice of the Office of Conference Services on the availability of conference-servicing facilities and resources in the process of the determination and adjustment of the dates and periodicity of their sessions in order to enhance planning and optimize utilization of conference-servicing resources;
4. Urges all United Nations organs to utilize conference-servicing resources allocated to them in the most efficient and cost-effective manner and to maximize the accuracy with which they forecast the number of fully serviced meetings;
5. Requests the Secretariat to bring the relevant General Assembly resolutions and guidelines on the use of conference-servicing resources, and information on the notional costs per hour of meeting time, to the attention of all organs;
6. Urges all subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council to comply with the request of the General Assembly contained in paragraph 11 of its resolution 46/190 to undertake informal consultations on a regular basis for the purpose of improving the utilization of their conference-servicing resources;
7. Renews its request contained in paragraph 12 of its resolution 46/190 to the Chairmen of those subsidiary bodies to report the results of the consultations mentioned in paragraph 6 above to the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences, and requests the Committee on Conferences to carry out a comprehensive analysis of replies received;
8. Urges the subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council, in the context of the required consultations mentioned in paragraph 6 above, to evaluate and report on the measures taken, including the convening of meetings in a timely manner, rationalizing their meeting requirements, improving the scheduling of informal consultations, the possibility of biennializing agenda items, and monitoring the timely issuance and availability of documentation;

9. Invites the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to continue to evaluate their meeting and documentation requirements, with a view to rationalizing them, and to report on progress made thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Committee on Conferences;

10. Endorses the decision of the Committee on Conferences to request its Chairman to consult on its behalf with the Chairmen of organs concerned, where the utilization factor is lower than the established benchmark figure for the last three years, and requests the Committee on Conferences to report the results of the consultations to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

11. Decides that the consultations should be held with a view to making appropriate recommendations in order to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources and rationalizing the duration and frequency of conference-servicing time allocated, taking into account the high costs of conference servicing and the demands placed upon the Organization;

12. Welcomes the decision of the Committee on Conferences to incorporate availability and compliance indices on pre-session documentation into the experimental methodology on the utilization of conference-servicing resources;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Conferences with, in addition to the utilization rate, qualitative indicators and information about the way conference time is used in order to enable the Committee to make recommendations on conference time allocated to different bodies;

14. Requests the Committee on Conferences to finalize its analysis of the experimental methodology on the utilization of conference-servicing resources, to report on its conclusions and to submit its recommendations, as appropriate, including a revision of the benchmark figure requested in paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution 46/190, to the Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

15. Demands that all subsidiary organs of the General Assembly comply with the provisions of section I, paragraph 7, of its resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985;

16. Reaffirms that the Committee on Conferences and the Secretary-General should take account, in drawing up the calendar of conferences and meetings, of the principles contained in section I, paragraph 10, of resolution 40/243;

17. Reaffirms also that United Nations bodies may hold sessions away from their established headquarters when a Government issuing an invitation for a session to be held within its territory has agreed to defray the actual additional costs directly or indirectly involved, after consultation with the Secretary-General as to their nature and possible extent;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a revised consolidated statement of scheduled special conferences convened under United Nations auspices towards the end of each of its sessions.

General Assembly resolution 47/202 A

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/806) without vote, 17 December (meeting 47); draft by Bangladesh (A/C.5/47/L.11), based on informal consultations; agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 4, 5, 8-11, 47; plenary 93.

Conference and meeting services

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ submitted a July 1992 report on the review of the Office of Conference Services.⁽⁶⁾ The review concentrated on the Office of Conference Services at United Nations Headquarters. In summarizing the findings, the Secretary-General stated that the Office's working methods were generally efficient and effective, but there was room for improvement in some areas. The problems encountered resulted from external factors, including an increased demand for meetings; the concentration of conferences and meetings at certain times of the year; a significant number of meetings cancelled or convened at short notice; late submission of documents for processing; and the submission of incomplete or illegible documents.

The review covered the planning of meetings; interpretation services; verbatim reporting and précis writing; document processing, including editing, translations, text processing and reproduction; publications; library and information services; and technological innovations. The review indicated that steps were being taken towards improving the organizational structure of the Office. The Secretary-General reported that steps had also been taken towards implementation of many of the measures arising from the review, including the establishment of a meetings planning database, the cross-exchange of language staff, the issuance of verbatim records in final form only, the establishment of a separate organizational unit for contractual translations within the Translation Division, the introduction of new formats and typesetting for United Nations documents, improved costing and planning in publishing, and improved documents storage in the library. He recommended, as a means of improving the scheduling of meetings, that the precise requirements of a body and the schedule of its meetings be determined well in advance; that the entitlements of bodies with a utilization factor below the benchmark standard be reviewed by the Committee on Conferences; and that the Office be given sufficient notice of changes in requirements for language services.

The Secretary-General also recommended that a cost-benefit analysis of state-of-the-art teleconferencing be carried out and that intergovernmental bodies be encouraged to discuss the drafting of reports or resolutions in informal sessions for which summary or verbatim records would not be required.

None of the recommendations proposed by the Secretary-General carried financial implications for the 1992-1993 biennium.

In its discussion of the report on 25 and 26 August 1992,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Conferences noted the recommendations but stated that their cost-benefit aspects of applying new technologies in conference servicing should be addressed further. It requested the Secretariat to continue to monitor developments affecting the performance of the Office of Conference Services by: helping the Committee to fulfil its mandate; identifying constraints to the six-week rule for availability of pre-session documentation; ensuring adequate inter-departmental cooperation and capitalizing on the features of the Document Records, Information and Tracking System for the timely submission of documents; forecasting meeting requirements and necessary support services; analysing the utilization worldwide of conference-servicing capacity; ensuring system-wide coordination of conference services; and by conducting a cost-benefit analysis of video-conferencing.

ACABQ noted in October⁽⁷⁾ that the report of the Secretary-General had referred to productivity gains from technological innovations and trusted that more information would be provided in the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/202 C without vote.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the Office of Conference Services submitted in accordance with resolution 46/190 of 20 December 1991, which was considered by the Committee on Conferences to be a good description of the existing problems facing the Office but which lacked far-reaching proposals,

Reaffirming that the provision of appropriate, high-quality conference services to the United Nations is an essential element in the efficient functioning of the Organization,

Concurring with the conclusion of the Committee on Conferences that the ultimate aim for all organizational aspects of conference servicing would be to develop further a system of global planning and coordination—in order to ensure the most cost-effective management of the meeting and documentation resources—While maintaining the requisite high quality of services,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the review of the Office of Conference Services, to continue to monitor various factors affecting the performance of the Office, taking into account paragraph 100 of the report of the Committee on Conferences and the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee, and to provide recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in the context of the review mentioned in paragraph 1 above, a comprehensive review taking into account the reports of external consultants and all the recommendations of the Management Advisory Service, including the cost/benefit aspects of new technologies and the financial implications of the recommendations;

(b) To undertake a follow-up to the review of the Office of Conference Services by the Management Advisory Service and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

(c) To submit, if necessary, recommendations on possible restructuring of the Office of Conference Services to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Urges the Committee on Conferences to continue to explore ways and means for a more effective implementation of its terms of reference as set out in resolution 43/222 B of 21 December 1988 and the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Group of High-Level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, as approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, with a view to ensuring the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources, via, inter alia, minimizing wastage and the rationalization of meeting programmes and documentation requirements.

Language services

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1992, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/202 D without vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the use of languages in the United Nations,

Also recalling its resolution 42/207 C of 11 December 1987 on the equal treatment of all official languages of the United Nations,

Renews its request to the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure the provision of conference services as specified in its relevant resolutions and with due respect for the equal treatment of all official languages of the United Nations,

General Assembly resolution 47/202 D

22 December 1992 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Electronic signalling system

In June 1992,(8) the Secretary-General reported on the feasibility of installing an electronic signalling system at a number of the Organization's headquarters locations to monitor the length of speeches when time-limits were in effect. The feasibility of installing such a system, including technical specifications, was considered for New York, Geneva, Vienna, Santiago, Nairobi, Addis Ababa, Bangkok and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA). The Secretary-General also reviewed the experiences of other United Nations organizations with signalling devices and identified three possible systems. The first, involving an installation at each microphone position, was considered to be prohibitively expensive. The second, a permanently installed wall-mounted device would cost about $186,450 for 60 units. And the third, would involve portable units, which could be deployed wherever and whenever necessary at a total cost of $62,520 for 20 units. The Secretary-General recommended the portable system and in November, the Committee on Conferences, reporting on the programme budget implications,(9) stated that 29 portable signalling devices would be required for the conference centres in New York, Geneva, Vienna, Nairobi, Addis Ababa, Santiago, Bangkok and ESCWA at a total cost of $88,100, to be absorbed under appropriations for the 1992-1993 programme budget.

Speaking before the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of ACABQ said that in the Advisory Committee's view, the General Assembly should first decide whether there should be time-limits on speeches and statements and whether that decision would be consistently enforced; otherwise, the installation of a signalling system would be a waste of money. The Advisory Committee had been informed that there was such a device in the General Assembly Hall for enforcing time-limits, but it was hardly ever used.

The Assembly, by resolution 47/219 A, section XXI, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, endorsed ACABQ's comments and recommendations.

Workload standards

for conference-servicing staff

The Secretary-General submitted in December, pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly request,(10) a report on the elaboration of unified workload standards for conference-servicing staff within the United Nations system.(12) The report set out the findings and recommendations of the Inter-Agency Meeting on Language Arrangements, Documentation and Publications (IAMLADP), which had been mandated by the Organizational Committee of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) to gather data on the workload standards of the specialized agencies. Information submitted by the participating organizations related to interpreters, translators, revisers, précis-writers, text processors, verbatim reporters and reproduction staff.

At its 1991 session, IAMLADP found that the standards applied in most organizations for both regular staff and freelance interpreters, were virtually the same, and that this was also the case for précis-writers. Verbatim reporting was used only at the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), and their requirements were also virtually identical.

There was, however, a lack of consistency in the standards applied by the different organizations to translations and text processing which led IAMLADP to recommend that uniform standards be applied throughout the United Nations system. To that end, a Working Group met at the United Nations office at Geneva and devised a set of possible standards to cover translation, précis-writing and text processing.

At the 1992 session of IAMLADP, participating organizations agreed to a variable scale for translators and revisers and proposed standards for précis-writers. They also accepted a range of figures proposed by the Working Group for translators and text processors, on the understanding that each organization would have flexibility in applying the standards as circumstances required.

IAMLADP agreed that it was not practical to establish a common standard for the printing of documents, because of the diverse work requirements of the different organizations.

The General Assembly, by decision 47/460 A of 23 December, deferred until its 1993 session consideration of the Secretary-General's report.

Documents and publications

Documentation control and limitation

In June 1992,(1) the Secretary-General published an updated version of a document setting forth policies laid down by the General Assembly regarding the control and limitation of documentation, as requested by the Assembly in 1969.(2) The note, enumerating policy decisions adopted by the Assembly over the years, most recently in 1991,(3) was distributed to all Member States.

Most of the decisions applied to documentation for the Assembly and its subsidiary bodies. The Assembly, had also invited United Nations organs, particularly the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies, to apply the same policies to their documentation. Those organs had in general accepted the policies laid down by the Assembly with further instructions as their particular circumstances required.

The note summarized specific Assembly recommendations to limit and control general documents, meeting records, statements, reports and studies, annexes and supplements of the Official Records, documentation for treaty bodies and special conferences, statements of programme budget implications and notes. Annexes to the note outlined current meeting record entitlements and gave revised guidelines for the format and contents of reports of the subsidiary organs of the General Assembly.

In August, the Committee on Conferences(4) reviewed a report by the Secretariat containing statistics on communications from Member States circulated as United Nations documents for 1991, as well as a monthly breakdown of the total number of communications circulated from 1988 to May 1992.(5)

The Committee renewed the appeal to Member States to exercise restraint in their requests for the circulation of communications and recommended that the Assembly appeal to Member States to submit requests for the circulation of communications in the most appropriate, brief, complete, concise and timely manner possible.

Regarding the reports of subsidiary organs to the Assembly, the Committee, on 24 and 26 August, considered a Secretariat study(6) that indicated that there had been no recent improvement in compliance with an Assembly request that written records of meetings be limited to 32 pages.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly request the Secretariat to bring the relevant Assembly resolutions and rules and regulations on control and limitation of documentation to the attention of all organs at the start of sessions, and that Member States exercise restraint in requesting documentation and in the submission of their reports. It also recommended that the Assembly urge those subsidiary organs that had not been able to comply with the 32-page limit to continue attempts to reduce the length of future reports without compromising quality or mandated obligations. The Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare a model for final reports and to work with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) to incorporate the preferred format for reports and documentation costs into existing training programmes for new delegates and Secretariat officials.

Also in August, the Committee considered information on the number of meetings with summary records in New York, Geneva and Vienna from 1988-1991. Over the years, the Assembly had decided which subsidiary and governing bodies should receive summary records. The Secretariat reported that technological innovations had increased the capacity of the Verbatim Reporting Section and proposed issuing verbatim records of the Security Council and the Assembly in final form, on the understanding that consolidated corrigenda would be issued at appropriate intervals.

The Committee also discussed a general failure to comply with the six-week rule for the issuance of pre-session documentation. It recommended that the Assembly urge subsidiary organs to review their agendas and help remedy the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/202 B without vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the control and limitation of documentation, including resolutions 33/56 of 14 December 1978, 36/117 B of 10 December 1981, 37/14 C of 16 November 1982 and 45/238 B of 21 December 1990,

Recognizing the sovereign right of Member States to request circulation of communications as official documents,

Emphasizing the importance of timely availability of pre-session documentation,

Noting that summary records for some bodies entitled to such records have been discontinued for some time,

Taking into account annex VI, section III, to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

Noting with concern that some United Nations bodies may not be able to consider agenda items for which pre-session documents are submitted after those sessions have begun,

1. Renews its appeal to Member States to exercise restraint in their requests for circulation of communications and to submit their communications in the most appropriate, brief, complete and concise form possible and in a timely manner;

2. Requests Member States to exercise restraint in requesting documentation and in the submission of their reports;

3. Encourages those subsidiary organs that comply with the desirable thirty-two-page limit to continue that welcome practice;

4. Urges those subsidiary organs that have been unable to comply with the desirable thirty-two-page limit, in particular those provided with summary records, to make efforts to reduce the length of future reports;

5. Encourages those bodies that receive summary records and whose reports exceed the thirty-two-page limit to consider relinquishing their entitlement to summary records;

6. Urges those bodies that receive summary records to consider relinquishing their entitlement when drafting is being undertaken in formal session and duly recorded in the report;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to take necessary measures to ensure that pre-session documents for meetings are distributed no less than six weeks before the meetings in all official languages, unless there is a specific decision by the body concerned regarding the timing of issuance of pre-session documentation;

8. Urges the substantive departments of the Secretariat to comply with the rule which requires them to submit pre-session documents to the Office of Conference Services at least ten weeks before the beginning of sessions, in order to permit processing in time in all official languages;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the measures mentioned in paragraphs 7 and 8 above, to review all of the factors involved in the timely issuance of pre-session documentation, including the quality and timeliness of submission to the Office of Conference Services, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session through the Committee on Conferences;

10. Requests the Secretariat to bring to the attention of all organs and the substantive offices concerned the relevant General Assembly resolutions, rules and regulations on control and limitation of documentation, including the guidelines for drafting reports contained in General Assembly resolution 37/14 C and information on the notional cost per page of documentation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to review current mailing lists with the aim of pruning and updating them and eliminating waste;

12. Urges subsidiary organs to review their agendas with a view to enabling the Secretariat to comply with the six-week rule, inter alia, through combining agenda items and limiting requests for pre-session documentation, and requests the Secretary-General to inform the subsidiary organs of this appeal and to report orally to the Committee on Conferences on the measures taken to this effect;

13. Appeals to intergovernmental bodies to make active use of the report on the state of preparation of pre-session documentation when reviewing the organizational arrangements for substantive sessions;

14. Welcomes the decision of the Committee on Conferences to review the criteria for, status of and guidelines on the provision of written meeting records, and requests the Committee, taking into account the costs of conference servicing, to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session with concrete recommendations;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide summary records in a timely manner, particularly for the meetings of the Main Committees of the General Assembly, and in this regard urges him to improve the overall efficiency of conference services within existing resources;

16. Decides that, at its forty-ninth session, there shall be a comprehensive review of, inter alia, the need for and usefulness and timely issuance of verbatim and summary records, on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

17. Requests the Secretariat to issue the verbatim records of the plenary meetings of the General Assembly in final form only, on the understanding that those records would be issued promptly and that consolidated corrigenda would be issued at appropriate intervals;

18. Also requests the Secretariat to pursue the possibility of issuing the verbatim records of the Security Council in a similar manner, on the understanding that these records would be issued as promptly as the provisional ones are issued at present.

Publications policy

In August,(4) the Committee on Conferences reviewed a provisional outline of a report of the Secretary-General on the overall publications policy of the Organization, which was being prepared for the 1993 session of the General Assembly, as requested in 1991(7)

The Committee stressed that the report should be analytical in nature, presenting a critical assessment of publications policies and practices, identifying possible duplications or contradictions between instructions, and elaborating on current or proposed controls that could assist evaluation of the extent to which publications met their objectives.

Organization of editorial services

During 1992, in the process of restructuring the United Nations, editorial units at Headquarters were grouped along functional lines. An October note of the Secretariat(8) briefly outlined those changes; however, the question of whether it would be advantageous to consolidate editorial services under the Office of Conference Services would be examined further in the context of ongoing reviews of the Secretariat structure and the Organization's overall publications policy.

On 23 December, by decision 47/460 A, the General Assembly took note of the Secretariat note.

UN premises

Addis Ababa and Bangkok conference facilities

The annual progress report of the Secretary-General on the construction of additional conference facilities at Addis Ababa and Bangkok was submitted to the Fifth Committee in October 1992.(1) The report summarized the development of the two projects, approved in 1984,(2) and outlined the current status of construction and revised projections for their completion.

The Secretary-General reported that the pace of construction at Addis Adaba had improved substantially, but the project was only 13 per cent complete as of 1 September 1992, representing a delay of about six to seven months. Problems related to transportation and the availability of materials and labour continued to affect project timetables and cost estimates and the contractor had assumed a force majeure extension of 57 days and submitted a revised project timetable showing the completion of construction in December 1994. It was expected that the delays, the force majeure situation and other factors would affect the total original project cost of $107,576,900; however, it was anticipated that those factors could be absorbed within the present project budget.

The conference facilities at Bangkok were expected to be completed in November/December 1992, and commissioned in January/March 1993. Regarding damages brought by the United Nations against the contractor for failure to complete the project on time and the counter-suit by the contractor against the Organization, a comprehensive agreement was reached by the two parties. It was expected that the total project cost would not exceed the authorized $48,540,000.

Commenting on the Secretary-General's report,(3) ACABQ noted that the contractor in Addis Ababa had submitted a claim on 28 April for approximately $600,000 to cover the cost of the 57-day force majeure period and a second claim for approximately $14 million. He had also requested a 244-day extension of the completion deadline. The Advisory Committee shared the view of the Secretariat that the second claim, representing 20 per cent of the base contract total, was very high. ACABQ trusted that any settlement regarding those claims would be absorbed within the approved budget, and requested that it receive a progress report on the Addis Ababa project in 1993.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section II, the General Assembly, on the Fifth Committee's recommendation, took note of the Secretary-General's report and concurred with ACABQ's recommendations and requests.

Reimbursement of office accommodation costs

The Secretary-General presented in December 1991 a report to the Fifth Committee on the issue of reimbursement to the regular budget of the cost of accommodation for posts related to extra-budgetary activities,(4) as requested by the Assembly in 1989.(5) The report was not considered by the General Assembly at its 1991 session and was therefore resubmitted in 1992. According to the report, the regular budget of the United Nations bore a large portion of the cost of accommodation for staff charged against extrabudgetary resources. In the absence of a definitive policy on this matter, it had proved difficult to obtain reimbursement for those costs.

One suggestion to improve the current reimbursement system was that all specialized agencies be charged a proportionate share of operating expenses and common service costs in addition to rent.

ACABQ, in December 1992,(6) said the report was incomplete and requested an updated and thorough analysis, which it would consider with the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995.

By decision 47/460 of 23 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Information systems and computers

Technological innovations

During 1992, efforts continued to upgrade the technological infrastructure of the United Nations in the areas of desktop and larger computers and in communications technology to enhance connectivity among major duty stations.

According to the second annual report of the Secretary-General on the status of technological innovations in the United Nations,(1) presented in October 1992 in response to a 1991 General Assembly request,(2) the total number of personal computers at Headquarters had increased 23 per cent from 2,800 in 1991 to 3,450 in 1992. At offices away from Headquarters, the number had increased 127 per cent, from 2,470 in 1991 to 5,600 in 1992. The capacity to share information among users was increased through local area networks (LANs). The number of LAN servers increased by 61 per cent from 28 in 1991 to 45, supporting 830 personal computers. At other duty stations, the number of LAN servers increased by 135 per cent to 80, with the total number of personal computers connected to LANs up by 251 per cent from 700 to 2,460.

A more powerful LAN server—the UNIX—was being acquired to house large organizational databases, such as the integrated management information system (IMIS) and the optical disk system.

Establishing a comprehensive, global network system for the Organization remained a high priority. In the 1992-1993 biennium, the first phase of the installation of wiring for LANs, capable of carrying both voice and high-speed data traffic, was undertaken. The entire project was expected to be completed by the end of 1995 at a cost of $6 million. Efforts were also being made to modernize local communications systems at other duty stations.

The upgrading of the Organization's telecommunications network from analog to digital technology continued, with the provision of additional voice channel capacity between New York and Bangkok. Upgrades between New York and Nairobi and Addis Ababa through the deployment of digital Earth stations were also under way and the existing network of Earth stations used to support peace-keeping operations was gradually being retrofitted for digital operation. In addition, the United Nations was undertaking a comprehensive replacement and modernization of telephone systems at its offices in Addis Ababa, Bangkok, Geneva, Nairobi and Vienna.

The Organization also planned to replace existing data network facilities with packet switching equipment. Several other new technological applications were in the process of being installed during 1992, including IMIS, scheduled to become partly operational early in 1993 and the optical disk document storage and retrieval system.

Other applications discussed in the report included the United Nations standard word processing package; electronic mail; connection to Internet, a network of non-commercial organizations; and specialized applications developed by individual departments.

Telecommunications support for peace-keeping operations remained a major focus. Rapid-deployment communications kits were used for work in remote areas and the Field Operations Division was engaged in strategic planning for the use of new technologies for headquarters operations as well as for established and upcoming missions.

ACABQ submitted its comments on the report in December, together with comments on the optical disk project.(3)

Optical disk project

In November 1992,(4) the Secretary-General presented a progress report on the optical disk storage and retrieval system, as requested by the General Assembly in 1991.(2) At that time, the Assembly also approved phase II of the project for 1992-1993, subject to a performance report in 1992. The system uses international standards for storing, retrieving and transmitting text and image documents. In January, the optical disk storage equipment, UNIX servers and software, purchased as a part of phase I of the optical disk storage and retrieval project, were installed in Geneva and New York and the customized software was installed in June. The system was being integrated with the United Nations Bibliographic Information System (UNBIS) and the Document Recording, Information and Tracking System (DRITS). It was also expected that permanent missions of Member States at Geneva and New York would be linked to the system through the integrated services digital networks (ISDN) during the first quarter of 1993.

The Secretary-General proposed a revised distribution of the $1,564,500 already budgeted for phase II of the project among its various components. He also proposed that priority be given to establishing the system database during the remainder of the current biennium.

During phase III of the project, projected to cost $5.1 million and scheduled for 1994-1995, more resources would be devoted to extending system access within the Secretariat to translators, revisers, editors, reference and terminology and library staff in New York and Geneva.

Expected benefits from the completed system included reduced need for document storage; reduced print runs for parliamentary documents; improved efficiency through elimination of the need to prepare separate diskettes for various user departments; simplification of document archiving; and elimination of the need for missions to keep reference units for United Nations documents.

In December,(3) ACABQ agreed to the Secretary-General's proposed revised distribution of funds to cover phase II of the project.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section XIII, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and endorsed ACABQ's recommendations.

Integrated management information system

The fourth progress report on the IMIS project was submitted to the Fifth Committee by the Secretary-General in October 1992.(5) The project, approved by the General Assembly in 1988,(6) was to develop an integrated system for the processing of and reporting on administrative actions at all major duty stations, to replace numerous independent systems.

Originally, the project was to be implemented over a three-and-one-half year period at a cost not to exceed $28 million. The report outlined a revised implementation strategy for IMIS, which at Headquarters was planned to occur in five releases, between the beginning of 1993 and January 1994. Upon completion, the installation of the entire system would be undertaken at other offices, at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; Amman, Jordan; Bangkok, Thailand; Geneva; Nairobi, Kenya; Santiago, Chile; Vienna, Mexico City and Port-of-Spain, Trinidad. The report discussed the construction of the system, the installation of local area networks, the training of technical staff and users, and work-flow studies. It also presented the conclusions of independent experts, who evaluated the project, in accordance with a 1991 Assembly request,(2) and detailed the anticipated benefits to be derived from the System.

The total reassessed cost of the project through mid-1994, the expected completion date, was $41,332,900. The regular budget share of the project (65.1 per cent) would amount to $26,907,700, of which $19,579,200 had already been appropriated.

An appropriation for the regular budget share of the remaining costs of the project would be requested in the context of the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995, not including additional requirements for general temporary assistance amounting to $747,900 in 1993 and $808,800 for 1994-1995. In addition, hardware and software maintenance costs were estimated at approximately $750,000 per year (or 15 per cent of their estimated purchase cost). These costs were not included in the total estimate of $41.3 million for developing the project. The combined estimate for hardware and software amounted to $6.2 million.

ACABQ, in December,(3) noted that estimated expenditures for 1989-1993 totalled $22,167,500, against regular budget appropriations amounting to $19,579,200, leaving a shortfall. in 1993 of $2,588,300. The Secretary-General therefore requested the Assembly to reconsider its proposed programme budget for 1992-1993 and restore $2,588,000 out of a reduction approved in 1991. The Advisory Committee believed that implementation of IMIS should proceed as outlined by the Secretary-General but it recommended that the Assembly defer action on the request to restore the shortfall.

The General Assembly, by resolution 47/219 A, section XIV, adopted on 23 December on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report and endorsed ACABQ's recommendations.

UN informatics systems

In June 1992, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁷⁾ to the Economic and Social Council on international cooperation in the field of informatics, pursuant to a 1991 Council resolution,⁽⁸⁾ which had recommended more effective use of the existing coordinating mechanisms for informatics within the United Nations system.

The report provided information on the current and planned activities of the United Nations and its agencies in this field as well as arrangements for cooperation and coordination with other organizations of the system.

The report found that informatics projects fell under two main groupings; those that were global and mainly directed to the headquarters functions of United Nations agencies, but were also available to other agencies and governmental offices; and technical cooperation projects that were implemented at the national or regional level and designed to reinforce national capacities to manage specific substantive programmes. It noted, however, that there was no general framework for overall coordination and applications in developing countries. The report recommended that the new Department of Economic and Social Development consider developing a framework to identify problems that could be addressed through cooperation among United Nations bodies for the benefit of developing countries; and propose projects and programme activities at national and regional levels to foster the use of modern informatics technology for economic and social development.

In another June report,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General presented the results of a study, requested by the Council in 1991,⁽¹⁰⁾ outlining means of giving Member States, particularly developing countries, economical and unhindered access to United Nations databases, information systems and services. The report summarized the results of a questionnaire that was submitted to the missions of all Member States in New York and Geneva to determine their technological infrastructure, and described the status of the most-requested databases and database activities of the regional commissions. It also discussed the need for user-friendly access to data, a continuous flow of information to Member States, training and policy coordination, and the need to expand on-line services beyond the United Nations system.

The report cited a one-time cost of $226,000 and a recurring cost of $32,000 directly attributable to database activities, which could be absorbed within existing budget resources for 1994-1995. The Secretary-General noted that phase one to provide easy access to systems and services had begun. In phase two, longer-term components, such as the acquisition of the gateway computer and the provision of a continuous computer literacy training programme, would require additional resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1992/60 without vote.

The need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1991/70 of 26 July 1991,

Taking note with appreciation of the report prepared by the Secretary-General analysing the causes of the present situation with respect to United Nations informatics systems, and of the outline of solutions presented in that report,

1. Stresses the priority that it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for States Members of the United Nations and for observers to the growing computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations;

2. Reiterates the urgent need for representatives of States to be closely consulted and actively associated with the respective executive and governing bodies of the concerned United Nations institutions, such as the International Computing Centre and the Advisory Committee for the Coordination of Information Systems dealing with informatics within the United Nations system, so that the specific needs of States as internal end-users can be given due priority;

3. Calls for the urgent implementation of measures, if necessary in a phased programme, in order to achieve the objective of easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for all Member States and observers, in particular through their permanent missions, to United Nations computerized databases and information systems and services;

4. Requests that the initial phases of this action programme be implemented from within existing resources and in full consultation with the representatives of States;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the follow-up action taken on the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993;

6. Calls on Member States to pursue similar action in the governing bodies of the specialized agencies within which they are represented.

International Computing Centre

The 1993 budget estimates for the International Computing Centre (icc) were submitted by the Secretary-General in October 1992.⁽¹¹⁾ The Centre, established in 1971, provided a comprehensive range of data and text processing and related telecommunications services to those organizations of the United Nations system wishing to use them. Its 1993 budget estimate was $13,789,700, compared with $13,053,600 in 1992. Those organizations expected to use the Centre in 1993 included: the United Nations, the World Health Organization, UNDP, UNICEF, the International Labour Organisation, the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, the United Nations Environment Programme, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Trade Centre, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Monetary Fund, FAO, and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

The estimated cost to the United Nations for its use of the Centre in 1993 was $2,924,300. The ICC Management Committee agreed that its Director should recommend to the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) a biennial budget for ICC.

On 23 December, by resolution 47/219 A, section V, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly approved the 1993 budget estimates of ICC, amounting to $13,789,700, as proposed in the report of the Secretary-General.

Other administrative and budgetary arrangements

UNSCEAR

The results of a study on possible alternative arrangements for the secretariat of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation (UNSCEAR), including its merger with IAEA, were addressed in an October 1992 report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁾ as requested by the Assembly in 1991.⁽²⁾ UNSCEAR was located in the United Nations Office at Vienna and was served by a small secretariat. Its mandate was to review published reports and technical documents submitted by Member States of the Organization, the specialized agencies and IAEA on the sources and effects of ionizing radiation, and to evaluate the global exposure of man and assess the risk of harmful effects.

The proposal for a possible merger with IAEA was prompted by the location of both bodies at Vienna and their concern with atomic radiation. The Secretary-General was of the view that, because of the differing mandates, a merger of the UNSCEAR secretariat with IAEA would compromise the independent standing of UNSCEAR and he recommended that its present organizational location and administrative support be maintained.

ACABQ(3) recommended that other alternatives for the organizational location of and administrative support arrangements for the UNSCEAR secretariat be explored. (For information on the 1992 session of UNSCEAR, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

The General Assembly, by resolution 47/219 A, section VI, adopted on 23 December on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and requested him to explore possible alternatives for the organizational location of and administrative support arrangements for the secretariat of UNSCEAR.

