in the Abu Qamal, Madississah, Tuqan, Hamashkurayb, Aruma,
Al-Qarda and Awwad regions of east Sudan between 15 October

On 15 October 1996, terrorist elements based in Eritrea infiltrated into Sudanese territory and detonated two anti-vehicle mines composed of plastic explosives along a low wall bordering the Qum road (15 kilometres north of Aruma), in an attempt to destroy one of the small bridges on the road. The bridge was damaged, and repair work is in progress.

On 30 October 1996, at 0830 hours, Eritrean soldiers accompanied by terrorist elements supported by Eritrea attacked Sudanese soldiers in the Tuqan region, wounding three of them. The Sudanese soldiers were obliged to repel the attack, and as a result one of the assailants was killed and seven others wounded.

On 19 November 1996, between 1500 and 1930 hours, Eritrean forces bombarded the Akit region (10 kilometres east of Abu Qamal) with rocket launchers and 82- and 120-millimetre mortar shells.

On 24 November 1996, terrorist elements accompanied by Eritrean soldiers infiltrated into Sudanese territory, penetrating as far as the village of Awwad, where they attacked defenceless civilians, destroying their homes, property and vehicles. Sudanese forces pursued the aggressors, and established that they had taken refuge in Eritrea.

On 1 December 1996, Eritrean soldiers and terrorist elements supported by Eritrea massed at the Sudan's eastern border. Twenty-three military vehicles transported troops as far as the Hamayid region (east of Tuqan) with a view to launching an attack against the Sudanese region of Tuqan. Troops had also been massed in the Kawa, Dayrah and Shaqlubah regions, near Bastaf, with the aim of launching military operations in the Sudanese region of Tamkit. Further, Eritrean soldiers regrouped near Hamashkurayb with a view to cutting off the main road. Lastly, Eritrean forces massed near Al-Ayq'al forest, not far from Aruma, in order to undertake other operations in the region.

On 14 December 1996, an anti-vehicle mine planted by Eritrean forces exploded under a civilian lorry in the Tuqan region, destroying the vehicle and wounding its occupants.

On 23 December 1996, Sudanese forces arrested a member of the terrorist group supported by Eritrea. He was wearing a second lieutenant's uniform and was armed with a Kalashnikov and grenades. He was apprehended as he crossed the border, heading towards the region situated between Omly and Khawr Dalib.

The Eritrean forces seized a number of vehicles and pieces of equipment.

On 29 December 1996, two Sudanese army helicopters were carrying out a routine patrol in the Sudanese region of Rabsam near the town of Hamashkurayb when SAM-7 anti-aircraft missiles were fired in their direction from the Eritrean region of Awwad. One helicopter was shot down. Its crew perished.^a
