On 1 July,⁽²⁹⁾ the Governing Council agreed to maintain the operational reserve at its current level of $200 million and decided to review the need to increase the reserve on an annual basis. Considering that the forecasts of likely additional resources contained in the Administrator's report were based on assumptions which might or might not be realized, the Council asked the Administrator to restrict commitments against categories for both additional IPFs and SPR and to review the resource situation each year in the light of voluntary contributions, exchange rates and other related factors; he was to report annually. The Council also decided that if the increase in resources did not materialize, equal proportional amounts would be deducted from SPR and IPF allocations. If, on the other hand, the resources should increase over and above the amounts foreseen, any additional resources would be distributed in accordance with the 1985 decision on fourth programming cycle resources.⁽²⁵⁾

Special Programme Resources

In his May report on the mid-term review of resources,⁽²⁸⁾ the Administrator provided details on additional funding needs with respect to activities financed from SPR. In response to a 1987 request of the Governing Council,⁽⁵³⁾ he provided information on categorization of SPR activities and criteria for contingencies in order for the Council to review the criteria. He proposed that the categorization of SPR activities should comprise: disaster relief; programme development; TCDC and related activities; other activities; and contingencies and unearmarked funds. He stated that the total amount needed during the balance of the fourth programming cycle to finance SPR activities was estimated to exceed $120 million.

On 1 July,⁽²⁹⁾ the Governing Council decided that of the $600 million in extra resources available for programming, SPR would receive $8.38 million, which would be augmented by $101.62 million, making a total of $110 million. That amount would be allocated as follows: $30 million for activities already agreed by the Council and included under the categories of SPR activities proposed by the Administrator (see above); $20 million for the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (see PART TWO, Chapter V); and $60 million for a Special Programme for Management Development and Related Institution-building, to be known as the Management Development Programme, as proposed by the Administrator.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The Council specified that: the Programme would be available to all countries wishing to participate, with no more than 50 per cent of resources being allocated to programmes in one region; it would operate only in response to requests from developing countries to assist them to design and/or implement long-term, sectoral or multisectoral programmes of management development and related institution-building; no conditionality would be applied in the use of those funds or in the Programme's activities other than normal UNDP requirements; the use of the facility would not be related to the implementation of any policy other than that of the Governments concerned; and UNDP activities in that area should not be conditional upon those of any other organization. The Administrator was asked to provide in 1989 details of guidelines for the use of the Programme and a report on its operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In decision 43/445 of 20 December, the General Assembly referred a paragraph on operational activities for development to the Economic and Social Council for consideration and action in 1989. By that paragraph, the establishment of a management development programme as an instrument for focused support of national efforts to improve public administration in developing countries would be welcomed.

Revised 1988-1989 budget

Revised budget estimates of UNDP as a whole for the biennium 1988-1989⁽⁵⁵⁾ amounted to $397.3 million (gross) and $333 million (net). The 0.8 per cent increase in gross estimates over estimates approved in 1987⁽⁵⁶⁾ was attributable to a volume increase in respect of the Office for Project Services, amounting to $3.7 million, which was partially offset by an overall cost decrease of $0.5 million. The revised estimates took account of the change in currency parities between 1 February 1987, the basis of the Administrator's original budget estimates, and 1 February 1988. The result was an overall currency release of $3.4 million. As regards inflation, an increase in headquarters costs as a result of an increase in projected inflation was more than offset by a decrease in projected inflation in certain developing countries. The net effect was a reduction of $1.4 million. The revised estimates embodied an overall inflation rate of 6 per cent, comprising 4 per cent at headquarters and 7 per cent at the field offices.

The report containing the revised budget estimates⁽⁵⁵⁾ also contained a presentation on the funding mechanisms used by UNDP to meet the costs of its programme support and administrative services. It also included proposals regarding the presentation of the 1990-1991 biennial budget.

On 1 July,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Governing Council approved revised appropriations of $416,183,100 (gross) to finance the 1988-1989 biennial budget, and resolved that income estimates of $66,197,300 should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $349,985,800. It requested the Administrator to prepare an overall review of the most appropriate senior management structure for UNDP as a whole, to be presented to the Council in 1989, in the context of the 1990-1991 biennial budget estimates. He was also asked to undertake a detailed review of the role and functions of the Office for Project Services, taking into account the work-load, structure and staffing of the Office, and to report in 1989. The Council took note of the funding mechanisms used by UNDP and decided to keep the issue under review in the context of the biennial budget presentation. It approved changes for the presentation of the 1990-1991 budget estimates and took note of the carry-forward of $2.6 million of the 1986-1987 support-cost earnings of the Office for Project Services for use in 1988-1989.

Review of 1987 financial situation

In an April report,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Administrator provided a comprehensive financial review of activities financed from the UNDP account during 1987 and of the financial position as at the end of that year. He included estimates of anticipated resources and expenditures for 1988 and 1989, as well as information on cost-sharing activities, the status of SMF/LDC and SPR, the placement of UNDP funds, the status of the operational reserve, the utilization of accumulated non-convertible currencies, agency support-cost arrangements, the status of the Reserve for Construction Loans to Governments, management and other support services and the Senior Industrial Development Field Adviser programme (see below, under "Sectoral support").

On 1 July,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Governing Council urged the Administrator, in co-operation with recipient Governments and executing agencies, to continue to improve programme delivery so that it was better aligned with the available balance of resources, without compromising the quality of the programme. It requested him to continue to report on problems related to the utilization of non-convertible currencies, decided that the level of the operational reserve should be $200 million, fully funded, and approved the Administrator's proposals in respect of the Reserve for Construction Loans to Governments, renaming it Reserve for Field Accommodation.

UNDP-administered funds

During 1988, twelve new trust funds were established by the Administrator on behalf of UNDP.⁽⁶⁰⁾ They were to finance: a demographic and economic census of population and housing in Senegal; an African training and management services project; the Steering Committee and secretariat for UNPAAERD; the Africa 2000 Network (addressing problems of environmental degradation); the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan; the administration of the residual funds of the United Nations Special Relief Office in Bangladesh; emergency assistance to Bangladesh in the wake of severe flooding; technical and capital assistance to Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip; the participation of parliamentarians, spiritual leaders and the media in development activities; preparation of an international research programme on tropical forestry; the development of policies and plans to make motherhood safer; and the co-ordination of international agricultural research. Contributions to those funds received during the year amounted to $16,819,885 out of a total trust fund income of $28.5 million. A trust fund arrangement was also established on behalf of UNCDF and another on behalf of UNIFEM. The value of those arrangements was approximately $671,000.

In March 1988,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Administrator informed the Governing Council of the full utilization of the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Since no additional contributions had been received, the Fund had become inoperative and the Administrator recommended that it be closed and the residual amount of approximately $900 be transferred to general resources of UNDP.

On 1 July,⁽⁶²⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report on trust funds established by him in 1987.⁽⁵³⁾ It requested him to provide, in future reports, summary information, at the aggregate level, on all trust funds established by him since 1981. It agreed that the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples be closed and that its unspent balance be transferred to the general resources of UNDP, and requested the Administrator to take appropriate action to submit the proposal to the General Assembly in 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 43/446 of 20 December 1988, the General Assembly took note of the decision of the UNDP Governing Council to close the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to transfer the balance of $900 to UNDP general resources.

Emergency Operation Trust Fund

In March 1988,⁽⁶³⁾ the Administrator informed the Governing Council of action taken to implement a 1983 General Assembly resolution⁽⁶⁴⁾ on liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and allocation of its remaining balance. With regard to the sum allocated to the UNDP Trust Fund for Countries Afflicted by Famine and Malnutrition, of total available funds as at 31 December 1987 of some $42.9 million, 144 projects with total budgets of $42.3 million had been approved or accepted in principle. As to the amount allocated to the Pérez-Guerrero Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, the balance as at 31 December 1987 was $7 million, of which $5 million was in the form of preserved capital and $2 million in disposable resources.

In a decision of 27 June and 1 July,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Agency support costs

ACC action. In April 1988, ACC adopted a decision⁽⁶⁶⁾ by which it submitted to the Governing Council a statement on the effect of changes in the exchange rate of the United States dollar on support-cost reimbursements by UNDP. ACC noted that the existing support-cost arrangements, established in 1981,⁽⁶⁷⁾ were due to expire in 1991. The substantial decline in the value of the dollar which had taken place since 1985 could not have been foreseen in 1981; that decline had rendered the increase in support-cost reimbursement to executing agencies very inadequate in comparison with the shortfalls sustained. ACC requested special ad hoc arrangements for the reimbursement of support costs for 1987 to compensate European-based executing agencies for the severe difficulties encountered owing to the depreciation of the dollar against the currencies of the headquarters' countries concerned. In an annex to its decision, ACC listed 14 executing agencies and proposed additional support-cost reimbursements for 1987.

In May,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Administrator transmitted the ACC statement to the Governing Council.

Also in May,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Administrator submitted requests from seven executing agencies (ILO, FAO, UNESCO, ITU, UNIDO, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Trade Centre) for the additional reimbursement of support costs for 1987 as a result of currency fluctuations. The Council was requested to review the requests in conjunction with the ACC statement.

On 1 July,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Council authorized the Administrator to make a special ad hoc additional support-cost reimbursement for 1987 to the executing agencies listed by ACC in the amounts proposed, less any amounts reimbursed under existing arrangements. It emphasized that the authorization was exceptional and that it would not consider further requests for support-cost reimbursements in excess of the amounts authorized through 1991. The Administrator was asked to bring the decision to the attention of ACC and to inform the governing bodies of the executing agencies, through ACC, that: the Council considered that the approval of the request should enhance the capacity of executing agencies to support UNDP projects entrusted to them and improve the quality of project execution by agencies; and that the Council intended to examine the relationship between the agencies and UNDP—including the best way for UNDP to provide technical assistance to developing countries, accountability and appropriate compensation arrangements to those agencies, Governments and other providers of services for UNDP-funded projects—with a view to devising successor arrangements for agency support costs to operate from January 1992. The Administrator was asked to inform the Council of ACC's response.

Also on 1 July,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Council, having considered the requests by seven executing agencies for additional reimbursement of support costs and noting that two other agencies had subsequently submitted such requests, authorized the Administrator to reimburse the nine agencies with headquarters in Europe in accordance with the provisions of the 1981 arrangements.

Ex post facto report

In accordance with a 1984 Governing Council decision,⁽⁷²⁾ the Administrator submitted his third ex post facto report on agency support costs,⁽⁷³⁾ covering 1986 and 1987. The report examined information received from agencies and analysed trends in agency support-cost income and expenditure, as well as agency technical co-operation project expenditure.

On 1 July,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Council expressed its concern at the increase in the ratio between agency support-cost expenditure and total technical co-operation project expenditure. It asked the Administrator to continue to submit, on a biennial basis, an ex post facto report.

Successor arrangements

On 1 July,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Governing Council considered that the successor arrangements for agency support costs dealt with in a 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁶⁾ should be examined in the wider context of the evolving relationship of UNDP, Governments and the executing agencies of the United Nations system. It decided to establish a small group of experts in international development to study the issues and to make recommendations no later than 28 February 1990. The Administrator was asked to circulate the group's report and recommendations immediately, together with the comments of the specialized agencies, to all members of the Council. The Council also asked the Administrator, after consultations with the Council and United Nations agencies, to make proposals in February 1989 on the composition of the group, its working methods, terms of reference, timetable and work programme, and an estimate of all costs and financing.

Sectoral support

On 1 July 1988,⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Governing Council recalled its 1986⁽⁷⁷⁾ and 1987⁽⁷⁸⁾ decisions on sectoral support and reiterated its wish to continue to co-operate with UNIDO in providing the services of Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) to developing countries. It expressed the hope that the open-ended inter-sessional working group established by the Industrial Development Board would complete its work on the review of SIDFAs so that the Board could decide on the matter in October 1988. The UNIDO Director-General and the UNDP Administrator could then conclude a memorandum of understanding. The Council recalled that the UNDP contribution to the SIDFA programme was linked to the integration of SIDFAs into UNDP field offices. It agreed to review in 1989 the part of its 1987 decision⁽⁷⁸⁾ dealing with classification of SIDFAs and asked the Administrator to provide, in his report on the annual review of the financial situation, information for that purpose.

Management services

In response to a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽⁵³⁾ the Administrator reviewed the experience gained in providing management services to developing countries.⁽⁷⁹⁾ The report recapitulated the legislative background to and described the status and growth of management services operations. The process of determining management fees was also explained.

The report indicated that the use of management services had grown dramatically. As at March 1988, 63 agreements were in effect with total budgets of $241.4 million. Expenditures from all funding sources—development banks, bilateral donors and IFAD—totalled $87.4 million in 1987.

The Administrator concluded that management services afforded Governments an existing and flexible mechanism that could be used to mobilize project inputs more rapidly. There was no indication that the multilateral character of the UNDP programme or its role as a central funding agency for technical assistance had in any way been affected by the use of the management services modality. He believed that management services tended to be supportive of UNDP's overall efforts to improve co-ordination at the field level. Given that the experience, albeit of limited duration, had proved positive, the Administrator recommended that UNDP continue to provide such services, reporting to the Governing Council every two years on the status of management services agreements, with an analysis of any emerging trends.

On 1 July,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Council noted with satisfaction that the activities undertaken under management services agreements had been carried out in accordance with the principles and guidelines of a 1983 decision.⁽⁸¹⁾ It authorized the Administrator to continue to provide such services in accordance with those principles and guidelines. He was also requested to report to the Council every two years, beginning in 1990, on the status of management services, with an analysis of any trends that might appear over the longer term and including information, by individual donor, on the level of voluntary contributions to UNDP general resources compared with amounts provided under management services agreements.

Accounts and auditing

Accounts for 1987

The financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1987, together with the report of the Board of Auditors, were submitted to the General Assembly in August 1988.⁽⁸²⁾ The statements also covered UNDP-administered trust funds.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in October,⁽⁸³⁾ commented on the Board's findings.

By resolution 43/216, the Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and report of the Board of Auditors and requested the Governing Council of UNDP to require the Administrator to take immediate steps to correct the situations or conditions that gave rise to the qualification of audit opinions of the Board. The Assembly urged the panel of external auditors, administrations, governing bodies of the executing agencies and other parties to solve the problem regarding certification of programme expenditures executed and reported by United Nations executing agencies in co-operation with UNDP and UNFPA.

Audit reports for 1986

In April 1988, the Administrator submitted to the Governing Council the audited accounts and audit reports of participating and executing agencies relating to the funds allocated to them by UNDP as at 31 December 1986.⁽⁸⁴⁾ He included comments on substantive observations of the auditors, UNDP follow-up with agencies on such observations and a summary of action taken by UNDP in response to a 1987 Council decision⁽⁸⁵⁾ on the preparation of audit reports.

On 1 July,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Council noted with concern that the Board of Auditors' opinion on the 1986 accounts was qualified on several counts and noted with satisfaction that the Administrator was taking steps to correct the situations that gave rise to those qualifications. It recognized that the audit opinion on UNDP accounts would remain qualified as long as audited accounts of executing agencies had not been received by the Board when it issued its opinion on UNDP accounts. The Administrator was asked to bring that problem to the attention of the Panel of External Auditors. The Council suggested that the Economic and Social Council invite the executing agencies to consider providing UNDP with annual audited accounts. It welcomed the Administrator's proposals concerning the management and administration of the audit process in connection with Government-executed projects and considered that existing UNDP procedures for recording unliquidated obligations should continue to be applied pending the Panel of External Auditors' examination of those procedures. It welcomed the measures taken by the Administrator to provide fuller disclosure in UNDP financial statements of overexpenditure on projects funded from cost-sharing and Government cash-counterpart contributions, accepting that the existing basis of recording income and expenditure for those contributions, and for trust funds, should continue pending consideration by the Panel. Noting that a comparison of actual expenditure against appropriation estimates would, for 1987, be provided in a schedule contained in the annual audited UNDP financial statements, the Council decided to retain for the time being a single appropriation line for UNDP core activities. The Administrator was asked to consider having the budget decision presented in more appropriation lines and to report on the matter in 1989.

Financial regulations

On 1 July,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Governing Council decided that its Budgetary and Finance Committee would consider in 1990 a proposed financial regulation (mainly dealing with currencies of contributions and their utilization) and other matters on which consensus was not achieved at the Council's current session, as specified in the annex to a 1986 note on the matter.⁽⁸⁸⁾

Administrative questions

Project personnel

In pursuance of a 1987 Governing Council decision,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Administrator reported on his efforts to update and refine data on project personnel.⁽⁸⁹⁾ The report also addressed the Council's request for case-studies of a representative number of projects with varying component mixes of personnel to determine to what extent the objectives of projects had been achieved and whether the right mix of experts in terms of quality and cost had been used. The Administrator made recommendations covering project design, an agreement on conditions of service for national Professional project personnel, the status of such personnel and monitoring and reporting.

On 1 July,⁽³²⁾ the Council endorsed the Administrator's proposal that a comprehensive data base on the participation in the programme of national Professional project personnel be established. It recommended that UNDP and the executing agencies provide training in United Nations system practices and procedures to such personnel and that efforts be made to regularize their legal status in consultation with their Governments.

In-house technical expertise

On 1 July,⁽⁹⁰⁾ the Governing Council requested the Administrator to report to it on the role of and need for in-house technical expertise in UNDP, including the appropriate role of the Technical Advisory Division, in the programme and project cycle.

Change of name of the Office for Projects Execution

In February 1988,⁽⁹¹⁾ the Administrator informed the Governing Council of his decision to rename the Office for Projects Execution as the Office for Project Services, indicating that the designation of what was in effect UNDP's operational arm better reflected the essence of its activities in the service of both Governments and UNDP's funding partners.

On 18 February,⁽⁹²⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's decision.

Delegation of project approval authority

In February,⁽⁹³⁾ the Administrator informed the Council that, effective 1 March 1988, the level at which resident representatives would have the authority to approve projects would be raised from $400,000 to $700,000, subject to certain conditions.

On 18 February,⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's action.

Action by other organs of the UN system

On 1 July,⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Governing Council requested the Administrator to submit to it in February 1989 a report indicating action which UNDP had taken or intended to take in response to decisions of other organs of the United Nations system in 1988.

Other technical co-operation

UN programmes

In 1988, the United Nations, mainly through DTCD, continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries. In a report⁽¹⁾ to the UNDP Governing Council, the Secretary-General addressed various policy issues and described DTCD's technical co-operation programme and those of other United Nations entities.

In 1988, the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of $269 million, compared with $229 million in 1987, an increase of 17 per cent in project expenditures. Of that amount, DTCD executed a programme of $149.4 million. UNDP-financed projects represented $97.2 million; projects financed by UNFPA accounted for $20.3 million; $25.1 million was financed by trust funds; and $6.8 million was expended under the United Nations regular programme for technical co-operation. In comparison with 1987, budgets increased by $19.8 million (12 per cent) in 1988 to $182.8 million, and the delivery of $149.4 million was up 10 per cent. The implementation rate was 82 per cent.

DTCD activities

In his report on technical co-operation activities,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in 1988 DTCD had under execution 953 projects with total delivery of $149.4 million against budgets of $182.8 million. The volume of expenditures for UNDP-financed projects increased by $9 million and accounted for 65 per cent of total expenditures, as in 1987. There was a marked increase in the UNFPA-funded share of project expenditures, which partly offset the sharp drop in UNDP trust funds, which fell by 72 per cent or over $8 million.

By sector, natural resources and energy represented 38.1 per cent of total expenditures, or $56.9 million. Development planning was the second largest sector, representing 19.3 per cent or $28.8 million. Statistics had expenditures of $21.3 million (14.3 per cent); public administration and finance, $18.6 million (12.4 per cent); population, $9.4 million (6.3 per cent); the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, $6.7 million (4.5 per cent); social development, $5.6 million (3.8 per cent); and others, $2.1 million.

By geographic area, the DTCD-executed programme included expenditures of $66.5 million for Africa, $38.8 million for Asia and the Pacific, $30 million for the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and interregional projects, and $14.1 million for the Americas. The largest growth was in Asia, where the programme increased by $6.8 million. Project delivery in Africa remained the largest, but its share of the total delivery decreased from 47 per cent to 45 per cent.

DTCD executed 153 projects in development issues and policies during 1988, with delivery of $33.2 million against budgets of $42.2 million: 41.8 per cent for Africa; 9.4 per cent for the Americas; 25.2 per cent for Asia and the Pacific; and 23.6 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East, Europe and interregional programme.

Requests from developing countries for technical assistance in development planning were strongly influenced by international economic instability and onerous foreign debt and balance-of-payment problems. DTCD's assistance therefore focused on activities related to national economic structural adjustment and recovery programmes, particularly in the case of Africa. A main thrust was on applied, immediately useful assistance in such areas as short-term and operational planning, project planning and monitoring and the co-ordination of external assistance. DTCD intensified the development of innovative methodologies and modalities to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of its technical co-operation. Training and other means of developing national technical capacities in development planning were stressed. It provided assistance in computerized investment project banks and in co-ordinating international financial and technical co-operation, particularly in Latin America and Africa. In Burkina Faso, for example, an integrated project bank was developed to enable the Government to monitor its entire public investment programme and select investment projects on the basis of economic and financial criteria and priorities.

Innovative methodologies and modalities developed by DTCD included the first planning model designed especially for island developing countries of the Pacific, which filled an important vacuum. In relation to that, training in sub-national planning was provided to national professionals associated with DTCD's planning projects in eight Pacific island countries at a workshop held at the United Nations Centre for Regional Development at Nagoya, Japan. In addition, interregional projects were formulated under the regular programme to develop applied econometric and data-bank models specifically for LDCs.

In rural development, a multisectoral project in the Lao People's Democratic Republic assisted in establishing an agricultural promotion centre, which developed pragmatic approaches for agricultural production and exceeded its objectives in road-building, rice cultivation and forestry. In Swaziland, a project combining income generation, training and social infrastructure expanded from one to several regions of the country. Also in grass-roots development, support continued for the Trickle-Up programme of very small loans for productive sectors of the population. In 1988, a manual translated into all the United Nations official languages was produced to help replicate the system world-wide. With regard to inter-agency co-operation, DTCD expanded its technical scrutiny of WFP projects.

DTCD delivery in the energy sector during 1988 was $15.8 million, compared to $21.3 million in 1987, and was allocated as follows: Asia and the Pacific, $9.1 million or 57.5 per cent; the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and interregional programme, $2.5 million or 16 per cent; Africa, $2.1 million or 13.5 per cent; and the Americas, $2.1 million or 13 per cent. The decreased 1988 expenditures reflected the lower priority assigned in 1985-1987 to the energy sector by developing countries in response to lower prices in the world oil market. A total of 78 advisory missions to 49 countries were undertaken by headquarters staff to provide advice on energy policy, resource evaluation and exploration, design of projects and feasibility studies in the broad range of energy fields covered by DTCD: petroleum, coal, natural gas, electric power, energy planning and conservation, geothermal, solar and wind energy, multisource renewable energy packages, computerized data banks and microcomputer-based energy analysis.

In cartography, remote sensing and public works, there were 69 projects under execution during 1988 with delivery of $9.5 million against budgets of about $10 million, a significant increase over the 64 projects with delivery of $6.9 million in 1987. Projects in cartography, surveying, mapping and hydrography included institution-building, transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions and provision of training and equipment. Substantive assistance was provided to live countries in the design and evaluation of remote-sensing proposals related to outer space, including advice on the feasibility of particular remote-sensing projects and assistance to resource managers in gathering data for locating, managing and monitoring natural resources.

Total 1988 delivery for mineral resources was $12.5 million against budgets of $17 million, up from $11.1 million and budgets of $12 million in 1987. Advisory missions increased sharply to 120 in 1988 from 59 in 1987. As in 1987, most new requests were in mineral sector planning and programming, investment promotion, rehabilitation of production facilities and fields requiring highly specialized expertise. Thirty new projects were initiated in 1988. Almost all were concerned with institution-strengthening and training, investment promotion and mineral-sector planning and strategies, and about half of them were in Africa.

While the number of DTCD water projects decreased from 126 in 1987 to 113 in 1988, the budget for the sector increased from $24 million to $24.3 million. The regional distribution was as follows: Africa, 54.4 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 21.6 per cent; the Americas, 9.8 per cent; and the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and inter-regional programme, 14.1 per cent. Rural water supply continued to comprise a significant part of the technical assistance programme, with some 18 per cent of all projects. While nearly a quarter of those were concerned with institutional support and training, there was an increase in projects to improve management and planning of water resources. In addition to UNDP-financed projects, 42 interregional advisory missions, sponsored by the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, covered such fields as water legislation, well drilling, computerized data management and hydrogeology.

During 1988, DTCD implemented 120 projects in public administration and finance with delivery of $18.6 million against a budget of $24.9 million, an increase of more than 30 per cent compared to 1987. Interregional advisers in development administration and finance undertook 22 missions in the following areas: tax administration and resource mobilization; management development and training; and government budgeting and financial management, including accounting and auditing, public enterprise and administrative reform. Improved productivity and performance in public services continued to be a priority objective of technical assistance programmes. Along with reforming public services, many developing countries continued to make progress in supporting human resource development, training managers and technical personnel in the public sector and upgrading national training institutions. In an environment of declining official capital flows and increasing external debt burdens, many developing countries were able to achieve considerable fiscal adjustment by cutting spending and generating additional revenues. Governments were helped through projects aimed at closing tax loopholes, expanding tax bases and introducing tax reforms.

In statistics, DTCD provided support for the execution of 180 projects with a total delivery of $21.3 million in 1988, compared with $16.1 million in 1987. Headquarters staff undertook 121 project-related or direct advisory missions to 60 countries; of those, 11 were carried out by interregional advisers. Technical co-operation continued to be aimed at strengthening national services and capabilities for collecting, processing and disseminating a broad range of development-related statistics, from general economic statistics and national accounts to social and demographic statistics, and statistics on women and special population groups, such as disabled persons. Over 40 countries were assisted in the use of microcomputer systems to support population data processing and general statistical work.

In the population sector, DTCD had 112 projects under execution with total delivery of $9.4 million, compared to 98 projects with delivery of $7.9 million in 1987. Its activities heightened awareness of the implications of demographic levels and trends. In Africa, for example, a number of countries had adopted or were in the process of adopting population policies aimed at fertility reduction, and training had increased at both national and inter-regional levels, particularly using new microcomputer technologies. In response to the continuing need for human resources with population skills and background, projects in population and development training and research continued at the country level, with particular emphasis on the Africa region, and at the interregional level, through renewed support to the Cairo Demographic Centre and the United Nations/USSR Interregional Training and Research Programme in Population and Development.

In the area of population dynamics, increased use was made of computers in completing the analysis of the 1980 round of censuses and in the preparation of population projections. The dissemination of census results was made an integral part of the census analysis programme. In several African countries-Benin, Burkina Faso, Liberia, the Sudan and Togo-the results of demographic analyses and population projects were produced speedily through the use of computers, with follow-up seminars generating interest in all government sectors. Computer packages assembled and distributed by DTCD were used extensively to evaluate data, estimate fertility and mortality levels, construct life tables and compute population projects. In population policy and development, DTCD continued to assist 30 countries to strengthen population units for research and studies, formulate population policies and integrate population variables into national development planning.

The United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) continued, in co-operation with DTCD, to carry out technical co-operation activities in social development. With financing provided by DTCD, CSDHA fielded several ad hoc advisory missions: to Guatemala to assist the Government in strengthening voluntary social welfare organizations; to Hungary to launch a UNDP-financed project on strengthening social welfare and health programmes; to the United Republic of Tanzania to participate in a joint UNDP/World Bank project on the social aspects of adjustment; and to Yugoslavia to help establish an institute on aging. DTCD and CSDHA also co-operated in formulating World Bank proposals for technical assistance loans for social sector management in Argentina and Brazil.

In 1988, delivery for project personnel was $74.6 million, of which 44.9 per cent was for Africa, 25.1 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East, Europe and interregional programme, 17.7 per cent for Asia and the Pacific, and 12.3 per cent for the Americas. The expenditures reflected an increase of $9.4 million over 1987. Expenditures for equipment for technical co-operation projects executed by DTCD totalled $31.8 million and for contracts $6.8 million. Also during 1988, 42 per cent or $13.2 million of all equipment purchases and 29 per cent or $2 million of all contracts awarded were for projects in Africa, in line with the priority being accorded to providing assistance to African countries.

The training component accounted for $29.7 million in 1988, a significant increase over the $22.6 million in 1987. Africa had the largest share, with 45.3 per cent, Asia and the Pacific had 32.7 per cent, the Americas, 4.9 per cent, and the Mediterranean, Middle East, Europe and interregional programme, 17.1 per cent.

A total of 4,141 training awards were implemented in 1988, including fellowships, study tours, seminars and workshops, compared with 3,773 in 1987. Fellows and participants from 143 countries were trained in 83 host countries. Over 2,200 United Nations fellows/participants were trained in developing countries.

UNDP Council action. On 1 July 1988,⁽²⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on United Nations technical co-operation activities during 1987.⁽³⁾ It welcomed the high rate of project implementation by DTCD, its efforts to hold down support costs and the steps taken by it to promote greater use of project evaluation as a tool to augment the quality and effectiveness of technical co-operation. DTCD was urged to take measures to ensure feedback of the results of evaluation into project formulation, and to co-ordinate its evaluation procedures with those of UNDP and UNFPA. The Council reiterated the continuing importance of greater co-operation between UNDP and DTCD, inter alia, in the preparation of round-table meetings and national technical co-operation assessments and programmes in keeping with the needs of developing countries. DTCD was requested to extend all necessary support to assist African countries in improving their managerial capacities through training and institution-building, and funding agencies were called on to make maximum use of DTCD's expertise in economic management. The Council encouraged DTCD to continue to co-operate closely with UNDP and to contribute to the Special Action Programme in Public Administration and Management for Africa. It urged DTCD to promote TCDC and requested it to intensify its efforts to promote the full integration of women in development, taking into account their concerns in all aspects of its programmes. The Secretary-General was to report to the Council on specific measures taken in that respect, including information on the participation of women in its training programmes and seminars and as experts in its programme. He was also to report on the major conclusions of DTCD's study, on behalf of ACC, on improving the quality of experts for development projects.

United Nations Volunteers

In his annual report,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that at the end of 1988 there were 1,534 serving volunteers. That number was expected to increase to 2,000 by the end of 1989.

Of the $8 million available in the Special Voluntary Fund (SVF) in 1988, $2.9 million was carried forward from 1987, $1.3 million was received in voluntary contributions, $3.6 million came from the partial offset of external costs, and $160,000 was earned in interest. Of the total, $2.8 million was paid for travel costs of volunteers assigned in 1988 and for the repatriation of volunteers who completed their assignments. The remaining $5.2 million was carried forward to 1989.

A breakdown of contributions by Governments to UNV in 1988 and of pledges for 1989 was set out in the audited financial statements for 1988.⁽⁵⁾

In response to a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽⁶⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on the review of the UNV programme.⁽⁷⁾ The review had been conducted by consultants using information collected from user agencies, donor and recipient Governments, bilateral volunteer organizations and UNDP field staff in seven developing countries. Resident representatives had also supplied written responses to a questionnaire. The report presented the Administrator's views on 67 recommendations generated by the review as well as his recommendations concerning the future funding of UNV. The review's recommendations fell within six broad categories: the UNV concept and mandate, general management and administration issues, programme finance, programming, recruitment and training.

The Administrator concluded that the management of UNV should be financed through a core budget, which would be part of UNDP's administrative budget, and that the volunteer recruitment and back-stopping should be financed through a per capita charge. He believed that his proposals would provide strengthening and stability of the UNV management and flexibility in staffing its operations side in line with the changing level of volunteers. He noted that he had accepted and implemented many useful recommendations. Others were being studied for possible implementation. Some had serious implications for work-loads and budgets and could not be implemented currently. Still others touched fundamental issues not only of volunteerism, but also of the nature of multi-lateral co-operation programmes. The Administrator assured the Council that future review exercises would be conducted, which would assist UNDP and UNV in serving the developing countries.

UNDP Council action. On 1 July,⁽⁸⁾ the Council noted with satisfaction the Administrator's intention to prepare and circulate a programme advisory note on the appropriate use of volunteers and to draw its contents to the attention of United Nations organizations. It invited volunteer-sending organizations to continue to assist in the work of the United Nations system, either by participating in the UNV programme by providing volunteers or by supporting the government or other local counterpart contribution to a United Nations project. The Council noted the Administrator's intention to undertake periodic evaluations of the UNV programme and invited him to report on them. He was asked also to inform the Council of the results of consultation meetings with other volunteer-sending organizations. The Council invited him to report in 1990 on the desirability of continuing separate UNV programme youth activities and agreed that the Domestic Development Services should be known as the Participating Development Programme

(PDP) and should retain a separate identity. It recognized the need to streamline recruitment procedures and improve co-operation with volunteer-sending societies so that the universal character of the UNV programme could be reflected in the diversity of the volunteers' countries of origin, and asked the Administrator to report in 1990 on steps taken. The Council recommended that the Administrator make efforts towards increasing the representation of women and older volunteers. It stressed the need for adequate and improved pre-assignment preparation for all volunteers, cross-cultural orientation, language training, precise job descriptions and increased attention to matching the volunteer's skills with the assignment.

Also on 1 July,⁽⁹⁾ the Council decided that, with effect from 1988, project budgets should be charged on a pro forma basis $2,500 per year per serving volunteer to cover the balance of external costs that could not be met from SVF. It also decided that 85 per cent annually of income accruing to SVF, from voluntary general contributions and interest income, be utilized to meet the balance of external costs which were not covered by the $2,500 charge to project budgets. It further decided that annually the remaining 15 per cent of the income of SVF could be utilized in support of activities such as pilot and experimental projects of UNV and PDP/Youth Programmes, the cost of PDP specialists in the field, the orientation and briefing of volunteers, PDP specialists and government officials, and special recruitment campaigns. The Council invited member States to increase their contributions to SVF to enable the UNV programme to meet its commitment with the least possible augmentation of project costs, bearing in mind that 75 per cent of volunteers served in least developed, land-locked developing or island developing countries. It noted that the Administrator was empowered to receive Fund contributions for specific as well as general purposes and asked him to report to it, beginning in 1990, on the financial status of SVF and activities funded by it, as part of his biennial report on UNV.

In a 1 July decision on revised budget estimates for 1988-1989,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Council decided that, for the time being, provision would be made for up to 40 UNV Programme Officers to be financed from the UNV programme budget at an average annual cost of $25,000 per post, including an adequate level of support services. The Administrator was asked to present proposals on the criteria to be applied in establishing UNV Programme Officer posts in the context of his 1990-1991 biennial budget estimates. The Council approved a revised core budget for the UNV programme amounting to $16 million for 1988-1989, chargeable to the biennial budget of UNDP, a level intended to provide headquarters and field-level support to 1,000 serving volunteers. It authorized the Administrator to supplement the core budget by an additional annual charge to UNDP general resources of $3,500 per serving volunteer over the established base of 1,000, as of 31 December of the previous year, which could be used for additional staffing units at a rate of one unit per 70 additional serving volunteers. He was to report on the exercise of those authorities in the context of the biennial budget,

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1988,⁽⁴⁾ the Administrator said that there had been a rapid expansion of TCDC activities. Estimated expenditures for such activities from IPF funds for 1987 and 1988 were $104.9 million compared to $55.7 million for 1985-1986. That amounted to 7.3 per cent of total IPFs available to all developing countries and territories in 1987-1988 as opposed to 5.3 per cent in 1985-1986. Expenditures for regional and inter-regional and global IPFs were $83 million and $15.4 million or 37 and 25 per cent, respectively, of IPF funds available for those programmes. Country programme IPF expenditures for 1987-1988 of $6.5 million represented 1.4 per cent of IPF spending.

The Information Referral System (INRES)-South data base continued to improve, with 700 new institutions registered during the year, bringing their number to almost 4,000. The number of enquiries responded to by INRES-South during 1988 exceeded 100 per month. The addition of a microcomputer-based data entry and retrieval system made it possible for the data base to be distributed to users equipped with similar microcomputers.

The Special Unit for TCDC, which facilitated the exchange of qualified experts between developing countries, assisted TCDC programming in Egypt and Pakistan and with the Latin American Economic System during 1988. Over 500 new TCDC projects emerged from those exercises.

TCDC financing

In response to a Governing Council decision of 19 February,⁽¹¹⁾ the Administrator submitted in April a report on strengthening the capacity of UNDP to promote and support TCDC, including its financing.⁽¹²⁾ The report outlined the status of TCDC in UNDP's programme policies and procedures, as well as the role of TCDC in programmes and projects being assisted from country, regional, interregional and global IPFs. The status and functions of the Special Unit for TCDC were reviewed, together with the use of SPR for promoting TCDC, especially through TCDC programming. Constraints to the fuller utilization of TCDC modalities were highlighted and some remedial measures proposed.

In response to a 1987 request of the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC,⁽¹³⁾ the Administrator submitted a report⁽¹⁴⁾ summarizing the views of the United Nations development system on a 1985 report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)⁽¹⁵⁾ on the implementation of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action on TCDC⁽¹⁶⁾ and the comments of ACC⁽¹⁵⁾. The Administrator's report highlighted the progress made and difficulties encountered in implementing the JIU recommendations. It was noted that further information on the implementation of those recommendations would be obtained in preparation for the 1989 session of the High-level Committee. That information would be presented to the Council along with the decisions of the Committee.

On 1 July,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council asked the Administrator to intensify measures to comply with the General Assembly's 1987 request⁽¹⁸⁾ that steps be taken to enable each developing country to have the choice of executing each technical co-operation project, totally or in part, within the framework of TCDC or according to the traditional method of technical assistance. The Council took note of the Administrator's efforts to assist the Special Unit for TCDC in its staffing constraints, and urged him to present proposals and recommendations to strengthen the Unit in the light of its growing responsibilities in the context of his review of the overall staffing needs of UNDP for the 1990-1991 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 43/190, the General Assembly reaffirmed the role of TCDC in the socio-economic development of developing countries and in agricultural development in particular. It called on developing countries, in the context of their primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves, to place greater emphasis on technical co-operation in food and agriculture and to strengthen and improve the mechanisms for such co-operation at the national, subregional and regional levels, especially their national focal points, so as to facilitate policy co-ordination and exchange of experience. Developed countries and organizations of the United Nations system were urged to provide financial and technical assistance for TCDC in food and agriculture, including through participation in tripartite co-operative agreements and other arrangements. The Assembly recommended that United Nations organizations and other international development and financing institutions, within their respective spheres of competence, give priority in their programmes of work to TCDC in food and agriculture.

UN Capital Development Fund

In his annual report for 1988,⁽¹⁾ the Administrator said that the United Nations Capital Development Fund, which provides capital assistance for small-scale investment projects, primarily in LDCs, received pledges for 1988 of $36 million. New project commitments approved by the Fund from its general resources grew to about $74 million. The Administrator noted, however, that the increased level of project activities could not be maintained without an increase in contributions. Of the 245 UNCDF-financed projects in progress at the end of 1988, 114 benefited from technical assistance financed by UNDP, an indication of the complementarity which continued to characterize UNCDF relations with other sources of financing.

On 1 July,⁽²⁾ the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to review the staffing arrangements of UNCDF in relation to its current and future work-load and to make proposals in 1989 within the framework of the 1990-1991 budget proposal.

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

Countries facing severe economic difficulties and those requiring aid for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development continued to receive special assistance from the United Nations system during 1988. Several countries required assistance in the aftermath of natural or man-made disasters.

During the year, the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 was carried out. In November, the General Assembly adopted the conclusions of the mid-term review and appraisal and decided to conduct a final review and appraisal in 1991 (resolution 43/27).

In December, the Assembly urgently appealed to all international organizations to Increase assistance in response to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of Benin, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Madagascar and Vanuatu (43/211), all of which were facing special economic and financial difficulties. The Assembly also requested continued assistance for Chad (43/205) and Somalia (43/206).

The United Nations system, particularly the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, continued to assist countries stricken by disasters. The Assembly, in October, requested the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to assist Bangladesh to strengthen its capacity to assess, predict, prevent and mitigate natural disasters (43/9). Also in October, States were called on to assist Jamaica following hurricane Gilbert in September (43/7) and to respond urgently to the Sudan's needs following torrential rain and floods in August (43/8). The Assembly also urged States to contribute generously to relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Panama and other countries affected by hurricane Joan which struck in October (43/17).

In February (resolution 1988/2) and May (1988/3), the Economic and Social Council called on the international community to support locust and grasshopper control activities undertaken by African countries; that request was echoed by the Assembly in December (resolution 43/203).

Both the Assembly and the Council (resolutions 43/207 and 1988/50, respectively) requested continued assistance for Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts. In July, the Council also urged Member States to contribute to the United Nations effort to assist the people of Afghanistan (1988/52), while the Assembly, in December, called for assistance to Mozambique (43/208).

Economic assistance

In 1988, the United Nations continued to provide special economic assistance to countries with severe economic problems affecting their development efforts. Some programmes were designed to support national reconstruction efforts after natural or man-made disasters, while others aimed to help overcome obstacles to national development posed by weak infrastructure. Some countries were land-locked or were small, island developing countries; a number of countries had been classified by the General Assembly as least developed.

The mid-term review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD) was carried out in 1988.

Critical economic situation in Africa

In accordance with a 1986 request of the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in August 1988,⁽²⁾ prepared in the context of the mid-term review and appraisal of UNPAAERD, adopted by the Assembly in 1986.⁽³⁾

The report, which built on the Secretary-General's report on the critical economic situation in Africa presented to the Assembly in 1987,⁽⁴⁾ noted that the mid-term review and appraisal was taking place against a backdrop of a continuing deterioration in Africa's economic situation. Economic performance during 1986-1988 was generally disappointing. The gross domestic product (GDP) of the region rose by 1 per cent in 1986 and 0.8 per cent in 1987; however, per capita income fell by 2 and 2.2 per cent in those years. The report, following the major themes of UNPAAERD, reviewed actions taken by African Governments, the international community and the United Nations system. It assessed the economic situation in Africa and made recommendations for further national, subregional, regional and international actions to accelerate UNPAAERD's implementation.

With regard to policy reforms, the report stated that African countries should continue to pursue policies aimed at accelerating recovery and improving their economic performance. Particular attention needed to be given to domestic economic management, effective mobilization and utilization of domestic resources, rationalization of public investment policies, development and utilization of human resources, development and implementation of population policies, protection of the environment, improvement of international competitiveness and diversification of production. Attention should also be given to developing the food and agricultural sector and agro-related industries, to the fight against pests, drought and desertification, and to other sectoral priorities identified in UNPAAERD. Efforts were needed to mitigate the adverse socio-economic effects of adjustment measures and to ensure that short-term actions were compatible with medium- and long-term structural transformation. While primarily the responsibility of African Governments, bilateral partners, multilateral financial institutions and the United Nations system had an indispensable role to play in supporting a framework of policy reforms and development objectives consistent with long-term development strategies. Africa's bilateral and multilateral partners needed to co-ordinate their efforts and co-operate with Africa within an agreed framework; consultative groups and round-table meetings were suitable mechanisms for that. People's participation in the recovery and development process needed to be broadened and made more effective, particularly through promoting increased access to development resources and benefits, creating favourable conditions for decentralized decision-making and encouraging greater entrepreneurship at all levels.

The report noted that Africa's efforts at economic restructuring and policy reforms were severely limited by the external constraints posed by the problems of debt, commodities and capital resource flows. Financial flows to Africa, especially concessional flows, had to be increased and their quality improved. A number of possible actions were considered to be particularly relevant: donor countries should substantially increase their official development assistance (ODA) to Africa; co-financing funds pledged under the World Bank's Special Programme of Assistance for low-income, debt-distressed countries should be made available as soon as possible; agreed commitments to replenishments of the African Development Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and the International Development Association (IDA) should be fulfilled as soon as possible; measures should be implemented to enhance the co-ordination of external assistance; terms of existing multilateral loans should be adjusted to provide increased concessionality and more favourable grace and maturity periods; and efforts should be made to stimulate the flow of non-concessional resources. Integral to increased resource flows were continuing efforts by African countries to sustain policy reform measures, improve public expenditure programmes, ensure that scarce resources were put to effective use and improve the management of aid. Measures were also needed to improve the investment climate to encourage local and foreign private investment.

Possible measures to increase export earnings included: accelerating ongoing initiatives to make the Common Fund for Commodities operational; reducing domestic agriculture subsidies by industrialized countries on products competing with those of Africa; removing barriers to African exports; increasing the resources of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) compensatory financing facility; and establishing a generalized programme to stabilize export earnings of African countries. Also, efforts had to be made by African countries to diversify exports and initiate measures to bring the production and supply of their commodities into line with medium- and long-term demand.

With regard to the debt problem, the report recommended that consultations should be intensified with regard to official bilateral debt (broadening the conversion of bilateral ODA loans into grants embracing all ODA debts of African countries, consolidating non-concessional, officially guaranteed debt and debt-service payments into long-term loans at interest rates comparable to those on IDA credits, and allowing African countries to repay part of their bilateral official debts in local currencies to be used to finance development projects and programmes); multilateral debt (refinancing IMF purchases on concessional terms and implementing a concessional facility to repay outstanding World Bank debt by low-income African countries that were pursuing reform measures); and commercial bank loans (special debt relief measures in favour of African countries, including more flexible conditions, lower interest rates, longer maturity and grace periods, disposal of claims at discounts and debt-equity swaps). Both the public and private sectors in African countries would need to improve the management of their foreign debt, negotiate more effectively with foreign creditors, co-ordinate new borrowing and exercise more effective control over external borrowing.

The report also made recommendations with regard to economic co-operation and integration, South-South co-operation, mitigating the impact of destabilization, and peace and stability.

One addendum to the report⁽⁵⁾ comprised a statistical annex, while the other,⁽⁶⁾ prepared in response to Economic and Social Council decision 1988/161 of 27 July 1988, discussed investment of transnational corporations in Africa. The latter addendum addressed trends in foreign direct investment, opportunities for increased investment and impediments and policy measures, and suggested possible international actions.

CPC/ACC Joint Meetings. The 1988 Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (Geneva, 4 and 5 July)⁽⁷⁾ discussed the implementation of UNPAAERD. They had before them a background paper summarizing the actions of several organizations of the United Nations system in response to UNPAAERD and outlining policy issues relevant to its implementation. The Committees suggested initiatives for further action, including the need to strengthen subregional groupings in Africa, in view of their contributions to recovery and development in the region.

UNDP activities. In response to a 1987 Governing Council decision,⁽⁸⁾ the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) submitted a report on the role of UNDP in implementing UNPAAERD.⁽⁹⁾ It updated his 1987 report on the subject⁽¹⁰⁾ and incorporated the views and observations of the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole during the Governing Council's special session in February 1988.⁽¹¹⁾

The report described a number of consultative processes in which UNDP was involved and which were strengthening co-ordination for a more effective implementation of UNPAAERD. It also highlighted the most significant of UNDP's special initiatives to address areas of major concern to African countries in their implementation of UNPAAERD, particularly at the regional level. UNDP's contribution to the implementation of UNPAAERD's priorities had been largely through the machinery of its country programmes and the intercountry programme for Africa for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). During the fourth cycle, indicative planning figure (IPF) resources totalling $1.21 billion had been allocated, under country and intercountry programmes, to projects and programmes in sub-Saharan Africa, representing an increase of $240 million or 24.7 per cent over the third (1982-1986) cycle. Of the total IPF resources allocated, over $1 billion was for the implementation of 42 country programmes. Cost-sharing budgets for Africa had also increased and the trend was expected to continue.

The report also described UNDP's leading role and activities in aid co-ordination and resource mobilization for African countries, particularly through the round-table process, and reviewed developments with respect to national technical co-operation assessments and programmes. It concluded by summarizing action taken by UNDP, in the context of UNPAAERD, in four specific areas: the private sector; economic and technical co-operation among developing countries; the promotion of women; and co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

On 19 February,⁽¹²⁾ the Governing Council requested the Administrator to submit proposals for supplementary staffing and related costs in response to emergency and medium- and long-term development requirements in Africa. In response to that request, the Administrator submitted a report⁽¹³⁾ in which he proposed expanding UNDP's capacity to cope with emergency operations in Africa, the annual cost of which would be $7.8 million. That represented a 5 per cent increase in UNDP's core budget and a 16 per cent increase in its Africa operations budget.

On 1 July,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Governing Council welcomed the approval of all the fourth-cycle country programmes and the intercountry programmes which reflected the priorities contained in UNPAAERD and called on the Administrator, in concert with the recipient countries, to intensify efforts to speed up programme delivery in Africa. It requested the Administrator, in consultation with relevant United Nations organs and bodies, recipient countries and intergovernmental organizations, to do his utmost to speed up the approval process for projects submitted by those organizations so as to support subregional economic integration efforts in Africa. He was also requested to continue his efforts to mobilize additional resources and urged to identify more concrete and innovative approaches and actions in support of UNPAAERD and to consult with African Governments in formulating them. The Council also urged UNDP to continue to strengthen its ties with NGOs and ensure their greater involvement in the implementation of UNDP-sponsored programmes. The Administrator was urged to support the implementation of the United Nations Plan of Action to Combat Desertification⁽¹⁵⁾ and to support emergency activities against locusts. He was also requested to ensure continued support for actions of the United Nations Steering Committee for the implementation of UNPAAERD, to ensure the involvement of women in UNDP programmes and projects related to UNPAAERD's priority areas and to report to the Council in 1989.

UNCTAD action. In an August 1988 progress report⁽¹⁶⁾ to the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on UNPAAERD's implementation, the UNCTAD secretariat stated that the UNCTAD contribution involved three main strands:

ongoing programmes having elements of particular relevance to African countries and to UNPAAERD priorities, relating particularly to programmes on trade in commodities, structural adjustment, debt and resource flows, intra-African trade, South-South co-operation and trade with socialist countries, technology transfer, transportation, and the Special Programme for Least Developed, Land-locked and Island Developing Countries; technical co-operation activities; and organization of and participation in inter-agency meetings, regional/subregional or country seminars and other forums implementing UNPAAERD or having similar goals.

Also in August,⁽¹⁷⁾ the secretariat reported on the interaction between the international economic environment and the efforts of African countries in implementing UNPAAERD. It noted that the external economic environment since the adoption of UNPAAERD had not been conducive to African development efforts and suggested a number of actions and initiatives that could be expanded and acted on in order to support African countries' efforts towards economic recovery and development. It noted that the international community could contribute to UNPAAERD's implementation by strengthening its co-operation with African countries in ways that would support economic growth and recovery.

On 5 October,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Trade and Development Board adopted a set of agreed conclusions regarding UNCTAD's contribution to UNPAAERD and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take them fully into account in implementing UNPAAERD; it supported his efforts to mobilize resources to enable UNCTAD to play its role in implementing UNPAAERD in the remaining two years. The Board called on States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to contribute resources to support the UNCTAD secretariat's activities in implementing UNPAAERD.

Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole. In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly on the Review and Appraisal of UNPAAERD met in New York from 15 to 23 September 1988.⁽²⁰⁾ Arrangements for the Ad Hoc Committee's meetings were outlined in a resolution and two decisions of the Economic and Social Council (see below). The Council had had before it a note by the Secretary-General,⁽²¹⁾ outlining some considerations with regard to possible documentation for the Ad Hoc Committee. The Committee established two working groups which held informal meetings, one on the critical economic situation in Africa and the problems and constraints facing Africa's development efforts, and the other on the response of the international community, including the United Nations system, and its commitment to support and complement Africa's efforts. The Committee recommended a draft resolution on the mid-term review and appraisal to the General Assembly for adoption (see below).

ANNEX

Mid-term review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and recommendations for the acceleration of its implementation

I. Introduction

1. The United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, which was adopted by the General Assembly in response to the critical economic situation in Africa, is based on mutual commitment and co-operation between Africa and the international community.

2. In the Programme of Action, Africa committed itself to launch long-term programmes for self-sustaining socio-economic development and growth. The international community committed itself to assisting Africa in achieving this objective.

3. The African countries committed themselves to giving priority attention to necessary economic reform as mentioned in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990 adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985, as a basis for broad-based, sustained economic development; the rehabilitation and development of agriculture; other sectors supportive of agriculture; measures to combat drought and desertification; and the efficient development and utilization of human resources.

4. The international community recognized that the economic recovery and development efforts of African countries must be supplemented by complementary action on its part through intensified co-operation and substantially increased support. It also realized that lasting solutions to the serious exogenous constraints, over which Africa has no control, will have to be found, since their persistence will impede the efforts of the African countries. It therefore committed itself to making every effort to provide sufficient resources to support and supplement the African development effort. The international community further appreciated that Africa's efforts would be greatly facilitated if flows of external resources were predictable and assured and if the quality and modality of external assistance and co-operation were improved. It also recognized that, to bring about an improvement in the external economic environment, the international community should address and examine the external factors that aggravate the African situation, especially in terms of trade and the need to deal urgently with commodity issues and alleviate Africa's debt burden. The Programme of Action equally emphasizes the importance for the international community to increase official development assistance to African countries and to improve its quality and effectiveness.

5. The Programme of Action provides an important framework for co-operation between Africa and the international community, and all parties wish to reaffirm their commitment to the Programme of Action. The continuing gravity of the economic situation in Africa requires that all partners take urgent and decisive actions to accelerate and ensure the effective implementation of the Programme of Action during its remaining period.

6. In the Programme of Action, the international community recognized the importance to African economics development of genuine peace and security, as well as of the strengthening of international co-operation.

7. The review of measures taken to implement the Programme of Action demonstrates that most African countries have adopted significant policy reforms to improve the overall management of their economies. The determination with which African countries are pursuing and strengthening these reforms is courageous and commendable, particularly since in many countries such measures involve severe social costs and political risks. Many countries have also faced continuing climatic problems and natural calamities. The political will demonstrated by African countries and the commendable reform and policy reorientation measures that have been put in place should be sustained. Appropriate reforms should be embarked upon by those countries that have not yet initiated the process. The Governments of African countries should also play a key role in the process of co-ordination of external assistance.

8. For its part, the international community has taken important initiatives in support of the African efforts, through the Special Programme of Assistance of the World Bank, the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility of the International Monetary Fund and new bilateral aid commitments. Resource commitments to Africa for the years 1988-1990 will increase and disbursements will assist countries implementing reforms. Furthermore, the international community has declared its intention to continue to support the efforts of African Governments to implement the Programme of Action.

9. The reform and restructuring that are being undertaken by African countries and the ongoing initiatives taken by the international community thus constitute an important beginning. However, the overall performance of the African economies remains unsatisfactory. Despite earnest efforts to carry out adjustments in their national economic policies, most African countries have found little reprieve from the harsh impact of climatic conditions and an unfavourable external economic environment. Internal constraints, and the adverse impact of exogenous factors to which African economies are highly susceptible, are impeding the reform process and are severely hampering African development.

10. Dealing with the African crisis is a priority concern for the international community and the United Nations. It is therefore a matter of urgency that the promising actions that have been taken by all parties concerned to implement the Programme of Action should be strengthened and accelerated. Sustained and unfaltering efforts made by African countries must be matched by substantial and urgent efforts by the international community to provide support to them at the required levels and to create an international environment favourable to the process of reform and restructuring.

II. Assessment of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

A. Response of African countries

11. The Programme of Action was designed and adopted to provide an important framework for co-operation between Africa and the international community in fostering economic recovery and development on the African continent. The continuing gravity of the economic situation in Africa requires that all partners take urgent and decisive actions to accelerate and ensure the effective implementation of the Programme of Action during its remaining term.

1. Agricultural development

12. Agriculture, on which more than 75 per cent of Africa's people depend for their livelihood, has been a major area of sectoral reform. More countries have given higher priority to channelling resources to agriculture, with the particular aim of making progress towards food security and achieving increased agricultural production. As regards export crops, almost all countries have implemented price incentive measures, and some have adopted measures to liberalize marketing policies, to increase the share of the export value retained by farmers and to bring prices into line with world market levels. A large number of African countries have instituted a wide range of measures to mitigate food emergencies. Approximately half the countries in the region now have various types of national emergency preparedness mechanisms, about eighteen countries have early warning systems and many have set up national food security arrangements.

13. The efforts of African countries to ensure food self-sufficiency and to increase their exports have been hindered, among other things, by the following factors:

(a) The recurrence and persistence of such phenomena as drought, locust infestation and floods;

(b) The decline of international commodity prices at a time when African Governments raised prices for producers;

(c) Competition from food exports that benefit from all kinds of direct or indirect support measures;

(d) The inflow of lower-priced agricultural products concurrently with the adoption by many African Governments of import liberalization policies.

2. Other sectors in support of agriculture

14. To enhance agricultural development, attention has been given to the rehabilitation and maintenance of infrastructure that supports agriculture. In particular, emphasis has been placed on the production of agricultural tools, small-scale irrigation equipment, fertilizer, pesticides and other chemicals. Within the general constraint of scarce foreign exchange, efforts have been made to modernize, rehabilitate and expand food-processing and other agro-based industries. Inadequate transportation facilities also remain a critical bottle-neck in many countries. Similarly, the agro-based manufacturing sector has stagnated or grown only marginally.

3. Drought and desertification

15. African countries are determined to reduce the effects of drought and desertification. The measures taken to that effect include the development of water sources, the building of small dams and the development of renewable sources of energy to replace fuelwood. Despite cyclones, floods and other calamities, the countries affected are resolutely determined to pursue activities to combat drought and desertification. Overall, the African countries are determined to fight against every new threat to their environment, including the dumping of industrial or toxic waste in the continent.

4. Human resources

16. African Governments have always considered that human resources development and planning are key to the economic recovery and development of the continent and that the efficient utilization of these resources should become a major objective of their national policies. Since the adoption of the Programme of Action, the majority of African countries have put particular emphasis on formulating national literacy and vocational training programmes, elaborating information systems, setting up project appraisal machinery and, in certain cases, improving educational systems. Adapting training and educational systems to the development objectives of the Programme of Action is difficult, among other reasons, because of budgetary constraints.

17. African countries have also adopted measures to promote the effective participation of the population in the development process. In so doing, they have put particular emphasis on the role of African women, not only as beneficiaries but also as agents of development. However, as underlined in the Khartoum Declaration, adopted on 8 March 1988 by the International Conference on the Human Dimension of Africa's Economic Recovery and Development,^b internal and external constraints may counter the efforts undertaken by Africa to fully develop its human resources, especially in the high-priority fields of health and education.

18. Particular attention has been paid by some African countries to their population policies on the basis of the Kilimanjaro Programme of Action for African Population and Self-Reliant Development, adopted by the Second African Population Conference and endorsed by the Economic Commission for Africa in 1984. A growing number of countries are putting in place national policies designed to harmonize population growth with economic and environmental capacities, and formulating specific policies and action plans to address population issues in a long-run development perspective. Effective implementation of these policies, however, still faces immense problems, which include a lack of resources, in particular trained personnel, and a low level of public support. Future efforts must focus on overcoming these problems.

5. Policy reforms

19. Since the adoption of the Programme of Action, most African countries have adopted significant policy reforms to improve the overall management of their economies. About thirty countries are undertaking stabilization or structural adjustment programmes in conjunction with the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. These efforts are intended to improve economic performance, bring about accelerated recovery within the context of the Programme of Action and lay the foundation for self-sustaining growth and development.

20. The determination with which most African countries are pursuing and strengthening economic policy reforms is courageous and commendable, particularly since in many countries such measures involve social costs and political risks. However, reforms have not been adopted by all Governments; nor are they being pursued with equal vigour in all countries. Policy reform takes time to have a demonstrable impact on economic performance. Available data on the achievement of structural adjustment programmes, while incomplete, suggest that economic reform is beginning to make a positive impact in a number of countries. Nevertheless, in some other countries the impact remains to be fully felt, and the overall economic situation in Africa remains critical. However, there is no doubt that improvement of the economic situation requires that appropriate reform policies and programmes be vigorously implemented and sustained, taking into account the need to improve them continuously.

