APPENDIX III

Conclusions by the Chairman on the question of special action

The consideration of the agenda item on the implementation of the resolution on urgent action to be taken on behalf of Africa afforded the Committee an opportunity to hear several statements from affected countries in Africa. We also listened with great interest to the statements made by delegations from other continents.

AFRICA

In their statements the African representatives reported that the continent had now fully embarked upon the preparatory phase of the implementation of the Convention. Of the 45 countries which have already ratified the Convention, 22, or nearly half of them, are African. Several other countries have announced that they will shortly deposit their instruments of ratification.

In addition, the preparation of national action programmes (NAP) shows that, despite numerous constraints, the affected African countries are using a step-by-step approach to put in place mechanisms which will over time constitute the framework of the national action programmes.

For example, many countries have reported initiatives which have been taken in fields as diverse as information activities and awareness-building among different categories of actors; creation of the institutional tools required for the follow-up of proposed activities; and preparation for national forums by, inter alia, organizing the first decentralized consultations, conducting a number of thematic studies and strengthening the consultative processes aimed at the signing of joint venture agreements.

Certain countries have already organized national meetings during which the basic aspects of the methodology to be followed have been discussed. Early drafts of the national action programmes have also been prepared at these meetings.

The subregional organizations have also provided the Committee with a detailed overview of the activities which they have undertaken to implement their subregional action programmes (SRAP). In most cases, priority activities have now been defined and are being implemented, in accordance with the recommendations made at the various subregional meetings that were previously held in cooperation with national, subregional and international partners. Multidisciplinary teams of experts carry out the activities that have been initiated with intergovernmental organizations. Priority is being given to the creation of subregional funding facilities, the organization of training sessions for women and their role in the management of natural resources, and the elaboration of cross-border pilot projects.

All of these national and subregional initiatives have been supported by the interim secretariat of the proposed Convention to Combat Desertification.

As the facilitator, the task of the interim secretariat is to provide support to requesting countries and subregional organizations until the benchmarks provided for in the Convention are fully in place.

In this regard, countries have mentioned that the various approaches made to development partners have not yet had any results. At the same time, the bilateral and multilateral donor agencies have indicated that, for their part, numerous initiatives have been taken to provide financial support for the efforts being made by affected African countries.

We must redouble our efforts to take advantage of all the opportunities offered within the framework of our Convention. For example, innovative ideas, such as that of the "chef de file", should enable us to better fill the gaps in information about potential sources of support. As might be expected, much still remains to be done to mobilize the funds required to support the implementation of the resolution on urgent measures on behalf of Africa.

This should lead us to give further consideration to the intensification of the process of consultations among partners, our respective responsibilities and the various forms of support which all Parties could provide to help the countries concerned overcome the constraints to which they referred during our discussions.

ASIA

In Asia, we have witnessed the launching of a very encouraging number of activities. The debate has illustrated the rich diversity of this region and the severity of the threat posed by desertification. We are optimistic that the process of ratification and accession will be speeded up. Awareness-building seminars have been held with the support of the secretariat and these will continue. Existing programming frameworks are being reviewed to ensure that they are consistent with the Convention's provisions, particularly those concerning the integrated and participatory aspects of the process. Full use should be made of existing institutional and scientific capacities, which will be more focused on the implementation of the Convention. Subregional (Abu Dhabi) and regional (New Delhi) meetings have accelerated the process of identifying cooperation priorities at these various levels. The consultations among Asian NGOs which were begun in Islamabad will continue with the support of the secretariat in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) at Bishkek in November 1996 and, at the global level, at Hyderabad in December 1996.

LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN

In Latin America, a number of countries have indicated that they will shortly ratify or accede to the Convention. They stressed the need for the mobilization of funding in order to support the efforts being made by countries at the national and regional levels to implement the Convention. Focal points have been designated and information networks made available, while closer cooperation is being developed among the countries concerned in such areas as soil protection and water resources management.

NORTHERN MEDITERRANEAN REGION

In the northern Mediterranean, the Madrid meeting held in July 1996 gave a decisive impetus to regional cooperation, which will be further consolidated at the next meeting, scheduled to be held in October 1996 in Crete under the auspices of the European Union. The meeting held last May in Istanbul called for closer cooperation among the countries of the Mediterranean, the Balkans and the Caucasus. There again, the start of this important process is a welcome development.

This overview of activities at the global level strengthens our confidence in the potential that is being developed, under the auspices of the Convention, to better ensure sustainable development in the arid regions of the world. It also reminds us that we are only at the beginning of a long journey which will require the commitment and solidarity of all Parties.

Finally, we also need to stress the importance of local action. It is the active participation of the affected populations which will give substance to the Convention and fuel optimism about the role which it can play as an instrument for the promotion of sustainable development.