UNITAR

In October 1992, the Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽⁴⁾ submitted a report on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR)⁽⁵⁾ in which he proposed that the United Nations take over UNITAR'S building in New York in exchange for cancelling its debt to the United Nations which, as of 30 June 1992, stood at $10,970,800, and for coverage of UNITAR'S 1992 financial obligations (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

The Secretary-General, in December,⁽⁶⁾ stated that the total additional appropriations required under the programme budget for 1992-1993, covering the cancellation of UNITAR'S debt, its financial obligations in 1992, the annual cost for building maintenance and security, repairs and improvements, and transitional arrangements from 1 January to 30 June 1993, was $15,989,000.

The Fifth Committee, in considering the programme budget for 1992-1993, recommended that, in order to provide the minimal transitional requirements for UNITAR until the Assembly could consider this matter at its resumed forty-seventh session, the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to commit funds, not to exceed $400,000, with the concurrence of ACABQ, for the period

1 January through 28 February 1993, with advances from the Working Capital Fund, to cover all building security and maintenance costs and to maintain the existing number of staff members at UNITAR's New York office for whom placement was to be sought elsewhere within the United Nations system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/219 A, section XXIV, without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research
[The General Assembly...]

Decides, in order to provide for the minimal transitional requirements for the United Nations Institute for Training and Research until the General Assembly can consider this matter at its resumed forty-seventh session, to authorize the Secretary-General to commit funds, not to exceed 400,000 dollars, for the period 1 January through 28 February 1993, by advances from the Working Capital Fund, to cover all costs related to the provision of security and maintenance of the premises of the Institute, as well as the costs of maintaining the existing number of staff members of the New York office of the Institute for whom placement is to be sought elsewhere within the United Nations system, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 42/97 of 11 December 1987;

...

General Assembly resolution 47/219 A, section XXIV
23 December 1992 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote
Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/835) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 104.
Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 50; plenary 94.

The General Assembly, on 22 December, decided to defer consideration of a draft resolution on UNITAR,⁽⁷⁾ originating in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, until its resumed forty-seventh session.

UN Postal Administration

In 1992, the gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from its sale of philatelic items both at Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $15 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations. Under the terms of an agreement between the Organization and the United States, revenue from the sale of United States dollar-denominated stamps used for postage from Headquarters was reimbursed to the United States Postal Service. Similarly, postal agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Switzerland and Austria required that revenue derived from the sale of Swiss franc-denominated stamps and Austrian schilling-denominated stamps for postage be reimbursed to the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively.

During the year, UNPA released six commemorative stamp issues, six definitive stamps, two souvenir cards, nine maximum cards, three pictorial postcards and two airletters.

The first set of six commemorative stamps, entitled "World Heritage—UNESCO", was released on 24 January to honour UNESCO's efforts to protect world heritage sites.

On 13 March, commemorative stamps were also issued on the theme "Clean Oceans", and on 22 May, a third issue, entitled "Earth Summit" was released to commemorate the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 3 to 14 June 1992.

Stamps were issued on 4 September to commemorate International Space Year—Mission to Planet Earth, and on 2 October on the theme "Science and Technology for Development".

The fourth set of stamps in the Human Rights Series was issued on 20 November, illustrating articles 19 to 24 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.⁽¹⁾

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1992, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued to foster peaceful uses of nuclear energy and the exchange of scientific and technical information, to establish and administer safeguards, to provide technical assistance to its member States and to establish health and safety standards.

In September, a review conference of the 1987 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material,^a convened by the Director General as depositary, affirmed that the Convention provided a sound basis for the physical protection of nuclear material during international transport and was acceptable in its current form.

Under the auspices of IAEA, an agreement on the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor Engineering Design Activities (ITER-EDA) was signed (Washington, D.C., 21 July 1992) by the four ITER parties—the European Atomic Energy Community, Japan, the Russian Federation and the United States.

IAEA carried out inspections in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Iraq and South Africa.

The thirty-sixth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 21-25 September 1992) adopted resolutions relating to measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear safety and radiological protection; South Africa's nuclear capabilities; Iraq's non-compliance with its safeguards obligations; IAEA safeguards in the Middle East; strengthening safeguards; practical use of food irradiation in developing countries; and a plan to produce potable water economically.

Estonia and Slovenia became members of IAEA, bringing the number of member States to 114 at the end of 1992. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Nuclear safety and radiation protection

In 1992, IAEA'S work under the programme on safety and nuclear installations continued to shift from establishing standards of safety to providing for their application. It also focused on the safety of nuclear powerplants in Eastern Europe and the successor States of the former USSR.

A new safety series report, updating a publication on the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear powerplant in Ukraine, reviewed earlier conclusions about the causes of the accident and found that the design of the reactor's control rods and safety systems and deficiencies in the regulation and management of safety played a greater role than was previously acknowledged.

During 1992, there were five Operational Safety Review Team missions to nuclear powerplants, four follow-up visits and two technical exchange visits. In addition, 18 Assessment of Safety Significant Events Team missions were carried out and an International Regulatory Review Team visited Romania to advise and assist in strengthening and enhancing its nuclear regulatory body.

The International Nuclear Event Scale (INES) was used in many countries to rate nuclear incidents. A related information system was made operational, through which INES national officers in 50 member States were provided with timely information. In 1992, information on 72 nuclear events was communicated through the continuously operational system. A test period began for the use of INES in non-reactor facilities.

IAEA continued to implement an extra-budgetary programme of assistance to Eastern Europe and the successor States of the former USSR. In the area of nuclear plant safety assessment, Agency efforts helped to achieve a consensus on the technical safety issues for first-generation pressurized-water reactors.

Several site/seismic safety reviews carried out in 1992 were follow-up activities of recommendations made in missions to sites in 1990 (Kozloduy, Bulgaria; Bohunice, Czechoslovakia; Muria, Indonesia; Chashma, Pakistan). New reviews involved a plant currently shut down (the Armenia nuclear powerplant) and one in operation (Krsko, Slovenia).

IAEA conducted Integrated Safety Assessment of Research Reactors (INSARR) reviews in 1992 in Peru, Portugal and Turkey. INSARR teams visited research reactors in Argentina, Peru, Romania, Slovenia and Turkey to review safety standards and measures.

The radiation protection programme focused on developing international basic safety standards for protection against ionizing radiation and the safety of radiation sources. The 1992 IAEA General Conference approved a proposal for education and training in radiation protection and nuclear safety and asked IAEA to implement it. Support was given to the United Nations International Cooperation Project for Chernobyl through a joint project with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) on the use of caesium binders for reducing radiocaesium contamination of the milk and meat of grazing animals. IAEA Radiation Protection Advisory Teams visited Albania, Poland and the United Arab Emirates. A project to provide radiation protection services to 16 African member States showed that 11 of them had enforced radiation protection legislation and 4 had at least an advanced draft ready to be promulgated. The IAEA Emergency Response Unit was maintained in a fully operational state 24 hours a day.

Nuclear power

Assistance to IAEA developing member States for nuclear power programme planning and development included support to China, for nuclear power economics and development plans; Peru, for energy and power assessment programmes; and Romania, for energy demand forecasting and electricity expansion planning. Czechoslovakia received assistance, with support from Spain, for the preliminary evaluation of bids for the next nuclear powerplant to be ordered. A case-study on the feasibility of small and medium power reactors in Egypt was completed, and support continued to be provided to the National Atomic Energy Agency of Indonesia in training personnel to conduct a feasibility study for its first nuclear powerplant.

At the end of 1992, the Power Reactor Information System (PRIS) database included information on the status and operating experience of some 423 nuclear powerplants. There were 64 users in 26 countries and 3 international organizations. A subset of the databank, MicroPRIS, was distributed to 147 users in 50 member States and 7 international organizations.

In the area of nuclear fusion, activities focused on lifetime predictions for fusion materials.

Nuclear fuel cycle

Uranium production outside the centrally planned economies declined further in 1992, by about 4,500 tonnes to 23,500 tonnes, due to continuing unfavourable market conditions. Nine countries produced 95 per cent of the total and eight countries contributed the remaining 5 per cent. The resulting production was covered by material held in stock and inventories in China and the former USSR.

In the area of reactor-fuel technology and performance, technical committee meetings were held on fuel failure (Dimitrovgrad, Russian Federation); the behaviour of core materials and fission-product release in accident conditions in light water reactors (Cadarche, France); fission-gas release and fuel-rod chemistry related to extended burn-up (Ontario, Canada); and in-core instrumentation and in situ measurements (Petten, Netherlands).

Missions to Hungary and Ukraine advised on the management of spent fuel from nuclear power reactors.

Radioactive waste management

In 1992, IAEA's radioactive waste management programme focused on: developing and implementing its Radioactive Waste Safety Standards programme; strengthening the waste-management infrastructure in countries where waste arose from the use of radioactive materials; and collecting and distributing technical information on handling, processing and disposing of radioactive waste generated from nuclear applications. Other areas emphasized strengthening the capabilities of member States in: technical and regulatory aspects of decommissioning nuclear facilities (including research reactors and uranium mining and milling plants); assessing the radiological and environmental impacts of waste disposal; and quality assurance methods for waste packages and disposal systems.

Under the radioactive waste management advisory programme, two regular missions and one fact-finding mission were carried out. Assistance was provided to member States in the form of fact-finding missions to assess the safety of uranium mine-mill tailing sites and the effectiveness of waste-management infrastructures. Training courses were organized on a systems approach to radioactive waste management (Czechoslovakia and Egypt); management of spent radiation sources (Brazil); ageing, decommissioning and major refurbishment of research reactors (Thailand); and marine radioactivity studies (Mexico). A symposium on the geological disposal of spent-fuel, high-level and alpha-bearing wastes was organized jointly with the Commission of the European Communities and the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development.

IAEA initiated with Norway and the Russian Federation a programme to investigate and assess the consequences of dumping radioactive wastes in the Arctic seas and to consider the feasibility of possible remedial actions. The programme had the support of the parties to the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Convention 1972, formerly known as the London Dumping Convention).

Food and agriculture

Under a joint IAEA/FAO programme, member States were assisted in using nuclear techniques in their agricultural research and development to improve food production, reduce food losses and protect the environment. In keeping with worldwide trends, greater emphasis was placed on nuclear biotechnology tools and environmental problems. IAEA sought to contribute to increasing and sustaining soil fertility and crop production by focusing on identifying and selecting genotypes of crops that were capable of growing and producing well in soils low in plant nutrients, in saline and acidic soils and under drought conditions. A wheat genotype was discovered in Morocco with both high yield and high water-use efficiency.

A project on the genetic improvement of basic food crops in Africa emphasized the domestication of local plant species as sources of food. The first phase of a regional project on cereal improvement in Latin America found that, through intensive training, expert services and a research network, it was possible to integrate modern mutation techniques into plant-breeding practices on a large scale.

Support was provided for national animal production and veterinary institutes in the use of radioimmunoassay, enzyme-immunoassay and deoxyribonucleic acid probes to improve the sustainability of livestock production systems through better feeding, reproductive management, and diagnosis and control of animal diseases. Strides were made towards eradicating rinderpest in Africa, so that in 1992 the disease occurred in only two countries.

The sterile insect technique programme in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya eradicated the screw-worm fly from North Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Also in North Africa, the Maghreb-meb project evaluated the feasibility of medfly eradication from Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco and Tunisia, where it caused losses of $90 million annually. Other species of fruit fly were the targets of activities in Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand. Further progress was achieved in combating tsetse flies in Zanzibar, United Republic of Tanzania.

In 1992, an action plan was developed for utilizing food irradiation in developing countries. In France, Indonesia and the United States, three additional food irradiators became available for processing food and other products, bringing the total number of such facilities to 53. Support was given to Bangladesh, Ghana and Viet Nam to build demonstration irradiators for treating food and sterilizing medical supplies.

Human health

The programme on human health addressed issues where nuclear techniques were especially efficient and cost-effective in the prevention, diagnosis, prognosis and treatment of diseases, or in the analysis of health problems related to the environment, such as pollution and the availability of nutrients. In collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), it emphasized techniques suitable for the study and management of communicable diseases, nutritional problems, and cancer, heart and brain diseases, all of which were of special significance to developing countries. Projects in 1992 continued to focus on strengthening indigenous skills and capabilities not only in methodology, but also in reagent production and in maintenance, repair and upgrading of medical nuclear instruments.

The IAEA/WHO Secondary Standard Dosimetry Laboratory Network included 65 laboratories and 6 national organizations in 52 member States, as well as 14 affiliated members. Services continued in the areas of dose intercomparison and assurance, and support for technology transfer.

Nutritional and health-related environmental studies focused on micronutrient nutrition projects, research on environmental pollution using nuclear and isotope techniques and services to international pollution-monitoring programmes.

Physical and earth sciences

IAEA continued to promote the exchange of information on physical and earth sciences and to assist countries with the application of nuclear techniques in experimental physics, analytical and radiation chemistry, non-destructive testing, radiation processing, industrial process control, geology, mining and hydrology.

Some 4,000 scientists participated in the activities of the International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy) and in the programme for training at Italian laboratories. Over 56 per cent of the scientists came from developing countries.

The industry and earth sciences programme focused on nuclear methods to monitor and control environmental pollution; assessment and transfer of radiation technology; assessment and transfer of nucleonic control systems and radiotracer applications in the mineral industry; assessment of water resources, emphasizing arid and semi-arid regions; evaluation of the contamination risk for water resources and of processes of contaminant transport in water bodies; exploration of geothermal areas, emphasizing high enthalpy fluids; and studies of sediment transport-related problems.

Environmental protection

The IAEA Marine Environment Laboratory (Monaco) continued its collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to provide comprehensive technical support for the assessment of global and regional marine pollution. An IAEA/UNEP/UNESCO Memorandum of Understanding was signed to set out strategies for tripartite coordinated planning and implementation of activities on marine pollution by the Laboratory.

During the year, there was an increasing demand for the services of the Laboratory. It participated in an assessment of the consequences of past disposals of high-activity-reactor components in the marginal seas of the Arctic Ocean. Besides waste-disposal impact assessment, the Laboratory's programme included analytical quality control services, in-house and field training, capacity-building, radioactivity monitoring, radiological assessment, marine modelling, database provision, emergency response planning and the application of nuclear and isotopic techniques to the marine sciences, including assessment of post-war pollution in the Persian Gulf, contributions to understanding the global carbon cycle and commencement of a Black Sea pollution tracer study. In addition, the Laboratory participated in an extensive experimental survey of nuclear and non-nuclear contamination along the Danube River basin.

IAEA laboratories (Seibersdorf, Austria) participated in many environmental activities of the Agency. The chemistry unit continued to assist in the World Meteorological Organization's Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network by acting as a sample collection, data acquisition and distribution centre.

Technical cooperation

During 1992, a total of 1,094 projects were operational under IAEA's technical cooperation programme for the transfer of nuclear technologies in medicine, agriculture, industry and other fields, of which 193 were completed. Activities included the provision of training to more than 2,150 scientists, the assignment of some 2,250 experts and lecturers, and the completion of 37 training courses. Total new resources available for technical cooperation amounted to $40.3 million as against $49.1 million in 1991, reflecting a sharp drop in the exchange rate of non-convertible currencies. The Technical Assistance and Cooperation Fund accounted for 82.9 per cent of those resources, with extrabudgetary funds accounting for 12.4 per cent, assistance in kind for 3.2 per cent, and the United Nations Development Programme for 1.5 per cent. The programme placed continuing emphasis on radiation protection and safety-related activities, which accounted for 21.9 per cent of all disbursements, followed by 19.8 per cent for activities related to physical and chemical sciences and 18.3 per cent for those concerning food and agriculture. Human health accounted for 14.5 per cent of all disbursements, followed by industry and earth sciences with 13 per cent.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

During 1992, IAEA carried out eight inspections in Iraq, bringing the total number of inspections to 16 since May 1991, and implemented the essential elements of the plan for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of the items indicated in a 1991 Security Council resolution.^b Inspections also were carried out in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and South Africa. (For details of IAEA activities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Iraq, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

At the end of December 1992, 188 safeguards agreements were in force with 110 States (and with Taiwan). In 1992, safeguards agreements pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons^c (NPT) entered into force with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Lithuania, Malawi, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, the Syrian Arab Republic and Trinidad and Tobago. The remaining two nuclear-weapon States-China and France-acceded to NPT, as did Azerbaijan, Estonia, Latvia, Myanmar, Namibia, the Niger, Slovenia and Uzbekistan, bringing the total number of States parties to 156.

During 1992, safeguards were applied in 44 States under agreements pursuant to NPT or to NPT and the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), in one State under an agreement pursuant to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, and in 10 States under bi- or trilateral agreements; at the end of 1992, safeguards in 1 of those 10 States were being applied pursuant to NPT. Preliminary visits were made in one State with which a safeguards agreement pursuant to NPT entered into force late in the year. Safeguards activities pursuant to NPT in Iraq continued and IAEA applied safeguards to nuclear installations in Taiwan.

As at 31 December 1992, safeguards agreements were in force with 94 States pursuant to NPT. For 55 non-nuclear-weapon States party to NPT, there was still no safeguards agreement in force in accordance with the Treaty. As far as IAEA was aware, only three of those States had significant nuclear activities.

NPT safeguards agreements had been concluded with all 11 signatories of the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Rarotonga Treaty). Safeguards were applied in one of those States.

^cYUN 1968, p. 17, GA res. 2373(XXII), annex, 12 June 1968.

Twenty of the 24 States party to the Treaty of Tlatelolco had concluded agreements with IAEA pursuant to that Treaty, and 17 of those agreements were in force. Safeguards agreements pursuant to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco were in force with two States with territories in the zone of application of the Treaty, and a similar agreement with a third such State was approved by the Board of Governors.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS), with 81 States and 17 international organizations participating, had a bibliographic database on nuclear literature totalling 1,628,962 records by year's end.

The INIS Clearing-house distributed about 490,000 microfiches, representing over 24 million printed pages of non-conventional literature documents, plus about 1.6 million printed pages of INIS Atomindex, which was available on microfiche.

Secretariat

At the end of 1992, the IAEA secretariat staff totalled 2,135, with 798 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,337 in the General Service category. Among the 596 staff members in posts subject to geographical distribution, 80 nationalities were represented.

Budget

The regular budget for 1992 amounted to $206,217,000, of which $197,656,000 was to be financed by member States on the basis of the 1992 scale of assessment; $5,021,000 from income from reimbursable work for others; and $3,540,000 from other miscellaneous income. However, because of a shortfall in expected receipts, steps were taken to reduce the budget by 13 per cent to $179,865,400. Actual expenditures from the regular budget amounted to $178,659,358; the authority to spend an amount of $16,229,600 was reserved for deferred programme activities to be carried out in 1993 if arrears of contributions were received in time. Together with the actual expenditures, this resulted in an unused budget of $11,328,042.

The target for voluntary contributions to the Technical Assistance and Cooperation Fund in 1992 was established at $52.5 million, of which $37.6 million was pledged by member States.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

In 1992, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued activities in its six major programme areas: promotion of policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; development of human resources; improvement of working and living conditions and environment; promotion of social security; strengthening of industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) cooperation; and the advancement of human rights in the social and labour fields. The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical cooperation activities, research and publishing.

Azerbaijan, Croatia, Estonia, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, Slovenia and Uzbekistan joined ILO, and Viet Nam resumed its membership, bringing its total membership to 160. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Meetings

The seventy-ninth session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 3-23 June 1992) was attended by some 2,000 delegates and advisers from 151 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the ILO Governing Body, the report of the Director-General concerning democratization and ILO, and the twenty-eighth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference adopted a new Convention and Recommendation on the protection of workers' claims in the event of the insolvency of their employer. It held a first discussion on the prevention of industrial disasters with a view to adopting standards in 1993.

A general discussion focused on ways of making fullest use of human resources in countries grappling with economic crisis and structural adjustment. A special sitting discussed the Director-General's report on the situation of workers of the occupied Arab territories.

A tripartite Conference committee again examined the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by member States (Geneva, 12-25 March) and reviewed the application of ILO standards on minimum wages.

Delegates from 33 countries met in the Thirteenth Conference of American States Members of ILO (Caracas, Venezuela, 30 September-7 October). The Conference discussed economic restructuring and the role of social security in the restructuring process. It adopted conclusions on ILO technical cooperation and international labour standards and a resolution on democratization.

Among industrial meetings held during the year were: the twelfth session of the Inland Transport Committee (Geneva, 22-30 January) dealing with social and legal protection of transport workers; the Fourth Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Leather and Footwear Industry (Geneva, 12-20 February) covering employment competitiveness issues; the twelfth session of the Iron and Steel Committee (Geneva, 1-9 April) dealing with training; a Tripartite Meeting on Conditions of Employment and Work of Performers (Geneva, 5-13 May); a Tripartite Meeting on Social and Labour Issues in the Pulp and Paper Industry (Geneva, 20-28 October); and the twelfth session of the Building, Civil Engineering and Public Works Committee (Geneva, 2-10 December) focusing on skill requirements and training.

Other meetings included a Meeting of Experts on Labour Statistics (Geneva, 28 January-6 February); a Meeting of Experts on Safety in the Use of Chemicals at Work (Geneva, 24 March-1 April); the eleventh session of the Joint ILO/WHO Committee on Occupational Health (Geneva, 27-29 April); and a Tripartite Advisory Meeting on Environment and the World of Work (Geneva, 2-4 November).

International standards

During 1992, ILO activities concerning Conventions and Recommendations consisted of standard-setting and supervision of standards.

Standard-setting

In 1992, the International Labour Conference adopted the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Convention (No. 173) and Recommendation (No. 180).

The Social Security (Seafarers) Convention (Revised), 1987 (No. 165), entered into force on 2 July 1992, having received the requisite number of ratifications (Hungary on 13 December 1989 and Spain on 2 July 1991).

During the year, 154 ratifications of ILO Conventions by 24 member States were registered, bringing the total number of ratifications as at 31 December 1992 to 5,716. There were also 13 denunciations, including one of the Night Work (Women) Convention, 1919, by Argentina, and four of the Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96), by Côte d'Ivoire, Finland, Germany and Sweden.

Supervision of standards

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations met in March to carry out its supervisory functions regarding compliance by member States with their obligations under the ILO Constitution and international labour standards. The Committee examined 2,351 reports by countries on their compliance with ratified Conventions and made 1,707 comments on them. It was able to note 50 instances in 1992 in which Governments had changed their law and practice to come into closer conformity with ratified Conventions, following the Committee's earlier comments. It also noted more than 200 instances in which employers' or workers' organizations exercised their right to make observations on Governments' reports.

The Committee also carried out a general survey of the application by member States of selected international labour standards, whether or not they had been ratified by all countries. The 1992 survey dealt with the application of the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention (No. 26) and Recommendation (No. 30), 1928; the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention (No. 99) and Recommendation (No. 89), 1951; and the Minimum Wage-Fixing Convention (No. 131) and Recommendation (No. 135), 1970.

The Governing Body's Committee on Freedom of Association, which examined complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations, met three times during 1992. The Committee dealt mostly with complaints alleging violations of trade union rights. A Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association completed its examination of a complaint by the Congress of South African Trade Unions against South Africa. Its report was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations.

A number of special procedures were pursued during 1992 to examine complaints and representations under various articles of the ILO Constitution. Complaints under article 26 were examined concerning the application of ratified Conventions by Côte d'Ivoire and Sweden, and representations under article 24 were examined concerning Venezuela and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Employment and development

Active labour market policies

The active labour market policies programme assisted member States to formulate and implement labour market policies to improve access to employment and incomes and the functioning of the labour market. It also assisted in preventing the marginalization and impoverishment of vulnerable groups, and to stimulate labour productivity in order to create favourable conditions for economic growth and income with employment security.

Tripartite meetings were held in Moscow and St. Petersburg on labour market policies, trends and challenges posed by the market-oriented reforms being implemented in the Russian Federation, especially the employment impact of enterprise restructuring. A regional seminar on labour market information and analysis was held at Montreal, Canada, for officials from eight African countries. Technical advice on labour market issues was provided to trade union officers from several Asian and African countries.

Technical cooperation projects on labour market information and analysis were in operation in the Gambia, Indonesia, Kenya, Turkey and Zimbabwe. Similar projects were completed in Nigeria and Zambia. New projects were started in Angola, Cape Verde, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe. Projects aimed at assisting countries in transition to a market economy were operational in Czechoslovakia and in five successor States of the former USSR. Technical advisory missions on labour market policy analysis and information visited eight countries.

Working environment

The International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment continued to assist countries in promoting occupational safety and health and improving general working conditions.

A regional project in Asia for improving safety and health practices and strengthening advisory, training and information activities was extended to 21 countries. In Africa, a regional project on occupational safety and health training and information assisted 19 countries. Workshops and seminars were held in Africa and in Asia and the Pacific on the safe use of chemicals at work and on preventing major hazards. Twenty-one extra-budgetary projects were conducted in 14 countries, and consultancies, fellowships and assistance to seminars were provided in 18 developing countries. Technical cooperation activities were also aimed at improving working conditions and productivity in small and medium-sized enterprises and at preventing and reducing alcohol and drug problems in the workplace.

The protection of working children and the gradual elimination of child labour were also of concern to ILO. The International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour was launched with the support of Germany. More than 80 projects with government institutions, trade unions, employers' organizations and non-governmental organizations were being implemented in six countries.

A code of practice and a training manual on safety and health in the use of chemicals at work and guides on protection from non-ionizing radiation were prepared. Issues of the Conditions of Work Digest were published on sexual harassment and on preventing stress at work.

Field activities

In 1992, total expenditure on operational activities from all sources of funds stood at nearly $164 million (approximately 3.7 per cent less than the previous year). As in the past, the United Nations Development Programme remained the largest single source of external funding, providing about $76 million, which represented close to 46.4 per cent of overall ILO expenditure on operational activities.

Trust funds and multi-bilateral sources provided close to $65 million, representing some 40 per cent of overall expenditure. The ILO regular budget provided close to $14 million, representing 8.4 per cent, and the United Nations Population Fund some $9.1 million, representing 5.6 per cent.

The three leading programmes in terms of annual expenditure were the employment and development programme ($46.2 million), comprising primarily projects in support of rural development, migration and population and employment strategies; the enterprise and cooperative development programme ($43.6 million); and the programme on vocational training systems, rehabilitation and training policies ($26 million). Other significant technical programmes focused on industrial relations and labour administration ($7.9 million), working conditions and environment ($6.8 million), and sectoral activities ($9.2 million), of which more than half were activities in support of the hotel and tourism sector. There was also a significant growth in expenditure on programmes concerned with the promotion of social security, which rose to $4.2 million from $3 million in 1991. ILO devoted $1.6 million and $8.3 million, respectively, for activities in support of employers' and workers' organizations. Africa remained in the forefront of ILO operational activities ($76 million, representing 46.6 per cent of the total expenditure), followed by Asia and the Pacific ($40.1 million) and the Americas ($23.2 million).

Educational activities

In 1992, in addition to focusing on the vocational training needs of the disadvantaged, ILO paid particular attention to the reform of training policies and systems in the context of structural adjustment and economic transition. Emphasis was placed on increasing the responsiveness of training systems to changes in the demand for labour and on the role of training in mitigating the social costs of adjustment. It provided advisory services in the formulation of coherent policies and programmes to support national skills development efforts. In the context of the growth of nationally executed technical cooperation activities, it provided training and advisory services to member States on planning and managing technical assistance. Research activities undertaken by ILO regional centres were coordinated with the analytical work undertaken by ILO headquarters units; ILO also participated in organizations, such as the Donors to African Education group, which aimed at achieving greater coherence and coordination among donors supporting education and training assistance to developing countries.

The activities of ILO's International Institute for Labour Studies were guided in 1992 by a new core theme on the interaction between labour institutions and the changing economic, social and technological environment. Two new programmes were established—labour institutions and economic development and labour institutions and new industrial organization.

The programme on economic development started work on the conceptual and statistical characteristics of labour institutions to develop a typology of development patterns reflecting both labour institutions and macroeconomic policies and outcomes. It launched a series of eight seminars on labour institutions and economic transformation. The programme also promoted capacity-building in labour market research in Africa through networks and training.

The programme on labour institutions and new industrial organization examined new forms of production and industrial organization and explored their relationships with labour institutions. It concentrated on the implications for labour of the changing geography of production and explored the prospects of endogenous development and social dialogue and labour standards, at local and regional levels. Two conferences studied inter-enterprise networks, labour and labour institutions and the social implications of lean production (a Japanese model of work and production organization).

The twenty-seventh annual international internship course on active labour policy development was attended by participants from 17 countries, who were introduced to the objectives, structure and programmes of ILO and to major labour and social policy issues. A regional internship course on economic reform and labour policy in Central and Eastern Europe was designed to enhance the capacity of middle-level officials from that region to develop and manage labour policy in the context of economic and social transition.

Two social policy forums were held in 1992. The first—on work, culture and religion—examined the influence of religious ethics in shaping attitudes towards work and economic growth. The second—on social dialogue and industrial relations in Latin America—examined the relationship between social dialogue, political participation and economic and social change.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 3,263. Of these, 1,330 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,933 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 580 were assigned to technical cooperation projects.

Budget

The International Labour Conference in June 1991 adopted a budget of $405.69 million for the 1992-1993 biennium, which, at the exchange rate of 1.55 Swiss francs to the United States dollar, amounted to 628,819,500 Swiss francs.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The 49-member Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the organization's governing body, held its one hundred and second session in 1992 (Rome, Italy, 9-20 November). The Council urged that food aid deliveries to developing countries not be reduced as a result of the significant assistance requirements of some countries of Eastern Europe and the successor States of the USSR. It emphasized the increasing role played by FAO in providing policy advice to member States in the areas of food security and nutrition, structural adjustment and economic transformation, trade, sustainable development and environmental resource management, as related to agriculture, fisheries and forestry. It requested FAO to assist member States in their efforts to implement the principles of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) to achieve sustainable development. It urged the countries and groups of countries involved in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII) negotiations to bridge their remaining differences in order to reach a successful conclusion.

During 1992, FAO held five regional conferences—in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and the Near East—to assess problems in agriculture, forestry, fisheries and rural development unique to those regions and to review its work within each region.

The Conference for Africa (Accra, Ghana, 20-24 July), attended by representatives of 35 nations, called for FAO's assistance in responding to the effects, particularly on food security, of structural adjustment programmes. It expressed grave concern about the worsening of rural poverty and urged developed countries to intensify assistance. It adopted the Accra Declaration on a Sound Environment for Sustainable Development in Africa, appealing for a mobilization of resources to enable Africa to feed its people.

At the Conference for Asia and the Pacific (New Delhi, India, 10-14 February), representatives of 27 nations discussed measures to alleviate rural poverty, arrest land degradation, intensify pest control and develop agro-processing industries in a region where more than 400 million people remained undernourished, and stressed the importance of vocational education and skill development, especially for women.

The Conference for Europe (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 24-28 August), at which 28 nations and the European Economic Community (EEC) were represented, discussed the food and agricultural situation in Europe, FAO's medium-term plan in the European region, 1994-1999, and alternative uses of marginal land and set-aside farmland in Europe. The Conference called on FAO to help Eastern European countries formulate agricultural policies and establish sustainable production structures and modern distribution systems.

The Conference for Latin America and the Caribbean (Montevideo, Uruguay, 28 September-2 October), attended by representatives of 25 nations, stressed the importance of improved food quality and safety systems for all countries of a region plagued by increasing malnutrition and a persistent cholera epidemic. It recommended the creation of information exchange networks, such as the FAO-sponsored Technical Cooperation Network on Plant Biotechnology, to help develop sustainable production alternatives.