21. Most African Governments have instituted policy reforms aimed at economic structural transformation and improvement of the overall management of their economies, especially in the following areas: (a) public investment management systems, institutions and practices; (b) public enterprises; (c) reform of public services to make them more oriented towards achieving national development goals; (d) lowering of budget deficits and reduction and redirection of public expenditure; (e) mobilization of domestic saving and increase in investment; (f) financial and debt management; (g) reduction and reversal, where possible, of foreign exchange leakage; (h) encouragement of the role of the productive private sector and market forces in the efficient allocation of resources; and (i) promotion of foreign trade in general and intra-African trade in particular.

22. Experience in the implementation of stabilization or structural adjustment programmes currently instituted has revealed substantial concerns to African Governments, bilateral donors, multilateral financial institutions and non-governmental organizations, notably:

(a) African Governments need to play the central role in the design and formulation of structural adjustment programmes, including the development of "policy framework papers";

(b) Projections of financial flows, including export earnings, have often been overly optimistic;

(c) The short-term adjustment or stabilization targets of structural adjustment programmes should be integrated with long-term development objectives;

(d) The importance attached to macro-economic indicators should not obscure the need to pay adequate attention to institutional, social and sectoral factors that are critical to the structural transformation of African economies. Supply responses are only partly tied to relative price levels. Market liberalization involves more than just the removal of controls. Strategies of sequencing, timing and complex institutional restructuring are critical to the success of market reform in Africa;

(e) To avoid straining the social, cultural and political framework and to be credible and sustainable, structural adjustment programmes must be designed so as to be sensitive to the internal conditions of the countries concerned. In implementing expenditure reductions as part of adjustment efforts, care should be taken to ensure that such reductions, especially those in basic health, nutrition, education and other social services are not made in areas where they would worsen the situation of the poorest and most vulnerable groups;

(f) Realignment of exchange rates and rises in producers' prices have not always generated the full expected benefits because of structural rigidities that continue to characterize the current stage of development of most African countries. In part this has occurred because African countries have not had the human and financial resources fully to address these rigidities.

23. In spite of all the measures taken, the overall performance of the economies of African countries remains unsatisfactory. Domestic structural problems and adverse exogenous developments, to which the African countries are highly susceptible, have complicated the reform process by restraining overall economic growth. In certain cases, weaknesses in the management and co-ordination of external assistance at the level of recipient countries and of bilateral and multilateral assistance agencies had led to delays in the disbursement and utilization of external resources already available.

24. Domestic impediments include the effects of recurrent drought and other natural calamities such as cyclones, floods and locust and grasshopper infestation in some areas, infrastructural and institutional deficiencies, marketing problems, low capacity for domestic resource mobilization, strong dependency of export income on a limited number of commodities, excessive dependence on imports of consumer goods and production inputs, human resources and population factors, refugee flows, shortage of skilled labour and armed conflicts. The external constraints include weak demand for African exports, low commodity prices, inadequate and stagnating foreign real resource flows, and a high debt and debt-servicing burden. Indeed, these constraints, coupled with natural calamities, continue to be major obstacles to economic recovery and development in the region.

25. In southern Africa, the situation continues to be adversely affected by the policies of political and economic destabilization and acts of aggression pursued by the South African régime against the front-line and neighbouring States. The violence inherent in the system of apartheid has resulted in loss of human lives, the destruction of social and economic infrastructures, the diversion of substantial resources and efforts away from economic development to defence spending, the disruption of economic development and an increase in refugees and displaced persons throughout the region. The United Nations has estimated that losses for the member countries of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference for the period 1980-1986 amounted to 25 billion to 30 billion United States dollars. These factors have been the main reasons for the sharp decline of economic growth and have consequently undermined development efforts in the region, including the implementation of the Programme of Action.

6. Implementation at the regional and subregional levels

26. At the regional and subregional levels, a number of concrete actions have been taken to promote recovery and development, in particular, as related to the formulation and implementation of joint programmes in the key economic sectors and the strengthening of mechanisms for these efforts. The search for agreements between neighbouring countries on food supplies aimed at ensuring a better complementarity between surplus and deficit zones has progressed. Other important actions have included the establishment of regional networks for crop protection and of mechanisms for co-operation among national early warning systems. In 1987 and 1988, a number of key intra-African conferences were convened to review and promote the implementation of the Programme of Action. The major constraints on subregional and regional co-operation have been associated with infrastructural bottle-necks and scarce external financial support to date.

B. Response of the international community

1. Response of other countries

(a) Resource flows

27. In support of the goals of the Programme of Action, the international community has made commitments to provide an increased level of financial assistance to African countries, both bilaterally and multilaterally. Net resource flows to Africa increased from 17.9 billion dollars in 1985 to 19.9 billion dollars in 1986 and 22.9 billion dollars in 1987 in nominal terms. However, measured in real terms, resource flows were lower in 1986 and 1987 than in 1985.

28. Official development assistance has been a steady and vital source of funding for Africa, accounting for over 73 per cent of net resource flows to the region. Total bilateral disbursements of development assistance to African countries remained relatively constant in real terms in 1986 and 1987. Many donors made substantial increases in their bilateral assistance to African countries. Official development assistance reported by the member countries of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and the multilateral institutions increased in current dollars. In sub-Saharan Africa, it rose from 11.7 billion dollars in 1986 to 13.3 billion dollars in 1987, but that reflects no increase when measured at 1986 prices and exchange rates. According to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, export credits to sub-Saharan Africa are estimated to have fallen from 0.8 million dollars in 1985 to 0.4 million dollars in 1986 and to 0 in 1987. The limited data available suggest that other private commercial flows remained unchanged. Member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance continued their economic assistance to Africa.

29. The multilateral institutions, with the support of bilateral donors, are playing an important role in international efforts to increase financial flows to Africa. Disbursement from the International Development Association rose from 0.9 billion dollars in fiscal year 1985 to 1.2 billion dollars in 1986 and 1.6 billion dollars in 1987. The World Bank initiated a Special Programme of Assistance for the low-income heavily indebted African countries that combines additional disbursement from the International Development Association with additional co-financing by bilateral donors. It is estimated that the programme will increase resource flows to sub-Saharan Africa by about 3 billion dollars over the period 1988-1990. In 1986 and 1987, there was a substantial net transfer of resources from Africa to the International Monetary Fund. In response to the economic situation in African countries, the Fund undertook several initiatives. In particular, its members reached agreement on an Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility that will increase the concessional resources available to low-income countries by 6 billion special drawing rights over the period 1988-1990. The African Development Bank reached agreement on a trebling of its authorized capital and on a 50-per-cent increase in the African Development Fund. That has enabled it to increase commitments from 2 billion dollars in 1984-1985 to 3.8 billion dollars in 1986-1987. Net disbursements by the International Fund for Agricultural Development increased from 50 million dollars in 1983 to 85 million dollars in 1986. Those new multilateral flows, supported by bilateral donors, constitute a major new commitment of resources to Africa in support of the continent's efforts to achieve sustainable and growth-oriented development. Many parties, in particular the African countries, have expressed dissatisfaction with the methods by which conditionality for adjustment are developed. Efforts are under way to increase the participation of all parties to resolve those differences and such efforts should be reinforced.

30. The contribution of resources has been largely undermined by the growth in debt-service obligations and the decrease in export earnings, resulting in a marked deterioration of the external financial position of many African countries. Various estimates have been made of Africa's external resource requirements. The Advisory Group on Financial Flows to Africa, which, contrary to its mandate, considered the needs of only sub-Saharan Africa excluding Nigeria, estimated the requirements to be at least 5 billion dollars per annum above their level in 1986-1987. Other estimates differ from that, depending on the country coverage, assumptions and methodology used, but in general suggest that assistance flows should be increased in support of the Programme of Action. Increased flows should be forthcoming within the period of the Programme of Action when disbursements from new multilateral initiatives and bilateral commitments are fully implemented.

(b) Trade and commodities

31. In many parts of the developing world and in Africa in particular, the recent growth of the global economy has not yet resulted in a gathering of momentum in the development process. Most African countries have found it difficult to increase their export earnings, although those earnings are a critical factor in their economic recovery and development. Protectionism remains a constraint to efforts by African countries to expand their trade. Non-tariff measures against exports from African countries, some of which are applied progressively to processed commodities, are an impediment to the expansion of the region's exports. There remains scope for dismantling the non-tariff barriers that impede access by African countries to the markets of industrialized countries. The Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, agreed upon since the adoption of the Programme of Action, will provide an opportunity to address some of the difficulties that Africa faces in the area of international trade.

32. In spite of the recent improvement in some commodity prices, Africa's financial problems have been aggravated by the continuing decline of many commodity prices. Moreover, those prices continue to be at historically very low levels. This has been induced by a complex array of market forces, often beyond the control of African countries. A majority of these countries depend on no more than three export commodities for the bulk of their foreign exchange earnings, which serve as the principal source of external resources for development. Africa's total commodity earnings fell by 18 billion dollars in 1986 and in 1987 remained below their 1985 level. It was agreed in the Programme of Action to deal urgently with commodity issues in the framework of an overall approach taking into account the special interests of the African countries. The matter was discussed at the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. Changing global conditions have contributed to Africa's significant losses in foreign exchange from falling export earnings; this problem can be addressed only through a long-term and overall approach, including efforts to increase the capacity of African countries to process, market, distribute and transport non-traditional exports. Moreover, there has been an overall deterioration in the terms of trade of sub-Saharan African countries. Over the short and medium terms, a major sustained improvement in commodity prices is not expected. However, aid, debt-relief and direct foreign investment can only supplement trade in that respect.

33. Existing arrangements to provide compensatory financing for shortfalls in commodity earnings, such as the Stabex and Sysmin arrangements of the European Economic Community and the Compensatory Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund, have been important but insufficient in themselves to deal with the magnitude and nature of the difficulties that Africa faces in commodity export markets. The speedy activation of the Common Fund for Commodities, in particular, its Second Account, may help to overcome these difficulties. The new Compensatory and Contingency Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund will also be available to help to offset fluctuations in export earnings for those countries that are able to meet the conditions for its use.

(c) Debt

34. The external indebtedness of African countries has become one of the important factors constraining recovery and development in the continent, since debt servicing draws substantially on scarce financial resources that otherwise could be used for development purposes in the region. Debt service obligations were equivalent to 29 per cent of export earnings in 1985, 43 per cent in 1986 and 39 per cent in 1987. Debt service payments in these years were equivalent to 29 per cent, 29 per cent and 25 per cent of export earnings respectively.

35. The economic situation of many of the countries of the region and their low levels of income make the debt burden particularly heavy. Most outstanding debt is to official bilateral and multilateral agencies. These agencies have responded with a number of initiatives to lighten the debt burden, particularly of the low-income African countries. Efforts have also been initiated to address the debt problems of African middle-income countries. The economic recovery and development of Africa calls for continued efforts in this area.

36. A number of bilateral donors have converted official development assistance loans to some African countries into grants—a process that began in 1978. Conversions to date affect only one sixth of Africa's official development assistance debt but cover more than half of that of the least developed countries of the region. Commitments have been made by a number of donors to make further conversions, and proposals have been made to further reduce the stock of debt. Progress has been made in providing lengthened grace and maturity periods in rescheduling in the Paris Club. Rescheduling does not reduce the stock of debt. Proposals are under discussion to provide additional relief. African countries have expressed three concerns regarding the process of rescheduling: the lack of a medium-term and long-term perspective; rescheduling terms that are not adapted to debtors' capacity to pay; and the excessive duration of the rescheduling process itself.

37. Africa's continuing search for solutions to the problems of its external indebtedness prompted African Governments to hold an extraordinary summit meeting at Addis Ababa from 30 November to 1 December 1987 devoted to Africa's external debt. This meeting resulted in the adoption of Africa's common position on external indebtedness. The economic summit meeting of the seven largest industrialized countries, held at Toronto from 19 to 21 June 1988,^c addressed Africa's debt and development problems. The summit achieved consensus on rescheduling official debt of the poorest developing countries that are undertaking internationally approved adjustment programmes, allowing official creditors to choose among several options. The likely overall impact of these measures is difficult to quantify because it is not clear yet what the total amount of relief would be. It is the shared responsibility of all parties concerned to develop lasting and durable solutions to the problems of Africa's external indebtedness.

(d) Quality and modalities of external assistance

38. Some progress has been made in improving the quality and modalities of external assistance, notably by improving the quality of bilateral flows; increasing the pace of disbursement; increasing the concessional-ity of assistance; and strengthening the co-ordination of donor programmes, notably through the expansion and improvement of consultative groups and United Nations Development Programme round-table meetings and through the introduction of "policy framework papers". Nevertheless, considerable scope remains for future improvement, particularly in relation to quick disbursement, wherever appropriate.

(e) Structural adjustment programmes

39. An important consideration relates to the developmental framework within which external assistance is provided. The implementation of structural adjustment programmes has given rise to general concerns, such as human, social and political consequences, as well as long-term financing needs for Africa's economic recovery and development efforts. These concerns have resulted in a dialogue on the nature and content of adjustment programmes. This has led to greater understanding and increased awareness of the need to ensure that such programmes form an integral part of a longer-term strategy for economic growth, incorporate a human dimension and do not have an adverse impact on vulnerable groups and would take due account of the specific economic situation and national development priorities of each country. This is now being reflected in actions by African Governments and donor agencies.

40. The efforts of the African countries to achieve sustained growth and development through structural reform are seriously constrained by the adverse external environment as it relates to the situation in Africa, in particular, with respect to export earnings, the debt service burden and concessional finance.

2. Response of the United Nations system

41. The organizations of the United Nations system were invited to attach high priority to Africa in their global operations, taking into account the priorities of the Programme of Action. These organizations are now devoting more than 35 per cent of their resources to Africa, with expenditures amounting to more than 1 billion dollars annually.

42. The Secretary-General has taken important actions to sensitize the international community to the serious economic situation in Africa, to ensure a co-ordinated response by the United Nations system to the implementation of the Programme of Action and to monitor and report on the implementation of the Programme of Action. Although the contributions of the organizations of the United Nations system were diversified and useful, they were, however, insufficient. In view of the deterioration in Africa's financial situation after the Programme of Action was adopted, the Secretary-General appointed a high-level *Advisory Group on Financial Flows to Africa: its report was issued in February 1988. The Secretary-General also established a United Nations Steering Committee with the participation of all relevant bodies of the United Nations to co-ordinate and monitor their response to the Programme of Action. In addition, an inter-agency task force, which acts as the operational arm of the Steering Committee, has been established under the chairmanship of the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa.

3. South-South co-operation

43. Progress in co-operation between African countries and other developing countries has been registered in a number of areas, such as trade, finance, technology and technical assistance. Some countries have contributed through bilateral assistance and programmes of technical co-operation among developing countries. In the field of trade, the first round of negotiations of the global system of trade preferences among developing countries was completed at the ministerial meeting on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries of the Group of Seventy-seven held at Belgrade from 11 to 13 April 1988. The participants in the global system signed a contractual document that seeks to facilitate their trade relations. The potential for South-South co-operation is considerable, and every effort should be made by the international community to support the expansion and intensification of such co-operation.

4. Non-governmental organizations

44. Most non-governmental organizations, both African and non-African, are contributing to Africa's economic recovery and development through effective programmes at the grass-roots level. Significant resources are mobilized by non-governmental organizations, from both the general public and official aid institutions, for economic and social projects and programmes as well as for humanitarian activities. These efforts support the goals of the Programme of Action and deserve to be commended. One development has been the emergence and growing presence of the community of indigenous African non-governmental organizations as important actors in Africa's development effort. They are engaging in closer dialogue with African Governments, official development agencies and non-African non-governmental organizations in order further to clarify and define their own role in Africa's recovery and development. They are contributing their own experience to the implementation of development policies, especially those oriented towards the poorest groups.

III. Measures for accelerating the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

A. Role of the African countries

1. Agricultural development

45. In the course of implementing the Programme of Action, African countries should continue to concentrate their efforts on agriculture and its supporting sectors, the rehabilitation and development of agro-industries, the light against drought, desertification and pests, and on the other sectoral priorities identified in the Programme.

46. It is important that development programmes give due recognition to the factors critical to increased agricultural production. These factors include investment in appropriate technology, research and development and agricultural inputs. African countries should intensify their efforts to establish early warning systems and national food security arrangements, diversify exports, improve export performance and maintain the incomes of farmers at appropriate levels.

47. The traditional role of women as producers of a significant proportion of food should be protected and strengthened when new agricultural production methods are introduced. More attention must be given to ensure that women have access to agricultural extension services, credit, land titles and, not least, new technologies.

2. Other sectors in support of agriculture

48. Increased attention and financial resources should be directed to the rehabilitation and maintenance of productive infrastructures in the sectors that support agriculture, including transport and communications. Emphasis should continue to be placed on the production of agricultural tools, small-scale irrigation equipment, spare parts, fertilizers, pesticides and other chemicals. Greater attention should be given to rehabilitating, modernizing and expanding food-processing and other agro-based industries, by mobilizing the resources needed as well as providing training and credit in rural areas and promoting entrepreneurial development programmes.

3. Drought and desertification

49. The environment and natural resources should become important considerations in development co-operation. Environmental activities must go hand in hand with efforts to enhance economic growth and combat poverty, as there is a clear link between economic well-being and the quality of the environment. Better management of the natural resource base is a major factor in moving towards sustainable development. Action should be intensified to improve the economic situation and combat more effectively environmental degradation arising, in particular, from drought, desertification, deforestation, floods, locust and grasshopper infestation and the dumping of toxic and industrial wastes.

4. Human resources

50. Since many internal constraints are linked to weaknesses in education, training and management systems and since human resources play a key role in the long-term development prospects of the continent, the effective development and utilization of human resources of the region must be made a major objective of national policy. In consequence, the African countries should place greater emphasis on population policies and programmes, including the Kilimanjaro Programme of Action.

51. The participation of people in the recovery and development process should continue to be broadened and made more effective, particularly through promoting increased access to development resources and benefits, creating favourable conditions for decentralized decision-making, encouraging greater entrepreneurship at all levels and promoting individual initiative and private enterprise.

52. African countries and their development partners should give particular importance to human resources development, especially by integrating the human dimension in the design and implementation of structural adjustment programmes. As stated in the Programme of Action, the role and contribution of women in the development process are of crucial importance. However, women often remain at the periphery of economic systems and decision-making processes. There is thus an urgent need to strengthen the participation of women in all areas of the economy and at all levels of development planning and implementation. Moreover, African countries should allocate substantial resources to make it possible for women to participate more fully as active economic agents in development programmes, especially in rural areas.

5. Policy reforms

53. African countries should continue to pursue the balanced development of all sectors of their economy. Particular attention should be given to domestic economic management, the effective mobilization and utilization of domestic resources, in particular through the encouragement of savings, and action to contain or reverse capital flight with the support of the international community and to provide an environment conducive to direct investment. Special attention should be given to the rationalization of public investment policies, the development and effective implementation of appropriate human resources and population policies, industrial development, the improvement of international competitiveness and the diversification of production.

54. Structural adjustment programmes should be designed in such a way as to mitigate their adverse socio-economic effects, ensure that the human dimension is integrated in them, further improve the well-being of the poor and disadvantaged in African societies, notably through redirecting social and developmental expenditures, and make short-term stabilization and adjustment measures compatible with and built into long-term structural transformation.

55. Bearing in mind that they have the central role to play in the design and implementation of their adjustment programmes, African Governments, with the support of their development partners, should give particular attention to the following so that adjustment programmes are based on a realistic and pragmatic approach of the problems of each country:

(a) In designing economic structural adjustment programmes, the following should be taken into account:

- (i) The need for adjustment programmes to be realistic and consistent with projected financial resources and the external and internal environment;
- (ii) Harmonization of the programme with long-term objectives and strategies, with particular, continued emphasis on self-sustaining economic development and growth;

(iii) Provision of compensatory programmes to minimize the adverse effects of redeployment of labour and the social costs of adjustment to the poor;

(iv) Social infrastructure and human resource development, including environmental, cultural and political concerns;

(v) A pragmatic approach to the respective roles of the public and private sectors;

(b) Social indicators need to be developed to monitor the impact of these programmes on the population;

(c) African countries should increase their efforts in the search for a viable conceptual and practical framework for economic structural adjustment programmes in keeping with the long-term development objectives and strategies at the national, subregional and regional levels;

(d) It is essential that the process of reform be implemented as soon as possible by those countries that have not yet done so and sustained and supported by those that have already started it.

6. Trade

56. African countries need to make special efforts in order to make African products more competitive in international markets, and to adopt appropriate policies and reinforce mechanisms to expand and diversify their exports.

57. Decisions on diversification are primarily the responsibility of African countries. These decisions should take into account the agricultural, industrial and other development objectives. Horizontal and vertical diversification of their economies, as well as increased participation in the processing, marketing and distribution of their commodities are long-term development objectives towards which African countries need to make further efforts in the context of intensified international co-operation between producers and consumers.

58. Adequate structures should be established or improved in order to promote the transfer, adoption, adaptation and the application of appropriate technologies, the development of communication infrastructure and the improvement of marketing networks and thus form a solid base for reinforcing the efficiency of exports.

59. African Governments should enhance their participation in all major international trade negotiations, notably the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, so as to better achieve a reduction in tariff and non-tariff barriers that have a negative impact on their ability to export.

7. Economic co-operation and integration

60. For the effective implementation of the Programme of Action, African countries should intensify their efforts towards economic co-operation and integration in accordance with the objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980. Among the measures that should be taken are the following:

(a) Strengthening and rationalization of existing subregional groupings, the creation, as appropriate, of new ones and their effective utilization for co-ordinated planning and development at the subregional level;

(b) Implementation of measures for the co-ordination of economic and social policies subregionally, as well as for joint planning and development of multicountry projects in key economic sectors;

(c) Promotion of intra-African trade in primary and processed commodities;

(d) Promotion of domestic policies that encourage the movement of goods, skills and capital among the African countries.

8. Peace and stability

61. Every effort must be made to achieve political settlements of international and regional conflicts so that scarce resources can be directed towards economic recovery and development. In this context, African countries should, with the support of the international community, intensify their efforts to end the acts of aggression and destabilization of the apartheid régime in South Africa, which is the single most destructive form of conflict in the region.

B. Role of the international community

1. Role Of other countries

(a) Resource flows

62. Financial flows to Africa, in particular concessional flows, should be increased substantially, especially to sub-Saharan African countries, and provided on a continuous, predictable, assured and fast-disbursing basis, as appropriate. Such an increase in resources for Africa would be facilitated if all developed countries allocated 0.7 per cent of their gross domestic product to official development assistance.

63. Most resource flows to Africa will continue to be provided through official bilateral assistance and by multilateral institutions, but flows of private capital should also be encouraged. The following actions are particularly relevant:

(a) Donor countries, particularly those whose assistance to Africa has decreased in the past two years or is at a low level, should aim to increase their official development assistance to Africa in real terms. These resources should be provided on a sustained and fast-disbursing basis and directed to the priorities of recovery and development;

(b) Bilateral co-financing funds pledged under the World Bank's Special Programme of Assistance for low-income, debt-distressed countries should be made available as soon as possible, and donors should expedite the disbursement of the resources that they have agreed to provide for this purpose;

(c) The agreed commitments to an increase in the capital of the World Bank, to the fifth replenishment of the African Development Fund and to the eighth replenishment of the International Development Association should be fulfilled without delay. In addition, negotiations on the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development should be concluded promptly, and those on a ninth replenishment of the International Development Association should be undertaken as soon as possible;

(d) Efforts should be continued to improve the quality of bilateral flows, particularly through more rapid disbursement of assistance already pledged and increased concessionality, meeting the recurrent local costs of programmes and projects, using local equipment, indigenous competence and expertise and improving procedures, guidelines and formats for the procurement of equipment;

(e) The co-ordination of donor programmes, undertaken in close co-operation with the recipient countries, should be improved further. The important role of the consultative groups and round-table meetings in this regard should be enhanced.

(b) Trade and commodities

64. An increase in Africa's export earnings and a reduction in the adverse impact on African economies of year-to-year fluctuations in those earnings would both contribute to the attainment of sustained non-inflationary growth and assist African countries in their efforts to implement the Programme of Action. These improvements in export earnings would be facilitated by an international environment more favourable to African exports and by continued efforts to diversify exports.

65. Particular attention should be given to the following:

(a) The mid-term review of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations scheduled for December 1988 should give a new impulse to the negotiations in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, in which the concerns of African countries should be given particular attention. All countries involved in the Uruguay Round should endeavour to improve the international trading environment, particularly as it concerns African exports. This applies especially to measures affecting processed and non-traditional exports because these offer the greatest hope for Africa to increase and diversify its export base in the longer run. There is need for greater liberalization of trade in agricultural products, and special attention should be given to the provisions of existing régimes concerning trade in tropical products of interest to African countries. In this connection, the Uruguay Round should be used to develop improved discipline and rules, addressing the problems of market access, subsidies that directly or indirectly affect trade and the harmonization of health and sanitary standards;

(b) Ongoing initiatives to make the Common Fund for Commodities fully operational should be completed in the shortest possible time, bearing in mind that a number of developmental programmes have already been approved or considered by producers and consumers, for possible financing under its Second Account;

(c) Programmes for the stabilization of export earnings of African countries, along the lines of the Stabex and Sysmin, should be considered by other countries;

(d) The Compensatory and Contingency Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund should have an enhanced role in responding to Africa's short-term external contingency needs;

(e) Within the context of the Programme of Action, the Secretary-General of the United Nations should consult with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, other relevant organizations and interested Governments with a view to establishing a group of experts to undertake an in-depth assessment of the question of African commodities and the scope for export diversification.

(c) External debt

66. Many countries have taken measures to reduce the burden of Africa's external debt, and such action should be continued, in order to limit the burden that debt imposes on recovery, reform and development of the African countries. Debt rescheduling should be supplemented by other multilateral and bilateral measures. Every effort should be made by the international community to find lasting, durable and growth-oriented solutions that cover various categories of debt, various creditors and various debtor countries and that respond to Africa's development needs. Recognizing the major contribution that progress in this area would make to the success of the Programme of Action, ongoing initiatives, including those agreed upon at the economic summit meeting held at Toronto from 19 to 21 June 1988, should be pursued urgently, with the following being taken into account:

- (a) Official bilateral debt
 - (i) Non-concessional officially guaranteed debt and debt-service payments of low-income African countries should be rescheduled on more generous terms;
 - (ii) Creditor countries' efforts to write off or otherwise remove the burden of official development assistance loans, inter alia by repayment in local currencies, of low-income countries pursuing structural adjustment programmes, should be continued;
 - (iii) In addition, donor countries should increase the grant element in their future assistance to poorer African countries.
- (b) Multilateral debt
 - (i) Every effort should be made to ensure the speedy and full implementation of the initiatives of international financial institutions, especially the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility of the International Monetary Fund, in order to ensure that necessary concessional resource flows are available to low-income countries in Africa that are undertaking structural adjustment;
 - (ii) The proposal to establish a mechanism, financed by voluntary contributions, to alleviate, on a concessional basis, the outstanding World Bank debt of low-income countries that are pursuing reform measures should also be considered urgently.
- (i) Commercial loans and credits

Various new methods of reducing the commercial debt of developing countries have been developed. The application of these methods to ease the commercial debt of African countries should be promoted.

67. The common position of Africa on addressing the problem of the continent on external debt adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its third extraordinary session, held at Addis Ababa on 30 November and 1 December 1987, should be taken account of and seriously considered by the international community.

- (d) Supporting reform within a broad development framework

68. African countries have the responsibility for formulating and implementing the economic reforms that form part of the process of recovery and longer-term development. In supporting these reforms, Africa's international partners should keep in mind this imperative for longer-term economic and social development. In this context, the human dimension should be a central concern. Intensified efforts should be made by all parties to develop and use appropriate indicators to measure and monitor closely the improvement of conditions of human well-being as reforms proceed. Instruments should also be developed to provide early warning of deteriorating human conditions.

2. Economic co-operation and integration

69. Special efforts should be made by the international community to support ongoing efforts of African countries to strengthen co-operation and the rapid achievement of economic integration in the region. International assistance to national projects should be complemented by greater support for regional and subregional projects, particularly in the priority sectors,

3. Impact of destabilisation policies 4 South Africa

70. Recovery and development efforts in the countries of the southern African subregion continue to be frustrated by acts of aggression and destabilization by the South African regime. The international community as a whole should exert greater pressure on the apartheid régime to abolish its abhorrent policies and immediately stop its acts of destabilization and aggression in the region. In the absence of an end to these acts of destabilization, increased assistance should be given to the member countries of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in order to compensate for the costs of destabilization, to allow these countries to implement their recovery and development programmes effectively and to strengthen co-operation among them so that they can reduce their dependence on South Africa. Furthermore, provisions of relief assistance should be expanded to include the rehabilitation of populations affected by emergency situations in order to restore, inter alia, their productive capacities. In particular, contributions to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund and United Nations funds and other means to support the victims of apartheid and the front-line States should be continued and be increased, where possible.

4. Human resources

71. Responsibility for the development, planning and utilization of their human resources falls first and foremost on the African countries. The international community should support their efforts by providing the necessary financial and technical assistance to promote their human resources development.

5. South-South co-operation

72. South-South co-operation in supporting the implementation of the Programme of Action should be enhanced. Action already initiated in the agricultural sector should be intensified, and additional projects should be identified to assist African countries, either individually or collectively, in improving the production of staple food items. Particular emphasis should be placed on technological co-operation, especially in agro-related and consumer-goods industries, to enable Africa to benefit from the expertise and experience of other, more advanced developing countries. The same obtains for the exchange of experience and skills in the development of human resources. To achieve these objectives, individual countries and subregional and regional groupings in Africa and other developing regions should agree on specific plans of action, with time-bound and sectoral targets.

6. Support by the United Nations system

73. Co-operation and co-ordination among the various organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation and monitoring of the Programme of Action should be further strengthened. In order to ensure the capacity of the Secretary-General to carry out his responsibilities with regard to the Programme of Action, the secretariats of the United Nations Steering Committee and of the Inter-Agency Task Force should be given appropriate support for the duration of the Programme. Adequate funding, both budgetary and extra-budgetary, should be provided for this purpose.

74. At the national level, further efforts to improve co-ordination within the United Nations system should be taken in the context of the country-programming framework of the United Nations and the role of the resident co-ordinator. In the programmes of the United Nations system, particular emphasis should be placed on the priority sectors for the recovery and development of Africa.

75. In view of the important role of non-governmental organizations in mobilizing and making the public more aware as regards development, the United Nations system should increase its co-operation with non-governmental organizations for the implementation of the Programme of Action.

General Assembly resolution 43/27

18 November 1988 Meeting 56 Adopted without vote

Draft by Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole (A/43/664 & Corr.1); agenda item 39.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: plenary 55, 56.

In resolution 43/217, section VII, the Assembly approved the conclusions and recommendations of CPC⁽²²⁾ regarding UNPAAERD. CPC recommended that regular budget resources for the Economic Commission for Africa and other relevant entities for the 1990-1991 biennium be made commensurate with the priority accorded to Africa and UNPAAERD by the Assembly. Noting that a large portion of resources allocated to UNPAAERD was to come from extrabudgetary resources, CPC expressed concern that they might not materialize and recommended that the Secretary-General redouble his efforts to ensure adequate resources for UNPAAERD's implementation. It also recommended that information on factors affecting UNPAAERD's implementation be provided to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole and that the Secretary-General take into consideration all relevant views in pursuing the matter of financial flows for Africa.

Benin

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1988 a report⁽²⁴⁾ containing information on the special programme of economic assistance for Benin, whose economic performance continued to decline in 1988. In April, the first stage of formulating a financial stabilization and structural adjustment programme was completed, following consultations between the Government and a joint IMF/World Bank mission. A timetable was drawn up for the implementation of a series of measures during the year. It was estimated that donor support, which took account of the economic and social impact of the measures undertaken by Benin in implementing a financial stabilization and structural adjustment programme, would be of key importance to achieving the desired goals.

In the area of external assistance and aid co-ordination, a round-table conference was tentatively scheduled for late 1988 or early 1989. It was expected that this forum would provide an opportunity for dialogue between the Government and bilateral and multilateral donors concerning programmes to stimulate economic recovery and the country's needs for external assistance to support those programmes.

In a later report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that external development assistance to Benin in 1988 totalled $209.8 million, of which $178.6 million was for capital expenses and technical assistance. Donor contributions to the latter amount comprised: bilateral, $88.1 million; multilateral, $67.6 million; United Nations system, $14.2 million; NGOs, $8.6 million.

Following several years of drought, several Benin provinces suffered flood rains in August/September 1988, which resulted in 70,000 flood victims and loss of crops and stocks, and left thousands homeless.

For General Assembly action on economic assistance to Benin, see resolution 43/211.

Central African Republic

In his August 1988⁽²⁴⁾ report on special programmes of economic assistance, the Secretary-General said that, according to World Bank estimates, the financing requirement of the Central African Republic to meet its investment programme for 1987-1992, after taking account of expected external financing, had a shortfall of $20 million in 1988. The shortfall was expected to decline to $5 million by 1992. The investment programme aimed, in particular, to revitalize the commercial exploitation of the country's forestry resources, strengthen receipts from the diamond industry and stimulate the private sector, especially at the level of small and medium-sized enterprises. Social investment would focus on developing the country's human resources and improving health conditions. In accordance with recommendations made at a round-table conference held at Geneva in June 1987,⁽²⁶⁾ follow-up consultations were scheduled for programmes in rural development, education, training and employment, and for small and medium-sized enterprises.

In a later report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in the Central African Republic between 1987 and 1988, GDP declined in real terms. The external current account went further into deficit in 1988, despite a contraction of imports; the deficit for the year represented 18 per cent of GDP. The fall in prices of the Central African Republic's exports (coffee, tobacco) contributed to those results. Export revenues also suffered from declines in the quantities of cotton, coffee and wood exported. Exacerbating the current account shortfall was the country's land-locked situation, which added to transport and insurance costs. The situation with regard to public finances also deteriorated in 1988. Recurrent costs were in excess of revenues, and capital expenditures were markedly curtailed. At year's end, the country's public debt totalled $598 million, with debt servicing consuming 16 per cent of export revenues.

For General Assembly action on economic assistance to the Central African Republic, see resolution 43/211.

Chad

In response to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, in his August 1988 report on special programmes of economic assistance,⁽²⁴⁾ provided information on Chad. In January, Chad appealed for food donations and financial assistance to help meet an estimated food deficit of 141,000 tonnes. In March, the Government appealed for financial assistance to transport 7,500 tonnes of food to deficit areas.

In a later report on the situation in Chad,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that a favourable pattern of rainfall in 1987/88 resulted in a striking recovery in agricultural output. GDP in 1988 was estimated to have risen by 21 per cent over 1987. An agreement was signed by Chad and the World Bank in 1988 that would provide Chad with a financial rehabilitation credit of $45 million, which was to cover the years 1988 to 1990 and aimed to improve performance in a number of sectors, specifically the public, cotton and banking sectors and public enterprises. However, Chad continued to confront serious financial constraints. In the balance of payments, the deficit on current transactions was expected to rise to as much as 25 per cent of GDP if unilateral flows of assistance to the public sector were excluded. According to World Bank data, Chad's external debt totalled $269.6 million at the end of 1987.

A new development plan for 1989-1992 was under preparation, with World Bank assistance and UNDP funding, succeeding the interim plan of 1986-1988. Under the round-table process, two sets of consultations between the Government and donors were held in 1988. The first, in February, was on rehabilitation of the transport and communications sector, where projects costing $98 million were presented. Donors made commitments for 75 per cent of that amount. In December, consultations were held on rehabilitating the prefecture of Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti in northern Chad.

A programme costing $43 million was presented covering rural and urban development and including environmental protection measures. Pledges by donors totalled $27 million.

In 1988, technical assistance valued at $71.7 million was provided to Chad, of which 55 per cent was bilateral assistance, 36 per cent was provided by multilateral organizations, including the United Nations, and 9 per cent was provided by 12 NGOs. Countries providing technical assistance were (in order of volume of assistance) France, the United States, Switzerland, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and China.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/20.5 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/000 of 11 December 1987 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad, on emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad and on special economic assistance to that country,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad, dealing with, inter alia, the economic and financial situation of Chad, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Considering that the effects of war, natural calamities and disasters are compromising all the reconstruction and development efforts of the Government of Chad,

Noting the numerous appeals launched by the Government of Chad and governmental and non-governmental organizations regarding the seriousness of the food and health situation in Chad,

Noting also that the donor round table on assistance in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of northern Chad will be convened by the Government of Chad, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, on 14, 15 and 16 December 1988.

Recognizing the need for emergency economic assistance to Chad,

Noting with satisfaction that the implementation of the interim plan for 1986-1988 is now drawing to an end and that a development plan for 1989-1992 is being prepared,

Recalling the round table on assistance to Chad, convened by the United Nations Development Programme at Geneva on 4 and 5 December 1985, in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and governmental and non-governmental organizations that responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Renews the request made to States, competent United Nations organizations and programmes and international economic and financial institutions to continue:

(a) To provide the necessary humanitarian assistance to the people of Chad, who have suffered from the combined effects of the war, drought, flooding and the invasion of predators;

(b) To contribute to the rehabilitation and development of Chad;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the sectoral follow-up meetings envisaged by the round table on assistance to Chad, held at Geneva in December 1985, took place in December 1986 and February 1988 at Ndjamena;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To contribute, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme, to the preparation of a development plan for Chad for 1989-1992;

(b) To continue to assess, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of food and health, of the displaced populations;

(c) To mobilize special humanitarian assistance for persons who have suffered as a result of the war, natural calamities and disasters, and for the resettlement of displaced persons;

6. Invites States and competent United Nations organizations and programmes to participate actively in the donor round table on assistance in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of northern Chad, to be held on 14, 15 and 16 December 1988;

7. Calls Upon the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Djibouti

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General, in his August 1988 report,⁽²⁴⁾ provided information on the situation in Djibouti, which had instituted a number of measures to improve its budgetary and financial situation. The 1988 budget aimed to increase revenues by further improving the collection of indirect taxes, raising certain taxes and imposing profit taxes on public enterprises. Government expenditures were to be kept to a necessary minimum and the civil service would continue to be subject to financial constraints. However, as in previous years, it was expected that external assistance would be required to balance the budget.

In February, Djibouti appealed to the international community for assistance in coping with the consequences of the 1987 drought and requested UNDP to co-ordinate efforts to mobilize resources. To that end, UNDP approved an emergency grant of $50,000 for the purchase of various items and for the services of a consultant to assist the Government in project preparation.

In a later report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that external assistance to Djibouti in 1988 totalled $102 million, of which $78 million was provided by bilateral donors and $24 million by multilateral institutions. Among sectors, education led in its share of total assistance, followed by transport and communications, housing, agriculture, water and natural resources.

For General Assembly action on economic assistance to Djibouti, see resolution 43/211.

Madagascar

In 1988, Madagascar entered its fifth consecutive year of implementing serious structural adjustment measures, formulated in co-operation with the World Bank and IMF, said the Secretary-General in an August 1988 report.⁽²⁴⁾ Those efforts continued within the structural policy framework for the period, 1987-1990, the main objective of which was to increase the growth rate of GDP and exports. In the 1987-1990 phase of adjustment, particular attention was being given to increasing the efficiency of allocation and use of public resources.

At the fifth meeting of the Consultative Group for Madagascar (Paris, 28 and 29 January), held under the auspices of the World Bank, Madagascar presented its strategy for continued structural adjustment in the immediate future and donors pledged a total of $700 million for 1988 and 1989.

In a later report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary General noted that, after almost a decade of efforts aimed at financial stabilization and structural adjustment of the economy, Madagascar began in 1988 to experience the beginnings of economic growth.

Total aid disbursements to Madagascar in 1988 totalled $382.5 million, with the World Bank, the European Development Fund, the African Development Bank, IMF and UNDP accounting for 39 per cent of contributions.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Madagascar, see resolution 43/211.

Countries and areas in other regions

Central America

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in April 1988 a Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America.⁽³⁰⁾ The report gave the background and main characteristics of the crisis in the Central American countries and outlined an emergency programme (assistance to refugees, food aid, urgent energy needs), programmes of immediate action (foreign debt, financing to reactivate the Central American Common Market and reduce temporary imbalances in countries' balance of payments) and economic reactivation and social development. The report also discussed institutional and management capacity aspects, the role of the United Nations system, internal and international responsibility, and institutional mechanisms for implementing the Special Plan.

In resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988, the Assembly urged the international community and international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with the Central American countries to implement the activities supporting the Special Plan.

In an October report on the situation in Central America,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that not only had economic development been adversely affected by the political turmoil in the region, but the economic crisis was perpetuating unjust socio-economic structures and prolonging internal conflicts, thus frustrating efforts to arrive at a consensus concerning the socio-political model for Central American societies.

In resolution 43/210 of 20 December, the Assembly recommended the convening of a meeting early in 1989 to review the evolution of the development process, including assistance requirements, and to discuss the programmes and projects that could be implemented as soon as possible in support of the Special Plan's goals and objectives. It urged Member States and observers, inter-governmental organizations, international financial institutions and the United Nations system to adopt immediate measures to implement activities in support of the Special Plan.

Democratic Yemen

In his August 1988 report on special programmes of economic assistance,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on Democratic Yemen's economic situation and its rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts following devastating floods in 1982. Most of the aid-assisted programmes under the reconstruction and rehabilitation programme had been completed or were close to completion. Two UNDP-funded projects were due to be completed in 1988: the reconstruction of the Abyan Delta and flood control at Wadi Bana and Wadi Hassan.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Democratic Yemen, see resolution 43/211.

Ecuador

In his August 1988 report to the General Assembly,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described international assistance programmes and donor support to Ecuador following the March 1987 earthquakes. Total emergency assistance by United Nations programmes and agencies amounted to $158,450. In addition, bilateral donors channelled $313,385 in emergency assistance through the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO).

Bilateral donors and the European Community provided direct emergency assistance in cash and kind valued at $7.5 million. Emergency assistance from NGOs and private institutions approximated $700,000, while bilateral donations channelled through the Red Cross amounted to $730,000.

For General Assembly action regarding economic assistance to Ecuador, see resolution 43/211.

Vanuatu

In his August 1988 report on special programmes of economic assistance,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described external assistance to Vanuatu, an island developing country, which was struck by a cyclone in 1987.⁽³²⁾ In a later report,⁽²⁵⁾ he stated that in January and February 1988, Vanuatu had again been struck by cyclones, following each of which UNDP had provided $50,000 in emergency relief assistance. UNDP also initiated a $300,000 reconstruction project covering longer-term rehabilitation.

As to the economy, copra exports had been declining but that had been offset by increases in the export of meat and hides, trochus shells and cocoa. Vanuatu's tourist industry contributed significantly to foreign exchange earnings. A significant development in the industry had been the national airline's acquisition of its first aircraft, which came into service in the second half of 1988.

A round-table meeting of donors to Vanuatu was held at Geneva in October 1988, providing an opportunity for dialogue between the Government and potential donors on the country's economic situation in order to secure and integrate additional assistance into the overall plan. Two new donors offered new aid funds and one traditional donor offered additional technical assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/211 without vote.

Assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Madagascar and Vanuatu

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/205 of 11 December 1987 on assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic,

Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, the Gambia, Madagascar, Nicaragua and Vanuatu and its previous resolutions on assistance to the countries concerned,

Having considered the relevant report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction the financial, economic and technical support that Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations have been providing to those countries,

Deeply concerned that those countries continue to face special economic and financial difficulties owing to a variety of factors,

Noting that Benin continues to experience grave economic and financial difficulties, characterized by a marked balance-of-payments disequilibrium, the heavy burden of its external debt and a lack of resources necessary for the implementation of its planned economic and social development programme, and that its situation is even more precarious following the disastrous floods that caused substantial material damage and loss of human lives during the months of August, September and October 1988,

Noting the persistence of the grave difficulties that the Government of the Central African Republic continues to face in the efforts that it has been making since 1982 to re-establish the economic stability of the country, as well as the importance of mobilizing more supplementary resources in order to enable it to achieve its objectives in its development programme,

Noting that severe and harsh climatic conditions coupled with chronic aridity preclude the possibility of any meaningful agricultural activities, and that the lingering effects of recurrent drought and the presence of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons are having a devastating impact on the already precarious economic and social development of Djibouti.

Noting the efforts made by the Government of Democratic Yemen in its rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes in response to the devastating consequences of the floods in 1982,

Bearing in mind the economic and financial consequences of the earthquakes of March 1987 in Ecuador and their negative impact on its balance of payments, the current account deficit amounting to 776 million United States dollars and the public sector deficit amounting to more than 305 million dollars in the months following March 1987, and taking into account the fact that all the efforts made by the Government of Ecuador to improve that adverse situation have not produced the desired results owing to the domestic economic recession and the effects of the international economic crisis, which seriously impede the entire economic and social development process,

Noting that Madagascar's economic and social development efforts are being thwarted by the adverse effects of the cyclones and floods that afflict that country periodically, particularly those of December 1983, January and April 1984 and March 1986, and that the execution of reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes requires the mobilization of sizeable resources exceeding the country's real possibilities,

Noting that Vanuatu, an island developing country, continues to experience severe constraints in its economic and social development as a consequence, inter alia, of declining export prices leading to a deterioration in its terms of trade and of a high population growth rate coupled with a shortage of skilled manpower,

Noting the particularly difficult problems faced by island developing countries in responding to negative and special economic circumstances, as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General called for in its resolution 41/163 of 5 December 1986 and in its resolution 43/189 of 20 December 1988,

Noting that Benin, 'the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti and Vanuatu are among the countries classified as least developed countries,

Having heard the statements of Member States at the forty-third session of the General Assembly on the situations currently prevailing in those countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize resources for carrying out the special programmes of economic assistance to those countries;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts undertaken by the Governments of those countries to overcome their economic and financial difficulties;

3. Also expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided or pledged to those countries by Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations;

4. Further expresses its appreciation for the action taken by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, and for the contributions of the international community with regard to the immediate assistance provided to the population and areas affected by the earthquakes in Ecuador in March 1987;

5. Welcomes the successful conclusion of the round-table meeting for Vanuatu, conducted by the United Nations Development Programme on 28 October 1988;

6. Notes with concern that the assistance made available to those countries has not been adequate to meet their urgent requirements and that additional assistance is needed;

7. Reaffirms the need for all Governments and international organizations to fulfil the commitments undertaken within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

8. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to respond generously and urgently to the needs of those countries as identified in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Appeals to the specialized agencies, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and to the international community to provide the necessary assistance to the rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes in Ecuador, which are essential to the most affected areas and populations and whose implementation is impeded by the national budgetary constraints resulting from the economic crisis, and requests the Secretary-General to use his good offices to promote greater participation by the international community and the United Nations system in the implementation of those programmes;

10. Invites the international community to contribute to the special accounts established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the countries facing special difficulties;

11. Urgently appeals to all international organizations, in particular the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional organizations, humanitarian organizations and voluntary agencies, to continue and increase, to the extent possible, their assistance in response to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of those countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps, in collaboration with the organs, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/192 of 8 December 1986 on special programmes of economic assistance, to provide assistance for all disasters, natural or otherwise, striking those countries and to mobilize the necessary resources to enable them to meet their short-, medium- and long-term needs;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the question of assistance to those countries and their economic situation under review and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/918/Add.2) without vote, 6 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.67), orally amended by Democratic Yemen: agenda item 86.

Meeting numbers, GA 43rd session: 2nd Committee 26, 28-30, 36-38, 45, 47; plenary 83.

Front-line and other bordering States

In response to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in July 1988, with later addenda,⁽³⁴⁾ on action taken by the international community to assist the front-line States (Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe) and other bordering States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa.

The report first described urgent humanitarian, economic and technical assistance being provided by the United Nations to Angola, Malawi and Mozambique, where complex emergency situations prevailed. Following an inter-agency mission to Angola in 1987, the Secretary-General launched an appeal to the international donor community during his February 1988 visit there. That was followed by a donor meeting at Geneva in May, when over $75 million was pledged towards Angola's overall emergency requirements. An inter-agency mission also visited Malawi in 1987 and estimated that some $90.8 million would be required in 1988 to meet the needs of some 360,000 displaced persons from neighbouring Mozambique. The Secretary-General launched an appeal in March 1988 for generous contributions to the projects and programmes recommended by the mission (see also PART THREE, Chapter XV). In 1988, Mozambique again requested the Secretary-General's assistance to mobilize international humanitarian support to cope with the grave consequences of externally-supported acts of destabilization and the impact of a limited drought. An inter-agency mission visited the country in February, an international appeal was launched by the Secretary-General in March and an international donor meeting was held in April at Maputo.

In response to a request by the Secretary-General for information on specific measures taken to assist front-line and other States bordering on South Africa, replies were received from 24 Member States and 14 organizations of the United Nations system. Information was also received from the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC). In addition, it was noted that efforts were being made by the United Nations system and SADCC to expand and strengthen their co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/209 by recorded vote.

Special assistance to front-line States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/199 of 8 December 1986 and 42/201 of 11 December 1987,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned at the continuing deteriorating situation in southern Africa, which has aggravated the economic problems confronting the front-line States and other bordering States, arising from the apartheid policies of the Pretoria regime,

Conscious of the responsibility of the international community to address the problems of the region,

Commending the concerted and determined efforts of the countries of the region to cope with the prevailing adverse conditions by strengthening their economic co-operation and lessening their dependence on South Africa, particularly in the areas of transportation, communications and related sectors,

Reaffirming the importance of close co-operation between the United Nations and the front-line States,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 568(1985) of 21 June 1985, 571(1985) of 20 September 1985 and 581(1986) of 13 February 1986, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to the front-line States,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to the front-line States;

2. Strongly urges the international community to continue to provide in a timely and effective manner the financial, material and technical assistance necessary to enhance the individual and collective capacity of the front-line States and other bordering States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa, in accordance with their national and regional plans and strategies;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system so that they may respond to such requests for assistance as might be forthcoming from individual States or the appropriate subregional organization, and further urges all States to respond favourably to such requests;

4. Appeals to all States and appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the national and collective emergency programmes prepared by the front-line States and other bordering States to overcome the critical problems arising from the situation in South Africa;

5. Notes with appreciation the assistance being rendered to the front-line States by donor countries and intergovernmental organizations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Disasters

In 1988, UNDRO continued to be the focal point in the United Nations system for disaster management; its mandate covered all aspects of disaster relief and mitigation (prevention and preparedness). UNDRO also provided Governments with assistance in pre-disaster planning.

Review of disaster and emergency assistance

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly decision,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a progress report⁽²⁾ on the status of the implementation of that decision, by which he had been asked to proceed with the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations contained in his 1987 report on the capacity of the United Nations system in the area of disaster relief, preparedness and prevention.⁽³⁾

With regard to recommendations concerning UNDRO the Secretary-General stated that a study was under way by the Advisory Management Service to adjust UNDRO's work programme and organization in order to focus attention on sudden natural disasters and on preparation and prevention measures. The report of a joint UNDRO/UNDP task force, established to work out improved modalities for co-operation, was annexed to the Secretary-General's report. The task force made several specific recommendations to strengthen co-operation between UNDP and UNDRO and its report also dealt with co-operative arrangements between all organizations in the field, including the strengthening of government mechanisms to deal with disasters. The Secretary-General noted that steps were being taken to strengthen UNDRO's capacity to manage disaster-related information.

In connection with operations at the field level, the UNDRO/UNDP task force addressed issues related to the responsibilities of United Nations resident co-ordinators and their colleagues in the field, particularly to the need for a standing United Nations disaster response team in disaster-prone countries.

As to United Nations Headquarters arrangements, the Secretary-General had entrusted the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation with the responsibility of ensuring that he was kept fully informed on potential and existing disaster situations so as to be in a position to take appropriate action. In that regard, a close working relationship had been established with UNDRO, a major concern being to ensure a timely, adequate and co-ordinated response by the United Nations system.

The suggestion that a technical panel be convened to advise the Secretary-General on ways to take advantage of technological advances in dealing with disaster and emergency situations was being considered in connection with the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/204 without vote.

Special economic and disaster relief assistance
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which it established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

Recalling also its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/51 of 26 July 1988,

Taking note with interest of the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of the Co-ordinator and on special economic and disaster relief assistance,, Recognizing that activities related to disaster preparedness and prevention were significantly greater than in 1986-1987, and appreciating, in this regard, the contribution of bilateral donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the good performance of the Office of the Co-ordinator in strengthening the national emergency services of affected developing countries by providing, inter alia, advice and expertise on the utilization of early warning systems and on the elaboration and implementation of disaster contingency plans for pre-disaster planning and post-disaster periods,

1. Encourages the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to expand further its information base and its capacity to disseminate timely and reliable disaster-related information and to continue to update its profiles of disaster-prone countries, as well as to develop its International Disaster Management Information Network, bearing in mind the report to be prepared by the Secretary-General in response to the request made by the General Assembly in paragraph 5 of its resolution 42/169;

2. Notes with interest the close co-operation between the Office of the Co-ordinator and the United Nations Development Programme, as described in the final report of the joint United Nations Development Programme/Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator task force;

3. Requests the Office of the Co-ordinator to strengthen its relationship with Member States, in particular with national focal points in disaster-prone countries, and, in this connection, recognizes the need to hold meetings at the regional and/or international level, at appropriate intervals, with the participation of heads of national emergency relief services of donor and recipient countries.

Humanitarian assistance

On the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly, on 8 December, adopted resolution 43/131 without vote.

Humanitarian assistance to victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and national unity of States, and recognizing that it is up to each State first and foremost to take care of the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations occurring on its territory,

Deeply concerned about the suffering of the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, the loss in human lives, the destruction of property and the mass displacement of populations that result from them,

Bearing in mind that natural disasters and similar emergency situations have grave consequences for the economic and social plans of all countries concerned,

Desiring that the international community should respond speedily and effectively to appeals for emergency humanitarian assistance made in particular through the Secretary-General,

Mindful of the importance of humanitarian assistance for the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations,

Recognizing that the international community makes an important contribution to the sustenance and protection of such victims, whose health and life may be seriously endangered,

Considering that the abandonment of the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations without humanitarian assistance constitutes a threat to human life and an offence to human dignity,

Concerned about the difficulties that victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations may experience in receiving humanitarian assistance,

Convinced that, in providing humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicines or health care, for which access to victims is essential, rapid relief will avoid a tragic increase in their number,

Aware that alongside the action of Governments and intergovernmental organizations, the speed and efficiency of this assistance often depends on the help and aid of local and non-governmental organizations working with strictly humanitarian motives,

Recalling that, in the event of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality must be given utmost consideration by all those involved in providing humanitarian assistance,

1. Reaffirms the importance of humanitarian assistance for the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations;

2. Reaffirms also the sovereignty of affected States and their primary role in the initiation, organization, co-ordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within their respective territories;

3. Stresses the important contribution made in providing humanitarian assistance by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations working with strictly humanitarian motives;

4. Invites all States in need of such assistance to facilitate the work of these organizations in implementing humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicines and health care, for which access to victims is essential;

5. Appeals, therefore, to all States to give their support to these organizations working to provide humanitarian assistance, where needed, to the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations;

6. Urges States in proximity to areas of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, particularly in the case of regions that are difficult to reach, to participate closely with the affected countries in international efforts with a view to facilitating, to the extent possible, the transit of humanitarian assistance;

7. Calls upon all the intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations dealing with humanitarian assistance to co-operate as closely as possible with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator or any other ad hoc mechanism set up by the Secretary-General in the co-ordination of aid;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Governments, intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations with regard to the possibility of enhancing the effectiveness of international mechanisms and increasing the speed of assistance in the best possible conditions for the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, where needed, and to report his findings to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

9. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fifth session.

Office of the UN Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

During 1988, UNDRO-the specialized office of the United Nations Secretary-General for all disaster-related matters-continued to cover all aspects of disaster relief and mitigation (prevention and preparedness). It was also heavily involved in the preparatory work for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see below) and in strengthening its collaborative relationship with UNDP (see above). UNDRO's organizational structure was adjusted to reflect new requirements.

In a report⁽⁴⁾ on UNDRO activities in 1988-1989, the Secretary-General discussed major developments concerning the Office as a whole, disaster relief co-ordination, disaster mitigation (prevention and preparedness), disaster information and administration and finance. He noted that UNDRO's limited resources for disaster relief co-ordination were under great strain. Owing to the increased vulnerability of communities to natural hazards and other emergencies, the number of disasters grew, as well as the magnitude of their human, economic and social impact. Disaster situations in which UNDRO was involved ranged from those of short duration to those requiring sustained attention over a longer period of time and covered man-made as well as natural disasters.

Donor meetings were valuable forums for presenting emergency appeals of countries in need of assistance to the international donor community. In 1988, UNDRO organized or participated in such meetings for Mozambique (Maputo, April), Angola (Geneva, May) and Bangladesh (New York, November). In addition, UNDRO used regular information meetings to offer government representatives and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations providing emergency assistance the opportunity to gather and exchange information on specific disaster situations and on their financing.

Contributions in 1988 from multilateral and bilateral sources and from NGOs and Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies totalled $1,037 million for disasters in 25 countries affecting some 85 million people. Some $626 million of the contributions in 1988 were donated for disasters that occurred in Ethiopia, Lebanon, Mozambique and the Sudan prior to that year.

Major disasters requiring the involvement of UNDRO in 1988 included: earthquakes in Armenia (USSR), China, India and Nepal; floods in Bangladesh, Benin, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chad, China, Cuba, Rwanda, the Sudan and Thailand; a cyclone in Bangladesh; fires in Burma; hurricanes in Costa Rica, Haiti, Jamaica, Nicaragua and Panama; drought in Djibouti; a typhoon in the Philippines; and displaced persons in the Sudan and Uganda.

A report of the Secretary-General on UNDRO activities in 1986 and 1987⁽⁵⁾ was submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in June 1988.

UNDRO financing

UNDRO activities continued to be financed mainly from the United Nations regular budget and voluntary contributions to a number of trust funds administered by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator.

In 1987,⁽⁶⁾ the General Assembly had appropriated $7,289,400 in UNDRO activities in the 1988-1989 biennium. By resolution 43/218 A of 21 December 1988, the Assembly revised that appropriation to $6,944,800.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/51 without vote.

Assistance in cases of natural disaster and other disaster situations: Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which the Assembly established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and, inter alia, recognized the need to ensure prompt, effective and efficient responses, in times of natural disaster and other disaster situations, that would bring to bear the resources of the United Nations system, prospective donor countries and voluntary agencies,

Recalling also other pertinent resolutions, in particular General Assembly resolution 41/201 of 8 December 1986,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987, in which the Assembly decided to designate the 1990s as a decade in which the international community, under the auspices of the United Nations, would pay special attention to fostering international co-operation in the field of natural disaster reduction,

Reaffirming that the primary responsibility for the administration of disaster relief operations and for disaster preparedness lies with the Governments of the affected countries and recognizing that available resources and efforts are being devoted by the Governments of those countries towards the alleviation of disaster-related problems,

Noting the increased number of requests to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator for assistance in disaster relief and mitigation and for related information,

Reaffirming also that shortage of resources has been one of the major constraints on an effective response of the United Nations to disaster situations and continues to hamper the full achievement of a rapid and effective response to the needs of countries affected by disasters and that, if the shortage is to be overcome, efforts will be required by the international community to provide both funds and assistance in kind,

Reaffirming that, within the United Nations system, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator is the focal point for disaster relief matters and therefore should be provided by the donor community, the United Nations and the other organizations of the United Nations system with the support necessary for it to discharge its responsibilities for disaster relief and mitigation,

Affirming the necessity of implementing the conclusions of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/201,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the statement made by the Co-ordinator before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Economic and Social Council on 7 July 1988;

2. Emphasises that it is essential for the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to be placed, and kept, on a sound financial basis, and calls upon the international community to respond positively and expeditiously to the appeals of the Secretary-General for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance in order to meet relief needs resulting from natural disasters and other disaster situations;

3. Recognizes that activities related to disaster preparedness and prevention were significantly greater in 1986-1987 than in the previous biennium, and appreciates the good performance of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in participating in strengthening the national emergency services of affected developing countries by providing, inter alia, advice and expertise on the utilization of early warning systems and on the elaboration and implementation of disaster contingency plans for pre-disaster planning and the post-disaster period, and in giving assistance to regional, interregional and global activities on the medium-term and longer-term aspects of disaster mitigation;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to request the United Nations Development Programme, in co-operation with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to facilitate further the integration of disaster prevention projects in the planning of national programmes;

5. Recognizes that at the country level, particularly in disaster-prone countries, it is important that the organizations of the United Nations system concerned be organized, under the resident co-ordinator, in an emergency operations group, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/225 of 17 December 1981, and welcomes the practical steps taken by the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to improve further their co-operation with Governments and voluntary agencies;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator with the support necessary for it to continue to provide high-quality service to recipient countries, and to encourage the organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to this endeavour;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on the implementation of the present resolution in his next biennial report on the Office, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to implement, by concrete measures, the conclusions of his report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/201.