At the Conference for the Near East (Tehran, Iran, 17-21 May), representatives of 23 nations requested FAO assistance in water management, including the formulation of national water policies, the monitoring of water quality, agricultural extension services and information systems for water use. It also discussed requests for FAO assistance in controlling animal diseases such as foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, brucellosis and parasitoses.

As at 31 December 1992, FAO membership remained at 161 and 1 associate member. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

World food situation

In 1992, the world food supply increased, reversing the sharp fall that had occurred in the previous year. Gains resulted mainly from increased cereal production in developed countries, leading to a general decline in cereal prices. Regional food problems continued, however, with acute food shortages affecting Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and other African countries, as well as Bosnia and Herzegovina and several central Asian successor States of the USSR. Deteriorating terms of trade and world recession, both of which reduced the import capacity of poor countries, exacerbated their problem of maintaining adequate food supplies.

Production of staple foods increased during 1992 by 2.5 per cent over 1991, largely because favourable weather conditions and policy initiatives, particularly in the United States, resulted in an increase in cereal output. The global cereal harvest was about 1 per cent below the record 1990 level of 1,972 million tonnes. World output in 1992 was estimated at some 1,952 million tonnes. Wheat production rose by 21 million tonnes to 567 million tonnes, and coarse grains increased by 48 million to 861 million tonnes. Rice (paddy) production came to a record 524 million tonnes, an increase of 7 million tonnes over the previous year. For roots and tubers, the second most important group of staple foods, production rose slightly, by 1 million tonnes, to 143 million tonnes. The world output of pulses was estimated to have fallen by more than 5 per cent to 55.1 million tonnes. World milk production was estimated to have declined by 1 per cent.

The International Conference on Nutrition (Rome, 5-11 December), co-sponsored by FAO and the World Health Organization, was attended by nearly 1,400 delegates from more than 160 countries and 144 non-governmental organizations. The Conference addressed eight nutritional issues: preventing micronutrient deficiencies; preventing and managing infectious diseases; improving household food security; promoting healthy diets and lifestyles; enhancing the capacity for care; improving food quality and safety; assessing, analysing and monitoring nutrition situations; and incorporating nutrition objectives in development policy. It adopted a World Declaration and Plan of Action on Nutrition, which provided guidelines for Governments and contained recommendations on policies, programmes and activities (for further information, see PART THREE, Chapter XI).

Activities in 1992

Food emergencies and rehabilitation

Severe food shortages affected many African countries during the review period. Famine still threatened Ethiopia, which was dependent on an estimated 1 million tonnes of food aid. In Somalia, drought and civil war placed half the population at risk from famine. Kenya faced a critical food situation; 679,000 people were in need of aid.

In Asia, severe food shortages affected Afghanistan, Cambodia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. In Europe, the food situation was unstable in the former Yugoslavia, where cereal and food crop supplies were sharply reduced; there was danger of starvation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and emergency assistance was needed in Albania, Armenia and Romania.

The Near East and North Africa was the second largest food-aid recipient for the second consecutive year, with Iraq, Jordan and Lebanon being particularly vulnerable. In Latin America and the Caribbean, food production failed to keep pace with population growth, with serious food shortages being reported in Haiti and Peru.

Total shipments of cereal food aid during the 1991/92 marketing year came to 13.52 million tonnes, an increase of about 1.5 million tonnes from the previous year. Of that total, some 10.57 million tonnes were provided to low-income food-deficit countries.

Pledges to the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) in 1992 reached a record level of 1,202,400 tonnes of food commodities, compared to 703,000 tonnes in 1991. Further pledges, totalling 948,448 tonnes, were made to the World Food Programme to supply food for protracted operations assisting refugees and displaced persons. A special interim cash fund, the Immediate Response Account, was established during the year within IEFR to facilitate the purchase and delivery of food in response to sudden emergencies. A minimum annual target of $30 million was set.

In 1992, an upsurge of the African migratory locust was reported in Madagascar, creating a potential for widespread destruction. The FAO Emergency Centre for Locust Operations was reactivated, and it coordinated assistance from France, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States to fight the outbreak.

In North Africa, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya announced the eradication of the screw-worm, confirming the success of a campaign mobilized by FAO and the Screw-worm Emergency Centre for North Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

FAO intensified its monitoring of global food security via satellite surveillance and early warning networks. It set up the Regional Early Warning System for Food Security in Southern Africa, which reduced the effects of the drought, and began testing the Direct Information Access Network for Africa—a satellite communications system providing early warning of food crises caused by drought and natural disasters. The Global Information and Early Warning System expanded its membership to 104 with the admission of Cuba, Estonia, Hungary, Mongolia and Viet Nam. The System intensified its monitoring of the monsoon in south-western Asia and of crop growing conditions in Africa, Eastern Europe and the successor States of the USSR.

Field programmes

FAO provided technical advice and support through its field programmes in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development. In 1992, 2,157 field projects were under way at an expenditure of $336.6 million. They were funded through trust funds provided by donor countries and other international funding sources ($164.3 million), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) ($136.2 million) and the technical cooperation programme from FAO's regular budget ($36.1 million).

During the year, international financing institutions approved some $1,587 million in funding for 43 agricultural and rural development projects, prepared with the assistance of FAO's Investment Centre. Total investments in those projects, including contributions from recipient Governments, amounted to $2,224 million.

Rural development

In 1992, FAO strengthened implementation of the Plan of Action on People's Participation, which was approved by the FAO Conference in 1991. Under the plan, poor farmers were encouraged to form informal groups of 8 to 15 people, organized around income-generating activities that the groups themselves identified, such as land reclamation, introduction of small-scale agricultural processing technology in sesame oil extraction or introduction of pigeon peas and other drought-resistant crops. FAO was executing nearly 200 participatory rural development projects in 40 countries in 1992.

There was also increased focus on promoting the Plan of Action for the Integration of Women in Development (WID), which called for equal rights and opportunities for rural women by improving access to land, credit, extension services, rural organizations and improved technology. During the year, FAO assisted in the creation of three new government units responsible for WID, in the Central African Republic, Egypt and Guatemala.

The Agricultural Services Division continued to support farming system analysis, which assessed all the factors affecting farming households from crop and livestock production to quality of the environment. Land evaluation and soil conservation were given particular emphasis. FAO developed software showing the environmental aspects of a wide range of agricultural projects in various types of agro-ecological zones. It also completed a digitized version of the FAO/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Soil Map of the World, which was to be used together with a global database of crop environmental requirements being developed to identify suitable crop and tree species for cultivation in any part of the world.

Water resources, whether for drinking-water supply, sanitation, irrigation, livestock supply or aquaculture, were a major concern. FAO played a central role in the International Conference on Water and the Environment (Dublin, Ireland, 26-31 January) and was appointed the lead agency for the working group dealing with water for sustainable food production, drinking-water supply and sanitation in the rural context.

FAO also supported farmers in agricultural engineering and farm mechanization, post-harvest systems, agro-industries, biotechnology and marketing. Agricultural credit was improved for rural financial institutions and cooperatives with the Microbanker software system, which helped lower service costs of rural savings and loan operations. By the end of 1992, the software was being used in more than 160 installations in Indonesia, Nepal, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

In addition, FAO developed a computerized system for food and agricultural policy analysis and planning to constitute the new version of its Computerized System for Agricultural and Population Planning Assistance and Training.

Crops

During the year, FAO completed a world-wide directory of 8,000 plant-breeding, crop genetic resources and seed firms. Work also began on a list of crop varieties, aimed at creating a world register of local, improved or hybrid varieties of agricultural crops, agro-forestry species and horticultural crops, excluding ornamentals. Cereal breeding and improvement programmes ranged from work on tropical fruit and cassava to maize and rice. Advances were made in hybrid rice research and technologies, including an induced new mutation (Hezu 8), which was released in China. A recently developed technique for transplanting maize proved highly successful in Viet Nam, and the area planted with the crop had increased from 50,000 hectares from 1983 to 1986 to 250,000 hectares in 1990.

In 1992, the FAO Fertilizer Programme operated in 27 countries, and conducted trials and demonstrations on fertilizer techniques in small-scale farms. To make the Programme more effective, FAO implemented broad-context appraisals and upgrading of results from projects in the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Nicaragua, Sri Lanka and Zaire. The studies provided a comprehensive analysis of the situation in each country to assist in formulating long-term policy. They examined soil fertility management in the context of sustainable agricultural development. With funding from EEC, a regional project was launched to check the spread of the large grain borer, an insect pest that attacked stored maize and dried cassava. The pest had threatened self-sufficiency in maize and cassava in an increasing number of African countries since the late 1970s, and had severely damaged the region's grain trade.

FAO promoted the application of integrated pest management (IPM) as a key element in many crop programmes. The aim of the IPM project was to reduce reliance on pesticides by encouraging farmers to use biological control methods and natural predators, such as spiders and wasps, to avert pests. The IPM principles, initially applied to rice in South-East Asia, were currently being used on cotton, vegetables, citrus and wheat throughout the developing world.

Livestock

In 1992, FAO supported a wide range of livestock-related activities, from feeding systems and meat and dairy production to animal health and the conservation and management of animal genetic resources.

Livestock disease continued to be a major threat to rural incomes and food security. FAO helped strengthen veterinary health in developing countries with work in diagnosis, disease control, vaccine production, immunization and information programmes. In particular, it supported the large-scale immunization of cattle against ticks and tick-borne diseases in eastern, central and southern Africa and ongoing regional campaigns against rinderpest in Africa, Asia and the Near East. Control policies against African animal trypanosomiasis—a highly contagious disease transmitted by the tsetse fly—were revised to decrease large-scale spraying of insecticide.

Sustainable feeding systems and resources received increasing attention. A project in China fed cattle on agricultural residues—straw treated with urea and supplemented with cotton-seed cake. The urea made the crop residues digestible, providing an alternative to grain-based livestock production and reducing the pollution from traditional straw-burning.

Animal genetic diversity was diminishing rapidly, and FAO focused efforts on conserving those resources. In the developing world in particular, the diversity of livestock breeds had been undermined by reliance on a few breeds imported from the developed world, selected for maximum productivity under conditions that often did not exist in tropical climates and developing countries. To help counter that trend, FAO began preparations to launch a special action programme to stem the rapid extinction of livestock and poultry breeds that had been domesticated and bred over thousands of years. The programme was launched following an expert consultation on the management of global animal genetic resources. Among other activities, it explored the establishment of a world centre for domestic animal diversity, based at FAO, to coordinate the global effort to identify, document, characterize, improve and conserve the diversity remaining within each of the 30 or so animal species that contributed substantially to food and agriculture.

An FAO/United Nations Environment Programme project began compiling a data bank on domestic livestock in 1992, entering data on 3,000 breeds.

Fisheries

FAO took part in the International Conference on Responsible Fishing (Cancun, Mexico, 6-8 May), which recommended that FAO draft an international code of conduct for responsible fishing to ensure equitable and sustainable fishery development. Many of the FAO activities in fisheries focused on support for small-scale, artisanal fishery development, including aquaculture and inland fisheries. The Aquaculture for Local Community Development Programme helped rural populations to improve their living standards through the practice of aquaculture. The extension of fish farming in Zambia was one of 12 projects under FAO's regional fisheries and aquaculture programme.

FAO provided information and training needed by fish-exporting developing countries to increase their access to international markets. In particular, it provided training and helped set up the national control systems needed to meet more stringent health and sanitary requirements imposed in recent years by major importers, such as EEC, Japan and the United States. FAO also assisted efforts to improve income and employment opportunities in the fishing industry in Eastern Europe. Almost 800 people attended nine seminars organized to help the industry adapt to the new economic situation and find suitable business and joint venture partners to enable them to sell their products on the international market.

Forestry

In 1992, FAO's various forestry activities, from forestry development and management to technology and research, focused on environmental issues.

More than one third of the 90 countries in Africa, Asia, and Latin America and the Caribbean completed national forest action plans as part of an international effort to combat deforestation and degradation of forest resources through the Tropical Forests Action Programme (TFAP). FAO was the coordinating agency for TFAP, which involved 86 countries by the end of 1992 and was co-sponsored by UNDP, the World Bank and FAO.

The TFAP approach emphasized collaboration of different sectors, such as agriculture and forestry, as well as broad-based popular participation. In Viet Nam, FAO held its first training course in participatory rural appraisal, aimed at adapting projects in forestry conservation and development to focus on farmers' needs. In Guatemala, more than 100 Mayan women and 120 other people from forestry cooperatives participated in training courses for forestry development and conservation. In Cameroon, agro-forestry schemes within the TFAP framework continued, with the creation of tree plantations and the introduction of mixed farming systems.

FAO completed its Forest Resources Assessment 1990 Project, which analysed existing survey data of 90 tropical countries to assess the forest cover area for 1990 and the extent of deforestation from 1981 to 1990. The findings showed that during that period approximately 154 million hectares had been deforested.

FAO provided support to a number of national programmes to identify, conserve, collect, evaluate, exchange and improve forest genetic resources. Through contributions to institutes in Brazil, Indonesia and Peru, FAO supported the establishment and management of pilot on-site conservation areas. Contracts were also made with India, Myanmar, Pakistan and Thailand to search for and collect seeds of neem, a multi-purpose tree native to Asia, which was also widely grown in West Africa and parts of Latin America and the Caribbean. It also helped establish national tree-seed centres in a number of countries in the Sahelian zone of Africa.

Nuclear techniques

During the year, the joint FAO/International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Division of Nuclear Techniques in Food and Agriculture conducted research on a variety of topics in animal disease diagnosis, food irradiation, plant improvement and nitrogen fixation.

The Division had become leader in the development of the sterile insect technique (SIT), a revolutionary system based on the use of ionizing radiation to sterilize mass numbers of male insects raised in captivity. When the sterile males mated with wild females, no offspring were produced. SIT was used to eliminate the new world screw-worm from North Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Researchers used nuclear radiation to induce new mutant cereal varieties. An FAO/IAEA Coordinated Research Programme resulted in many mutants in doubled haploid lines. The doubled haploid technique resulted in much quicker recovery of useful mutants and significantly sped up breeding programmes. The programme also resulted in a new mutant strain of importance for hybrid rice in China. Gamma radiation was used with in vitro culture to induce male sterility in rice together with better flower structure for outcrossing. Production of hybrids required that plants of one of the strains to be crossed be prevented from pollinating themselves. In addition, advances were made in transferring technology to developing countries. The first phase of an FAO/IAEA regional project on cereal improvement in Latin America was completed. A training programme, expert services and a research network helped introduce modern mutation techniques to plant breeding in the region on a large scale.

Information

During 1992, a total of 220 major publications were produced by FAO, and more than 3 million pieces were distributed. Grass-roots publications, training manuals, film strips and radio, television and video programmes were produced. Publications were issued in Arabic, Chinese, English, French and Spanish. To reach small farmers and extension workers not using the official United Nations languages, FAO encouraged the adaptation, translation and distribution of its publications in local languages.

FAO compiled and coordinated international databases on agriculture, forestry, fisheries and nutrition, including the International Information System for the Agricultural Sciences and Technology and the Current Agricultural Research Information System. The second edition of AGROVOC, a thesaurus which allowed retrieval of information in English, French and Spanish on agricultural sciences, forestry and fisheries, used by libraries and information and documentation centres around the world, was published in 1992.

Nutrition

FAO continued to help countries improve nutrition, promote healthy diets and ensure access to safe food. It participated in efforts to combat the cholera epidemic in Latin America in 1992 through a variety of food safety and control projects designed to reduce the risk of transmission through food and water. The epidemic, which began in 1991, had caused more than 6,500 deaths.

To improve the safety of street foods and foods for export, FAO collaborated with authorities in Belize, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Mexico and English-speaking Caribbean countries to strengthen their food control systems. It provided technical assistance to a subregional project to strengthen food control systems in Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama.

FAO was also active in proposing strategies to combat diseases caused by deficiencies in vitamin A, iron and iodine. Three multi-media workshops were conducted as part of the FAO Nutrition Communications Support Project in the Sahel, involving Burkina Faso, Chad, Mali, Mauritania and the Niger.

There was concern in 1992 over the deteriorating food situation in Eastern Europe. FAO assisted Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Hungary in restructuring their food control administrations, updating food laws and regulations and training staff in food control and inspection techniques. It held a workshop on the reorientation of cooperative structures in Central and Eastern Europe, gathering 20 participants from nine countries to identify possible reforms.

On 16 October, more than 130 nations observed World Food Day, established in 1981, which in 1992 was dedicated to the theme of food and nutrition.

Secretariat

At the end of 1992, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 3,213, of whom 1,204 were in the Professional and higher categories. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 2,923: 976 in the Professional category and 1,741 in the General Services category. Of the 272 Associate Professional officers working with FAO, 66 were at FAO headquarters and 206 were in the field or in regional or country offices.

Budget

The FAO Council reported in 1992 on progress made in implementing the 1992-1993 programme budget, amounting to $645.6 million, approved by the FAO Conference in 1991. The Council recalled the Conference's explicit understanding that approval by consensus of the 1992-1993 programme budget was based on a specific commitment from the United States to pay current assessments and arrears. Accordingly, the Council expressed satisfaction with the steps taken by the United States to fulfil that commitment in 1992.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational,
Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

During 1992, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued to promote cooperation among nations through its education, science and technology, social and human sciences, culture and communications, information and informatics activities.

In 1992, UNESCO's membership increased to 171 with the admission of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, and Slovenia. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Education

UNESCO's major education activities focused on basic education, the renewal of educational systems and educational advancement and policy. Special priority was given to the Education for All (EFA) programmes—a follow-up to the World Conference on EFA held at Jomtien, Thailand, in 1990. Under those programmes, UNESCO assisted member States in diagnosing basic learning needs, setting national EFA objectives and devising effective strategies to move towards EFA. The Steering Committee of the International Consultative Forum on EFA met at Geneva (14-19 September) to monitor progress since the 1990 World Conference. The meeting was held in conjunction with the International Conference on Education.

The UNESCO Institute for Education, the International Institute for Educational Planning and the International Bureau of Education contributed to the follow-up of the EFA Conference by launching projects and comparative studies and organizing regional forums, training courses and programmes.

The first of a series of regional seminars on policy, planning and organization of education for children and young people with special needs was held at Gaborone, Botswana (3-6 August). At the request of Mozambique, UNESCO drew up an emergency plan to educate demobilized child soldiers and war victims. It also facilitated access to education for refugees and displaced persons in Angola, Croatia and Slovenia. A mission to Somalia assessed the feasibility of establishing educational activities at various levels within the framework of other humanitarian initiatives.

UNESCO contributed to improving the quality, relevance and efficiency of higher education through strengthening regional centres and assisting member States to reform their national systems, as well as by disseminating topical and comparative studies and monographs on national systems and by training 140 university administrators.

An initiative launched in 1991 to foster inter-university cooperation (UNITWIN) and the UNESCO Chairs scheme helped establish a number of chairs at various universities. During the year, 200 requests were made to join the scheme and 18 new networks and 53 chairs were set up.

UNESCO prepared two draft standard-setting instruments concerning the Universal Convention and the Recommendation on the Recognition of Studies and Qualifications in Higher Education, which were revised by a meeting of governmental experts (Paris, 29-30 October). UNESCO also convened an international congress on academic mobility and recognition of studies (Paris, 2-5 November) and sponsored the International Conference on Academic Freedom and University Autonomy (Sinaia, Romania, 5-7 May).

Health education programmes continued in 1992, in cooperation with the World Health Organization. An agreement was signed in July 1992 with the Commission of the European Communities to develop an information network in preventive education against drug abuse. With regard to education for the prevention of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), UNESCO took part in the Eighth International Conference on AIDS (Amsterdam, Netherlands, 18-24 July) and the Maghreb Conference on AIDS (Marrakech, Morocco, 19-23 May).

Natural sciences

UNESCO elaborated strategies for the management of science and technology systems in different regions of the world during 1992. To that end, a number of conferences, research seminars, training programmes and workshops were organized.

Three hundred scientists met at UNESCO headquarters for an international conference on "Cancer, AIDS and Society: Integrating Science, Medical Practice and Health Policy" (Paris, 23-26 March).

Under the "Diversitas" programme, UNESCO continued work to establish an international network to take inventory of and to monitor biological diversity. In collaboration with the International Union of Biological Sciences and the Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment, it launched a 10-year project (BIO-D) to increase understanding of biodiversity. It also launched the second phase of the Regional Programme for Biotechnology in Latin America and the Caribbean. The first regional programme on the human genome was launched in Latin America and served as the basis for several international training courses. UNESCO also organized the first North-South Genome Conference (Caxambu, Brazil, 12-15 May), which discussed perspectives for molecular genetics and biology in developing countries.

In collaboration with the International Council of Scientific Unions and the Third World Academy of Sciences, UNESCO established an International Network for the Availability of Scientific Publications to facilitate and improve the access of scientists from developing countries and from Eastern and Central Europe to scientific and technical literature.

An international centre for bioethical studies, established at the initiative of UNESCO, the Council of Europe, the Commission of the European Communities and other international organizations, was inaugurated at Trieste, Italy, on 6 March. The third UNESCO Science and Culture Forum, "Towards eco-ethics: alternative visions of culture, science, technology and nature", was held (Belém, Brazil, 6-10 April).

A number of regional activities were conducted by UNESCO's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC). In collaboration with other United Nations bodies, IOC was involved in the United Nations Inter-Agency Plan for the Persian Gulf. Its activities included the collection by marine researchers of an information base to assess conditions in the Gulf. A steering committee meeting to put forward the plans for an expanded interdisciplinary, multidisciplinary programme in the eastern Mediterranean took place at UNESCO headquarters (Paris, 22 and 23 January 1992). The second Marine Debris Workshop (Merida, Mexico, 17-19 August) focused on the long-term consequences of marine debris pollution and elaborated an action plan for the wider Caribbean. Following tidal waves in September 1992, IOC sponsored a reconnaissance mission to Nicaragua which formulated recommendations for protective measures to be taken against similar disasters in the future.

UNESCO organized a scientific symposium (Paris, 3 and 4 July) on the variability of interdependence of time and space scales in various hydrological processes. This was followed by the tenth session of the Intergovernmental Council of the International Hydrological Programmes (Paris, 6-11 July).

The International Geological Correlation Programme continued to foster international collaboration in the earth sciences through 56 research projects in 22 countries. The geology for development project focused on applied regional geological studies, training related to environmentally sound and sustainable socio-economic development and the transfer of new technologies, such as computerized information handling and remote sensing analysis, to developing countries. Several activities were conducted in connection with the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, aimed at strengthening hazard-monitoring network systems and post-disaster investigations.

An inter-agency meeting (Paris, 5-7 October) on outer space in the service of development, organized as part of International Space Year (see PART ONE, Chapter III), discussed the practical applications of space technology, such as communications, meteorology, navigation and disaster management.

Within the frame of a project on transformation of science and technology management systems in the Central and Eastern European countries during their transition to a market economy, UNESCO organized a conference on the organizational structures of science in transition (Venice, Italy, 27-29 April).

Social and human sciences

In 1992, UNESCO continued to promote the social sciences as academic disciplines, primarily by strengthening regional and global networks of specialized institutions that fostered research, training and information exchange.

It completed a feasibility study on the establishment of an intergovernmental programme in the social sciences and, in cooperation with the International Social Science Council, organized a consultation (Paris, 18-20 March) of representatives of social science organizations to discuss the current state of international social science cooperation.

UNESCO assisted the International Council of Women to organize a conference on changing families in changing societies (Brussels, Belgium, 8-10 February). It also launched a pilot training project in social policies and legislation for family and child promotion, conceived as preparatory activities for the International Year of the Family (1994). An international symposium on the educational function of the family and cultural change to identify ways to strengthen family and school collaboration took place at UNESCO headquarters (Paris, 12 and 13 March).

Other activities organized or supported by UNESCO included a forum on women as creators and transmitters of culture in the Mediterranean region (Valencia, Spain, November); an international seminar focusing on the sex trade and human rights (Brussels, 6 March); a summer university for women on feminism: international experience and solidarity (Samaia, Romania, 29 June-5 July); a seminar on social change, demographic trends, family structure and gender relations in Muslim societies—with special reference to Central Asia (London, 5-10 July); and an expert meeting on human rights and human rights education in the process of transition to democracy (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 2-6 November).

Under activities related to the promotion of human rights, a second enlarged edition of the World Directory of Human Rights Training and Research Institutions was published in 1992. As part of a special project on UNESCO's contribution to the elimination of apartheid, an international workshop on culture and educational policies in a post-apartheid South Africa was held (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 16-19 June).

UNESCO awarded several prizes in 1992, including the UNESCO Prize for Peace Education, awarded to Mother Teresa of Calcutta, India, and the UNESCO Prize for Human Rights Teaching, awarded to the Arab Institute for Human Rights (Tunis, Tunisia). The 1992 Félix Houphouët-Boigny Prize for Peace Research was awarded to the South African leaders Nelson Mandela and Frederik W. de Klerk.

In December, the United Nations General Assembly welcomed the 1991 proposal of the UNESCO General Conference to proclaim 1995 as the United Nations Year for Tolerance and encouraged it to prepare a declaration on tolerance (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

Culture

In 1992, UNESCO's main cultural activities were devoted to safeguarding the cultural heritage, preservation of and respect for cultural identities and diversity and promotion of all creative and intellectual expression. Those activities took place in the context of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997) which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1986.^a During the year, the focus was on culture and environment in honour of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). A number of regional and subregional consultations of national committees for the Decade were organized.

The UNESCO Director-General, responding to a 1991 General Conference request,^b established the World Commission on Culture and Development to prepare proposals for both urgent and long-term action to meet cultural needs in the context of development. A regional seminar on the cultural dimension of development (Abidjan, 2-7 November), organized jointly by UNESCO, the World Bank, the United Nations Children's Fund and the African Development Bank, discussed concepts of decision-making, participation and integration—inseparable from cultural models.

UNESCO undertook a study on ways to strengthen the application of the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict and carried out training activities to promote wider application of the 1970 Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property.

UNESCO continued to coordinate operations to preserve and enhance the site of Angkor Wat in Cambodia and to cooperate with the organizations in charge of safeguarding the old city of Dubrovnik in Croatia. UNESCO's World Heritage Centre was established in May. The sixteenth session of the World Heritage Committee (Santa Fe, United States, 7-14 December) placed 20 additional sites on the World Heritage list and seven sites on the list of World Heritage in Danger. The Committee also reviewed the state of preservation of 51 sites and commended the results of the permanent monitoring mission, which inspected 38 sites in Latin America, the Caribbean and Portuguese-speaking Africa.

The first International Congress on Cultural and Scientific Cooperation in Central Asia (Shiraz, Iran, 14-18 November) studied a proposal for the establishment of an International Institute of Central Asian Studies.

A symposium on the role and challenge of copyright on the eve of the twenty-first century was held at UNESCO headquarters (Paris, 16-18 November) on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Copyright Convention.

Communication

UNESCO's communication programme continued to support the development of free, independent and pluralistic media in the public and private sectors.

At its thirteenth session (Paris, 17-24 February), the Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) decided, to give priority to the issues of freedom of the press and the pluralism and independence of the media. It also approved 38 projects. Arrangements were made to implement UNESCO's Recovery Plan, adopted by the Summit of African Heads of State (Dakar, Senegal, 22-26 June), which sought to develop the Pan-African News Agency.

As a follow-up to the Seminar on Promoting Independent and Pluralistic Asian Media (Alma Ata, Kazakhstan, 5-9 October), eight projects were identified for consideration by the IPDC Council. Following a workshop of heads of Asian press institutes (Kathmandu, Nepal, 17-19 November), initiatives were taken to create new press institutes in Cambodia, Fiji and Mongolia through regional twinning arrangements.

The Intergovernmental Council for the General Information Programme (Paris, 16-19 November) defined the main missions of its long-term strategy, namely safeguarding the memory of the world; information for education and learning; information for human development; and information for environmental management. In that context, an international programme entitled "Memory of the World" was initiated to preserve and restore rare library and archival materials. Under the programme, pilot projects were launched in Czechoslovakia, Yemen, and several countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

In the field of informatics, implementation began on 18 projects totalling $1.8 million, which were approved by the Bureau of the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme (IIP) at its sixth session (Dakar, 25-27 February). The Intergovernmental Committee for IIP (Paris, 1-4 December) focused on the priorities of training, the role of computer networks as a means of fostering regional and international cooperation, software development and research and development.

The Regional Informatics Networks for Africa to link major African institutions engaged in the collection, processing and dissemination of scientific and technical data was launched (Dakar, 27-29 February).

UNESCO provided technical assistance to Mauritius and Zambia under the project on national education statistical information systems for planning and management in sub-Saharan Africa. Four regional case-studies were completed on the needs, availability, concepts, definitions and classifications in science and technology statistics, covering 14 countries, and training seminars on education statistics were organized in the Congo, Costa Rica, Malawi, Philippines, Rwanda and the United Arab Emirates. It also published a methodological report on literacy assessment and its implications for statistical measures.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,544, comprising 956 in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 137 nationalities, and 1,588 in the General Service.

Budget

The General Conference of UNESCO, at its 1991 session, approved a budget of $444,704,000 for the 1992-1993 biennium. The level of the Working Capital Fund was fixed at $17,200,000 and the total assessment on member States (after deducting miscellaneous income) was $432,216,000.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The World Health Assembly, the governing body of the World Health Organization (WHO), at its forty-fifth annual session (Geneva, 4-14 May 1992), reviewed a second evaluation of implementation of the global strategy for health for all by the year 2000 and adopted resolutions on: strengthening nursing and midwifery; disability prevention and rehabilitation; immunization and vaccine quality; health and environment; and national strategies for overcoming micronutrient malnutrition. The Assembly urged member States to improve the health of the most vulnerable population groups, analyse the health impact of development projects, and ensure that health protection was an integral part of sustainable development policies. It endorsed an updated and expanded global strategy for combating the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), as well as guidelines for implementing the WHO Certification Scheme on the Quality of Pharmaceutical Products moving in International Commerce. Technical discussions focused on women, health and development and the Assembly requested the WHO Director-General to establish a global commission on women's health.

Within the framework of United Nations relief efforts, WHO undertook 24 projects to rehabilitate the health sector in Afghanistan and provided medical support for the repatriation of Cambodian refugees by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Emergency humanitarian aid was provided to Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan, and emergency health kits were supplied to a number of countries affected by natural disasters, including Albania, Bangladesh, Egypt, Kyrgyzstan, Madagascar, Pakistan, the Philippines, Rwanda and Yemen.

During 1992, the membership of WHO increased to 182, with the admission of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. Puerto Rico became an associate member in May and Ukraine notified the Organization that it had reactivated its membership (see Annex I for complete membership).

Health system infrastructure

Health systems development and research

Advisory services were provided to member States for the development of health information systems, as part of a WHO initiative to intensify cooperation with countries and peoples in greatest need. Missions were organized for Bangladesh, Cambodia, Guinea-Bissau and Maldives. By the end of 1992, WHO had intensified its cooperation with 25 countries and new partnerships were formed with bilateral and multilateral development agencies in Bolivia, Chad, Ethiopia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Viet Nam and Zambia.