Approved by Third Committee (E/1988/111) without vote, 21 July (meeting 13); draft by Tunisia, for Group of 77 (E/1988/C.3/L.4/Rev.1); agenda item 15.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, by decision 43/447, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1988/51.

Disaster relief efforts

Drought-stricken areas

Sudano-Sahelian region

The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued in 1988, under UNDP supervision, to assist countries in drought preparedness, recovery and rehabilitation, and medium- to long-term development, and in implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see also PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council on UNSO activities during 1988,⁽⁷⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that climatic and related developments in the Sudano-Sahelian countries in 1988 generally improved. Many countries benefited from higher rainfall, although in some cases, particularly the Sudan, the rains had extremely damaging consequences. While agriculture was expected to fare better in terms of higher yields, medium- and long-term prospects regarding protection of productive resources had not improved. For example, flooding in the Sudan was aggravated by the poor soil and water-retention capacity in the catchment areas of the Blue Nile.

With some exceptions, the region was not stricken by any major, climate-induced famines. However, there was a resurgence, after years of dormancy, of the desert locust, which caused extensive damage in the drylands of the region.

The report covered the main functional areas of UNSO in support of the 22 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region: co-operation with Governments in planning, co-ordination and monitoring at the country level; projects and programmes; resource mobilization; facilitating international co-ordination; serving as the focal point of the United Nations for regional organizations, particularly the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS) and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development (IGADD); and information and public awareness. The report also covered activities related to drought and desertification control carried out by other entities within UNDP and summarized arrangements to strengthen UNSO's operating capacity.

In his annual report covering 1988 UNDP activities,⁽⁸⁾ the Administrator stated that new projects and extensions of projects sponsored by UNSO increased by $25 million in 1988, bringing their total value to over $100 million at the end of the year. Programmes ranged from large-scale integrated land management projects in the Niger and the Sudan to afforestation and fuelwood plantation projects in Ethiopia and the Sudan, and sand-dune fixation and alternative energy projects in Cape Verde and Somalia. UNSO also assisted CILSS with an environmental education project and IGADD with study tours.

Funds mobilized by UNSO for desertification control through the end of 1988 reached $103.6 million.

UNDP Council action. On 1 July, the UNDP Governing Council, having considered the Administrator's report on UNSO's 1987 activities,⁽¹⁰⁾ encouraged the Administrator to capitalize on UNSO's experience and potential regarding environmental issues in the context of the follow-up by UNDP of the 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽¹¹⁾ on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development. It renewed its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to UNSO's general resources and earmarked projects, and to make use of its services.

UNCTAD action. The UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report in July 1988 to the Trade and Development Board on the drought and the external trade of the countries members of IGADD⁽¹²⁾ IGADD comprised six countries—Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda—all of which, except Kenya, were least developed countries (LDCs). The report described IGADD's institutional background, the drought and environmental conditions, the external trade of IGADD members, action taken by them, and international support and related measures.

As to bases for future action, the report highlighted some domestic policy measures and international support that would help to streamline the effectiveness of the external sector of IGADD countries.

On 5 October,⁽¹³⁾ the Trade and Development Board asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to transmit the report, together with views of delegations, to the IGADD secretariat and to international organizations and agencies, including UNDP. The IGADD secretariat was asked to keep UNCTAD informed of developments in the external trade of its members and the UNCTAD secretariat was asked to continue to assist IGADD members.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 July, a UNDP representative reported orally to the Economic and Social Council's Third Committee on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda. On 26 July, by decision 1988/158, the Council took note of the report.

Storms and floods

Treacherous weather took a serious toll in many parts of the world during 1988. In August and September, flood waters in Bangladesh affected 45 million people out of a total population of 110 million. The official death toll was 1,664 persons. The Sudan was also devastated by torrential rains and widespread floods.

In Jamaica, a severe hurricane devastated the island in September, causing extensive damage and destruction to property, agriculture and infrastructure. In Nicaragua, a severe hurricane in October caused widespread damage to property and disrupted its economic activities.

UNCTAD action. On 5 October,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Trade and Development Board requested the UNCTAD secretariat to study the impact of floods and cyclones on the medium- and long-term economic growth and development of the affected developing countries, particularly LDCs, and to identify requirements for the resumption and maintenance of a modest pace of sustained growth and development of their economies.

Hurricane in Jamaica

In his report on UNDRO activities,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that a major hurricane-hurricane Gilbert-struck Jamaica on 12 September-ber 1988, with winds of up to 125 miles per hour. The hurricane moved across Jamaica from east to west, tearing off roofs and destroying crops, vegetation and infrastructure. At least 500,000 people were left homeless and damage was estimated at over $800 million. Other Caribbean islands, notably Guadeloupe, Martinique, Puerto Rico and Saint Lucia, also suffered damage to infrastructure and plantations.

An alert was issued to the international community on 12 September and was followed on the same day by a report containing a preliminary assessment of damage. UNDRO dispatched the Manager of the Pan-Caribbean Disaster Preparedness and Prevention Project from Antigua to Jamaica to assist the authorities and the UNDP/UNDRO Resident Representative in co-ordinating relief efforts.

In a 19 September letter,⁽¹⁵⁾ Jamaica appealed to the international community for support and assistance in view of the magnitude of the disaster.

In his annual report covering 1988,⁽¹⁶⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that multilateral and bilateral donor response to Jamaica's appeal for assistance resulted in the shipment of building materials, medicines, fertilizers and other materials for emergency relief and longer-term rehabilitation. Following Jamaica's request for UNDP assistance in the financial management and tracking of goods and services delivered, a computerized emergency information and management system was installed to provide the Government with a monitoring and follow-up capacity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/7 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Jamaica

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on an international decade for natural disaster reduction,

Deeply distressed by the number of afflicted persons and the destruction wrought by hurricane Gilbert which, on 12 September 1988, struck the island of Jamaica,

Conscious of the efforts of the Government and people of Jamaica to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of the hurricane,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Conscious also of the prompt response being made by Governments, international agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide emergency relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its long-term effects will require, as a complement to the effort being made by the people and Government of Jamaica, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral co-operation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas, as well as to undertake the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Jamaica;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to that country;

3. Calls upon all States to contribute generously to the relief and reconstruction efforts in the affected areas;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions and the bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, to assist the Government of Jamaica in identifying the emergency, medium-term and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, as well as to help with the task of reconstruction of the country undertaken by the Government.

Floods in Bangladesh

In his report on UNDRO activities,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that unusually heavy rainfall between 20 and 28 August led to peak flood levels of the Brahmaputra, Ganges and Meghna rivers in Bangladesh in early September. By mid-September, flood waters covered 53 districts of a total of 64; 45 million people out of a population of 110 million were directly affected and enormous damage was done to crops, and transport and communications systems. An inter-agency mission visited Bangladesh from 13 to 18 September to assess the damage and identify priority relief needs. In a 10 October note verbale to the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁷⁾ Bangladesh appealed for international assistance. A Special Meeting on Assistance to Bangladesh (New York, 16 November) had before it the report of the Joint Task Force of the Government of Bangladesh and the United Nations on the 1988 floods.⁽¹⁸⁾ It estimated the extent of damage caused by the floods, its macro-economic and social impact and immediate supply requirements. The report also assessed damage following the recession of flood waters and outlined the Government's reconstruction and rehabilitation plans. Disaster preparedness and flood control strategies were also discussed.

The Secretary-General stated that the value of Bangladesh's reconstruction needs was assessed by the Joint Task Force at over $1 billion. Before the 16 November meeting, $200 million of international assistance had been made available or pledged; after the meeting some $500 million became available.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/9 without vote.

Short-term, medium-term and long-term solutions to the problems of natural disasters in Bangladesh

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/231 of 17 December 1985 following the disastrous cyclone that struck Bangladesh in 1985,

Recalling also its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on an international decade for natural disaster reduction,

Noting with concern the devastating consequences of the recent floods in Bangladesh, the worst in living memory, that have caused significant loss of life, unprecedented human suffering to tens of millions of stranded and homeless people subjected to hunger and water-borne disease and incalculable damage to crops, livestock, communications and infrastructure,

Taking note of the statement made on 10 October 1988 by the representative of Bangladesh, in which he elaborated the details of these concerns,

Deeply conscious of the macro-economic impact of such calamities, which constitutes an insurmountable burden on the economy and development plans of a least developed country like Bangladesh, causing irrecoverable set-back in growth and necessitating extremely difficult adjustment, and that the cost of damage inflicted by such catastrophes often exceeds the net inflow of development assistance,

Recognizing the strenuous efforts of the Government and people of Bangladesh to save lives, to alleviate the suffering and hardship suffered by the victims of the floods and to initiate urgent recovery measures, including immediate relief and rehabilitation measures,

Recognizing also that the magnitude of the damage and devastation is beyond the ability of Bangladesh alone to rectify or to meet, requiring national efforts to be supplemented by sustained international financial and technical assistance over the long term,

Emphasizing in this connection the importance of measures noted in the report of the Secretary-General on special economic and disaster relief assistance to Bangladesh, submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-first session,

Aware that Bangladesh is particularly vulnerable to recurrent disasters that have the potential of becoming annual visitations of destruction far beyond its capacity either to control or to effectively mitigate,

Conscious of the fact that international assistance and investment over time are required to mitigate and prevent the consequences of such disasters,

Noting with appreciation the support and solidarity displayed by the countries of South Asia in assisting Bangladesh in the immediate aftermath of the floods,

Welcoming the efforts of the Government of Bangladesh, initiated at the highest level, to strengthen bilateral co-operation with concerned countries of the region through the establishment of task forces of experts to study and make recommendations for flood management and water flows and to find durable solutions to the problems in these areas,

Expressing the hope that these multiple bilateral approaches will strengthen co-operation, co-ordination and convergence of mutual interests leading to practical arrangements to promote solutions for the assessment, prediction, prevention and mitigation of natural disasters and to joint approaches for a permanent solution,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations system to facilitate studies at the request of concerned Governments, including those of natural disasters of a geophysical origin, to improve capacities of countries to mitigate the effects of natural disasters, to foster scientific and engineering endeavours to close critical gaps in knowledge, to disseminate existing and new information and to develop measures for prediction, prevention and mitigation of natural disasters through programmes of technical assistance and technology transfer,

Aware that considerable expertise and technical capabilities are available within the organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen preparedness and prevention capabilities of disaster-prone countries through the promotion of a long-term and effective solution of the problems caused by natural disasters,

1. Expresses its gratitude to Member States, international organizations within and outside the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and individuals and groups that have so generously assisted the Government of Bangladesh in its immediate relief and rehabilitation efforts;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for the urgent steps he has taken to mobilize humanitarian assistance and, through the appointment of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator as his Special Representative, to co-ordinate activities of the United Nations agencies in the field for purposeful and unified assistance by the international community;

3. Appeals to all Member States, specialized agencies in the field and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international economic and financial institutions, to respond urgently and generously in sustaining development assistance to Bangladesh, particularly in its plans and programmes for longer-term rehabilitation and reconstruction;

4. Requests relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to take appropriate measures to provide assistance to Bangladesh to strengthen its capacity to assess, predict, prevent and mitigate natural disasters, particularly assistance for disaster preparedness and prevention programmes and to implement its plans and programmes for seeking a long-term and effective solution of the problems caused by floods and other natural disasters;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and in co-operation with other relevant agencies of the United Nations system, to assist the Government of Bangladesh in preparing its own feasibility plan to meet such exigencies;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Emergencies in China

Floods, hailstorms, a typhoon and an earthquake ravaged several provinces of China during 1988. In his report on UNDRO activities,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that there had been floods in Fujian province in May, hailstorms and rainstorms in Heilongjiang province, floods and a typhoon in Zhejiang province and floods in Shanxi province, all in August, and earthquakes in Yunnan province in November. The UNDP/UNDRO Resident Representative, in co-operation with government authorities, transmitted detailed reports. UNDRO issued 17 information reports during the year and promptly provided $30,000 in cash grants to bridge the gap until the arrival of other assistance. Australia, Canada and the Netherlands channelled their contributions through UNDRO and UNDP. Contributions reported to UNDRO in 1988 amounted to $3.2 million.

Hurricane in Nicaragua,

Costa Rica, Panama and other countries

Between 22 and 25 October 1988, hurricane Joan struck Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and other countries of the region. The Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁾ that, in Nicaragua, early warnings led to the evacuation of some 300,000 people. UNDRO launched an appeal and issued 13 reports between October and December 1988 on the emergency. The value of relief contributions reported to UNDRO totalled some $32 million. In response to the UNDRO appeal, Canada and the United Kingdom transferred cash contributions, which were used to buy zinc sheets and motor saws locally. An UNDRO emergency grant of $25,000 was used on a cost-sharing basis with UNDP to provide household utensils and medical equipment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/17 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Nicaragua,
Costa Rica, Panama and other countries affected by hurricane Joan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on an international decade for natural disaster reduction and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Deeply concerned by the large number of afflicted persons and also by the destruction caused by hurricane

Joan, which between 22 and 25 October 1988 struck Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and other countries of the region,

Aware of the efforts of the Governments and peoples of the region to save lives and alleviate the suffering of the victims of hurricane Joan,

Aware also of the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Welcoming the prompt response of the Governments, the organs, organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and also of the international and regional agencies, the non-governmental organizations and the private individuals that are providing emergency relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium- and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the peoples and Governments of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and other countries of the region, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to trigger broad multilateral co-operation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and other countries of the region affected by the natural disaster;

2. Expresses its gratitude to all the States of the international community, the international agencies and the non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Urges all the States of the international community, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected areas;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps taken to co-ordinate and mobilize the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close collaboration with the Governments of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and the affected countries of the region, and the international financial institutions, organs, organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to assist those countries in mobilizing the additional financial resources necessary for the implementation of the medium- and long-term plans and programmes of rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Floods in the Sudan

The Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁾ that, on 6 August 1988, UNDRO issued an appeal on behalf of 2 million people in and around Khartoum, Sudan, made homeless by floods. UNDRO dispatched two relief co-ordination officers to Khartoum to assess needs, monitor contributions and assist the UNDP resident co-ordinator. By 30 August, contributions in cash and kind reported directly to UNDRO amounted to over $18.5 million, excluding supplies for which no monetary value was indicated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/8 without vote.

Emergency assistance to the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on an international decade for natural disaster reduction,

Recalling also the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, in particular the section concerning disaster assistance for least developed countries,

Deeply concerned by the extensive and unprecedented damage and devastation in the Sudan caused by torrential rain and floods in August 1988,

Extremely concerned about the destruction of hundreds of thousands of buildings and dwellings and by the fact that large sectors of the nation's infrastructure have been completely disrupted, in particular, roads, railway lines, water supplies, electricity supplies, hospitals and health centres, schools and other public utilities and communication systems,

Considering that over 120,000 hectares of cultivated land and over 7,000 small farmers' schemes were inundated, and about 600 villages and islands have completely disappeared and thereby over 1.5 million persons were left without shelter or food,

Fully cognizant of the economic difficulties already faced by the Sudan, particularly resulting from its high level of indebtedness and compounded further by a massive influx of refugees and 2 million displaced persons,

Recognizing that the Sudan has shouldered the major part of the burden in dealing with the disasters, but that the magnitude of devastation and damage is far beyond the means and abilities of the Sudan alone to rectify,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to respond fully to requests for emergency humanitarian assistance as well as rehabilitation and reconstruction of a least developed country, facing grave and compounded disaster situations,

Noting with appreciation the response to date of various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in emergency relief operations,

Noting that the Secretary-General has sent an inter-agency mission to the Sudan to assess emergency conditions and that a United Nations Development Programme/World Bank multi-donor flood recovery programme mission is currently in the Sudan, at the request of its Government, to assess the impact of floods and to prepare a two-year reconstruction programme,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and people of the Sudan in facing the complex disaster situations;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that rendered support and assistance to the Government of the Sudan in its relief and rehabilitation efforts;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to co-ordinate and mobilize relief and rehabilitation efforts;

4. Calls upon all States to contribute generously and respond urgently and effectively to the needs of relief operations, rehabilitation and reconstruction;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Government of the Sudan, to co-ordinate efforts of the United Nations system to help the Sudan in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, to mobilize resources for the implementation of those programmes and to keep the international community informed of those needs;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other disasters

Earthquake in Nepal

The UNDP Administrator reported that, on the morning of 21 August 1988, an earthquake measuring 6.7 on the Richter scale shook remote mountainous regions of central and eastern Nepal. The earthquake killed more than 700 people and caused widespread damage to homes, roads, bridges, and drinking-water and irrigation systems.

Through the efforts of UNDRO and the UNDP Resident Representative, who was asked by the Government to co-ordinate the external relief efforts, $3.6 million was mobilized for emergency relief and an assessment was made of needs for longer-term rehabilitation.

Earthquake in the USSR

The Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁾ that, on 7 December 1988, an earthquake of 6.9 on the Richter scale hit the northern part of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Armenia. Some 24,593 lives were lost and more than 8,000 people were partially or fully disabled. The Government estimated that about half a million people were left homeless. Economic damage was estimated at between $21 billion and $33 billion. Total foreign relief aid from 74 countries was the highest reported to UNDRO for a single natural disaster.

Locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa

At each of its three sessions in 1988, the Economic and Social Council discussed the continuing locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa, which had been the subject of a 1986 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁰⁾ and a 1987 report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).⁽²¹⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 5 February, the Council adopted resolution 1988/2 without vote.

Fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/185 of 8 December 1986 on the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa,

Concerned about the unrelentingly destructive effects of the current locust and grasshopper infestation in many regions of Africa,

1. Calls upon the international community to give high priority to the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa, in particular the new infestation of several regions in Mauritania;

2. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 on the situation of the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa.

Fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/185 of 8 December 1986 and Council resolution 1988/2 of 5 February 1988,

Deeply concerned at the magnitude and gravity of the present locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa,

Alarmed by the unrelentingly destructive effects of the locust and grasshopper infestation on many African countries,

Fully aware of the urgent need to spare no effort to counter and eradicate the infestation, as well as the need to take adequate preventive measures against future outbreaks,

Noting that the resources of Africa are insufficient to control the infestation, which will need to be countered by concerted efforts at the national, regional and international levels,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the worsening desert locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa, which may adversely affect food production and cause renewed famine, and reaffirms the need to accord the highest priority to locust and grasshopper control and eradication;

2. Notes with appreciation the efforts of affected countries, donors and regional and international organizations, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, acting individually and jointly, to contain the infestation;

3. Urges donors to increase financial and technical assistance for current and future programmes of locust and grasshopper control, in keeping with the increased requirements of the evolving situation;

4. Calls upon the international community to support fully the locust and grasshopper control activities undertaken by African countries, including the gathering and dissemination of information and prevention, co-ordination and funding activities, as well as the strengthening and establishment of national, regional and international early warning systems for the monitoring of locust and grasshopper infestations;

5. Supports the efforts of the Maghreb countries within the framework of their joint programme of co-ordination to fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, and invites those countries willing to participate in the eradication of that scourge to contribute resources to the common fund established for that purpose by the Governments of Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco and Tunisia;

6. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in close co-operation with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to undertake an assessment of the prevailing techniques used in the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, with a view to identifying and applying more effective and environmentally sound methods;

7. Invites the appropriate bodies, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to give the necessary priority, in their regular activities, to the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to take the necessary measures in this regard;

9. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to keep the situation under constant review and to strengthen that organization's capabilities with regard to the overall co-ordination of the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session the text of the report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to be made to the Council at its second regular session of 1988.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/3

24 May 1988 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Draft by Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Norway, Portugal, Somalia (for African States), Spain, United Kingdom (E/1988/L.25), orally revised; agenda item 1.

Meeting numbers. ESC 6, 11, 12.

On 18 July, a representative of FAO made an oral report to the Council's First (Economic) Committee on the locust and grasshopper situation in Africa. By decision 1988/177 of 29 July, the Council took note of FAO's oral report.

UNDP action. On 1 July, the UNDP Governing Council endorsed an interregional project on locust and grasshopper control.⁽²³⁾ The two-year project, to be executed by FAO with UNDP financing of $3.3 million, would provide emergency assistance to meet short and intermediate needs for desert locust control. The Council urged UNDP, and appealed to other sources of financing, to provide countries affected with resources to cope with the outbreaks of desert locusts and grasshoppers and to contain expected infestations. UNDP and other sources of financing were invited to provide those countries with resources to enable them to devise and implement a regional strategy to control the locust scourge with a view to its eventual eradication. The Council requested UNDP regional offices involved in the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation to co-ordinate their activities closely with the affected countries and/or the appropriate international, regional and subregional organizations, with a view to obtaining effective control of the infestations while safeguarding the environment. It invited donor countries to continue to provide the affected countries with the necessary products, equipment and aircraft.

FAO report. In response to the 24 May request by the Economic and Social Council (see above), the Secretary-General, in October,⁽²⁴⁾ transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the Director-General of FAO on the desert locust plague in Africa. The report stated that, during 1988, the desert locust situation had further deteriorated despite large-scale campaigns in many countries. In March, there was a major swarm invasion of north-west Africa, followed by a southward movement of swarms from spring breeding there into the Sahelian zone in March-much earlier than foreseen. Also, notwithstanding the spraying of over 5 million hectares in north-west Africa, further swarms reached the Sahelian countries between May and July, many of which moved east, reaching Chad and the Sudan in May and northern Ethiopia in late July. In addition, widespread and abundant monsoon rainfall provided favourable breeding conditions. The total invasion area thus extended from Senegal and Mauritania to the Sudan, Ethiopia, Djibouti and Yemen, covering an area of some 8 million square kilometres.

Aerial and ground campaigns had been conducted against all major infestations south of the Sahara with two objectives in mind-limitation of damage to agricultural crops and the destruction of as many infestations as possible to reduce a further spread. Through its Emergency Centre for Locust Operations, FAO continued to co-ordinate the control campaign and, together with the affected countries, analysed the development of the situation, evaluated the needs and worked closely with donors to ensure support. Although those activities were focused on emergency operations, it was recognized that further research was necessary to improve methods of locust survey and control, to find alternative control methods and to accelerate longer-term predictions. Unless the weather became less suitable for locusts, the plague would continue to threaten the livelihood of hundreds of millions of people in over 50 countries. (See also PART SEVEN, Chapter III.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/203 without vote.

International strategy for the fight against locust grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly

Recalling its resolution 41/185 of 8 December 1986 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/3 of 24 May 1988 concerning the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/2 of 5 February 1988, in which the Council drew particular attention to the critical situation in one of the regions where the locust and grasshopper infestation had originated,

Recalling its resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 on the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and 41/29 of 31 October 1986 on the emergency situation in Africa, in which it recognized that food production on that continent must be increased to meet the needs of its populations,

Aware that, in its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on an international decade for natural disaster reduction, it had included grasshopper and locust infestations among the types of natural disasters to be covered by the decade,

Taking note of resolution CM/Res.1173(XLVIII) on locust control in Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,^a

Deeply concerned at the exceptional seriousness and the potential and real dangers of the current locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa, despite the laudable efforts of the affected countries, with the assistance of the international community, as recognized in the report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the desert locust plague in Africa,

Aware that, in the course of the current infestation, swarms of locusts and grasshoppers have affected or may invade the great majority of African countries and other countries in Asia, Latin America, the Caribbean and Europe, and concerned at the disastrous consequences that may result for food production and agriculture in the world,

Taking into account, in that context, the potential problem created by billions of insects capable of devouring as much as 80,000 tons of vegetation and cereal crops per swarm daily, of migrating great distances from their original habitat and of obliterating the livelihood of hundreds of millions of people in some sixty countries, as stated in the status reports of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Alarmed by the unrelentingly destructive effects of the current invasion of locusts and grasshoppers in many countries of Africa and other geographical regions, and concerned at the economic and social consequences, including the reduction in agricultural output, which could continue for several years, the consequent displacement of affected populations and, in particular, the impact on the ecological environment and on medium- and long-term economic and social development,

Convinced that since, of the total area to be treated, only a small portion of the infested areas in Africa have benefited from locust and grasshopper control campaigns, it can be expected, given the extreme seriousness of the current situation, that the cycle of invasion will last beyond 1989 for a minimum period of live years, during which it can be predicted that the plague will intensify and extend to areas that were previously spared,

Aware that current campaigns for locust and grasshopper control have so far been unable to put an end to the infestation, in particular because of the limited financial resources of the affected countries, and convinced that the fight against the plague, which, by virtue of its recurrent nature and geographical extent, is international in scope, requires increased and co-ordinated mobilization of appropriate human, scientific, technical, material and financial resources,

Noting with satisfaction the readiness of donor countries resolutely to support action to fight locust and grasshopper infestation, in the knowledge that the resources of the affected countries and the emergency operations are not in themselves adequate to halt the plague on a lasting basis,

Conscious of the urgent need to define an effective strategy for fighting the locust and grasshopper peril while protecting the health of the populations concerned and the natural ecosystems,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the International Conference on the Locust Plague, held at Fez, Morocco, on 28 and 29 October 1988,^b

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the desert locust plague in Africa;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the worsening locust and grasshopper infestations, especially in Africa, which may adversely affect food production and result in renewed famine, and reaffirms the need to accord the highest priority to locust and grasshopper control and eradication;

3. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the affected countries and expresses its gratitude to donor countries, organizations of the United Nations system and other competent institutions in their efforts to contain the infestation, in particular the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Joint Anti-Locust and Anti-Avarian Organization, the Desert Locust Control Organization for East Africa and the Joint Committee of Mahgreb Experts on Locust and Grasshopper Control;

4. Invites all countries recently threatened by the invasion of desert locusts to take all appropriate measures to develop their own national means of protection against locusts and grasshoppers and to contribute to the implementation of regional infestation control programmes, and encourages the affected countries to continue their efforts in that area;

^bA/C.2/43/9.

5. Calls upon the donor countries and organizations to continue to assist the affected countries to strengthen their control capacities by making available to them, particularly at the current critical stage, inter alia, reconnaissance and spraying aircraft, means of transport and liaison, degradable insecticides, spraying equipment, and, where necessary, specialized technicians, and to continue this assistance as long as the infestation lasts;

6. Calls upon the international community, particularly the developed countries, to support fully the locust and grasshopper control activities undertaken at the national and regional levels by the affected countries, particularly in Africa, specifically in the areas of data collection and dissemination of information, prevention, co-ordination and funding, the establishment of national and regional early warning systems, and the strengthening of existing national systems for the protection of plant life;

7. Invites the international community, particularly the developed countries, to help the affected countries to improve to a considerable extent the present methods of monitoring and control and, specifically, to use remote-sensing techniques as a means of improving the quality of meteorological observations and forecasting in the affected countries, particularly in the regions where locust and grasshopper infestations originate;

8. Also invites the international community, including the organizations of the United Nations system and specifically the United Nations Development Programme, to continue to contribute to the funding for the establishment of programmes agreed on by the affected countries for the training of specialized personnel in the modern techniques of locust and grasshopper control;

9. Calls upon the international scientific community to develop co-ordinated research programmes to identify new and more effective methods of control, with a view to establishing a reliable forecasting system that would permit a better understanding of the relationship between climatic phenomena and the bio-ecology of the desert locust;

10. Requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in close co-operation with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, to undertake an assessment of the pesticides and techniques currently used in the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, in particular the biological fight against the reproduction of larvae, and to test the efficacy of those pesticides and techniques, bearing in mind their effects on the natural environment and the health of the people living in the affected zones;

11. Urges the multilateral financial and development institutions, including the United Nations Development Programme, to give high priority, within the framework of their activities, to the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation and to grant financial and technical assistance to the affected countries, particularly those which have issued appeals for international assistance or have declared a state of emergency;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of the international ad hoc group of experts established as part of the preparations for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction on the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, with particular reference to the scope of research programmes on its biological, bio-climatic and chemical aspects and on the risks of mutation that might make locusts more resistant to insecticides or to the effects of climate;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to consult with Member States and competent organizations concerning the establishment, under the auspices of the United Nations and the technical and organizational responsibility of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, of an international operational entity operating at the regional or subregional levels to provide direct support to the countries affected and to undertake co-ordinated actions to control locusts and grasshoppers, particularly in regions that are seriously infested and/or to which access is difficult;

14. Requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to establish, to that end, a focused and action-oriented working group of representatives of the affected countries, the donor countries and relevant organizations to prepare a detailed plan to fight locust and grasshopper infestation, including the necessary modalities and means for the establishment of such an operational entity;

15. Agrees that the actions proposed above will be financed through extrabudgetary resources and requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to mobilize voluntary contributions, if appropriate through a pledging conference, for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to keep under review the question of the locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa, and to undertake, in consultation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the necessary action to make the world community more aware of the disastrous cumulative consequences of locust and grasshopper infestation, specifically with respect to food security;

17. Decide to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the question of locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at that session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989, a detailed report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution, including a report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on developments in the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

In his report on UNDRO activities during 1988 and 1989,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that disaster mitigation (prevention and preparedness) activities fell into two broad categories: those of a technical and preventive nature involving the scientific and engineering aspects of disaster reduction and related legislation, including estimating the frequency and magnitude of future hazards, delineation of high-risk areas, identifying restrictions to be placed on land use and urban development in such areas and reinforcing structures to resist the largest hazards that could reasonably be expected; and logistical planning or preparedness activities involving preparation of plans for alert and evacuation in the face of imminent danger, as well as for post-disaster rescue and provision of food and shelter for victims. Related aspects included establishing criteria for decision-making to implement the elements of the plan, training local officials and educating the population in high-risk areas. Comprehensive disaster mitigation programmes recommended by UNDRO and implemented with UNDRO assistance in a number of countries involved a five-step sequence of activities covering those categories.

Since 1988 coincided with the preparation phase for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see below), the period was one of increased world-wide awareness of the benefits of disaster preparedness and prevention, and the number of requests to UNDRO for assistance increased accordingly. The report described regional and national projects carried out during the year. In addition to regional workshops and seminars, an international training seminar on engineering aspects of earthquake mitigation was held at Dushanbe, USSR, in October.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

In response to a 1987 resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ in which the General Assembly designated the 1990s as a decade in which the international community, under the auspices of the United Nations, would pay special attention to fostering international co-operation in the field of natural disaster reduction, the Secretary-General submitted in October 1988 a progress report on preparations for the decade. (26),

The report noted that it was not possible to estimate the loss of human lives and damage caused by natural disasters, especially since many went unreported. However, major disasters in 1988 alone, which included extensive floods in Bangladesh and the Sudan, a hurricane in the Caribbean, a typhoon in China, an earthquake in the border region of India and Nepal, a landslide in Venezuela and locust infestations in northern Africa, accounted for at least 18,000 deaths and a minimum of $3 billion in material damage.

The report gave examples of the potential of disaster-mitigation measures for reducing human and material losses and outlined preparations for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. It noted that the Secretary-General, in February 1988, established a steering committee on the Decade to assist him in developing a framework to attain its objectives and goals. In addition, he appointed a panel of 25 eminent scientists and experts which held two meetings in 1988 (Geneva, 5-8 July; New York, 3-6 October). Two additional meetings were tentatively scheduled for 1989. In March 1988, in Washington D.C., the United Nations, in co-operation with the United States National Academy of Sciences, convened an informal meeting of scientists, engineers and representatives of the United Nations system to review the possible orientation of and preparatory arrangements for the Decade. Also, on 29 July, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation drew the attention of Member States to the provision of the 1987 Assembly resolution⁽²⁵⁾ regarding the establishment of national committees. Governments were asked to provide information on action taken towards establishing such committees or other official bodies for the Decade. The report also commented on co-operation with non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations and on funding and secretariat support.

The report stated that the United Nations system had a critical catalytic and facilitating role in inspiring and supporting the activities of local communities, national authorities, regional organizations and the international community as a whole. It was also called on to become an international centre for exchanging information, storing documentation and co-ordinating international efforts. Several United Nations entities had a long tradition in promoting the study of natural disaster phenomena and the application of counter-disaster measures. Many activities of those entities lent themselves to achieving the Decade's goals and objectives and that experience was being mobilized in the preparations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/202 without vote.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Considering that natural disasters, particularly in the past two decades, have adversely affected the lives of at least 800 million people and caused considerable damage to infrastructure and property worldwide, especially in developing countries,

Recalling that in 1988 many countries suffered severe natural disasters, such as the extensive floods in the Sudan and Bangladesh, typhoons in the Philippines, hurricanes in countries of Latin America and the Caribbean, locust infestations, mainly in Africa, and other natural disasters in several regions of the developing world, and recognizing the pressing need for reducing the impact of natural disasters for all people, in particular those in developing countries,

Recognising the important responsibility of the United Nations system as a whole for promoting international co-operation in the study of natural disasters and in the development of techniques to mitigate risks arising from, as well as for providing assistance and co-ordinating disaster relief, preparedness and prevention,

Recalling its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987, in which it decided to designate the 1990s as a decade in which the international community, under the auspices of the United Nations, would pay special attention to fostering international co-operation in the field of natural disaster reduction,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/51 of 26 July 1988 on assistance in cases of natural disaster and other disaster situations,

Noting with appreciation the progress that has been made in the preparations for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, within the United Nations system as well as by Member States, since the adoption of resolution 42/169,

Welcoming the establishment by the Secretary-General of the international ad hoc group of experts on the Decade,

Convinced that concerted international action for the reduction of natural disasters over the course of the 1990s would give genuine impetus to a series of concrete measures at the national, regional and international levels,

Welcoming the fact that national committees on natural disaster reduction have been established in some countries and that preparations for establishing such committees are under way in other countries,

1. Takes note with interest of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the preparations for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction;

2. Notes with satisfaction the progress made by the international ad hoc group of experts on the Decade in the preparations for the Decade;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, made in paragraph 5 of resolution 42/169, to develop an appropriate framework of action at all levels for attaining the objective and goals referred to in paragraphs 3 and 4 of that resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General further to strengthen co-ordination within the United Nations system in order to ensure better preparation of the Decade;

5. Calls upon all Governments further to prepare for participation during the Decade in concerted international action for the reduction of natural disasters by, as appropriate, establishing national committees in co-operation with the relevant scientific and technological communities;

6. Also calls upon Governments to keep the Secretary-General informed of their countries' plans and of assistance that can be provided so that the United Nations may become an international centre for the exchange of information and the co-ordination of international efforts concerning activities in support of the objective and goals of the Decade, thus enabling each Member State to benefit from the experience of other countries;

7. Emphasizes the importance of technical co-operation among developing countries and mutual assistance in the transfer of technology, and encourages the international community to play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical and scientific co-operation among developing countries in the field of natural disaster reduction;

8. Expresses its appreciation to those countries which have provided or pledged voluntary contributions for the preparation of the report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 42/169, and calls upon other countries, international organizations and other organizations to provide voluntary contributions for that purpose;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the international ad hoc group of experts on the Decade in its future work the increasingly serious problems of locust infestation and floods;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to incorporate in the report to be submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 42/169 a definition of the catalytic and facilitating role of the United Nations system, including that described in paragraph 6 above, and to submit that report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council, as requested in resolution 42/169.

Emergency relief and assistance

Afghanistan

Following the signing on 14 April 1988 of the Geneva Accords between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the one hand and by the USSR and the United States as guarantors on the other, which began the peace process in Afghanistan after nine years of war (see PART TWO, Chapter III), the Secretary-General, on 11 May, appointed Sadrudin Aga Khan as Co-ordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan.

Since 1979, more than 5.5 million people had had to abandon their homes, lands and country to seek asylum in other countries, particularly Iran and Pakistan, and more than 2 million had also fled their homes to the apparent safety of urban centres and remote rural areas. The return of those displaced persons to their home areas would be one of the world's largest operations, as it amounted to the resettlement of some 45 per cent of Afghanistan's total population. The war not only had caused the reported deaths of almost a million people but had resulted in the permanent disablement of tens of thousands. As a consequence, there were hundreds of thousands of widows, orphans and disabled people who would need care and assistance for years to come. In addition, Afghanistan had suffered extensive damage to all sectors of its economy.

On 10 June, the Secretary-General launched an appeal for humanitarian relief and economic assistance to Afghanistan comprising two phases. The first related to immediate relief and rehabilitation and was allocated an 18-month time frame with a total cost of some $1.2 billion. The second consisted of longer-term rehabilitation of the country's infrastructure covering three years with a cost of some $839.6 million.

On 14 June 1988, a Conference on United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan was held in New York. The Conference had before it a report by the Co-ordinator,⁽¹⁾ in which he stated that the co-ordinated programme was a collaborative undertaking involving many agencies and programmes of the United Nations system. Inter-agency meetings were held in New York on 28 and 29 April and at Geneva on 23 May. The Co-ordinator visited the executive heads of FAO, IFAD, UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the World Food Programme (WFP) and the World Health Organization (WHO) and had consultations with the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. At the end of May, he led a mission to the region and had discussions with the Governments of Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan. The Co-ordinator outlined the programme and his own role, described arrangements required to assist voluntary repatriation, and discussed other components of the programme—food aid and related logistical support; agriculture, irrigation and rural development; health programmes and water supply; human resources and culture; and communications, industry and natural resources.

On 24 June, the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund, administered by the Co-ordinator, was established to receive cash donations. Inputs of food and other contributions in kind would be routed directly to the agency or programme concerned, with the Co-ordinator being informed of such contributions.

In his first consolidated report,⁽²⁾ the Co-ordinator stated that a number of countries pledged or deposited initial contributions at the 14 June Conference and further pledges and contributions were received following visits by him to a number of donor countries. Those initiatives brought the total donor response to some $97 million by 31 August.

A Pledging Conference on United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan was held in New York on 12 October, to which the Co-ordinator submitted a report containing background information on programmes and projects.⁽³⁾ He noted that the prolific deployment of mines was one of the most damaging aspects of the Afghanistan conflict and that his Office was developing training programmes in mine-clearance and mass public information and education in mine-recognition and avoidance. In response to the need for treatment, and rehabilitation of the large number of disabled persons, particularly those suffering from war-related injuries, the Co-ordinator established a Committee on Actions for Disabled Afghans, the first meeting of which took place at Geneva on 1 September. The continuing conflict and fluid political situation within the country obstructed an early return of refugees from Iran and Pakistan. The Co-ordinator therefore initiated a series of missions to assess conditions and needs within Afghanistan, the first of which took place in late August and early September. He identified a number of projects to be carried out during the first 18 months of the relief and rehabilitation programme and gave estimates of their cost.

At the Pledging Conference, the Secretary-General and the Co-ordinator launched "Operation Salam", following which donors announced their pledges. The most important pledge was that of the USSR, the equivalent of $660 million, mostly in kind. Other generous pledges were made by a number of donors, both at the Conference and in the following weeks. The United States advised the Co-ordinator of its planned contribution in 1989: $33.1 million in food aid to WFP, $20 million to UNHCR and $2 million for the de-mining programme.

As at 31 December 1988, the total donor response to the Secretary-General's appeal amounted to some $890 million both in cash and in kind.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1988/52 without vote.

United Nations assistance programmes relating to Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Co-ordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan made before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Council on 21 July 1988,

Convinced that a co-ordinated programme of assistance and relief efforts will entail collaborative undertakings by many different agencies and programmes within the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General, and supports the efforts of the Co-ordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan;
2. Urges all Member States to contribute to the fullest extent possible to the United Nations effort to assist the people of Afghanistan;

Lebanon

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon between August 1987 and July 1988.⁽⁵⁾ He summarized the general situation affecting assistance efforts, including the overall performance of the Lebanese economy. With regard to the role of the United Nations, although the system had significantly upgraded its activities and presence in Lebanon, lack of political stability and security problems made it difficult for it to carry out its reconstruction and development programmes.

On receiving the findings of a high-level inter-agency mission which visited Lebanon in October 1987 to reassess emergency relief needs, the Secretary-General, in December, launched an appeal to the international community for approximately $85 million on behalf of the 250,000 most affected Lebanese families. As at 31 July 1988, over $70 million had been pledged by donor nations to United Nations agencies, the Lebanese Government and NGOs.

In order to ensure a co-ordinated and responsible distribution of donations received, the Secretary-General appointed Ragnar Gudmundsson as Special Representative for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon. He was also appointed the UNDP Resident Representative/Resident Co-ordinator for operational activities; he assumed his functions at Beirut in July 1988.

Because of the prevailing circumstances in Lebanon, United Nations activities continued to focus on providing emergency relief aid and the maintenance of essential services, such as health care and water supply. The report summarized the activities of the following United Nations programmes and specialized agencies: UNICEF, UNDP, UNDRO, UNHCR, WFP, ILO, FAO, UNESCO and WHO. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon provided humanitarian assistance in its area of operation in order to alleviate emergency needs and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East assisted Palestine refugees there (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

The Secretary-General concluded that relief assistance from the international community in response to his appeal, either through United Nations channels or on a bilateral basis, significantly alleviated the suffering of the Lebanese people. Although there were signs of a slight improvement in the economic situation in the first half of 1988, the United Nations would continue its efforts to mobilize support in terms of emergency relief aid and assistance for Lebanon's reconstruction and development.

The future economic development of Lebanon and the well-being of its people depended on the restoration of peace, stability and mutual trust among the various parties. Circumstances permitting, the Secretary-General intended to send a high-level inter-agency mission to evaluate emergency needs and might again have to appeal for additional emergency relief assistance. He called on the parties concerned to promote the restoration of peace and stability in Lebanon.

UNDP action. On 1 July,⁽⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council asked the Administrator to take urgent steps, in collaboration with the Government and the World Bank, to obtain the statistical data needed to adjust Lebanon's interim illustrative indicative planning figure (IPF) for the fourth planning cycle (1987-1991). He was also asked to continue to approve projects submitted by the Government to be financed by the IPF for the fourth cycle and by remaining funds brought forward from the third cycle. In addition, he was asked, in co-operation with the Government, to accelerate programme activities in Lebanon. In that regard, the Council authorized expenditures in the next year up to 60 per cent of the current provisional IPF for the fourth cycle and the carry-over from the third cycle. The Council decided to consider the situation in Lebanon as a matter of priority in 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1988/50 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Referring to General Assembly resolution 42/199 of 11 December 1987 and previous resolutions in which the Assembly requested the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand and intensify their programmes of assistance in response to the needs of Lebanon,

Aware of the deteriorating socio-economic conditions of the Lebanese people and the magnitude of their unmet needs,

Noting with great concern the unprecedented inflation in Lebanon during the last four years and the catastrophic erosion of the value of the Lebanese currency, which is now worth only one hundredth of its value in October 1984,

Appeals to all Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance for the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Mozambique

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ an oral report was made on 7 July 1988 to the Economic and Social Council's Third Committee on assistance to Mozambique. By decision 1988/158 of 26 July, the Council took note of that report.

In an August report to the Assembly,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had consulted with the Government of Mozambique on the implementation of the 1986 resolution on assistance to it.⁽⁷⁾ He had been informed that, while Mozambique was endeavouring to maintain its regular development programmes, much of its energy and resources were taken up in pursuing its emergency and rehabilitation programme (1987-1990), which combined short-term emergency relief with rehabilitation and development activities, with the support of the international community. Since a comprehensive report, prepared by Mozambique in collaboration with the United Nations for a donors' conference in April 1988 (see below), covered emergency and rehabilitation needs, the Government decided that there was no need for another full report to be submitted to the Assembly until its emergency and rehabilitation programme was fully launched and funded. The Secretary-General therefore submitted an interim report on assistance to Mozambique.

The interim report stated that social and economic conditions in Mozambique had been deteriorating since the early 1980s, when the country began to experience sabotage, terrorism and a major disruption of its social life as a result of externally supported acts of destabilization. Together with adverse climatic conditions in a number of regions, the situation brought about a decline in agricultural production of over 50 per cent between 1981 and 1986. The internal conflict continued unabated, resulting in over 2.2 million Mozambicans being affected by severe food shortages and an additional 1.1 million displaced from their homes. In 1987, the Government launched its emergency and rehabilitation programme with substantial support from the World Bank, IMF and the United Nations system. Since the programme's introduction, real GDP was estimated to have risen by 4 per cent in 1987 and rural and industrial production had grown by 10 per cent.

On 26 and 27 April 1988, under the aegis of the United Nations, the Conference on Emergency Assistance to Mozambique was held at Maputo, attended by delegations from 37 countries and many intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The Conference raised some $270 million against a target of $330 million, with the bulk of contributions directed towards food aid and logistical requirements.

The report discussed the deterioration in Mozambique's economy since the early 1980s and described the evolution of the emergency situation, including recent developments such as floods, a tropical depression, late and insufficient rainfall and infestations of pests. Violence continued to disrupt relief efforts in many areas and lack of security hampered relief distribution to outlying districts. Since government forces had retaken several zones from bandits, a massive return of Mozambicans in Malawi to those zones was foreseen, adding to the country's food shortage.

The report concluded by outlining new economic policies instituted by the Government and action undertaken within the context of the emergency and rehabilitation programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/208 without vote.

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 41/197 of 8 December 1986, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously to the call for assistance to Mozambique,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique, including the annex thereto,

Considering that Mozambique continues to face a complex emergency situation of extreme proportions, as illustrated in the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with deep concern that Mozambique has continued to suffer from the cumulative and negative impact of externally supported acts of destabilization, as well as persistent natural disasters, resulting in, inter alia, enormous losses of human life, widespread destruction of infrastructure and large numbers of displaced persons, which, combined with an adverse international economic situation, have led to an overall retrogression of the country's development,

Recognizing that substantial international assistance is still required for the implementation of emergency, reconstruction and development projects,

Stressing that a proper response to the emergency situation in Mozambique requires the reinforcement of relief aid with additional rehabilitation and development assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique, including the annex thereto;

2. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Government of Mozambique, as reflected in its emergency and economic recovery programmes, and, in this context, stresses the imperative need for substantial international assistance in support of these efforts;

3. Expresses its appreciation to, and commends, the Secretary-General and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system for the measures taken to organize international assistance programmes for Mozambique;

4. Expresses its gratitude to all States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have rendered assistance to Mozambique;

5. Notes, however, that the total assistance provided to date to Mozambique continues to fall short of the country's urgent requirements;

6. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to continue to provide relief aid, including food aid and logistics support, so as to improve distribution capability and prevent further widespread starvation;

7. Draws the attention of the international community to the non-food sectors, as described in the documents of the Conference on Emergency Assistance to Mozambique, held at Maputo on 26 and 27 April 1988, the funding of which continues to lag, particularly the agriculture, health and education sectors;

8. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide and expand technical, financial and other material assistance to Mozambique wherever possible, especially in the form of grants, and urges them to give priority to the inclusion of Mozambique in their development assistance programmes;

9. Invites the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the financial, technical and material assistance required by Mozambique;

(b) To continue to co-ordinate the work of the United Nations system, in close co-operation with the Government of Mozambique, in the implementation of the country's emergency and rehabilitation programmes;

(c) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1989, of the status of the programmes of assistance to Mozambique;

(d) To prepare, on the basis of consultations with the Government of Mozambique, a report on the implementation of the emergency and rehabilitation programmes for that country and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

Somalia

On 31 October 1988, the President of Somalia drew the attention of the Secretary-General to the grave humanitarian situation that had developed in the northern provinces of Somalia as a result of attacks by armed bandits on towns and villages and on public installations, and to the urgent need for emergency assistance to help cope with the large numbers of displaced persons and the repair, rehabilitation and reconstruction of vital public facilities and installations. The President stated that more than 600,000 people were estimated to be in camps and another 400,000 were scattered about the countryside. In one town alone (Hargeysa), 70 per cent of permanent dwellings had been destroyed or badly damaged. Schools, hospitals, public markets and power and water installations had been destroyed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/206 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Somalia

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the message addressed to the Secretary-General by the head of State of Somalia, in which he drew attention to the grave humanitarian situation that has developed in the northern provinces of Somalia as a result of attacks by armed bandits on towns and villages and on public installations, and appealed for emergency assistance to help the Government cope with the large numbers of displaced persons and the repair, rehabilitation and reconstruction of vital public facilities and installations,

Conscious of the critical economic problems already confronting Somalia, as well as the great burden that has been imposed on its economy by the massive presence of over 700,000 refugees,

Bearing in mind that Somalia has been included in the list of least developed countries of the world and that its social and economic infrastructure is barely sufficient to meet the needs of its own inhabitants,

Recognizing that the widespread destruction that has taken place in the northern provinces of Somalia requires the immediate response of the international community for an emergency assistance programme that would provide food, water and shelter for the inhabitants made homeless as a result of these events, and for a programme of emergency assistance and rehabilitation to enable the affected population to return to their homes and become self-reliant,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and people of Somalia in facing the complex disaster situation in the northern provinces;

2. Welcomes the current efforts of the Secretary-General and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and the assistance so far provided to the people and Government of Somalia in coping with the emergency;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize international assistance and to co-ordinate the efforts of the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system in order to respond in a concerted and effective manner to the request of the Government of Somalia for humanitarian assistance, and to carry out an assessment of priority humanitarian needs, in close co-operation with the government authorities and with the organizations of the United Nations system, and bring the findings to the attention of the international community without delay;

4. Calls upon all States and the competent inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to ensure an effective response to the needs identified by the Secretary-General for relief operations, rehabilitation and reconstruction;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

In June 1988, the Prime Minister of the Sudan requested the Secretary-General to alert the international community to the grave situation in his country and to appeal for emergency assistance to respond to the urgent requirements of the affected people. In an October report to the General Assembly on emergency assistance to the Sudan,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that over the preceding few years the Sudan had found it increasingly difficult to cope with the cumulative impact of ongoing or recurrent emergencies such as internal strife, floods, drought, widespread famine, locust depredations and influxes of refugees from neighbouring countries. Those emergencies had created additional social and economic burdens for the Sudanese people who were already adversely affected by the depressed state of the country's economy.

In response to the Government's request for support in order to undertake a review of the situation, to update data on the number, condition and background of the affected population and to develop a strategy for early implementation of a programme of immediate emergency assistance, the Secretary-General sent a high-level mission to the Sudan in July. However, torrential rains and devastating floods in early August effectively paralysed Khartoum until mid-September, wrought additional destruction in several parts of the country and delayed implementation of the agreed programme by two months.

In late September, a follow-up inter-agency mission travelled to all accessible parts of the country where large numbers of displaced people were reported. The mission discussed its findings and recommendations with the Prime Minister before leaving the country on 11 October. The Secretary-General noted that the Assembly had adopted resolution 43/8 on 18 October dealing with the floods in the Sudan. His report responded to the Assembly's request that he keep the international community informed of the Sudan's emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction needs.

Following a description of the background to the crisis in the Sudan, the report outlined the response of the United Nations to the emergency and summarized a policy statement of the Government. It then described an overall emergency strategy for assistance to displaced persons, to be based on a three-pronged approach focused on the geographic areas where the needs of the people were the most acute.

With regard to emergency humanitarian requirements, it was estimated that the total cost would amount to some $69.7 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/52 without vote.

Special programme of assistance to the Sudan
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/8 of 18 October 1988 on emergency assistance to the Sudan, in which it recognized the disastrous impact of torrential rains and unprecedented floods that devastated Khartoum and the north of the country in August 1988, causing the destruction of over 300,000 dwellings and widespread damage to the country's social and economic infrastructure,

Recalling the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Deeply concerned about the serious plight of over two million Sudanese nationals who have been displaced or seriously affected by civil strife, famine and drought,

Noting that these grave problems are in addition to those already created in the country by the presence of over one million refugees,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take emergency action to alleviate the suffering of these victims and improve the conditions of life of the displaced population,

Conscious of the great efforts of the Government and the people of the Sudan in responding to the urgent humanitarian needs of the displaced population,

Noting with satisfaction the prompt response made by a number of Governments, international agencies and non-governmental organizations in providing emergency relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of these disasters and their long-term consequences will require, in addition to the ongoing efforts of the Government and the people of the Sudan, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad support in order to meet immediate emergency as well as longer-term rehabilitation needs,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the findings and recommendations of a high-level mission, which assessed the conditions of the displaced population and assisted in the formulation of an interim assistance programme focusing on the urgent humanitarian and rehabilitation requirements of the displaced,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and the people of the Sudan in facing a grave and complex humanitarian and economic situation;
2. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to Governments and international and non-governmental organizations that provided support and assistance to the Government of the Sudan in its relief and rehabilitation efforts;
3. Recognizes the valuable efforts of the Government of the Sudan to provide assistance to the people affected;
4. Recognizes also the importance of intense and wide co-operation with international relief organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to ensure the provision of humanitarian assistance where needed in all areas affected;

5. Takes note of the interim assistance programme contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Calls upon all States to contribute generously to programmes for the relief and rehabilitation of displaced persons;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community more aware of the enormous difficulties facing the displaced population and to mobilize assistance to the Sudan;

8. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to organize, as requested by the Government of the Sudan and in close co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, a meeting of bilateral donors and pertinent international institutions and non-governmental organizations in order to mobilize resources needed to implement a follow-up emergency assistance programme covering the rehabilitation and resettlement needs of displaced persons;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989 of his efforts and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

Although global trade expanded rapidly in 1988, growth was largely concentrated in the developed market-economy countries. Some areas of the world, particularly countries of Africa and Latin America, continued to perform unsatisfactorily, due mainly to their debt burden and the economic disorder caused by it. Prices of primary commodities showed some improvement, enhancing the import capacity of some commodity producers, but that was more than offset by a large increase in the price of manufactures.

Two landmarks in international trade during the year gave cause for renewed optimism. First, negotiations under the Global System of Trade Preferences were successfully concluded, which, it was hoped, would be a catalyst for creating a potentially dynamic preferential market among developing countries, stimulating global trade and making developing countries more important trading partners for industrialized countries. Secondly, the final obstacle towards implementing the Common Fund for Commodities was overcome and the Agreement was expected to come into force in 1989.

The gravity of the debt problem, which dominated the relationship between the developed and the developing countries, was discussed by the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and by the General Assembly. In December, the Assembly noted that it was essential to reaffirm the shared responsibility of all parties involved and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts towards a common understanding on a solution (resolution 43/198). Following consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on international monetary issues, the Assembly requested him to monitor the international monetary situation and provide information on proposals for convening a conference on the topic (43/187).

In the area of international transport, seaborne trade and maritime transport improved in 1988 as the world economy showed signs of recovery and the price of oil fell. However, the disequilibrium between demand and supply of tonnage remained a serious problem for the industry. Developing countries were also plagued by the high proportion of freight costs to cost, insurance and freight import values as compared to that for developed market-economy countries.

UNCTAD VII follow-up

In September/October 1988,(1) the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) evaluated progress made in implementing the Final Act of the seventh (1987) session of the Conference (UNCTAD VII).(2)

Following a debate on the issue, the TDB President summed up the views expressed. There was general agreement on the importance of carrying forward the implementation of the Final Act in order to revitalize development, growth and international trade. Representatives noted that some progress had been achieved and certain advances made since UNCTAD VII, particularly in relation to official resource flows to certain groups of developing countries. However, there was a general sense among members of the Group of 77 developing countries that overall progress in the implementation process had been slow and fell short of expectations based on the commitment embodied in the Final Act. They cited the inadequacy of responses to the debt problem of developing countries, their overall need for external resources for development on appropriate conditions, the unavailability of liquidity, exchange instability, the need to strengthen the role of the commodity sector, commitments on standstill and roll-back, structural adjustment, progress in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations in areas of interest to developing countries, maintenance of the generalized, non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal character of the generalized system of preferences and support for the development efforts of the least developed countries (LDCs).

The importance of follow-up work by the UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery, including the Board, and by the UNCTAD secretariat was stressed.

International trade

International trade grew faster than expected in 1987, according to the World Economic Survey 1988,(1) with the volume of world trade increasing by just over 4 per cent. The growth was mostly accounted for by a noticeable improvement in non-oil trade. The value of world trade rose by around 15 per cent in United States dollar terms, partly reflecting the fall of the dollar in 1987. Exports increased to approximately $2.4 trillion; agricultural exports increased by about 4 per cent and exports of manufactures attained a growth rate of 5 per cent after a 3.5 per cent increase in 1986. There were indications that the rate of increase of exports was likely to be sustained in 1988.

The improved performance of world trade was due mainly to an increase in the imports of the developed market economies and to the vigorous performance in the non-fuel exports of the developing countries. Total imports of the developed market economies grew by over 5 per cent. This growth reflected not only buoyant trade among those economies, but also an increase in their imports from developing countries. Developing countries as a whole increased their imports by 2.5 per cent, although imports of the energy-exporting developing countries declined. There was an increase of almost 23 per cent in current dollar terms of the export of manufactures from the newly industrializing economies to the developed market economies.

Trade policy

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1988(2) stated that, despite repeated commitments by the major trading nations towards the liberalization of international trade, the extent to which trade flows were managed was on the increase. The gradual abandonment of multilateralism in favour of the bilateral approach to resolving international trade conflicts translated itself into increasing protectionism through the application of a wide range of non-tariff measures (NTMS), which had serious consequences for the exports of the developing countries in particular. The resurgence of protectionist trade policies was a response to wide fluctuations in exchange rates, to demand-management policies to control inflation and the attendant slow economic growth of the developed market economies, and to the increasing competitiveness of the exports of the newly industrializing countries.

The World Economic Survey 1988(1) observed that the signing of a bilateral trade agreement between Canada and the United States in December 1987 and the imminent conclusion of a similar agreement between Mexico and the United States, although indicative of the trend towards bilateralism in international trade relations, should significantly expand the area of freer trade.

An encouraging sign was the continuing belief of countries in the multilateral system, as demonstrated through the growing use of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) dispute settlement procedures and the number of countries wishing to join GATT. The progress made in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and the intense interest generated by the mid-term review of those negotiations were also testimony to the desire of countries to strengthen the multilateral trading system.

Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations

The end of 1988 marked the mid-term of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which were launched in September 1986 at Punta del Este, Uruguay.⁽³⁾ The mid-term review was intended to address the difficulties that had emerged and to provide a timely impetus to the negotiating process (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII).

TDB, as mandated by UNCTAD VII,⁽⁴⁾ considered developments and issues in the Uruguay Round of particular concern to developing countries. The UNCTAD secretariat submitted a document by the Group of 77 setting forth its views.⁽⁵⁾ On 30 September, TDB decided to annex the document to its report.⁽⁶⁾

According to the Group of 77, the progress achieved so far in the Round was clearly uneven. The developing countries were disconcerted by the unsatisfactory progress recorded in such areas as the implementation of standstill and roll-back commitments, tropical products, textiles and agriculture. In general, the positions and interests of the developing countries were not being given favourable consideration in keeping with the spirit of the Punta del Este meeting in 1986. In particular, the developing countries called on the developed countries to fulfil their commitments on standstill and roll-back of NTMS and to provide restriction-free entry for tropical products into their markets. They were also of the view that there should be a clear demonstration of political will to return the textiles trade to the GATT rules and that concrete progress should be achieved towards removing distortions and liberalizing trade in agriculture. The Group of 77 stressed that the principle of differential and more favourable treatment for developing countries, as provided for in the Punta del Este Declaration,⁽⁷⁾ should also be assessed at the mid-term review in December 1988. The Group also pointed to other developments which risked jeopardizing the outcome of the negotiations, including the tendency on the part of some developed countries to link trade in goods with matters such as developing countries' policies on foreign direct investment, protection of intellectual property, services and fair labour standards, and the continuing monetary and financial instability in the world economy and its effect on the developing countries.

Technical assistance

On 10 May,⁽⁷⁾ TDB requested the secretariats of UNCTAD and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to finalize expeditiously consultations on project proposals for technical assistance to developing countries in connection with the Uruguay Round. It invited UNDP to consider favourably and expedite its decision on the project proposals and called on the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take steps to make fully operational the programme of technical assistance, keep interested member States informed of the programmes under implementation and continue to consult with other organizations in order to enhance co-ordination and complementarity of technical assistance activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 43/188 without vote.

Report of the Trade and Development Board The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recalling also its resolution 42/175 of 11 December 1987 on the seventh session of the Conference,

Noting that the Trade and Development Report, 1988 has made a constructive contribution to the consideration by the Trade and Development Board, at the first part of its thirty-fifth session, of the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, as well as to the Board's consideration of the debt and development problems of the developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-fourth session, and the first part of its thirty-fifth session;

2. Welcomes the review of the implementation of the guidelines contained in the annex to Board resolution 222(XXI) of 27 September 1980 undertaken by the Board at its thirty-fifth session and urges the Governments concerned to implement fully the relevant provisions contained in Board resolution 358(XXXV) of 5 October 1988;

3. Urges all Governments, bearing in mind their particular contributions, commensurate with their economic weight, and their commitments as embodied in the Final Act, to give full and prompt effect to the policies and measures agreed to therein through continuing action, individually and collectively and in competent international organizations, in pursuit of the objective of revitalizing development, growth and international trade;

4. Requests the Board, in accordance with its mandate, to keep under review the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Act;

5. Welcomes the contribution of the Board to inter-governmental discussions on the interdependence of economic issues and policies, particularly in the interrelated areas of trade, money, finance, debt, commodities and development, and notes the efforts under way to enhance the outcome of the Board's debates on interdependence, as well as the substantive linkages with other discussions on related questions in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other organizations;

6. Stresses that it is important that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations respond positively to the interests and concerns of all parties thereto, in accordance with its objectives, and that it promote growth and development, particularly in developing countries;

7. Invites the Board to continue to follow closely developments and issues in the Uruguay Round that are of particular concern to the developing countries;

8. Notes that the Board has been requested to review and study, in depth, developments in the international trading system; in doing so it could, respecting the principles of most-favoured-nation treatment and non-discrimination, make recommendations on principles and policies related to international trade and make proposals as to the strengthening and improvement of the trading system, with a view to giving it a more universal and dynamic character, as well as to making it more responsive to the needs of developing countries and supportive of accelerated economic growth and development, particularly of developing countries;

9. Notes also the imminent entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities and invites the ratifying States, with the active support of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take the necessary action to bring the Common Fund into operation at an early date as an important and useful instrument of international co-operation on commodities;

10. Takes note of Board decision 356(XXXIV) of 10 May 1988 containing agreed conclusions regarding trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, urges the Board to elaborate further a programme for the promotion of trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, in particular East-South trade, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in his consultations referred to in paragraph 105 (27) of the Final Act, to seek ways and means of broadening and strengthening inter-system trade relations, in particular East-South trade;

11. Invites the Board to contribute effectively to the preparations for the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, in close co-operation with the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/915/Add.2) without vote. 6 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.77 & Corr.1), based on informal consultations on draft by Tunisia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/43/L.55); agenda item 82 (b).

Data base on trade measures

On 10 May,(8) TDB, recognizing that the UNCTAD data base on trade measures was a valuable source of information on general and product-specific trade measures, decided that the UNCTAD secretariat should provide the information contained in the data base and noted that any dissemination would be the secretariat's responsibility. It also decided that the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Definitions and Methodology Employed in the UNCTAD Data Base on Trade Measures should examine the methodology employed in the data base to improve its utility for analytical purposes and make provision for the comments of member States to be reflected in it. The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to take action on the recommendations of the Group of Experts.

The Group, at its second session (Geneva, 16-20 May 1988),(9) examined questions of definitions and methodology employed in the data base and adopted recommendations for submission to TDB. The recommendations covered measures for the inclusion of comments of member States, expansion of country coverage and scope of trade measures, the updating of the data base, questions relating to nomenclature and verification, use of data base material, analysis, technical assistance and co-operation with other organizations. The Group urged the secretariat to continue to refine the methodology, to examine the comparability of data to improve its assessment of NTMS, and to give priority to the needs of developing countries in this area.

On 5 October,(6) TDB took note of the Group's report.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

In April/May 1988, TDB conducted its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. UNCTAD VII(4) had agreed that the review should have wider coverage by taking into account the specific interests of developing countries.

The Board had before it a two-part UNCTAD secretariat report,(10) part I of which covered developments in trade action and trade legislation in 1987, assessed official trade intervention and discussed selected issues such as tropical products, trade measures in high technology sectors and national mechanisms for fighting protectionism. It also gave a profile of tariffs in developed market-economy countries and addressed the prospects for trade expansion for developing countries that could result from tariff liberalization. Part II examined trends in production and trade in all sectors and their underlying factors. It also discussed economic policies and structural adjustment in pursuit of international competitiveness. An addendum to the report(11) contained statistical information.

The Board also had before it information provided by member States(12) on action taken by them relevant to agreements and commitments in an UNCTAD VI (1983) resolution that dealt with the subject.(13)

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), in April, adopted a decision(14) in which it agreed that achieving a stronger social consensus was a particularly important condition for effective stabilization and structural adjustment programmes. It called for action among organizations of the United Nations system to develop a system-wide approach to structural adjustment and related issues.

In October,(15) ACC considered that increased collaboration and concerted action within the United Nations system should continue to promote structural adjustment policies that would lead to a more efficient allocation of resources and provide an adequate basis for renewed growth and development. It also considered that the United Nations system should pool its information and experience so as to assist developing countries in formulating their medium- and long-term development policies and, in particular, in devising the best way to address social priorities, including the needs of the most disadvantaged, during the adjustment process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In October 1988, the Second Committee had before it a draft resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ on protectionism and structural adjustment, consideration of which had been postponed annually by the Assembly since 1980. By the draft, the Assembly would urge developed countries to refrain from introducing new tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting the exports of developing countries, eliminate existing barriers, and provide market access for the products of those countries.

On 20 December, by decision 43/438, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, deferred consideration of the draft until its 1989 session.

In resolution 43/198 on the external debt crisis, the Assembly stressed that a supportive international economic environment, together with a growth-oriented development approach, was needed by debtor countries to alleviate the political and social costs of structural adjustment programmes and adjustment fatigue in order to restore their economic growth, development and credit-worthiness.

Trade preferences

Generalized system of preferences

TDB's Special Committee on Preferences (fifteenth session, Geneva, 24 May-1 June)(17) considered the secretariat's eleventh general report⁽¹⁸⁾ on the implementation of the generalized system of preferences (GSP), which described changes and improvements in GSP and provided information on its trade effects.

In 1988, the European Economic Community (EEC), under its scheme, started to define product coverage in terms of a combined goods nomenclature. It also introduced a new method to calculate the setting of preferential limits in textiles and suspended the Republic of Korea from preferences. The United States decided to graduate Hong Kong, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Taiwan from its scheme.

In analysing the trade effects of GSP from available information, the report stated that, although in 1986 more than $40 billion of imports from developing countries received preferential access to developed countries, less than one fourth of dutiable imports from beneficiaries had actually received preferential treatment.

The Special Committee on Preferences also considered the report of its Working Groups on Rules of Origin on its 1987 session,⁽¹⁹⁾ and a report on technical co-operation in 1986 and 1987 in connection with GSP.⁽¹⁹⁾

Sri Lanka, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, submitted a draft decision,⁽²⁰⁾ by which the Special Committee would have agreed that preference-giving countries should try to improve significantly their GSP schemes by expanding product coverage and deepening the preferential margins to duty-free levels. It would have requested preference-giving countries to refrain from excluding products already in their schemes, declared that they should ensure the maintenance and improvement of preferential margins sufficient to enable beneficiary countries to penetrate the market and maintain a position in it, urged Governments, particularly those of preference-giving countries, to make financial and other contributions to the UNCTAD Trust Fund for technical assistance programmes on GSP and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to produce a consolidated digest of all schemes. The draft was considered by a Contact Group of the Chairman, but agreement could not be reached on a consolidated text. The Special Committee decided to annex the draft to its report to TDB and agreed on the need for further work on rules of origin and on the importance of technical assistance for better utilization of GSP.

Global system of trade preferences among developing countries

The Ministerial Meeting on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries (GSTP) was held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from 11 to 13 April 1988,⁽²¹⁾ and culminated in the adoption of the Agreement on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries.⁽²²⁾ The Agreement, by which the Meeting's participants established GSTP to promote and sustain mutual trade and develop economic co-operation among developing countries through exchange of concessions, comprised 34 articles covering establishment and aims, principles, components and schedules of concessions of GSTP, negotiations, a committee of participants, ground rules, consultations and settlement of disputes and final provisions. Annexes to the Agreement listed the 48 participants in the Agreement and dealt with rules of origin, additional measures in favour of LDCs and schedules of concessions.

The Agreement stipulated that GSTP would be reserved for the exclusive participation of members of the Group of 77, would be based on the principle of mutuality of advantages in such a way as to benefit equitably all participants, would be negotiated step by step, improved and extended in successive stages, with periodic reviews, and would reinforce subregional, regional and inter-regional groupings. The Agreement would enter into force 30 days after 15 of the participating States had deposited their instruments of ratification. The Agreement's operation would be the responsibility of a Committee of Participants, which would, on the Agreement's entry into force, carry forward the task of launching the next round of negotiations.

The Meeting decided the Chairman of the Group of 77 should continue negotiations in order to find an appropriate and acceptable arrangement for China's participation in GSTP.

By the Belgrade Declaration, the Meeting announced the opening of the Agreement for signature and called on signatories to conclude expeditiously the ratification procedures. It called on signatories and other members of the Group of 77 to undertake preparatory work for the next round of negotiations, which would facilitate the process of accession and carry forward the exchange of trade concessions. Participants were urged to implement fully all commitments regarding special treatment for and additional measures in favour of LDCs. The Ministers also adopted resolutions on special measures of assistance for the Palestinian people, by which they called for granting trade concessions and concrete preferential measures to Palestinian exports, and on Panama, by which they expressed their rejection of the coercive economic measures being applied against Panama which affected the autonomy and threatened the economic security of a Group of 77 member country and called for their immediate revocation.

The Ministerial Meeting was preceded by a Meeting of Senior Officials (6-9 April) which recommended the draft Belgrade Declaration for adoption.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

At its April/May session, TDB had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on trends and policies in trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems.⁽²³⁾ The report described major trends in the economic performance of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and innovations in their foreign trade management systems, and inter-systems trade and economic co-operation. It then discussed action arising from the relevant provisions of the Final Act of UNCTAD VII.⁽²⁴⁾ On the question of elaborating a programme for further promoting inter-systems trade and economic co-operation, the report suggested that the Board's session might provide an opportunity to exchange opinions, to be further examined at a later stage by a group of experts with a view to finalizing the issue at TDB's spring 1989 session. Regarding the UNCTAD Secretary-General's consultations with Governments for further strengthening of inter-systems trade, as called for by UNCTAD VII, the report proposed an approach that would identify modalities appropriate for trade expansion. The results of those consultations could also be reported to the Board's spring 1989 session. As to technical assistance to promote trade between developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, UNCTAD was revising a programme for the remaining years of the fourth programming cycle of UNDP (1987-1991).

On 10 May,⁽²⁵⁾ TDB agreed on the feasibility of elaborating a programme for the further promotion of trade and economic co-operation among countries having different systems, particularly East-South trade. It also agreed that a number of additional inputs to the programme, an outline of which it annexed to its decision, should be transmitted to the Board at its spring 1989 session. Those inputs would be supplemented by a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on his consultations with Governments. In his consultations, the Secretary-General would also discuss the composition and terms of reference of an intergovernmental group of experts that might contribute to elaborating the programme.

TDB agreed that it was necessary to improve further the secretariat's analytical work and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to highlight the following topics in his 1989 report: influences and policy implications of the principal factors in inter-systems trade, including the impact of structural adjustment and economic reform processes; financing of inter-systems trade and economic co-operation, including the relative role of different payment arrangements; and GSP schemes of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to develop further, in co-operation with UNDP, technical assistance to developing countries, particularly LDCs, in their trade and economic co-operation with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. UNDP was invited to expedite its decision on technical assistance projects submitted by UNCTAD.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1988, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre (ITC) continued to play a leading role in the delivery of technical co-operation projects.

international Trade Centre

During 1988, ITC, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued to serve as a focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.⁽²⁶⁾

In 1988, ITC's expenditures on technical co-operation activities rose by 24.6 per cent to some $26.3 million, after two consecutive years at about $21 million. The increase was largely attributable to expenditure on UNDP projects, particularly the interregional, regional and national projects that became fully operational in 1988. Those projects contributed to a rise of 34 per cent in the annual expenditures under UNDP-financed projects, bringing the total to $13 million. In addition, increased trust fund contributions from a number of traditional donor countries were paralleled by a 16.7 per cent increase in expenditures, which reached $13.3 million in 1988.

ITC assistance to developing countries in institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level sought increasingly to improve the overall institutional framework for foreign trade by strengthening existing institutions, encouraging the reallocation of functions according to clearer and better co-ordinated strategies, and improving co-ordination mechanisms between Governments and business organizations active in foreign trade. Some 30 ITC technical co-operation projects were operational under the subprogramme in all developing regions.

In export market development, over 100 projects were operational in 1988 in trade information, product and market development and export development of commodities.

Under the specialized national trade promotion services subprogramme, ITC continued to provide assistance to improve administrative and technical skills in export packaging, export finance, costing and pricing, trade fairs and commercial publicity, export quality control, national commercial representation, legal aspects of foreign trade, export co-operation schemes for small and medium-sized enterprises, export-oriented joint ventures and the international physical distribution of goods.

The total value of ITC assistance to LDCs in 1988 constituted over 30 per cent of its total programme resources. The subprogramme focused attention on urgent export development problems affecting products from a number of LDCs, namely coffee, tea, cotton yarns and grey cloth. ITC also gave priority in its training events to participants from LDCs and a number of those events were oriented towards the export development requirements of those countries.

Other ITC technical assistance subprogrammes dealt with commodity promotion, which concentrated mainly on jute products; human resource development for trade promotion, which continued to emphasize the strengthening of training institutions, training of trainers and developing training materials; import operations and techniques; and technical co-operation with national chambers of commerce. The Centre also carried out work on trade between developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, technical and economic co-operation among developing countries, and the participation of women in trade promotion activities.

During the year, 11 projects were evaluated, 5 in Africa, 2 in Asia and the Pacific, 1 in Latin America and 3 interregional projects; 5 were financed by UNDP and 6 from trust funds. It was observed that some projects were unrealistically designed, in that resources were insufficient to meet objectives. It was also noticeable that some project objectives were not specific enough or were equated with the implementation of activities, which did not facilitate the evaluation of end-results.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC (twenty-first session, Geneva, 11-15 April)(27) had before it the annual report on ITC activities during 1987,(24) a report on an evaluation of supply-demand surveys as an area of activity(28) and a report of a meeting on that subject (Geneva, 12-14 January 1988).(29)

In its general recommendations, JAG proposed that future annual reports should be improved to include suggestions for future action; expanded extrabudgetary resources should be made available to ITC in order to improve the ability of developing countries to secure export revenues; ITC should strengthen its co-operation with international development assistance bodies, regional development banks and bilateral assistance agencies; more intensive use should be made of expertise available in developing countries in connection with ITC's enterprise approach, which in turn should be fostered because of its emphasis on exports-to enable developing countries to improve their export capabilities in the short and medium term; ITC should seek to expand and diversify its technical co-operation work in commodities and intensify its actions in favour of LDCs; and technical co-operation in support of technical consultancy enterprises in developing countries should be expanded.

In reviewing ITC activities by subprogrammes, JAG recommended that ITC should continue its efforts to assist national trade promotion organizations in implementing strategies and programmes, including the exchange of information among them; it should continue to assist in developing and consolidating trade information services, especially the Latin American service (PLACIEX); the Executive Director should report on studies concerning charging for trade information services and make recommendations; ITC should continue marketing assistance to developing countries in the area of non-traditional exports and foster production development for export through the promotion of joint ventures; it should expand enterprise-oriented technical co-operation and promote wider dissemination among developing countries of its reports on technical co-operation; it should study the possibility of providing assistance in organizing export services fairs, the upgrading of the commercial representation of developing countries and the international physical distribution of goods; special attention should be given to the training of trainers and personnel of national trade promotion organizations, and timely information on training events and expanded participation in those events should be pursued, with closer co-operation with UNCTAD and GATT in training activities; and the participation of women in training programmes should also be fostered. JAG also recommended that high priority should be given to assisting LDCs and an increased flow of resources should be sought towards that end, as well as contingency funds to respond to urgent requests for technical assistance. ITC should be encouraged to utilize to the fullest extent possible available expertise in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, and efforts should be increased to enhance the participation of women in trade promotion activities.

Financial report

On 21 December 1988, in resolution 43/216, the General Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements and report of the Board of Auditors on ITC for the biennium ending 31 December 1987.(30)

Restrictive business practices

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices postponed its seventh session (originally scheduled to be held from 3 to 7 October) to 1989.

Commodities

The UNCTAD Committee on Commodities held its thirteenth session at Geneva from 5 to 13 December 1988.⁽³¹⁾ The Committee had before it a report on recent developments in the world commodity situation,⁽³²⁾ which reviewed the commodity export earnings of developing countries during 1985 and 1986, commodity prices in 1987 and 1988 and the outlook for prices, and the operation of international commodity agreements. Information on the disposal of non-commercial stocks was provided in an annex to the report.

The report noted that there had been a general upward but fluctuating trend in commodity prices in 1987 and the first half of 1988. Despite the price index for the principal commodity exports of developing countries having reached, in June 1988, its highest level in more than six years, it was still considerably below its 1979-1981 average in both nominal and real terms. Particular commodity groups and individual commodities were also subject to divergent movements and considerable fluctuations. Although prices of agricultural raw materials, vegetable oilseeds and oils and some minerals had improved, there had been little change in the market situation of tropical beverages.

In 1985 and 1986, the developing countries saw a steady general decline in their commodity export earnings, thus exacerbating their debt-servicing obligations. Nevertheless, very few developing countries had resorted to International Monetary Fund compensatory financing to make up for the shortfall. Supply and demand of commodities were also affected by agricultural support policies, particularly those of the United States, EEC and Japan, concern for which resulted in inclusion of a comprehensive negotiating mandate on agriculture in the Uruguay Round of multi-lateral trade negotiations.

Also before the Committee was a report on results of comprehensive consultations with producers and consumers on individual commodities not covered by international commodity agreements/arrangements (bananas, bauxite, cotton and cotton yarns, hard fibres and products, manganese, meat, phosphates, tea and vegetable oils and oilseeds, excluding olive oil),⁽³³⁾ and a review of the Committee's work programme, the implementation of decisions relating to it and proposals for further work.⁽³⁴⁾

On 13 December,⁽³⁵⁾ the Committee adopted an agreed conclusion, stating that it would continue to undertake a comprehensive review of the commodity situation and outlook. Several topics would be included in the review, in particular the results of the in-depth assessment of African commodities and the scope for export diversification, to be undertaken within the framework of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (see preceding chapter).

With respect to individual commodities, the Committee would consider the results of inter-governmental consultations, negotiations and follow-up action on commodities not covered by existing international agreements. The Committee endorsed the programme of its Working Party on Diversification, Processing, Marketing and Distribution, including Transportation, and requested that a study on those issues be prepared for the United Nations Conference on LDCs scheduled for September 1990, identifying their particular needs and problems. In a broader framework, the Committee would consider developments relating to market access for commodities and ways of improving the competitiveness of natural products with respect to synthetics and substitutes. It would also analyse factors affecting the expansion of commodity trade, particularly the identification of further possibilities for strengthening co-operation on individual commodity markets, aimed at stimulating the consumption of those commodities and expansion of trade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly decision,⁽³⁶⁾ the Assembly's Second Committee had before it in 1988 a draft resolution on commodities⁽³⁷⁾ submitted by the Group of 77 in 1985 (38)

By decision 43/438 of 20 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the draft until 1989.

Common Fund for Commodities

With the ratification by Maldives on 11 July 1988 of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, the main outstanding condition for the Agreement's entry into force (that ratifying countries should represent two thirds of the Fund's directly contributed capital) was fulfilled. The Agreement would be brought into force at a meeting of ratifying countries to be convened by the UNCTAD Secretary-General. At the December 1988 meeting of the Committee on Commodities (see above), the UNCTAD Secretary-General suggested 30 June 1989 as a possible date for the entry into force.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1988,⁽³⁹⁾ the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities⁽⁴⁰⁾ had been signed by 120 States and EEC, and 103 States had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to it. Of those, Maldives and Mauritania signed the Agreement during 1988, and Cuba, Honduras, Maldives and Swaziland ratified it.

Individual commodities

In accordance with an UNCTAD VII request,⁽⁴¹⁾ the UNCTAD Secretary-General in 1988 convened a number of consultations with producers and consumers on several commodities not covered by international commodity agreements or arrangements. A report by the UNCTAD secretariat to the December 1988 meeting of the Committee on Commodities⁽³³⁾ described antecedents and possible options for future producer-consumer co-operation in respect of the individual commodities concerned. In an oral update to the Committee on the consultations, an UNCTAD secretariat representative stated that there had been four consultations on bananas, five on bauxite, six on cotton, five on hard fibres, four on manganese, two on meat, four on phosphates, six on tea and four on vegetable oils. The results had been modest, although the principal exporters of bananas had indicated the desire to revise and update the draft programme on research and development and to explore the possibilities for negotiating an international agreement on bananas, without economic clauses.

Agricultural commodities

Cocoa. Buffer stock purchases of cocoa beans, under the 1986 International Cocoa Agreement,⁽⁴²⁾ resumed in January 1988, having been suspended in June 1987. At a March meeting of the International Cocoa Council, the time-limit for depositing instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval of the Agreement by signatory Governments was extended until 30 September 1988. At a September meeting, the time-limit was again extended until 30 September 1989. During 1988,⁽³⁹⁾ France accepted the Agreement, Italy ratified it and Trinidad and Tobago and Yugoslavia acceded to it.

Rubber. The International Rubber Agreement, 1987,⁽⁴³⁾ entered into force provisionally on 29 December 1988, when Governments representing at least 75 per cent of net exports and imports had deposited their instruments of ratification, accession, acceptance or approval or had indicated that they would apply the Agreement provisionally.

During 1988,⁽³⁹⁾ six countries ratified or accepted the Agreement, bringing the total to eight; 14 countries agreed to apply the Agreement provisionally.

Sugar. The International Sugar Agreement, 1987,⁽⁴³⁾ came into force provisionally on 24 March 1988. The International Sugar Council, on 18 May, decided to extend for an indefinite period the validity of the conditions for accession for the countries listed in Annexes A and B of the Agreement.

During 1988,⁽³⁹⁾ 16 countries ratified, acceded to or accepted the Agreement, bringing the total to 22 countries and EEC; 24 countries agreed to apply the Agreement provisionally, bringing the total to 33.

Minerals and metals

Copper. In accordance with a recommendation of the 1987 Preparatory Meeting on Copper,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the United Nations Conference on Copper, 1988, met at Geneva from 13 to 24 June 1988 to negotiate the establishment of an autonomous producer-consumer forum or group for copper. During the Conference, the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Market Development for Copper met on 13, 14 and 16 June.⁽⁴⁵⁾ The Group discussed the structure of market development activities, their funding and the policies and strategies of various organizations in their approach to market development.

On 24 June,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Conference requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to make arrangements to reconvene the Conference as early as possible for a period of two weeks in order to conclude negotiations on an autonomous producer-consumer forum or group for copper. He was also requested to prepare revised, annotated, draft terms of reference reflecting the outcome of the negotiations and to submit them to the Conference's next session. Statements of position on the resolution were reproduced in a separate document.⁽⁴⁷⁾

Iron ore. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Iron Ore⁽⁴⁸⁾ held its second session from 7 to 11 March 1988 at Geneva, the first having been held in 1986.⁽⁴⁹⁾

The Group considered statistical issues and the impact and effect of energy costs on the consumption of metallics, such as scrap, pig iron and directly reduced iron (sponge iron), and reviewed the current market situation and outlook for iron ore. The Group recommended that TDB convene a third session in 1989, with a view to continuing the review of statistics and market developments relating to iron ore and reporting thereon to the Fifth Preparatory Meeting on Iron Ore.

Tin. On the recommendation of the Preparatory Meeting on Tin (Geneva, 11-15 April 1988),⁽⁵⁰⁾ the United Nations Tin Conference, 1988, met at Geneva from 21 November to 2 Deember(51) to discuss the negotiation of the establishment of an intergovernmental producer-consumer forum or group for tin.

On 2 December, the Conference adopted a resolution⁽⁵²⁾ by which it decided that it should be reconvened in order to complete the negotiation of the draft terms of reference for an international tin study group, which were contained in an annex to the resolution. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to make arrangements for the reconvening of the Conference in March/April 1989.

Tungsten. At its twentieth session (Geneva, 7-11 November),⁽⁵³⁾ the Committee on Tungsten reviewed the question of stabilizing the tungsten market with a view to enabling producing and consuming countries to agree on market stabilization measures and the convening of a negotiating conference. The Committee had before it reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on recent developments and short-term outlook in the tungsten market⁽⁵⁴⁾ and major aspects of structural change in consumption.⁽⁵⁵⁾

With regard to its future work, it was the general view of participants that the Committee should consider studies relating to structural change and its effect on consumption and supply; competition from substitutes, the recycling of tungsten scrap and developments in the tool sectors; consumption trends for intermediate products; price elasticities for tungsten in individual consuming industries; and a survey of mine and plant closures and idle capacities.

The Committee agreed that the UNCTAD secretariat would undertake, for the twenty-first (1989) session, an in-depth analysis of substitution prospects with emphasis on ceramics and cermets. It would also review existing research and development programmes to promote new applications for tungsten and a survey of industry and government views on the need for additional programmes. The Committee decided to retain the 1988 agenda for its 1989 session.

Services

A section of the the Trade and Development Report, 1988(2) was devoted to the role of services in the world economy.

The Report examined the growing role of the service sector in the developed market economies, particularly in generating new employment. It also reviewed international trade in services and observed the position of services with respect to other components of the current account in different countries; explained the broader strategic role of services; and examined policy issues arising from transnationalization of services, including discussions in the Uruguay Round of what constituted appropriate regulation. The Report also addressed the role of services in the economies of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. In its summary of findings, it outlined a series of policy conclusions aimed at identifying appropriate action at the national, regional and international levels to maximize the contribution of services to the development process.

One of the basic issues raised in the study was that of an acceptable definition of trade in services, a subject that became a major issue in the Uruguay Round, where negotiations were being conducted to establish a multilateral framework of rules and principles for trade in services, with a view to expanding such trade under conditions of transparency and progressive liberalization.

The role of services in the process of structural adjustment was also discussed in a report on protectionism and structural adjustment,⁽¹⁰⁾ presented by the UNCTAD secretariat to TDB in April. The report reiterated earlier findings on the reasons for the growth of this sector in the developed market economies, but indicated that those economies had recently been exploring possible policy options for stimulating the producer service sector in support of the manufacturing, agricultural and other service sectors. In many developing countries, however, the producer service sector was not well developed, and that weakness was one of the major factors hindering the shift from low value-added agricultural and industrial sectors to higher value-added production.

In another report⁽⁵⁶⁾ submitted to TDB in April, the UNCTAD secretariat outlined its latest findings on international trade in goods and services and concluded that there was a need to ensure that developing countries shared the experiences of the advanced countries and that they participated in multilateral efforts to establish an improved system of internationally comparable data on services. In view of the priority need for developing countries to develop a services infrastructure and the producer services sector, their international competitiveness in both goods and services would have to be pursued through multilateral co-operation and negotiation. The report also stated that the UNCTAD secretariat and some developed countries had been responding to requests for technical assistance from developing countries to assess the role of the service sector in their economies.

Consumer protection

As a follow-up to the adoption by the General Assembly in 1985⁽⁵⁷⁾ of a set of guidelines for consumer protection, the Economic and Social Council, in 1988, discussed the implementation of these guidelines.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1988, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/61 without vote.

Consumer protection

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/248 of 9 April 1985, in which the Assembly adopted guidelines for consumer protection,

1. Urges all Governments to implement the guidelines for consumer protection and encourages them to develop further, as appropriate, national legislation and policies in this field;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources, the implementation of the guidelines and to ensure system-wide co-ordination in this regard;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the development funds and programmes of the United Nations, the regional commissions and other relevant bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, to continue to provide assistance to Governments, in particular those of developing countries, in implementing the guidelines;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Finance

Financial policy

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), in the report on its April session,⁽¹⁾ noted that reform of the international monetary system was necessary to ensure adequate levels and an appropriate distribution of international liquidity, more symmetrical balance-of-payment adjustment processes, and less volatile exchange rates. Particular responsibilities rested with the major industrialized countries to achieve greater co-operation in the pursuit of their national and fiscal policies in the interest of global economic growth and stability. Even more urgent, said CDP, was the problem of finding an enduring and comprehensive solution to the external debt problem of the developing countries (see below).

At the national level, policy stances in many developing countries had changed as policy makers pursued greater autonomy and market discipline for state enterprises and placed more emphasis on encouraging entrepreneurship in the private sector and reforms of pricing policies and fiscal systems.

The World Economic Survey 1988⁽²⁾ observed that three sets of financial events had captured the attention of policy makers in 1987: severe strains in the international strategy for managing developing country debt, the need for central banks to finance increased amounts of the current-account deficit of the United States, and the October crash in all the major stock markets of the world. Those developments highlighted the instability of international financial relations in the late 1980s, although none of the events erupted into a full-blown international crisis. However, the potential for crisis remained.

The Survey stated that domestic efforts to restore growth and stability were in many cases frustrated by the international financial situation, notably the net outflow of resources from several large debtor countries. If the United States was to reverse its deficit and run a trade surplus sufficient to meet the interest payments on its debt, that shift would have to be of the order of 5 per cent of its GNP. In the case of developing countries, where a revival of investment was necessary, the required shift was in the opposite direction; a renewed flow of capital was needed, not decades of merely paying off past debts. In both cases much time would be required and the correction of those situations would continue into the 1990s.

The prevailing uncertainty in the world economy would be reduced if a co-operative framework were established, embodying at least three elements: redirecting capital and trade flows in a manner consonant with the needs of stability and widespread growth; a timetable for achieving that objective; and recognition of the need to sustain adequate financial flows throughout the adjustment process in order to avert the disruptive effect of sudden financial contraction.

International monetary situation

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly decision,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1988 a report on current international monetary issues.⁽⁴⁾ The report discussed recent developments in the international monetary system, issues in the management of the international monetary system, balance-of-payments adjustment in developing countries, and issues likely to challenge the functioning of the system in the future. The report noted that the international monetary system continued to be pressured by the large external imbalances of major OECD countries and the debt and adjustment problems of the developing countries.

Balance-of-payments adjustment in the developed countries, although showing some modest improvement, remained critical. The developing countries displayed a marked change in their current-account situation, but this was achieved mainly through sharp import cuts and substantial currency depreciations. This all contributed to imbalances in world trade, which added further to the deflationary process. Despite massive adjustment efforts, the over-indebtedness of the developing countries persisted. The international monetary system failed to provide a working mechanism to correct trade imbalances among the industrialized countries and this impeded the ability of the developing countries to achieve economic recovery.

The report pointed to the need for more effective macro-economic policy co-ordination among industrialized countries and proposed a much broader use of the IMF surveillance framework as a means of achieving this, as it would allow for the inclusion of developing countries in the process. It also considered that, in terms of growth-oriented adjustment, IMF-supported programmes should be tailored to the specific characteristics of the economic structure of individual borrowing countries and confined to external variables such as balance on current account and the level of international reserves. IMF facilities were also strengthened in support of macro-economic adjustment and structural reform, concessional lending, contingency financing and stand-by or extended arrangement.

The report also identified issues that would require attention in the future to achieve the efficient functioning of the international monetary system. They included: the symmetry of the balance-of-payments adjustment process between deficit and surplus countries and the appropriate roles of monetary and fiscal policies in that process; debt relief and reductions of protection against developing countries' exports; the amount and distribution of international liquidity; and relations among international capital mobility, the functioning of financial markets and exchange rates. Also identified was the integration of socialist countries into a universal monetary system.

Recent proposals for convening an international conference on monetary and financial issues were summarized in an annex to the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/187 by recorded vote.

By decision 43/442 of 20 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to defer until its forty-fourth session consideration of a draft resolution⁽⁵⁾ entitled "International conference on money and finance for development". The draft, by which the Assembly would have called on the Secretary-General to carry out consultations on convening a conference on money and finance for development, had been considered by the Assembly in 1987⁽⁶⁾ and deferred to the 1988 session.

Net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries

In accordance with a 1987 request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June a report on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries.⁽⁸⁾ The report examined the interactions between changes in the terms of trade and changes in the pattern of financial flows to and from developing countries and how negative net transfers affected the level of real expenditure, particularly domestic investment because of its implications for long-term economic growth. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁹⁾ the report included a section on the links between the level of a net overall transfer of real resources from developing to developed countries and the attainment of the growth target for developing countries set in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s).

The report noted that, during the 1980s, the terms of trade for most groups of developing countries deteriorated, causing their ratio of debt service to export revenue to rise, even without further borrowing, and the ratios of outstanding debt to exports also worsened. Those developments led to a drop in the inflow of new commercial lending as banks' perception of risk rose. There was also a slow-down in the growth of bilateral and multilateral official flows. As a result of that pattern, 1987 was the fifth consecutive year of negative net transfers to developing countries.

The report observed that a sudden negative net transfer was one dimension of a debt problem and had to be seen in the context of a country's overall debt situation, adding that it should not be assumed that all negative transfers must be reversed. The international community had before it a number of proposals for debt relief for heavily indebted countries of Africa and Latin America. In the case of low-income countries, particularly in Africa, proposals emphasized the need to reduce interest payments on past debts vis-à-vis official creditors. For the middle-income highly indebted countries, an effective response to the transfer problem had to take the form of reducing outflows. One option that was increasingly being considered by debtor countries was to reduce their outstanding stock of debt by capturing the discount on it that applied in the secondary market. Another option was to exchange present debt for new debt instruments with an interest rate that was both fixed and below market rates.

Along those lines, proposals had been made to establish a multilateral debt conversion facility that would enable creditor banks to convert their developing countries' debt at a discount into long-term bonds with fixed interest rates. The report stated that it was in the interest of the international community to consider such proposals against the need to ensure that the balance between finance and adjustment was not struck at the expense of the long-term requirements for growth and development.

By decision 1988/160 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the evolution of the phenomenon of the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries and to devote a separate chapter of the World Economic Survey 1989 to analysing the phenomenon.

External debt problems

At its April session,⁽¹⁾ CDP stated that prompt action to reduce the international debts of debt-distressed developing countries, particularly in Africa and Latin America, was an essential prerequisite of any successful strategy to deal with the critical long-term issues of the 1990s. In the Committee's view, such action would include a multi-year moratorium for African countries on interest and principal payments on public and publicly guaranteed debts, with highly concessional interest rates on the rescheduled amounts for low-income, severely debt-distressed countries; and reduced interest rates on Paris Club (a creditor group) reschedulings for others. As to private debt—particularly that of the middle-income countries in Latin America and elsewhere—official action was needed to facilitate an orderly process of debt reduction on the part of commercial banks.

The year 1987 was characterized by frustration among debtor countries and disillusionment among creditor institutions, according to the World Economic Survey 1988.⁽²⁾ In 1988, however, there was an improvement in the debtor/creditor relationship. Negotiations replaced unilateral action and several debtor countries renewed adjustment programmes with IMF and the World Bank as those two institutions tried to improve their ability to address the adjustment needs of the developing countries. Although no comprehensive strategy evolved to manage the debt problem, several new features were added to the menu of options from which debtors and creditors could design their debt-restructuring packages.

The Survey also addressed the issue of the United States foreign debt, noting that, as the supplier of the major currency for international transactions, it had been able to borrow almost entirely in its own currency and was not susceptible to a foreign exchange crisis of the sort afflicting developing countries. The major concerns about the growing external indebtedness of the United States were related to the risks it posed for the stability of the world financial system, the rate of growth of the debt, its absolute magnitude and the question of whether the world's wealthiest country should appropriate such a large portion of the surplus savings of the rest of the world as a way of sustaining levels of domestic expenditures that substantially exceeded domestic output.

The Trade and Development Report, 1988,(10) having considered a possible debt relief scenario, concluded that, if debtor countries were given relief equivalent to about one half of the discount at which their debt was being traded on secondary markets, they could break out of the vicious circle of over-indebtedness and stagnation, and grow out of their debt problem.

Trade and Development Board consideration. At its April/May session, TDB had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report(11) providing information for a review of the implementation of a 1980 Board resolution(12) containing guidelines on dealing with the debt problems of developing countries.

The report's introduction highlighted the considerable deterioration of the economic and financial situation of developing countries and identified the debt overhang as an obstacle to restoring financial viability and development. The report reviewed trends in the rescheduling practices of official creditors in the Paris Club, the main changes being the granting of a greater degree of debt relief through measures such as rescheduling a higher proportion of debt service and of previously rescheduled debt; an improvement in cover policies of export credit agencies; a lengthening of maturities for poorer countries and the acceptance of an IMF Structural Adjustment Facility programme rather than an upper credit tranche arrangement; and the introduction of multi-year rescheduling agreements.

While acknowledging the positive developments in Paris Club practices, the report noted that the adequacy of existing arrangements had to be assessed in the light of both the gravity of the debt problems of developing countries and the criteria adopted by the international community. The report observed that traditional rescheduling techniques needed to be supplemented with measures to reduce the effective stock of debt. It proposed a selective relaxation of the principle whereby debt-service obligations arising from all bilateral non-concessional debt had eventually to be met in full and referred to various options, some of which had been proposed by some creditor Governments and multilateral institutions, including: debt cancellation, reduction of interest rates, temporary waivers of interest payments and debt conversions. The report also called for the introduction of improved and more flexible multi-year rescheduling agreements and for extending eligibility to countries with structural debt difficulties. It further stated that conditionality should be supportive of medium-term development programmes and consistent with growth targets. It also saw scope for expanding creditor participation in the Paris Club to all official creditors and to multilateral institutions.

TDB decided to take up the matter again in September, when it had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat updating developments in official debt rescheduling.(13) With regard to creditor policies towards poorer debtors, the report noted that, at the Toronto Economic Summit of the seven largest developed market-economy countries (Toronto, Canada, 19-21 June),(14) agreement was reached on modalities concerning concessional relief on official bilateral debt owed by poorer countries and rescheduled in the Paris Club. The agreement provided for a menu of options for official creditors, including concessional interest rates on shorter maturities, longer repayment periods at commercial rates, partial write-offs of debt-service obligations during the consolidation period, or a combination of those options.

As to official debt reschedulings in 1988, the report stated that there had been a considerable slow-down in the number of agreements during the first eight months of the year, when official creditors concluded seven agreements with developing countries compared with 13 agreements during the first eight months of 1987. Only 10 countries went to the Paris Club between September 1987 and August 1988, against 21 in the preceding 12 months. That development reflected considerable delays in negotiating new adjustment programmes supported by IMF, which were a prerequisite for commencing Paris Club rescheduling exercises.

The TDB President summed up the debate on the issue, noting that there had been convergence on a number of points but that there remained considerable differences of view and/or of emphasis.

On 5 October,(15) TDB urged Governments to implement fully and further improve implementation of the agreed features contained in the Board's 1980 resolution,(12) by: enhancing the medium- and long-term perspective of the rescheduling process by ensuring that it took fully into account the development policies and programmes of each country concerned, giving consideration to rescheduling agreements on a multi-year basis; improving co-ordination between the Paris Club and multilateral financial forums designed to co-ordinate new financial flows to debtor countries; implementing expeditiously the decisions on concessional debt relief agreed on at the Toronto Economic Summit(14) in such a way that resources were additional to aid allocations and to donors' existing aid programmes; noting the important role of concessional terms and conditions and extended maturity periods in rescheduling operations; accelerating and simplifying the negotiation in the context of the Paris Club of bilateral agreements between creditor and debtor Governments; and improving the co-ordination of the contributions of the parties involved for solving external debt problems of a developing debtor country in the context of its medium- and long-term development policies.

TDB noted that calls had been made by developing countries and other countries to extend the benefits of the menu of options endorsed by the Toronto Economic Summit.⁽¹⁴⁾ It invited the Chairman of the Paris Club to continue to invite the UNCTAD Secretary-General to participate in its meetings, agreed to undertake in 1992 a further review of the implementation of the guidelines contained in its 1980 resolution(12) and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to include in his reports an analysis of problems that developing debtor countries had encountered in debt-rescheduling procedures.

A draft resolution on the need for debt reduction was submitted by Egypt on behalf of the Group of 77 and the Board decided to annex it to its report.⁽¹⁶⁾ By that resolution, the Board would have urged that a debt strategy be developed, agreed on and implemented to swiftly yield durable and equitable solutions for all developing countries having debt-servicing difficulties. The strategy should provide for reduction of the volume of debt and/or interest charges to align debt-servicing obligations with the capacity to pay, while meeting the needs of the population and attaining the high levels of investment required to sustain growth. To that end the following measures would be taken by creditor Governments, commercial banks and multilateral financial institutions: reduction of outstanding commercial bank debt of developing countries with the active encouragement of creditor Governments directly and/or through mechanisms such as an international debt facility; provision of concessional financing to reduce debts of developing countries to multilateral institutions; substantial write-off and other concessional relief on debt owed to official bilateral creditors and a significant increase in the total volume of official development assistance; and devising suitable mechanisms to lower the real rates of interest on all debt owed to commercial banks, multilateral institutions and bilateral creditors. The UNCTAD Secretary-General would have been asked to monitor the implementation of the resolution and to report to the Board in 1989.

ACC consideration. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (Geneva, 20 and 21 April 1988) discussed the question of debt and development and adopted a decision⁽¹⁷⁾ endorsing the Secretary-General's suggestion for greater co-operation among the relevant agencies and entities of the system in analytical work in debt and development. It agreed that the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation should follow the matter up with the organizations concerned.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the debt problem.⁽¹⁹⁾ In preparing the report, a broad process of consultations had been undertaken by the Secretary-General; written submissions were solicited from authorities in different countries and an international group of experts was convened informally at Geneva on 14 and 15 July. Views were obtained from multilateral institutions and from the United Nations system, including CDP and ACC (see above). On 10 and 11 September, the Secretary-General held informal consultations in New York with a number of eminent personalities. The results of those consultations were summarized in an annex to the report.

After discussing questions of debt, growth and adjustment and the recent development of the debt strategy, the report outlined elements of a possible approach to international debt policy. It concluded that a durable solution of the debt problem was one that would explicitly address the imbalances between debt-servicing obligations and capacities. Eliminating those imbalances would entail relieving the external financial constraints on adjustment and growth in debtor countries, ensuring that the improvement in their net transfer of financial resources was used in the most socially and developmentally appropriate way and improving the global economic environment.

The report suggested debt-reduction measures for different groups of countries: low-income debtor countries; countries heavily indebted to official creditors; and highly indebted middle-income countries. The report also discussed the need for higher financial flows, the adjustment efforts of debtor countries, and the adjustment efforts of industrialized countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/198 by recorded vote.

External debt crisis and development:
towards a durable solution of the debt problems
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986 on strengthened international economic co-operation aimed at resolving the external debt problems of developing countries and 42/198 of 11 December 1987 on furthering international co-operation regarding the external debt problems,

Recalling Trade and Development Board resolutions 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978, 222(XXI) of 27 September 1980 and 358(XXXV) of 5 October 1988 and the relevant recommendations of the mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Recalling the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session,

Recognizing that the deteriorating economic situation faced by those developing countries with a heavy debt burden, which constitutes a major obstacle to their economic growth and sustained development, can be a threat to their economic, social and political stability,

Emphasizing that the world-wide impact and the wide range of implications of indebtedness of developing countries on today's increasingly interdependent world economy can be a threat to the political stability of those countries,

Recognizing that, in the present circumstances, adjustment efforts are needed on the part of all countries, collectively and individually, each country contributing to the common objective in accordance with its capacities and weight in the world economy, while concern remains about the political and social implications associated with the structural adjustment programme in indebted developing countries,

Welcoming the increasing acceptance of further diversifying the range of options that, inter alia, reduce the stock and service of debt and contribute to the achievement of a durable solution to the external indebtedness of developing countries,

Acknowledging the continuing need for strengthening effective international co-operation in order to resolve the problem of external indebtedness of developing countries on a durable, equitable and mutually agreed basis, in particular through improvement in the international economic environment,

Noting that, although efforts have been made by the international community to deal with the debt problem, it is essential, owing to the gravity of the problem, to reaffirm the shared responsibility of all parties involved,

Deeply concerned that debt-service obligations remain high, that the factors determining the capacity to pay have not moved in consonance with the debt-service obligations of the majority of developing countries, and that prospects for reducing the adverse effects of the debt burden on the development process in developing countries continue to be uncertain,

Noting with concern that the net outflow of financial resources from developing countries as a whole, exacerbated by the debt crisis and the deterioration in the terms of trade, deprives those countries of resources needed for financing their growth and development,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his involvement in the debt issue and for his report entitled "Towards a durable solution of the debt problem";

2. Stresses that the debt crisis in an increasingly interdependent world economy has a wide impact; often with political implications, having a bearing not only on relations between creditors and debtors but also on prospects for the world community as a whole, thereby requiring a broad approach with political impetus and continued close co-operation;

3. Expresses deep concern that the overall indebtedness of debtor developing countries has persisted and often increased, that their growth and development are severely limited, and that their economic and social prospects continue to be a cause of serious concern;

4. Stresses that a supportive international economic environment, together with a growth-oriented development approach, is needed for supporting the efforts of debtor developing countries in dealing with their external indebtedness and alleviating the political and social costs of structural adjustment programmes and adjustment fatigue, thus contributing to the restoration of their economic growth, development and credit-worthiness;

5. Urges the international community to continue to search, through dialogue and shared responsibility, for a durable, equitable and mutually agreed growth-oriented and development-oriented solution to the external indebtedness of developing countries;

6. Invites the multilateral financial institutions to continue to review conditionality criteria, taking into account, inter alia, social objectives, growth and development priorities of developing countries and changing conditions of the world economy, and stresses further the need for increased co-operation between the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and other multilateral financial institutions, which should not lead to cross-conditionality;

7. Reaffirms that a major objective of any debt strategy should be that debtor developing countries achieve an adequate level of growth sufficient to enable them to satisfy their social, economic and development needs, which will in turn enhance their ability to service debt, and urges all concerned parties to develop new ways and means to sustain effectively policies aimed at attaining such a level of growth;

8. Recognizes that efforts to resolve the debt problem should include policies in creditor countries and debtor countries that are supportive of export growth and diversification in the latter;

9. Recognizes that there is need to broaden further the range of approaches that, inter alia, reduce the stock and service of debt, including expansion of the scope and implementation of currently utilized financial techniques;

10. Recognizes that the external indebtedness of some other countries with serious debt-servicing problems gives rise to considerable concern, and invites all those involved to take into account, as appropriate, the above provisions in addressing those problems;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, through a process of high-level consultations, as appropriate, with heads of State or Government and other parties concerned, to contribute to a common understanding on a solution to the external indebtedness of developing countries in the context of their growth and development;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to take any other appropriate measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

The Commission would have been established for at least three years and would have submitted annual reports to the Assembly. The Secretary-General would have been requested to appoint the Commission's members, organize its support staff and report to the Assembly in 1989.

Transport

Maritime transport

In 1988, the total volume of international sea-borne trade amounted to an estimated 3.7 billion tons, an increase of 4.1 per cent over 1987. The Review of Maritime Transport, 1988, (1) stated that the growth in the international economy and the fall in oil prices contributed in large part to the increase, which restored seaborne trade to approximately the 1980 level. Developing countries generated 46.5 per cent of all goods loaded and 24.9 per cent of goods unloaded, while the developed market economies accounted for 45 per cent and 68 per cent respectively. The socialist countries' shares were 8.5 per cent of goods loaded and 7.1 per cent of goods unloaded.

The size of the world merchant fleet continued its declining trend. At mid-1988, the total deadweight of the world merchant fleet had declined by 0.7 per cent from the previous year to 627.9 million tons. Ownership remained concentrated in the developed market-economy and open-registry countries, while the developing countries owned 20.9 per cent and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Asia owned 10.2 per cent. Developing countries, especially in Africa and Oceania, continued to be subject to a rate more than double that paid by developed market-economy countries for freight costs in relation to the total cost, insurance, freight (c.i.f.) value of imports. World shipping continued to be faced with the problem of tonnage oversupply.

Shipping

At its thirteenth session (Geneva, 14-22 March 1988),⁽²⁾ the UNCTAD Committee on Shipping, as requested at its 1986 session,⁽³⁾ considered the major issue of the imbalance between supply and demand in ocean shipping. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the issue,⁽⁴⁾ supplementing a 1986 report,⁽⁵⁾ which concluded that the large and continuing imbalance between supply and demand in world shipping had not greatly diminished. Surplus tonnage as at mid-1986 remained at over 130 deadweight tons (dwt) or about 20 per cent of the world merchant fleet. Excess shipbuilding capacity was at 4.5 million compensated gross tons (cgt) or 30 per cent on a world-wide basis. Excess capacity was thus likely to continue well into the 1990s unless further substantial capacity reductions were undertaken. This confirmed previous findings⁽⁵⁾ that the major cause of the shipping crisis lay in the high level and scale of government financial subsidies as well as indirect support measures to the acquisition, operation and building of new ships over the past decade. To address the fundamental structural crisis of the shipbuilding industry would require consideration of national, regional and international shipping policy measures along with simultaneous consideration of the world shipbuilding situation. The report suggested that the Committee consider adopting a "Common Measure of Understanding on Shipping and Shipbuilding Questions" containing principles to be followed by the international community that would promote the orderly development of their merchant marines and promote their effective participation in world shipping. Such an instrument would provide guidelines for the shipping and shipbuilding industries to adapt to rapidly changing fluctuations in world-wide demand for shipping services.

By a 22 March resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Committee urged all UNCTAD member States to consider adopting and implementing shipping policies which would promote a more balanced situation in world shipping. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue to monitor developments in world shipping and shipbuilding, with particular reference to the imbalance between supply and demand; and to prepare, for consideration by the Committee at its 1990 session, a report containing proposals for the international community to consider with a view to avoiding imbalance situations and promoting a more balanced development of world shipping, taking into account the special interest of developing countries and the recognized need to assist them in developing their merchant marines.

Ocean freight rates

With regard to the issue of ocean freight rates and their effects on exports of developing countries, the Committee on Shipping had before it an UNCTAD secretariat study (7) undertaken in response to a 1983 UNCTAD VI request.⁽⁸⁾ The study noted that, for many primary commodities exported by developing countries, the bulk of ocean transport charges or increases appeared to be borne largely by exporters and that, since ocean freight costs represented a large proportion of commodity prices, those costs absorbed a large part of export earnings. The report contained a number of recommendations for action to be taken by exporting developing countries and in the context of UNCTAD consultations to deal with the problem of ocean freight costs.

On 22 March,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on Shipping requested the UNCTAD secretariat to update existing studies on the maritime transportation of selected commodities and prepare studies analysing the impact of conditions of ocean transport services, particularly ocean freight rates, on exports of manufactured goods from developing countries, in order to provide them with information required for making appropriate decisions in that area.

Ports

On 22 March,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on Shipping invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene in 1989 an ad hoc intergovernmental group of port experts to review practical problems in respect of the development, improvement and operation of ports. He was asked to examine the secretariat's work on problems arising in setting up transshipment facilities in developing countries, data processing in port operation and documentation, and maintenance of port equipment; to study possibilities for regional co-operation in developing countries regarding ports; and to propose follow-up action for local, national and intergovernmental consideration. The Committee also asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to review and monitor UNCTAD's work in port management training and advisory services and to prepare a report for the Committee's 1990 session with recommendations for future work.

Multimodal transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 1988,⁽¹⁾ stated that, although there was virtually no increase in the number of multimodal transport operators in 1988, scattered indications showed that some existing services had expanded: parcel service operations; unit-train operations, particularly double-stack train operations in the United States; the Trans-Siberian container service; and container train services in India, Kenya and Malaysia. Sea-air services from Japan also grew significantly, as did traffic through the main interface points for sea-air multimodal services in the developing countries, notably at Dubai and Singapore. The international physical distribution system was undergoing great changes, including a tendency to shift production bases from one country to another. In addition, new and various combinations of sea-air, truck and rail multimodal transportation were being offered. To facilitate the movement of goods through this form of transport, and in response to a 1986 resolution of the Committee on Shipping, an informal meeting was held in October 1988 on elaboration of a standard multimodal transport document.

The Committee on Shipping considered the results of the work carried out since 1986 by the Group of Experts to Develop and Recommend Model Rules for Multimodal Container Tariffs.⁽¹¹⁾ On 22 March,⁽⁶⁾ the Committee endorsed the standard sequence and model container tariff rules contained in the final report of the Group of Experts⁽¹⁰⁾ and recommended their use in existing and/or new container tariff rules as appropriate. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to commence operation of a reference library for multimodal container tariff rules and to explore the possibilities of electronic storage and retrieval of data. Concerning the standardization of containers, and especially the adverse implications for the port facilities of developing countries of introducing higher and heavier containers, the Committee instructed the secretariat to monitor closely developments in that area at International Organization for Standardization meetings and to report at regular intervals to UNCTAD member States and to the Committee on Shipping.

The Committee requested the secretariat to produce in the UNCTAD working languages reports on rights and duties of container terminal operators and users, and on the commercial risk factor in container terminal management. The secretariat was also to prepare a detailed inventory of, and report on, studies carried out on multimodal transport and containerization, to complete outstanding studies, and to present the results to the Committee's 1990 session.

International maritime legislation and conventions Maritime fraud

The Committee on Shipping considered a progress report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the establishment of a Maritime Fraud Prevention Exchange (MFPE).⁽¹¹⁾ Details concerning the structure and operation of MFPE had been agreed on and the organization, renamed Maritime Advisory Exchange, started operation on 1 December 1988. On 22 March,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee recommended that Governments of UNCTAD States members urge the relevant commercial parties to utilize the services to be provided by MFPE, once established, as a means to combat maritime fraud, and invited States members and interested commercial parties to inform the secretariat of MFPE's effectiveness and positive contribution. The secretariat was also requested to promote MFPE and to monitor its activities.

The Committee also requested the secretariat to continue monitoring work on formulating Uniform Rules for incorporation in sea waybills and other similar documents as a means to reduce the incidence of maritime fraud and facilitate trade.

Maritime liens and mortgages

The Joint Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Maritime Liens and Mortgages and Related Subjects, established by UNCTAD and the International Maritime Organization, held its fourth (London, 16-20 May)⁽¹²⁾ and fifth (Geneva, 12-20 December)⁽¹³⁾ sessions in 1988.

In May, the Group considered the text of revised draft articles on maritime liens and mortgages and a report on the current practices of bareboat charter registration.⁽¹⁴⁾ The main issues to be considered included the determination of the number of claims to be given maritime lien status and their priority, the right of the States to grant other liens or rights of retention to secure claims other than those specified in the convention, and whether or not the convention should include provisions dealing with the question of bareboat charter registration.

The Group also considered two new draft articles. One sought to clarify terms used in the draft convention in consideration of the practice, adopted by several States, of permitting a vessel to temporarily fly the flag of a State other than that of the vessel's registration. The other aimed to protect the holders of mortgages, "hypothèques" or charges in such cases. It was agreed that the Group's December session should be wholly devoted to completing the work on preparing the draft provisions on maritime liens and mortgages. In March,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on Shipping had urged the Group to complete its work during 1989 and to submit its final report to the Committee in 1990.

In December, the Group further considered the revised draft articles⁽¹⁵⁾ and submissions from Greece, Liberia, the United Kingdom and Hong Kong. It also examined relevant provisions of the international conventions to which reference had been made in drafting article 12 (scope of application), regarding the possible application of the draft convention to ships registered in non-contracting States.

Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences

The United Nations Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences, which entered into force in 1983,(16) had 72 States parties as at 31 December 1988.(17) Mauritania, Somalia and Zambia became parties during 1988.

In accordance with article 52 of the Convention, a Review Conference was convened at Geneva from 31 October to 18 November 1988.(18) The Conference carried out a general review of the Convention's implementation and working and considered a number of specific issues relating to the Convention and its implementation: technological and structural changes in world liner shipping, the scope of the Convention's application, reservations to the Convention, modalities of its implementation, and the subject of non-conference lines.

With regard to the rules of procedure, there was a difference of views between certain groups as to the manner and extent to which non-contracting parties should participate in the Conference. The Conference adopted a resolution by which it decided that there was a need for a resumed session to complete its tasks and called on all participating States to assist the Conference to conclude its work at the resumed session. It asked the United Nations Secretary-General to make arrangements to convene a resumed session at Geneva for three weeks in 1989 and asked the Conference President and the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult with all States entitled to attend the Review Conference on outstanding questions pertaining to rules of procedure. Following agreement on the rules, a two-day meeting should be convened when the rules would be presented to all States entitled to attend the Review Conference for their approval and recommendation of the rules to the resumed session for adoption.

United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea

The United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, 1978, was to enter into force 12 months after 20 States had become contracting parties. By 31 December 1988, 14 countries had acceded to or ratified the Convention while 27 had signed it. In 1988, Botswana, Nigeria and Sierra Leone ratified or acceded to the Convention.(17)

Convention on Conditions for Registration of Ships

The United Nations Convention on Conditions for Registration of Ships, adopted in 1986, was to enter into force 12 months after the date on which no fewer than 40 States, the combined tonnage of which amounted to at least 25 per cent of world tonnage, had become contracting parties. As at 31 December 1988, 13 States had signed the Convention and two States (Côte d'Ivoire and Mexico) had ratified it.(17) Mexico ratified the Convention in 1988.

Transport centres for the Mediterranean region

On 28 July, by decision 1988/169, the Economic and Social Council decided to confer United Nations status on the Transport Study Centre for the Eastern Mediterranean (Volos, Greece), the Transport Study Centre for the Western Mediterranean (Barcelona, Spain), and the Transport Training Centre (Istanbul, Turkey), upon the conclusion of agreements between the United Nations and the respective Governments concerning the conditions of such status. This was subject to the understanding that there would be no financial implications for the regular budget of the United Nations.

Transport of dangerous goods

In response to a 1987 Economic and Social Council request,(19) the Council, in May 1988, received an oral report from the United Nations Secretariat on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on its staffing arrangements.(20) By decision 1988/109 of 24 May, the Council took note of the oral report.

Committee of Experts. The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (fifteenth session, Geneva, 5-14 December)(21) paid special attention to co-ordinating its own activities with those of other international organizations whose activities impinged on the transport of dangerous goods. Liaison was established with the secretariats responsible for the draft global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes (United Nations Environment Programme) and the International Programme on Chemical Safety (World Health Organization) to ensure that their work did not duplicate existing agreements and instruments on the safe transport of dangerous goods. During its first two decades, the Committee had elaborated technical recommendations and persuaded regulatory authorities to take cognizance of them. In its third decade, the Committee's role was twofold: to adapt the recommendations to technical progress; and to respond to suggestions to amend the recommendations to facilitate total harmonization. The Committee was structured to make recommendations embodying a balance between undue risks on the one hand and unwarranted restrictions on trade on the other.