WHO organized a five-country workshop on health information support at the district level (Togo); a regional workshop on strengthening national epidemiological capacity (Pakistan); a ten-country workshop on surveillance of childhood diseases (Cameroon); a national workshop on cholera surveillance (Zambia); and two meetings on aspects of health systems research (Cairo, Egypt, June; Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, October). A third interregional workshop for senior research managers (Cuernavaca, Mexico, July) focused on promoting networks of lead institutions in health systems research and an international conference on economics and health (Geneva, 24-26 June) discussed the relationship between macroeconomics and the health sector in countries in greatest need.

WHO continued to provide legislative information to its members through the quarterly International Digest of Health Legislation and on an ad hoc basis. An international legislative information network was initiated in cooperation with other agencies and an international meeting was held on the subject (Washington, D.C., December). Consultant services were provided to 10 countries during the year.

Other activities in 1992 included an international computer-based training course on use of the tenth revision of the International Classification of Diseases (Southampton, United Kingdom, April); a meeting to plan a revision of the international classification of impairments, disabilities and handicaps (Zoetermeer, Netherlands, March); and advisory services on establishing an emergency monitoring system in Yugoslavia.

Primary health care systems

Research and development support to improve district health systems management continued in Indonesia, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Initiatives for strengthening district health systems in Ghana led to a revision of its national health policy and strategy. The strengthening of informational support for district health management was the subject of an African regional consultation (Lomé, Togo, September). Joint activities with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to develop district health system infrastructure in six Western Pacific countries were completed in 1992.

Intercountry seminars on health economics and cost analysis for French-speaking countries were held in Algeria and Senegal with the support of the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank. Technical support was provided to the first international seminar on economic evaluation of maternal and child health programmes (Paris, June) and to a regional seminar on financing of the health sector in a crisis situation (Havana, Cuba, March). Regional training initiatives were supported at Chulalongkorn University (Thailand) and the National Institute of Public Health (Algeria). A meeting on the future of health care financing (Kiel, Germany, November) considered ways of coping with increasing demand for health services in the face of limited resources. A seminar on hospital cooperation in Europe (Strasbourg, France, November), convened jointly with the European Community, formulated responses to changes in Central and Eastern Europe. WHO prepared a document on contemporary standards for the organization of health care to assist national and district-level decision-makers in analysing their hospital services.

Human resources for health

Further progress was made in designing computerized tools for more flexible planning in human resources development. Meetings reviewed the existing planning methodology (Bangkok, Thailand, March) and studied the conceptual framework for a projection planning model (York, United Kingdom, June). Development work continued on issues related to the "skills mix", productivity and workload of health personnel, and "the public/private mix of human resources" was the subject of a consultation (Bangkok, Thailand, June/July). Workshops were conducted with a revised WHO manual on human resource management (Colombo, Sri Lanka, May; Kathmandu, Nepal, September).

Among activities in nursing were an intercountry workshop on leadership and management issues (Mbabane, Swaziland, April) for Lesotho, Namibia, Swaziland and Zambia, and a third meeting of Government chief nurses (Bucharest, Romania, October), which underlined a priority commitment to Central and Eastern Europe. A global multidisciplinary advisory group on the role of nursing and midwifery held its first meeting in November/December and produced recommendations to ensure an adequate contribution by nurses and midwives to the achievement of health goals.

A study group in October recommended that educational institutions develop new alliances with professional associations, authorities and the community, conduct service-oriented research, and adapt their programmes accordingly. Workshops to revise physician training programmes in Africa were held in the Congo, Ethiopia, Ghana, Zambia and Zimbabwe, and the first issue of the newsletter Changing medical education and medical practice was published during the year. The first regional meeting on continuing education programmes for health personnel was held in Tunis, Tunisia, in June.

The health learning materials programme continued to expand and supported more than 35 countries in 1992. Meetings were held to plan future strategies and collaboration between country projects (Harare, Zimbabwe, April) and to examine project evaluation and planning in South-East Asian countries (Colombo, August).

Public information and education for health

During the year, WHO prepared information materials such as press releases, features and press kits, quarterly radio programmes and video newsreels; arranged four television co-productions; and supported the production of a film on health by Nigerian television.

Audiovisual support was provided for technical programmes dealing with environmental health; cardiovascular, tobacco-related and other life-style diseases; AIDS; malaria; onchocerciasis; mental health; and human reproduction. Information campaigns were organized for major international conferences and other events. World Health Day (7 April) had the theme "Heartbeat—the rhythm of health". World No-Tobacco Day (31 May) was devoted to smoke-free workplaces, and World AIDS Day (1 December) focused on community involvement.

Comprehensive school health education was the subject of an intercountry consultation for nine countries in South-East Asia (Colombo, October). A research project on the health behaviour of school-age children was launched in the United Republic of Tanzania and in Zimbabwe in collaboration with the University of Bergen (Norway). The aim was to design strategies for health education and promote healthy life-styles. A meeting of the WHO/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization/United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) working group for increased cooperation in an integrated approach to school health education was held in conjunction with the Eighth International Conference on AIDS (Amsterdam, Netherlands, July), while an inter-agency meeting in November discussed communication and advocacy strategies to ensure the support of health policy-makers. WHO revised a training manual for community health workers on human relations, communications and community organization, based on training programmes in Kenya and Sierra Leone. The first international symposium on health education was held in China in October in collaboration with the Shanghai Health Education Institute.

Health science and technology

Health protection and promotion

The WHO Advisory Committee on Health Research (Geneva, September/October) recommended further study in the areas of nursing and women's health, global developments relating to cancer and injuries, and the strengthening of research capability in Central and Eastern Europe and in Africa.

WHO collaborated with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in convening the International Conference on Nutrition (Rome, Italy, 5-11 December). The Conference sought ways to eliminate hunger and malnutrition world-wide. Meetings to promote the iodization of salt were held in Africa, Europe and the Western Pacific, in collaboration with UNICEF and the International Council for the Control of Iodine Deficiency Disorders, and a consultation was held on supplementation methods for populations severely deficient in vitamin A. A joint WHO/UNICEF strategy was developed to prevent iron deficiency anaemia in pregnancy and an African data bank on iodine and vitamin A deficiency was established. In 1992, the global breast-feeding data bank, established in 1986, contained information from more than 1,500 surveys or studies carried out in some 150 countries and territories. Activities dealing with food safety centred on food export difficulties faced by WHO members as a result of the cholera epidemic. Recommendations to control the disease were provided by a technical consultation on food safety and the food trade (Buenos Aires, Argentina, April).

Activities in the area of oral health care included a demonstration study of non-invasive and inexpensive oral care procedures in Thailand; a project providing special curative and preventive oral health care in zones contaminated by the 1986 nuclear accident at Chernobyl in Ukraine; an international action network on oro-facial mutilations and noma (cancerum oris), dealing with severe and destructive oral diseases and conditions as well as oral manifestations of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV); and feasibility studies and demonstration projects on the use of milk as a vehicle for fluorides in Bulgaria, Chile, Italy, the Russian Federation and the United Kingdom. An intercountry centre for oral health was opened in Belarus, in addition to those operating in Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic and Thailand.

Two epidemiological studies were under way in accident prevention, one dealing with falls among the elderly, and the other with burns. The Second International Safe Communities Conference (Glasgow, Scotland, September) assessed a project on community safety under implementation in Argentina, Australia, Canada, Denmark, France, Sweden, Thailand, the United Kingdom and the United States and decided to extend its scope to include the prevention of violence. In 1992, WHO took part in the Eighth World Conference on Tobacco or Health (Buenos Aires, March-April); the International Symposium on Public Health Surveillance (Atlanta, United States, April); and the First International Conference on Women and Smoking (Newcastle, Northern Ireland, October). Missions were fielded on tobacco control policies in Bangladesh; legislation and other control measures in India; planning for tobacco control in Nepal; and regulatory measures in Thailand.

Health of specific population groups

In 1992, a workplan was drawn up outlining a new strategy and activities for 1992-1993 in the area of maternal health and safe motherhood. It focused on technical support for planning, implementing and evaluating national safe motherhood programmes. WHO continued to monitor infant and young-child feeding and nutrition and implementation of the International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes.

In connection with the Twentieth International Congress of Pediatrics (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, September), the International Pediatric Association, WHO and UNICEF convened a joint workshop on health, nutrition and the quality of maternal care. Under the auspices of the three organizations, workshops were conducted in China, India and Nigeria to prepare national strategies and approaches for maternal and child care and family planning in the 1990s.

Trials of a once-a-month injectable contraceptive, developed with WHO support, were completed in Mexico and continued in Chile, Indonesia, Jamaica, Thailand and Tunisia. WHO also continued long-term studies and comparative trials of intrauterine devices and produced a special feature on the global status of reproductive health under the Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction on the occasion of its twentieth anniversary.

WHO and the International Labour Organisation (ILO) convened an international symposium on the prevention and control of work-related diseases (Linz, Austria, October). Planning was undertaken for medical surveillance of workers exposed to mineral dusts inducing pneumoconiosis; methods and quality assurance in evaluating exposure to fibres and airborne contaminants; and biological monitoring to assess the risk from exposure to chemicals.

A study on dementias among the elderly was carried out in Canada, Chile, Malta, Nigeria, Spain and the United States, and a cross-national study on osteoporosis was initiated in Barbados, Brazil, China, Hong Kong, Hungary, Iceland and Nigeria. A project on successful ageing was planned for Costa Rica, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Thailand and Zimbabwe. WHO received external support in determining the needs for long-term and home care for the rapidly growing elderly population in the developing world.

Protection and promotion of mental health

Methods were developed, with the support of the World Bank, to assess cost-effectiveness in mental health programmes, and information systems were established to support them at the national level. National workshops were organized in some 40 countries to share information about programme development. Three meetings were held as part of a new WHO study aimed at producing an instrument for assessing changes in the quality of life after health care interventions.

A major international review of laws concerning the promotion of mental health and support to the mentally ill, covering 45 countries in all regions, was started with funding from the United States National Institute of Mental Health. Several studies were completed on differential diagnosis of different types of dementia; clinical and pharmacokinetic factors in predicting the efficacy of lithium prophylaxis for manic depressive disorders; the epidemiology of cognitive impairment and dementia; and psychological problems in general health care. Work continued on preventing and treating neurological disorders, including a project to improve the treatment of epilepsy and a meeting on diagnostic criteria for acute onset of flaccid paralysis (Geneva, July).

WHO made a feasibility study of a system for reporting trends in drug and alcohol abuse and its health consequences; promoted a revised abuse trends linkage alerting system; established a network of centres in 17 countries to assess the global impact of cocaine and study national patterns of its use; and issued a report on simple treatment interventions for alcohol-related problems and their usefulness in primary health care settings.

Environmental health

In response to a 1992 World Health Assembly resolution, WHO drafted a new global strategy for health and environment, based on a report of its Commission on Health and Environment, entitled Our Planet, our Health and the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Rio de Janeiro, June).

During 1992, national monitoring of funding, operations and maintenance costs related to water supply and sanitation coverage was supported under a five-year WHO/UNICEF programme. The programme, launched in 1991, was operational in some 70 countries. Subregional workshops on this subject were held in the Caribbean (Kingston, Jamaica, March), southern Africa (Mbabane, Swaziland, June) and West Africa (Cotonou, Benin, September). Assistance was provided in preparing national action plans on hygiene education and environmental health, and the development of teaching materials, school curricula and training courses. Training workshops were organized for national specialists in water resources development in Zimbabwe and for agricultural extension programmes in Honduras. WHO supported cholera control in Africa and Latin America by providing technical and material services for strengthening water quality assessment and the operation of water and sanitation facilities.

The WHO Director-General established a WHO/ILO/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) International Programme on Chemical Safety in 1992, as the nucleus for international cooperation on the environmentally sound management of chemicals.

Diagnostic, therapeutic and rehabilitative technology

Several training workshops, using WHO handbooks, were held to improve surgical and anaesthetic services at district hospitals in developing countries. Meetings were held on the integration of basic surgery into primary health care (Irbid, Jordan, November); the strengthening of public health laboratories (New Delhi, India, November); and on standardization and quality assessment in Latin American laboratories (Guatemala City, Guatemala, November). WHO provided support through the Global Programme on AIDS for the preparation of learning materials on the appropriate use of blood and other aspects of blood safety; upgraded its database on blood transfusion services; and established regional training centres in Amman (Jordan) and Tunis (Tunisia).

A draft manual on diagnostic ultrasound was produced in 1992, as well as ten examples of the most common radiographs, for use in training programmes and as a simple quality assurance tool. A survey was also made of mammographic equipment in the Eastern Mediterranean and support was provided to Romania for the reorganization of its radiation medicine services. The WHO Expert Committee on Specifications for Pharmaceutical Preparations approved a revision of key WHO guidelines on good manufacturing practices for pharmaceutical products, and the Expert Committee on Biological Standardization adopted revised requirements for the production and quality control of blood products, reflecting policy issues related to blood donation and the latest information on testing for HIV and hepatitis viruses.

WHO co-sponsored the International Symposium on Traditional Medicine (Toyama, Japan, August), which reviewed current research and the place of traditional medicine in health systems.

By year's end, 113 WHO members had adopted essential drug lists, and 66 had essential drugs programmes in operation.

At intercountry workshops on rehabilitation (Harare, Zimbabwe, July; Dakar, Senegal, October), participants outlined measures for strengthening rehabilitation in Africa, including the formulation of national policies on disability, the integration of community-based rehabilitation into primary health care, the strengthening of the referral system and the provision of aids and appliances. Guidelines for the care of children with cerebral palsy were prepared in 1992, as was an action plan for the emergency rehabilitation of war victims in the former Yugoslavia. The latter emphasized physical trauma, prosthetics, training and logistic support.

Disease prevention and control

By 1992, WHO had provided funds for national AIDS programmes in 153 countries and at year's end 126 medium-term plans for national AIDS programmes had been finalized. At its meetings in April and September, the Steering Committee on Social and Behavioural Research endorsed research activities related to the individual, household, community and societal response to HIV/AIDS; personal and social factors of sexual behaviour; women's role in sexual negotiation and the potential impact of the female condom; social and behavioural issues in vaccine trials; and synthesis of studies on knowledge, attitudes, beliefs and practices in partner relations. Another meeting in May considered 15 interventions aimed at encouraging people to change risky sexual behaviour and discussed factors contributing to the success of such interventions. A meeting on AIDS drug and vaccine supply in July, held under the sponsorship of WHO and UNDP, reviewed the first year of collaboration with major research-based pharmaceutical companies and the International Federation of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Associations (Geneva).

In May, the World Health Assembly endorsed an updated global AIDS strategy, with the principal objectives of preventing HIV infection, reducing the personal and social impact of HIV infection, and mobilizing and unifying national and international efforts against AIDS. Also in May, WHO and UNICEF co-sponsored a meeting of experts on HIV transmission through breast-feeding.

WHO continued its activities for the prevention, early detection and treatment of cancer. National policies, technical guidelines and an international network of experts and institutes on cancer pain relief and palliative care were further strengthened. Projects on visual and physical examination for cancer of the cervix, breast and oral cavity at primary care level were initiated in India and Sri Lanka, and local training in radiotherapy and oncology continued in Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe.

In November, a scientific group recommended further research on the role of alcohol, physical activity, sex hormones, psychosocial, economic, metabolic and haemostatic factors in cardiovascular diseases. Under a project for multinational monitoring of trends and determinants in cardiovascular diseases, the first trend analysis for risk factor data was carried out together with a first cross-sectional comparison of morbidity data for coronary events and stroke. A joint WHO/United States Institute of Medicine meeting (Washington, D.C., October) established priorities for the prevention and control of cardiovascular diseases and developed a plan of action focusing on health statistics and epidemiology as well as prevention and case management, with particular attention to developing countries.

In 1992, for the first time, there were no recorded cases of poliomyelitis in the Western Hemisphere—a dramatic illustration of effective immunization coverage. Globally, it was estimated that, compared with pre-immunization levels, cases of the disease had fallen by 81 per cent. Measles incidence and mortality dropped by 66 and 88 per cent, respectively, and neonatal tetanus mortality by 54 per cent. The Children's Vaccine Initiative, launched at the end of 1991 with its secretariat at WHO, was pursued in partnership by WHO, UNICEF, UNDP, the World Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation (New York). Its goals included the development of new vaccines, improvements in the quality of vaccines produced in developing countries, and steps to ensure that vaccines reached all children in viable forms.

The world malaria situation deteriorated during 1992, with over 1 million people dying from the disease and more than 100 million falling ill. A Ministerial Conference on Malaria (Amsterdam, October) endorsed a global malaria control strategy drafted at interregional meetings in Brazzaville (Congo), New Delhi (India) and Brasilia (Brazil) in April. WHO also prepared a global action plan for malaria control for the period 1993-2000, with the objective of reducing mortality from the disease by at least 20 per cent in all WHO regions and in at least 75 per cent of endemic countries.

By September 1992, the total number of registered leprosy patients had fallen to 2.84 million, a 7.8 per cent decrease during the year and a decline of 47 per cent since 1985 when multidrug therapy was introduced. Courses on leprosy programme management were organized in Brazil, India, Indonesia, and the Philippines, in 21 African countries, and in 10 countries of the Eastern Mediterranean. Other WHO activities in the area of tropical diseases focused on the eradication of dracunculiasis, the control of schistosomiasis, onchocerciasis, lymphatic filariasis, African trypanosomiasis and the prevention of leishmaniasis.

Research in diarrhoeal diseases focused on improving infant and child nutrition, vitamin A supplementation and personal and domestic hygiene, as well as vaccine testing. A multicentre study was carried out in six countries to test a standard protocol for managing persistent diarrhoea, and investigations continued on the efficacy of oral rehydration fluids and antibiotics and the use of antidiarrheal drugs. WHO continued to coordinate activities on cholera control and to cooperate with countries affected by the disease, especially in Latin America. It produced guidelines and materials on travel precautions, food safety and cholera vaccination.

By the end of the year, 64 countries had implemented a programme for the control of acute respiratory infections and in March, interventions to prevent pneumonia in children were reviewed. Research continued on the case-management of pneumonia in malnourished children; clinical predictors of severe pneumonia; comparative methods of oxygen delivery; the clinical relevance of in vitro cotrimoxazole resistance; and the identification of simpler and cheaper antibiotic regimes for pneumonia in children.

A set of comprehensive training modules for district management of tuberculosis was completed in 1992. A global training workshop was conducted in September, followed by a national training course (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, November). Research was started on diagnosis, drug development and monitoring of HIV-associated tuberculosis in Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania; chemotherapy for HIV-infected patients in the Dominican Republic and Haiti; and preventive chemotherapy in Brazil, Uganda and Zambia.

Workshops on the prevention and control of human and canine rabies for countries in West Africa (Kaduna, Nigeria, April) and southern Africa (Lusaka, Zambia, June) facilitated technical cooperation and the elaboration of national control programmes. At a consultation in July, specific safety requirements were established for a candidate oral vaccine for rabies.

WHO was also active in the prevention of diabetes mellitus blindness and deafness; the control of various species of intestinal helminths and protozoa; and vaccine research and development.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,659 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,584 staff members, drawn from 140 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories, and 3,075 were in the General Service category. Of the total number, 48 were in posts financed by UNDP, UNEP, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and the United Nations Population Fund.

Budget

The forty-fourth (1991) World Health Assembly approved an effective working budget of $734,936,000 for the 1992-1993 biennium.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

During the fiscal year 1992 (1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued to provide economic assistance to developing countries. The Bank's strategies for reducing poverty, promoting private-sector development and contributing to the global effort to safeguard the environment shaped its activities in fiscal 1992.

The dissolution of the former USSR into 15 independent, sovereign States and progress towards peace in several of the Bank's regions led to a sharp expansion in the demand for its services. With special funding approved by its Executive Board, the Bank undertook activities to help ease the transition by the successor States of the former USSR to market-oriented economies.

Commitments by the Bank during fiscal 1992 totalled $24,933 million as follows: $15,156 million for loans made by the Bank; $6,550 million for IDA credits; and $3,227 million for gross investments made by the Bank's second affiliate, the International Finance Corporation.

As at 31 December 1992, 172 States were members of the World Bank. New members in 1992 were Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Estonia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, the Marshall Islands, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, Switzerland, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Lending operations

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1992, the World Bank made 112 loans to 43 countries amounting to $15,156 million, a decrease of $1,236 million from fiscal 1991. This brought the cumulative total of loan commitments made by the Bank since its inception in 1946 to $218,210 million.

Agriculture and rural development

Continuing its commitment to agriculture and rural development, the Bank made 25 loans to 17 countries totalling $2,525.7 million during fiscal 1992. Mexico received $600 million, of which $400 million provided funding for a project under the Government's irrigation and drainage investment programme. Of the three loans to Indonesia totalling $418.7 million, $225 million was to ensure the efficiency and sustainability of existing irrigation infrastructure through support for operations and maintenance, cost recovery and strengthening of operations and maintenance-related institutions, as well as for improved management and allocation of water. Brazil received $372 million, of which $205 million was to implement an improved strategy for natural resources management, conservation and development in the State of Mato Grosso. Venezuela received $300 million to support increased efficiency in the agricultural sector and to achieve sustainable growth and exports through the restructuring of an incentive system, expanding public investments in agricultural infrastructure and services, increasing the availability of credit and strengthening the sector's institutions.

Development finance companies

The Bank made six loans totalling $802 million in fiscal 1992 to assist development finance companies in five countries. A loan of $400 million to Peru supported the country's medium-term programme of macroeconomic stabilization and structural reforms, particularly in the financial sector. Côte d'Ivoire received $225 million, of which $150 million assisted the country's financial sector reform programme by stabilizing the financial system and restoring to health the country's system of financial intermediation. A loan of $100 million to Colombia aimed at improving the financial situation and operational efficiency of the Instituto de Fomento Industrial, the country's largest public development bank and holding company, and supporting the withdrawal of the public sector from productive sector activities.

Education

Sixteen loans amounting to $1,299.6 million were made to 12 countries for education projects during fiscal 1992. Of $439 million extended to Mexico, $250 million was for implementing a primary education project in four states with the highest incidence of poverty and the lowest education indicators. A loan of $170 million was granted to Chile to enhance the efficiency, quality and equity of primary education in urban and rural areas and to expand and upgrade the coverage and quality of pre-school education. Indonesia received $143.1 million, of which $69.5 million provided vocational and income-generating skills to some 400,000 disadvantaged beneficiaries from impoverished areas. Côte d'Ivoire was granted $125 million for its human resources development programme.

Energy

Twenty-one energy projects—in oil, gas, coal and power—were assisted in 16 countries during fiscal 1992 at a cost of $2,828.9 million. China received $900 million, of which $380 million funded the construction of a dam and an underground power house and provided generating units to help eliminate power shortages in Sichuan Province. Of the $765 million extended to India, $350 million helped increase the power supply in Maharashtra State and provide capacity-building assistance to the state electricity board to improve its operational efficiency and strengthen its finances and managerial autonomy. A loan of $423.6 million was granted to Indonesia to construct three coal-fired units which would expand the generating capacity of the State electricity corporation in Java.

Industry

In fiscal 1992, loans for the industrial sector totalling $382.7 million were granted to two countries. Peru received $300 million to assist the Government's medium-term programme of trade policy reform, while China received $82.7 million to support the cement industry through a regional cement production and distribution scheme that included modern large-scale cement production facilities.

Non-project

The Bank granted non-project loans totalling $1,970 million to eight countries. Romania received $400 million to support its programme of structural reforms, designed to transform the command-driven economy to a market-oriented system. A loan of $300 million was made to Peru to assist its Government's medium-term programme of macroeconomic stabilization and broad-based structural reforms. Morocco received $275 million to support the last phase of its stabilization and adjustment programme, designed to achieve a sustainable increase in the rate of economic growth in order to ensure employment opportunities and acceptable living standards.

Population, health and nutrition

The Bank made three loans in fiscal 1992 amounting to $307 million for population, health and nutrition projects. Romania received $150 million to rehabilitate and upgrade its primary health care delivery system. A loan of $130 million was granted to Poland to assist its health sector reform plan by strengthening health promotion programmes, supporting the first steps in sectoral restructuring by shifting the focus from institutional to primary care, strengthening sectoral institutional capacity and ensuring sustainability of services by controlling costs. Chile received $27 million to support the development and testing of critical policy reforms in the health sector and the rehabilitation of hospitals in the metropolitan Santiago area.

Public sector management

Two loans totalling $525 million were granted for public sector management in fiscal 1992. Argentina received $325 million to support its public sector reform programme, which sought to reduce the negative effects of chronic macroeconomic instability that had occurred during the past decade. A loan of $200 million was made to Hungary to assist its enterprise reform programme, which was aimed at accelerating sharply the privatization and restructuring of the State enterprise sector as well as improving State enterprise governance.

Small-scale enterprises

In fiscal 1992, a single loan of $60 million was granted for small-scale enterprises to Poland to provide financing for efficient investment in private enterprises, particularly in small and medium-sized firms.

Technical assistance

Five loans for technical assistance totalling $69.4 million were granted in fiscal 1992. A loan of $20 million to Argentina aimed at strengthening the country's tax administration, by financing consulting services, training, office refurbishing, equipment and software required by a newly established General Tax Directorate. A loan of $17.2 million was granted to Chile to strengthen key government institutions responsible for national policy-making and to increase the effectiveness of financial management institutions through the provision of consultant services, equipment and training. Indonesia was extended a loan of $12 million to assist in the implementation of a five-year development programme of the newly established Environmental Impact Management Agency. El Salvador received $11 million for assistance in developing its energy policy and improving the efficiency of the energy sector through institutional and legal reform.

Telecommunications

In fiscal 1992, a single loan of $375 million for telecommunications was granted to Indonesia to enhance sector performance by promoting a regulatory regime conducive to competition in providing telecommunications services and to meet growing demand for services through the rehabilitation of existing facilities, the installation of switching equipment for the local cable network and the installation and upgrading of fibre-optic-transmission and microwave-transmission facilities to improve long-distance service.

Transportation

The Bank made 10 loans to 9 countries in fiscal 1992 for transportation projects, totalling $1,618.7 million. China received $550 million, of which $330 million supported a railway project that would introduce, on a system-wide basis, advanced technology, equipment and materials for track rehabilitation and maintenance. A $266 million loan to Colombia aimed to upgrade 10 per cent of the national road network, reduce vehicle-operating costs and improve access to markets. Indonesia received $215 million to improve the quality of the road network in 73 districts of nine provinces and enhance the capability of government agencies in charge of district roads.

Urban development

The Bank made seven loans in fiscal 1992 amounting to $994 million for urban development projects. Mexico received $450 million to expand the supply of finance for low-cost housing to be built by private developers and remove regulatory barriers to housing, thus helping to lower housing costs and encourage commercial banks to increase lending for housing. Poland received $200 million to support the Government's steps to move from a heavily subsidized, centrally controlled mode of housing production to a more efficient, market-based system of supply through private initiative. In Brazil, a $126 million loan helped to create the foundations for the policy changes required to achieve sustainable, integrated multimodal transport in the São Paulo metropolitan region.

Water supply and sanitation

The Bank made six loans totalling $534 million in fiscal 1992 for water supply and sanitation. Brazil received $250 million to finance a time-slice of the six-year investment programme of the state water companies of Bahia, Mato Grosso do Sul and Santa Catarina to provide water-supply and sewerage services in those states. Credits totalling $110 million were extended to Lesotho to enable it to export water to the industrial heartland of South Africa under a 30-year scheme involving the construction of facilities to permit water transfers. A loan of $57 million was granted to Iran to rehabilitate and upgrade dikes along the southern shore of Lake Hirmand.

Economic Development Institute

Fiscal 1992 marked the mid-point of the Economic Development Institute's (EDI) five-year plan (1990-1994). The plan aimed to help countries improve the quality of their macroeconomic management, the efficiency of their public sector management and the effectiveness of their poverty-reduction efforts.

Of the 117 training programmes organized by EDI, 14 of them dealt with agriculture; 29 with development and management; 26 with finance and industry; 17 with human resources; 19 with infrastructure; and 12 with macroeconomics.

During fiscal 1992, about one third of EDI's training programmes were targeted towards sub-Saharan Africa. The number of activities carried out in and for the countries of Central and Eastern Europe rose sharply in response to the demand accompanying their transition from command to market economies. In addition, EDI implemented eight activities in the former USSR that were financed by the Bank's Technical Cooperation Agreement.

EDI dealt with several new demands on its services in fiscal 1992, foremost among them the need for training in the successor States of the former USSR. In addition, a number of other countries either joined the Bank during the year or sought to reactivate their borrowing activities; a demand for EDI to provide training in project analysis re-emerged; EDI introduced training programmes in such areas as women in development, the role of non-governmental organizations, poverty reduction, the environment and civil service reform; and the growing number of countries engaged in structural reform increased the demand for training government officials involved in formulating and managing programmes.

During the fiscal year, EDI initiated a systematic evaluation of its institution-building efforts that focused on targeting, selectivity, longer-term sustainability of assistance, and building an adequate internal information system in partner institutions.

Co-financing

The volume of co-financing anticipated in support of Bank-assisted operations approved in fiscal 1992 was approximately $13,266 million. Roughly 52 per cent of all Bank-assisted projects and programmes attracted some form of co-financing. The largest source of co-financing in fiscal 1992 continued to be official bilateral and multilateral development institutions, which together accounted for $8,872 million, or 67 per cent of total co-financing.

In addition to co-financing, the donor community provided substantial support to the Bank during the year through trust funds and other arrangements that, directly or indirectly, benefited recipient countries.

Other major co-financing activities carried out in fiscal 1992 included those under the Special Programme of Assistance (SPA) for debt-distressed, low-income countries in sub-Saharan Africa, which was in its second phase, covering the period 1991 to 1993. Under the second phase, 17 bilateral and multilateral donors had pledged $7.3 billion in quick-disbursing assistance in support of adjustment programmes in 26 countries. As at 31 December 1992, SPA donors had allocated some $5.3 billion, or nearly 80 per cent of the $7.3 billion pledged for co-financing and coordinated financing.

Financing activities

In fiscal 1992, the Bank raised $11,788.7 million through medium- and long-term borrowings in 11 currencies and currency units, made up of $4,008 million in United States dollars, $3,619 million in Japanese yen, $479 million in deutsche mark, $465.1 million in Swiss francs and $3,218 million in European currency units, French francs, Hong Kong dollars, Italian lire, Portuguese escudos, Spanish pesetas and Swedish kronor.

After $3,200 million of currency swaps and a notional par volume of $3,700 million of interest-rate swaps, all of the year's borrowings were fixed-rate liabilities denominated in United States dollars, Japanese yen, deutsche mark and Swiss francs.

During the fiscal year, the Bank refinanced $5,400 million of short-term borrowings that had been outstanding at the end of fiscal 1991. As at 30 June 1992, short-term borrowings outstanding were $5,400 million equivalent, comprising $2,600 million from official sources through the Bank's central bank facility, $2,800 million from market borrowings in United States dollars and $25 million equivalent in short-term Swiss franc borrowings.

Capitalization

Effective 30 June 1987,^a the Bank's capital stock was expressed in the special drawing right (SDR) introduced by the International Monetary Fund as it was valued in terms of United States dollars immediately before the introduction of the basket method (the value based on a basket of 16 major currencies) of valuing the SDR on 1 July 1974 (SDR 1 = $US 1.20635).

The total subscribed capital of the Bank as at 30 June 1992 was $152,200 million, or 83 per cent of authorized capital of $184,050 million. The permissible increase of net disbursements was $67,600 million, or 40 per cent of the Bank's lending limit. In April 1992, the Bank's Board of Governors approved an increase in authorized capital of 77,159 shares ($9,300 million) to accommodate the membership of the 15 successor States of the former USSR.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1992, the staff of the World Bank numbered 6,046, of whom 3,893 were staff in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 117 nationalities (see also Annex II).