During the 1987-1988 biennium, the Committee completed its work on a new régime of testing and classification of very insensitive explosives and a radically new scheme for classifying organic peroxides. It also amended extensively its recommendations on intermediate bulk containers and aerosols and took a major decision concerning the way it listed dangerous goods in order to facilitate harmonization of the provisions for road and rail transport in the Economic Commission for Europe region.

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1988/149 of 26 May 1988, endorsing the Secretary-General's decision to appoint an expert designated by China as a full member of the Committee,(22) the Government of China participated in the Committee's work as a full member. Portugal was represented by an observer for the first time and India formally requested to become a full member. The Committee welcomed those developments as further steps towards widening the geographical scope of its decision-making base.

The Committee's Group of Rapporteurs met at Geneva from 7 to 11 March(23) and from 8 to 12 August;(24) its Group of Experts on Explosives met at Geneva from 1 to 5 August.(25)

Technical assistance and training

During 1988, UNCTAD's technical co-operation and training programme in shipping, ports and multimodal transport totalled 39 projects at both the regional and national levels, involving a total expenditure of $3.25 million (as against $3.55 million in 1987).

The TRAINMAR programme, which had as its objective the reinforcement of local training activities, continued to expand; new centres in Africa, Latin America and the Middle East commenced regular association with TRAINMAR in addition to the existing 22 port and shipping training centres. A TRAINMAR general meeting was held in September at Bremen, Federal Republic of Germany, at which the basis for a permanent system of co-operation was discussed. A new regional programme was established in the Caribbean with funds from France. New courses were funded by Norway and the United States, while the secretariat provided course material on multimodal transport.

UNCTAD continued to promote and assist in organizing international workshops on various aspects of international shipping, primarily for the benefit of developing countries. A new programme—JOBMAR—was designed to improve the practical management skills of middle/senior managers from developing countries by providing "on-the-job" experience in countries with a more advanced maritime sector. It was ready for a 1 January 1989 launching, and some 20 to 25 participants would be trained initially. Progress was also made in developing two new training packages, one for equipment management and one for equipment procurement, under the Improving Port Performance project. A regional project financed by UNDP to assist the land-locked African countries in improving access to shipping became operational in 1988.

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

UNCTAD programme

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held two sessions in 1988 at Geneva. The second part of its thirty-fourth session was held from 25 April to 6 May and on 10 May;(1) the first part of its thirty-fifth session was held from 19 to 30 September and on 5 October.(2)

The Board adopted one resolution and 11 decisions during 1988. At its April/May session, it adopted decisions on the reverse transfer of technology (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), the continued updating of the UNCTAD data base on trade measures (see above), technical assistance activities provided in connection with the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see above), and trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems and all trade flows resulting therefrom (see above). At its September/October session, the Board adopted a resolution on its review of the implementation of guidelines on the debt-service obligations of developing countries (see above). Decisions adopted at that session related to the review of measures agreed upon by the Ad HOG Intergovernmental Working Group on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, a review of arrangements for rationalizing the Board's regular sessions and UNCTAD's calendar of meetings (see below). Other decisions dealt with drought and the external sector of the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, the effects of floods and cyclones on the development and growth of developing countries, and UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (see preceding chapter).

On 26 July, by decision 1988/155, the Economic and Social Council took note of TDB's report on the second part of its thirty-fourth session.⁽¹⁾

Aspects of the UNCTAD programme were dealt with in a number of General Assembly resolutions not covered in this chapter, including those on the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (resolution 43/182); the reverse transfer of technology (43/184); the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (43/186); specific measures in favour of island developing countries (43/189); and examination of long-term trends in economic and social development (43/194).

Programme policy

Medium-term plan (1984-1989)

The Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held its fourteenth (2-9 February),⁽³⁾ fifteenth (23-30 March)⁽⁴⁾ and sixteenth (21-25 November)⁽⁵⁾ sessions in 1988.

At its March session,⁽⁴⁾ the Working Party had before it a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the third revision of the UNCTAD sections of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989.⁽⁶⁾ The proposed revisions updated mandates emanating from the Final Act of UNCTAD VII⁽⁷⁾ and from TDB and its committees. On 5 May,⁽¹⁾ TDB took note of the revisions, and, bearing in mind a statement of the Chairman of the Working Party, in which he summarized considerations that had arisen in informal consultations on the revisions, transmitted them to the appropriate United Nations bodies for consideration.

In May/June,⁽⁸⁾ the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination recommended approval of the proposed revisions subject to a number of modifications.

Programme budget, 1988-1989

By resolution 43/218 A of 21 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, approved a revised appropriation for UNCTAD of $76,958,200 for the 1988-1989 biennium.

Programme evaluation

At its February session,⁽³⁾ the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme

Budget had before it a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on programme evaluation in UNCTAD.⁽⁹⁾

The report provided information on the consolidation of programme evaluation in UNCTAD and summarized live self-evaluation studies that had been planned for 1987.

In a series of agreed conclusions, the Working Party welcomed progress made in implementing the programme evaluation system and the initial practical results obtained. It noted the gradual strengthening of the internal independent component and invited the Secretary-General to keep it informed on future developments.

In a July report on programme evaluation in UNCTAD,⁽¹⁰⁾ the UNCTAD Secretary-General discussed the further development of the evaluation process, with particular reference to methodological developments, the evolution of programme evaluation in the United Nations system, the importance of feedback for evaluation purposes, evaluation findings and their application and a better integration of evaluations of substantive programmes and of technical co-operation activities. It also discussed implementation of the evaluation plan for 1988 and summarized the results of six self-evaluations conducted during the year.

At its November session,⁽⁵⁾ the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget adopted a series of agreed conclusions in which it again welcomed progress made in implementing programme evaluation and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to keep it informed of future developments. It also welcomed the secretariat's intention to pay increased attention to evaluating its contribution to technical co-operation projects in order to improve their overall quality.

Total UNCTAD project expenditures in 1988 for technical co-operation activities grew to $12.2 million from $11.8 million in 1987.⁽¹¹⁾ Allocations from UNDP, totalling $10.1 million, were the main source of funds. Activities were also funded from funds-in-trust ($1.5 million) and the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation ($0.6 million). In 1988 there were 145 approved projects under implementation. Activities remained predominantly inter-country, in the light of the international nature of trade and economic co-operation. Activities in Africa continued to constitute the largest share of project expenditures, with a delivery of $3.9 million in 1988 (44 per cent). The next largest programme was the Americas with $1.8 million (21 per cent), followed by Asia and the Pacific with $1.4 million (16 per cent), the Arab States with $1 million (13 per cent) and Europe with $0.5 million (6 per cent).

The main sectors in which UNCTAD provided assistance were: international trade, resources for development, commodities, economic co-operation among developing countries, maritime and multimodal transport, data management and cross-sectoral and other activities.

At its February session,⁽³⁾ the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget considered UNCTAD's 1987 technical co-operation activities.⁽¹²⁾ In a series of agreed conclusions, it invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take into account the need for: adequate transparency in project formulation and implementation; clear criteria for assessing and reporting on the state of implementation of projects and their interrelationships with other projects; projects to be based on the requirements of participating developing countries; better use of proper channels for selecting projects at the regional level; and efforts to improve procedures relating to updating the roster and selection of experts. The Working Party hoped that the recovery in the level of resources for UNCTAD technical co-operation activities would be further strengthened and expressed its appreciation to bilateral donors and multilateral aid agencies for their support to those activities. It invited UNDP to continue to expand its support.

The Working Party also considered technical co-operation at its November session⁽⁵⁾ and, in its agreed conclusions, requested the secretariat to report on progress in implementing its February conclusions, taking into account views expressed at the November session with reference to: project presentation and design; mobilization of resources; arrangements for financing substantive and administrative back-stopping of projects; procedures for recruiting experts; and project evaluation. The Working Party recommended that efforts be made to secure more regular contacts between the secretariat and bilateral donors and beneficiaries, called on the secretariat to explore new patterns for funding technical co-operation projects, invited UNDP and other funding sources to take into account UNCTAD's specialized expertise and its mandate when selecting executing agencies for projects in trade and development, and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to include in future technical assistance reports, on a triennial basis, an analysis of trends in volume of resources allocated to UNCTAD.

Organizational questions

Calendar of UNCTAD meetings

By a 10 May decision,⁽¹³⁾ TDB approved a calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1988.

On 5 October,⁽¹⁴⁾ it approved the calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1988 and for 1989.

UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery.

On 5 October,⁽¹⁵⁾ TDB reaffirmed its 1987 decision⁽¹⁶⁾ that measures contained in the 1987 report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the In-Depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields⁽¹⁷⁾ should be implemented within the UNCTAD machinery and its request to the UNCTAD Secretary-General to ensure full implementation of measures falling within his competence. It decided to review in 1990 measures relating to methods of work in UNCTAD.

UNCTAD publications. In accordance with a recommendation contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the In-Depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, which was endorsed by TDB in 1987,⁽¹⁶⁾ an Ad Hoc Working Group on Publications met between 26 May and 7 July 1988.⁽¹⁸⁾ It reviewed UNCTAD's publications and made a number of recommendations regarding reproduction and printing, cost evaluation, sales and dissemination policy and follow-up.

In October,⁽²⁾ TDB took note of the Group's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Rationalization of TDB's sessions. On 5 October,⁽¹⁹⁾ TDB, having reviewed its 1986 decision on rationalization of its regular sessions,⁽²⁰⁾ decided to reaffirm that decision.

Chapter V

Transnational corporations

Transnational corporations (TNCs) continued to be major players in the world economy. World-wide flows of foreign direct investment continued to expand in 1988, but most were directed towards the developed economies, particularly the United States and Western Europe. A significant development was the emergence of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe as prospective hosts for foreign direct investment.

The Commission on TNCs in April discussed, among other issues, the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, TNCs and issues relating to the environment, transnational banks in developing countries and the activities of the Centre on TNCs and its joint units established with the regional commissions. The Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts in March discussed international accounting issues.

Draft code of conduct

Work on formulating a code of conduct on TNCs, first considered in 1975,⁽¹⁾ continued in 1988. In accordance with a 1987 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, in January 1988,⁽³⁾ transmitted the report of the Chairman presiding at the Commission's special session, who had held consultations with the Bureau of that session with the aim of preparing a draft code of conduct for the reconvened special session.

Annexed to the report was a proposed text of the draft code,⁽⁴⁾ which covered, in the conduct of TNC activities, observance of national laws and regulations, adherence to economic goals and development objectives, renegotiation of contracts, adherence to socio-cultural objectives, respect for human rights, non-collaboration by TNCs with South Africa, non-interference in internal affairs and intergovernmental relations, abstention from corrupt practices, ownership and control, employment conditions, balance of payments and financing, transfer pricing, taxation, competition, transfer of technology, consumer protection, environmental protection and disclosure of information. Also covered were the treatment of TNCs (nationalization and compensation, jurisdiction and dispute settlement), intergovernmental cooperation and implementation of the code at the national and international levels.

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1988/104 of 5 February 1988, the enlarged Bureau of the special session met on 8 April to consider the draft text. It reached agreement on a set of recommendations to serve as guiding principles in future consultations and negotiations on the code of conduct.

Also in April,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission considered the Chairman's report⁽³⁾ and the draft code.⁽⁴⁾ In presenting the topic, the Executive Director of the Centre on TNCs expressed concern that, after 12 years, the code had still not been finalized and called on delegations to be flexible and to make a real effort to reach a compromise on the remaining unsettled questions in order to complete the code.

The Commission took note of the Chairman's report and requested the Centre to prepare another report on the subject for its 1989 session.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1988/58, reiterated the importance of the expeditious completion of the code of conduct.

International arrangements related to TNCs

In 1988, the Centre on TNCs continued to collect, monitor and analyse developments in international, regional and bilateral arrangements related to TNCs.

In a February 1988 report on international arrangements and agreements related to TNCs,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General analysed general principles of conduct by TNCs and their treatment by Governments, regional and multilateral agreements referring to entry, ownership and financing of TNCs, employment and labour, transfer of technology, protection of consumers and of the environment, jurisdiction, conflicting requirements, and settlement of investment disputes and investment insurance. He concluded that developments in the late 1980s showed important changes as regards some of the activities at the multilateral level. Certain multilateral instruments dealing with TNCs' conduct relating to specific products or issues had been adopted and major new efforts to limit national protectionist and regulatory measures, directed at trade and services, were under way. The Secretary-General noted the shift of emphasis in international negotiations to formulating standards of treatment of TNCs rather than their standards of conduct, but a body of principles concerning their conduct and treatment was beginning to emerge. There was a need for a comprehensive statement of agreed standards, such as that found in the draft code of conduct.

In April,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission took note of the report and requested the Centre to update it for its 1989 session.

Standards of accounting and reporting

The sixth session of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting was held in New York from 7 to 17 March 1988.⁽¹⁾ The Group had before it reports of the Secretary-General on current developments in accounting and reporting by TNCs,⁽²⁾ an international survey of financial reporting practices of TNCs,⁽³⁾ consolidation procedures and segmentation of aggregated data,⁽⁴⁾ objectives and concepts underlying financial reporting,⁽⁵⁾ numerical data on the largest service TNCs⁽⁶⁾ and appropriate measures to give effect to the work of the Group.⁽⁷⁾

The Group noted the usefulness of the annual review of important current developments in accounting and reporting and observed that such a report would gain in utility if it contained an analysis of global as well as national trends and covered as wide a range of countries as practicable.

With regard to the international survey of the financial statements of 200 TNCs, the Group suggested that more TNCs from African and Asian countries should be included, as well as TNCs whose shares were not publicly traded. The Group determined the time of circulation of the list of TNCs to be surveyed and decided that the final results should be presented to the Group in 1989.

Regarding consolidation procedures, the Group agreed that consolidated financial statements should be prepared in accordance with legal requirements and/or accounting standards and that, where the enterprise was considered to have met the conditions for inclusion in the consolidation, it should be excluded only in exceptional circumstances. The Group stated that segmentation of aggregated data should not be required beyond the level at which amounts could be allocated to segments on a reliable basis. As regards the objectives and concepts underlying financial reporting, the Group noted that agreement had been reached on several items, including the objective of financial statements.

In discussing further steps to be taken in relation to the development of a comprehensive information system of TNCs, the Group requested the Centre to continue to review the development of such a system and to report in 1989.

The Group recommended to the Commission on TNCs for adoption a draft resolution on the renewal of its mandate. It also adopted a document containing all the agreed conclusions of the Group and its ad hoc predecessor. The document was seen as a significant contribution to the process of standard-setting and particularly useful for developing countries in training and understanding current international trends. The Group agreed that a number of complex issues remained to be tackled, including information disclosure requirements regarding the economic and social responsibilities of TNCs and disclosure by banks.

In April,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission recommended the continuation of the Group's mandate. It agreed that the results of the Group's work should be brought to the attention of Governments, standard-setting bodies, the accountancy profession, TNCs and other interested parties through United Nations publications, advisory services and technical assistance.

The Commission approved the report of the Group and the Provisional agenda for its seventh (1989) session,⁽⁹⁾ and determined the measures to be taken in order to give effect to the Group's work.⁽¹⁰⁾

By decision 1988/164 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council decided that the seventh session of the Group should be held from 7 to 17 March 1989 instead of from 27 February to 10 March.

Commission on TNCs

The Commission on TNCs held its fourteenth session in New York from 6 to 15 April 1988.⁽¹⁾ Among subjects it discussed were recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations, activities of the Centre on TNCs during the biennium 1986-1987, the draft code of conduct on TNCs, international standards of accounting and reporting, TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, TNCs and the environment, TNCs in services, the role of transnational banks, the question of expert advisers, the role of the Commission and its agenda for 1989.

On 27 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its fourteenth session (decision 1988/163) and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fifteenth (1989) session (decision 1988/162).

TNCs in South Africa and Namibia

The Commission considered the role of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, having before it three reports of the Secretary-General, prepared in response to a 1987 request of the Economic and Social Council.(2)

The first, on the activities of TNCs in the region and the collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority regime there,(3) presented information on recent changes in foreign direct investment and in bank lending to South Africa and focused on the shift towards non-equity forms of participation by TNCs in the economy of the region. The second report dealt with the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating in the region in violation of United Nations decisions.(4) A report on the follow-up to the recommendations of the 1985 Panel of Eminent Persons,(5) established to conduct public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia,(6) reviewed the Panel's recommendations for adoption by TNCs and their home Governments. In order to induce TNCs to follow the recommendations, the Panel had added a number of suggested measures to international organizations, home country Governments, financial institutions and the general public. The report contained lists of TNCs which had disposed of their equity interests, those maintaining interests in the region, those in the process of disposing of their equity interests, and those which had reduced them.

The reports found that an increasing number of TNCs had terminated their operations in South Africa and Namibia. However, recent disinvestments had had an ambiguous effect, since TNCs continued to maintain their links with South Africa through licensing agreements and other non-equity arrangements.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1988, by decision 1988/163, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report on the follow-up to the recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons.

On the same date, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1988/56 by roll-call vote.

Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, in particular resolution 1981/86 of 2 November 1981, in which it requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements for the organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with grave concern the continued deterioration of the situation in South Africa and Namibia, as evidenced by the escalating brutality, indiscriminate killing and mass arrest of innocent persons, including women and children, by the authorities of the racist minority régime.

Noting with concern that the deadline of 1 January 1987 proposed by the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, for effecting significant changes in the operations of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia has not been met,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of the racist minority regime in South Africa and its brutal perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

2. Condemns those transnational corporations that, through covert and overt activities in South Africa and Namibia, continue their systematic and clandestine circumventing of laws and measures imposed by the Governments of their home countries, as well as the disinvestment programmes of some transnational corporations that are aimed at retaining profitable economic links with South Africa;

3. Welcomes as an initial step the measures taken by some Governments of home countries of transnational corporations to impose restrictions on further investments in South Africa and on bank loans to the racist oppressive régime, and, in the light of new investments and contractual arrangements by which South Africa continues to have access to investment, technologies and resources, calls upon home countries to ensure full and effective compliance with the measures adopted, such as those prescribing disinvestment;

4. Appeals to Governments of home countries of transnational corporations to impose similar and additional measures on transnational corporations operating in Namibia;

5. Reiterates that continued collaboration, especially of transnational corporations, with the racist regime in South Africa, through trade and various traditional and innovative investments and contractual arrangements, helps perpetuate and strengthen the apartheid regime in its war of aggression and acts of destabilization against front-line States and other neighbouring countries and in its illegal occupation of Namibia, and urges all countries to desist from such collaboration;

6. Urges the Governments of home countries of transnational corporations that have not yet done so to adopt measures aimed at ensuring that transnational corporations cease to contribute to maintaining the policies of apartheid of South Africa and its illegal occupation of Namibia;

7. Urge all transnational corporations, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolutions, to stop immediately all forms of collaboration with the racist régime in South Africa as a measure to force the racist regime to abandon apartheid, which constitutes a crime against humanity and an affront to human dignity, and to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia;

8. Reaffirms that the elimination of apartheid and the termination of the illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist régime will require an effective, concerted programme of international action, endorsed and supervised in a systematic manner by the United Nations, Governments and other relevant bodies and supported by monitoring and follow-up activities;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to establish by 1989 a panel of eminent persons to conduct public hearings in Europe on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, with a view to further mobilizing public opinion to induce home Governments and transnational corporations to cease any kind of collaboration with the South African regime;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the useful work carried out by the Secretariat in collecting and disseminating information on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia;

(b) To take all necessary measures to publicize the list contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to the recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, with a view to mobilizing public opinion in home countries of transnational corporations still operating in South Africa and Namibia;

Expert advisers

In February,(7) the Secretariat informed the Commission on TNCs that in 1988 it was to elect new expert advisers to serve until the end of the sixteenth (1990) session. The Commission thanked the retiring expert advisers for their valuable contribution and selected four new advisers with a business background, live with a trade union background and six with an academic or other background. It was agreed that one additional expert with a business background would be selected at a later date in consultation between the Commission's Chairman and the Executive Director of the Centre.

On 27 July, by decision 1988/163, the Economic and Social Council took note of a letter dated 3 June 1988 from the Chairman to the President of the Council informing him of the selection of the additional expert.(8)

Role of transnational banks

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on TNCs a report on the role of transnational banks in developing countries.(9) It described the changes in the composition of the global network of transnational banks characterized by limited expansion during the 1980s and how developing countries had been affected thereby. It noted the decline of transnational banks as the main suppliers of international finance and the shift in the nationality of such banks—while French and Japanese banks had increased the number of their foreign offices, banks from the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States had reduced theirs—and stressed that the role of transnational banks in developing countries was affected by host country regulations. The report also mentioned as a special case the widespread establishment by transnational banks of entities in offshore financial centres, which provided favourable taxation treatment, secrecy, lack of exchange controls and the near absence of regulations on international banking business. The report concluded that the activity of transnational banks in developing countries was increasingly taking securitized forms and remained largely confined to assisting foreign trade finance and participating in local markets.

In April, the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to continue further studies on the role of transnational banks in developing countries and to report in 1989.

By resolution 1988/58, the Economic and Social Council requested the Centre on TNCs to study new forms of debt, such as supplier loans and export credits, and make proposals on ways of making the terms of repayment comport with the developing countries' capacity to pay.

TNCs in services other than banking

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Commission on TNCs on the role of TNCs in services other than banking. It focused on service TNCs and their characteristics, such as propensity to transnationalize, diversification, home country and industry distribution and geographical spread of their affiliates. It briefly assessed the organizational forms of the service TNCs abroad—particularly non-equity ventures and co-operative arrangements—and concluded that the growing role of services in foreign direct investment had resulted from both the expansion of service TNCs and investment in services by industrial TNCs.

The Commission took note of the report and asked the Secretary-General to continue research on TNCs in services other than banking and to report to the Commission in 1989.

By resolution 1988/58, the Economic and Social Council requested the Centre on TNCs to prepare a report on the relationship between developing countries and TNCs in services from the perspective of developing countries.

Role of the Commission on TNCs in promoting international economic co-operation

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/57 without vote.

Role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations in promoting alternative and new forms of international economic co-operation
The Economic and Social Council,

Reiterating the important role of the United Nations in promoting equitable and mutually beneficial international economic co-operation as a major factor in economic development and well-being, world wide, particularly in developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the important role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in strengthening the capacity of developing countries in their dealings with transnational corporations by promoting technical co-operation, research and information activities in accordance with their mandates,

Recognizing that alternative and new forms of international investment, scientific and technological exchange and equity and non-equity co-operation, including joint ventures, should contribute to sustained growth and development world wide, particularly in developing countries,

1. Calls for the further strengthening of the role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, as the focal points within the United Nations system for issues related specifically to transnational corporations and for co-ordination with other intergovernmental bodies and secretariats on all matters in that regard;

2. Emphasises the need to enhance the work of the Centre in providing consultative, advisory and other types of technical assistance to developing countries, in conducting analytical research and studies and in gathering and disseminating information related to the development of alternative and new forms of international investment, scientific and technological exchange and other co-operative arrangements, including joint ventures, pertaining to the operations of transnational corporations, particularly in view of the development needs of the developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission at its fifteenth session on the implementation of the present resolution, including the improvement of co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system in accordance with the mandate of the Centre.

Centre on TNCs

In 1988, the United Nations Centre on TNCs continued to develop an information system, to conduct research and to carry out technical co-operation activities. It also acted as the substantive secretariat to the Commission on TNCs and the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting.

In response to a 1987 request by the Commission, (1) the Secretary-General submitted a report on the Centre's activities.⁽²⁾ It summarized the Centre's work on securing an effective code of conduct and other international arrangements and agreements related to TNCs. It also contained information on the Centre's activities aimed at minimizing the negative effects of TNCs and enhancing their contribution to development, and strengthening the capabilities of developing countries in dealing with TNCs.

Information system

In 1988, the Centre's information system continued to record and supply statistical data on foreign direct investment and related flows, having access to governmental sources and International Monetary Fund balance-of-payment and international financial statistics tapes, as well as data from other intergovernmental organizations.

The Centre increased to 30 the number of countries or territories on which it gathered data by official national source on the total inward and outward stocks and/or flows of foreign direct investment. The developing countries or territories for which data were collected were Bangladesh, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, Thailand and Venezuela; the developed countries were Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Centre also collected and computerized basic numerical data on the world's largest TNCs in the manufacturing and extractive sectors. It expanded its collection of foreign investment laws and contracts and agreements, particularly in the areas of petroleum and mining.

A data base of bibliographic citations was created by the Centre, in co-operation with the United Nations Electronic Services Division and the Dag Hammarskjöld Library. The data base contained references to books, periodicals, serials, articles, and documents by governmental and intergovernmental organizations dealing with TNCs, foreign direct investment and the institutional and regulatory frameworks pertaining to them. The first product of the data base was Transnational Corporations: A Selective Bibliography, 1983-1987.

The Centre continued to respond to requests from government institutions for assistance in developing and refining national information systems on TNCs, with a view to increasing the effectiveness of those systems.

During 1988, requests from Governments, trade unions, business organizations, academic institutions and the media increased. The information system received 1,940 requests for which the responses required research; in addition, 2,100 short-answer requests were received.

A report of the Secretary-General to the Commission⁽³⁾ described experience gained in the use of the information system on TNCs. It concluded with some observations on the information needs of developing countries and an exploration of further steps that might be taken to improve the system.

Joint units with regional commissions

Joint units established between the Centre on TNCs and the United Nations regional commissions continued to operate in 1988 in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Asia.⁽⁴⁾ Each unit's work programme, tailored to the region's specific needs, included research on the economic, social and institutional issues of TNCs, information dissemination, training and advisory services.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) undertook research within the context of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.⁽⁵⁾ Particular attention was given to the following projects: the role of TNCs in the food-processing industry in selected African countries; the role of TNCs in regional co-operation, based on national experiences of the region covered by the Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa; the integration of women in development; and the role of TNCs in the development of informatics. The provision of information on foreign direct investment gained prominence in the activities of the joint unit. In collaboration with ECA's Pan-African Documentation and Information System, the unit started to collect all available macro- and micro-data relating to the main TNCs operating in the region.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Europe focused its research activities on the contribution to Transnational Corporations in World Development: Trends and Prospects. Research was carried out on Japanese foreign direct investment in Europe. In the area of technical assistance, the unit directed a workshop on negotiating and implementing agreements with TNCs (Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea). The unit assisted the Centre in preparing, organizing and implementing a workshop on frameworks for international services. Work continued on setting up and organizing at Geneva the Centre's Regional European Documentation Centre on TNCs.

The joint unit established with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) completed its research project on TNCs based in Asian developing economies. In collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, it undertook a research project on the environmental aspects of TNC activities in the region. It undertook a re-examination of the role of TNCs in the tourism industry in Thailand and conducted a research project on TNCs in the international trade of primary commodities. In order to enhance the dissemination of information, the unit published in 1988 an edition of the Asia-Pacific TNC Review. During the year, it provided administrative and technical support to training workshops and advisory missions conducted by the Centre, including seminars on legal aspects of transnational investments in developing countries (Singapore, 2-13 May) and on the role of foreign direct investment and trade in services and development (Bangkok, Thailand, 6-9 June). The unit also continued activities leading to the development of national information systems and the establishment of an information network among ESCAP member countries.

The joint unit established with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean focused its research on analysing the behaviour of TNCs and their impact on the development process in Latin America. Studies were conducted on policy alternatives and experiences with regard to foreign direct investment; the impact of TNCs on the industrial structure of developing countries; debt equity conversion; and the behaviour of transnational banks and the international debt crisis. In the field of technical co-operation, the joint unit identified potential investors in selected industrial sectors in connection with the programme of industrial restructuring in Peru.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia completed studies on the impact of the operations of TNCs on the development of Oman and on the experience of Egypt in external financing during the period of 1974-1986. It initiated the preparation of studies on Arab petrochemicals and rising protectionism in the developed market economies and on institutional arrangements and procedures for screening and monitoring the activities of TNCs in Western Asia. Information was gathered on TNCs operating in the region as an input to the Centre's directory on foreign direct investment.

TNCs and developing countries

On 27 July 1988, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/58 by roll-call vote.

Strengthening the role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in support of developing countries
The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1908(LVII) of 2 August 1974 and 1913(LVII) of 5 December 1974 on the impact of transnational corporations on the development process and on international relations,

Noting the reports of the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its fourteenth session,

Noting also the important contribution made by the Commission and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations to furthering the understanding of the operations of transnational corporations and the effects of their activities on developing host countries and on the international economic situation,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the mandates of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations;

2. Emphasizes the need for the Centre to reinforce its role in strengthening the capacity of developing host countries in their dealings with transnational corporations by providing, through its technical co-operation programme, advisory services to those countries at their request, and urges all funding agencies of the United Nations, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, to co-operate actively in that task;

3. Request the Centre to continue its studies on political, economic and social issues and on the global trends and determinants of the flow of foreign direct investment and the impact of those trends and the expansion of transnational corporations on developing countries;

4. Requests the Centre, in continuing its work in the area of transnational corporations in services, to prepare, in co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, a comprehensive report on the relationship between developing countries and transnational corporations in services from the perspective of developing countries;

5. Reaffirms the importance of continuing consideration of the issues related to the activities of transnational banks and their corporate strategies and the different mechanisms currently envisaged to alleviate the debt problem and their potential impact on the capital accounts of developing countries; in that context, consideration should also be given to the effective repayment capacity of debtor developing countries, allowing for the maintenance of satisfactory growth in their economies;

6. Recognizes that debt other than bank lending, such as supplier loans and export credits handled by transnational corporations, is of concern to developing countries, and requests the Centre to study such forms of debt comprehensively, with a view to making concrete proposals on ways and means of making the modalities and terms of payment comport with the capacity of developing countries to pay and with their growth and development process;

7. Expresses concern that some transnational corporations have relocated environmentally dangerous operations and processes in developing countries, and requests the Centre to intensify its study of the environmental impact of the operations of transnational corporations in developing countries and to provide technical assistance to developing host countries, at their request, for the development of adequate environmental protection policies relating to the operations of transnational corporations;

8. Requests the Centre to assist in the preparation of the report of the Secretary-General on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes in accordance with General Assembly resolution 42/183 of 11 December 1987 and in the expeditious publication of the fourth issue of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments;

9. Also requests the Centre to study the role of transnational corporations in the least developed countries in a comprehensive manner, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its fifteenth session;

10. Reiterates the need for the Centre to intensify its technical co-operation with host developing countries, at their request, in dealing with transnational corporations in services;

11. Reiterates also the importance of the expeditious completion of the code of conduct on transnational corporations, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the Chairman presiding at the special session of the Commission in implementing the tasks assigned to him by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1987/57 of 28 May 1987;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its fifteenth session under the appropriate agenda items.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/58

27 July 1988 Meeting 39 36-5-9 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1988/113) by roll-call vote (34-5-9), 19 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1988/17); agenda item 8.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bolivia, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, India, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: Australia, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Norway, Portugal.

By decision 1988/161 of 27 July, the Council requested the Secretary-General to include in the report to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly on the Review and Appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990⁽⁵⁾ the contribution made by the Centre from June 1986 to July 1988 in support of the Programme's implementation. It also requested the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Ad Hoc Committee proposing ways for TNCs to increase foreign direct investment in Africa, with a view to stimulating the region's economic recovery and development.

Research

The Centre continued to examine, monitor and analyse multilateral, regional and bilateral agreements relating to TNCs. A report of the Secretary-General on the negotiation, adoption, implementation and follow-up of the regional and multilateral agreements relating to foreign direct investment and TNCs, and their impact on the elaboration of standards of conduct and treatment for TNCs was submitted to the Commission.⁽⁶⁾

In 1988, the Centre completed work on the fourth survey of TNCs in world development. A report of the Secretary-General to the Commission⁽⁷⁾ said the survey described the main behaviour of TNCs in the 1980s and analysed their impact on the world economy. Most of what was observed could be traced to one main theme, the continuation of the process of transnationalization. The recent growth of TNCs was different in important respects from previous periods of expansion. Small and medium-sized companies, including some from developing countries, were expanding more rapidly than larger firms. TNCs from Japan and Western Europe were rapidly expanding their transnational activities, while firms from the United States were expanding more slowly and, in some instances, contracting. Corporations were transnationalizing more rapidly in service activities than in manufacturing. At the same time, forms of transnationalization were changing, with various non-equity arrangements either replacing or supplementing foreign direct investment. Research findings indicated that the activities of TNCs were becoming increasingly concentrated in the developed market economies.

In April,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission took note of the report and requested the Centre to prepare another study in 1989 on recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations and to prepare the fifth survey on TNCs in 1993.

The Centre's research programme during 1988 developed a number of the themes that were raised in the fourth survey. They were summarized in a report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁹⁾ Of particular importance were the impact of new and emerging technologies on strategies of TNCs and the distribution of world-wide flows of foreign direct investment.

During 1988, the Centre published two issues of the CTC Reporter, its semi-annual magazine, and four issues of Transnationals, a quarterly newsletter.

The Centre carried out research on the role of TNCs in the process of sustainable development and was represented at various intergovernmental and professional conferences. It assisted host developing countries on issues related to hazardous waste. In a report on TNCs and their impact on the environment,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General provided an update on the activities of international organizations, individual Governments, non-governmental organizations and industry in ensuring industrial process safety. The report focused on the responses of TNCs to industrial accidents. In April,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission took note of the report and encouraged the Centre to assist host Governments in integrating the activities of TNCs in a policy of sustainable development. It requested the Centre to report in 1989.

Technical co-operation

In 1988,⁽¹¹⁾ developing countries continued to reappraise their policies towards foreign investment and technology transfer. In order to attract greater inflows, many developing countries sought the Centre's assistance in reformulating their foreign investment and technology policies.

The Centre completed or initiated 100 advisory and information projects in 41 developing countries. Of those, 50 were in 18 African countries, 29 were in 14 countries in Asia and the Pacific, and 21 were in 10 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

The majority of advisory and information services were related to the formulation of foreign investment policies, laws and regulations relating to foreign investment and technology transfer, the formulation of model contracts and agreements, and the streamlining of institutional mechanisms and administrative procedures for approving, monitoring and promoting foreign investment. The rest pertained to specific sectors and to issues such as export-processing zones and transfer pricing. Thirty-two projects were completed or initiated in the forestry, manufacturing, mining, petroleum, telecommunication and tourism sectors. The Centre implemented 32 training projects consisting of 23 workshops, round-table meetings or seminars and 9 study tours and fellowships. It continued its sponsorship of the study tour programme for several developing countries.

After finalization and distribution of the curricula relating to TNCs for advanced courses in transnational law, economics and business, three seminars were held for representatives of higher educational institutions in Asia.

Activities to support harmonization efforts within regional institutions continued during 1988. The secretariat of the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States (PTA), with the Centre's assistance, entered the second phase of its programme of rationalization and harmonization of PTA investment codes. The Centre also assisted the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States in its efforts to harmonize its foreign investment and technology transfer policies, laws and regulations. A major study was prepared, which provided an analytical background to the foreign investment policies, laws and regulations in the subregion and made suggestions on common approaches to promote intraregional benefits. In the area of services, the Centre began a joint project with the Junta del Acuerdo de Cartagena, Colombia, to examine technology transfer through TNCs in services to the Andean Pact subregion. In order to influence the tailoring of debt-equity swaps to particular domestic situations of developing countries within the general framework of debt management solutions, the Centre, together with the Latin American Economic System, organized an international seminar on debt-equity swaps (Caracas, Venezuela, April).

The Centre developed an extensive technical assistance programme that utilized TNC linkages for the development of entrepreneurship and technology-based small and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries. During 1988, the programme was launched in Argentina.

A report of the Secretary-General to the Commission on TNCs focused on the Centre's role in meeting the technical assistance requirements of developing countries.⁽¹²⁾ In April,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission took note of the report and requested the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1989 a further report on the subject. It reaffirmed the importance it attached to the Centre's technical co-operation programme.

Financing

The Centre's technical co-operation programme continued to be financed mainly by extra-budgetary resources from the Centre's Trust Fund and from allocations from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).⁽⁴⁾ Total extra-budgetary resources in 1988 amounted to $5,568,280. Contributions to the Trust Fund reached $2,934,587; the significant increase was attributed to continuing support by several donor countries and the input made by new donors. The Fund's opening balance was $1,050,548 and interest income amounted to $300,000. Resources made available by UNDP totalled $1,283,145. Total disbursements in 1988 amounted to $3,115,137; advisory projects accounted for $988,552 and workshops and other training activities for $1,523,573.

Chapter VI

Natural resources, energy and cartography

During 1988, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration continued to assist developing countries in natural resources exploration and development. It became operational in the Asia region with projects in China and the Philippines.

In December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to outline a programme of action to accelerate the exploration and development of the energy resources of developing countries and to undertake appropriate studies and analyses (resolution 43/193). It endorsed the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and urged members of the Committee to consider further measures to strengthen United Nations activities in that area (43/192).

In October, the Assembly urged all States to strive for international co-operation in carrying out the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency and in applying measures to strengthen the safety of nuclear installations (43/16).

In May the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations adopted at the Fifth (1987) United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names (decision 1988/116).

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration assists developing countries in natural resources exploration and development. During 1988,⁽¹⁾ it pursued two goals—more equitable distribution of projects and greater variety in the type of minerals being sought. The Fund became active in the Asia region with new mineral targets: pyrophyllite in China and chromite in the Philippines. In addition, the Fund expanded its geothermal activities with a project in Mexico and the evaluation of other potential projects in Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia and the Pacific and Africa.

The Fund had 12 projects operating during 1988, including nine mineral exploration projects

(Argentina, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Haiti, Honduras, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda), one feasibility study (Congo) and two geothermal projects (Mexico, Saint Lucia).

Peru requested the Fund to extend its exploration activities into two new areas, resulting in the identification of more than 230 million cubic metres of gold-bearing gravels containing about 1.5 million ounces of recoverable gold. The Government was seeking financing to bring the deposit into production.

Exploration for gold in Ghana began early in the year with financial support from Sweden. By the end of 1988, geophysical and geochemical investigations had been completed and a zone of gold mineralization about 1 kilometre long identified.

The Fund's project in Haiti was completed in 1988 and its report listed gold in the area known as Faille B. The project involved the drilling of 3,200 metres, consisting of 31 boreholes, 97 line kilometres of geophysical surveys and analysis of more than 8,300 samples. The reserves discovered amounted to approximately 520,000 tonnes with a grade of 14 grams of gold per tonne. The Fund was assisting the Government in attracting investment to bring the discovery into production.

Projects in Rwanda and Côte d'Ivoire were concluded without significant mineral discoveries. However, in Rwanda, results would assist co-operatives in the exploration of modest quantities of gold.

In the Congo, the Fund's offshore phosphate feasibility study entered an advanced stage with the signing of a contract with the Bureau de recherches géologiques et minières of France. Activities would include bulk sampling and environmental, marketing, infrastructure and economic studies.

In a March 1988 report,⁽²⁾ the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) presented a review of the terms and conditions of Fund assistance with a view to seeing whether they could be made more attractive to recipient countries without sacrificing the intention to build up the revolving Fund from successful projects. The Administrator concluded that the terms and conditions should not be changed.

On 1 July, the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report and approved his recommendations; noted his approval of supplementary short-term financing for the offshore phosphate feasibility study in the Congo; approved exploration for precious and base metals in Ghana; noted the success of the Fund in obtaining joint financing of its projects; and renewed its appeal to Member States to contribute to the Fund.

Financing

In 1988, project expenditures totalled $6.9 million compared to $4.6 million in 1987. Total income was $2.9 million, which included voluntary contributions of $2.3 million from eight Governments. By year's end, the Fund's balance stood at $3.4 million.

Mineral resources

The 1988 activities of the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) were described in a report of the Secretary-General.(4)

During the year, there was increased interest in investment programmes, human resources development, efforts to attract the private sector to mining, and the transfer of technology. Total assistance delivered by DTCD for mineral resources was $12.5 million, up from $11.1 million in 1987. The distribution of expenditures was $7.5 million in Africa, $1.8 million each in Asia and the Pacific and in the Americas, and $1.4 million in the Mediterranean, Middle East, Europe and interregional programme. Advisory missions increased to 120, up from 59 in 1987.

DTCD provided legal, technical, economic and negotiating expertise to the Dominican Republic in negotiations related to the FALCONDO nickel project, nickel being the country's major foreign exchange earner. As part of a gold investment promotion project in Guyana, a compendium of information for prospective investors was prepared and advertised through a commercially printed prospectus. In Burkina Faso, a geochemical survey, follow-up field checking and assistance in connection with the recovery of gold were completed.

With the World Bank, DTCD initiated a review of investment conditions in African countries aimed at reversing the decline of mining production. Support to negotiations for a titanium oxide mining operation between Senegal and the DuPont company of the United States led to an investment agreement. DTCD advisers reviewed mineral investment contracts in Bolivia, Brazil, Ethiopia, Guinea, Haiti, Indonesia, Kenya, Malaysia, Malta, Pakistan, Peru and the Philippines.

An interregional seminar on small-scale mining in developing countries was held at Ankara, Turkey, from 19 to 25 September 1988, organized by DTCD with the support of UNDP.

Water resources

The traditional approach to water resources management dealt with water almost exclusively as a natural resource. The other uses of fresh water as a major component of ecosystems and a carrier of matter in natural cycles and its role in socio-economic development were taken into account by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in its programme for the environmentally sound management of inland water. During 1988,(5) attention under the programme focused on the Lake Chad basin, which had deteriorated as a result of a prolonged dry period.

UNEP assisted the Lake Chad Basin Commission by outlining the necessary steps for the preparation of a water master plan and an action programme for the environmentally sound management of the basin through: lake inflow and water balance control; reinforcing the recharge of underground waters; development of sound water use; water and soil conservation projects; improvement of rain-fed and irrigated agriculture; and restoration of vegetation.

While the implementation of the action plan for the Zambezi River system was primarily a matter for the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, UNEP's concern with the development of large international basins focused on an advanced decision support system for basin management. In 1988, in co-operation with the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis, UNEP continued to develop and test an interactive programme for the decision support system. A case-study of the Zambezi basin was prepared to demonstrate the methodology to the institutions involved in the implementation of the Zambezi plan.

In the Mekong Delta, one way to increase food production lay in more intensive agriculture and improvement of water and land management through restoration of the agricultural productivity of the acid sulphate soils, though the method of improvement of acid soils was not feasible over large areas. In co-operation with the USSR Commission for UNEP, a survey mission was dispatched to the Delta to establish two pilot farms covering at least 5,000 hectares each. Some 12 Vietnamese specialists underwent training in the USSR in rational agricultural land use and water resources development, and another 16 were trained in the technology of intensive rice growing in the Delta.

Projects were also developed for the protection and development of the Lake Xolotlán basin in Nicaragua and the Orinoco-Apure river system in Venezuela.

UNEP was equally concerned with the environmentally sound management of ground-water resources. An expert group meeting was held (Bahrain, March) to discuss the preparation of an action plan for the management of the Damman aquifer. Experts from Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, the Arab Centre for the Study of Arid Zones and Dry Lands and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia attended. They agreed on the need to prevent the pollution of recharge water by industrial and domestic waste and to co-operate in conserving ground-water resources.

Inter-agency co-ordination

The Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ninth session, Geneva, 17, 18 and 21 October 1988)(6) discussed the preparation of a strategy for the implementation in the 1990s of the Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources, adopted in 1977 by the United Nations Water Conference.(7) It also considered the water situation in Africa, operation and maintenance for water resources, data collection and dissemination, water demand management, and the implications of the 1987 report of the World Commission on Environment and Development(8) in regard to water resources development and utilization.

During 1988,(4) better use and fuller development of water resources continued to be of major interest to Member States, as DTCO shifted its focus to longer-term water resources planning and assessment of resource availability. The number of projects decreased from 126 in 1987 to 113 in 1988, while the total budget for the sector increased from $24 million in 1987 to $24.3 million in 1988. The regional distribution of funds was as follows: Africa, $10.5 million or 54.5 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, $4.1 million or 21.6 per cent; the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and inter-regional programme, $2.7 million or 14.1 per cent; and the Americas, $1.9 million or 9.8 per cent.

Rural water supply continued to comprise a significant part of the technical assistance programme, with about 18 per cent of all projects. While a quarter of those projects were concerned with institutional support and training for technicians and professionals, there was an increase in the number of projects to improve the management and planning of water resources.

The most significant rural water supply project in 1988 was carried out in the Abeche-Mongo area of Chad. The project undertook to sink about 500 boreholes to provide potable water to a population of 35,000.

Assistance related to dams and other hydraulic structures also increased. Project support was provided to hydraulic research centres in Bangladesh, India, Iran and Viet Nam. A project on dam safety and monitoring was begun in India and a similar project formulated for China.

In Bangladesh, which had been plagued by floods, the physical models previously used for hydraulic studies were being replaced by mathematical models.

In water management and planning, two projects stood out: water resources management in three river basins of Tamil Nadu, India, financed by a World Bank loan to the state Government, aimed to demonstrate that improved management and more efficient use could make more water available; in Yemen, a project was helping to establish a technical secretariat to support the High Water Council in setting up a water resource data base and preparing a national master plan.

In addition to UNDP-financed projects, 42 interregional advisory missions were sponsored under the United Nations Regular Programme of Technical Co-operation, covering such areas as water legislation, water well drilling, computerized data management and hydrogeology. Activities under the Programme included the convening of an interregional seminar on river and lake basin development, emphasizing the African region (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, October), and an international seminar on women's role in the water resources sector (Bamako, Mali, November).

Energy

Energy resources development

In an August 1988 report(1) to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General focused on energy exploration and development trends in developing countries. Since his previous report,(2) the dimensions of the oil price collapse in 1986 and its subsequent stabilization in 1987 at about half the level that had prevailed had become clearer. Investments by national oil companies in the developing world had suffered in oil-exporting countries because of massive production over-capacities and great reduction in foreign exchange revenues from oil sales.

The expectation in oil-importing countries that savings on oil imports could be channelled to the development of indigenous energy resources had hardly materialized. Corporate cash flows had also been reduced, with consequent cut-backs in investments, because of the oil glut and fears of another oil price collapse to the low levels of $6 to $9 a barrel reached in mid-1986. Such investments had been further reduced by the failure of hundreds of independent oil corporations that had prospered during the 1970s and the first half of the 1980s in North America, the North Sea and elsewhere because of high oil prices.

The report analysed energy consumption trends, provided data on energy exploration, development and production, discussed investments and changes in petroleum industry structures, and described new methods of energy financing. It concluded that the energy-deficient developing countries had not been able to adjust to changes in the global energy situation because of their lack of financial resources and technologies. Their energy import bill still weighed heavily on their total foreign exchange. With a resumption of economic growth, the import dependence of oil-importing developing countries would become even more pronounced.

During the next decade, it was expected that the world energy demand, particularly for oil, would again increase pressures for higher prices. There was a need for international co-operation to ensure stability in energy investments, production and consumption patterns, and, in that connection, the role of the United Nations merited consideration. A country-by-country survey of available energy projections and plans to the year 2000 might be initiated. The results of such a survey and their implications for energy self-reliance could then be submitted to the Assembly in 1990.

UNDP action. The UNDP Energy Office/Energy Account promoted activities in the energy sector of developing countries and provided technical advice to UNDP on energy-related projects. On 1 July, the UNDP Governing Council, having considered the report of the Administrator on new arrangements in UNDP in the areas of science, technology and energy,⁽⁴⁾ recommended that the name of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development be changed to the United Nations Fund for Science, Technology and Energy. It also decided to close the Energy Office; the Energy Account would remain as a sub-account of the Fund. (See PART THREE, Chapter VII.)

The Secretary-General, in a report to the UNDP Governing Council on United Nations technical co-operation activities,⁽⁵⁾ stated that the budget of DTCD in the energy sector during 1988 was $15.8 million, compared to $21.3 million in 1987. Expenditures were as follows: $9.1 million for Asia and the Pacific; $2.5 million for the Middle East, Europe, the Mediterranean and interregional programme; and $2.1 million each for Africa and the Americas. The decrease in expenditures reflected the lower priority given to the energy sector by developing countries in response to lower world oil prices. A total of 78 advisory missions were carried out in 49 countries during the year in the areas of petroleum, coal, natural gas, electric power, energy planning and conservation, geothermal, solar and wind energy, multi-source renewable energy packages, computerized data banks and microcomputer-based energy analysis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/193.

Development of the energy resources of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolution 40/208 of 17 December 1985 on the development of the energy resources of developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of the development of the energy resources of developing countries and the need for measures by the international community to assist and support the efforts of the developing countries, in particular the energy-deficient among them, to develop their energy resources, in order to meet their needs through co-operation, assistance and investment in the field of conventional and of new and renewable sources of energy, consistent with their national plans and priorities,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 40/208 and calls for the effective implementation of all its provisions;
2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on energy exploration and development trends in developing countries;
3. Notes with concern that these trends have been on the decline in recent years, and therefore requests the Secretary-General to outline a programme of action aimed at the acceleration of the exploration and development of the energy resources of developing countries;
4. Welcomes the convening of symposia and other similar undertakings called for in resolution 40/208 and calls upon interested Member States, in co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to explore ways and means to support the efforts of developing countries in the exploration and development of their energy resources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate studies and analyses of trends in energy exploration and development of energy resources of developing countries, taking into account the activities of relevant organizations of the United Nations system in this field, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990.

New and renewable energy sources

Implementation of the Nairobi Programme

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1986 request,⁽⁶⁾ submitted a report in January 1988⁽⁷⁾ to the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, concerning trends and policy considerations as well as technological developments, as identified in the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.⁽⁸⁾

The report stated that a slow-down in global economic growth had been accompanied by slack energy markets and decreasing prices. The supply of petroleum continued to be abundant. Supplies of coal and natural gas showed small increases, while nuclear electricity capacities grew markedly. The report stressed that current abundant energy supplies pertained only to the commercial sector of the global energy economy. The rural sector in developing countries was largely disconnected from international energy markets and therefore did not benefit. It relied for energy on traditional sources, including fuelwood, charcoal, draught animal power and agricultural and animal residues.

More than 2 billion rural inhabitants depended on fuelwood, the majority living in areas where fuelwood scarcity was acute. The fuelwood crisis was affecting their nutrition, health and living standards; it was imperative to address that situation. A considerable increase in woodlot planting, widespread use of improved forest management techniques and utilization of fast-growing and appropriate species were essential. Further, the demand for fuelwood could be reduced through conversion to efficient stoves and kilns and to alternative sources of energy such as biogas, gasifiers, small-scale hydropower and wind and solar energy.

Recent technological developments in the use of energy sources had generally been of an incremental nature without major breakthroughs, according to the report. Development efforts had been set back by the unfavourable economic climate and the lack of competitiveness resulting from lower hydrocarbon prices. The report pointed out that the overview presented referred only to already accomplished technology; it did not consider prospects opened up by research progress in such areas as the advanced turbines derived from aircraft technology for the utilization of biomass, the renewed interest in the production of hydrogen and developments in superconductivity deemed to be promising for energy applications.

In another report submitted to the Committee in February,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the mobilization of financial resources as well as inter-agency co-ordination for implementing the Nairobi Programme of Action. Reviewing the background and trends in and mechanisms for resource mobilization, he concluded that there was a whole range of multilateral, bilateral, domestic, public and private mechanisms for funding activities. Consultative meetings, convened at the national, regional and global levels, were flexible mechanisms for co-ordinating resources. The Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, established in 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ served as a focal point for co-ordination of activities, for the avoidance of duplication and overlapping and for monitoring the implementation of the Nairobi Programme.

In response to a 1986 request of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, in February,⁽¹¹⁾ submitted a report by the UNDP Administrator on UNDP's activities in the area of new and renewable energy sources. The report reviewed the energy situation; areas of concentration and activities of the UNDP Energy Account; UNDP activities; collaborative arrangements, including those with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in the Centre for Small Energy Resources and the Information Centre for Heavy Crude and Tar Sands; and the financial situation. An appendix showed that UNDP funding of activities in the area of new and renewable sources of energy, energy conservation and planning in developing countries during the 1980s totalled $319.5 million.

DTCD, reporting on its technical co-operation activities,⁽⁵⁾ stated that in the area of new and renewable energy resources, solar and wind energy development programmes had progressed significantly. In China, small but technically advanced experimental wind power stations had been set up in Zhejiang and Fukien provinces; project data had been computerized and were playing a key role in developing larger, commercial-size wind turbine generators. In Mongolia, a new project would expand rural power supply through local wind pumps, solar water and air heaters and biogas digesters for cattle farms. Another project in Mongolia would identify the potential national market for photovoltaic system applications. In Romania, a solar energy project developed photovoltaic solar cell and module fabrication technologies and established a module fabrication facility; it also tested a solar photovoltaic water pumping system for agriculture applications. In India, a project was testing solar thermal equipment. In Cuba, a project would establish a facility for the production of crystalline silicon using national quartz. A project in Cape Verde had determined the wind régime for sizing of units at potential wind power sites and formulated the procedure for measuring solar radiation.

Three geothermal projects were completed in 1988. In the Philippines, four sites for the direct use of geothermal energy for agro-industrial purposes were found to be economically feasible, 18 engineers were trained and equipment was installed. In Honduras, a pre-feasibility study on the geothermal potential in the central region was concluded, leading to a government decision to develop geothermal resources for low- to medium-scale power generation. In China, a project evaluated the use of geothermal energy to meet district heating requirements in the Beijing and Tianjin areas.

Research and development

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1986 request⁽⁶⁾ from the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, submitted in January 1988 a report on United Nations activities in research, development and demonstration and in information systems related to new and renewable sources of energy.⁽¹²⁾ He said the activities carried out in research, development and demonstration had been largely concerned with applying existing knowledge and with supporting activities in developing countries that promoted institution-building and policy formulation, the launching of research and pilot projects, and the development of research methods. In view of the limited resources available for those activities, the importance of co-ordination and co-operative arrangements could not be overemphasized.

A substantial number of activities had been carried out with regard to information systems. Some of them involved the establishment or extension of information systems, while others concerned technical and financial co-operation with developing countries promoting institution-building and technical know-how. Coverage of the information systems within the United Nations system was uneven and incomplete. For example, only one activity was reported on a data base on draught animal power, and no activity was reported on a system of information dealing with geothermal energy, peat and large-scale hydropower, apart from statistical activities on those sources. It was apparent that while there might be an abundance of information in some areas, potential users were not aware of its availability and location. There was a need for an effective referral service to improve the access to information.

Committee on new and renewable sources of energy

The Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy held its fourth session in New York from 28 March to 8 April 1988.⁽¹³⁾ The Committee, which was established in 1982⁽¹⁴⁾ by the General Assembly as an intergovernmental group to promote the Nairobi Programme of Action,⁽⁸⁾ adopted two resolutions and a decision.

The first resolution⁽¹⁵⁾ concerned enhancing the activities of the United Nations system to implement the Programme of Action. The Committee decided to include in the provisional agenda for its fifth (1990) session the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to integrated rural development and the specific issues of direct solar-to-electrical energy conversion and utilization of agricultural residues and urban wastes for energy production. The Committee invited States to inform it of their activities and evaluations with regard to those themes and invited States and organizations to convene meetings to examine them. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare reports on the current stage of achievements in relation to those themes and on the more effective exchange of information and experience regarding new and renewable sources of energy.

By the second resolution,⁽¹⁶⁾ on follow-up action regarding research, development and demonstration, and information systems, the Committee noted the report of the 1987 Colloquium of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy.⁽¹⁷⁾ It called for the implementation of the Colloquium's short-term proposals regarding efficient utilization of energy, identification of success stories and innovations, and promotion of joint ventures in developing countries, and of a longer-term proposal on the feasibility of a network of international centres in the area of new and renewable sources of energy. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to convene an ad hoc panel of experts to prepare recommendations regarding information systems on such sources of energy.

The decision(18) set forth the provisional agenda and documentation for the Committee's fifth session.

Following informal consultations, the First (Economic) Committee of the Economic and Social Council agreed on 20 July to take no action on a draft decision introduced by Tunisia, on behalf of the Group of 77,(19) requesting the Secretary-General to submit a report in 1989 containing proposals on the composition, terms of reference and institutional, legal and financial implications of an expert group on the development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy, to complement the work of the Committee.

On 26 July, by decision 1988/157, the Council took note of the Committee's report on its fourth session.(13)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/192.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions concerning new and renewable sources of energy, in particular resolution 41/170 of 5 December 1986,

Stressing that trends in the energy sector do not diminish the importance of the continued development of new and renewable sources of energy,

Considering that new and renewable sources of energy could constitute a significant share of total world energy supplies, particularly in developing countries,

Noting the continuing need to strengthen the activities of the United Nations in the field of development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its fourth session and endorses the resolutions and decision contained therein;

3. Urges the States members of the Committee, at its fifth session, to consider further measures to strengthen the activities of the United Nations in this field, particularly to enable the Committee to assure full and more effective implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action;

4. Invites interested States to inform the Committee, at its fifth session, of their ongoing technical and scientific activities and/or evaluations with regard to selected substantive themes, and invites interested States, organizations of the United Nations system and other interested organizations to convene technical and scientific meetings, related to the substantive themes, that would contribute to the examination of such themes in depth, and to inform the Committee, also at its fifth session, of the results of those meetings;

5. Calls upon the international community to implement effectively the proposals contained in the conclusions and recommendations of the Colloquium of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, held at Castelgandolfo, Italy, in 1987, as contained in paragraph 2 of resolution 2(IV) of 8 April 1988 of the Committee, which are aimed at giving new impetus to the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, and requests the Secretary-General to convene an ad hoc panel of experts to prepare specific recommendations regarding information systems on new and renewable sources of energy;

6. Reiterates the need to pursue actively ways and means of mobilizing adequate additional financial resources commensurate with the needs of developing countries in the field of new and renewable sources of energy and emphasizes the need to utilize existing channels fully, including the United Nations Trust Fund for New and Renewable Sources of Energy, and urges donor countries to continue voluntary contributions to that Fund;

7. Reaffirms the importance of increasing inter-agency co-operation within the United Nations system, as well as co-ordination of development activities for new and renewable sources of energy at all levels.

Nuclear energy

IAEA report

Total installed nuclear power generating capacity in the world increased by about 4.3 per cent during 1988, reaching 311 gigawatts by the end of the year. Nuclear power plants accounted for about 17 per cent of the world's electricity generation; 14 nuclear power plants came on line during the year, in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Republic of Korea, Spain, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, bringing the world total to 429. Two reactors, with a total capacity of 335 megawatts, were permanently shut down in the USSR and the United Kingdom. Construction began on six plants in China, France, Japan, the USSR and the United Kingdom. (See PART SEVEN, Chapter I, for further information on activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency.)

In July 1988, the Secretary-General transmitted the 1987 report of IAEA to the General Assembly.⁽²⁰⁾ The Agency's Director General presented and updated the report in a statement to the Assembly on 27 October. He pointed out that developing countries would have an increasing need for electricity for irrigation, industrialization and transport, as would industrialized countries with relatively low levels of energy consumption. He said there was little reliance by Governments on renewable energy sources, but rather an increasing reliance on coal and gas, along with a considerable increase in carbon dioxide emissions. He was not suggesting that nuclear power would be a panacea against the greenhouse effect, acid rain or dying forests and lakes, but that nuclear power was one large-scale source of energy that did not give rise to acid rain or greenhouse gases.