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues, generated primarily from loans and investments, totalled $9,674 million in fiscal 1992, a decline of $49 million from fiscal 1991. Net income was $1,645 million, an increase of $445 million over the previous fiscal year's figure of $1,200 million. Expenses were down by $495 million to $7,965 million, of which administrative costs amounted to $615 million, up by $41 million from fiscal 1991.

On 30 June, reserves amounted to $11,200 million and the reserves-to-loan ratio stood at 11.5 per cent, excluding prefunding of interest waivers.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), is a multilateral development institution that furthers economic growth in developing member countries by promoting private sector investment. It provides direct loans and equity financing without government guarantees to private companies in developing countries. IFC also mobilizes additional financing in international capital markets and provides an array of advisory services to businesses and Governments on issues related to private investment.

During the 1992 fiscal year (1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992), Albania, Bulgaria, Equatorial Guinea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Switzerland joined IFC, bringing its membership to 146 countries. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Demand for IFC's finance and advisory services intensified as countries throughout the developing world persevered with free-market reforms. IFC's project financing approvals for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1992 totalled $3,300 million. Of that amount, $1,800 million was for IFC's own account and the balance, a record $1,500 million, was used in loan syndications and underwriting of securities issues and investment funds. IFC provided financing for 167 projects with total project costs of $12,000 million in 51 countries in Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America and the Middle East. Projects financed by IFC were in a broad range of sectors, including financial services, tourism, mining, power, oil and gas exploration, agribusiness and general manufacturing.

The more than $1,800 million of IFC financing approved for the Corporation's own account included $1,200 million in loans, $375 million in equity and $251 million in guarantees, swaps and stand-by arrangements. All IFC's loans were made at market rates of interest and carried maturities of 4 to 15 years. The $375 million in equity and quasi-equity financing set a new volume record for IFC and represented a 21 per cent share of the financing approved for IFC's own account. This increasing percentage of IFC equity investments was consistent with the Corporation's efforts to reduce reliance on debt financing by businesses in developing countries.

In May, the Corporation's Board of Governors approved a $1,000 million increase in the Corporation's authorized capital, thus raising it to $2,300 million. The increase was intended to enable IFC to increase new investment approvals in all regions by 10 per cent a year until 1998, bringing annual approvals to about $4,000 million by the end of the decade.

On 18 June 1992, the IFC Board of Directors recommended a $150 million selective capital increase to accommodate the membership of the successor States of the former USSR. Of that amount, $132 million would be allocated to the new members, and the balance would be available to accommodate future requests for shares.

IFC strengthened its commitment to support only those projects which were environmentally responsible. A study on investing in the environment highlighted the potential growth in private sector investment opportunities in environmental goods and services and summarized the findings of nine separate analyses which identified specific environmental market opportunities in Chile, Hungary, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mexico, Pakistan, Poland, Thailand and Turkey.

Regional projects

In fiscal 1992, IFC approved 167 projects located in 51 countries. Some 47 per cent of IFC's financing approvals were for projects in member countries which had per capita incomes of $830 or less per year.

Sub-Saharan Africa

IFC approved 50 projects in 20 countries in sub-Saharan Africa in fiscal 1992. As at 30 June, its committed portfolio included loans and investments for 152 companies in 33 countries.

Several large energy, mining and infrastructure projects were approved, the largest of which was a $305 million expansion of Ashanti Goldfields Corporation (Ghana) to increase its gold production. For a $123 million project to increase oil production in Cameroon, IFC approved a $30 million quasi-equity investment for its own account and a $30 million loan syndication. In Mali, IFC approved equity and quasi-equity financing of $23 million for a mining investor with a foreign private sponsor. In infrastructure, the Corporation approved a $33 million loan, including $17 million for its own account and a syndicated loan of $16 million, to help finance the construction of a 204-kilometre extension of a pipeline that would connect Harare, Zimbabwe, with the port of Beira, Mozambique.

In the financial sector, the Corporation approved several innovative projects, including investments in Ghana's first leasing company, Kenya's first financial services company and Nigeria's first discount house. It also approved agency credit lines for the Mauritius Commercial Bank and the First Merchant Bank of Zimbabwe and participated in a rights issue by the Development Finance Company of Uganda. In Botswana, IFC approved a multi-year guarantee facility on behalf of a local leasing company.

IFC provided technical assistance and advisory services in Africa during the year, including advice to small-scale entrepreneurs, technical assistance to Governments in connection with capital market development and advice on privatization and foreign direct investment. The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS) completed assignments relating to a general diagnosis of investment policy issues in Angola, Benin, Burkina Faso, Mali and Mozambique; preparation of new investment legislation in Equatorial Guinea, Malawi and Namibia; formulation of foreign investment promotion strategy in Madagascar; and an assessment of prospects for backward linkages between foreign and local firms in Kenya.

Through its African Enterprise Fund (AEF), IFC directly financed smaller companies. In fiscal 1992, total financing of $14 million was approved—$12 million in loans and $2 million in equity and quasi-equity investments—for 22 small projects in 11 countries. The AEF projects spanned a broad spectrum of sectors, including agriculture and agro-processing, small-scale manufacturing, quarrying and printing.

Asia

In fiscal 1992, IFC approved 34 projects in 9 countries in Asia. As at 30 June, the Corporation's committed portfolio included loans and investments for 178 companies in 12 countries in the region.

Investments in East Asia continued to be diversified, with the largest loans and equity investments approved for projects in the petroleum-refining and chemicals and petrochemicals sectors. In the Philippines, IFC approved a $35 million loan and a syndicated loan of $85 million to modernize a refinery. A loan syndication of $95 million was arranged by IFC for a corporation in Indonesia that was building a greenfield petrochemicals plant in Merak (West Java). IFC also approved a loan of $30 million and quasi-equity financing of $10 million for its own account for the project.

In fiscal 1992, IFC also emphasized financing for labour-intensive, export-oriented industries, aimed at creating more jobs in populous countries such as China and Indonesia. In Indonesia, IFC helped finance a $208 million programme of investments by a holding company in affiliates in export-oriented light manufacturing industries, which was expected to lead to substantial employment and foreign exchange gains.

Special attention continued to be paid to the Philippines, which was trying to stabilize its economy while stimulating economic growth. IFC provided financing for large projects with substantial amounts of foreign investment and helped restructure and strengthen domestic industries, such as a diversified food-processing company modernizing its flour mills and sugar plants. In addition to a quasi-equity investment of over $15 million and assistance with financial restructuring, IFC would help the mostly family-owned company to go public.

IFC's investment operations in India and Pakistan emphasized energy-related projects (gas development, power) and manufacturing projects. In fiscal 1992, it approved $20 million to expand a producer of natural gas in Pakistan, making energy the sector with the largest share of IFC's committed portfolio in the country. In South Asia, IFC approved over $60 million in financing for three manufacturing projects in industrial sub-sectors—steel and engineering products.

Regarding capital market development, IFC provided financing to financial institutions in South-East Asia offering sophisticated products such as big-ticket leasing, high-quality investment banking services and regional venture capital funds. During fiscal 1992, IFC helped Thailand to restructure the operations of the Bank of Asia, a privately owned commercial bank, and invested in its equity. Other projects approved included a factoring company in Indonesia, two guarantee facilities in Malaysia and a leasing company in Thailand.

In South Asia, IFC's programmes emphasized institution-building to broaden the range of financial services available to the private sector. In fiscal 1992, IFC helped restructure one of the first all-Pakistan stock brokerage firms.

IFC's technical assistance and advisory services in Asia in fiscal 1992 included advice to small-scale entrepreneurs, technical assistance in connection with capital market development and advice to Governments on attracting foreign investment. FIAS carried out diagnostic studies of the foreign investment climate in China, Pakistan and Samoa; studied investment policies in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Malaysia; and reviewed the institutional framework for investment in the Philippines. It completed studies in the Philippines and Thailand to identify policy issues in connection with backward linkages between foreign and domestic companies.

Europe

In fiscal 1992, IFC approved 23 projects in 5 countries in Europe. As at 30 June, IFC's committed portfolio included loans and investments to 93 companies in 7 countries. IFC approved its first projects in Czechoslovakia and Romania during the fiscal year.

Projects approved in Czechoslovakia included a joint venture between a United States company and a domestic carbon-black manufacturer; the privatization, expansion and modernization of a large cement producer, a joint venture with a Belgian company; and a joint venture between a German bank and Czechoslovakia's first privatized commercial bank.

IFC approved financing for several infrastructure projects in Central and Eastern Europe, including a $6 million loan and $730,000 quasi-equity investment for a joint venture in Romania between a Romanian and a French company to produce telecommunications equipment; a $15 million loan for a cellular telephone project in Hungary; and a $10 million equity participation in a regional project (Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland) for distribution of liquefied petroleum gas.

In Turkey, IFC approved syndicated loans for the country's largest producer of bed linens and home textiles and for the country's largest privately owned conglomerate. It also approved financing totalling $75 million for Turkey's first large-scale private sector mining company.

IFC technical assistance and advisory services in Europe during fiscal 1992 included advice to small-scale enterprises, technical assistance with capital market development and advice on privatization, corporate restructuring and foreign direct investment. FIAS organized a round-table on the impact of corporate tax structures on foreign direct investment in Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Romania. Assistance was also provided to Belarus and the Russian Federation, under the World Bank Technical Assistance Trust Fund, to help their Governments frame laws and organize institutions to attract foreign investment. FIAS sent a mission to Ukraine to identify possible advisory projects and carried out general diagnostic studies in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In fiscal 1992, IFC approved 45 projects in 13 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean; as at 30 June, its committed portfolio included loans and investments for 231 companies in 22 countries.

During the fiscal year, IFC introduced more medium-sized Mexican companies to international markets through loan syndications, such as one that operated 37 hotels. In addition, IFC mobilized funds in the international markets for several companies, by underwriting and planning securities issues, yielding a $72 million equity offering by the hotel group and a $100 million Eurobond offering by Mexico's second largest cement producer. IFC also approved a project in which it would co-lead/manage a $208 million international revenue bond offering for the Mexico City-Toluca Toll Road. The development of new financial instruments for Mexican companies was an important element of the Corporation's strategy. A $40 million risk-management line extended to Banco Nacional de Mexico, Mexico's largest commercial bank, would allow the bank to provide its clients with collars, currency and interest rate swaps and swaptions, hedging instruments for which demand in Mexico had been growing as substantial foreign exchange inflows resumed.

In Argentina, IFC helped to finance the privatization of a railroad company and approved some $233 million in financing, including loan syndications of $138 million, for oil and gas projects. Loans and equity investments were approved for three companies that were developing oilfields acquired from YPF, the State-owned gas company.

In Colombia, IFC emphasized projects in natural resource-based industries, approving loans for a natural gas pipeline and an oil pipeline. The Corporation approved a currency-hedging facility to enable a banana trading company to manage currency mismatches between its future transportation costs and its revenues while allowing it to benefit from a potential improvement in foreign exchange rates.

In Venezuela, IFC supported large greenfield ventures that took advantage of the country's low-cost natural gas and abundant hydroelectricity and minerals. For a $340 million project to build a methanol plant, IFC approved an equity investment of $7 million and a loan of $134 million, including a syndication of $100 million.

In Brazil, IFC helped a polyvinyl chloride producer complete a $235 million financial restructuring by providing a counter-guarantee of up to $75 million on the company's five-year international floating-rate note issue. IFC also invested in and helped place a $43 million country fund for Brazil.

In Peru, IFC approved an equity investment and credit line for a leasing company that was expanding its operations to provide lease financing to small and medium-sized private companies.

In addition, IFC provided technical assistance and advisory services in the region by advising small and medium-sized enterprises and assisting Governments with capital market development. It provided advice on corporate restructuring and privatization and on foreign direct investment. FIAS completed projects in the Bahamas, Honduras and Venezuela.

Middle East and North Africa

In fiscal 1992, IFC approved 15 projects in 4 countries in the Middle East and North Africa; as at 30 June, IFC's committed portfolio included loans and investments for 46 companies in 7 countries. The volume of financing approved by the Corporation for projects in the fiscal year more than doubled over fiscal 1991, reflecting an improving economic environment in the region.

In Egypt, IFC agreed to arrange a second currency swap for a rebar producer, enabling the company to hedge a substantial portion of its currency exposure resulting from mismatches in its revenues and obligations. It also approved $9 million in financing for a new resort hotel on the Red Sea and approved loan and equity financing for the first company in the Middle East to produce tropicalized refrigerator compressors. In the energy sector, IFC approved an additional equity investment of $13 million in the development of an oilfield in the Western Desert.

IFC supported Morocco's financial sector reforms by arranging syndicated credit lines with 10 international banks for 4 Moroccan commercial banks. It also helped finance a lead and zinc mine in Tunisia, the country's first private-sector mining venture, and approved a $10 million loan for its first project in Algeria, a joint venture between Algerian and foreign investors that would produce liquid helium for export to Europe.

IFC offered technical assistance and advisory services in the region, including advice to Governments on capital market development, privatization and foreign direct investment. FIAS completed projects in Tunisia and Yemen and conducted a project identification mission in Algeria.

Financial operations

For fiscal 1992, IFC net income was $180 million, representing a return of 7.5 per cent on the Corporation's net worth. Income from IFC's loan portfolio decreased slightly from the previous fiscal year, while income from the equity portfolio increased. Capital gains from sales of equity investments reached $113 million, the same as in fiscal 1991. Service fee income increased by 28 per cent, from $25 million in fiscal 1991 to $32 million in fiscal 1992.

Capital and retained earnings

During fiscal 1992, member countries paid in capital of $107 million. As at 30 June 1992, total paid-in capital reached $1,300 million and retained earnings came to $1,100 million, bringing IFC net worth to $2,400 million.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1992, IFC's regular staff numbered 732, drawn from 91 countries.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA) was established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to provide assistance for the same purposes as the Bank, but primarily to poorer developing countries and on easier terms. Though legally and financially distinct from the Bank, IDA shares the same staff.

The funds used by IDA—called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans—come mostly as subscriptions in convertible currencies from members, general replenishments from its more industrialized and developed members and transfers from the Bank's net earnings. Credits are made only to Governments, have 10-year grace periods and 35- or 40-year maturities and are interest-free.

During the fiscal year 1992 (1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992), IDA continued to promote economic development, concentrating on countries with annual per capita gross national product of $610 or less (in 1990 dollars). IDA's 110 approved credits in the amount of $6,549.7 million were distributed among 49 countries and an African regional project in fiscal 1992.

For the most part, IDA funds for lending were provided by its Part I (industrialized) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements. Fiscal 1992 was the second year of the ninth replenishment of IDA resources (IDA-9), which provided funds to finance commitments to IDA borrowers in fiscal years 1991-1993. IDA's commitment authority for the fiscal year amounted to some 4,760 million special drawing rights (SDRs) and was derived mainly from the receipt of formal notifications to contribute and from the release of the second tranche of donors' contributions to IDA-9. During the year, formal notifications to participate in IDA-9 were received from Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Netherlands and the Russian Federation, as well as an additional contribution of $25 million from Kuwait, thus increasing IDA's commitment authority during the year by SDR 397 million. Commitment authority also increased by SDR 3,310 million when IDA received a substantial portion of the United States' second installment to IDA-9. Other sources of commitment authority for fiscal 1992 included the transfer from the World Bank's fiscal 1991 income of some SDR 260 million as well as funds available from future reflows amounting to about SDR 795 million.

Negotiations on a tenth replenishment of IDA's resources (IDA-10) to provide funds to cover credit commitments in fiscal years 1994-1996 were launched with a meeting of IDA deputies in January 1992 in Paris and at a subsequent meeting in April in Washington, D.C.

During 1992, membership of IDA rose to 147, with the admission of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Switzerland and Uzbekistan. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Lending operations (credits)

By 30 June 1992, IDA had made cumulative commitments totalling $71,065 million. In fiscal year 1992, commitments amounted to $6,549.7 million, of which $3,235.2 million went to 31 countries in Africa and the Africa region; $1,640.8 million to five countries in South Asia; $1,069.6 million to five countries in East Asia; $405 million to five countries in Latin America and the Caribbean; $158 million to two countries in the Middle East and North Africa; and $41.1 million to one country in Europe. India was the largest borrower, with six credits totalling $1,023.5 million, followed by China with eight ($948.6 million).

Agriculture and rural development

In fiscal 1992, IDA granted 29 credits totalling $1,368.4 million for agriculture and rural development projects in 25 countries. China received $287 million, of which $162 million supported a project in Guangdong province to increase fish production from the South China Sea, develop aquaculture facilities and boost production of fruits and sugar cane. Of the three credits provided to India totalling $243 million, $124 million was used to finance forestry and environmentally beneficial investment to assist some 800,000 households, comprising forest dwellers, tribal persons and smallholder farms. A $150 million credit went to Zimbabwe to assist the Government's drought-relief and recovery programme by providing agriculture inputs, rehabilitating the water supply system, providing critical inputs for the transport of goods needed for relief and recovery and upgrading the public works programme through which drought relief was distributed. Ghana received two credits totalling $110.4 million, of which $80 million supported government reforms in the agricultural sector involving the liberalization of agricultural pricing, marketing and input supply. A credit of $29.2 million was granted to Pakistan to strengthen the country's environmental protection institutions and initiate a series of related operations, studies and pilot activities.

Development finance companies

IDA extended five credits valued at $223.3 million to assist development finance companies in five countries during fiscal 1992. Ghana received $100 million to support the second phase of its financial sector adjustment, which was expected to result in a broader-based and more diversified financial sector with a stronger, more efficient, and responsive banking system. Of $75 million received by Côte d'Ivoire, $50 million supported the country's multifaceted financial sector reform programme, through an operation which was designed to stabilize the financial system and restore to health the country's system of financial intermediation. Bangladesh received $28.4 million, of which $25.5 million provided a line of credit to selected financial intermediaries for term lending to privately controlled firms, thus furthering the liberalization of the financial system.

Education

Eleven credits totalling $584.1 million were granted to 10 countries in fiscal 1992 for education projects. Kenya received two credits totalling $155 million, of which $100 million supported the Government's education reform programme which sought to limit the demands of the education sector on the public budget. A $130 million credit to China assisted governments of six provinces in initiating institutional and policy reforms to improve the management of education and its quality and efficiency within a newly decentralized framework. In Pakistan, $115 million helped improve access and participation, especially for girls, in middle schools in the Punjab province's rural and urban slum areas.

Energy

In fiscal 1992, seven countries received $228 million for energy-related projects. Of $82.1 million received by Honduras, $50.6 million supported the Government's energy sector reform programme, which included measures to make the national power company a financially viable entity and develop the country's oil and gas potential by the private sector. Nepal received a credit of $65 million to increase the supply capacity of the Nepal Electricity Authority by improving technical and operational efficiency and upgrading existing generating capacity. Malawi received $55 million for the construction of a hydroelectric scheme and rehabilitation of existing power stations. A credit of $50 million was granted to Sri Lanka to rehabilitate the remaining 53 power-distribution systems that were still operated by local authorities. The systems were to be taken over by the Ceylon Electricity Board in the next few years.

Industry

IDA granted three credits for industrial projects totalling $406 million in fiscal 1992. A $200 million credit to the United Republic of Tanzania supported the Government's financial sector reform programme, the objective of which was to create a system based on market-oriented principles. A $200 million credit to Zambia supported the next stages of the country's structural adjustment programme, which focused on market liberalization and civil service reform, together with new initiatives in private sector development, privatization and parastatal reform. Mali received $6 million to develop the mining industry. Mines of all sizes would be financed with both foreign and local capital.

Non-project credits

Twenty countries received credits in the amount of $1,460.1 million to finance non-project areas in fiscal 1992. A credit of $250 million went to India to support the initial phase of the Government's programme of macroeconomic stabilization and structural reform. Mozambique received $180 million to help enhance private sector-based growth, redeploy budgetary expenditures towards key social sectors and smallholder agriculture and provide support for drought relief. Bangladesh received $150 million to implement a programme of fiscal reforms designed to increase public investment and savings. A $150 million credit was extended to Ethiopia for a multisectoral operation, which would include improvements in public health and education and increase employment opportunities generated through reconstruction works. Nicaragua received $110 million for its structural adjustment programme designed to downsize and restructure the public sector, improve resource allocation and mobilization and reform incentive systems.

Population, health and nutrition

IDA granted 13 credits totalling $654.7 million to assist population, health and nutrition projects in 11 countries. India received a total of $377.5 million, of which $214.5 million helped to finance the cost of expanding and enhancing of the Government's national maternal and child health programme and of introducing a safe motherhood initiative. A credit of $129.6 million to China supported national programmes to control tuberculosis and schistosomiasis in selected provinces. With a credit of $31 million to Kenya, the Kenyatta National Hospital, the national referral hospital that also served the Nairobi area, was rehabilitated and its clinical and administrative efficiency improved.

Public sector management

Credits amounting to $76.7 million to improve public sector management were granted to four countries. Uganda received $65.6 million to enhance the role of private enterprises by reducing the size of the public enterprise sector through privatization and by facilitating access to term finance. Guinea received $7.3 million to help the Government formulate and implement the next stage of its Public Enterprise Rationalization and Privatization Programme, which emphasized public enterprise privatization and strengthening of key institutions involved in programme implementation.

Technical assistance

Twelve IDA credits totalling $127 million provided for technical assistance in fiscal 1992. Bangladesh received $25 million to prepare investment projects and for investments related to IDA's lending programme. Of $21.2 million received by the United Republic of Tanzania, $11.2 million financed an urban sector engineering project to strengthen the institutional and financial capacities of the country's urban councils and prepare the groundwork for subsequent investment projects in urban infrastructure. Burkina Faso received $15 million to reinforce major public institutions charged with economic and sector management. A $15 million credit was extended to Côte d'Ivoire to provide general institutional support to government entities in charge of the country's privatization programme.

Telecommunications

An IDA credit of $55 million was extended to Nepal during fiscal 1992 to provide telecommunications equipment and technical assistance for institutional building.

Transportation

During fiscal 1992, eight credits totalling $490.8 million were granted to eight countries for transportation projects. India received $153 million to modernize key sections of the national highway network and to promote the use of improved road engineering and construction standards, network management and contract management. A credit of $80 million to Bolivia contributed to upgrading about one third of the country's maintainable road network, thus reducing both a large backlog of maintenance and vehicle operating costs. Mozambique was granted $74.3 million to develop the institutional capacity in the Ministry of Construction and Water and the Ministry of Transport and Communications needed to plan and supervise road rehabilitation and maintenance and improve small coastal ports serving priority districts. Burkina Faso received $66 million to assist in rehabilitating and maintaining essential transport infrastructure and improving sectoral efficiency. Ghana received $55 million to finance a portion of the Government's 1992-1999 feeder roads programme. A $37.7 million credit to Angola financed economic and financial-feasibility studies, as well as basic engineering studies and environment assessments, for the rehabilitation and maintenance of key transport and urban systems.

Urban development

Eight countries received credits totalling $382.6 million for urban development in fiscal 1992. Of $160 million received by China, $100 million went to a project to improve Tianjin's urban infrastructure and environment. Uganda received $71.2 million to finance short- and medium-term reconstruction of essential economic and social infrastructure in the north to restore the region's economic productivity and begin the process of reducing the historical disparity between the northern and southern areas of the country. Angola received $45.6 million to rehabilitate its water and sewer networks, provide clean water and affordably priced latrines and rehabilitate storm-drainage and solid-waste management systems for the twin cities of Lobito and Benguela.

Water supply and sewerage

IDA granted credits to six countries totalling $377.4 million for water supply and sewerage. Of $190 million granted to China, $110 million helped to increase coverage of water supply in six underdeveloped island provinces and autonomous regions. The increased coverage was to be complemented by sanitation services, health and hygiene education, technical assistance and training. Nigeria received $101 million to improve the quantity and reliability of the water supply in the more important towns and settlements of the Katsina and Kaduna States. The National Water Conservation and Pipeline Corporation in Kenya was assisted with a credit of $43.2 million to carry out a preparatory project to improve and extend the water supply and wastewater disposal systems in Mombasa and other locations in the coastal region. Burundi received $32.7 million to improve public health and living conditions through the construction of rural water-supply systems in 9 of the country's 15 provinces.

Secretariat

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

During 1992, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) increased its assistance to the formerly centrally planned economies in transition to market-based systems and focused on initiatives to improve prospects for the world economy.

IMF provided the machinery for, and promoted, international monetary cooperation through surveillance of the exchange-rate policies of its member States. Surveillance was carried out through consultations analysing the economic and financial conditions of IMF members and regular discussions on the world economic outlook.

IMF operates on a fiscal year; fiscal year 1992 covered the period from 1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992.

As at 31 December 1992, IMF membership stood at 175, with the admission of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Croatia, Estonia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, the Marshall Islands, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, San Marino, Slovenia, Switzerland, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

IMF facilities and policies

The Fund's financial support assisted member States to regain a viable balance of payments combined with economic growth and exchange-rate stability. The facilities and policies through which it provided such support differed, depending on the nature of the macroeconomic and structural problems to be addressed and the terms and degree of conditionality attached to them.

Stand-by arrangements, typically covering periods of one to two years, focused on specific macroeconomic policies, such as exchange-rate and interest-rate policies, aimed at overcoming balance-of-payments difficulties. Extended arrangements, which supported medium-term programmes generally running for three years, were available to overcome more intractable balance-of-payments difficulties, attributable to structural as well as macroeconomic problems.

IMF's enlarged access policy was used to increase the resources available under stand-by or extended arrangements for programmes needing substantial Fund support. It was financed with ordinary resources and resources borrowed for that purpose, the combination of which was determined according to IMF policy. Access to the Fund's general resources under the enlarged access policy had been subject to annual limits of 90 or 110 per cent of quota, three-year limits of 270 or 330 per cent of quota and cumulative limits of 400 or 440 per cent of quota. Once borrowed resources were fully used, ordinary resources were substituted to meet commitments. The substitution was applicable until 30 September 1992. In November, the Ninth General Review of Quotas took effect, increasing the amount of IMF quotas to 144.8 billion special drawing rights (SDRs) from SDR 97.4 billion.

The structural adjustment facility (SAF), launched in 1986,^a provided balance-of-payments assistance on concessional terms to support medium-term macroeconomic adjustment and structural reform in low-income countries facing protracted balance-of-payments problems. The enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF), established in 1987^b and operational since 1988—similar in objective, conditions for eligibility and programme features to SAF, but differing in scope and strength of structural policies, terms of access levels, monitoring procedures and sources of funding—was extended by the Executive Board for a fourth year, to November 1993, its cut-off date. The Board agreed to examine options and modalities for a possible successor facility.

The compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF) provided resources to members to cover temporary export shortfalls and excesses in cereal import costs arising from events beyond their control, and helped with IMF arrangements to maintain the momentum of reforms in the face of adverse external shocks, such as declines in export prices or increases in import prices and fluctuations in interest rates.

Under the buffer stock financing facility, IMF provided resources to help finance members' contributions to approved buffer stocks of commodities.

Financial assistance

In 1992, much of IMF's financial support went to its new members, the previously centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe and the successor States of the former USSR, to establish effective monetary arrangements and integrate them into the international monetary system. IMF approved a first credit-tranche arrangement for the Russian Federation and stand-by arrangements for Estonia and Latvia.

The number of IMF arrangements in effect increased by one over 1991 to 51 at the end of 1992, with total commitments of SDR 29.8 billion. As at 31 December 1992, there were 22 stand-by arrangements (Albania, Barbados, Brazil, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Gabon, Guatemala, India, Jordan, Latvia, Lithuania, Morocco, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippines, Romania, Russian Federation, Uruguay); 7 extended arrangements (Argentina, Hungary, Jamaica, Mexico, Poland, Venezuela, Zimbabwe); 4 SAF arrangements (Burkina Faso, Comoros, Ethiopia, Rwanda); and 18 ESAF arrangements (Bangladesh, Bolivia, Burundi, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe). In April 1992, 11 low-income developing countries were added to the list of countries eligible to make purchases under ESAF (Albania, Angola, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Honduras, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Philippines, Zimbabwe).

Total IMF disbursements to its members declined to SDR 5.3 billion in 1992 from SDR 8.2 billion in 1991. Disbursements under the General Resources Account declined to SDR 4.8 billion in 1992 from SDR 7.4 billion in the previous year. Disbursements under stand-by arrangements rose to SDR 3.1 billion in 1992 from SDR 2.6 billion in 1991, whereas disbursements under extended arrangements declined to SDR 0.9 billion from SDR 1.9 billion. Disbursements under CCFF also declined, to SDR 0.6 billion from SDR 3 billion in 1991, when many countries drew on the facility in the wake of oil price increases resulting from events in the Persian Gulf. Under SAF, disbursements declined to SDR 20 million in 1992 from SDR 149.9 million the year before, and those under ESAF declined to SDR 524.3 million from SDR 633 million. Repurchases under the General Resources Account decreased in 1992, to SDR 4.2 billion from SDR 4.7 billion in 1991.

In response to a rising number of countries seeking IMF support and increased demand for its resources, the Board of Governors authorized a 50 per cent increase in the size of quotas under the Ninth General Review of Quotas, which took effect in November 1992, bringing the total of IMF quotas to SDR 144.8 billion.

Liquidity

As at 30 April 1992, the Fund's adjusted and uncommitted usable resources totalled SDR 20.9 billion, compared with SDR 23.8 billion the previous fiscal year. The decline resulted from the exclusion of two currencies from the operational budget and the excess of purchases (drawings) over repurchases (repayments) during 1991/92.

IMF's liquid liabilities declined to SDR 25.6 billion as at 30 April 1992 from SDR 26.2 billion a year earlier, representing reserve tranche positions of SDR 21.9 billion and loan claims on the Fund of SDR 3.7 billion, a decline of SDR 0.6 billion. The ratio of the Fund's adjusted and uncommitted usable resources to its liquid liabilities—the liquidity ratio—declined by 12 per cent over the course of 1991/92 to 81.6 per cent, owing largely to the high level of new commitments, including commitments of ordinary resources to be substituted for borrowed resources.

SDR activity

Total transfers of SDRs during fiscal 1992 declined to SDR 13.4 billion from SDR 14.8 billion in fiscal 1991, representing decreases in transfers among participants and prescribed holders (SDR 5.8 billion); transfers from participants to the General Resources Account (SDR 3.8 billion); and transfers from the General Resources Account to participants and prescribed holders (SDR 3.8 billion). SDRs used in operations involving SAF, ESAF, Trust Fund loans and the Supplementary Financing Facility Subsidy Account amounted to SDR 149 million in fiscal 1992.

Policy on arrears

Overdue financial obligations to IMF continued to be a serious concern in fiscal 1992, although their increase and the rate of growth were the lowest since fiscal 1982. Total overdue obligations rose from SDR 3.4 billion at the end of fiscal 1991 to SDR 3.5 billion at the end of fiscal 1992, almost all of which was due from members in arrears to IMF by six months or more; the number of such members increased from 9 to 10. As at 30 April 1992, eight members were ineligible to use IMF general resources; one member, previously declared ineligible, cleared its overdue obligations and regained eligibility.