He suggested that a thorough examination of environmentally responsible and practical energy policies be conducted under United Nations auspices. Among the issues to be considered would be: how much energy would be needed in the coming decades for industrial and social development in both industrialized and developing countries; to what extent efficiency gains in energy production and use offset increased needs; to what extent sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide could be eliminated from fossil fuel emissions and at what cost; to what extent the problems caused by those gases and carbon dioxide could be alleviated by greater use of natural gas and nuclear power; the possible contribution of renewable energy sources; the possibility of nuclear fusion; and the problems associated with nuclear power.

He said that more education was needed on the subject of radiation. While each person received an average annual dose of 2.4 millisieverts from natural sources, activities related to nuclear power gave 0.0002 millisieverts annually.

While IAEA had no mandate regarding toxic waste, the question of nuclear dumping had been the subject of a Board of Governors resolution in 1988. The Director General also discussed concerns that increased reliance on nuclear power might lead to a proliferation of nuclear weapons. He stressed that most countries had renounced nuclear weapons and adhered to IAEA safeguards—95 per cent of the nuclear installations and fissile material in non-nuclear-weapon States were covered by those safeguards, and all five nuclear-weapon States experienced some safeguards inspection. In addition, he suggested that if a nuclear-weapon-free zone were established in the Middle East, as had been proposed (see PART ONE, Chapter II), verification responsibilities could be entrusted to IAEA.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/16.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency
The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1987,

Conventions

In accordance with a 1987 decision of the General Assembly,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary General submitted a report in October 1988⁽²²⁾ on accession by the United Nations to the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and to the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency. The Conventions had been adopted in 1986;⁽²³⁾ the Notification Convention entered into force in 1986 and the Assistance Convention in 1987.

As at 21 July 1988, 29 States were parties to the Notification Convention and 23 States to the Assistance Convention. The Conventions also were open for accession by international organizations having competence in respect to matters covered by the Conventions. As at 21 July 1988, no international organization had acceded to either of them. Annexed to the Secretary-General's report were declarations indicating the extent of the competence of the United Nations in matters covered by each of the Conventions.

On 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 43/441, transmitted the Secretary-General's report to its 1989 session for further consideration.

Cartography

DTCO projects in cartography (surveying, mapping and hydrography) continued during 1988.⁽¹⁾ They included institution-building, transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions and provision of training and equipment. Fellowships and grants for study tours were awarded to candidates from all over the world for studies in photogrammetry, cadastral systems, cartographic and photographic procedures, cartography, digital mapping, computer communications and networking, cadastral surveying and land information, geodetic science and hydrography.

In March 1988,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on the Fifth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, held in 1987.⁽³⁾

By decision 1988/116 of 25 May, the Council took note of the report; endorsed the Conference's recommendation to convene the Sixth Conference in 1992; requested the Secretary-General to implement the Fifth Conference's recommendations, especially with regard to the work of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names; and approved the statute and rules of procedure of the Group. On 24 May, by decision 1988/111, the Council decided to hold the fourteenth session of the Group at Geneva from 17 to 26 May 1989 instead of in September 1989.

Chapter VII

Science and technology

The United Nations continued in 1988 to strengthen the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries by mobilizing financial resources, encouraging the flow of technology to those countries and upgrading institutional arrangements. The framework of these efforts was, as in previous years, the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development. Preparations for the Programme's end-of-decade review were carried out by the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development, the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development and other United Nations bodies.

The Centre and the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination proposed policy guidelines for harmonizing activities in science and technology within the United Nations system. The Advisory Committee met in September 1988 and warned that the debt crisis could affect investment in science and technology in developing countries.

The United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development finished its second year of operation, providing technical advisory services to the United Nations Development Programme, in addition to being a multilateral funding mechanism for science and technology activities.

Consultations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology continued, but differences on some outstanding issues remained. Transfer of technology continued to be a focus of various activities by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

The problem of the reverse transfer of technology, or brain drain, was the subject of a meeting of government experts in March. The General Assembly, in resolution 43/184, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take into account the experts' recommendations in the future work of the UNCTAD Committee on Transfer of Technology.

Financial resources for science and technology

Resource mobilization

At its September 1988 session (see below),⁽¹⁾ the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development recommended that developing countries set targets for investment in science and technology in the key sectors of their development plans. Such targets would encourage political commitment to a course of action and would serve as yardsticks for measuring progress. The Committee also recommended that donor countries channel a growing share of investment to education and to science and technology, as those fields were likely to be hard hit in the current era of great debt burdens and declining living standards. The external debt crisis could have ruinous effects on many countries' scientific and technological capabilities, the Committee warned. Resources for the growth of science and technology would in the main part be internal, with foreign financing playing a relatively small role, although external financing could play a significant role for the least developed countries. The Committee noted that the development of endogenous capacities in science and technology was not a major issue on the policy agenda of donor agencies.

UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development

The United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) was established as a trust fund within the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in 1987,⁽²⁾ taking over the responsibilities of the former United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development. Its responsibilities were to help finance, design and implement activities to strengthen the endogenous scientific and technological capacities of developing countries; collaborate with multilateral and bilateral programmes and non-governmental entities for that purpose; and serve as a focal point for science and technology within UNDP.

UNFSTD expenditures for 1987-1988 under core and co-financing arrangements were over $17 million.⁽³⁾ Voluntary contributions for 1988, pledged by 26 countries in November 1987, totalled $0.7 million, and the Fund received an additional $0.25 million in early 1988. Thirty-two countries pledged $1.4 million in November 1988. About 40 per cent of the limited core resources came from developing countries. The Fund made vigorous efforts to reduce its administrative expenses, which were about 11 per cent of its overall expenditure. Under the Fund's predecessor, the Financing System, a threshold level of $10 million had been stipulated, in roughly equal amounts from core and non-core resources. That overall threshold level had approximately been met, while the share of core funding had been much less than that of non-core funding.

In a March 1988 report to the UNDP Governing Council,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that UNFSTD was an essential element in the overall machinery of the United Nations dealing with science and technology, which included the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development and the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development, which served as the secretariat for both committees. The Administrator proposed that the Energy Office and Energy Account be closed and that their responsibilities and resources be transferred to UNFSTD.

Also under the management of UNFSTD were two technical consultancy services to developing countries: the Transfer of Knowledge through Expatriate Nationals (TOKTEN) and short-term advisory services (STAS). The Administrator noted that the joint management of those services and the Energy Office under UNFSTD, as well as the strengthening of the relationship of the Centre with UNFSTD and UNDP, had led to administrative cost savings and the enhancement of UNDP's effectiveness in science, technology and energy-related matters.

The new institutional arrangements had led to a broad strategy for science and technology activities within UNDP. The Administrator identified five areas of concentration, in line with the mandate laid down by the Intergovernmental Committee in 1987:⁽⁵⁾ the formulation of national science and technology strategies and master plans, including forecasting of technology and assessment of impact; introducing new appropriate technologies and upgrading traditional technologies; providing access to expertise needed to acquire and adapt advanced technologies for countries with the required technical infrastructure; improving commercial utilization and management of research, including the proper use of technology business incubation centres; and strengthening the establishment and use of relevant scientific and technological information systems. An effective way for UNFSTD to enhance UNDP's work in science and technology was to promote technological change through new initiatives and pilot activities, often of an experimental nature.

UNDP action. On 1 July,⁽⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the new arrangements for the work of UNDP in science, technology and energy and recommended to the General Assembly that it consider that issue and the possible change of UNFSTD to the United Nations Fund for Science, Technology and Energy. The Council affirmed the importance of UNFSTD as a focal point in UNDP for assistance in strengthening the national, subregional and regional capacities of developing countries to manage technological change and for stimulating international technological co-operation. The Council decided to close the Energy Office, but to retain the Energy Account as a sub-account of UNFSTD. It invited all Governments to increase their pledges to the core resources of the Fund as well as to the projected activities through individual co-financing arrangements and other co-operative modalities.

Technical co-operation activities

In the field of devising national science and technology strategies, UNFSTD undertook five projects in 1987 and 1988: in Burundi, Cyprus, Ethiopia and Jordan, as well as with the countries of the Gulf Co-operation Council. Their purpose was to assist countries with critically scarce human and financial resources to make appropriate choices of technology and to allocate technical resources to priority needs.⁽³⁾

Among activities to initiate new technologies assisted by the Fund were: an assessment of how biotechnology could be used to utilize Zambia's abundant raw materials and agricultural waste products; the establishment of a Computer Science Division at the Asian Institute of Technology (Bangkok, Thailand); training at the National Remote Sensing Centre in China; and the introduction of new advances in drip irrigation techniques in semi-arid environments in China. The Fund supported several projects in non-conventional energy: geothermal energy in Costa Rica and Djibouti, biogas in Cape Verde and photovoltaic technology in Maldives, Mauritius and Seychelles. The Fund also supported efforts to upgrade traditional technologies, like the woodstove development programme in West Africa and use of the soapberry plant in East Africa to treat schistosomiasis.

The Fund developed systems to serve as data bases and dissemination instruments, among them the Technological Information Pilot System, used in 10 countries in Africa, Asia, the Arab States and Latin America, and the Technology Expert Knowledge System, a proposed computer-based system using the existing network of UNDP offices around the world. In order to promote the commercial use of scientific research, UNFSTD launched a major programme on technological innovation and entrepreneurship in collaboration with the National Business Incubator Association of the United States and the European Business Incubator Network. Among other developments in that area, the first of 50 planned innovation centres was opened in Wuhan, China, and a conference on the matter was organized in Gabon following missions to Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Nigeria and Zimbabwe. In the area of quality control and maintenance, a UNFSTD-supported National Food Technology and Quality Control Research Centre was inaugurated in China in September 1988. The Fund supported the maintenance of scientific instruments in Africa and the training of technicians in Latin America.

Apart from being a multilateral funding mechanism for science and technology activities, UNFSTD also provided technical advisory services to UNDP in those fields. It responded to 132 requests for advice from UNDP bureaux and field offices in the 1987-1988 period. These included preparation of technical memoranda for projects, participation in various project appraisal committees and in the UNDP Action Committee, and assistance in monitoring and evaluation.

UNFSTD drew upon experts from professional societies and the international scientific community for project appraisal and evaluation, often at minimal cost. The two services working with the Fund, STAS and TOKTEN, provided additional sources of advice, fielding over 910 missions in 1987 and 1988. The fourth international TOKTEN workshop (New Delhi, India, February 1988) discussed ideas to widen the scheme. The year marked the tenth anniversary of TOKTEN and was the best in its history, with 449 consultancies completed, bringing the total to 2,270. About 26 countries had UNDP-supported TOKTEN programmes, to which they had allocated over $12 million of indicative planning figure (IPF) resources. STAS completed 70 assignments in 1988, bringing the total to 131 from the beginning of its operation in 1985. STAS services were voluntary, with only travel and per diem being provided either by the beneficiary organization or through IPF resources.

light of the technological and economic changes of the 1980s; endogenous capacity-building; the development of human resources; the development of strategies to foster linkages between research and development institutions and the productive sectors; the need for information systems for developing countries to improve their access to available science and technology or industrial information; national strategies for international co-operation; and financial resources for science and technology for development (see above).

The Advisory Committee called on member Governments to renew their commitments to applying science and technology to the development of all countries through national efforts supported by vigorous international co-operation. The Vienna Programme of Action had crystallized and given international support to a wide range of efforts, even though progress in science and technology had proceeded quite independently from the agreement reached at Vienna. But with a new and usually more difficult—situation facing developing countries, it was essential for the community of nations to reaffirm the political will and commitment to build endogenous science and technology capacities in developing countries, to restructure international scientific and technological relations and to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in those areas. The Committee recommended that individual countries set mid- to long-term targets for investments in science and technology in key sectors of their development plans. It stressed three guiding principles for mobilizing science and technology in the service of development: the need for an endogenous scientific and technological capability; the need for greater social equity; and the need for a wider understanding of the implications of unchecked resource development and for the formulation of a strategy for sustainable development. The spirit of international co-operation achieved in the Vienna Programme of Action had to be revived, reaffirmed and extended; only in that way would it be possible to make effective the potential contribution of science and technology to development.

Institutional arrangements

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, established to provide policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee (which did not meet in 1988), held its eighth session at Goa, India, from 26 to 30 September 1988.⁽¹⁾ It focused on the implementation of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development⁽²⁾ in the Centre for Science and Technology

Serving as the secretariat of the Intergovernmental Committee, the Advisory Committee and the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), the Centre for Science and Technology for Development worked in 1988 on many activities with the common goal of serving as a basis for the end-of-decade (1989) review of the Vienna Programme of Action.⁽²⁾

A report by the Secretary-General to the Intergovernmental Committee⁽³⁾ stated that the Centre's expanded activities, implemented with reduced resources, were designed to make its work more relevant and responsive to Member States' needs, to alert Member States to the implications of the increased market penetration of new and emerging areas of science and technology, and to promote inter-agency co-operation at the secretariat and country levels.

Pursuant to a 1987 resolution of the Intergovernmental Committee on the end-of-decade review,⁽⁴⁾ the Centre addressed a questionnaire to all national focal points, requesting Member States to report on their experiences and constraints encountered in the implementation of the Vienna Programme. A total of 37 replies were received, with developing countries indicating that limited financial resources for science and technology were an obstacle to the implementation of the Programme. In addition, many United Nations entities reported on their experiences with the Programme, with some stating that they had encountered conceptual difficulties with it, in addition to financial ones.

The Centre also carried out analytical studies on trends in science and technology in the 1980s in all regions of the developing world, as well as in the developed world. The latter study recommended that the donor community and the United Nations system increase their effectiveness in bilateral and multilateral co-operation programmes in science and technology. Based on these studies, the Centre organized four regional meetings and one inter-regional meeting of experts, which came to the following conclusions: the results of the Vienna Programme of Action lagged considerably behind the expectations of developing Member States, in particular in regard to the mobilization of additional resources for the promotion of science and technology; the main thrust of the Programme had not always been clearly perceived; the gap between developed and developing countries in science and technology remained and was widening; special efforts would be required to improve the access of developing countries to new and emerging technologies; and there was a need for new approaches in the implementation of the Programme.

Other activities of the Centre included: launching pilot studies on endogenous capacity-building in selected developing countries; organizing meetings of experts on drought and desertification and on energy technologies; publishing Advance Technology Alert System Bulletins and a renewed update newsletter; co-sponsoring with the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Meteorological Organization the first World Congress on Climate and Development (Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, 7-10 November 1988); formulating policy guidelines for harmonizing science and technology activities in the United Nations system; conducting inter-agency missions to developing countries; providing basic scientific and technical literature to Portuguese-speaking African countries; assisting interested Member States to develop their science and technology information infrastructure; and bringing out a directory of national and regional sources of science and technology information of the United Nations system.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The ninth session of the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, established by ACC as a mechanism of inter-agency co-operation in implementing tasks assigned to the Intergovernmental Committee, was held in New York from 7 to 10 March 1988.⁽⁵⁾ Subjects considered by the Task Force included: co-ordination at the country level; policy guidelines for the harmonization of policies in science and technology in the United Nations system; follow-up to the 1987 cross-organizational programme analysis and the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans in science and technology for development;⁽⁴⁾ and preparations for the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

The Task Force agreed that its future work should be issue-oriented and, while necessarily focused on science and technology, be better integrated with other bodies dealing with broader aspects such as operational activities and long-term development strategies. It agreed to devote a substantial portion of its time at future sessions to a comprehensive discussion of specific substantive topics of inter-agency importance, like science and technology policy and planning and south-south co-operation. The Task Force requested the Centre for Science and Technology for Development to prepare a compendium of the various activities being undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system in new and emerging areas of science and technology. Four developing countries (Colombia, Jordan, Kenya and Thailand) were to be assisted in assessing the impact of United Nations activities in science and technology.

Technology transfer

UNCTAD activities. In a report to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board,⁽¹⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat outlined its technical assistance activities, including its programmes in the area of technology transfer, which were mainly channelled through the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology (ASTT).

In response to an expansion of UNCTAD's technical co-operation programme, the secretariat listed measures under way to improve project design and delivery, including: focusing activities around the main programme areas, channelling requests for which UNCTAD had neither expertise nor capacity to other organizations; ensuring the adequacy of substantive and technical backstopping and of administrative and support services; having UNDP headquarters appraise all major UNDP-financed projects; and updating the roster of experts and consultants for selection for assignment under the UNCTAD co-operation programme.

The activities of ASTT focused in 1988 on human resources development and on the inter-related aspects of technology policies, sectoral issues and institution-building in the area of technology transfer and development.

An interregional seminar on technology selection and negotiation (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 12-16 December) was organized in co-operation with the Islamic Development Bank. Another interregional seminar on technology transfer through joint ventures (Moscow, 21-25 November) was held in co-operation with the USSR Ministry of External Economic Relations and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry and was financed by UNDP. A regional seminar for Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 9-29 March) on technology transfer and development perspectives of the food-processing sector was held in co-operation with the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, the Programme of Development Co-operation (Helsinki, Finland) and the Eastern and Southern African Management Institute. A seminar on technology transfer for Asian developing countries (Beijing, China, 31 October-16 November) was organized in co-operation with the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade and with the Programme of Development Co-operation. A workshop and on-the-job training were organized at Maseru, Lesotho, in March.

UNCTAD assisted the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States' secretariat in preparing a draft programme of action in the field of technology. A regional project on transfer and utilization of technology in least developed and island developing countries of Asia and the Pacific was further evolved with UNDP. ASTT participated in advisory and programme review missions to Burundi, Kenya, Nepal, Thailand and Tunisia.

The second UNCTAD Enter rise Symposium (Geneva, 13 and 14 October),(2) with the theme of "Transfer of technology for efficiency and growth-the entrepreneur's perspective", was a forum for a variety of views on technology flows and their impact on development. In summing up the Symposium, its Chairman stated that the 1980s had seen a general decline in cross-border flows of technology to the developing world and a widening of the technology gap with the industrialized nations. That was attributable to the debt crisis of the third world and a consequent fall in foreign investment; the slump in commodity prices; and shortening innovation cycles in the developed world, which forced many industries to focus on staying competitive in advanced markets. Some actions that could help revive technology flows to developing nations were: the easing of the debt crisis through global action; putting increased emphasis on carrying out the adaptation of technology in recipient countries rather than the countries of supply; reducing barriers that inhibited the effective transfer of technology; and improving education and training in developing countries. It was also vital for developing countries to focus on improving the utilization of their most plentiful resource-manpower-and to encourage them to liberalize further their regulations concerning technology inflows.

Draft code of conduct

In a response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(3) the Secretary-General of UNCTAD submitted in October 1988 a report on progress made in the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology.(4) He and the President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology continued in 1988 their consultations with regional groups and Governments with a view to identifying appropriate solutions to outstanding issues.

The draft code consisted of a preamble and the following chapters: (1) definitions and scope of application; (2) objectives and principles; (3) national regulation of transfer-of-technology transactions; (4) restrictive practices; (5) responsibilities and obligations of parties to transfer-of-technology transactions; (6) special treatment for developing countries; (7) international collaboration; (8) international institutional machinery; and (9) applicable law and settlement of disputes. Most of the outstanding issues concerned chapters 4 and 9.

During the 1988 consultations, the developing countries put forward a set of elements relating to the outstanding issues, which in their view could serve as a basis for reconvening the Conference. Those proposals were communicated to all other regional groups and China for consideration. China and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe said they could accept the proposals as the basis for reconvening the Conference, but the developed market-economy countries thought the proposals were not a basis for a successful resolution of the outstanding issues and, accordingly, they could not accede to the suggestion that the Conference be reconvened. However, the groups agreed that the consultations on the draft code should continue with a view to exploring further avenues of action for the future.

On 20 December, the General Assembly, by decision 43/439, took note of the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report.

Brain drain

In 1988, UNCTAD and UNDP continued to search for solutions to the problem of the outflow of skilled personnel from developing countries, known as the reverse transfer of technology or brain drain.

UNCTAD activities. Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened the Fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology (Geneva, 14-18 March 1988).⁽²⁾ The Meeting considered the current situation with respect to all aspects of the international migration of skilled personnel from developing countries, focusing on the nature, scale and effect of such flows, taking into account the concerns of all parties, with a view to proposing to UNCTAD and other concerned organizations what further work might be carried out on the subject.

In their agreed conclusions and recommendations, the experts stated that, as the continuing outflow of skilled personnel from developing countries seriously hampered their development, there was a need for appropriate policies to avoid the brain drain; that it was necessary to improve the quantity, quality and coverage of information on international migration of skilled personnel from developing countries; and that developed countries should consider favourably the adoption of policies that encouraged greater participation by developing country emigrants in the development of their home countries. The work done by the Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology was said to be of major significance for a comprehensive and complementary response from the United Nations system.

On 3 May,⁽³⁾ the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board recommended to the General Assembly for adoption a draft resolution (see below).

UNDP activities. In 1988, nearly 450 expert voluntary consultancies were completed by TOKTEN,⁽⁴⁾ which enabled developing countries to recapture some of the skills and experience lost through the brain drain by sending expatriate experts on short-term voluntary assignments. UNDP covered only air fares and subsistence allowances, so a TOKTEN consultancy cost between $3,000 and $4,000 per work-month. Since its inception in 1977, TOKTEN had funded over 2,200 consultancies, to which $10 million had been committed in UNDP/IPF resources. In 1988, TOKTEN was operating in 26 countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, having considered a note by the Secretary-General containing the report of the Fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology,⁽⁵⁾ adopted resolution 43/184 without vote.

Reverse transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, 35/56 of 5 December 1980 and 40/191 of 17 December 1985,

Conscious that the development process of the developing countries is crucially dependent on the availability of highly trained personnel and that the acquisition of skills and their efficient utilization are a crucial component of the social, economic and technological transformation of those countries,

Convinced that the continuing outflow of skilled personnel from developing countries seriously hampers their development and has implications of global concern,

Recognizing the urgent need to formulate appropriate policies to avoid the "brain drain" and to obviate its adverse effects,

1. Takes note of the outcome of the Fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology, held at Geneva from 14 to 18 March 1988;

2. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to make the necessary arrangements so that future work on the reverse transfer of technology can be considered by the Committee on Transfer of Technology in the context of the elaboration of its work programme, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts and of the work accomplished by previous meetings of governmental experts on the subject;

3. Invites other relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations to take into consideration in their work, as appropriate, individually and in the context of the work of the Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology, the economic, social and developmental aspects of the reverse transfer of technology and international policy initiatives in this area at the multilateral level.

Related questions

In resolution 43/61, the General Assembly decided to proclaim the "International Week of Science and Peace", which would take place each year during the week in which 11 November fell, and requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of Member States and interested organizations to the importance of the Week.

In resolution 43/77 A, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to follow future scientific and technological developments, especially those with potential military applications, and to evaluate their impact on international security.

Assembly resolutions 43/109, 43/110 and 43/111 addressed topics in the field of human rights and scientific and technological developments. The subject was also on the agenda of the 1988 session of the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

Chapter VIII

Environment

Environmental problems, including global warming and depletion of the ozone layer, became increasingly prominent in the international public debate and political agenda in 1988. The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) continued its efforts to monitor and assess those problems and to protect the Earth's environment. An international conference held in Canada addressed the growing evidence that industrial gases might be responsible for global warming. The General Assembly, by resolution 43/212, urged States to prohibit all transboundary movement of toxic and dangerous wastes carried out without the prior consent of the importing country's authorities. The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1988/71, stressed the importance of the active participation of all Governments in preparing for the the global convention on transboundary movements of hazardous wastes.

The UNEP Governing Council held its first special session in March, at Nairobi, Kenya, focusing on the system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995. UNEP continued its various activities in conserving biodiversity and protected areas, controlling soil erosion and forest loss, protecting the marine environment and collecting information on such topics as air and water quality, food contamination and ozone depletion.

General aspects

International co-operation

As a result of the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, the General Assembly established that year the institutional and financial arrangements for international co-operation on the environment.^(*) It also established the Governing Council of UNEP and set out its role of environmental policy guidance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July 1988, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/69 without vote.

International co-operation on the environment
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972 on institutional and financial arrangements for international environmental co-operation, in particular, section III, paragraph 4, thereof,

Reiterating the need to keep under review the problem of additional costs that may be incurred by developing countries in the implementation of environmental programmes and projects,

Reaffirming the need for additional financial resources to be provided by donor countries and organizations to assist developing countries in identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives,

1. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, in co-operation with the competent organizations, to carry out an up-to-date review of the problem referred to in General Assembly resolution 2997(XXVII), section III, paragraph 4, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

2. Calls upon all Governments to request their central economic and sectoral agencies to ensure that their policies, programmes and budgets encourage sustainable development and to strengthen the role of their environmental and natural resource agencies in advising and assisting the central and other sectoral agencies in that task;

3. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system concerned to include in their reports to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session an account of the measures they have taken to give effect to the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 42/184 and 42/187 of 11 December 1987 calling on them to provide additional resources to developing countries.

28 July 1988 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1988/118) without vote. 21 July (meeting 19): draft by Tunisia, for Group of 77 (E/1988/C.1/L.2), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 11.

UNEP programme

Programme policy

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,^(@) the UNEP Governing Council in 1988 held its first special session (Nairobi, 14-18 March)⁽³⁾ to consider and approve the United Nations system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995 and to consider the global environmental programme of the proposed United Nations medium-term plan, which had been extended to cover 1990-1991.⁽⁴⁾ The medium-term plan of UNEP for 1990-1995 was also before the Council.

In an introductory report,⁽⁵⁾ the UNEP Executive Director outlined the goals and organization of the system-wide medium-term environment programme covering 1990-1995. The programme had been submitted by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), which stated, in its annual report to the Council,⁽⁶⁾ that the programme constituted an overall strategy and planning framework for United Nations action on the environment. The ACC report discussed general co-ordination policy issues on environmental matters and the integration of environmental considerations into development planning and projects.

The system-wide medium-term environment programme was an expression of the catalytic and co-ordinating role of UNEP in respect of the efforts of the United Nations system to address environmental issues as a dimension of its overall activities, the Executive Director noted. The programme corresponded closely in its philosophy and approach to UNEP's 1987 report, "Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond", adopted by the Assembly as a broad framework to guide action and co-operation on policies and programmes aimed at achieving environmentally sound development.⁽⁷⁾ That report, in turn, drew on the 1987 report of the World Commission on Environment and Development titled "Our common future", which emphasized the need for environmentally sustainable development and which was welcomed by the Assembly.⁽⁸⁾

In his introductory statement to the Council,⁽⁹⁾ the Executive Director described the basis of the Council's mandate to orchestrate a sustained and multisectoral response by the United Nations system. What was expected from member Governments of the Council was, first and foremost, firm guidance on the long-term strategy for achieving a system-wide application of sustainable development.

On 18 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Governing Council resolved to exercise fully the role expected of it with respect to the follow-up of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development and the system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995; it also decided to follow up on the relevant Assembly resolutions at its fifteenth (1989) session. The Council emphasized that sustainable and environmentally sound development should be one of the main objectives of the proposed international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000) (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

System- wide medium-term
environment programme, 1990- 1995

The system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995 was developed by UNEP

in collaboration with other United Nations organizations and submitted to the UNEP Governing Council in a report by ACC.⁽¹¹⁾ Its structure was derived from that of the first such programme, covering 1984-1989, which in turn flowed from the evolving structures decided upon by the Council since its establishment.

The report stated that problems related to the misuse of natural resources and pollution would dominate the concerns of both developing and developed countries well into the twenty-first century. Many of them would be eased by the wide application of better environmental management techniques, while others would require changes in social and economic structures. A prerequisite for environmentally sound development was the achievement of an equitable system of international economic relations. Another fundamental goal was the elimination of poverty on the one hand and excessive consumption on the other. The issues addressed by the programme were the human environment, including atmosphere, water, terrestrial ecosystems, coastal and island systems, oceans, lithosphere, human settlements and the environment, human health and welfare, energy, industry and transportation, and peace, security and the environment; and environmental assessment, management and awareness.

While describing the strategies for achieving progress in each of these areas, the report stressed that the programme was not a rigid prescription for action, but rather reflected fundamental policies and priorities which were to be translated into action programmes by UNEP and other United Nations bodies.

On 18 March,⁽¹²⁾ the Council approved the programme and decided that, at its 1991 session, ACC should present a revised programme for 1990-1995 incorporating policy guidelines that the Council would provide at its 1989 session. The Council brought the programme to the attention of the General Assembly and urged the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to co-operate closely in its implementation.

UNEP medium-term plan, 1990-1995

UNEP's medium-term plan for 1990-1995, described in a report by the Executive Director,⁽¹³⁾ proposed 13 programmes which were to constitute UNEP's contribution towards the objectives of the system-wide programme.

On 18 March,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Governing Council approved the plan and requested the Executive Director to use it as a guide for formulating UNEP's next three programme budgets.

UN medium-term plan, 1984- 1989

The General Assembly in 1987 had extended the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-

1989 to cover 1990-1991,⁽⁴⁾ requiring revision of the environment chapter to take into account the new system-wide programme. The proposed revisions were submitted to the Secretary-General by the Executive Director.⁽¹⁵⁾

On 18 March,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Governing Council took note of the proposed revisions and recommended to the Assembly that the global programme on the environment of the United Nations medium-term plan beginning in 1992 be structured along the lines of the system-wide medium-term environment programme to ensure uniformity of content and to facilitate co-ordination of the environmental activities being undertaken by the United Nations system.

Regional and subregional programmes

Cairo Programme for African Co-operation

The UNEP Governing Council, on 18 March 1988,⁽¹⁷⁾ urged the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system to give priority to the provision of financial and technical assistance for the effective implementation of each of the programme areas of the Cairo Programme for African Co-operation, adopted in 1985.⁽¹⁸⁾ It noted with appreciation UNEP's involvement in and support for the Programme and urged the Executive Director to continue to give priority to its implementation in UNEP's next three programme budgets.

Latin America and the Caribbean

On 18 March,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Governing Council expressed its appreciation to UNEP for its support for the Action Plan for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-East Pacific and the Action Plan for the Caribbean Environment Programme. The Council decided that, in developing the medium-term plan of UNEP for 1990-1995, priority should continue to be given to those two plans, and requested the Executive Director to continue providing technical and financial support for activities under them.

1990 state-of-the-environment report

On 18 March,⁽²⁰⁾ the Governing Council decided that the topic of the state-of-the-environment report for 1990 should be children and the environment, and requested the Executive Director to prepare the report in co-operation with the United Nations Children's Fund.

Environmental education and training

UNEP in 1988 published the "International Strategy for Action in the Field of Environmental Education and Training for the 1990s", replacing the Tbilisi Declaration of 1977, which had provided guiding principles for environmental education for 10 years.⁽²¹⁾ The Strategy defined nine major areas of action: access to environmental information; research and experimentation; development of programmes and teaching materials; training of personnel; incorporation of an environmental dimension into technical and vocational education; its incorporation into general university education; educating and informing the public; provision of specialist environmental training; and development of international and regional co-operation. Those principles were or would be reflected in phase VI of the UNEP/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) International Environmental Education Programme, which remained the major international vehicle for the promotion of environmental education.

A joint UNESCO/UNEP steering committee, set up to provide overall guidance for the Education Programme, met at Bangkok, Thailand, in November 1988 to review environmental education in Asia and the Pacific. National workshops and seminars on environmental education were held in Sri Lanka in February, Egypt and Bolivia in March, Jamaica and Ecuador in May, Uganda in June/July and Jordan in October. A proposal for a primary environmental science curriculum for 16 Pacific island States was discussed at a workshop in Fiji in July. A regional seminar on the integration of environmental issues into education was held in Senegal in May, and subregional seminars on that issue were held in Argentina in September and in Costa Rica in December. An Afro-Arab training course on the incorporation of environmental education into industrial education was held in Egypt in October/November, and the advisory committee on the environmental training network for Latin America and the Caribbean met in Venezuela in April.

UNEP continued to provide training designed to promote acceptance of sustainable development. Those activities took two forms: general attempts to build awareness of the environment, directed at such groups as policy makers, engineers, industrialists and trade unionists; and specialized training to perfect the problem-solving skills of professionals whose work affected the environment.

In 1988, UNEP supported the establishment of environmental training networks in Africa, Asia and the Pacific and western Asia similar to the one established in 1983 in Latin America and the Caribbean, which had trained more than 800 professionals in different environmental fields. A second awareness-building workshop for 40 key personnel from ministries of planning, environment and education in French-speaking African countries was held at Rabat, Morocco, in November. UNESCO, UNEP and the USSR organized a two-week international training course on geological aspects of environmental protection for 15 participants from seven developing countries. The annual postgraduate course on the ecological aspects of resource development, land management and impact assessment was held at the Technical University of Dresden in the German Democratic Republic.

Public information

To secure coverage of its priority issues, UNEP continued to make use of the editorially independent Television Trust for the Environment (TVE), established in 1984. In 1988, the Trust distributed more than 200 programmes free of charge to television stations in 22 developing countries and started a quarterly bulletin in English and French with news on the latest productions coming out world-wide. Using computer equipment donated by International Business Machines (IBM), TVE established the world's first environment and development television programme data base, accessible through the "Green-net" computer link-up. Since 1984, TVE had arranged nearly 60 international television co-productions seen by millions in more than 80 countries, and had mobilized close to $15 million for its projects. About 5,000 television stations, development agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) subscribed to the service.

UNEP stepped up its media relations in 1988. It held a training course in Mauritius, in co-operation with UNESCO, for journalists from five African countries. Efforts were concentrated on joint publications, such as the three-volume directory Coral Reefs of the World, written with the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources.

UNEP supported the Environment Liaison Centre in publishing its Ecoforum magazine, and also supported the magazine African Journalist, issued by the Union of African Journalists, which continued to stimulate more and better environmental media coverage in 30 African countries. A similar project for the Arab region was managed by the Arab Office for Youth and Environment. A network of 12 UNEP regional youth focal points was established and a framework for their activities was defined at a January meeting at Nairobi. The principal ceremonies for World Environment Day on 5 June, held at Bangkok, emphasized the role of women in environmental protection and sustainable development.

UNEP Fund

Contributions to the Environment Fund in 1988 exceeded those of 1980, hitherto the year in which contributions had been the highest.⁽²¹⁾ At the end of the year, $34.47 million had been either paid or pledged to the Fund. In real terms, however, contributions had declined steadily since 1979. The number of contributors also continued to fall: from 90 in 1985 to 65 in 1988.

Commitments for programme and reserve activities totalled $27.53 million in 1988, including: support measures, $5.24 million; desertification control, $3.58 million; monitoring and assessment, $3.54 million; oceans, $3.11 million; information exchange, $2.58 million; terrestrial ecosystems management, $2.42 million; technical and regional co-operation, $1.93 million; technology and environment, $1.69 million; water, $1.39 million; environmental health, $0.71 million; peace, arms race and environment, $0.18 million; and reserve, $1.15 million. Geographical distribution of Fund commitments was as follows: global projects, $17.98 million (65.3 per cent of total commitments); interregional projects, $1.54 million (5.6 per cent); Africa, $3.46 million (12.6 per cent); Asia, $2.35 million (8.5 per cent); Latin America, $1.93 million (7 per cent); Europe, $0.24 million (0.9 per cent); and North America, $0.03 million (0.1 per cent).

Commitments accounted for only 84 per cent of allocations in 1988, due to difficulty in committing funds provided in non-convertible currencies and a perceived need to hold back some resources to provide for essential commitments in 1989. The largest share of Fund project commitments was implemented by UNEP directly and amounted to 53 per cent of the total. The Executive Director expressed a desire to reduce that share so that co-operating agencies, supporting organizations and UNEP would each account for approximately one third of total commitments during the 1990-1991 biennium.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/72 without vote.

International co-operation on the environment: the Environment Fund

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its first special session,

Expressing its concern at the almost complete stagnation in nominal terms of the resources available to the Environment Fund, at a time when the challenges facing the international community in the field of the environment and in the achievement of sustained, environmentally sound and socially just development by the developing countries continue to multiply and assume critical importance,

Considering that a 50 per cent increase in real terms in the resources of the Environment Fund is desirable,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its first special session;

2. Recognizes the resolve of the Governing Council to exercise fully the role expected of it in accordance with its mandate;

3. Welcomes the request of the Governing Council to the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system to give priority to the provision of financial and technical assistance for the effective implementation of the Cairo Programme for African Co-operation in each of its programme areas;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have substantially increased their contributions to the Environment Fund;

5. Considers it essential to increase the resources of the Environment Fund substantially;

6. Calls upon Governments of developed countries that have not contributed in the past to the Environment Fund to do so at a level commensurate with that of other developed countries, in order to give the Fund a much wider base, and encourages those Governments that are contributing to the Fund to continue to do so and, if possible, to increase their contributions in accordance with their capacity to do so.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/72

28 July 1988 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Environmental activities

Environment and development

The Secretary-General in May 1988 submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report⁽¹⁾ on the implementation of a 1987 resolution⁽²⁾ that endorsed the principle of sustainable development.

The Secretary-General stated that a number of Governments had notified the UNEP Executive Director that the resolution and the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development were under consideration. The Secretariat intended to request Governments to provide relevant information by 31 December 1988. The governing bodies of eight United Nations organs, organizations and programmes reported that they had reviewed the resolution and/or the World Commission's report with a view to taking the recommendations into account in their programmes. Eight other organizations reported that they expected to consider the resolution and report when their governing bodies next met. Further information was provided at the secretariat level of 13 United Nations bodies.

On 28 July, by decision 1988/175, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report. On 1 July,⁽³⁾ the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) stressed the need for additional financial resources and strengthened technical co-operation to assist developing countries in dealing with environmental problems. It requested the UNDP Administrator to assist recipient countries in enhancing their capacity to integrate environmental concerns into their development strategies and programmes, and to report on the manner in which agencies that designed, implemented and evaluated UNDP-funded projects took environmental aspects into account.

In October, ACC agreed that co-operation among the organizations of the United Nations system should be strengthened in order to enable them effectively to assist Member States in selected priority areas, and decided to consider the question of sustainable and environmentally sound development at its first regular session of 1989.⁽⁴⁾

At the Oslo Conference on Sustainable Development (Oslo, Norway, 9 and 10 July), the Secretary-General, the executive heads of 22 United Nations organizations and members of the World Commission on Environment and Development identified priority issues for United Nations action on sustainable development towards the year 2000 and beyond. They also agreed to include in their programmes and budgets for 1990-1991, as well as in their medium-term plans, measures responding to the World Commission's recommendations regarding the promotion of sustainable development by enhancing global economic growth and social development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/196 without vote.

United Nations conference on environment and development

The General Assembly,

Reading its resolution 42/186 of 11 December 1987, by which it adopted the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond as a broad framework to guide national action and international co-operation on policies and programmes aimed at achieving environmentally sound development,

Recalling also its resolution 42/187 of 11 December 1987, in which it welcomed the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development,

Bearing in mind that the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, convened in 1972 in accordance with Assembly resolution 2398(XXIII) of 3 December 1968, recommended that the Assembly convene a second United Nations conference on the subject,

Believing it highly desirable that a United Nations conference on environment and development be convened no later than 1992,

Aware that serious environmental problems are arising in all countries and that these problems must be progressively addressed through preventive measures at their source,

Emphasizing the common goal of all countries to strengthen international co-operation for the promotion of growth and development worldwide and recognizing that, in view of the global character of major environmental problems, all countries have a common interest in pursuing policies aimed at achieving sustainable and environmentally sound development within a sound ecological balance,

Noting that the critical objectives for environment and development policies that follow from the need for sustainable and environmentally sound development must include creating a healthy, clean and safe environment, reviving growth and improving its quality, remedying the problems of poverty and the satisfaction of human needs through raising the standard of living and the quality of life, addressing the issues of population and of conserving and enhancing the resource base, reorienting technology and managing risk and merging environment and economics in decision-making,

Aware that a supportive international economic environment that would result in sustained economic growth and development in all countries, particularly in developing countries, is of major importance for sound management of the environment,

Stressing that it is important for all countries to take effective measures for the protection, restoration and enhancement of the environment in accordance, inter alia, with their respective capabilities, and, at the same time, acknowledging the efforts being made in all countries in this regard, including international co-operation between developed and developing countries,

Noting the fact that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment, including toxic and hazardous wastes, originates in developed countries, and therefore recognizing that those countries have the main responsibility for combating such pollution,

Reaffirming the need for additional financial resources from the international community effectively to support developing countries in identifying, analysing, monitoring, managing or preventing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives,

Reaffirming also the need for developed countries and the appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen technical co-operation with the developing countries to enable them to develop and strengthen their capacity for identifying, analysing, monitoring, managing or preventing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation in the research and development of environmentally sound technology and recognizing the need for an international exchange of experience and knowledge as well as the promotion of the transfer of technology for the protection and enhancement of the environment, especially in developing countries, in accordance with national laws, regulations and policies,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to play a catalytic role in technical co-operation among developing countries in the field of the environment, and inviting the appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate, at the request of the parties concerned, in the promotion and strengthening of such co-operation,

Aware that threats to the environment often have a transboundary impact and that their urgent nature requires strengthened international co-operative action, inter alia, by assessing and providing early warning to the world community on serious environmental threats within the framework of Earthwatch,

Taking note with appreciation of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 42/187,

Recalling that, in its resolution 42/187, the General Assembly invited Governments, in co-operation with the regional commissions and the United Nations Environment Programme and, as appropriate, intergovernmental organizations, to support and engage in follow-up activities, such as conferences, at the national, regional and global levels,

Noting the importance of exploring the best ways and means to promote sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries, taking into account General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187,

Considering in this context that the conference could, inter alia:

(a) Review trends in policies and action taken by all countries and international organizations to protect and enhance the environment and to examine how environmental concerns have been incorporated in economic and social policies and planning since the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment in 1972,

(b) Assess major environmental problems, risks and opportunities associated with economic activities in all countries,

(c) Make recommendations for further strengthened international co-operative action within a set of priorities to be established by the conference, define the research and development effort required to implement such recommendations, and indicate financial requirements for their implementation, together with a definition of possible sources for such financing,

1. Decides to consider at its forty-fourth session the question of the convening of a United Nations conference on the subject of the present resolution no later than 1992, with a view to taking an appropriate decision at that session on the exact scope, title, venue and date of such a conference and on the modalities and financial implications of holding the conference;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, urgently to obtain the views of Governments on:

(a) The objectives, content, title and scope of the conference;

(b) Appropriate ways of preparing for the conference;

(c) A suitable time and place and other modalities for the conference;

and to submit those views to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, and to make them available to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its fifteenth session;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director, to obtain the views of appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the objectives, content and scope of the conference, and to submit those views to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, and to make them available to the Governing Council at its fifteenth session;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director, to prepare a statement of the financial implications of preparing and convening the conference, and to submit that statement to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, and to make it available to the Governing Council at its fifteenth session;

5. Invites the Governing Council to consider the documents referred to in paragraphs 2 to 4 above and, on the basis of that consideration, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, its views on the matters referred to in the present resolution, in particular its views on the objectives, content and scope of the conference.

Environmental monitoring and assessment

Earthwatch, the environmental assessment arm of UNEP, continued in 1988 to collect and disseminate information on changes in the global environment, such as ozone depletion, climate change, soil loss and deforestation.(6)

UNEP continued to hold training seminars and expert group meetings on environmental monitoring and data collection. Among these were the second Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) workshop on integrated monitoring, a meeting on remote-sensing technologies for biosphere studies and a workshop on the evaluation of air pollution pressure through pine-needle analysis and mapping.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In October 1988, the Secretary-General submitted to the Second Committee the text of a draft resolution(7) on international ecological security. The Assembly in 1987 had deferred consideration of the draft until 1988.(8) On 29 November, the sponsors of that draft, Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR, introduced a revised draft resolution(9) on international co-operation in the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental threats. On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly, by decision 43/440 of 20 December, deferred consideration of the draft until 1989.

Global Environmental Monitoring System

The Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS), through its Programme Activity Centre, continued to co-ordinate the collection of environmental data at the global, regional and national levels and to make them available to managers and planners of natural resources and the environment. These activities encompassed monitoring, data management and environmental assessment.

In March, GEMS was instructed by the Bureau of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment to co-ordinate environmental monitoring activities in Africa. In 1988, UNEP collected detailed information on eight African countries' needs for resource monitoring and assessment capabilities.

Together with other agencies and organizations, UNEP was developing a satellite-based methodology to map and monitor tropical forests. It continued to co-operate with the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) in monitoring climate systems and with UNESCO and the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology in a world glacier-monitoring service. That project also encompassed the publication in 1988 of the fifth volume in a series on the fluctuation of glaciers covering 1980-1985, and an inventory of the world's glaciers, scheduled for publication in 1989. Attention was given to the development of methods of studying the effects of pollution on forest ecosystems. The newly constituted World Conservation Monitoring Centre gathered data on the status of endangered species, parks and protected areas and trade in animal products. The Monitoring and Assessment Research Centre (MARC) continued to collect and analyse data for the next edition of the environmental data report, to be published in 1989. UNEP also collaborated with the World Resources Institute in the preparation of World Resources 1988-1989, issued in November 1988. An interactive environmental data base was being established at MARC in order to offer instant access to the best environmental data.

Three major global assessments were undertaken by UNEP and the World Health Organization (WHO) in air quality, freshwater quality and food contamination. Regarding urban air quality, studies had found that in many industrialized countries, while the levels of sulphur dioxide, particulate matter and lead were improving as a result of various control and prevention strategies, there was still cause for concern in many cities. Data on urban air quality in developing countries, while scanty, indicated deteriorating conditions. While water pollution in cities in developing countries could be severe, water resources did not in general suffer greatly from pollution. Severe pathogen pollution could be found in many rivers in South America, the Indian sub-continent, South-East Asia and probably Africa. Eutrophication, often linked to organic waste, was a problem in many small lakes in Europe, the United States and Asia. Increased levels of nitrate in ground water were found in many western European countries and the United States. Salinization of ground water was found to be extremely widespread in Sahelian Africa and in the arid belt from the Middle East to India. Levels of contaminants in food, particularly in industrialized countries, were generally well within established limits, with the exception, in several countries, of organochlorine pesticides in human milk, mercury and polychlorinated biphenyls in fish, lead in canned foods and aflatoxins in nuts and cereals. In developing countries, however, while the situation was less clear, there were indications that the levels of contaminants, particularly for organochlorine pesticides and aflatoxins, were in excess of health guidelines.

Global Resource information Database

The Global Resource Information Database (GRID), the principal data management programme within GEMS, continued its efforts to make environmental data available to environmental managers and decision makers with the help of its computer-based Geographic Information System. In December, IBM donated some $6 million worth of computer hardware to UNEP for use in the GRID programme, including two mainframe computers and 15 micro-based systems.

By year's end, the GRID training course for third world professionals, sponsored by the Swiss Directorate for Development Co-operation, had trained 20 persons from as many countries. A GRID scientific and technical advisory group meeting was held at Nairobi (18-21 January), and an expert meeting on hardware and software was held in Washington, D.C. (15-17 November).

INFOTERRA

UNEP's International Environmental Information System, INFOTERRA, continued to assist developing countries in gathering scientific and technological information on environment and resource management issues. The INFOTERRA network continued to grow, with 700 new information sources registered during the reporting period. The number of national focal points (NFPS) increased to 134 with the addition of Lesotho. During 1988, more than 14,000 people from some 90 countries made use of INFOTERRA's information services. Several new publications were issued, and a training course for new staff from 10 English- and French-speaking NFPS was held (Nairobi, 14-18 November). Several INFOTERRA NFPS organized events for World Environment Day, using the promotional kits distributed to them on behalf of the UNEP information service.

1988 state of the world environment

UNEP's 1988 state-of-the-environment report(10) focused on the public and the environment, with special emphasis on the role of women. The report covered the environmental movement, perceptions and attitudes towards environmental issues, public participation in environmental activities, the special role of women and the role of the media.

Protection against harmful products and pollutants

Registration of harmful products

The International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC), UNEP's chemical information exchange network, continued in 1988 to expand its computerized files, which included some 600 chemicals of international concern. Scientific and technical information was given to Governments, research institutions, international organizations, NGOs and industry for hazard assessment, risk evaluation and disposal or control.

IRPTC files were made available for use on minicomputers to Canadian users in June, and ways of making that system available outside Canada were explored. An updated version of the Registry of Chemicals Currently Being Tested for Toxic Effects was published in October. An international workshop on the use of classification systems for chemicals based on their toxicity and hazards was organized in Leningrad, and an expert consultation on a regional information exchange network for chemicals was organized in Moscow. IRPTC participated in a meeting of an ad hoc working group of experts on prior informed consent and other modalities to supplement the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade(11) (Dakar, Senegal, 19-23 September), organized in response to a 1987 decision by the UNEP Governing Council on the exchange of information on chemicals in international trade. Also in response to that decision, IRPTC continued to implement the London Guidelines by maintaining and distributing a list of designated national authorities; processing and disseminating notifications of control action to those authorities and other appropriate bodies; maintaining regular contacts with the authorities on national implementation of the Guidelines; and developing and maintaining a computerized data base of notifications of control action received in IRPTC. IRPTC continued to participate in the updating of the United Nations consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or not approved by Governments. An expert consultation meeting (Geneva, 21-24 November), held in response to a 1987 decision of the Governing Council,⁽¹²⁾ examined the short- and long-term financial position of IRPTC.⁽¹³⁾

Health-related monitoring

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/UNEP/WHO Panel of Experts on Environmental Management for Vector Control held its eighth session (Nairobi, September), focusing on education and training in environmental management of water resource development projects.

A symposium on genetic monitoring for the protection of human health and environment was held to promote and encourage research in environmental mutagenesis in Latin America (San José, Costa Rica, 6-11 March). UNEP co-operated with the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and WHO in the International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS), providing an effort to assess the risks of chemicals to human health and the environment and to strengthen national capabilities in chemical safety. IPCS held an expert group meeting (Rome, Italy, 20-29 September) on categories of information useful for the identification of hazards during the manufacture, storage and transport of chemicals. It subsequently produced an annotated check-list of that information. It also published a survey on facilities dealing with poisonings, covering 200 institutions in 40 countries, which showed that only 11 developing countries had a full range of facilities to respond to poisonings. In 1988, IPCS published 15 documents on potentially toxic chemicals in the Environmental Health Criteria series, bringing the number of chemicals evaluated to 75. The preparation of 75 international chemical safety cards, giving health and safety information on chemicals for use by factory, agricultural and other workers and employers, was in the pilot phase. A consultation on the pilot phase (Brussels, Belgium, 11-15 April) and a meeting for the peer review of the cards (Rome, 7-11 November) were held.

Other meetings sponsored or co-sponsored by IPCS during the year dealt with chemicals and the aging process, an environmental health review of vinylidene chloride, revision of WHO guidelines for drinking-water quality, the effects of vehicle exhaust, environmental reduction of asbestos, development of a poison information package for developing countries, food additives, pesticide residues, chemical hazards and methods for assessing adverse effects of pesticides.

Several projects were initiated in the area of agricultural chemicals in 1988. In April/May, an independent consultant evaluated a joint UNEP/International Centre of Insect Physiology and Ecology (ICIPE) project on training for self-reliance in ecological pest management in Africa, concluding that the overall impact of the training courses had been positive. From August to October, a working group appointed by ICIPE identified live areas of research which could be addressed in a longer-term programme for locust control. Scientists and donor agencies, including UNEP, met at Cairo, Egypt, in December to discuss such a programme, agreeing that the pursuit of alternative control strategies would be promoted through an international research network. In September/October, a consultant reviewed current activities in Botswana, Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe for the control of the tsetse fly and the reduction of animal trypanosomiasis in Africa under the Zambezi Action Plan. A joint FAO/UNEP meeting was held at Rome in November to review the guidelines on biological control in developing countries, which had just been completed. Two Soviet scientists undertook a mission to conduct a feasibility study for a project on training in zoonosis epidemiology, control and prevention in Mongolia. Between May and October, training aids on the safe use and handling of pesticides were prepared for 150 women's group leaders in Thailand. Under the FAO/UNEP Co-operative Global Programme for the Implementation and Development of Integrated Pest Control in Agriculture, a Latin American intercountry programme for the development and application of integrated pest control in cotton growing was developed and implemented, and it was expected that its guidelines would be used in all the cotton-growing countries of Central and South America.

Traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes

In response to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General in May 1988 submitted a report on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes.⁽¹⁵⁾ The report was based on information which Governments and international organizations had submitted to the UNEP Executive Director on instances of illegal traffic in toxic products and wastes that had occurred in the past five years. Information came from 16 countries—seven of which cited concrete examples of illegal traffic—and 27 organizations.

The Secretary-General concluded that the number of responses would seem to indicate increased international traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes. The movement of hazardous wastes tended to go from developed to developing countries or to countries whose standards of environmental protection were more permissive. Movements of toxic products—mostly pesticides—followed a similar trend. It was likely that environmentally hazardous substances would be increasingly transferred to developing countries as a result of improved environmental standards and decreasing waste-disposal capacities in developed countries. Part of such international movements might not be deemed illegal in the recipient countries themselves, even though they could pose risks to human health and to the environment. Several developing countries were enacting legislation to prevent them from being used as “dumping places” for environmentally hazardous substances. The prospect of an increased flow of hazardous products and wastes underscored the importance of adherence to the London Guidelines, which apparently had not been complied with in many of the reported cases. A global convention on the control of the transboundary movements of hazardous wastes, which was being negotiated under the aegis of UNEP, was urgently needed (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/70 without vote.

Traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 42/183 of 11 December 1987,

Noting that the preliminary report of the Secretary-General on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes indicates a trend of increased international traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes, which in most cases has tended to flow from developed to developing countries,

Concerned that part of this traffic is carried out in contravention of existing national legislation and relevant international instruments,

Emphasizing the urgent need for all States to transmit pertinent information requested by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme in response to General Assembly resolution 42/183,

Taking into account the increase in this traffic as reported by various organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and the international media,

Deeply concerned at the rising incidence of dumping of toxic wastes in many countries, particularly in the developing countries,

Considering the potential danger to the health of the population and to the environment of all States posed by toxic and dangerous products and wastes,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, to draw on information provided by the United Nations Environment Programme and other organizations of the United Nations system, in line with internationally accepted guidelines and principles, and to focus on the following:

(a) A quantitative and geographical assessment, by region of origin and of destination, of the illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

(b) A classification of types of toxic and dangerous products and wastes according to their nature, their potential toxicity and the probability of their being traded or dumped;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit conclusions and recommendations on different mechanisms that can be devised to monitor and control the illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to increase his efforts to obtain information on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous wastes and on steps taken to eliminate or reduce this type of traffic.

28 July 1988 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1988/118) without vote. 22 July (meeting 20); draft by Tunisia, for Group of 77 (E/1988/C.1/L.3), orally revised following informal consultations: agenda item 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/212 without vote.

Responsibility of States for the protection of the environment: prevention of the illegal international traffic in, and the dumping and resulting accumulation of, toxic and dangerous products and wastes affecting the developing countries in particular
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/183 of 11 December 1987 on traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1988/70 and 1988/71 of 28 July 1988,

Concerned about the increase in the illegal international traffic in, and the dumping and resulting accumulation of, toxic and dangerous products and wastes, in contravention of existing national legislation and relevant international legal instruments, adversely affecting many countries, particularly developing countries, as well as international waters,

Stressing the obligation of all States, in accordance with their responsibilities, to protect the environment and, in this overall context, stressing also the need for all States to prevent the illegal international traffic in, and the dumping and resulting accumulation of, toxic and dangerous products and wastes adversely affecting many countries, in particular developing countries,

1. Urges all States, bearing in mind their respective responsibilities, to take the necessary legal and technical measures in order to halt and prevent the illegal international traffic in, and the dumping and resulting accumulation of, toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

2. Also urges all States to prohibit all transboundary movement of toxic and dangerous wastes carried out without the prior consent of the competent authorities of the importing country or without full recognition of the sovereign rights of transit countries;

3. Further urges all States in this connection to prohibit such movement without prior notification in writing of the competent authorities of all countries concerned, including transit countries, and to provide all information required to ensure the proper management of the wastes and full disclosure of the nature of the substances to be received or transported;

4. Urges all States generating toxic and dangerous wastes to make every effort to treat and dispose of them in the country of origin to the maximum extent possible consistent with environmentally sound disposal;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts with a Mandate to Prepare a Global Convention on the Control of the Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes, established by the United Nations Environment Programme, to give due consideration to the present resolution and to take into account the various views expressed during the forty-third session of the General Assembly on the respective responsibilities for the prevention of the illegal international traffic in, and the dumping and resulting accumulation of, toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

6. Culls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries, to strengthen its scientific and technical co-operation with the developing countries and to provide appropriate assistance to them in their efforts to eliminate the adverse consequences of toxic and dangerous products and wastes for human health and the environment.

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/919) without vote, 6 December (meeting 471; draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.74), orally revised, based on draft by Tunisia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/43/L.23); agenda item 143. Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 2nd Committee 21-26, 30, 47; plenary 83.

Transboundary movements of hazardous wastes

The Executive Director of UNEP, as authorized by a 1987 decision of the Governing Council,⁽¹⁶⁾ convened the third session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts with a Mandate to Prepare a Global Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes (Geneva, 7-16 November 1988). The draft convention was to be submitted to a diplomatic conference for adoption early in 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/71 without vote.

Global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts with a Mandate to Prepare a Global Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes, convened by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme pursuant to Governing Council decision 14/30 of 17 June 1987, and that the draft of the convention will be submitted to a diplomatic conference for adoption by Governments in Basel, Switzerland, in early 1989,

1. Stresses the importance of the active participation of all Governments in the preparatory work for the global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes, with a view to its speedy and successful completion;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on developments in regard to the convention.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/71

28 July 1988 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Atomic radiation and nuclear dumping

In August, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation issued a report on the sources, effects and risks of ionizing radiation.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report gave a historical review of the Committee's work and outlined the levels and effects of radiation from such sources as nuclear explosions, nuclear power production and medical exposures. It summarized the developments and trends in the field and presented the highlights and conclusions to be drawn from the most recent studies in radiation physics and biology.

On 6 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/55, requesting the Committee to continue its work and noting with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Committee and UNEP.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/174, requested the Secretary-General-through UNEP's Governing Council and in co-operation with the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency-to submit a report to the Assembly at its 1989 session on the effects of the dumping of nuclear wastes on the environment.

Global climate

In January 1988, UNEP organized an internal seminar to identify environmental sectors that might be sensitive to climate change. The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, a forum in which Governments were examining greenhouse warming and global climate change, held its first session at Geneva in November, with representatives from 30 Governments and 19 international organizations. One of the main objectives of the UNEP climate change programme was to improve understanding of the probable effect of greenhouse gas warming on socio-economic systems in various regions. To that end, several regional studies on the effect of climate change on society were planned. In response to a 1987 decision of the Governing Council,⁽¹⁸⁾ UNEP commissioned the Beijer Institute to prepare a report on possible responses by Governments and international agencies to anticipated climate change.

UNEP sponsored numerous meetings dealing with climate change during the year, including a seminar on climate and agriculture, world conferences on climate and development and on the changing atmosphere, and a workshop on drought early-warning systems. Seminars on climate impact assessment techniques were held at Kathmandu, Nepal, and New Delhi, India, in March. The UNEP Ad Hoc Working Group on El Niño and the Southern Oscillation (Bangkok, 11-15 January) concluded that the recent El Niño events had been associated with world-wide climatic anomalies, such as droughts in Australia, Brazil, Ethiopia and India and widespread temperature anomalies in the northern hemisphere. The Group adopted objectives and a work plan for the next two years.

In October,⁽¹⁹⁾ ACC decided to consider in 1989 the question of world climate change and requested UNEP, in co-operation with WMO and other concerned organizations, to prepare an issues paper as the basis for its discussion.

On 9 September, in a letter to the Secretary-General,⁽²⁰⁾ Malta requested that an item entitled "Declaration proclaiming climate as part of the common heritage of mankind" be added to the agenda of the 1988 session of the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/53 without vote.

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Welcoming with appreciation the initiative taken by the Government of Malta in proposing for consideration by the Assembly the item entitled "Conservation of climate as part of the common heritage of mankind",

Concerned that certain human activities could change global climate patterns, threatening present and future generations with potentially severe economic and social consequences,

Noting with concern that the emerging evidence indicates that continued growth in atmospheric concentrations of "greenhouse" gases could produce global warming with an eventual rise in sea levels, the effects of which could be disastrous for mankind if timely steps are not taken at all levels,

Recognizing the need for additional research and scientific studies into all sources and causes of climate change,

Concerned a/s/o that emissions of certain substances are depleting the ozone layer and thereby exposing the earth's surface to increased ultra-violet radiation, which may pose a threat to, inter alia, human health, agricultural productivity and animal and marine life, and reaffirming in this context the appeal, contained in its resolution 42/182 of 11 December 1987, to all States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer, adopted on 22 March 1985, and the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, adopted on 16 September 1987, as soon as possible,

Recalling its resolutions 42/186 and 42/187 of 11 December 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond and on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, respectively,

Convinced that changes in climate have an impact on development,

Aware that a considerable amount of valuable work, particularly at the scientific level and in the legal field, has already been initiated on climate change, in particular by the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Meteorological Organization and the International Council of Scientific Unions and under the auspices of individual States,

Welcoming the convening in 1990 of a second World Climate Conference,

Recalling also the conclusions of the meeting held at Villach, Austria, in 1985, which, inter alia, recommended a programme on climate change to be promoted by Governments and the scientific community with the collaboration of the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Council of Scientific Unions,

Convinced that climate change affects humanity as a whole and should be confronted within a global framework so as to take into account the vital interests of all mankind,

1. Recognizes that climate change is a common concern of mankind, since climate is an essential condition which sustains life on earth;

2. Determines that necessary and timely action should be taken to deal with climate change within a global framework;

3. Reaffirms its resolution 42/184 of 11 December 1987, in which, inter alia, it agreed with the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme that the Programme should attach importance to the problem of global climate change and that the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme should ensure that the Programme co-operates closely with the World Meteorological Organization and the International Council of Scientific Unions and maintains an active, influential role in the World Climate Programme;

4. Considers that activities in support of the World Climate Programme, approved by the Congress and Executive Council of the World Meteorological Organization and elaborated in the system-wide medium-term environment programme for the period 1990-1995, which was approved by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, should be accorded high priority by the relevant organs and programmes of the United Nations system;

5. Endorses the action of the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme in jointly establishing an Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to provide internationally co-ordinated scientific assessments of the magnitude, timing and potential environmental and socio-economic impact of climate change and realistic response strategies, and expresses appreciation for the work already initiated by the Panel;

6. Urges Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and scientific institutions to treat climate change as a priority issue, to undertake and promote specific, co-operative action-oriented programmes and research so as to increase understanding on all sources and causes of climate change, including its regional aspects and specific time-frames as well as the cause and effect relationship of human activities and climate, and to contribute, as appropriate, with human and financial resources to efforts to protect the global climate;

7. Calls upon all relevant organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to support the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change;

8. Encourages the convening of conferences on climate change, particularly on global warming, at the national, regional and global levels in order to make the international community better aware of the importance of dealing effectively and in a timely manner with all aspects of climate change resulting from certain human activities;

9. Calls upon Governments and intergovernmental organizations to collaborate in making every effort to prevent detrimental effects on climate and activities which affect the ecological balance, and also calls upon non-governmental organizations, industry and other productive sectors to play their due role;

10. Requests the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization and the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, utilizing the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, immediately to initiate action leading, as soon as possible, to a comprehensive review and recommendations with respect to:

(a) The state of knowledge of the science of climate and climatic change;

(b) Programmes and studies on the social and economic impact of climate change, including global warming;

(c) Possible response strategies to delay, limit or mitigate the impact of adverse climate change;

(d) The identification and possible strengthening of relevant existing international legal instruments having a bearing on climate;

(e) Elements for inclusion in a possible future international convention on climate;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, as well as intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and well-established scientific institutions with expertise in matters concerning climate;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include this question in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session, without prejudice to the application of the principle of biennialization.

Protection of the ozone layer

Activities addressing the depletion of the ozone layer continued to build on the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer(21) and the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.(22)

The Ozone Trends Panel-set up by UNEP, WMO and three United States agencies in 1986—published a report in 1988 which found that the atmospheric concentrations of trace gases important in controlling stratospheric ozone had continued to increase globally because of human activities and that ozone losses in general were greater than had been predicted, primarily as a result of chlorofluorocarbons. The report confirmed the repeated sudden decreases in the amount of Antarctic ozone in the spring, and stated that evidence strongly indicated that man-made chlorine species were primarily responsible for the ozone hole over Antarctica.

UNEP organized a series of expert group meetings (The Hague, Netherlands, October) to review measures for controlling ozone-depleting gases and their effectiveness, as called for in the Montreal Protocol. Scientists attending the meeting confirmed that while implementation of the Montreal Protocol would do much to stabilize the ozone layer, it would be insufficient to repair the Antarctica hole.

UNEP and WMO co-sponsored the World Conference on the Changing Atmosphere: Implications for Global Security (Toronto, Canada, 27-30 June), which urged immediate action to counter the ongoing degradation of the atmosphere, including the development of a plan to protect the atmosphere, speedy ratification of the Montreal Protocol, the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions to approximately 80 per cent of the 1988 level by 2005 and establishment of a World Atmosphere Fund. The Advisory Group on Greenhouse Gases (Toronto, 1 and 2 July), continuing its role of advising the executive heads of UNEP, the International Council of Scientific Unions and WMO, approved the establishment of three working groups to review analyses of limitation strategies, indicators for management of climatic change and costs of adaptation and limitation strategies.

The WMO/UNEP Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network continued to publish data regularly and held a training course at Budapest, Hungary, for observers at its stations.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Soil management

Soil erosion had become so severe in many areas of the developing world that controlling it was a matter of life and death to many low-income farmers. The rate of soil loss had reached 26 billion tons annually, which was equivalent to 20 million tons of grain. The United States reported that it had reversed the rate of soil erosion through legislation and increased public awareness of the serious environmental threat. A project to assess global soil degradation, initiated in 1987, was implemented by the International Soil Reference and Information Centre in the Netherlands in association with FAO and other agencies. In April, the project published a set of guidelines for general assessment of the status of human-induced soil degradation, which was adopted at a regional workshop for Latin American soil scientists in Montevideo, Uruguay, in March. A procedure manual for small-scale map and data base compilation was completed in December.

In the context of implementing the 1985 Cairo Programme for African Co-operation,⁽²³⁾ the Soil Research Institute of the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research at Kumasi, Ghana, agreed to assume responsibility for the co-ordination of the African Soils and Fertilizers Network. Initial activities included a training workshop with the University of Zimbabwe (Harare, 24 May-9 June), the second meeting of the Network's management and planning group (Kampala, Uganda, 4 and 5 December) and the All-Africa Soil Science Society Conference (Kampala, 5-10 December). UNEP supported the International Conference on Soil Classification (Alma-Ata, USSR, 12-16 September) and an international workshop on classification, management and use potential of swell-shrink soils (Nagpur, India, 24-28 October).

Forest and mountain ecosystems

Amid growing concern over the continuing destruction of forest ecosystems in general and tropical forests in particular, UNEP played an active role in the implementation of the FAO-CO-ordinated Tropical Forestry Action Plan⁽²⁴⁾ by strengthening its conservation component. More than 10 national forestry sector reviews had been completed and 33 were being developed under the Plan. Six African countries expressed interest in reafforestation plans recommended by the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment. UNEP provided resources to enable participants from developing countries to attend workshops on forest research, conservation and nature management.

An expert meeting on compensation mechanisms for conserving tropical forest ecosystems was held at Nairobi in March, addressing issues such as debt swaps and the development of methodologies to assess the real value of forest ecosystems. A training seminar on agroforestry applications for arid and semi-arid French-speaking African countries was organized at Samarkand, USSR, in May. Missions visited Costa Rica and Peru, resulting in proposals to train local experts. Two expert missions produced proposals for a plan to improve forestry conservation and management in the United Republic of Tanzania. A UNEP-supported forestry sector overview in Uganda was published.

An international seminar on the ecology and management of natural resources in high mountain areas (Cajamarca, Peru, 20-27 August) was organized as part of a pilot project that had been active in encouraging farmers' participation in training, rescuing traditional technologies and improving living conditions.

Protection of endangered species

The non-sustainable and exploitative use of natural resources was expected to result in the loss of perhaps a quarter of the Earth's species during the next 20-30 years. Among the measures demonstrated to be effective in preserving biological diversity were establishing protected areas, incorporating the maximum amount of biological diversity in those areas and providing secure scientific management for them, promoting regional and national conservation strategies, encouraging the application of international conservation conventions, protecting particular species from destructive exploitation and encouraging Governments to apply to non-protected lands the conservation principles outlined in the World Charter for Nature⁽²⁵⁾ and the World Conservation Strategy,⁽²⁶⁾ which in 1988 was being updated and expanded.

In response to a 1987 decision of the Governing Council on the establishment of a biological diversity convention,⁽²⁷⁾ UNEP surveyed Governments—58 of which had replied—on their activities related to the conservation of biological diversity. A meeting of experts (Nairobi, 29-31 August) concluded that a global convention should proceed only if it were truly comprehensive with a sound basis in science, practical in defining obligations and goals, adequately funded by Governments, capable of co-ordinating efforts under other conventions on the subject, and provided for a transfer of resources to allow for its implementation in poorer countries, which were the custodians of much of the Earth's biological heritage. An ad hoc working group of experts (Geneva, 16-18 November), building on the work of the Nairobi meeting, determined that an umbrella convention to rationalize existing international instruments was neither desirable nor possible, given political and logistical difficulties, and that other ways to achieve that goal should be sought. The Group endorsed the view that a new global legal instrument and other measures were required for the conservation of biological diversity and proposed that the Governing Council should decide on how to resolve several important issues critical to such a convention.

UNEP continued in 1988 to provide the secretariat for the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) at Lausanne, Switzerland. Six technical assistance missions took place during the year to assist developing countries in implementing the Convention. The Ivory Co-ordination Unit continued its work on an ivory quota system and a survey of ivory trade and stocks. The CITES African Elephant Working Group agreed at its first meeting (Nairobi, October/November) to submit a comprehensive elephant conservation strategy to Governments for consideration. UNEP also provided the secretariat for the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals; the first meeting of its Scientific Council and the second meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention were held at Geneva in October. The Conference discussed the development of agreements among States on conservation of species and populations and directed that priority should be given to a global review of the conservation status of small cetaceans, including freshwater species.

The Ecosystem Conservation Group, comprising the four major global conservation organizations—UNEP, FAO, UNESCO and the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN)—at its fifteenth general meeting, reviewed activities for implementing the Action Plan for Biosphere Reserves. UNEP had drawn up a project on training of biosphere reserve managers in Africa in co-operation with UNESCO.

Among the activities intended to help preserve the genetic diversity of the world's crop plants was a project sponsored by UNEP and the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources, in which samples of the germ plasm of 11 genera of plants were collected in Zaire for deposit in the Board's gene bank network. An international consultation on the conservation of medicinal plants was held in March, and a pan-African workshop on plant genetic resources (Nairobi, 26-30 September) called for greater African co-operation through networking on germ-plasm research and the development of projects to conserve important plant species.

An agreement was reached between FAO and the European Association of Animal Production to expand the newly established data bank for Europe to hold a summary of genetic characteristics of breeds from developing countries, thus making the data bank a global one. FAO, with support from UNEP, continued to provide technical inputs for the establishment of regional gene banks for animal genetic resources. Studies began as a step towards the creation of such gene banks in Africa, Asia and Latin America for the cryogenic storage of semen and embryos of endangered breeds. UNEP continued its support to the regional Microbiological Resources Centres in Brazil, Egypt, Guatemala, Kenya, Senegal and Thailand, which enabled them to carry out training activities and pilot projects for the application of microbial resources in environmental management. UNEP also supported the International Microbial Strain Data Network as a means of collating knowledge about and ensuring access to data on the location and availability of strains with desired properties. The Network held two training courses in Guatemala and the United States for potential users and operators. In the area of biotechnology, the joint United Nations Industrial Development Organization/WHO/UNEP Working Group on Biotechnology Safety continued its work, and an international conference (Cardiff, United Kingdom, 5-8 April) discussed the need to proceed with caution and to raise the level of understanding and confidence among the general public about the release of genetically engineered organisms into the environment.

Lithosphere

Addressing the environmental aspects of the lithosphere, the UNEP/UNESCO/USSR project on geology and environment continued, and the proceedings of a 1985 workshop (Tashkent, USSR) on the impact of water management projects on the hydrogeological and engineering geological conditions of the lithosphere were published. In September 1988, a joint workshop of the Scientific Council on Problems of the Environment/UNEP Carbon and Sulphur Units was held on the shores of Lake Baikal in the USSR, which holds nearly 20 per cent of the world's freshwater reserves. The workshop was the first to appraise all major biogeochemical elements with respect to their integrated feedbacks in a biogeochemical su-percycle. The proceedings of the workshop were to form part of a publication series on the transport of carbon and minerals in major world rivers, lakes and estuaries.

Desertification control

Desertification continued to be a major environmental problem, worsened by the persistent droughts reported in the northern hemisphere during 1988. Heavy rains broke the drought of previous years in Africa, but also caused catastrophic floods and an unprecedented desert locust plague in the Maghreb countries, the western Sahel, eastern Africa and the Arabian peninsula. Efforts to combat desertification were in most countries limited to isolated sectoral anti-desertification projects whose impact was hampered by the lack of a clearly defined framework for desertification control within national development plans as well as inadequate human and financial resources.

In response to those problems, UNEP during the year made a major effort to assist the 16 Governments that had fully or partly developed national desertification control plans. UNEP and the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) consulted with various Governments to agree on steps to formulate concrete project proposals on priority areas identified under those national action plans. In compliance with a 1987 decision of the Governing Council,(28) the Executive Director consulted with representatives of Governments and United Nations agencies on enhancing the efficiency of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control, a new approach to the special account for financing desertification control programmes and means of financing implementation of the United Nations Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.(29) A meeting of officials and experts at Geneva in July made various recommendations in those areas, which were discussed in detail in a report to the Governing Council on implementation of the Plan of Action.(30)

The Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification continued to co-ordinate a programme for the establishment of regional networks on desertification. The programme culminated in 1988 in the creation of a major operational sand-dune mapping, stabilization and afforestation network for the Middle East and North Africa, an arid lands forestry network for the Sahelian and north Sudanian zones of Africa and five Caribbean and Latin American technical co-operation networks on watershed management, all established by FAO. The network of research and training centres for desertification control in Asia and the Pacific and the Latin American and Caribbean environmental training network also continued to consolidate their programmes. UNEP was funding a three-year project to establish an NGO network of research and information on the development of sustainable livelihoods in arid and semi-arid lands in Africa.

In 1988, UNEP continued its efforts to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, providing technical assistance to Governments in integrating desertification control plans into national development plans and programmes. In addition, the UNEP Desertification Control Programme Activity Centre assisted 15 African countries in formulating pilot projects for the rehabilitation of villages and the sustainable development of stock-raising zones in semi-arid areas, with the aim of fostering grass-roots participation. UNEP initiated a study in the Sudan and Uganda to identify local sources of minerals and assess their usability as low-cost soil ameliorants and fertilizers. At the request of Uganda, UNEP undertook a study on the production of stabilized soil/lime bricks and roofing tiles, a technology that can considerably reduce the amount of deforestation resulting from the traditional production of fire-baked clay bricks. Other activities included co-ordination and support of various sand-dune stabilization and afforestation programmes, training programmes, the assessment and mapping of desertification and preparation of an arid lands bibliography data base and a wind erosion bibliographic referral system.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region

In 1988, many areas of the Sudano-Sahelian region received torrential downpours that resulted in serious flooding and massive soil erosion, particularly in Burkina Faso, Mali and the Sudan.

The Plan of Action to Combat Desertification was implemented in the Sudano-Sahelian region by UNSO, which supported a desertification control programme in 22 countries, consisting, as at September 1988, of 64 ongoing projects with total funding of some $71 million. An in-house study conducted in late 1987 and early 1988 on the role of UNSO refined its role to include, inter alia: co-ordination and harmonization of a wide spectrum of drought-related and desertification control activities; assistance in the mobilization of external financial resources needed for implementation of such activities; management of the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities; intensification of public interest in the plight of the region; co-operation with Governments of the region in carrying out their activities; identification, development, financing and monitoring of programmes; and mobilization of resources. It was decided to establish a regional office of UNSO at Nairobi to serve as a link between UNEP and UNSO, to function as an extended arm of UNEP in East Africa in implementing the Plan of Action, and to act as a United Nations liaison with the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development and its member States in developing and implementing their drought-related programmes and desertification control activities.

In 1988, projects were carried out in the areas of afforestation and reforestation, alternative energy sources aimed at conserving fuelwood, rangeland management, water resources, soil protection and dune stabilization and integrated land management.

Freshwater ecosystems

UNEP's programme for the environmentally sound management of inland water (EMINWA) focused in 1988 on the Lake Chad basin, which had deteriorated because of drought. UNEP outlined steps for the preparation of a water master plan and an action programme for the environmentally sound management of the basin. A survey mission was dispatched to the Mekong Delta to establish two pilot farms with a view to increasing food production. Projects were developed for the development of the Lake Xolotlán basin in Nicaragua and the Orinoco-Apure river system in Venezuela.

On the subject of environmentally sound development of ground-water resources, an expert group met in Bahrain in March to discuss the preparation of an action plan for the Damman aquifer. The fourth planning meeting on the freshwater part of the World Climate Programme, organized by UNESCO and WMO (Paris, 12-16 September), agreed that in climate and water resource development projects attention had to be focused on studies of hydrological data in the context of climate variability and change, modelling of the hydrological cycle and a methodology for the application of climatological data to water resources projects. In the context of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), UNEP and WHO established water quality surveillance systems in villages in Indonesia, Peru and Zambia, with plans for similar projects in the United Republic of Tanzania and Vanuatu.

A first draft code of conduct on accidental pollution of transboundary inland waters was prepared by representatives of 13 European countries under the auspices of ECE. The code of conduct was to be used as guidance for solving similar problems throughout the world. A series of guidelines on environmental impact assessment methods was prepared, aimed at helping Governments, institutions and individuals to highlight environmental components in the design of water resources projects. Training seminars and workshops were held on environmentally sound lake management (Japan), environmentally sound water management (Egypt, the Niger and Thailand) and the management of water resource development projects (USSR). During the year, UNEP published recommended syllabuses on the integration of environmental aspects into water resources engineering education, following a world-wide survey conducted with UNESCO.

The Advisory Group on Water Resources, focusing on the preparation of guidelines for sustainable water management and on the implementation of the EMINWA programme, held two sessions in 1988. Expert group meetings were held on the organization of ecological investigations dealing with water and soil resources development and on international river basin development.

Marine ecosystems

UNEP's activities with regard to oceans and coastal areas included global and regional programme elements that concentrated on issues that could benefit from UNEP's co-ordinating role and from the Environment Fund.

UNEP continued to support the Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (GESAMP) and co-sponsored six GESAMP working groups dealing with specific environmental problems: evaluation of the hazards of harmful substances carried by ship; review of potentially harmful substances; interchange of pollutants between the atmosphere and the oceans; coastal modelling; state of the marine environment; and long-term ecological consequences of low-level contamination of the marine environment. The reports produced by these working groups provided the scientific basis for the formulation of proposals for government action in pursuance of regional seas conventions. Assessments of the state of the marine environment, co-ordinated by UNEP with the assistance of several other organizations, were completed during the year in 14 regions, covering practically all the world's coastal waters. These reports were intended to be used by GESAMP to finalize a global report on health of the oceans and by States in assessing their marine pollution control priorities. Six regional overviews on the potential impact of expected climatic changes on coastal and marine ecosystems were prepared. Eight new reference methods for studying marine pollution were prepared, two were revised and four were translated into French and Spanish.

Regional seas programme

Mediterranean region. In the Mediterranean region in 1988, the number of countries that had ratified the Protocol for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution from Land-Based Sources and the Protocol concerning Mediterranean Specially Protected Areas rose to 12 and 13, respectively. Pledges to the Trust Fund totalled $3,988,035 for 1988. During their fifth ordinary meeting, the contracting parties approved joint measures to prevent mercury pollution; approved environmental quality criteria for shellfish waters; agreed to amend the Protocol on land-based sources; and decided to allow the Regional Oil Combating Centre to deal with dangerous substances other than oil. Numerous technical meetings and training programmes were organized, on issues such as oil pollution control, microbiological methods for determining the quality of beaches and management of liquid waste treatment plants. Pilot coastal zone development projects continued, and the Regional Centre for the Reduction of Seismic Risk in Mediterranean Coastal Areas was inaugurated at Genoa, Italy. Documents published included six volumes of the Mediterranean Action Plan technical report series and Futures of the Mediterranean Basin 2000-2025.

Kuwait region. The Council of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment (ROPME) held its sixth meeting in Kuwait in April and approved UNEP proposals for future co-operation on coastal zone management, strengthening national and regional capabilities for monitoring the marine environment and public awareness. The Council also agreed to a UNEP initiative for an in-depth evaluation of the Kuwait Action Plan. An extraordinary meeting of the ROPME Council (Kuwait, 31 October and 1 November) endorsed the reorientation of the Action Plan towards concrete achievable targets and approved the actions proposed for cleaning up the sea area after the eight-year conflict in the region.

West and Central African region. In May, the steering committee for the marine environment of the region agreed to a rescheduling of unpaid pledges to the Trust Fund, but the continuing failure of most Governments to contribute had seriously retarded implementation of the Action Plan. Despite these financial problems, the network of institutions and laboratories participating in marine-pollution monitoring grew to 23 in 10 countries during the year. A manual on methods for evaluating and controlling coastal erosion in the region was also completed.

Wider Caribbean region. In 1988, the UNEP Regional Co-ordinating Unit for the Wider Caribbean reached full staffing and its information network became operational. Fifteen Governments had ratified or acceded to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region and its Protocol concerning Co-operation in Combating Oil Spills. Four umbrella projects-co-ordination and common costs; environmental management of coastal areas; assessment and control of marine pollution; and environmental training, education and public awareness-were being implemented.

East Asian seas region. Four projects were completed within the framework of the East Asian Seas Action Plan, leaving four ongoing and two being formulated. The seventh meeting of the East Asian seas co-ordinating body (Yogyakarta, Indonesia, 17-19 July) reviewed the progress of the Action Plan and requested UNEP to prepare for a meeting of experts in 1989 to look into the feasibility of preparing a draft convention as a possible legal framework for the Action Plan. The regional report on the state of the marine environment was completed and a regional study on the socio-economic implications of expected climate changes was initiated.

South-East Pacific region. Protocols on environmental impact assessment and specially protected areas were being prepared, following the entry into force of the Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Area of the South-East Pacific. About 200 experts benefited from seminars, workshops and other activities carried out under the Action Plan. The regional institutional network comprised 50 institutions conducting research in 29 areas of interest.

Red Sea and Gulf of Aden region. Following a proposal from the secretariat of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden Environment Programme concerning marine conservation surveys in Democratic Yemen, Somalia and the Sudan, UNEP was drafting a project on strengthening research and monitoring capabilities in Democratic Yemen for assessment of pollution in the marine environment.

South Pacific region. A wide range of activities continued within the framework of the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme (SPREP). An intergovernmental review meeting on the SPREP Action Plan (Noumea, New Caledonia, 27 June-1 July) approved a concentration on six major programme elements: monitoring, research and control of pollution; management of specially protected areas, historic sites and exotic organisms; inland water quality, pesticides and pollution control; natural resource management, environmental planning and administration; environmental education, training and information; and impact of climatic changes and sea-level rise. A training course on the basic techniques for assessing environmental impacts on the marine environment and coastal areas of the South Pacific was also held (Cali, Colombia, 8-12 February).

Eastern African region. Somalia in 1988 ratified the Convention for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the Eastern African Region. Somalia was assisted in assessing pollution in Mogadishu harbour, where the M.V. Ariadne had spilled hazardous chemicals when it went aground in 1985. A national oil spill contingency plan for Mauritius was developed by the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and UNEP, and a national action plan for the protection, management and development of the marine and coastal environment of the United Republic of Tanzania was prepared.

South Asian seas region. UNEP, with the assistance of IUCN and IMO, had initiated two projects in the South Asian seas region and was in the process of formulating a third. The regional report on the state of the marine environment was completed and the regional report on the socio-economic implications of expected climatic changes was being finalized.

UNEP served as the secretariat for the Committee on Seas of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment. At its second meeting in December, the Committee finalized its organization and established a mechanism for the exchange of information and expertise between the African subregions on protection and development of the marine and coastal environment. The Committee declared an African Decade for the Protection of the Marine and Coastal Environment, 1991-2000.

UNEP continued its efforts to promote the implementation of the Global Plan of Action for the Conservation, Management and Utilization of Marine Mammals. A regional action plan for the protection of the Mediterranean monk seal was prepared by experts participating in the Mediterranean Action Plan. An extensive evaluation of the development of the Global Plan of Action and its achievements to the end of 1988 was undertaken. The Planning and Co-ordinating Committee reviewed progress in the implementation of the Plan and made recommendations regarding its future orientation and co-ordination.

Some other relevant meetings concerning the marine environment that were sponsored by UNEP were: a western South American marine geology symposium (Santiago, Chile); an international symposium on living resources and fisheries (Valparaiso, Chile); and a training course on the assessment of pollution from land-based sources (Singapore).

Environment and technology

In response to the growing concern that greenhouse gases were inducing climate change, UNEP took steps to become a source of comprehensive information on the environmental impacts of energy systems and management options. During the year, UNEP developed a mailing list of close to 1,500 addresses of institutions and individuals with an interest in energy and environment, which was used in distributing publications from the Energy Report Series. Preparatory work was done on a project that would enhance the computerized energy planning system popularly known as LEAP (Less Developed Country Energy Alternatives Planning System) by allowing for the tracking of environmental impacts of different energy policies generated in the planning system. Preparations were also made for a project to apply the results of impact studies to assess and manage the health and environmental risks of energy and other complex industrial systems. Preparatory work for the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment energy network was carried out, and the first meeting of the network was held at Dakar in February.

UNEP continued to contribute to the achievement of environmentally sustainable industrial development by providing technical guidelines and reviews, information transfer, technical co-operation and training.

UNEP sponsored several diagnostic missions of experts on industry and environment issues in Africa and Asia, arranged training programmes for industrial managers and organized study tours for government and industry specialists to upgrade their skills in pollution prevention and control. Workshops on hazardous waste management were held in Malaysia and Mexico, and a workshop on clean technologies was held at Cairo. ILO and UNEP continued training activities for employers; seminars were held in Barbados, Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago. In addition, UNEP worked closely with industry associations to stimulate and support environmental initiatives. A handbook on community awareness and preparedness for industrial accidents at the local level was released, and a special issue of Industry and Environment dealt with the working environment. Four expert group meetings on industrial accidents were held in Paris during the year.

Human settlements

UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) completed in 1988 a demonstration project in Democratic Yemen, initiated in 1985 to provide a model for the planning and building of human settlements taking the environment specially into account. In addition to the demonstration housing units and other infrastructure, the project also produced a technical report and a video film to be used as training tools and guidance material for similar projects expected to be initiated under the Government's sponsorship.

Technical co-operation

The technical co-operation activities of UNEP were described in an addendum to the report of the Secretary-General to the UNDP Governing Council on United Nations technical co-operation.⁽³¹⁾ Technical assistance to developing countries, including the provision of experts, equipment, training, grants and fellowships, was central to the work of UNEP. Its technical co-operation programme allocation amounted to $2.6 million in 1988.

In October,⁽³²⁾ ACC decided that, following a consultant's review, a joint meeting of its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) and the designated officials on environmental matters should be convened on the approaches to be followed by United Nations organizations regarding environmental guidelines and their application to the operational activities of the United Nations system.

Chapter IX

Population and human settlements

In 1988, the world population reached 5.2 billion; the United Nations estimated that it would grow by more than 90 million each year during the 1990s, with more than 90 per cent of the growth taking place in the developing countries, where about one third of the population was homeless. The United Nations Population Fund had programmes and projects in 127 developing countries and continued to focus on the needs of 56 priority countries. At the end of 1988, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements was carrying out 219 projects in 94 countries.

The General Assembly adopted resolutions in December on the 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (43/180) and on a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 (43/181).

Follow-up to the 1984 Conference on Population

UNFPA activities. The Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), in a December 1988 report⁽¹⁾ to the Population Commission, reviewed the Fund's mandate, re-examined its recent realignment and decentralization of authority and responsibility, surveyed the financial scope of its activities and considered its programme of work, as part of the follow-up to the 1984 International Conference on Population.⁽²⁾ The report reviewed the strategy for UNFPA assistance in sub-Saharan Africa, the Fund's intercountry programme, which consisted of an interregional and four regional programmes, the modification of criteria for priority countries, evaluation activities, and women, population and development. It examined the following aspects of the UNFPA work programme: family planning; population information, education and communication; basic data collection; utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning; and special programmes for women, youth and the aging.

The Executive Director concluded that UNFPA would concentrate on enhanced programme delivery by strengthening its field offices, improving monitoring, supervision and feedback, and making more use of evaluation and research. It would also continue to improve the outreach of its programmes by adapting them to conditions in each country, by providing adequate means of family planning, by involving the community and by extending services to scattered and poorly served populations.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Two reports were presented by the Secretary-General on follow-up to the recommendations of the Conference.

In one report,⁽³⁾ he provided an overview of the main activities in the area of population carried out by the various organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system. The overview was accompanied by an account of changes in the institutional and legislative framework and in the organizational structure of programmes. It also included a description of the resources devoted to population activities and the co-ordination mechanisms of the units and organizations engaged in them. The activities covered were: socio-economic development, the environment and population; the role and status of women; development of population policies; population goals and policies, including population growth, morbidity and mortality, reproduction and the family, population distribution and internal migration, international migration and population structure; and the promotion of knowledge and policy through data collection and analysis, research, and management, training, information, education and communication.

In the other report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General gave an overview of population activities undertaken by nine intergovernmental and 81 non-governmental organizations (NGOS), with the principal characteristics of those organizations and their relationships with the United Nations system.

UN Population Fund

UNFPA activities

During 1988, the United Nations Population Fund continued to focus on the priority areas designated by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in 1981.(1) They included: family planning; information, education and communication; basic data collection; and the utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning. Work also went forward on such special programmes as: women, population and development; youth; the question of aging; and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). The UNFPA Executive Director reported on those activities in her annual report to the UNDP Governing Council.(2)

Total UNFPA income in 1988 was $178.9 million, compared to $156.1 million in 1987. Project allocations totalled $169.1 million, including a $24.1 million carry-over from 1987, compared to $133.7 million in project allocations in 1987. Expenditures were $167.3 million, compared to $140.5 million in 1987, and included $91.4 million for country programmes, $38.5 million for intercountry programmes, $26.7 million for administrative services and $10.7 million for agency support costs.

At year's end, UNFPA was assisting 3,266 projects-2,403 country and 863 regional and intercountry projects. In 1988, 95 projects were completed, bringing the cumulative total to 2,944.

Assistance to family planning amounted to $87 million, or 51.5 per cent of total allocations. UNFPA supported almost 500 country and intercountry family-planning projects, concentrating on integrating planning services with maternal and child health programmes (MCH/FP). It made special efforts to strengthen services in sub-Saharan Africa, where maternal and infant mortality remained very high. The Regional Training Centre for Family Health in Mauritius conducted 9 eight-week courses in 1988 for a total of 93 trainees. The curriculum included a clinical orientation on fertility management. The University of Brussels (Belgium) conducted 2 three-month MCH/FP training courses. UNFPA assessed the training needs in the Africa region, with the assistance of the Margaret Sanger Center of Planned Parenthood of New York. As a participant in the Global Programme on AIDS of the World Health Organization (WHO), UNFPA took part in various forums to gain a better understanding of the interaction between human immunodeficiency virus infection and contraceptive practice and to explore the role MCH/FP could play in AIDS control programmes.

In the area of information, education and communication, UNFPA provided assistance totalling $26.1 million, or 15.5 per cent of expenditures. It added Colombia, Democratic Yemen and the Niger to the countries undertaking in-school and out-of-school population education activities. In addition, family-life education components were integrated into literacy programmes in Bangladesh, Malawi and the Syrian Arab Republic. UNFPA continued to receive requests from Governments of developing countries for support in establishing sex education projects, for example, to address adolescent fertility and AIDS. Among the countries assisted were Burundi, Cape Verde and Nicaragua.

Several projects were approved that aimed at improving the coverage of population and related issues in the mass media; they included support to mass communication institutes in Ghana, Kenya, Zambia and Zimbabwe, as well as continued assistance to the Asian Institute for Broadcasting Development.

With regard to programmes on population dynamics and the formulation and evaluation of population policies, UNFPA provided $31.3 million, or 18.7 per cent of total allocations. It undertook to develop the most suitable methodological approaches, to strengthen national technical capacity, to support research and to set up required institutional arrangements. Principal activities included studies of the social and economic consequences of population trends; the interrelationship between population, environment, resources and development; the formulation and evaluation of population policies; and the integration of population factors into national development plans. Training courses were held dealing with various aspects of demography and of population and development. UNFPA provided assistance to 23 projects to support United Nations international personnel, to 38 projects to support training activities and to 40 projects to purchase equipment.

Assistance for basic data collection totalled $15 million, or 8.9 per cent of total allocations. UNFPA continued to provide assistance to strengthen developing countries' self-reliance in population data collection and analysis and to increase their capacity to plan, design and implement basic data collection and analysis using integrated statistical systems that included population censuses and intercensal demographic surveys. It emphasized the quality of data, its gender specificity, international comparability and effective utilization. It also stressed tabulating, analysing and disseminating data on particular groups-youth, elderly, female-headed households and, to the extent possible, refugees. UNFPA funded a conference (Cairo, Egypt, October 1988) to discuss utilization of census data; it was attended by 292 data producers and users, academics and technical specialists from 73 countries.

Programmes directed to women, population and development, youth, the question of aging and AIDS totalled $5.9 million of total allocations, or 3.5 per cent. UNFPA gave priority to the training of its staff in the area of women in development. It conducted a number of training workshops on aspects of incorporating women's concerns into population programmes. Most UNFPA-supported youth projects dealt with population and family-life education, communication and, to some extent, family planning. It provided assistance for research into adolescent and youth problems; approved support for a training research programme on reproductive health in adolescence, to be carried out by WHO; and commissioned a global review of factors affecting adolescent birth rates. Projects dealing with the question of aging cut across functional, regional and programme lines. For example, aging-related projects might be included in the sector on population policy formulation, as in the interregional project on population aging, old-age security and social and economic policies, or they might focus on the consequences of population changes, as in the regional project on analysis of the consequences of the changing population structure in Europe.

UNFPA continued to work within the scope of the strategies set by WHO's Global Programme on AIDS. It co-ordinated its activities with those of the other members of the Programme's Management Committee. It integrated MCH/FP activities with those specifically designed to combat AIDS-structurally, by promoting the incorporation of MCH/FP units of Ministries of Health into national AIDS commissions and, operationally, by placing those units in the service of AIDS-related activities. Through arrangements with the Programme, during the year UNFPA participated in 12 meetings of donors, held in selected countries, to review medium-term national AIDS plans and propose levels of funding. Discussions indicated, for example, that Sierra Leone needed increased supplies of condoms and that Zaire needed surgical gloves and sterile syringes.

On 1 July 1988,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the reports of the Executive Director on UNFPA's 1987 activities⁽⁴⁾ and noted the proportions of assistance allocated to the highest priority programme areas, particularly the increase in resources for family planning. The Council endorsed modified criteria and their threshold levels to be used in designating priority countries (per capita gross national product of $750 or under, gross reproduction rate of 2 or more, infant mortality rate of 120 or more, annual population increment of 100,000 or more, agricultural population density of 2 or more persons per hectare and female literacy rate of 40 per cent or under). It welcomed the Fund's increased emphasis on monitoring and evaluation as part of its programming process and the continued increase in assistance to sub-Saharan Africa; it urged steps to augment the resource base so that support for programmes in other regions was maintained at current levels. Further, the Council noted UNFPA's efforts to light the AIDS pandemic and to incorporate women's concerns in population programmes.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1988, UNFPA focused on the needs of 56 priority countries. Of the $123.5 million allocated to country programmes in 1988, $94.8 million was allocated to the priority countries.

Intercountry (regional, interregional and global) allocations totalled $45.5 million.

On 1 July,⁽⁵⁾ the UNDP Governing Council approved country programmes for Benin, Bhutan, Cape Verde, Colombia, Costa Rica, Gabon, Guatemala, Lesotho, Nepal, Paraguay, Peru, Swaziland, Turkey, Uganda, Viet Nam and Zambia, and regional programmes for 1988-1991 in sub-Saharan Africa, the Arab States and Europe, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean.

Strategy for sub-Saharan Africa

Responding to a 1987 decision by the UNDP Governing Council,⁽⁶⁾ the UNFPA Executive Director submitted in April 1988⁽⁷⁾ an overview of UNFPA assistance to the sub-Saharan Africa area in recent years as well as its proposed regional programme for 1988-1991.

In the preceding four years, UNFPA assistance to the region totalled $94.8 million, of which $21.6 million was for regional programmes. UNFPA had endeavoured to strengthen African countries' capacity to plan, develop and implement national population programmes. Its regional strategy aimed at reinforcing technical advisory services and their deployment at subregional levels and instituting training programmes to remedy the shortage of qualified personnel within country programmes.

UNFPA-supported regional activities included basic data collection, the study of population dynamics and policy formulation, family planning, and information, education and communication. Its regional and national efforts continued to require strengthening, guidance, monitoring and evaluation. The experience of recent years indicated that weaknesses in the technical backstopping structure had placed constraints on effective implementation of some activities at the country level. Training activities were still inadequate. Research had been virtually non-existent due to financial and manpower constraints.

For 1988-1991, UNFPA proposed to provide assistance to the region totalling $36.4 million. Of that amount, $17.1 million would be for training activities, $14.9 million for support advisory services, $2.3 million for information dissemination, $1.5 million for research, and $0.6 million would be reserved for urgent, innovative and emerging needs.

On 1 July, the UNDP Governing Council approved the regional programme for the sub-Saharan Africa area, 1988-1991.

Work programmes

The UNFPA Executive Director, in a report on the work plan for 1989-1992,(8) took the 1989 estimated income of $190 million as the base and assumed a constant annual increase of 8 per cent for 1990-1992. On the basis of those assumptions, a total income of $856.1 million was expected, including $205.2 million for 1990, $221.6 million for 1991 and $239.3 million for 1992. After deductions for operational costs and additions to the operational reserve, programmable resources were expected to total $664.6 million for the four years: $146.1 million for 1989, $158.9 million for 1990, $172.8 million for 1991 and $186.8 million for 1992. The income estimates did not include a contribution from the United States, which had withdrawn support from UNFPA starting in 1986.

The Executive Director, in another report,(9) gave the status of financial implementation of UNDP Governing Council-approved UNFPA country programmes and projects, with details on expenditures and allocations by year, region and country.

On 1 July,(10) the Governing Council approved the work plan for 1989-1992. It also authorized the net additional approval authority in accordance with the work plan in the amounts of $63.7 million for 1989, to bring the total for 1989 to 100 per cent of the 1989 level, or $179 million; $42.3 million for 1990, to bring the total for 1990 to 75 per cent of the new programmable resources for 1990, or $119.2 million; $48 million for 1991, to bring the total for 1991 to 50 per cent of the new programmable resources for 1991, or $86.4 million; and $46.7 million for 1992, to bring the total for 1992 to 25 per cent of the new programmable resources for 1992.

Women, population and development

The Executive Director, in response to a 1987 UNDP Governing Council decision,(11) submitted a report on the implementation strategy to strengthen the capacity of UNFPA to deal with issues concerning women, population and development.(12) In 1987-1988, activities focused on training of staff on the conceptual and operational aspects of involving women in population policies, programme procedures and guidelines; undertaking project reviews to identify facilitating and constraining factors from a gender perspective; and strengthening the capacities of and collaboration with governmental organizations and NGOs.

In May 1988, UNFPA updated its guidelines on women, population and development, based on the recommendations of the 1984 International Conference on Population⁽¹³⁾ and the 1985 Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.(14) The updated guidelines took into account inquiries from field staff regarding the definition of programmes and projects designed to benefit women. They identified in detail specific activities that UNFPA considered critical for the integration of women into population and development endeavours. Such activities included education and training, skill development, entrepreneurial undertakings, awareness creation for both the public and planners, exchange of information, data collection and research. The guidelines also stressed the importance of strengthening national technical capabilities at the governmental and non-governmental levels.

During 1988, UNFPA conducted a number of training workshops on incorporating women's concerns into population programmes. It also carried out in-depth project reviews in Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Jordan, Paraguay, Zaire and Zambia to assess the impact of various activities on women and the extent of women's participation.

On 1 July,(3) the UNDP Governing Council noted the efforts of UNFPA to extend training on the incorporation of women's concerns in population programmes and welcomed the adoption of measures to ensure that programming reflected attention to gender-specific issues. The Council encouraged UNFPA to increase support for activities to improve the status of women.

Financial and administrative questions

Financial situation

On 1 January 1988, UNFPA's balance was $24,062,609. During the year, the Fund received income of $177,996,371 and had expenditures of $167,212,569, which resulted in an excess of income over expenditures of $10,783,802. As at 31 December, the Fund's balance was $31,846,411; unspent 1988 allocations amounted to $39,235,456.

Budget for 1988-1989

In May 1988,(15) the UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council revised budget estimates for administrative and programme support services (APSS) for the 1988-1989 biennium. The total supplementary proposals in the revised budget amounted to $3 million. On a gross basis, which included $4.2 million of estimated earned credits, appropriations would increase from $59.5 million approved by the Council in 1987(16) to $62.5 million.

On 1 July,(17) the Governing Council approved a supplementary appropriation of $3,709,700 to bring the total appropriation of the revised 1988-1989 budget for APSS from $59,523,700 to $63,233,400 gross, resulting in total appropriations of $59,033,400 net by applying overhead credits available to UNFPA in the estimated amount of $3,800,000 and the miscellaneous income from trust funds for support services in the amount of $400,000.

Contributions

During 1988, 88 countries and Territories paid a total of $168 million in voluntary contributions to UNFPA, compared with $149.3 million from 77 countries and Territories in 1987. Total income in 1988 amounted to $178 million, which included additions and adjustments to pledges for prior years, exchange-rate and currency re-evaluation adjustments, interest, donations and other miscellaneous income. Pledges for 1989 and future years totalled $120.4 million from 81 countries and Territories.

Accounts for 1987

The Board of Auditors made a number of observations and recommendations following its audit of the UNFPA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1987.⁽¹⁸⁾

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 43/216, accepted the UNFPA financial report and requested the Fund to take immediate steps to correct the situations that gave rise to the opinion of the Board of Auditors.

Staffing

In May 1988,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report to the UNDP Governing Council reviewing UNFPA's overall staffing requirements in the field and at headquarters. Bearing in mind the priority of UNFPA's field programmes, particularly the strategy of assistance to sub-Saharan Africa, he proposed an increase of 61 posts, from 342 posts to 403 posts in the field establishment. Of the new posts, 52 would be established in sub-Saharan Africa, 3 in UNFPA field offices in the Arab States and Europe and 8 in Latin America and the Caribbean, while 2 posts would be abolished in Asia and the Pacific.

On 1 July,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Governing Council took note of the report and considered, in view of the complexity of the population field and programmes undertaken by the Fund, that the second Assistant Secretary-General post should be staffed at its designated level, without prejudice to the overall application of the relevant provisions of a 1987 General Assembly resolution.⁽²⁰⁾ It also approved the establishment in the APSS budget of four new international Professional field posts and of 57 new local posts as temporary posts. It decided to establish 289 existing temporary local posts as regular posts in the APSS budget, and confirmed the classification of six international Professional posts in the field at the D-1 level, effective from 1 January 1988.

UN Population Award

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the UNFPA Executive Director on the 1988 United Nations Population Award.⁽²¹⁾ A total of 12 nominations were received by the Committee for the Award. The Committee selected Shidzue Kato, who founded the Family Planning Federation of Japan, and the Asociación Pro-Bienestar de la Familia Colombiana of Colombia as recipients.

On 20 December, by decision 43/435, the Assembly took note of the transmittal by the Secretary-General.

The Trust Fund for the United Nations Population Award stood at $456,139 as at 1 January 1988. Interest income amounted to $33,426, while expenditures totalled $37,490. After a contribution of $150,000 from Japan, the closing balance as at 31 December 1988 totalled $602,502.

Human settlements

At its eleventh session (New Delhi, India, 6-12 April 1988),⁽¹⁾ the Commission on Human Settlements recommended that the General Assembly request Governments to sustain the momentum generated during the 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and to implement concrete and innovative programmes to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and disadvantaged. The Commission further recommended that the Assembly adopt a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and urge Governments to develop appropriate national and sub-national strategies for shelter.

The Commission also considered the use of the term "settlements" in relation to Israeli colonies in occupied territories, the reconstruction of Palestinian homes, and assistance to victims of apartheid and colonialism in southern Africa.

In addition, the Commission urged States to respect international obligations regarding the protection of the civilian population and human settlements in armed conflicts; recommended the mobilization of new and greater international financial resources for shelter; and examined themes for its twelfth (1989) session, deciding to include "Maintenance of buildings and infrastructure and its financing and cost-recovery".

On 26 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/156, took note of the report of the Commission on the work of its eleventh session.⁽¹⁾

Human settlements activities

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH) was observed in 1987.⁽²⁾ It had been proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1982⁽³⁾ to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of some of the global poor and disadvantaged by the end of 1987 and to demonstrate ways of improving the situation by the year 2000. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), also known as Habitat, performed the role of lead agency in the United Nations system for co-ordinating IYSH activities.

In February 1988,⁽⁴⁾ the UNCHS Executive Director reported to the Commission on Human Settlements on IYSH activities and achievements. As at 31 December 1987, 130 Governments had reported the adoption of new or revised national shelter strategies and specific measures to improve shelter, dealing with such issues as land, finance, infrastructure, institutions, building materials production and employment generation. The report also discussed IYSH activities carried out by organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, multilateral financial institutions and bilateral financial aid agencies.

Assessing the accomplishments of IYSH, the report stated that emphasis had been placed on action-oriented methods, that progress had been promising, that more than 600 demonstration projects had been carried out in more than 100 countries, and that a body of practical knowledge had been accumulated. IYSH subregional meetings, in which more than 100 Member States participated, had served to identify the most appropriate approaches for providing shelter to the poor. UNCHS had published two books, more than 10 special topic publications, 15 monographs and 12 IYSH Bulletins aimed at disseminating information on experience of various countries in shelter improvement.

On 11 April,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Settlements welcomed the success achieved by IYSH, requested the UNCHS Executive Director to transmit his report to the General Assembly and recommended to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/180 without vote.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recalling also, in particular, the objectives of the Year as contained in resolution 37/221,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) entitled "International Year of Shelter for the Homeless: activities and achievements", and the comments of the Commission on Human Settlements and of the Economic and Social Council on that report,

1. Welcomes the success achieved in attaining the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the numerous and encouraging reports, which had been received from a total of one hundred and thirty countries as at 31 December 1987, on activities, policies, programmes and projects undertaken by those countries within the context of the Year and towards the successful attainment of its objectives;

3. Commends Governments, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for the efforts and resources that were effectively mobilized for the programme of activities for the Year;

4. Requests Governments to sustain the momentum generated by the programme for the Year and to continue implementing concrete and innovative programmes aimed at improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and the disadvantaged;

5. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to continue to assist Governments in their efforts towards that goal, within the framework of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

6. Recommends that Governments indicate, if possible on World Habitat Day, the concrete actions to be taken and the specific targets to be achieved during each successive year;

7. Also recommends that Governments maintain, where appropriate, the national focal points and national committees for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless for the purpose of monitoring and assessing the progress achieved in improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and the disadvantaged;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly periodically, through the Economic and Social Council, on progress achieved in improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and the disadvantaged.

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/750/Add.3) without vote, 10 November (meeting 40); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.30), based on informal consultations on draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/43/8); agenda item 12.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

In response to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,(6) the UNCHS Executive Director submitted in February 1988 to the Commission on Human Settlements a report on a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.(7) The report had four parts: the first discussed the objectives, rationale and general principles of the Strategy; the second, the reorganization of the shelter sector, mobilization and allocation of financial resources, and shelter production and improvement; the third, guidelines for international action; and the fourth, a plan of action and a timetable for the first phase. The report concluded that the global shelter situation was worsening and that anxiety about it was being expressed not only with regard to its current effects on people but in relation to the future implications for society of the unfavourable supply trend.

To achieve the Strategy's objectives, emphasis would have to be placed on action in the areas of, macro-economic policy, institutional co-ordination, legislation and regulation, data collection and analysis, financial resources and mechanisms for shelter and infrastructure, land, infrastructural development, and building materials and technology.

Implementing the Strategy, Member States would review their shelter policies in the light of the Strategy; formulate national strategies for shelter for all; decide on specific targets; develop plans of action to implement their strategies; and report to the Commission on progress. The plan of action also set forth activities to be carried out by the Commission, the General Assembly, UNCHS, and international and intergovernmental agencies and NGOs.

On 12 April,(8) the Commission adopted the report of the UNCHS Executive Director as an addendum(9) to the report on its eleventh session, and recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/181 without vote.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the recommendations for national action adopted at Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,

Recalling its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in which, inter alia, the importance of the provision of basic shelter and infrastructure was stressed,

Recalling also its resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recalling further its resolution 42/191 of 11 December 1987, in which it decided that there should be a Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recalling Commission on Human Settlements resolutions 9/9 of 16 May 1986 and 10/17 of 16 April 1987 on the participation of women in the solution of human settlements problems,

Recalling also Commission on Human Settlements resolution 10/16 of 16 April 1987 on the effect of the external debt of the developing countries and their ability to raise the funds needed to solve the housing problems of the homeless up to the year 2000,

Taking note of Commission on Human Settlements resolution 11/7 of 11 April 1988 entitled "Co-ordination and co-operation with agencies and organizations within the United Nations system",

Convinced that the continuous, co-ordinated and widely based efforts of Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals, when guided by an appropriate strategy, will reverse the alarming trends in the field of human settlements and produce clear and visible improvements in the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and disadvantaged by the year 2000, and that this should be a global responsibility,

Encouraged by action already taken or being taken in many countries to prepare national shelter strategies and to adopt other measures that will promote achievement of the goal of shelter for all,

Recognizing that, despite such efforts, more than one billion people have shelter unfit for human habitation, that this number will increase dramatically, partly as a result of population and urbanization trends, and that determined measures must be taken aimed at profiting from these trends, rather than being penalized by them,

Also recognizing that the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless has confirmed the need to intensify national and international efforts to produce, deliver and improve shelter for all, with specific emphasis on the poor and disadvantaged,

Convinced that shelter problems are universal, that no country has yet completely met its shelter needs and that every country can profit from the experience of others,

Also convinced that shelter problems are a global concern requiring solutions that relate to other global problems and also requiring the efforts of all countries to reach such solutions, that the demand for shelter in each country can be met by applying a set of common principles, but that goals can only be met by the individual efforts of each Government acting in its own political, economic, social and cultural context,

Recognizing that the core of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 consists of integrated national shelter strategies that need to be based on a full understanding of the scale and nature of the problem and the national resource base available to address the problem,

Recognizing also that national shelter strategies need to contain four complementary parts: clear and measurable objectives; national mobilization and distribution of financial resources; promotion of shelter production and improvement with special reference to the management of land, the provision of infrastructure and encouragement of the use of appropriate building materials and technology; and the gradual reorganization of the shelter sector,

1. Adopts the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

2. Decides that the main objective of the Strategy is to facilitate adequate shelter for all by the year 2000, that the main focus should therefore be on improving the situation of the disadvantaged and the poor and that the following fundamental objectives and principles should form the basis of the Strategy:

(a) Enabling policies, whereby the full potential and resources of all governmental and non-governmental actors in the field of human settlements are utilized, must be at the heart of national and international efforts;

(b) Women, as income-earners, home-makers and heads of households, and women's organizations fulfil a crucial role as contributors to the solution of human settlements problems, which should be fully recognized and reflected in equal participation of women in the elaboration of housing policies, programmes and projects, and the specific interests and capabilities of women should be adequately represented in human settlements policy formulation and in government mechanisms employed at all levels for the implementation of housing policies, programmes and projects;

(c) Shelter and development are mutually supportive and interdependent, and policies must be developed in full recognition of the important links between shelter and economic development;

(d) The concept of sustainable development implies that the provision of shelter and urban development must be reconcilable with a sustainable management of the environment;

3. Designates the Commission on Human Settlements as the United Nations intergovernmental body responsible for co-ordinating, evaluating and monitoring the Strategy and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) as the secretariat for the Strategy and the lead agency for co-ordinating and monitoring the relevant programmes and activities of other United Nations organizations and agencies concerned;

4. Urges Governments to develop appropriate national and sub-national strategies for shelter in the light of the guidelines provided in the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) entitled "Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000" and to report regularly to the Commission on Human Settlements, beginning at its twelfth session, on their relevant experience and on progress achieved in implementing those strategies;

5. Requests the Executive Director to monitor the relevant global experience and progress of all countries in implementing the Strategy and to report thereon to the Commission, beginning at its thirteenth session;

6. Decides to review and clarify the Strategy on a biennial basis, within regular budgetary resources, with the assistance of experts selected on the basis of equitable geographic representation, and to revise the Strategy in the light of global and national experience from all regions and subregions;

7. Request the Commission on Human Settlements, as the body designated to co-ordinate implementation of the Strategy, to report biennially to the General Assembly on progress made in its implementation;

8. Also requests the Commission to strengthen, within existing resources, its role in regard to the promotion of innovative measures by which bilateral and multi-lateral financial institutions may support the shelter strategies of developing countries, for example, by way of suitably devised loan agreements that would lead to the building up of national revolving funds for shelter;

9. Requests financial institutions and creditor countries to consider, as one of the conditions for the success of the Strategy, immediate measures to reduce the external debts by their conversion into long-term loans;

10. Adopts the guidelines for steps to be taken at the national and international levels, as set out in the annex to the present resolution, in support of the guidelines for national and international action contained in the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, prepared pursuant to its resolution 42/191;

11. Calls upon all States and others in a position to do so to make generous contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation to facilitate implementation of the Strategy.

ANNEX

I. Guidelines for steps to be taken at the national level

A. Considerations for Government when formulating a national shelter strategy

1. A national shelter strategy must spell out clear operational objectives for the development of shelter conditions both in terms of the construction of new housing and the upgrading and maintenance of existing housing stock and infrastructure and services.

2. In the definition of those objectives, development of shelter should be seen as a process whereby conditions are gradually improved for both men and women. The objectives need to address the scale of the problem, while the "adequate" standard aimed at should be identified on the basis of an analysis of the standards and options affordable to the target population and society at large. The objectives should be based on a comprehensive view of the magnitude and nature of the problem and of the available resource base, including the potential contribution of men and women. In addition to finance, land, manpower and institutions, building materials and technology also have to be considered irrespective of whether they are held by the public or private, formal or informal sector.

3. The objectives of the shelter sector need to be linked to the goals of overall economic policy, social policy, settlement policy and environmental policy.

4. The strategy needs to outline the action through which the objectives can be met. In an enabling strategy, actions such as the provision of infrastructure may mean the direct involvement of the public sector in shelter construction. The objective of "facilitating adequate shelter for all" also implies that direct government support should mainly be allocated to the most needy population groups.

5. The public sector is responsible for developing and implementing measures for national shelter policies and for the adoption of measures to stimulate the desired action by other sectors. This can be done through measures in areas such as the locally based small-scale building-materials industry, appropriate financial schemes or training programmes.

6. Another important component is the development of administrative, institutional and legislative tasks that are the direct responsibility of the Government, for example, land registration and regulation of construction.

7. An analysis of affordability will provide the criteria for defining the right priorities and appropriate approaches and standards for public sector involvement. Likewise, such an analysis gives the criteria for planning the indirect involvement of the public sector, that is, the type of activities to be promoted and the appropriate way of going about it.

8. The appropriate institutional framework for the implementation of a strategy must be identified, which may require much institutional reorganization. Each agency involved must have a clear understanding of its role within the overall organizational framework and of the tasks expected of it. Mechanisms for the co-ordination of inter- and intra-agency activities need to be developed. Mechanisms such as shelter coalitions are recommended and may be developed in partnership with the private and non-governmental sectors. Finally, arrangements for the continuous monitoring, review and revision of the strategy must be developed.

B. Steps to be taken by Governments when implementing a national strategy

9. Work for the preparation of the strategy must be organized. For instance, a task force may be appointed for the actual work and a steering committee ensuring high-level political commitment set up to guide its work. Alternatively it may be possible to use existing mechanisms. Equal participation of women should be ensured at all levels.

10. Needs and resources must be assessed. Estimates are required of the needs in housing construction and in upgrading and maintenance, including housing-related infrastructure, as well as of the resources that can be mobilized during the period to the year 2000 to cover those needs.

11. Shelter options and standards that are affordable by the target groups and society at large must be analysed, taking into account both the scale of need and all the resources available-finance, land, manpower and institutions, building materials and technology.

12. Objectives must be set for the construction of new housing and for the upgrading and maintenance of the existing housing stock in terms both of the scale of the activities and of the housing standards to be met.

13. Action must be identified through which those objectives can be realistically met. The estimated required resources for this action must not exceed those that can be made available by society. The action includes both direct government involvement and measures needed to encourage, facilitate and integrate active participation of other sectors in shelter delivery.

14. A plan of action must be prepared in consultation and partnership with non-governmental organizations, people and their representatives, which:

(a) Lists the activities that are the direct responsibility of the public sector;

(b) Lists the activities to be taken to facilitate and encourage the other actors to carry out their part of the task;

(c) Outlines resource allocation to the aforementioned activities

(d) Outlines the institutional arrangements for the implementation, co-ordination, monitoring and review of the strategy;

(e) Outlines a schedule for the activities of the various agencies.

II. Guidelines for steps to be taken at the international level

15. International action will be necessary to support the activities of countries in their endeavour to improve the housing situation of their poor and disadvantaged inhabitants. Such assistance should support national programmes and use know-how available locally and within the international community.

16. The goal of external assistance should be to enhance and support national capabilities to develop and implement national action components of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.

17. Mutual co-operation and exchange of information and expertise between developing countries in human settlement work stimulate and enrich national human settlement work.

18. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) will act as the co-ordinating agency in the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, on the basis of biennial plans to be drawn up with the involvement of experts working with Governments and the Centre at the regional and subregional levels.

19. As the co-ordinating agency for the Strategy, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) will stimulate international and national action by incorporating the Strategy in its future medium-term plans and biennial work programmes.

20. An inter-agency-level working arrangement will be made within the existing budget to provide continuous co-ordination of the Strategy.

21. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) will prepare a reporting format to facilitate monitoring by the Commission on Human Settlements of progress achieved in the implementation of the Global Strategy.

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/750/Add.3) without vote. 9 December (meeting 48); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.29), based on informal consultations on draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/43/8); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 2nd Committee 48, 49; plenary 83.

Human settlements and development

In response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(10) the Secretary-General reported in June 1988(11) on an overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, which included a section on human settlements. The report stated that increased investment in shelter, infrastructure and related services could be a major source of economic growth. Using inputs that were primarily domestic, it could provide a degree of insulation from external economic shocks and could be used to counter a recession.