IMF continued to implement a strengthened cooperative strategy to resolve members' arrears problems. The strategy involved increased efforts to ensure that all members using IMF resources were able to meet their obligations when they fell due and remedial and deterrent measures, including a tightening of the timing of procedures for dealing with members in arrears. Under IMF's rights-accumulation programme, established in 1990, members could obtain future financing from the Fund once they cleared their arrears. By April 1992, the Executive Board had endorsed rights-accumulation programmes for three member States. Moreover, with the entry into force on 11 November 1992 of the Third Amendment of IMF's Articles of Agreement, the Executive Board, by a 70 per cent majority of the total voting power, was empowered to suspend the voting rights and certain related rights of a member that had been declared ineligible to use IMF's resources and which persisted in its failure to settle its outstanding obligations.

Technical assistance and training

Demand for IMF's technical assistance services increased sharply in 1992, with requests from countries making the transition from centrally planned to market economies, notably members in Eastern Europe and the successor States of the former USSR. Technical assistance programmes in those countries focused on establishing central banks and banking systems; regulatory systems; fiscal institutions, such as tax administration and tax policies, budgetary practices and social security schemes; and statistical databases. Programmes were also set up in many previously non-market developing countries, such as Algeria, Angola, Benin, Cape Verde, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique and Viet Nam.

The Fund's technical assistance was provided through advisory visits, formal training and advice extended in the course of other staff contacts with authorities of member States. Assistance focused on improving macroeconomic management through training economic policy officials, enhancing the quality of economic statistical data, helping to reform tax systems and tax administration, and developing and improving the operations of central banking and financial systems.

Resources for IMF's technical assistance services were supplemented through a 1989 agreement, under which the Fund served as an executing agency for United Nations Development Programme assistance, and a special technical assistance account set up in March 1990 and funded by Japan.

The IMF Institute provided training to officials of member States through courses and seminars at IMF headquarters and abroad. During fiscal 1992, the Institute held 15 courses and 3 seminars at headquarters, including one course specifically directed at centrally planned economies in transition. The Institute conducted 19 courses and 4 seminars overseas for government officials, of which 10 courses provided training in the former USSR and Eastern Europe.

In September 1992, IMF, together with five other international institutions, established the Joint Vienna Institute to assist officials and private-sector managers from former centrally planned economies. Through December 1992, the Institute offered 14 courses, including a seminar on public expenditure policies in transition economies. In August, a technical assistance secretariat was set up in IMF to advise management on all aspects of technical assistance and to provide a focal point to coordinate such assistance.

IMF-World Bank collaboration

IMF recognized that balance-of-payments problems arose not only from a temporary lack of liquidity and inadequate financial and budgetary policies, but also from long-standing contradictions in the structure of members' economies. Broadening its focus to include structural reform resulted in considerable convergence in the efforts of IMF and the World Bank and led them to rely more on each other's special expertise.

IMF continued to collaborate closely with the Bank by coordinating both policy advice and financial assistance. During fiscal 1992, collaboration intensified with the provision of advice to the successor States of the former USSR.

IMF and the Bank were both concerned with economic issues and worked at broadening and strengthening the economies of their members. However, IMF was primarily a cooperative institution that sought to maintain an orderly system of payments and receipts between countries.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the total full-time staff of IMF—including permanent, fixed-term and temporary employees—was 2,167, drawn from 121 nationalities.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) facilitates the safety and efficiency of civil air transport. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944) which prescribe standards, recommended practices and procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations.

In 1992, scheduled traffic of the world's airlines increased to some 245 billion tonne-kilometres, indicating a recovery from the first-ever annual decline recorded in 1991. The airlines carried about 1.17 billion passengers and 17 million tonnes of freight. In 1992, the passenger load factor on total scheduled services (domestic and international) remained unchanged at 66 per cent, whereas the weight load factor decreased slightly from 59 to 58 per cent. Air freight rose by 5 per cent to 61.2 billion tonne-kilometres, and airmail traffic increased by 2 per cent. Overall passenger/freight/mail tonne-kilometres were up by 6 per cent and international tonne-kilometres by 11 per cent.

The ICAO Assembly, which meets triennially, held its twenty-ninth session (Montreal, Canada, 29 September-8 October 1992). It elected a new Council, reviewed the organization's activities during the previous three years, and adopted 34 resolutions dealing with budgetary matters, navigation surveillance and air traffic management systems, environmental protection, implementation of the 1991 Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection,^a technical cooperation, the role of ICAO in preventing substance abuse in the workplace, and smoking restrictions on international flights. The Assembly endorsed a programme of activities to mark the fiftieth anniversary of ICAO in December 1994.

The ICAO Council held three regular sessions. In December, at the request of Japan, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation and the United States, the Council decided to complete the investigation which ICAO had initiated in 1983 regarding the shooting down of Korean Air Lines flight KAL-007 on 31 August 1983.

In 1992, membership of ICAO rose to 174 with the admission of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Croatia, Estonia, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova, Slovenia, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Activities in 1992

Air navigation

ICAO's main efforts in air navigation continued to focus on updating and implementing its specifications and regional plans. The specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical annexes to the Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services. To promote their uniform application, ICAO made available guidance material consisting of new and revised technical manuals and circulars. Regional plans covered air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions. ICAO's efforts in this area were supplemented by experts who advised States on the installation of new facilities and services and the operation of existing ones.

Seven air navigation meetings covering a wide range of subjects recommended changes to ICAO specifications. The Limited North Atlantic Regional Air Navigation Meeting (Cascais, Portugal, 3-18 November) was the first regional meeting held since the Council's adoption of a new ICAO system concept for communications, navigation, surveillance/air traffic management (CNS/ATM). The new technologies employed by CNS/ATM were to replace current air-traffic control methods over a 10- to 15-year period, and the meeting took a number of decisions governing that transition to a modern space-age environment. A second draft plan for the transition to CNS/ATM systems was produced by the third meeting of the Special Committee for the Monitoring and Coordination of Development and Transition Planning for the Future Air Navigation System (Montreal, 30 March-15 April 1992).

Project areas that received special attention during the year included accident investigation and prevention, aerodromes, airport and airspace congestion, bird strikes to aircraft, audiovisual training aids, aviation medicine, environmental matters, aircraft airworthiness, flight safety and human factors, security in aircraft design, meteorology, personnel licensing and training, rules of the air and air traffic services, search and rescue, and units of measurement.

Air transport

ICAO continued its programmes of regulatory and economic studies, economic research, analysis and forecasting, air carrier tariffs, collection and publication of air transport statistics, airport and route facility management and the promotion of international air transport.

A World-wide Air Transport Colloquium (Montreal, 6-10 April) explored the future of international air transport regulation. A Facilitation Area Meeting (Nairobi, Kenya, 17-21 February) discussed a wide range of facilitation problems in Africa. The Statistics Panel (Montreal, 9-13 March) reviewed progress in implementing recommendations of the eighth (1989) session of the Statistics Division and provided advice on a number of substantive issues. The Technical Advisory Group on Machine-Readable Travel Documents (Montreal, 4-8 May) developed generic specifications for official identity documents for travel purposes, as well as a smaller size visa as an alternative to the full size machine-readable visa. The Pacific Area Traffic Forecasting Group (Bangkok, Thailand, 6-16 April) developed traffic forecasts for the Asia and Pacific region to assist in air navigation systems planning. Workshops were held during the year on forecasting and economic planning (Bangkok, March/April; Nairobi, May); airport and route facility management (Aruba, July; Cairo, Egypt, December); and statistics (Nairobi, May).

ICAO continued to cooperate closely with other international organizations, including the International Air Transport Association, the Airports Association Council International, the Customs Cooperation Council, the World Tourism Organization, the International Organization for Standardization, the International Maritime Organization and the Universal Postal Union. It also continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

ICAO maintained its responsibilities for the administration of the Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements, to which 22 Governments were contracting parties in 1992. The two agreements, which were signed in 1956 and amended in 1982, concerned air navigation services for Greenland and the Faeroe Islands and in Iceland. The protocols of amendment were accepted by all 22 Governments parties to the Agreements.

Legal matters

The Legal Committee, at its twenty-eighth session (Montreal, 11-22 May), considered institutional and legal aspects of future air navigation systems and legal aspects of global air-ground communications. The ICAO Assembly in 1992 had adopted a resolution on the legal aspects of global air-ground communications.

In November, the ICAO Council approved the general work programme of the Legal Committee, including: consideration, with regard to global navigation satellite systems, of the establishment of a legal framework; action to expedite ratification of Montreal Protocols Nos. 3 and 4 of the Warsaw System; study of the instruments of the Warsaw System; liability rules which might be applicable to air traffic services providers as well as to other potentially liable parties; liability of air traffic control agencies; and the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;^b and the implications, if any, for the application of the Chicago Convention, its annexes and other international air-law instruments.

The following conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were ratified or adhered to by the additional member States listed below in 1992:

Technical cooperation

During 1992, ICAO's technical cooperation programmes were financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), trust funds and the associate experts programme. Total 1992 expenditures for all technical cooperation programmes amounted to $44.3 million, compared with $45.8 million in 1991.

ICAO had resident missions in 48 countries during all or part of the year and gave assistance to 79 others in the form of fellowships and experts assigned to intercountry or subcontractual arrangements. It engaged 401 experts from 50 countries during all or part of 1992, of whom 280 were on assignment under UNDP and 121 on trust fund projects (including six under the associate experts programme). There were 136 experts in the field at the end of 1992. A total of 741 fellowships were awarded during the year, of which 703 were implemented.

Equipment purchases and subcontracts continued to represent a substantial portion of the technical cooperation programme. In addition to UNDP and trust fund projects, 66 Governments or organizations were registered with ICAO under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Services at the end of 1992. The total for equipment and subcontracts committed during 1992 was an aggregate of $13.73 million, compared with $9.81 million in 1991.

The following were recipients of UNDP country projects executed by ICAO.

Africa: Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Americas: Argentina, Bahamas, Brazil, Chile, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Panama, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay.

Arab States: Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Asia/Pacific: Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cambodia, China, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Indonesia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Micronesia, Mongolia, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, Tonga, Viet Nam.

Europe: Portugal, Romania, Turkey.

Also, UNDP intercountry and interregional projects were executed by ICAO in Africa, the Americas, the Arab States, and Asia and the Pacific.

Trust fund projects were executed by ICAO in Angola, Argentina, Bolivia, Brunei Darussalam, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Fiji, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Jordan, Lebanon, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zambia.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat stood at 762: 303 in the Professional and higher categories, drawn from 81 nationalities, and 459 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 194 persons were employed in regional offices (see Annex II for ICAO officers).

Budget

Appropriations for the 1992 financial year, including amounts carried over from previous years, totalled $48,073,000.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established in 1874 at Berne, Switzerland, serves to exchange postal services among nations. It promotes the organization and improvement of postal services and development of international collaboration in this area. At the request of its members, it participates in various forms of postal technical assistance.

In 1992, UPU membership rose to 177, with the admission of Armenia, Croatia, Estonia, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Namibia, the Republic of Moldova and Slovenia. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, the supreme legislative authority of UPU composed of all member States, normally meets every five years. The most recent Congress, the twentieth, took place at Washington, D.C., in 1989, and the twenty-first was scheduled to meet at Seoul, Republic of Korea, in 1994.

The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the acts of the Union based on proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies (CCPS), and of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities. The acts in force since 1 January 1991 were those of the 1989 Congress.

Executive Council

At its 1992 session (Berne, 22 April-13 May), the Executive Council—which carries out the work of UPU between Congresses—considered administrative matters and examined studies concerning international mail referred to it by the 1989 Congress.

The Council held a general discussion on postal administration profitability and reviewed the following issues: customs treatment of postal items; marking of goods that should not be exposed to radiographic control or opened; use of a symbol for literature for blind persons; express mail service (EMS); philatelic activities; pricing and remuneration of letter post; air conveyance and quality control; postal financial services; technical cooperation; and a number of items concerning parcel post, including land and sea rates and transit of parcels.

An extraordinary high-level meeting (Berne, 14 and 15 May), attended by senior postal officials representing 78 countries, discussed trends regarding the role, structure and operation of postal services, as well as the mission, structure and functioning of UPU.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The annual session of CCPS (Berne, 12-23 October) considered progress achieved in implementing the Washington General Action Plan, adopted at the 1989 Congress to serve as a master plan for the bodies of the Union and for postal administrations during 1990-1994.

During 1992, symposia were held on new product development, EMS, postal technology research and development, and human resources. The work of the Electronic Transmission Standards Group, aimed at establishing a world-wide postal electronic data interchange (EDI) system adapted to postal operational needs and accessible to all UPU members, focused on the distribution of an EDI business plan, creation of an EDI unit at UPU headquarters, development of standard-setting procedures, preparation of a message development guide, and consideration of legal issues concerning EDI.

Postal security matters continued to be dealt with by the Postal Security Action Group, which focused on establishing a postal security network. The Airport Mail Security and Operations Manual, adopted by CCPS, was to serve as a guide for postal administrations and airlines, as well as airport authorities. In 1992, the Executive Council made monitoring aviation/mail security-related issues a permanent UPU activity.

Activities of the Postal Development Action Group centred on promoting financial assistance for postal development and incorporating postal needs into national economic planning.

A new edition of the Multilingual Vocabulary of the International Postal Service was issued in 1992, and supplements were being developed on marketing of postal services and postal information technology and telematics.

International Bureau

Under the general supervision of the Executive Council; the International Bureau—the UPU secretariat—serves the postal administrations of member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

During 1992, the Bureau collected, coordinated, published and disseminated international postal service information and, at the request of postal administrations, conducted inquiries and acted as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them. It continued its programme of studying the operation of the international postal network and monitoring the quality of international mail circulation, and carried out six service-quality tests, two for EMS and four for ordinary mail. A Compendium of Delivery Standards containing information from some 40 postal administrations was distributed in January and the Market Analysis Information System was launched. The Bureau fielded 11 missions to 29 countries to examine the state of regional postal services.

As at 31 December 1992, the number of permanent and temporary staff members employed by the UPU secretariat was 146, of whom 58 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 42 countries) and 88 in the General Service category. Also, as French remained the sole official UPU language, 15 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services.

Technical cooperation

In 1992, technical cooperation provided by UPU was financed for the most part by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), with UNDP/UPU project expenditures amounting to $2.2 million. Assistance was also provided through the UPU Special Fund (voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States) and the regular budget for a total of $1.6 million. Multi-year projects financed by UPU and in execution numbered 37; 52 experts and consultants undertook missions during the year and 230 fellowships were awarded.

In addition, bilateral and multilateral assistance was provided to national postal administrations and under special programmes in such areas as the Transport and Communications Decades for Asia and the Pacific and in Africa; technical cooperation among developing countries; the action programme for the least developed countries; and cooperation in combating the illicit transmission of narcotics by post, including the third seminar for training postal employees in drug-detection techniques (Rufisque, Senegal, 18-21 March). Fellowships and training courses were also offered by several countries.

The six UPU regional advisers appointed in 1991 (two in Africa, one in Latin America and the Caribbean, two in Asia and the Pacific and one in the Arab countries) conducted programming and follow-up missions in 60 countries in support of governmental authorities and UNDP resident representatives. Thirty-seven technical assistance country projects were proposed, revised or approved for financing. UNDP also approved a project on management of telecommunications and postal services in Europe and a sectoral support project for a number of African, Arab, Asian, Latin American and European countries.

Budget

Under UPU's self-financing system, contributions are payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. At its 1991 session, the Executive Council approved the 1992 budget of 27,622,265 Swiss francs, to be financed by contributions from member States. In 1992, the Council approved the 1993 budget at a total of SwF 29,087,690, also to be financed by member States.

NOTE: For details of UPU activities, see Report on the Work of the Union, 1992, published by UPU.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1992, the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 21 June-9 July; 20 December), reviewed financial and administrative matters and provisionally approved a cooperation agreement between ITU and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The Council decided to convene a World Radiocommunication Conference in 1993 at Geneva.

The additional Plenipotentiary Conference (Geneva, 7-22 December) revised the Constitution and Convention adopted at the 1989 Plenipotentiary Conference, providing for a new ITU structure, as reflected in the following basic instruments: the Plenipotentiary Conference, the Council, world conferences on international telecommunications, the radiocommunication sector, the telecommunication standardization sector, the telecommunication development sector and the General Secretariat. It decided to implement the new structure and working methods provisionally as from 1 March 1993, pending the entry into force of the Constitution and Convention on 1 July 1994. As a result of the restructuring, the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR), the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) and the International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) would cease to exist.

In 1992, ITU membership rose to 174 with the admission of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Estonia, the Republic of Moldova, Slovenia and Uzbekistan. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

World Administrative Radio Conference

The World Administrative Radio Conference for dealing with frequency allocations in certain parts of the spectrum (WARC-92) (Málaga-Torremolinos, Spain, 3 February-3 March) adopted a partial revision of the radio regulations and appendices thereto and revised resolutions and recommendations of previous WARC. It adopted new resolutions and recommendations, dealing with, inter alia, the implementation of changes in frequency allocations between 5,900 and 19,020 kilohertz; assistance to developing countries to facilitate the implementation of changes in frequency band allocations necessitating the transfer of existing assignments; establishment of standards for operating low-orbit satellite systems; allocation of frequencies to the fixed-satellite service in the band 13.75 to 14 gigahertz; implementation of future public land mobile telecommunication systems; further work by CCIR concerning the broadcasting-satellite service (sound); terrestrial VHF (very high frequency) digital sound broadcasting; studies of the maximum permitted levels of spurious emissions; and multiservice satellite networks using the geostationary-satellite orbit.

International consultative committees

During 1992, CCIR study group meetings made progress on recommendations dealing with spectrum management techniques; fixed-satellite service; radiowave propagation in non-ionized and ionized media; science services; mobile, radio-determination, amateur and related satellite services; fixed service; broadcasting service (sound and television); and television transmission. In June, CCIR's Ad Hoc Group for Strategic Review and Planning considered the adaptation and continuity of the work of study groups under the new ITU radiocommunication sector and the CCIR questions to be studied by the radiocommunication sector, the standardization sector, or jointly. CCIR held an information meeting (Acapulco, Mexico, April) and convened an information seminar on administrative and operational regulatory matters for Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania (July).

CCITT completed its last year of the 1989-1992 study period, with study groups focusing on network operation; transmission performance of telephone networks and terminals; tariff and accounting principles; protection against electromagnetic effects; switching and signalling; data communications networks; terminals for telematics services; telegraph networks and telegraph terminal equipment; languages for telecommunications applications; data transmission over the telephone network; and maintenance.

At the end of 1992, 225 private companies and 37 international organizations were registered participants in CCITT.

International Frequency Registration Board

Major activities of IFRB during 1992 included follow-up action on decisions of: WARC-88 on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit and on the planning of space services utilizing it; and the second (1989) session of the Regional Administrative Radio Conference for the planning of VHF/UHF (very high frequency/ultra high frequency) television broadcasting in the African broadcasting area and neighbouring countries. IFRB actively prepared for and participated in WARC-92. Other activities included examination and recording in the Master International Frequency Register of 72,595 frequency assignment notices received from member countries. At the end of 1992, the Register contained particulars of 1,158,643 assignments representing 5,467,616 records, IFRB studied 28 requests for special assistance for terrestrial and space radiocommunication services, and completed 26 requests for frequency selection for stations in the fixed service. It considered 37 cases of harmful interference and issued two summaries of monitoring information.

The fifteenth regular IFRB seminar on frequency management (Geneva, 5-9 October) focused on space radiocommunications and organized a special session on international satellite organizations. IFRB conducted national seminars on space matters, including regulatory and technical aspects, in Iran (20-27 November), the Republic of Korea (12-15 May) and Thailand (15-17 July), and provided technical assistance to two multilateral planning meetings (Geneva, 1-5 June and 12-16 October) for the coordination of frequency assignments to the ARABSAT-2A and ARABSAT-2B satellite networks.

Technical cooperation

In 1992, under various ITU technical cooperation programmes in developing countries, 318 experts were recruited and 1,313 fellowships were awarded. Equipment delivered during the year was valued at $4.5 million, and funds from a variety of sources were allocated to 167 projects.

In Africa, the ITU Telecommunication Development Bureau (BDT) granted technical assistance to: Benin, to purchase teaching material; Burundi, for telecommunication training; Cape Verde, for training telecommunication staff; the Congo, for telecommunication development; Lesotho, to prepare a telecommunication master plan and improve frequency management; Mauritania, to computerize frequency management; and the United Republic of Tanzania, to study the development of national broadcasting development. The second Conference of African Ministers of Telecommunications (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 25-27 May) adopted a convention and an operational agreement setting up a regional African satellite communication organization with headquarters at Abidjan. BDT convened the first African information and telecommunication policy study group (Nairobi, Kenya). A seminar was organized for French-speaking countries (Cotonou, Benin) to train 34 national coordinators on the use of the BDT planning guide related to the development of maritime radiocommunications. A similar workshop was organized for Portuguese-speaking countries (Bissau, Guinea-Bissau). Two regional meetings discussed new human resources development and management strategies and training approaches (Dakar, Senegal, May; Conakry, Guinea, October).

Projects in the Americas, mostly financed by trust funds, provided assistance to Bolivia, to apply computer techniques to frequency management; Brazil, to research and develop the design of telecommunication equipment and modernize its telecommunication system; Colombia, to implement an advanced training programme; Costa Rica, to develop a community centre system and a telecommunications software development centre; the Dominican Republic, for regulatory aspects; El Salvador, to strengthen organizations; Honduras, to improve institutional management; Mexico, to study the possibilities of developing telecommunication, micro-electronics and computer industries; Nicaragua, to strengthen its Posts and Telecommunications Institute; Panama, to review and improve national telecommunication legislation and define a new tariff structure; Paraguay, to prepare a first model plan for developing a telecommunications master plan; and Peru, to design, construct and install a digital telephone exchange. The American Regional Telecommunication Development Conference (Acapulco, 31 March-4 April) took decisions on establishing a regional telecommunication policy mechanism, a regional programme for rural areas and low-income strata and a special programme to develop telecommunications in the Caribbean; creating a favourable climate for investments; improving spectrum utilization and human resources development and management; and the full interconnectivity of networks. The Conference adopted the Acapulco Declaration containing goals to be achieved by the countries of the region, bearing in mind the role of telecommunications in socioeconomic development.

In Asia and the Pacific, ITU focused on introducing new technologies, modernizing services and computer-aided management techniques. Activities included workshops on digital-switching hardware maintenance and frequency management; courses on telecommunications software application and maintenance, computer networking and office automation; and technical training and advisory assistance in sound and television broadcasting, hosted by the Asia Pacific Broadcasting Union. Projects to strengthen national telecommunication technical and administrative services, funded primarily through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), were being implemented in Afghanistan, to prepare a telecommunication rehabilitation plan; Bhutan, to provide expertise and fellowship training; the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, to assist in digital switching and optical-fibre transmission; India, to refurbish stored material and introduce optical-disc storage facilities; Iran, to train local engineers in rural telecommunications; the Lao People's Democratic Republic, to expand and manage the telecommunication network, facilitate equipment procurement and manage a training subcontract with the Telephone Organization of Thailand; Nepal, for quality assurance; Sri Lanka, for telecommunication management development and developing national capabilities to carry out regulatory functions; and Viet Nam, for telecommunications development and a multi-agency project for a typhoon-proof pilot radio trunk system for essential telecommunication and rehabilitation of outside plant equipment. Assistance in developing human resources for telecommunications was provided to Bhutan, India, Indonesia and Pakistan. At the regional level, seven seminars were held on telecommunication management topics.

Support to develop regional telecommunication in the Arab States was provided mainly under the Modern Arab Telecommunication Development (MODARABTEL) project financed by UNDP. ITU also provided support to strengthen national technical and administrative services through UNDP-financed projects in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, to improve telecommunication maintenance and operations and prepare a master plan for telecommunication development; Saudi Arabia, for frequency management and international relations, as well as satellite communications and high-power broadcasting; the Sudan, to prepare a draft telecommunication development plan; and Yemen, to install a radio frequency-monitoring system, inspection services and medium-wave radio coverage. Assistance in developing human resources for telecommunications included training projects in Algeria, Djibouti, Lebanon and Morocco. The Regional Telecommunication Development Conference for the Arab States (Cairo, Egypt, 25-29 October) considered issues concerning policy and investment, network harmonization, and human resources development and management.

Activities carried out by the ITU Focal Point for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, nominated as from 1 October 1992, included projects for strengthening national technical and administrative services in Czechoslovakia and Poland with UNDP preparatory assistance funding. A World Bank-financed project on human resources management and development was launched in Hungary, and a project document was elaborated for implementing new business-oriented telecommunication services in Central and Eastern Europe.

Other technical cooperation activities focused on technology-based training (TBT) in Colombia, Costa Rica, Fiji, India, Jordan and Uruguay, and regional TBT workshops for the Arab States (Jordan) and South Pacific islands (Fiji). Activities under the special programme for the least developed countries (LDCs) included a workshop on telecommunications management for Asian and Pacific LDCs (Singapore, November); a mission to the Lao People's Democratic Republic on outside plant maintenance; and a study on the review of tariff situations in LDCs and the need for a new approach.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, 729 officials (excluding staff on short-term contracts and project personnel) were employed by ITU either at its headquarters or in the field. Of these, nine were elected officials, 581 had permanent contracts and 139 had fixed-term contracts; 71 nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The adjusted budget for 1992 totalled SwF 139,908,500 or $97,158,680 (based on an exchange rate as at 31 December 1992 of $US 1.00 = SwF 1.44). The actual income, however, amounted to SwF 142,340,288 ($98,847,422), which was equal to regular budget expenditures for the year. In addition, SwF 6,988,500 ($4,853,125) was programmed for technical cooperation special accounts, and SwF 7,714,700 ($5,357,430) for the supplementary publications budget.

In 1992, the Administrative Council adopted a budget for 1993 totalling SwF 146,226,000, including SwF 132,610,000 for the regular budget, SwF 5,101,000 for the technical cooperation special accounts and SwF 8,515,000 for the supplementary publications budget.

NOTE: For further information on ITU activities, see Report on the Activities of the International Telecommunication Union in 1992, published by ITU.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

In 1992, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) continued to implement its activities in accordance with the programmes and budget for the period 1992-1995, adopted in 1991 by the World Meteorological Congress, which meets at least once every four years.

The 36-member Executive Council meets annually to supervise the implementation of programmes and regulations. At its forty-fourth session (Geneva, 22 June-4 July 1992), the Council agreed that in the fourth WMO long-term plan (1996-2005) priority should be given to meteorological and hydrological activities in support of sustainable development, the implementation of the Framework Convention on Climate Change, signed in 1992, and a future international convention on desertification.

WMO's involvement in sectoral areas of sustainable development, identified by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII), related mainly to protection of the atmosphere, oceans and freshwater resources, and combating drought and desertification.

During the year, six new States—Armenia, Croatia, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Slovenia—acceded to the WMO Convention, bringing WMO membership to 161 States and 5 Territories as at 31 December 1992. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

World Weather Watch

The World Weather Watch (www), the basic programme of WMO, continued to provide in 1992 global observational data and processed information required by members for operational and research purposes. Its essential elements were the Global Observing System (GOS), whereby observational data were obtained; the Global Telecommunication System, which offered telecommunication facilities for the rapid collection, exchange and distribution of observational data and processed information; and the Global Data-Processing System, which provided for the processing, storage and retrieval of observational data and made available processed information. The Commission for Basic Systems, which had responsibility for the planning, organization and development of www, reviewed each of those elements and implementation support activities at its tenth session (Geneva, 2-13 November).

World Weather Watch implementation

The Joint Scientific and Technical Committee Task Group on Atmospheric Processes (Geneva, 29 September-2 October) met to consider the interaction between GOS and the Global Climate Observing System (GCOS), established in 1991 by the WMO Congress. The Group recognized the need to improve the observational accuracy, representativeness and coverage of GCOS and recommended the establishment of a global baseline reference network of 100 to 150 stations with high-quality surface and upper-air observations.

In 1992, changes and improvements were introduced to the GOS space-based component. Several countries set up satellite-based telecommunication systems at the national or multinational level, and the plan for a new regional meteorological telecommunication network in North and Central America entered its implementation phase. The Commission for Basic Systems recommended that five new Regional Specialized Meteorological Centres (RSMCs) be designated: four on transport model products for environmental emergency response (Bracknell, England; Montreal, Canada; Toulouse, France; Washington, D.C.); and one on tropical cyclones in the Indian Ocean (Saint Denis, Reunion). It expanded WWW data-management activities to incorporate requirements of other WMO-related programmes such as GCOS, and agreed on guidelines for computer projects for automating key WWW facilities. The Commission examined the final report on the implementation of phase I of the operational www systems evaluation in Africa.

The Aircraft-to-Satellite Data Relay (ASDAR) programme continued to grow during the year. At the end of 1992, eight of the original 13 systems were in use, and a contract had been placed for the delivery of an additional 10 units in 1993. Efforts were also being made to place ASDAR systems on aircraft of developing countries. The coordinating group for the Composite Observing System for the North Atlantic held its third session (Geneva, 25-27 August). Among other activities were expert meetings on code matters and emergency response data formats (Geneva, 15-19 June) and on the implementation and operation of satellite-based telecommunications systems (Miami, Florida, United States, 13-25 October).

Instruments and methods of observation

During the year, WMO provided forums for technology transfer and exchange of experience between developing and developed countries in meteorological instrumentation and methods of observation. A technical conference on instruments and methods of observation (Vienna, May) considered issues related to systems and facilities, upper-air measurements, intercomparisons and performance tests, automation of visual observations, calibration procedures and facilities, and accuracy of measurements.

Tropical cyclones

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP)/WMO Typhoon Committee and the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones for the Bay of Bengal and the Arabian Sea, at their first joint session (Pattaya, Thailand, 18-27 February), decided to cooperate in methods and technical procedures to improve the accuracy of forecasts, timeliness of warnings, and disaster prevention and preparedness procedures. An interregional seminar on tropical cyclone forecasting and research (Nanjing, China, 27 October-7 November) dealt with techniques in forecasting cyclone motion and intensity and research initiatives arising from a 1990 experiment on typhoon recurvature and unusual movement in the western North Pacific. A technical coordination meeting on operational forecasting and dissemination of results by RSMCs (Tokyo, 16-21 December) focused on improving cooperation and coordination among the Tropical Cyclone Programme regional bodies.

Other activities included a regional workshop on hurricane forecasting and warning (Miami, 6-17 April), the fourteenth session of the Hurricane Committee for North and Central America (Belize City, Belize, 28 April-5 May); the fourth session of the Tropical Cyclone Committee for the South Pacific and South-East Indian Ocean (Nouméa, New Caledonia, 6-12 October), and the twenty-fifth session of the ESCAP/WMO Typhoon Committee (Zhuhai, China, 8-14 December).

Environmental emergencies

In the context of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-1999), which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1989^a (see PART THREE, Chapter III), WMO organized in June 1992 an expert mission to Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritius, Reunion and Seychelles to assist in implementing a project on enhancing meteorological observational and telecommunication networks to improve data handling and processing as well as monitoring and forecasting of tropical cyclones. In March, a meeting of experts and representatives of international organizations developed plans to implement a comprehensive risk assessment project through a series of pilot projects in developing countries. WMO was also involved in the System for Technology Exchange for Natural Disasters.

In 1992, timely warnings issued by national meteorological services and RSMCs helped reduce the loss of life from Hurricane Andrew in the Bahamas and southern parts of the United States as well as from typhoons and cyclone activity in the South Pacific, western North Pacific and Indian Oceans.

World Climate Programme

The World Climate Programme (WCP) consisted of the World Climate Data and Monitoring Programme (WCDMP), the World Climate Applications and Services Programme (WCASP), the World Climate Impact Assessment and Response Strategies Programme (WCIRP) and the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP). The WCP Coordinating Committee, at its first session (Geneva, 4 and 5 May), reviewed the WCP coordination mechanisms, discussed the relationship between WCP and related activities and programmes, and made recommendations concerning preparations for and the programme of a 1993 intergovernmental meeting on WCP. Activities of WCP were also reviewed at the second session of the Advisory Committee on Climate Applications and Data (Geneva, 16 and 17 November).

At the end of the year, climate computing (CLICOM) systems were operational in 104 countries, and funds were secured for CLICOM projects in 10 others. New CLICOM software was released in 1992. Activities under the climate system monitoring (CSM) project included publication of the monthly CSM Bulletin and The Global Climate System, a biennial review covering late 1988 to May 1991.

Activities within WCASP focused on promoting sustainable development using climate as a resource, as well as on food production and water-resource management in cooperation with the Agricultural and the Hydrology and Water Resources Programmes. The regional WMO/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) project on meteorological information for development of renewable energy, involving many Eastern European and some Mediterranean countries, was successfully concluded, and a plan of action was proposed to follow up on the experience gained. Other areas of WMO involvement related to climate and tourism, urban climatology, and the Climate Applications Referral System as a component complementary to CLICOM.

Main activities under WCIRP, for which the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) was responsible, related to greenhouse gases and climate change, methodology of climate impact assessment, coordination of activities in studies of climate impacts and related response strategies, and monitoring climate change and impacts. Support was provided to the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, special monitoring programmes and country studies on methodologies for compiling inventories of sources and sinks of greenhouse gases and on the cost of greenhouse gas abatement.

WCRP, undertaken jointly by WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU), organized a range of research activities directed at understanding the basic physical processes determining the Earth's climate, including interactions between the different components of the climate system. The Baseline Surface Radiation Network was being implemented to provide precise and frequent measurements of short- and long-wave surface radiation fluxes at selected sites in contrasting climatic zones. A workshop on global observations, analyses and simulation of precipitation (Washington, D.C., 27-30 October) was held under the global precipitation climatological project.

The tropical ocean and global atmosphere programme achieved significant skill in predicting transient climate anomalies linked to El Niño/Southern Oscillation phenomena up to one year in advance. Its associated coupled ocean-atmosphere response experiment began collecting atmospheric and oceanic observations in the western Pacific warm pool region for a four-month intensive observing period. The atmospheric model intercomparison project continued in 1992, and a study of stratospheric processes and their role in climate was launched. Meetings held under WCRP included the fourth session of the Scientific Steering Group for the global energy and water cycle experiment (Tokyo, 27-31 January); the first session of its Cloud System Study Science Panel (Reading, England, 14 and 15 December); the thirteenth session of the Joint Scientific Committee for WCRP (Victoria, Canada, 23-28 March); and meetings of steering groups on global climate modelling (Hamburg, Germany, 14-16 September) and on an arctic climate system study (Seattle, Washington, United States, 2-6 November).

Atmospheric research and environment

The Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme (AREP), aimed at coordinating and fostering research on the structure and composition of the atmosphere, physics of weather processes and weather forecasting, had four major components: the Global Atmosphere Watch

(GAW), and programmes on weather prediction research, tropical meteorology research, and the physics and chemistry of clouds and weather modification research.

In the context of GAW, the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network (BAPMON) was expanded with the addition of two new and one improved regional station in Egypt, Iran and Pakistan. Agreements were also signed to establish global stations in Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China and Indonesia. A WMO/UNEP consultation on BAPMON operations was held (Toronto, Canada, 14-17 December). Background air pollution was also the subject of an international meeting on geophysics and the environment (Rome, Italy, 16-18 June), while the possible atmospheric impact of the Kuwait oil fires was assessed at a WMO meeting of experts (Geneva, 25-29 May).

Ozone-related activities were intensified and included a meeting of experts on ozone measurements by Brewer Instruments (1-6 June), an international workshop on total ozone data re-evaluation (8-10 June) (both at Charlottesville, Virginia, United States), and a meeting on a study of ozone-climate-chemistry interaction (Oslo, Norway, 19-21 August). The European Arctic stratospheric ozone experiment, completed in March, was repeated for the winter 1992/93.

The CAS Group of Rapporteurs on Tropical Meteorology Research (first session, Monterey, California, United States, 21-26 September) redefined existing projects of the tropical meteorology research programme and discussed future strategies. It accorded high priority to the ICSU/WMO demonstration project on tropical cyclone disasters. A symposium on such disasters (Beijing, China, 12-16 October) recommended the development of an automatic aircraft system, at an estimated cost of $1 million, as a cost-effective way of acquiring operational data. A regional workshop (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 5-10 October) focused on the Asian winter monsoon and the use of numerical weather-prediction products.

In the field of physics and chemistry of clouds and weather modification research, an updated WMO statement on the status of weather modification and revised guidelines for advice and assistance related to the planning of weather modification activities were approved by the WMO Executive Council. The 1990 Register of National Weather Modification Projects was published; meetings included a third international cloud-modelling workshop and a workshop on cloud microphysics and application to global change (Toronto, 10-14 August), and the Eleventh International Cloud Physics Conference (Montreal, Canada, 17-21 August).

Applications of meteorology

Agricultural meteorology

Issues relating to desertification and drought received particular attention at a workshop on the interrelationship between the Global Environment Facility and desertification, land degradation and deforestation (Nairobi, Kenya, October). Among other workshops and seminars organized were a symposium/workshop on meteorology and plant protection, which demonstrated the use of meteorological data in crop protection activities (Asunción, Paraguay, 1-10 April); a workshop on the dissemination of agrometeorological information by rural or national mass media, which developed a broadcasting plan (Bamako, Mali, 18-22 May); a workshop on using the interactive statistics package adapted for agrometeorological information (Bujumbura, Burundi, 7-20 October); and several national seminars on the application of meteorological data and information for effective planning and management of water resources.

Aeronautical meteorology

The WMO Technical Conference on Tropical Aeronautical Meteorology (Geneva, 5-9 October) discussed issues relating to the tropics and subtropics, including numerical weather prediction, satellite and radar imagery interpretation, hazards and applications to aviation, national aeronautical meteorological practices and training issues. Under the World Area Forecast System, plans were being finalized at its centres in London and Washington, D.C., to uplift products to a satellite-based dissemination system for global coverage. A pilot project was also initiated in North and Central America on the feasibility of combining the satellite communication systems of WMO and the International Civil Aviation Organization. Working groups at Geneva discussed the provision of meteorological information required before and after flight (13-17 July) and advanced techniques applied to aeronautical meteorology (12-14 October).

Marine meteorology

The first joint meeting of the WMO Bureau and officers of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (Geneva, 19 June) established a working group to develop proposals on enhanced regional cooperation, improved coordination between the two organizations and possible joint follow-up action to UNCED. The Working Group on Basic Marine Meteorological Services designed a new globally coordinated WMO marine broadcast system covering all ocean areas with either full maritime forecasts and warnings or an interim urgent warning service where coastal earth stations were not available. The system would operate parallel to the traditional marine broadcast system until 1999. An operational quality-control system, using freely drifting ocean data buoys to improve the quality of meteorological and oceanographic data from remote ocean areas, was also implemented experimentally in 1992. The Integrated Global Ocean Services System task team on quality control for automated systems completed an intensive study in the accuracy of the fall-rate equation and prepared a scientific paper on possible errors in the assumed fall rate of certain expendable bathythermographs.

Workshops were held on ocean climate data (Washington, D.C., 21-24 February); the Global Maritime Distress and Safety System, introduced in 1992 by the International Maritime Organization (Geneva, 18-22 May) (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XIV); and low-cost drifting buoys (Paris, 13 October).

Public weather services

Three broad projects were identified in the field of public weather services, dealing with formulation and content of forecasts and warnings; presentation and dissemination techniques, public understanding, public information and education; and exchange and coordination of hazardous weather information among neighbouring countries.

Hydrology and water resources

The Hydrology and Water Resources Programme continued to assist and support the activities of bodies responsible for operational hydrology. The main event in 1992 was the International Conference on Water and the Environment (Dublin, Ireland, 26-31 January), which adopted the Dublin Statement on Water and Sustainable Development that called for fundamental new approaches to the assessment, development and management of freshwater resources and established guiding principles for action (see also PART THREE, Chapter VI).

In 1992, four hydrology projects came to fruition in Albania, Algeria, Bangladesh and Papua New Guinea. WMO developed 20 national and six regional projects designed to assist hydrological services facing difficulties, particularly in Africa. In the context of consultations on the application of management overview of flood forecasting systems in South-East Asia (Kuala Lumpur, 28 and 29 February), 12 countries designated 27 flood-forecasting systems for evaluation. The collection of river-flow data was reviewed at a workshop on the Global Runoff Data Centre (Koblenz, Germany, 15-17 June) and at a workshop on projects within WCP (Geneva, 9-13 November). The commercialization of meteorological and hydrological services was considered by a working group (Geneva, 26-30 October).

WMO also co-sponsored the International Conference on Interaction of Computational Methods and Measurements in Hydraulics and Hydrology (Budapest, Hungary, 25-29 May); international symposia on erosion and sediment transport monitoring programmes in river basins (Oslo, 24-28 August), on torrential rain and floods (Huangshan, China, 5-9 October) and on snow and glacier hydrology (Kathmandu, Nepal, 16-20 November); a symposium on progress in scientific hydrology and water resources management using remote sensing (Washington, D.C., 28 August-5 September); and an international conference and symposia on managing water resources during global change (Reno, Nevada, United States, 1-5 November).

Education and training

Three education and training meetings sponsored by WMO were held during 1992: a course on training methodology and programme design for instructors (Turin, Italy, 7-25 September); the second session of the Coordinating Committee of the Standing Conference of Heads of Training Institutions of National Meteorological Services (Geneva, 19-23 October); and a training seminar for national instructors from the Americas (San José, Costa Rica, 16-27 November).

Under funds from various sources administered by WMO in 1992, a total of 78 long-term and 140 short-term fellowships were awarded. During the year, 197 persons participated in 14 training events organized by WMO in 13 countries. WMO also co-sponsored or jointly supported 23 training events organized by members or national institutions. The Regional Meteorological Training Centres maintained routine training programmes for meteorological and operational hydrological personnel. The wmo Training Library continued to strengthen and expand its holdings, mainly in audiovisual training aids and computer-assisted learning materials, to meet the increasing needs of WMO members. The Library made available 197 videos and 18 slide sets in response to requests from members, training institutions, WMO/UNDP projects and others.

Technical cooperation

In 1992, assistance was provided to 125 wmo member States at a value of $24.8 million, financed from UNDP (48.3 per cent), the WMO Voluntary Cooperation Programme (VCP) (25 per cent), trust funds (23.4 per cent) and wmo's regular budget (3.3 per cent). A total of 176 expert missions were fielded during the year. Under VCP, 16 projects were completed and 57 new projects were approved; as at 31 December 1992, 101 projects were being implemented in 67 countries. An additional 85 VCP training projects were approved, covering 29 long-term and 56 short-term fellowships. The estimated value of equipment, services and fellowships provided to WMO members in 1992 amounted to $5.7 million; assistance in the amount of some $0.8 million was also extended to 80 countries under the regular budget.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the total number of full-time staff employed by wmo (excluding 26 professionals on technical assistance projects) on permanent and fixed-term contracts stood at 293. Of these, 134 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 56 nationalities) and 159 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1992 was the first year of the eleventh financial period (1992-1995) for which the 1991 wmo Congress had established a maximum expenditure of 236,100,000 Swiss francs (SwF). Of the assessed contributions totalling SwF 56,005,000 for the year, SwF 14,333,539 remained unpaid; total unpaid contributions due from members stood at SwF 25,530,251.

The approved regular budget for the 1992-1993 biennium was SwF 112,010,000. The accumulated cash deficit for that biennium was expected to reach SwF 7.4 million. In addition to regular budget expenditure, there were extrabudgetary activities in respect of technical cooperation projects. WMO also administered several trust funds and special accounts financed by various members and international organizations.

NOTE: For further details on WMO's activities see World Meteorological Organization Annual Report, 1992 published by the agency.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 1992, several legal instruments adopted under the auspices of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) entered into force. The Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation and a Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of the Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf, adopted in 1988, entered into force on 1 March. Amendments to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the 1978 Protocol (MARPOL 73/78) entered into force, as did amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974 (SOLAS Convention).

During 1992, IMO membership rose to 137 with the acceptance of the IMO Convention by Croatia and Estonia. There were also two associate members (Hong Kong and Macau). (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Activities in 1992

In September, the International Maritime Prize for 1991 was presented to Dr. Chandrika Prasad Srivastava (India), who served as IMO Secretary-General from 1974 to 1989. The Prize is awarded annually to the individual or organization judged to have done the most to further the aims of IMO.

The theme for World Maritime Day, which was celebrated at IMO headquarters on 17 September, was "Marine environment and development: the IMO role".

World Maritime University

In 1992, a new class of 99 students was enrolled at the World Maritime University, Malmö, Sweden, six of them from countries that had not previously sent students to the University, bringing the total number of countries that had done so to 115. The University was established in 1983 under the auspices of IMO to provide advanced training for personnel, mainly from developing countries, in maritime administration, technical management of shipping companies and maritime education. The University had prepared some 800 students to take up important posts in shipping and related industries since its inception.

Prevention of pollution

In March, the Marine Environment Protection Committee, acting on the conclusions of a study on the design and construction of new and existing tankers, approved amendments to annex I of MARPOL 73/78, adding two regulations to the annex concerning pollution by oil, including operational and accidental pollution. The amendments were expected to enter into force on 6 July 1993, under MARPOL's tacit acceptance procedure. The Committee also adopted guidelines to develop shipboard oil pollution emergency plans, intended to assist in implementing relevant amendments to annex I.

Amendments making Antarctica a special area under MARPOL's annexes I (pollution by oil) and V (pollution by garbage) entered into force on 17 March. The annexes banned the discharge of oil and the dumping of certain wastes into special areas-seas especially vulnerable to pollution, usually almost enclosed by land or environmentally sensitive. MARPOL's annex III (pollution by harmful substances carried in packaged form, including freight containers, portable tanks or road and rail tank wagons) entered into force on 1 July. Further amendments to the annex, adopted by the Marine Environment Protection Committee in October, were to take effect on 28 February 1994. Also in October, the Committee adopted amendments to two codes dealing with the carriage of chemicals by sea, the International Code for the Construction and Equipment of Ships Carrying Dangerous Chemicals in Bulk (IBC), which was mandatory under MARPOL 73/78 and the 1974 SOLAS Convention, and the voluntary Code for the Construction and Equipment of Ships Carrying Dangerous Chemicals in Bulk (BCH). In 1992, the only MARPOL annex not yet in force was annex IV (pollution by sewage).

Meeting at IMO headquarters (9-13 November), the contracting parties to the 1972 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (the London Convention as of November 1992, formerly the London Dumping Convention) agreed to begin procedures to amend the Convention and identified 13 core issues as a basis for preparations for an amendments conference scheduled for 1994. As a follow-up to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the meeting considered the long-term strategy for the Convention and adopted a resolution banning the incineration of noxious liquid wastes at sea from 31 December 1992.

Oil spill compensation

A conference held at IMO headquarters (November) adopted protocols to the 1969 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage^a and the 1971 International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage,^b raising the limit of compensation available to victims of oil spills from 54 million pounds sterling for each incident to some 122 million pounds. The new protocols were to replace those adopted in 1984^c and amend the entry into force provisions. In the case of the 1969 Convention, the protocol was to enter into force 12 months after being accepted by ten states, including four with not less than 1 million units of gross tanker tonnage. The Fund protocol was to enter into force after being accepted by eight states which had imported 450 million tons of what was termed contributing oil during the previous year. The conference called on Governments only to ratify the 1992 protocols and proposed the establishment of an international oil pollution compensation fund, 1992, similar to the 1971 Fund. It adopted resolutions on certificates of insurance issued in connection with the new protocols and on the interim cap on contributions payable by oil receivers in any given State.

Ship security and safety of life at sea

The Global Maritime Distress and Safety System (GMDSS), which was adopted in 1988 at a conference convened by IMO of contracting Governments to the 1974 SOLAS Convention, entered into force on 1 February 1992. GMDSS, a ship-to-shore, shore-to-ship and ship-to-ship system, incorporating technological advances such as satellite communications, was to be phased in between 1992 and 1999. It was designed to overcome the shortcomings of the existing system—a combination of radiotelephony and Morse radiotelegraphy—and utilized such features as emergency position-indicating radio beacons, digital selective calling, survival craft radar transponders and enhanced group calling. Two other groups of amendments to the 1974 SOLAS Convention also entered into force on 1 February. One group, adopted in 1989, dealt with ships' construction and with fire protection, detection and extinction, while the other group, adopted in 1990, included important changes to the way of calculating the subdivision and stability of dry cargo ships of 100 metres or more in length built after 1 February 1992. Other amendments affected the International Gas Carrier Code (IGC), the IBC Code and the International Code for the Construction and Equipment of Ships Carrying Liquefied Gases in Bulk.

In April, the Maritime Safety Committee modified the amendments to the 1974 SOLAS Convention, which had entered into force on 29 April 1990, concerning the stability of roll-on/roll-off (ro-ro) passenger ships after damage, such as a grounding or a collision. The new measures were to be introduced over an 11-year period beginning on 1 October 1994.

In December, the Committee adopted further amendments to the SOLAS Convention dealing with construction requirements for new tankers and fire safety standards for new passenger ships built on or after 1 October 1994, the date on which the amendments were expected to enter into force under the Convention's tacit acceptance provisions.

The Committee amended the IGC Code and chapters of the IBC Code relating to cargo-tank venting and gas-freeing arrangements, summary of minimum requirements and the list of chemicals exempt from the Code. The BCH Code, optional under the Convention, was also amended. The changes were expected to enter into force on 1 July 1994.

A number of draft amendments to the 1972 International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea,^d including changes to regulations dealing with high-speed craft and signals for trawlers, were approved by the Maritime Safety Committee for submission to the IMO Assembly in 1993. The Committee also adopted amendments to the 1972 International Convention for Safe Containers,^d relating to test loads and applied forces and the content of the Safety Approval Plate. They were to enter into force 12 months after being accepted by two-thirds of the contracting parties. The Committee agreed to undertake by 1996 a complete review of the 1978 International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers (STCW)^e and to consider introducing provisions for port State control of operational requirements into the SOLAS and SEW Conventions. A draft protocol to ensure the enactment of the 1977 Torremolinos International Convention for the Safety of Fishing Vessels was completed by an IMO working group (Reykjavik, Iceland, June) for adoption in 1993.

Unlawful acts at sea

During 1992, IMO considered matters related to piracy and armed robbery at sea, maritime fraud and barratry, the use of cargo oil as fuel, unlawful acts against passengers and crews, drug trafficking, and drug and alcohol abuse by seafarers.

On 1 March, the 1988 Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, and a protocol extending the Convention's provisions to unlawful acts against fixed platforms located on the continental shelf, entered into force. The Convention included provisions for the absolute and unconditional application of the principle either to punish or to extradite persons who committed or who were alleged to have committed offences specified in the Convention.

The Maritime Safety Committee approved guidelines concerning drug and alcohol abuse programmes, which were intended to help assist in establishing screening programmes.

In response to increasing reports of incidents of piracy, especially along the West African coast and in South-East Asia, IMO considered organizing regional seminars to elaborate joint plans of action for combating piracy and armed robbery, and established a working group to examine the problem in the Strait of Malacca, specify necessary navigation techniques and recommend appropriate safety precautions and enforcement arrangements.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the IMO secretariat employed 297 full-time staff members at headquarters (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 115 were in the Professional and higher categories and 182 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 11 Professional and 16 General Service staff employed on technical assistance projects. IMO also employed 2 national officers.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

In 1992, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) marked the twenty-fifth year of its establishment. WIPO'S General Assembly, its governing bodies and the Unions administered by it held their twenty-third series of meetings at Geneva (21-29 September).

The number of States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property rose to 106 with the accession of Croatia, Slovenia and Ukraine, and States parties to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works increased to 95 with the accession of China, Croatia, the Gambia, Paraguay and Slovenia. Croatia, Slovenia and Ukraine became parties to the Madrid Agreement Concerning the International Registration of Marks, bringing the number of contracting States to 32. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Romania became members of the Hague Agreement Concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, bringing the number of States parties to 21. The number of parties to the Nice Agreement Concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purpose of the Registration of Marks rose to 35 with the addition of Croatia and Slovenia, which also became members of the Locarno Agreement Establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs, bringing that instrument's membership to 18. The number of States parties to the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT) rose to 54 with the accession of Ireland, New Zealand, the Niger, Portugal and Ukraine to the PCT Union. Argentina and Australia acceded to the International Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms Against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms, bringing the number of States parties to 37. The Convention Relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite had 15 States parties at the end of 1992 with the accession of Slovenia. With the accession of Argentina to the Treaty on the International Registration of Audiovisual Works, its membership was brought to six.

The 17 treaties in the two main fields of intellectual property administered by WIPO in 1992 were as follows, listed in order of the year of adoption:

Industrial property: Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive

Indications of Source on Goods; Madrid Agreement Concerning the International Registration of Marks; the Hague Agreement Concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs; Nice Agreement Concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purpose of the Registration of Marks; Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and their International Registration; Locarno Agreement Establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs; PCT; Strasbourg Agreement Concerning the International Patent Classification; Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure; Nairobi Treaty on the Protection of the Olympic Symbol; Vienna Agreement Establishing an International Classification of the Figurative Elements of Marks.

Copyright and neighbouring rights: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms Against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms; Brussels Convention Relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite; Treaty on the International Registration of Audiovisual Works.

During 1992, the membership of WIPO increased to 135 with the accession of Albania, Croatia, Lithuania and Slovenia. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Activities in 1992

Development cooperation

Although extrabudgetary funds from the United Nations Development Programme declined in 1992, WIPO was able to respond to training demands from developing countries and to provide professional skills for the administration and use of the intellectual property system. Training was given to government officials and personnel from the technical, legal, industrial and commercial sectors in the form of courses, study visits, workshops, seminars, training attachments abroad and on-the-job training by international experts.

About 95 courses, workshops and seminars were given at the global, national, regional and sub-regional levels. They provided basic knowledge of industrial property or copyright, or specialized information in such areas as: the computerization of industrial property office administration, the use of computerized patent information databases, legal and economic aspects of industrial property, the administration of the collection and distribution of copyright royalties, and the promotion of technological inventiveness. Thirty-seven study visits were organized for officials of developing countries. In all, 33 developing countries, 19 industrialized countries and 9 intergovernmental organizations hosted meetings and visits or organized them jointly with WIPO for more than 5,000 participants.

WIPO continued to emphasize assistance to developing countries for the improvement of legislation. It prepared draft laws and regulations dealing with intellectual property or commented on drafts prepared by Governments. Some 85 countries received such assistance.

Some 140 missions to 60 developing countries were undertaken by WIPO officials and consultants. They advised government authorities on the upgrading of administrative procedures, computerization, patent information services and the setting up of organizations for the collective administration of rights under copyright law. WIPO's state-of-the-art search service for developing countries provided some 460 search reports and copies of 2,100 patent documents to 28 Governments and institutions.

In March, WIPO jointly sponsored with Senegal the Conference of Ministers in Charge of Copyright in West Africa on the Eradication of the Piracy of Musical, Literary and Artistic Works (Dakar, Senegal). The Conference adopted the Dakar Appeal, calling on States to combat piracy through national measures, international cooperation and accession to international treaties dealing with copyright and neighbouring rights. Fourteen states were represented.

In September, a ministerial meeting of Central American countries (San Salvador, El Salvador) adopted a joint declaration on the intention of Central American countries to accede to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property. Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama participated.

Setting of norms and standards

In February, the second session of the Committee of Experts on a Possible Protocol to the Berne Convention examined a memorandum prepared by WIPO's International Bureau on questions concerning the Protocol. Discussions dealt with general questions, including rights related to works in computer systems, reprographic reproduction by libraries, archives and educational establishments, private reproduction for personal use, non-voluntary licences for sound recording, public display, rental and public lending, importation and broadcasting. The Committee also discussed the definition of the notion of "public" in respect of certain qualified acts and term of protection. In September, the Assembly of the Berne Union decided on the continuation of the Committee and on the creation of another Committee of Experts on a Possible Instrument on the Protection of the Rights of Performers and Producers of Phonograms.

In June, the first session of the Committee of Experts on a WIPO Model Law on the Protection of Producers of Sound Recordings considered a draft Model Law prepared by the International Bureau. The Committee recommended that the Model Law also cover the rights of performers, which was approved in September by the Assembly of the Berne Union.

The Committee of Experts on the Settlement of Intellectual Property Disputes between States held its fourth session in July.

The Committee of Experts on the Harmonization of Laws for the Protection of Marks held its third and fourth sessions in June and November, respectively. It considered the draft of the Treaty on the Simplification of Administrative Procedures Concerning Marks, prepared by the International Bureau. The Preparatory Working Group of the Committee of Experts of the Nice Union held its twelfth session in November.

International registration activities

Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT). In 1992, the International Bureau received 25,917 copies of international applications, 16.5 per cent more than in 1991. The average number of PCT contracting States designated per international application was 25.5. International applications thus replaced some 661,000 national applications. Amendments to the PCT Regulations, adopted in 1991, entered into force on 1 July 1992 and the new and improved Computer-Assisted System for the Processing of International Applications became operational in July 1992.

In March, a meeting of the International Searching and International Preliminary Examining Authorities under PCT adopted modifications to the PCT Search Guidelines and the PCT Preliminary Examination Guidelines.

In September, the Assembly of the PCT Union adopted a number of amendments to PCT regulations relating to China's anticipated accession to PCT.

Madrid Agreement. In 1992, the International Bureau received a combined total of 21,143 international trade-mark registrations and renewals, an increase of 1.7 per cent over 1991. There were 15,702 international registrations, 1.6 per cent fewer than in 1991. As the average number of countries covered by each international registration was 9.1, the international registrations in 1992 had the equivalent effect of some 143,000 national registrations. There were 5,441 renewals in 1992, an increase of 12.6 per cent over 1991.

In September, the Assembly of the Madrid Union adopted a new rule related to international registrations in successor States. The rule was to become applicable by 1 January 1993 to the Czech Republic, Croatia, Kazakhstan, Slovakia, Slovenia and Ukraine. The archival sub-system of the Marks Information Optically Stored system became fully operational in 1992.

Hague Agreement. In 1992, the number of industrial design deposits, renewals and prolongations received by the International Bureau totalled 4,783, an increase of 9.6 per cent over 1991.

In April, the second session of the Committee of Experts on the Development of the Hague Agreement Concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs discussed a draft Treaty on the International Registration of Industrial Designs aimed at improving the current registration system and encouraging new States to accede to the Agreement.

Countries in transition to market economies

During the year, a special unit in the International Bureau offered its cooperation to the following countries in transition to market economies: Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Georgia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. WIPO invited officials of those countries for discussions at its Geneva headquarters and organized study visits by them to various countries. The International Bureau also helped them to prepare legislation on aspects of intellectual property. The special unit was established in 1991.

Secretariat

As at 1 January 1992, WIPO employed 402 staff members. Of these, 126 were in the Professional and higher categories, drawn from 55 countries, and 276 were in the General Service category. In addition, 90 WIPO consultants undertook technical assistance missions.

Budget

WIPO's principle income was derived from ordinary and special contributions from member States and from international registration services (primarily under PCT and the Madrid Agreement). Contributions were paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, International Patent Classification, Nice, Locarno and Vienna Unions and by WIPO member States not belonging to any of the Unions. Income in 1992 amounted to $75.9 million; expenditures totalled $61.4 million, of which $36.5 million was staff costs.

NOTE: For further information on the agency, see Governing Bodies of WIPO and the Unions Administered by WIPO, published by WIPO.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued to provide concessional assistance for financing agricultural projects in developing countries. The Fund's objectives were to increase food production, reduce malnutrition and alleviate rural poverty. It continued to concentrate on low-income, food-deficit countries which received most of IFAD's lending and on providing the poorest farmers with the necessary production means and institutional support. Particular emphasis was given to restoring the agricultural capacity of sub-Saharan African countries, as well as to the issues of women in development, cooperation with non-governmental organizations and the environment.

Membership of IFAD rose to 147 with the admission of Albania and Cambodia. Of the current member countries, 22 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 113 in Category III (other developing countries). (See Annex I for full membership.)

The fifteenth session of the Governing Council of IFAD (Rome, 21-23 January 1992) adopted a budget for 1992 of $53.2 million plus a contingency of $0.9 million. It approved by acclamation the applications for non-original membership by Albania and Cambodia in Category III. The Council considered a report on the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification (SPA) and reiterated its appeal to all members to contribute generously to the Programme's second phase (see below). It also endorsed IFAD's Strategies for the Economic Advancement of Rural Women and requested that guidelines for action under the Strategies be further developed.

The Council established a consultation on the fourth replenishment of the Fund's resources, consisting of all member States from Categories I and II and 12 members from Category III. The consultation held four meetings during 1992 and agreed, subject to agreement between Categories I and II in respect of burden-sharing, that $600 million would be an appropriate target for the fourth replenishment covering the period 1994-1996.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1992 (April, September and December), approving 27 loans for 25 projects, including one loan under SPA and two from both the Regular Programme and SPA resources, and four technical assistance grants. At each session, the Board reviewed a number of operational matters, including IFAD's experimental procedure for design and development of grant programmes for agricultural research and training and the evolving approach to environmentally sustainable rural poverty alleviation.

In financial matters, the Board reviewed reports on the management of IFAD's Investment Portfolio and approved a transfer of $5 million to the General Reserve for 1992, bringing the Reserve's total amount to $85 million.

The Board approved a programme of work at a level of special drawing rights (SDRS) 245 million for loans, grants and project-related activities and services to member States under the Regular Programme in 1993, and endorsed a budget of $54.9 million, plus a contingency of $0.65 million. It also approved the programme of work and estimated administrative expenditures of SPA for 1993 of SDR 56.1 million and $6.35 million respectively, including a contingency of $75,000.

Resources

Member States pledged $567.4 million in the third replenishment of resources for a period of two and a half years with effect from January 1990. By the end of 1992, members' contributions over the 15 years of IFAD's operations totalled $3.16 billion.

Contributions to the first phase of SPA, initiated in 1986 with a target of $300 million, totalled $288.25 million as at 31 December 1992. Contributions received towards the second and final phase of SPA (SPA-II), initiated in 1992, amounted to $26 million at year's end.

Activities in 1992

The 27 new loans for 25 projects approved by IFAD in 1992 totalled SDR 229.1 million ($320.8 million), including three loans for SDR 9.2 million ($12.8 million) financed from SPA resources. An allocation of SDR 7.1 million ($9.9 million) for 42 technical assistance grants included four grants amounting to SDR 0.7 million ($1.1 million) from SPA. Total financial assistance provided in 1992 amounted to SDR 236.2 million ($330.8 million), compared to SDR 204.9 million ($280.9 million) in 1991.

Twenty-four projects approved were IFAD-initiated, with 66 per cent of them attracting cofinancing from other donors. External cofinancing mobilized during the year amounted to $82.5 million, or 25 per cent of total project costs.

During the year, nine projects for eight countries of the African region were approved for a total of SDR 58 million ($81.6 million) under the Regular and Special Programmes combined. Projects under the Regular Programme dealt with agricultural services in the Gambia; smallholder development in Guinea; improved flood recession farming in Mauritania; agricultural and community development in Nigeria; intensified land use management in Rwanda; village organization and management in Senegal; and cotton production in Uganda. Three projects approved under SPA were for protected area management in Mauritania, agricultural development in Sierra Leone and irrigation rehabilitation in the Sudan.

The eight projects approved for eight countries in Asia, involving SDR 80.5 million ($112.1 million), emphasized protecting agricultural and natural resources and developing sustainable farming systems in Bhutan; low-lying land development in China; tree crop development in Indonesia; extension services to increase agricultural production in Iran among poor smallholders, particularly women; raising the living standard of smallholders, livestock owners, the landless and poor rural women in Pakistan; communal irrigation in the Philippines; long-term development in Samoa; and poverty alleviation and the provision of resource management and institutional support to small farmers in Sri Lanka.

The four projects for Latin America and the Caribbean received loans of SDR 44.2 million ($62.1 million), aimed at rural development in Ecuador and in Mexico; rehabilitation of war-torn areas in El Salvador; and establishing a peasant development fund in Paraguay.

For the Near East and North Africa, four projects amounting to SDR 46.9 million ($64.9 million) were approved to assist smallholders and other poor settlers in Egypt's reclaimed Newlands; smallholder livestock rehabilitation in Lebanon; irrigation in the Sudan; and agricultural development in the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Fund continued its special programming and strategy missions, nine of which were undertaken in 1992 to Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Guyana, Jamaica, Mexico, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. Pre-strategy missions were conducted in Cambodia and Rwanda. The missions focused on issues relating to poverty alleviation and IFAD's role in improving national economic performance. They recommended strategies involving diversification of production towards higher value crops; elimination of large productivity gaps; improved management of the forestry and livestock sectors; increased labour productivity; and support for smallholder farmers and livestock owners, landless farmers, wage labourers and populations in the hinterlands.

In 1992, three seminars on project implementation were held in the Latin America and Caribbean region (San Pedro Sula, Honduras, 14-17 September; Sucre, Bolivia, 9-13 November; Barbados, 16-19 November). The Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women, organized by the Fund at Geneva in February, adopted the Geneva Declaration on Rural Women. Following the Summit, representatives of the International Steering Committee on the subject held their first meeting (Rome, 13 and 14 October). (For details, see PART THREE, Chapter XIII.) A book entitled The State of World Rural Poverty was completed and published in 1992, representing the most recent and comprehensive study on the subject.

Secretariat

In December 1992, the IFAD secretariat totalled 258 staff, of whom 106 were in the Professional and higher categories—drawn from 49 nationalities—and 152 in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme for 1992 was $137.9 million, consisting of $101.3 million from investment income, including gains of $3.6 million resulting from active portfolio management, and $36.7 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total operational and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $48.9 million (including an exchange gain on operations of $0.17 million), compared with a budget, before contingency, of $52.4 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $89 million.

Total revenue under SPA for 1992 was $13.3 million, consisting of $12.6 million of investment income, including gains of $0.5 million from active portfolio management, and $0.7 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total expenses for the year amounted to $3.1 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $5.2 million. The excess of revenue for the year was $10.2 million.

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

In 1992, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued its activities in the areas of industrial operations, strategies and promotion. Its special programmes, calling for multidisciplinary or interdepartmental approaches, supported industrial growth and restructuring and included the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, assistance to least developed countries, industrial cooperation among developing countries, integration of women in industrial development, cooperation with industrial enterprises and non-governmental organizations, environment and private sector development. The Industrial Development Board reviewed the Organization's overall activities at its ninth and tenth regular sessions held in May and November, respectively. Financial concerns dominated its deliberations, with member States owing the Organization $98.8 million in assessed contributions as of the end of April.

The Board stressed the need for UNIDO to focus its technical cooperation activities on its areas of particular expertise, emphasizing the importance of coordination, complementarity, systematic monitoring and evaluation. The Programme and Budget Committee held its eighth session during June and July.

As at 31 December 1992, 160 States were members of UNIDO, with Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Georgia and Slovenia having joined during the year. Australia renewed its membership as of 1 January, but on 3 December, Canada gave notice of its intention to withdraw its membership, effective 31 December 1993. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Policy issues

In 1992, UNIDO took steps towards structural reform, the implementation of its role in the successor arrangements of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which were decided upon in 1991,^a the improvement of programme and project quality and the development of new programme initiatives. Those efforts were only partially successful, however, due to factors largely beyond the Secretariat's influence. The Organization took the initiative early in the year to train all operational and administrative staff at headquarters in the workings of the new regime in support of programmes and projects funded by UNDP.

Industrial strategies and operations

A total of 1,745 technical assistance projects valued at $135.6 million were implemented or under implementation in 1992. Asia and the Pacific received 28.5 per cent; Africa, 34.3 per cent; the Arab States (including the African Arab States), 11.6 per cent; Latin America and the Caribbean, 8.4 per cent; and Europe, 3.9 per cent. Inter-regional and global projects accounted for 22.5 per cent.

Emphasis was placed on the application of environment-friendly technologies in all technical cooperation projects.

Implementation of industrial operations

Agro-based industries. Technical cooperation expenditures in 1992 under the heading of agro-based industries amounted to $10.3 million. Some 38 per cent of the total was financed by UNDP and 153 projects were implemented or under implementation.

Projects related to agro-based industries continued to focus on the development and adaptation of technologies to suit the needs of small- and medium-scale industries with priority given to the modernization, rehabilitation and sizing of private-sector facilities to improve profitability.

Chemical industries. Expenditures for technical cooperation in the chemical industry sector totalled $28.5 million, with 38 per cent being financed from UNDP resources. A total of 284 projects were either implemented or under implementation.

The UNIDO Chemical Industries Branch devoted increasing attention to environmental considerations, including the location of chemical plants and the introduction of cleaner technologies; increased plant and operator safety in the pesticide and fertilizer industries; waste management; waste recycling and utilization of wastes and by-products in the plastics, paper, building materials and pharmaceutical industries; and the maintenance of biodiversity through the systematic cultivation of medicinal plants. Special emphasis was given to the rehabilitation of the small-scale industry sector as well as to industries in Central and Eastern Europe.

Metallurgical industries. Technical cooperation expenditures in metallurgical industries amounted to $6 million, with 70 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Ninety-nine projects were implemented or under implementation. They focused mainly on the introduction and dissemination of cleaner production technologies, economy in energy increased environmental management techniques at the individual plant level and cooperation at the regional level.

Engineering industries. Expenditures for engineering industry projects amounted to $16.7 million. About 70 per cent of the funds came from UNDP, with special trust-fund arrangements and resources from the Industrial Development Fund representing an increased portion. A total of 179 projects were implemented or under implementation in such areas as computer applications to industrial design; manufacturing; maintenance and automation; electronic components and equipment; medical equipment; telecommunications equipment and systems; environmental monitoring and control equipment; industrial process control and automation equipment and systems; and high-precision components.

Industrial strategies and policies. Under this subprogramme, 97 projects were implemented or under implementation. Technical cooperation expenditures totalled $6.4 million, of which about 64 per cent was financed from UNDP resources.

Activities concentrated on the industrial restructuring process driven by increasing global competition and technological and political changes. Emphasis was placed on the formulation and implementation of strategies and policies for industrial restructuring; enhancement of the productive capacity of industrial subsectors; and the development of information systems. Special attention was given to developments in Eastern Europe and environmental policies there.

Institutional infrastructure. Expenditures in the area of institutional infrastructure totalled $14.4 million. About 83 per cent came from UNDP resources and 223 projects were implemented or under implementation.

This subprogramme addressed the pressing needs of developing countries and countries in transition from centrally planned to market economies. Technical cooperation continued to be consolidated in the areas of small- and medium-scale industries and institutional support for industrial development.

Industrial management and rehabilitation. Technical cooperation expenditures in this sector amounted to $5.6 million, with some 60 per cent coming from UNDP resources. A total of 60 projects were implemented or under implementation.

The management and rehabilitation programme continued to place emphasis on assistance in the commercialization of industry, increasing direct assistance to the private sector, and the transfer of commercially oriented management technologies and systems. New ground was broken in the management programme with the inclusion of computer-aided process planning.

Industrial human resource development. Expenditures for fellowship and other training components in all technical cooperation projects implemented by UNIDO in 1992 amounted to $16.4 million, compared with $17.6 million in 1991. Of that total, $11.3 million was spent on fellowships and study tours and $5.1 million on group training activities and meetings. A total of 103 projects were implemented.

To enhance human resource development in developing countries, increased attention was paid to the identification and clarification of training needs, the formulation of policies and strategies for human resource development and the development of effective training systems to execute industrial development programmes and projects at the sectoral, subsectoral and enterprise levels. Special efforts were made to strengthen the linkage between human resource development and the transfer of advanced technologies and to create awareness of the environmental aspects of industrial development.

Industrial promotion

Industrial promotion activities focused on reinforcing links in the areas of industrial investment, consultations and industrial technology development and promotion.

Industrial investment programme. Activities of the Industrial Investment Division aimed primarily at assisting cooperation between sponsors of industrial investment projects in developing countries and their partners and advising developing countries on ways of identifying investment opportunities. Steps were taken to streamline the Division's operations and improve internal coordination.

The value of investment projects successfully concluded by UNIDO rose to $1,473 million in 1992, with the Industrial Cooperation Centres in Beijing and Moscow promoting projects valued $197 million and $24.1 million, respectively. Of the 194 projects concluded, 41 totalling $15.6 million were in Africa; 41 valued at $672 million were in the Arab countries, Europe and the Mediterranean; 60 amounting to $473 million were in Asia and the Pacific; and 52 costing $178 million were in Latin America and the Caribbean.

System of Consultations. The UNIDO System of Consultations, a mechanism for achieving the goals of the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Cooperation,^b principally to restructure world industry and increase the share of developing countries in world production, held two consultations during 1992: the Regional Consultation on the Restructuring of the Capital Goods Industry in Latin America and the Caribbean (Caracas, Venezuela, 9-12 November) and the Regional Consultation on the Petrochemical Industry in the Arab Countries (Innsbruck, Austria, 22-25 June). As a follow-up to earlier consultations, a workshop on quality and hygiene regulations in the fisheries industries took place (Shetland Islands, United Kingdom, 6-10 July). A meeting was held (Singapore, 25-30 October) on cooperation between specialists from African and Asian fisheries to address problems relating to post-harvest technology and infrastructure in the fisheries sector. Other activities included a seminar on total quality management in the iron and steel industry (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 24-27 August); a workshop on the industrial utilization of medicinal and aromatic plants (Milan, Italy, 24-27 March); and a round-table discussion on the restructuring of small- and medium-scale enterprises with special focus on African/Asian cooperation (New Delhi, India, 29 September-2 October).

Industrial technology development and promotion. Under the newly created Technology Development and Promotion Division, a feasibility study on the establishment of an industrial technology and market information network for Sri Lanka was successfully completed. Operational frameworks were established in Brazil and Colombia to integrate their computerized information systems into the Latin America and Caribbean network. Progress was also made in the development of a world-wide referral system. A workshop on advanced information technology applications and network integration held at Odessa, Ukraine, resulted in a regional project for the development of a Euro-Asian network to exchange technology and market information. Technology market fairs were held in Zimbabwe (September) and India (November) to give entrepreneurs from over 30 countries direct access to alternative technologies from both industrialized and developing countries in manufacturing and agro-based industries.

The Biotechnology and Genetic Engineering Unit continued to be involved in the establishment and programmes of the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology, which expanded its training programmes in 1992. UNIDO organized workshops on technology transfer negotiation and contracting at Brno, Czechoslovakia, in March; at Zanzibar, United Republic of Tanzania, in September; and at Kathmandu, Nepal, in November.

Area programmes

The Area Programme Division developed, implemented and monitored operational programmes at the country, subregional and regional levels. Project approvals from UNDP indicative planning figures, cost-sharing, cash counterpart and special measures in 1992 amounted to $9.6 million. The UNDP Governing Council, at its thirty-ninth session in 1992, approved a list of 59 technical support services (TSS-1) at the programme level with a global ceiling of $4.9 million for implementation by UNIDO in the biennium 1992-1993. Twenty-six TSS-1 projects commenced activities in 1992. During the year, 150 country programme reviews and five regional programme reviews were undertaken, 916 project ideas and concepts were identified and 407 projects were further developed.

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002)

The Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1989.^c Its programme, adopted by the Tenth Conference of African Ministers of Industry and the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO in 1991,^d consisted of 50 national and four subregional programmes. By resolution 47/177 of 22 December 1992, the Assembly adopted the programme for the Second IDDA, adjusted the programme to cover the years 1993-2002, urged the UNIDO Director-General to integrate the relevant provisions of Agenda 21—formulated by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June)—in the implementation of the Second Decade, and to undertake a mid-term evaluation of the programme in 1998.

Under technical cooperation activities, an allotment of $1,446,200 for 1992 was fully programmed. Eighteen projects totalling $2,687,220 were approved. They consisted of six national projects valued at $768,485 and 12 regional projects costed at $1,918,735. They reflected the priorities of national and subregional programmes for the Second IDDA. As at 31 December 1992, $549,000 worth of projects had been implemented. An amount of $4.75 million, budgeted for supplementary activities for the 1992-1993 biennium, was entirely programmed, and an allotment of $2 million for 1992 was allocated to the technical cooperation component of the Decade. More than $606,000 worth of short-term advisory services were provided, mainly to least developed African countries, and as at 31 December 1992, $814,135 worth of supplementary activities had been implemented.

Assistance to LDCs

Responding to the 1990 Paris Declaration and Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries (LDCS)^e and the 1991 UNIDO industrial action programme for LDCS, a concerted effort was made in 1992 to programme and utilize available funds allocated to LDCS according to the priorities set out in the UNIDO programme of action. A seed programme to promote traditional wood industries in Central and West African LDCs was being implemented, and a support programme to mobilize financial resources for industrial development in Asian LDCs was approved. Other programmes submitted for approval addressed the mobilization of financial resources for industrial development, environmental rehabilitation and small-scale and micro-industries. Projects on food production, privatization and technology transfer were approved from the IDDA supplementary activities budget.

New approvals for LDCs amounted to $14.4 million for 100 projects. Delivery reached a level of $23.7 million.

Industrial cooperation among developing countries

Efforts to improve industrial cooperation among developing countries in the framework of the UNIDO-wide programme in the 1990s were centred on updating the information referral system technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) database. Information was collected within the Organization and more than 200 institutions were contacted for updated information on their training programmes and expert services.

Activities with regional and subregional groupings focused on the development of industrial cooperation in the Arab Maghreb Union in textiles and leather, agro-industries, agricultural machinery, pharmaceuticals, electronics and informatics, and in the Gulf Cooperation Council in small- and medium-scale industries. Under the regional cooperation programme for the Industrial Recovery of Latin America and the Caribbean, work continued on the promotion of TCDC potentials in industrial subcontracting, automation of the capital goods industry, and computerized maintenance management in the iron and steel industry.

Workshops were held on enterprise-to-enterprise cooperation meetings on machine tools (New Delhi, India); man-made fibre technology (Beijing, China); and the metalworking industry (Bandung, Indonesia).

Integration of women in industrial development

The implementation of the 1990-1995 UNIDO programme for the integration of women in industrial development concentrated on measures to ensure the consideration of women in programme and project design and implementation, and on the design and implementation of projects directed specifically towards women's needs. This approach was applied to technical cooperation programmes and projects as well as to research and studies. Projects targeting women focused on the development of female entrepreneurship and the access of women to environmentally sound technologies. Projects were formulated to introduce the UNIDO training programme for women entrepreneurs in the food-processing industry in the Gambia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and countries of Central America. A proposal was formulated for the establishment of a women's unit within the Entrepreneurial Centre of the Jamaican Promotion Corporation together with a programme to promote the entrepreneurial and managerial skills of women in China's township industries.

Environment

To develop UNIDO's response to Agenda 21 and define the Organization's role in its implementation, the Director-General set up an Organization-wide Task Force on Environment, updated UNIDO's environmental programme, delineated the Organization's potential response in terms of sustainable development, and defined the Organization's position for consideration by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). The discussions by ACC led to the creation of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development, a coordinating body under the aegis of ACC. UNIDO became the fourth executing agency for the Interim Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.^f

The Environment Coordination Unit fulfilled a vital function in coordinating UNIDO environment-related activities, including implementation of its environment programme, recommendations from the UNIDO Conference on Ecologically Sustainable Industrial Development and follow-up to UNCED. In July, the Unit was assigned as secretariat to the newly created UNIDO Task Force on the Environment.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, UNIDO had 1,343 staff members, of whom 437 were in the Professional and higher categories and 922 in the General Service and related categories. Of 718 women staff members, 104 were Professionals and 614 were in other grades. Women were in 24.4 per cent of posts subject to geographical distribution in 1992 as against 21.5 per cent in 1991. UNIDO was represented in developing countries by 40 UNIDO Country Directors who worked with UNDP Resident Coordinators.

^eGA res. 45/206, 21 Dec. 1990

Technical cooperation

Technical cooperation for the benefit of developing countries continued to be the main UNIDO activity, with the net value of project approvals totalling $113.6 million compared with $130.4 million in 1991. Of that amount, $100.7 million was for non-UNDP funded activities. Total technical cooperation delivery totalled $135.6 million, a decrease of 8 per cent compared with 1991.

Budget

At its fourth session in 1991, the General Conference approved the regular budget for the biennium 1992-1993 at the level of $181,013,400, to be financed from assessed contributions of member States, in both dollars and Austrian schillings. On the basis of an exchange rate of $1.00 = AS 12.90, member States were assessed $179,262,600, consisting of $19,718,900 plus the equivalent in dollars of AS 2,058,116,310. For the Regular Programme of Technical Cooperation-including IDDA—the General Conference had appropriated $10,755,700 for the biennium and allocated $8.6 million to be used as seed money to mobilize additional financial resources for technical assistance and investment needs in the context of the Second IDDA.

In 1992, both the regular budget and the operational budgets were affected by income shortfalls. The Programme and Budget Committee requested the Director-General to take the necessary measures to balance the operational budget as soon as possible while preserving the capacity of the organization for technical cooperation delivery.

Chapter XVIII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

During 1992, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) continued to serve as a multilateral instrument with the principal objective of liberalizing international trade to facilitate economic growth and development. It provided agreed rules for international trade and served as a forum in which countries could discuss trade problems and negotiate the reduction of various restrictive and distortive measures. GATT focused significantly on promoting economic growth of the developing countries, particularly the least-developed among them.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana, Cuba, November 1947–March 1948) drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). The charter of ITO was never accepted, but the Conference's Preparatory Committee members negotiated tariffs among themselves and drew up GATT, which entered into force on 1 January 1948. Since then, ICITO has served as the GATT secretariat.

The most authoritative body of GATT was the Session of Contracting Parties, which, in 1992, held its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 2 and 3 December).

In 1992, the number of Contracting Parties to GATT rose to 105 with the addition of Mozambique and Namibia. (See Annex I for complete membership.)

Multilateral trade negotiations

Uruguay Round

The Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, launched in September 1986,^a was originally scheduled to conclude by 1990 but continued through December 1991, when the Trade Negotiations Committee tabled the Draft Final Act of the Uruguay Round.^b The text set out some 28 specific agreements representing the potential results of the Uruguay Round in all areas except those relating to market access for goods and initial commitments in services. However, no single element could be considered as agreed until agreement was reached on the entire package.

In January 1992, the Trade Negotiations Committee agreed to continue to work on the basis of a global approach and established a four-track negotiating strategy. Track 1 dealt with market-access negotiations at the bilateral and multilateral levels, including specific commitments on internal support and export competition in agriculture; Track 2 was concerned with initial national commitments in the services area; Track 3 focused on detailed examination of all draft agreements to ensure legal conformity and internal consistency; and Track 4 examined possible adjustments to the Draft Final Act in certain specific areas.

In April, the Chairman of the Committee drew attention to a widespread perception that the Round was losing momentum, which was reflected in the reports by the chairmen of the negotiations on Tracks 1 and 2. In addition, major differences between the European Community (EC) and the United States made a meaningful or definitive Track 4 exercise unlikely.

Although the delays in the Round and the number of informally proposed amendments to the Draft Final Act were of concern at the Committee's December meeting, there was an overwhelming view that negotiating continuity and urgency were essential if the Round was to be concluded early in 1993. Several sets of intensive bilateral and multilateral market-access negotiations during 1992 resulted in the tabling of comprehensive draft tariff schedules and nine non-comprehensive schedules by 38 participants representing 49 countries. Six rounds of bilateral services negotiations took place, resulting in the tabling of 54 initial commitment lists on services, covering 67 countries. A number of technical issues relating to the General Agreement on Trade in Services text in the Draft Final Act were largely resolved through informal consultations, while the Air Transport and Telecommunications annexes were developed further.

Implementation of the Tokyo Round agreements

The agreements of the Tokyo Round (1973–1979), the seventh round of multilateral trade negotiations, had concluded with a major package of tariff concessions, a series of new agreements on non-tariff measures (NTMs) and an improved legal framework for GATT. Various committees established at the conclusion of the Tokyo Round continued to supervise tariff schedules, administer the new agreements and provide a forum for discussing related issues.

^aYUN 1986, p. 1211.

Reports received by the Committee on Anti-Dumping Practices covering the period from 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992 indicated that among the 25 parties to the Agreement on Anti-Dumping Practices, 76 investigations had been initiated by Australia, 62 by the United States, 25 by Mexico, 23 by EC, 16 by Canada, 13 by New Zealand, 9 by Brazil, 5 by India, 4 by Austria, 3 by Japan and 1 by Sweden. Dumped products were defined as those sold to an importer at a price lower than that charged by the producer in his domestic market.

Four of the 24 signatories to the Subsidies Agreement notified the Committee on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures that they had initiated countervailing duty investigations during the same period: the United States had initiated 15; Australia, 8; Brazil, 8; and Chile, 5. Two dispute-settlement panels were established in 1992 to examine United States measures affecting the export of pure and alloy magnesium from Canada and Australia's countervailing duties on imports of glacé cherries from France and Italy. Two panel reports were adopted in 1992—both from the United States—on Canadian countervailing duties on grain corn and the definition of "industry" concerning wine and grape products.

In January, negotiations to improve, broaden and expand the Agreement on Government Procurement led to acceptance of a draft by an informal working group. Later in the year, a consensus was reached that decision-making in dispute cases would be dealt with by the Dispute-Settlement Body negotiated in the Uruguay Round draft package. As to dispute settlement, the Committee in May adopted the panel report on the procurement by Norway of toll collection equipment for the city of Trondheim.

In 1992, Australia accepted the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade, bringing the total number of signatories to 38. In April and October, the Committee on Technical Barriers to Trade dealt with the implementation and administration of the Agreement and conducted its annual review. The Committee on Customs Valuation examined national legislation of Argentina, Cyprus, EC, India, Malawi and Romania related to the implementation and administration of the Customs Valuation Agreement. Of the 27 signatories to the Agreement on Import Licensing Procedures, 12 brought their national information up to date by replying to a GATT questionnaire on the subject.

The Committee on Trade in Civil Aircraft examined the text of a bilateral agreement on subsidies in the large civil aircraft sector presented by EC and the United States.

Other GATT activities

Regular session of Contracting Parties

The Contracting Parties, at their forty-eighth regular session, discussed trade and environment, new initiatives for the GATT Council of Representatives, disputes in the steel sector and follow-up action concerning several dispute panel reports.

Council of Representatives

In 1992, the Council of Representatives, GATT's highest body between sessions of the Contracting Parties, oversaw trade and environment activities, monitored the implementation of panel reports and conducted trade policy reviews of individual GATT members.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development continued to review, discuss and negotiate trade issues of interest to developing countries. It reviewed the implementation of part IV of the General Agreement, dealing with special treatment for developing countries, and of the enabling clause, an agreement resulting from the Tokyo Round providing for differential and more favourable treatment of developing countries in various areas of trade policy. With regard to the enabling clause, the Committee reviewed the participation of developing countries, including least developed countries (LDCs), in the multilateral trading system. The review covered recent developments in trade among developing countries and with industrial nations; external developments having a bearing on trade and the economic situation of developing countries; and developments in trade policies of developing and industrial countries as well as in relevant GATT bodies.

Trade and environment

GATT contributed to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 3-14 June 1992) and participated in the follow-up action to that Conference (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

In December, the forty-eighth session of the Contracting Parties adopted a work programme for follow-up action to UNCED, under which the Committee on Trade and Development would deal with matters relating to the promotion of sustainable development through trade liberalization; the Group on Environmental Measures and International Trade would focus on issues related to making trade and environmental policies mutually supportive; and the Council of Representatives would be responsible for inter-institutional and other external relations questions. The Contracting Parties recalled the Council's decision of July 1991 to extend the mandate of the Working Group on Domestically Prohibited Goods for a period of three months from the date of the Group's next meeting in the context of UNCED follow-up action.

Textile arrangement

In December, the Textiles Committee decided to maintain in force the Multifibre Arrangement (MFA), as extended by a 1986 Protocol, for an additional period of 12 months from 1 January to 31 December 1993, since the Uruguay Round had not been completed. MFA had governed much of the world's trade in textiles and clothing since 1974 and had 42 members at the end of the year.

Technical cooperation

During 1992, the GATT secretariat's Technical Cooperation Division assisted developing countries by providing data on trade flows, tariff and non-tariff measures, trade and tariff data for specific products, background information and factual notes on various issues in negotiations. Between November 1991 and the end of 1992, it organized 16 country missions and seminars in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe and Latin America. Special attention was given to the technical assistance requirements of LDCs.

Training programme

From the programme's inception in 1955 to the end of 1992, a total of 1,269 officials from 116 countries and 10 regional organizations had attended GATT trade policy courses.

To facilitate the integration of Central and Eastern European countries into the multilateral trading system, the GATT secretariat held a nine-week Special Trade Policy Course (Geneva, May) attended by officials from Albania, Belarus, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, the Russian Federation and Ukraine.

Annex I. CONTRACTING PARTIES TO THE GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE (As at 31 December 1992)

Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burkino Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Hong Kong, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Macau, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia,* Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

*On 19 June 1992, the GATT Council of Representatives agreed that the former Yugoslavia should refrain from participating in the Council until it further considered the issue.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre (ITC), established by GATT in 1964 and jointly operated with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development since 1968, implemented various technical cooperation activities with GATT, and GATT officials lectured in a number of ITC training events. ITC also organized two trade promotion sessions as part of the regular programme for GATT trade policy courses in 1992. Activities receiving special attention in 1992 were export business development, promoting trade in environmentally sound products, and the integration of women into trade-development and trade-promotion activities. ITC was also involved in the development and promotion of a variety of commodities. GATT and the United Nations contributed equally to the ITC budget, which totalled $18.8 million in 1992. The Centre's technical cooperation activities with developing countries in trade promotion amounted to $34.5 million, with some 105 national, 63 regional and 101 inter-regional projects under implementation in 1992.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1992, the GATT secretariat employed 410 staff members (including temporary posts connected with the Uruguay Round negotiations)—168 in the Professional and higher categories and 242 in the General Service category.

Budget

Member countries of GATT contributed to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of the Contracting Parties and associated Governments. The total budget for 1992 was 85,973,327 Swiss francs, or approximately $59.7 million. (The United Nations rate of exchange as at 31 December 1992 was SwF 1.44 = $US 1.)

(1) Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together—following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1956—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

(2) Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. As from that date, the Federal Republic of Germany has acted in the United Nations under the designation Germany.

(3) On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

(4) On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

(5) The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was an original Member of the United Nations from 24 October 1945. On 24 December 1991, the President of the Russian Federation informed the Secretary-General that the membership of the USSR in all United Nations organs was being continued by the Russian Federation.

(6) Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

(7) Yemen was admitted to the United Nations on 30 September 1947 and Democratic Yemen on 14 December 1967. On 22 May 1990, the two countries merged and have since been represented as one Member.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Chapter III ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs.

Chapter IV THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Composition

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations.

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Functions and powers

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Article 13

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

- a. promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;
- b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1(b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.

2. The expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1(c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.

3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article 19

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly* if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Chapter V

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Composition

Article 23¹

1. The Security Council shall consist of fifteen Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and powers

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII, and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 25

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the ¹Amended text of Article 23, which came into force on 31 August 1965. (The text of Article 23 before it was amended read as follows:

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.)

assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments,

Voting

Article 27²

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedure

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

Chapter VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.
2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.
2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.
3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.
2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.
3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.
2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

Chapter VII

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

²Amended text of Article 27, which came into force on 31 August 1965. (The text of Article 27 before it was amended read as follows:

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.)

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees.

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Chapter VIII

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Chapter IX

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CO-OPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

- a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;
- b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and
- c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialized agencies, established by intergovernmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies.

Article 58

The Organization shall make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies.

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

Chapter X

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Composition

*Article 61*³

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of fifty-four Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from twenty-seven to fifty-four members, in addition to the members elected in place of the nine members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, twenty-seven additional members shall be elected. Of these twenty-seven additional members, the term of office of nine members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of nine other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.

Functions and powers

Article 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

Article 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

2. It may co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations.

Article 64

1. The Economic and Social Council may take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies. It may make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Article 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Article 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as fall within its competence in connexion with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

³Amended text of Article 61, which came into force on 24 September 1973. (The text of Article 61 as previously amended on 31 August 1965 read as follows:

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of twenty-seven Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, nine members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election:

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from eighteen to twenty-seven members, in addition to the members elected in place of the six members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, nine additional members shall be elected. Of these nine additional members, the term of office of three members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of three other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.)

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies.

3. It shall perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present Charter or as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

Voting

Article 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

Article 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.
2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Chapter XI

DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories, and, to this end:

- a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;
- b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;
- c. to further international peace and security;
- d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and,

when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and

- e. to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighbourliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

Chapter XII

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

- a. to further international peace and security;
- b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;
- c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:

- a. territories now held under mandate;
- b. territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
- c. territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.

2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79, and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendments, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas.

Article 84

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

Chapter XIII THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Composition

Article 86

1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:

- a. those Members administering trust territories;
 - b. such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
 - c. as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.
2. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Functions and powers

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may:

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- b. accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- c. provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and
- d. take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements.

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Voting

Article 89

1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote
2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.
2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Article 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

Chapter XIV THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.
2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

Chapter XV

THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 100

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

Chapter XVI

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfilment of its purposes.

Article 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Organization.

3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

Chapter XVII

TRANSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, 30 October 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

Chapter XVIII

AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109⁴

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

Chapter XIX

RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

3. The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English, and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

⁴Amended text of Article 109, which came into force on 12 June 1968. (The text of Article 109 before it was amended read as follows:

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.)

Statute of the International Court of Justice

Article 1

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter I

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-

General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.

2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.

3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.

4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.

5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar, shall have their travelling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

Chapter II

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.

2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

- a. the interpretation of a treaty;
- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
- d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:
 - a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
 - b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
 - c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
 - d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.
2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

Chapter III PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.
2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.
3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.
2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.
3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.
2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents.
2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.
3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.
2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.
3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.
4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.
5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.
2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.
2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.

3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.

2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.

2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

Chapter IV

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.

2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

Chapter V

AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.