The limited available evidence suggested a decline in average shelter conditions in the past decade, especially in the developing countries. In many cities, 40-50 per cent of the people lived in slums or squatter settlements. Approximately 1 billion people had housing of very poor quality, and that number might double by the year 2000. In recent years, rented housing had accounted for one quarter to two thirds of the housing market of large cities in the developing countries. It had increased in response to increases in land values that prevented squatting and inexpensive owner-occupancy. Local authorities were partly responsible for overcrowded conditions, particularly where they prohibited informal construction yet enforced rent controls that discouraged new, authorized construction.

On 11 April,(12) the Commission on Human Settlements requested the UNCHS Executive Director to prepare a report for the Commission's 1989 session on the Centre's contribution to international efforts towards sustainable development within the area of human settlements. The Commission invited Governments to provide the Executive Director with their views on how UNCHS might contribute to international efforts towards sustainable development. It further decided to consider in 1989 the issue of sustainable development as a follow-up to the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development within UNCHS.(13) It decided also to consider the formulation of priority items to be added to the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and to the medium-term plan for the period beginning 1992 resulting from the mandate of the Commission and UNCHS to contribute towards sustainable ecological, economic and social development.

Human settlements and political, economic and social issues

Use of the term "settlements"

The Commission on Human Settlements adopted on 12 April(14) a resolution on the use of the term "settlements" in relation to Israeli colonies in occupied territories. It recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution proposing that the term "Israeli colonies in occupied territories" be used instead of "Israeli settlements" in United Nations documentation.

Following informal consultations, the Assembly's Second Committee decided not to take action on the draft resolution.

Reconstruction of Palestinian homes

On 12 April,(15) the Commission called on the Israeli authorities in the occupied territories to cease the blowing up and destruction of Palestinians' houses, reiterated the right of Palestinians whose houses had been destroyed to rebuild and live in them again, and requested the UNCHS Executive Director, with other concerned United Nations bodies, to assist in their rebuilding.

Safeguarding human settlements against acts of war

The Commission, on 12 April,(16) adopted a resolution on safeguarding human settlements against acts of war and chemical warfare, urging Member States to respect international obligations regarding the protection of the civilian population and civilian objects, including human settlements, condemning the use of chemical weapons and urging that their use be stopped.

Situation between Iraq and Iran

On 12 April,(17) the Commission condemned aggression and the use of force to settle disputes, called on Iraq and Iran to respond to a 1987 Security Council resolution(18) and to end their conflict in accordance with international law, and confirmed that humanitarian co-operation between the peoples of the world required an atmosphere of peace.

Assistance to victims of apartheid

On 12 April,(19) the Commission condemned the apartheid régime in South Africa for its inhuman repression, forced removal of the African population from their homes, illegal occupation of Namibia and aggression against the front-line and other neighbouring States. It commended the UNCHS Executive Director for efforts to implement its 1987 resolution on apartheid, and also commended States members of the Organization of African Unity and other supporting members of the international community for their efforts against apartheid. It called on the international community to extend political and material support to the front-line States and material assistance to the displaced and homeless victims in the region.

UN programmes

Habitat Centre

The UNCHS work programme for 1988-1989 was based on eight subprogrammes: (21) policies and strategies, settlement planning, shelter and community services, indigenous construction sector, low-cost infrastructure, land, mobilization of financial resources, and institutions and management.

Under the first subprogramme, a publication entitled A New Agenda for Human Settlements was distributed. The UNCHS Executive Director established a task force and a steering committee to facilitate the Centre's work in connection with the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.

Under the second subprogramme, a paper on the relationship between urbanization and sustainable development was presented at the International Conference on Environment and Development (Milan, Italy, March). The second version of the UNCHS human settlements data base software was completed; it was reviewed at an international workshop on statistical data processing and data bases in developing countries (Geneva, 30 May-3 June). Research on rural settlements development continued with the Centre's participation in an international symposium on involuntary resettlement processes (Zagreb, Yugoslavia, 25-31 July).

The development of methodologies under the third subprogramme for community-based shelter and services improvements in urban low-income settlements generated practical experience for evolving shelter strategies, which in turn were incorporated in the Global Strategy for Shelter. UNCHS, supported by the Danish International Development Agency, offered support services to national and local authorities in strengthening their capacity to work with low-income communities on improving shelter and environment. Thirty-one participants from eight Asian countries took part in a workshop on housing in development, organized by UNCHS and the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven (Bangkok, Thailand, 21 January-5 February).

Under the fourth subprogramme, a number of technical publications were prepared, including data sheets on soil construction technology, a compendium on selected local building materials, a bibliography on earth construction technology and a report on development of the construction industry for delivery of low-income shelter and infrastructure. The Centre collaborated with the Economic Commission for Africa in formulating a project document for the establishment of pilot plants for building materials in 23 African countries. Several missions were undertaken: with the Agency for Technical Cooperation of the Federal Republic of Germany, to the Caribbean on the training of women in construction skills; to the National Housing Authority in Zambia on promoting local building materials; and to Chile, Poland, Singapore, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States to finalize a paper on the maintenance of buildings and infrastructure, financing and cost recovery.

A number of reports and publications were prepared under the fifth subprogramme, on new and renewable sources of energy, energy auditing in human settlement development, water supply and waste disposal.

Work continued under the sixth subprogramme on assessing the organizational and technical requirements for setting up and operating low-technology land-registration systems through local governments.

Research on human settlements financed under the seventh subprogramme focused on mobilizing public and private resources and efficiently channelling them. A trainers' manual on urban finance and management, containing a municipal finance and expenditure control software simulation model, was published by UNCHS and the World Bank's Economic Development Institute. The manual and software were tested during a trainers' workshop (Dakar, Senegal, May/June). A workshop on urban local government finance training for Latin American countries was held (Quito, Ecuador, November), as were two senior policy workshops on urban finance and management training in the African region during June, at Nairobi, Kenya, and Dakar.

Under the eighth subprogramme, case-studies were prepared on urban management practice in both intermediate cities and metropolitan areas in developing countries. A summary of training capabilities of selected training institutions in North Africa was distributed.

On 11 April, (22) the Commission on Human Settlements reconfirmed the role of UNDP's country programming as a framework for operational activities for development.

Financing

The UNCHS work programme was financed from the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. Extrabudgetary resources during 1988-1989⁽²³⁾ were expected from programme support income from the execution of projects financed by UNDP and trust funds ($4,994,000), a subvention from the World Food Programme ($248,000), programme support from the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme ($99,000) and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. Estimated income for the Foundation was $14.5 million.⁽²⁴⁾

The UNCHS Executive Director estimated that expenditures and commitments of the Foundation in 1990-1991 would total $11.2 million.⁽²⁵⁾ He also estimated carry-over income from 1988-1989 (including the reserve fund) of $4.4 million, as well as investment and miscellaneous income and savings from liquidation of prior years' obligations of $370,000.

On 21 December, by resolution 43/216, the General Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and report of the Board of Auditors regarding the Foundation for the biennium ended 31 December 1987.⁽²⁶⁾

Chapter X

Human rights

During 1988, the United Nations continued to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms world-wide and to curtail their violations.

Protection of detained persons was a substantial part of the United Nations work in human rights. In December, the General Assembly adopted the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment (resolution 43/173). The Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances continued to investigate cases of such violations, while the Working Group on Slavery, renamed the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, continued to examine issues related to slavery-like practices.

Work progressed on draft declarations concerning the unacknowledged detention of persons; freedom and non-discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own; independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors; the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms; the rights of indigenous peoples; and the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities.

There was also progress on the elaboration of a convention on the protection of the rights of migrant workers and their families, as well as on a draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care. Meanwhile, a draft convention on the rights of the child was adopted in first reading. Work also began on the elaboration of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aimed at abolishing the death penalty.

The Economic and Social Council decided in May that mandates of special rapporteurs on thematic issues should be for two years and that they should continue to report annually (decision 1988/129). The Council also recommended that the General Assembly proclaim an international year of the world's indigenous populations (resolution 1988/37).

In December, the Assembly launched a World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights (43/128) and adopted a resolution in commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (43/90). Activities continued under the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, and the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights became operational in 1988.

The Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session, held in February/March, examined situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries, as well as cases involving mercenaries and mass exoduses, and the implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights. Its deliberations resulted in the adoption of 78 resolutions and 7 decisions. Its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its fortieth session, held in August/September, adopted 40 resolutions and 13 decisions.

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

During 1988, United Nations efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989 put forward in 1984.⁽¹⁾ In 1987,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly approved a plan of activities for the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to an Economic and Social Council request of 1987,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in April 1988, his annual report with later addenda,⁽⁴⁾ summarizing activities undertaken or planned by Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to achieve the Decade's objectives. In response to an Assembly request of 1984,⁽⁵⁾ he submitted to the Council a report containing information received, as at 28 January, from 12 Governments on legislative, administrative and other measures they had taken to implement the Programme.⁽⁶⁾

As requested by the Assembly in 1987,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in September 1988,⁽⁷⁾ a report containing information on action taken by United Nations bodies, national legislation to combat racism and racial discrimination, seminars and training courses, the Trust Fund for the Programme of the Decade, and the plan of activities for the Second Decade. He noted that a training course on preparing national legislation prohibiting racism and racial discrimination had taken place in 1987⁽⁸⁾ and drew attention to his April 1988 report to the Council on the subject.⁽⁹⁾ On 24 May, by decision 1988/108, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the training course.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in September a report⁽¹⁰⁾ containing the views of three Governments, one specialized agency and one intergovernmental organization on his 1986 report on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination.⁽¹¹⁾

Also in September,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General gave an overview of texts submitted by 44 States for the global compilation of national legislation against racism and racial discrimination which the Assembly, in 1985, had requested him to compile and publish.⁽¹³⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 29 February,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission expressed concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983) had not been attained. It commended all States that had ratified or acceded to the international instruments relevant to the Decade and appealed to others to do the same. It urged co-operation from States and international organizations in implementing the plan of activities for 1985-1989 and appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade. Within the plan of activities for 1985-1989, the Commission selected as its topic for 1990 the human rights of individuals belonging to ethnic groups in countries of immigration. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare a handbook of recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination.

Also on 29 February,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution authorizing Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) to complete his 1987 study on assessing the achievements made and obstacles encountered during the first Decade,⁽⁸⁾ which the Council did by resolution 1988/32 (see below).

Sub-Commission action. On 25 August,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities endorsed the decision of its Special Rapporteur, Mr. Eide, to make a renewed call for additional information to complete the study and called on him to include in his final report, to be presented in 1989, recommendations on steps that could be taken by the Sub-Commission to prevent discrimination. It recommended that the Secretary-General convene a seminar on current manifestations of racism and their causes.

In September,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Special Rapporteur reported on the progress he had made on the study.

Other action. At its thirty-sixth session (Geneva, 1-12 August),⁽¹⁸⁾ the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) decided to revise and update its study on progress made towards achieving the objectives of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,⁽¹⁹⁾ which it had prepared in 1978 for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.⁽²⁰⁾ The Convention was adopted by the General Assembly in 1965⁽²¹⁾ and had been in force since 1969.⁽²²⁾

A global consultation (Geneva, 3-6 October 1988) considered the international challenge of racism; the origins of racism and racial discrimination; contemporary forms of racism; vulnerable groups and racism; and co-ordination and strengthening of international action against racism and racial discrimination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/91 without vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective set forth in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

2. Decides that the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, should continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and to intensify their efforts, during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

7. Again requests the Secretary-General to transmit his study on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination to Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council in order to obtain their views and an indication from them of further relevant materials, and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a final report on this topic;

tion for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination;

9. 13. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council contained in resolution 1988/6 of 24 May 1988 to organize in 1989 a seminar on cultural dialogue between the countries of origin and the host countries of migrant workers;

14. Emphasizes the importance of adequate recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination and therefore requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the results of the seminars held on this topic, to prepare and finalize, with the appropriate assistance of qualified experts if possible, a handbook of recourse procedures;

15. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination should receive equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Second Decade;

16. Affirms once again the need for the implementation of the plan of activities proposed for the period 1990-1993 contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 42/47;

17. Invites the Secretary-General to proceed without delay with the preparations for the activities scheduled for the biennium 1990-1991;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to accord the highest priority, in executing the plan of activities, to measures for combating apartheid

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord, in his reports, special attention to the situation of migrant workers and their families;

20. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations, in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate fully in the implementation of the plans of activities for the periods 1985-1989 and 1990-1993 by intensifying and broadening their efforts to bring about the speedy elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

21. Considers that voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are indispensable for the implementation of the above-mentioned programmes;

22. Notes with regret that the present situation of the Trust Fund is not encouraging;

23. Strongly appeals, therefore, to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions;

24. Reiterates its request to the Economic and Social Council, throughout the Second Decade, to submit annually to the General Assembly a report containing, inter alia:

(a) An enumeration of the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade: including the activities of Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations;

(b) A review and appraisal of those activities;

(c) Its suggestions and recommendations;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

26. Decides to keep the item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination" on its agenda throughout the Second Decade and to consider it as a matter of the highest priority at its forty-fourth session.

In August, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August.⁽²⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 43/95 without vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted since 1973, the most recent of which is resolution 41/104 of 4 December 1986,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force, on 3 December 1982, of the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals under article 14 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;
2. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;
3. Reaffirms once again its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions are necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;
4. Requests those States which have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto;
5. Calls upon the States parties to the Convention to consider the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report concerning the status of the Convention, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2106 A (XX) of 21 December 1965.

General Assembly resolution 43/95

8 December 1988 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/43/777) without vote, 27 October (meeting 23); 23-nation draft (A/C.3/43/L.8), amended by 12 nations (A/C.3/43/L.14): agenda item 91.

Sponsors of draft: Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Italy, Luxembourg, Morocco, New Zealand, Portugal, Rwanda, Spain, Yugoslavia.

Sponsors of amendments: Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 3rd Committee 4-14, 16, 23; plenary 75.

The Third Committee adopted amendments to the resolution⁽²⁵⁾ by a recorded vote of 80 to none, with 59 abstentions.

Implementation of the Convention

CERD activities. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held only one curtailed session in 1988, its thirty-sixth (Geneva, 1-12 August),⁽¹⁸⁾ owing to the non-payment of assessed contributions by a number of States parties over several years. Normally the Committee annually held two 3-week sessions.

Most of the Committee's work was devoted to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. After considering reports by 13 States under article 9 of the Convention, the Committee provided a summary of its members' views on each country report and of statements made by the States parties concerned.

In conformity with article 15 of the Convention, CERD considered documents related to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted to it by the Trusteeship Council (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) and by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Committee appointed the members of its three working groups-Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar; Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories; and African Territories-to examine the documents submitted under article 15 and to report on their findings. Due to its curtailed session, the Committee took note of the documents and postponed their consideration until its next session.

The Committee continued to consider, in conformity with article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Twelve of the States parties had declared such recognition-Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay. The text of the Committee's opinion on its sole communication was annexed to its report.

CERD also considered activities to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see above).

Concerning its critical financial situation, the Committee recommended a draft resolution by which the Assembly would have authorized the Secretary-General to ensure, on a temporary basis, the financing of the expenses of the members of the Committee from the United Nations regular budget until a more permanent solution was found. The twelfth meeting of States parties (New York, 15 January 1988) had recommended that, as an exceptional measure pending resolution of the current financial difficulties, the Committee hold one session in 1988, extended if possible, and, if the situation remained unchanged, one similar session in 1989. The Secretary-General reported that, as at 1 September 1988, the total of outstanding assessments and arrears amounted to $149,328.⁽²⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/96 without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and resolution 41/104 of 4 December 1986 on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Reiterating the importance of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which is the most widely accepted human rights instrument adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Welcoming the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-sixth session,

Reiterating once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially the elimination of the system of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia,

Emphasising the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures in order to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling the urgent appeals made by the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, the eleventh and twelfth meetings of States parties to the Convention and the Committee itself to the States parties to honour their financial obligation under the Convention,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the members of the Committee to explore ways and means to overcome the Committee's current financial crisis,

Gravely concerned that, despite those appeals and other efforts, the meeting schedule of the Committee has been interrupted and the proper functioning of the Committee continues to deteriorate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the question of financing the expenses of the members of the Committee,

1. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, which led to the cancellation of the February/March 1988 session and the curtailment by one week of the August 1988 session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

2. Expresses once again its concern that such a situation led to further delay in discharging the substantive obligations of the Committee under the Convention;

3. Commends the Committee for its work with regard to the implementation of the Convention and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-sixth session;

5. Culls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention and to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention;

6. Notes with appreciation the measures taken by the Committee with a view to improving the reporting procedure and streamlining its own method of examination of reports submitted by States parties;

7. Strongly appeals to all States parties to fulfil their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention and to pay their outstanding contributions and, if possible, their contributions for 1989 before

1 February 1989 so as to enable the Committee to meet regularly;

8. Endorses the decision taken at the twelfth meeting of States parties to the Convention that, as an exceptional measure, pending resolution of its current financial difficulties, the Committee should hold one extended session if possible in 1989;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to ensure, if possible, that the Committee holds its regular session in 1989 for at least three weeks;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the financial situation of the Committee and possible administrative and legal measures for improving the situation facing the Committee;

11. Decides to consider the report at its 'forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of racial discrimination"."

Measures against nazism

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(27) the Commission urged all States to ensure full international co-operation for the prosecution and just punishment of those who had committed war crimes and crimes against humanity, preferably in the place where they committed their deeds.

On 10 March,(28) the Commission resolutely condemned all totalitarian or other ideologies, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness, intolerance, hatred or terror, and called on Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental and international non-governmental organizations to intensify measures against all such ideologies and practices. It further called on Governments to educate youth against those ideologies and practices. States were asked to ensure the thorough investigation, detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of crimes against humanity who had not been brought before a court and appropriately punished.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1986,(29) the Secretary-General, in April 1988, summarized comments of 15 Governments and two specialized agencies on measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideology and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror.(30) By decision 1988/145 of 27 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

In an earlier report,(31) the Secretary-General summarized action he had taken on the subject, as well as action by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, since 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/150 without vote.

Measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on apartheid, racial discrimination and racism, and the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms
The General Assembly,

Recalling that the United Nations emerged from the struggle against nazism, fascism, totalitarian ideologies and régimes, aggression and foreign occupation, and that the peoples expressed their resolve in the Charter of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Aware of the determination proclaimed by the peoples of the world in the Charter to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Noting with regret that in the contemporary world there continue to exist various forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices which entail contempt for the individual or a denial of the intrinsic dignity and equality of all human beings and of equality of opportunity in the civil, political, economic, social and cultural spheres, including the practices of apartheid, racial discrimination and racism,

Emphasizing that the doctrines of political, racial or ethnic superiority on which the totalitarian entities and régimes are based contradict the spirit and principles of the United Nations and that the application of such doctrines in practice leads to wars, mass and flagrant violations of human rights and crimes against humanity, such as genocide, and creates serious obstacles to friendly relations among nations and the development of all countries,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the fact that many States have established legal provisions designed to prevent the revival of Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist groups and organizations and are extraditing war criminals and persons having committed crimes against mankind,

Mindful of the principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, set forth in its resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973,

Reaffirming that the prosecution and punishment of war crimes and crimes against peace and humanity, as laid down in its resolutions 3(I) of 13 February 1946 and 95(I) of 11 December 1946, constitute a universal commitment for all States,

Recalling its resolutions 2331(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2438(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2545(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2713(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2839(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 34/24 of 15 November 1979, 35/200 of 15 December 1980, 36/162 of 16 December 1981, 37/179 of 17 December 1982, 38/99 of 16 December 1983, 39/114 of 14 December 1984, 40/148 of 13 December 1985 and 41/160 of 4 December 1986,

1. Again resolution condemns all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, that are based on apartheid, racial discrimination and racism, and the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences;

2. Expresses its determination to resist all totalitarian ideologies, and especially their practices, which deprive people of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and of equality of opportunity;

3. Calls upon all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the thorough investigation, detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of crimes against humanity who have not yet been brought before a court and appropriately punished;

4. Also calls upon all Governments to pay constant attention to educating the young in the spirit of respect for international law and fundamental human rights and freedoms and against Fascist, neo-Fascist and other totalitarian ideologies and practices based on terror, hatred and violence;

5. Further calls upon all States, in accordance with the basic principles of international law, to refrain from practices aimed at the violation of basic human rights, particularly the right to self-determination;

6. Appeals to States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

7. Invites all States and international organizations to submit to the Secretary-General their comments and information on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session in the light of the discussion that will take place in the Commission on Human Rights and on the basis of comments provided by States and international organizations.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious freedom

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1987,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in 1988 an addendum⁽³³⁾ to the 1986 compendium of national legislation and regulations on freedom of religion or belief, highlighting measures taken to combat intolerance or discrimination.⁽³⁴⁾ The addendum contained the legislative and regulatory texts of 22 countries.

Also in response to the Commission's request,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the views of 14 States on the contribution that might be made by an international instrument to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief.⁽³⁵⁾

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January, (36)Special Rapporteur Angelo Vidal D'Ameida Ribeiro (Portugal), appointed in 1986,(37) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report containing a summary of replies from Governments regarding alleged infringements of the provisions of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,(38) received from various sources. An analysis of information collected by the Special Rapporteur pointed to the persistence of incidents and measures inconsistent with the provisions of the Declaration.

He recommended drawing up an international convention on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief and establishing, within the Commission, an open-ended working group to consider a draft convention on freedom of religion and belief. States were urged to facilitate the formulation of international standards and to adapt their legislation to that of existing international norms, calling on United Nations bodies for technical assistance in drafting new legislative provisions. The Special Rapporteur outlined a series of measures for States to prevent and eliminate discrimination based on religion or belief, including bilateral and multilateral action. He noted that NGOs concerned with human rights and religious communities could play an important role in promoting and protecting religious tolerance and in giving widespread publicity to the relevant existing international standards.

Human Rights Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1987,(39) the Commission continued in 1988 to consider measures to implement the 1981 Declaration. On 8 March,(40) it extended its Special Rapporteur's mandate for two years and asked the Secretary-General to provide him with the assistance required. It called on Governments which had not done so to co-operate with him. The Commission urged States, in accordance with their own constitutional system and relevant international instruments, to provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to take measures to combat intolerance and encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief. It considered it desirable to enhance United Nations promotional activities relating to freedom of religion or belief and asked the Secretary-General to accord high priority to disseminating the text of the 1981 Declaration and to publish and widely distribute the 1987 study on the dimensions of the problems of intolerance and of discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief⁽³²⁾ prepared by the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur, Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica). The United Nations University (UNU) and other academic and research institutions were invited to undertake studies on how to achieve such understanding. The Sub-Commission was asked to compile provisions relating to the elimination of intolerance based on religion contained in the 1981 Declaration and other international instruments, and to examine the issues that should be considered prior to drafting a further international instrument on the issue. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of its resolution in 1989.

The Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for two years and its request to the Secretary-General to provide him with all the assistance he required was approved on 27 May by Economic and Social Council decision 1988/142.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(41) the Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission consider establishing a pre-sessional, open-ended working group to draft an international instrument on freedom of religion or belief immediately after the mandate of the working group to draft a convention on the rights of the child had ended.

On the same date,(42) the Sub-Commission, noting the Commission's requests of 8 March (see above),(40) requested Theo van Boven (Netherlands) to prepare a working paper to assist the Sub-Commission in carrying out its task.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/108 without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance, nation of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 42/97 of 7 December 1987, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Encouraged by the efforts being made by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study relevant developments affecting the implementation of the Declaration,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/55 of 8 March 1988 and Economic and Social Council decision 1988/142 of 27 May 1988, whereby the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate was extended for two years,

Noting with satisfaction that the Commission on Human Rights decided, by that resolution, that the study of the current dimensions of the problems of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities should be published in all official languages of the United Nations and should be widely distributed, and that the Sub-Commission has been invited to continue its in-depth consideration of the issue and to report to the Commission at its forty-fifth session,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief,

Seriously concerned that intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief continue to exist in many parts of the world,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirm that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a right guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and with such internationally accepted instruments as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief to provide, where they have not already done so, adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there is intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Urges all States to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and, in this context, to examine where necessary the supervision and training of their civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, they respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

4. Invites the United Nations University and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, in all the official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

7. Requests the Secretary-General in this context to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the implementation of the Declaration and in its dissemination in national and local languages;

8. Urges all States to consider disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in national and local languages;

9. Welcomes the renewal for two years of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

10. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights also intends to consider at its forty-fifth session the question of a binding international instrument in this field and emphasizes, in this connection, the relevance of General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 entitled "Setting international standards in the field of human rights";

11. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance" and to consider the report of the Commission on Human Rights under that item.

Indigenous populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁴³⁾ the Commission urged the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations to intensify its efforts to elaborate international standards to promote and protect the human rights of such populations. It appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see below).

Also on 8 March,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution on the promotion of indigenous peoples' rights, which the Council adopted as resolution 1988/35 (see below).

On 9 March,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Commission recommended that the Council authorize the appointment of Miguel Alfonso Martinez (Cuba) as the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur to prepare an outline on the possible purposes, scope and sources of a study on the potential utility of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between indigenous populations and Governments to ensure the promotion and protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations, which the Council did by decision 1988/134 of 27 May. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to pay particular attention to the ongoing development of universally relevant standards and the need to develop innovative, forward-looking approaches to relationships between indigenous populations and Governments and to submit the outline to the Sub-Commission for consideration by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in 1988 (see below), together with views expressed by Governments and other parties interested in the study. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution, the outline and the deliberations of the Sub-Commission thereon to the attention of Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs, with a view to obtaining comments before the Commission's 1989 session.

Working Group activities. At its sixth session (Geneva, 1-5 August 1988), the Working Group on Indigenous Populations⁽⁴⁶⁾ reviewed developments on the protection of the rights of indigenous populations and discussed the evolution of standards concerning indigenous rights. Special Rapporteur Martinez presented an outline of his study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations,⁽⁴⁷⁾ which the Group endorsed. The Group recommended to the Sub-Commission that it recommend full authorization from the Economic and Social Council in 1989 for the Special Rapporteur to proceed with the study, which the Sub-Commission did on 1 September.⁽⁴⁸⁾ Documents and other written statements submitted to the Group were contained in an addendum to the Group's report.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure that participation in the seminar on social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States, and any future seminars or meetings of experts on indigenous rights, included representation of indigenous peoples' organizations. It recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution recommending that the Secretary-General consider including courses and seminars for indigenous peoples and other vulnerable groups in the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights.

On the same date,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Sub-Commission suggested that the Secretary-General organize during the first half of 1991 a meeting of experts to review national experience in the operation of schemes of local, internal self-government for indigenous populations as part of the plan of activities to be implemented during the second half of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, approved by the General Assembly in 1987.⁽²⁾ It also decided to invite the Working Group on Indigenous Populations to discuss in 1989 the possible programme and agenda of such a meeting.

Also on 1 September,⁽⁵²⁾ the Sub-Commission delegated two of its members to prepare a summary of information on the relocation of Hopi and Navajo families, for submission in 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/35 without vote.

Study of the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/48 of 8 March 1988.

Recalling the final report of Mr. J. R. Martinez Cobo, Special Rapporteur on the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations, in which he recommended the organization of international seminars under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights,

Recalling also the recommendations of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in particular those relating to the protection of indigenous rights and to the use of education and the mass media to combat racial discrimination,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to include the recognition and promotion of the rights of indigenous peoples in future United Nations activities under the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and to invite representatives of indigenous nations, peoples and communities, including non-governmental organizations, to participate in the planning and implementation of these activities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to organize in 1988, as part of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, a seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on the social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States;

3. Encourages all States to ensure that educational and informational activities, including national celebrations, give an accurate interpretation of history and do not perpetuate or justify theories of racial superiority or the subjugation of indigenous or other peoples.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/35

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1998/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

Other action. The seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States, scheduled for 1988, did not take place until 1989.

Draft declaration

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁴³⁾ the Commission encouraged Governments and indigenous organizations and communities to review the preliminary draft principles on rights of indigenous populations presented by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in 1987.⁽⁵³⁾

Also on 8 March,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution, the text of which the Council adopted as resolution 1988/36 (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/36 without vote.

Draft declaration of principles on the rights of indigenous populations

The Economic and Social Council

1. Requests the Chairman/Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mrs. Erica-Irene Daes, to prepare a working paper containing a set of principles and preambular paragraphs for inclusion in a draft declaration of principles on the rights of indigenous populations, for consideration by the Working Group at its sixth session, in 1988;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Chairman/Rapporteur in the completion of this task.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/36

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

Working Group activities. In August,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Working Group on Indigenous Populations had before it a working paper prepared by its Chairman/Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), containing a set of draft preambular paragraphs and principles for insertion into a universal declaration on indigenous rights.⁽⁵⁵⁾ The 14 draft principles in preliminary wording already adopted by the Working Group in 1987⁽⁵³⁾, were maintained, with a few minor changes and additions and in a different order. The Working Group recommended that the Sub-Commission ask Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to submit written observations and suggestions for the draft prior to 31 January 1989 and that the Chairman/Rapporteur prepare a first revised text of the draft based on those observations and suggestions and on comments made by the Group.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission adopted the recommendations of the Working Group and asked the Secretary-General to give it all necessary assistance.

International Year of Indigenous Populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Commission recommended a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, which adopted it as resolution 1988/37 (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/37 without vote.

Proposal to proclaim an international year of the world's indigenous populations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1982/34 of 7 May 1982, by which it authorized the establishment of a working group on indigenous populations with the mandate to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations, giving special attention to the evolution of standards,

Recalling also its resolution 1986/34 of 23 May 1986,

Noting that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1987/16 of 2 September 1987, endorsed the recommendation that the Working Group on Indigenous Populations should make every effort to complete a draft declaration on indigenous rights as soon as possible,

Conscious of the continuing struggle of indigenous populations throughout the world to enjoy their inalienable human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recommends that the General Assembly should, at an appropriate time, proclaim an international year of the world's indigenous populations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/37

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations, in August,(46) recommended to the Sub-Commission that an international year of the world's indigenous populations, originally scheduled by the Working Group and the Sub-Commission for 1992,(53) be held in 1993 to coincide with the end of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(58) the Sub-Commission adopted the Working Group's recommendation and asked the Secretary-General to bring the matter to the attention of the General Assembly.

UN Voluntary Fund for indigenous Populations

In an October report,(59) the Secretary-General stated that a total of $124,568 in contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations had been received from seven Governments as at 1 October 1988. In addition, two NGOs, one based in Canada and the other in Japan, had contributed $814.81 and $755, respectively. The Fund's Board of Trustees held its first session (Geneva, April), at which it examined requests for financial assistance for 86 indigenous representatives. Of those requests, 27 travel and subsistence grants were awarded to beneficiaries from 19 countries to participate in the 1988 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations.

The General Assembly, by decision 43/427 of 8 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report and called on Governments, NGOs and representatives of indigenous groups to consider contributing to the Fund and to disseminate information about its activities. It asked the Secretary-General to report on the Fund's status in 1990.

Migrant workers

Draft convention

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 10 March,(60) welcomed the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established by the General Assembly in 1979,(61) on the second reading of the draft convention. It invited Member States to continue co-operating with the Working Group, reiterated its hope for a completion of the convention as soon as possible and asked the Secretary-General to report on further progress in 1989.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families held its seventh inter-sessional meeting from 31 May to 10 June(62) and its ninth session from 27 September to 7 October,(63) both in New York.

At those meetings, the Group adopted in second reading articles 51-55 of part IV, on other rights of migrant workers and members of their families in a regular situation; articles 57-62 of part V, on provisions applicable to particular categories of migrant workers and their families; one unnumbered article under part VIII, dealing with general provisions; articles 63-69 bis of part VI, on the promotion of sound, equitable and humane conditions in connection with lawful international migration of workers and their families; and articles 70-72 of part VII, on the application of the convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/146 by recorded vote.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling its resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979, in which it decided to establish a working group open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/198 of 15 December 1980, 36/160 of 16 December 1981, 37/170 of 17 December 1982, 38/86 of 16 December 1983, 39/102 of 14 December 1984, 40/130 of 13 December 1985, 41/151 of 4 December 1986 and 42/140 of 7 December 1987, in which it renewed the mandate of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and requested it to continue its work,

Having examined the progress made by the Working Group at its seventh inter-sessional meeting, held from

31 May to 10 June 1988, and at the current session of the General Assembly, from 27 September to 7 October 1988, during which the Working Group continued with the second reading of the draft convention,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the two most recent reports of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and, in particular, of the progress made by the Working Group on the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention;

2. Decides that, in order to enable it to complete its task as soon as possible, the Working Group shall again hold an inter-sessional meeting of two weeks' duration in New York, immediately after the first regular session of 1989 of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments the two most recent reports of the Working Group so as to enable the members of the Working Group to continue the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention during the inter-sessional meeting to be held in the spring of 1989, as well as to transmit the results obtained at that meeting to the General Assembly for consideration during its forty-fourth session;

4. Also invites the Secretary-General to transmit the above-mentioned documents to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the international organizations concerned, for their information, so as to enable them to continue their co-operation with the Working Group;

5. Decides that the Working Group shall meet during the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly, preferably at the beginning of the session, to conclude, if possible, the second reading of the draft international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to do everything possible to ensure adequate Secretariat services for the Working Group for the timely fulfilment of its mandate, both at its inter-sessional meeting to be held after the first regular session of 1989 of the Economic and Social Council and during the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly.

Protection of minorities

As in previous years, the Commission on Human Rights set up an informal open-ended working group to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. The group, which held five meetings on 10, 11, 16 and 18 February and 8 March, adopted provisionally in first reading draft article 3 and considered draft articles 4 and 5. Annexed to the group's report⁽⁶⁴⁾ were the texts of articles 1-3, on which preliminary agreement had been reached, proposals relating to articles 4-6 for consideration by the group and written proposals submitted by Bulgaria and the USSR on preambular paragraphs 4 and 5 and article 4.

On 9 March,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Commission decided to set up another working group in 1989 to continue consideration of the draft declaration and asked the Secretary-General to provide the group with the assistance it needed.

On 1 September,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission invited one of its members to prepare a working paper on possible ways and means to facilitate the peaceful and constructive resolution of situations involving racial, national, religious and linguistic minorities and asked the Secretary-General to provide the assistance needed to complete the task.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

On 1 September,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission decided that one of its members should be asked to prepare, and submit in 1989, a concise note setting forth methods by which a study could be made on the problem of discrimination against persons infected with the human immunodeficiency virus or suffering from the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1988,⁽¹⁾ the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽²⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽³⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 87 and 43 States, respectively. No States became parties to the Covenant during 1988, but the Gambia, Hungary and Togo acceded to the Optional Protocol, and the Gambia made the declaration under article 41 of the Covenant recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee to consider claims that a State party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant.

In his report to the Assembly on the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Protocol as at 31 July 1988 (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocol and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41. A similar appeal was made by the Assembly later in the year, by resolution 43/114. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide technical assistance to States not parties to the Covenant with a view to assisting them to ratify or accede to it and to report in 1989 on the status of the Covenant and its Protocol.

Also on 7 March, the Commission decided to consider in 1989 the elaboration of a second optional protocol to the Covenant aimed at abolishing the death penalty, and asked the Secretary-General to inform the Assembly of its decision.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission transmitted to the Commission an analysis concerning the elaboration of a second optional protocol, presented by its Special Rapporteur in 1987.⁽⁸⁾

Implementation

The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1988: the thirty-second in New York from 21 March to 8 April; and the thirty-third from 11 to 29 July and the thirty-fourth from 24 October to 11 November, both at Geneva.⁽¹⁰⁾

At those sessions, the Committee considered reports from 13 States (Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Central African Republic, Colombia, Ecuador, France, Guinea, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, United Kingdom) under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on six communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated. Those cases concerned the Netherlands, Peru (2), Sweden (2) and Uruguay. The Committee decided that 11 other such cases were inadmissible.

On 23 March, the Committee adopted its general comment on article 17 of the Covenant, which provided for the right of every person to be protected against arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, as well as against unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation. General comments were intended to assist States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and to promote implementation of the Covenant. In accordance with a 1985 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General, by a 12 April note, transmitted the Committee's general comments to the Council.

Taking note of the Committee's report, the Assembly, in resolution 43/114, urged those parties that had not submitted their reports under article 40 to do so.

States of emergency

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission requested its Sub-Commission to continue to give attention to states of siege or emergency.

The Commission,⁽⁵⁾ as did the Assembly by resolution 43/114, underlined the importance of strict observation of the agreed condition and procedure for derogation under article 4 of the Covenant, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency in order to assess the justification and appropriateness of measures taken.

Report of the Special Rapporteur and Sub-Commission action. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1985, Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) submitted in July 1988 the second annual report containing information on four States, which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency.⁽¹⁵⁾ The first annual report was issued in 1987.⁽¹⁶⁾ The Special Rapporteur made recommendations on: model legal provisions applicable in emergency situations; the effect of states of emergency on human rights; the protection of persons likely to be most affected by a state of emergency; undeclared states of emergency; government co-operation with human rights organizations; limits to the imposition of states of emergency; and training for officials responsible for declaring, promulgating, disseminating and communicating relevant orders. Annexed to his report were the texts of norms of international law applicable to states of emergency communicated to the Special Rapporteur and a dated list of replies received from Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. In a later report,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Special Rapporteur provided updated information, as requested by the Sub-Commission on 1 September.⁽¹⁸⁾

Self-determination of peoples

Human Rights Commission action. By five resolutions adopted in 1988, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination for the people of Afghanistan,⁽¹⁹⁾ Kampuchea,⁽²⁰⁾ Palestine,⁽²¹⁾ South Africa and Namibia⁽²²⁾ and Western Sahara.⁽²³⁾ A sixth resolution adopted under the agenda item pertained to the use of mercenaries to impede the right of peoples to self-determination.⁽²⁴⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly requests of 1987,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1988 report with later addendum⁽²⁶⁾ summarizing action taken in 1988 on the right of peoples to self-determination and on the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council. The report presented the views of nine Governments, five United Nations bodies, three specialized agencies and five NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As in previous years, the General Assembly adopted in 1988 two resolutions on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see PART FOUR, Chapter I). On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, it adopted resolution 43/105 without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned about the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third and forty-fourth sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986 and 42/94 of 7 December 1987,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

Taking note also of the statement issued on 29 September 1988 by the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the members of the Council, in which he expressed their concern that so long after the adoption of Council resolution 435(1978) the Namibian people had not yet attained their self-determination and independence and strongly urged South Africa to comply forthwith with the resolutions and decisions of the Council, in particular resolution 435(1978), and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in its immediate, full and definitive implementation,

Considering that the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, sovereignty, independence and return to Palestine and the brutal suppression by the Israeli forces of the heroic uprising, the intifadah, of the Palestinian population in the occupied territories, as well as the repeated Israeli aggression against the population of the region, constitute a serious threat to international peace and security,

On 22 February,(19) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 6 abstentions, reaffirmed its profound concern that the people of Afghanistan continued to be denied their right to self-determination, to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint. It called for a political settlement based on the withdrawal of foreign troops, full respect for Afghanistan's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status, and strict observance of the principle of non-interference. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue searching for a political solution, urged all concerned to continue co-operating with him and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), to alleviate the hardship of Afghan refugees.

Kampuchea

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 31 to 7, with 3 abstentions, the Commission, on 22 February,⁽²⁰⁾ reiterated its condemnation of persistent gross violations of human rights in Kampuchea and reaffirmed that the continued illegal occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived Kampucheans of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary human rights violation in that country. It emphasized that the withdrawal of all foreign forces, restoration of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognition of the Kampucheans' right to self-determination and the commitment by all States to non-interference in its internal affairs were essential for a solution to the Kampuchean problem. The Commission reaffirmed its call for an end to hostilities and an immediate withdrawal of foreign forces, to enable Kampucheans to exercise their fundamental rights free from foreign interference, to determine their future through free and fair elections under United Nations supervision, to make possible the return of all refugees and to allow for efforts towards a political solution within the framework of the 1981 Declaration on Kampuchea.⁽²⁷⁾ The Secretary-General was asked urgently to intensify efforts towards a political settlement and restoration of human rights in Kampuchea. The Commission noted the 1987 report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea⁽²⁸⁾ and asked it to continue its work. ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1988/143 by recorded vote.

Right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council fully endorsed Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/6 of 22 February 1988, by which the Commission, inter alia, reaffirmed that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived the people of Kampuchea of the exercise of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary violation of human rights in that country at the current time. The Council reaffirmed its decisions 1981/154 of 8 May 1981, 1982/143 of 7 May 1982, 1983/155 of 27 May 1983, 1984/148 of 24 May 1984, 1985/155 of 30 May 1985, 1986/146 of 23 May 1986 and 1987/155 of 29 May 1987 and reiterated its call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea in order to allow the people of Kampuchea to exercise their fundamental freedoms and human rights, including the right to self-determination as contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 July 1981 and in General Assembly resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983, 39/5 of 30 October 1984, 40/7 of 5 November 1985, 41/6 of 21 October 1986 and 42/3 of 14 October 1987.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the unresolved dilemma of the approximately 292,000 Kampuchean civilians still stranded in Thailand as a result of the armed attacks by the foreign forces in Kampuchea on the Kampuchean civilian encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border since 1984. In that connection, the Council recalled the statements made by the Secretary-General on 27 December 1984 and 13 March 1985, in which, inter alia, he appealed to all concerned to avoid endangering the lives of those Kampuchean civilians and adding to the misery and deprivation that already afflicted those most unfortunate people.

The Council also expressed its grave concern at the continued violation of human rights by the foreign occupying force in Kampuchea of Kampuchean nationals in their homeland, as well as of innocent Kampuchean displaced persons seeking temporary shelter in encampments along the border.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council any further violations of humanitarian principles perpetrated against Kampuchean civilian refugees by the foreign occupying troops along the border, and also requested him to continue to monitor closely the developments in Kampuchea and to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem and the restoration of fundamental human rights there.

The Council recalled the communiqués issued by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 January and 15 February 1985. The Council noted the visits undertaken by the Chairman and members of the Committee to a number of countries in 1987 in an effort to find a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem. The Council also noted with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the Committee and requested that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference.

Palestinians

By a resolution of 22 February,⁽²¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 30 to 4, with 8 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel for its continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories and called on it to withdraw, in compliance with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. It reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, to regain their rights in accordance with the Charter and United Nations resolutions, and to return to their homes and property. The Commission reaffirmed the right of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, to participate fully in all efforts concerning the question of Palestine. Reaffirming its support for an international peace conference on the Middle East, the Commission expressed deep regret at the negative attitude of some States towards the conference. States, United Nations bodies and other international organizations were urged to support the Palestinians, through PLO, in the struggle to restore their rights. The Secretary-General was requested to make available to the Commission, prior to its 1989 session, all information pertaining to the implementation of its resolution and to transmit the resolution to Israel.

South Africa and Namibia

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, by a 29 February resolution adopted by a roll-call vote of 33 to 3, with 7 abstentions, (22) called on States to take steps to enable the people of South Africa and Namibia to exercise fully and without further delay their right to self-determination and independence. It reaffirmed the right of Namibians to self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle and that of the oppressed people of South Africa by all means, including armed struggle. It urged all States to assist them and called for the full implementation of the 1986 Paris (29) and Vienna Declarations⁽³⁰⁾ and the Programme of Action adopted in the same year by the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia.⁽³⁰⁾ The Commission rejected the so-called "constitutional initiative", including the "statutory council". Condemning South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization against front-line and other neighbouring States, it demanded the imposition of mandatory sanctions against South Africa. The Commission also condemned: the policy of bantustanization; the illegal occupation of Namibia and South Africa's attempts to dismember its territory; and censorship and other restrictions imposed on the media. It demanded the immediate release of all people detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and that South Africa end its acts of aggression and withdraw its occupation forces from Angola.

In a related resolution,⁽³¹⁾ the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed people of Namibia to self-determination and independence and reiterated that that right could be exercised by the Namibians only in accordance with conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978.⁽³²⁾

Sub-Commission action. On 25 August,⁽³³⁾ the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to make available, through the Centre for Human Rights, to the authorities of the new Constituent Assembly of Namibia, when it was duly constituted, such human rights advisory services as they might require and expressed its willingness to assist them. On the same date,⁽³⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission appealed to the international community to assist concerned parties in their efforts to bring about the independence of Namibia, in accordance with a 1978 Security Council resolution.⁽³⁵⁾

(For human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, see below, under "Human rights violations". For details on the situation in Namibia, see PART FOUR, Chapter III.)

Western Sahara

On 22 February,⁽²³⁾ by a roll-call vote of 27 to none, with 15 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization to be completed through the exercise of the people's right to self-determination and independence. It also reaffirmed that a political solution lay in the implementation of a 1983 OAU resolution quoted in a General Assembly resolution.⁽³⁶⁾ It joined in the Assembly's appeal to the parties to the conflict to display the political will to implement that resolution, as well as others adopted in 1985,⁽³⁷⁾ 1986⁽³⁸⁾ and 1987⁽³⁹⁾ The Commission took note of a joint decision of the OAU Chairman and the United Nations Secretary-General to send a mission to Western Sahara to collect relevant technical information to assist them in discharging the mandate entrusted to them by the Assembly in those resolutions. It again requested the parties to the conflict, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to negotiate directly with a view to bringing about a cease-fire and creating conditions for a referendum for self-determination.

Mercenaries

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 11, with 1 abstention, condemned the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries and urged all States to prohibit such activities. It denounced any State that persisted in recruiting mercenaries and providing facilities for launching armed aggression against other States, and called on all States to ensure, by administrative and legislative measures, that States, territories under their control and their nationals were not used for mercenarism. Taking note of the Special Rapporteur's report (see below), the Commission decided to continue his mandate for another year so that he might submit further conclusions and recommendations. It asked him to: develop further the position that mercenarism violated human rights and thwarted the self-determination of peoples; strengthen his co-operation and co-ordination with concerned bodies of the United Nations system; study credible and reliable reports of mercenary activity in African and other developing countries; and to submit in 1989 a report to the Commission and a preliminary report to the General Assembly. All Governments were urged to facilitate the Special Rapporteur's task and to invite him to conduct on-site visits where appropriate. The Secretary-General was asked to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur and to appeal to Governments to assist him in the performance of his duties. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council ensure the necessary financial resources and staff to implement its resolution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1988/126 by recorded vote.

Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/7 of 22 February 1988, approved the decision of the Commission to continue for another year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to examine the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination in order to enable him to submit further conclusions and recommendations to the Commission, and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur, including the necessary financial resources and sufficient staff.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,(40) the Secretary-General, on 3 October 1988,(41) transmitted a report prepared by Special Rapporteur Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru). The report reviewed the history of mercenarism, drawing attention to mercenary practices affecting the right of peoples to self-determination. It presented information on the international handling of complaints, the current state of international law on the subject, the instruments in force concerning mercenarism and the work of the United Nations Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries (see PART FIVE, Chapter II). The report discussed complaints received relating to mercenary activities and the legislative provisions enacted by some States to combat and punish mercenary practices. The report contained a typology of mercenary activities and analysed the definition of "mercenary". It concluded, among other things, that mercenary practices had increased, had spread from Africa to other continents and had become a complex phenomenon. It further concluded that the main areas of mercenary activity were in southern Africa and Central America and recommended further investigation of complaints received concerning those areas.

The Secretary-General, on 21 October, transmitted the Special Rapporteur's preliminary report to the General Assembly.(42) The Special Rapporteur described his visit to Angola in August at the invitation of the Government, where he met with government officials, members of the South West Africa People's Organization and the African National Congress of South Africa regarding the alleged presence of mercenaries in Angola, supported by the Government of South Africa. He recommended the adoption of policies to penalize mercenary activities, support for the Ad Hoc Committee, reiteration by the Assembly of its condemnation of the practice, and the thorough investigation of complaints of mercenary practices in southern and south-west Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/107 by recorded vote.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need for strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, as well as scrupulous respect for the principle of the non-use or threat of the use of force in international relations, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples and their liberation movements for their independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign intervention and occupation, and that their legitimate struggle can in no way be considered as or equated to mercenary activity,

Deeply concerned about the increasing menace that the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African, Central American and other developing States,

Recognizing that the use of mercenaries is a threat to international peace and security,

Recognizing also that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impede the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions, particularly resolution 42/96 of 7 December 1987, in which it denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 239(1967) of 10 July 1967, 405(1977) of 14 April 1977, 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, 496(1981) of 15 December 1981 and 507(1982) of 28 May 1982, in which the Council, inter alia, condemned any State that persisted in permitting or tolerating the recruitment of mercenaries, and the provision of facilities to them, with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations,

Welcoming Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/7 of 22 February 1988, in which the Commission condemned the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries,

Reaffirming its decision, in its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, to accord priority to the search for solutions to the mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and persons affected by situations such as those resulting, inter alia, from aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the convention adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977, condemning and outlawing the use of mercenaries and its adverse effects on the independence and territorial integrity of African States,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Condemns the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of southern Africa and Central America and of other developing States and fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

2. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its increasing use of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements and for the destabilization of the Governments of southern African States;

3. Denounces any State that persists in the recruitment, or permits or tolerates the recruitment, of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

4. Calls upon all States to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or the planning of such activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to tight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention and occupation for their independence, territorial integrity and national unity;

5. Urges all States to take the necessary measures under their respective domestic laws to prohibit the recruitment, financing, training and transit of mercenaries on their territory;

6. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

7. Considers it inadmissible to use channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries;

8. Welcomes the provisions of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/7 aimed at giving the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries the full opportunity to carry out his mandate most effectively;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his reports and especially for his preliminary conclusions and recommendations;

10. Decides to examine at its forty-fourth session the question of the use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights";

11. Emphasizes the importance of having the Special Rapporteur present his report during the consideration of the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights", and requests the Secretary-General to make the same report available to the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, for its information,

Rights of detained persons

Administration of justice

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission urged its Sub-Commission to pursue consideration of the issue of independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, based on a 1985 report of the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur.⁽⁴⁴⁾ It requested the Sub-Commission to continue to give attention to the question of a declaration against the unacknowledged detention of persons. The Commission also called on its special rapporteurs and working groups to give attention to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice, particularly the unacknowledged detention of persons, and asked the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources to ensure close co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs. It also asked him to continue to assist States, at their request, in implementing existing international human rights standards in the administration of justice.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General presented to the Sub-Commission in June succinct information on the work of the Human Rights Committee and CERD, developments elsewhere in the human rights programme, and activities within the United Nations programme on crime prevention and control related to the rights of persons detained or imprisoned. The Secretary-General covered extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions; safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty; the report of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see below); torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the draft body of principles for the protection of persons under any form of detention; preparation for the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see PART THREE, Chapter XII); juvenile justice; victims of crime and abuse of power; the independence of the judiciary; and draft basic principles on the use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials.

Sub-Commission action. On 17 August,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to communicate to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, in time for consideration at its August 1988 session (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), suggestions relating to the draft principles on the effective prevention and investigation of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions and the draft basic principles on the use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials.

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

In connection with the Sub-Commission's review of developments in the administration of justice and the human rights of detainees, the Secretary-General submitted in June 1988 a report⁽⁴⁶⁾ summarizing information received from 14 Governments. Also in June,⁽⁴⁷⁾ he summarized information from two specialized agencies, one United Nations body and two intergovernmental organizations. In July, he presented a synopsis of material from NGOs.

Draft principles for the protection of detainees

Sub-Commission action. A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, set up by the Sub-Commission, met from 10 to 17 and on 22 and 26 August to consider, among other things, a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment.⁽⁴⁸⁾ The Working Group decided to recommend to the Sub-Commission that it bring to the attention of the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee Working Group charged with drafting the text certain questions concerning the text which were annexed to the body of principles provisionally approved by the Group in 1987.⁽⁵⁰⁾ On 1 September,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Sub-Commission thus requested the Secretary-General to do so. The draft text and questions were also annexed to the report of the Working Group on Detention. Also on 1 September,⁽⁵²⁾ the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the annex to Governments, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the Working Group on Enforced and Involuntary Disappearances, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments and suggestions and to transmit a summary of that information to the Working Group on Detention prior to its 1989 session.

Sixth Committee Working Group. In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly decision,⁽⁵³⁾ a Working Group of the Sixth Committee met from 4 October to 16 November 1988 to complete the elaboration of the draft Body of Principles.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The Working Group considered questions left pending at the Assembly's 1987 session and examined suggestions by delegations to the text, as provisionally adopted. The Group reviewed the draft for accuracy and consistency, thus completing its elaboration. The text, as contained in the Working Group's report, was submitted to the Sixth Committee for consideration and adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/173 without vote.

Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/177 of 15 December 1980, in which it referred the task of elaborating the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment to the Sixth Committee and decided to establish an open-ended working group for that purpose,

Taking note of the report of the Working Group on the Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, which met during the forty-third session of the General Assembly and completed the elaboration of the draft Body of Principles,

Considering that the Working Group decided to submit the text of the draft Body of Principles to the Sixth Committee for its consideration and adoption,

Convinced that the adoption of the draft Body of Principles would make an important contribution to the protection of human rights,

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on the Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment for its important contribution to the elaboration of the Body of Principles;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies of the adoption of the Body of Principles;

A detained or imprisoned person or his counsel shall, subject only to reasonable conditions to ensure security and good order in the place of detention or imprisonment, have the right to request or petition a judicial or other authority for a second medical examination or opinion.

3. Confidentiality concerning the request or complaint shall be maintained if so requested by the complainant.

4. Every request or complaint shall be promptly dealt with and replied to without undue delay. When circumstances so warrant, such an inquiry shall be held on the same procedural basis whenever the death or disappearance occurs shortly after the termination of the detention or imprisonment. The findings of such inquiry or a report thereon shall be made available upon request, unless doing so would jeopardize an ongoing criminal investigation.

Principle 35

1. Damage incurred because of acts or omissions by a public official contrary to the rights contained in these principles shall be compensated according to the applicable rules on liability provided by domestic law.

Principle 37

A person detained on a criminal charge shall be brought before a judicial or other authority provided by law promptly after his arrest. Such authority shall decide without delay upon the lawfulness and necessity of detention. Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands), in his third report to the Commission,⁽⁵⁵⁾ said he continued to receive requests for urgent action concerning people who were allegedly being tortured or who it was feared might be. He brought 14 of those requests to the immediate attention of the respective Governments, appealing to them to ensure that the physical and mental integrity of the individual was protected. In addition, the Special Rapporteur decided to retransmit allegations sent previously to 17 Governments. He discussed his 1987 visit to Argentina, Colombia and Uruguay.

The Special Rapporteur presented a number of conclusions and recommendations, some of which were taken up by the Commission.

Human Rights Commission action. Commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, the Commission, on 8 March,⁽⁵⁶⁾ endorsed his recommendations concerning strict measures against members of the medical profession who had, in that capacity, practised torture. The Commission encouraged all States to sign and ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.⁽⁵⁷⁾ It underlined the Special Rapporteur's recommendation to declare incommunicado detention illegal and to institute a system of periodic visits by independent experts to places of detention. The Commission also emphasized the importance of training programmes for law and security personnel.

It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for two years and asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance he might need and to report to the Commission in 1989. On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/130, approved those requests. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to appeal to Governments to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1988, 39 States had ratified or acceded to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, 11 of them in 1988.⁽¹⁾ The Convention was adopted by the General Assembly in 1984⁽⁵⁷⁾ and opened for signature in 1985.⁽⁵⁸⁾ It entered into force during 1987.⁽⁵⁹⁾ The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture, set up under the Convention, to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987.⁽⁵⁹⁾ Twelve parties had made the required declarations. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August 1988.⁽⁶⁰⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Commission reiterated its request to all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority and invited all ratifying or acceding States to consider making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22. It requested the Secretary-General to continue submitting annual reports on the Convention's status and to ensure that there were appropriate staff and facilities for the effective functioning of the Committee against Torture.

Also on 8 March,⁽⁶²⁾ the Commission noted that the financial cost of the implementation machinery under the Convention was onerous and might delay its universal acceptance. Bearing in mind that the Economic and Social Council considered annual reports on the activities of the relevant monitoring bodies and could make recommendations to the General Assembly, the Commission recommended that the Council give the matter due attention and asked the Secretary-General to prepare for the Council an overview of the various methods applied under different human rights instruments regarding their financial implications (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Draft optional protocol

As requested by the Commission in 1986,(63) the Secretary-General in January 1988(64) submitted a progress report on conventions containing ideas similar to those contained in a draft optional protocol to the 1984 Convention on torture, submitted by Costa Rica in 1980, providing for a system of periodic visits by a committee of experts to places of detention or imprisonment within the jurisdiction of States parties to the Convention. The Secretary-General stated that he had received information from the Council of Europe concerning the 1987 European Convention for the prevention of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment(65) and that the Organization of American States had provided information on the 1985 Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.(66)

Committee against Torture

The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, at its first session (Geneva, 18-22 April 1988),(67) elected its officers and adopted its agenda and rules of procedure. Annexed to the Committee's report were a list of States parties to the Convention as at 22 April 1988; a list of Committee members; rules of procedure and provisional guidelines on the form and content of initial reports to be submitted under article 19; and a list of initial reports to be submitted by States parties and their due dates.

1. Welcomes the first report of the Committee against Torture;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

3. 5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee;

6. Again requests all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

Fund for victims of torture

On 8 March,(68) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.(69) It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to all Governments, to help make the Fund's humanitarian work better known and to inform it annually of the Fund's operations.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Fund,(70) the Secretary-General said that, at its seventh session (Geneva, 22-26 February 1988), the Fund's Board of Trustees had recommended grants of some $900,000, which corresponded closely to available resources. The grants focused on therapy and rehabilitation projects and were extended to some 32 countries in Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe.

During the period 16 October 1987 to 15 October 1988, the Fund received $903,427 from 22 States. Contributions were also received from a number of individuals. In addition, pledges totalling $140,000 were made by two States.

Recalling with satisfaction the entry into force on 26 June 1987 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Express its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Invites Governments to make contributions to the Fund, if possible on a regular basis, in order to enable the Fund to provide continuous support to projects that depend on recurrent grants;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

5. Expresses its appreciations to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund;

Torture and inhuman treatment of detained children in South Africa

On 29 February,(71) the Commission on Human Rights, vigorously condemning the detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa, demanded their immediate and unconditional release and asked the Secretary-General to intervene with South Africa to end those practices in South Africa and Namibia and to report in 1989. It demanded the immediate dismantling of so-called "rehabilitation camps" or "re-education centres", which only served the racist régime's strategy of mentally and physically abusing black South African children, and the total abolition of the apartheid system. The Commission requested relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to launch a world-wide campaign to draw attention to the need to monitor and expose the inhuman practices associated with apartheid targeted at children. It appealed to the international community to adopt measures to bring pressure against South Africa until it dismantled apartheid. It asked the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa to pay special attention to the question and to report in 1989. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Working Group in discharging its responsibilities.

The Ad Hoc Working Group, in January 1988,(72) recounted testimony from witnesses and press reports concerning arrests, torture and other ill-treatment and harassment of black children and adolescents in South Africa. (For details of the Group's activities, see below, under "Human rights violations".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/134 without vote.

Torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa and Namibia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/124 of 7 December 1987 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/11 of 29 February 1988,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Declaration on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling with satisfaction the holding of the International Conference on Children, Repression and the Law in Apartheid South Africa at Harare, from 24 to 27 September 1987,

Appalled at evidence that children in South Africa and Namibia continue to be subjected to detention, torture and inhuman treatment,

Gravely concerned about reports of the increasing number of repressive measures targeted against children in South Africa and Namibia,

1. Expresses its profound outrage at evidence of detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and Namibia;
2. Vigorously condemns the apartheid racist régime for increasing detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and Namibia;
3. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of children held in detention in those countries;
4. Demands also the immediate dismantlement of the so-called "rehabilitation camps" and "re-education centres" in South Africa, since they only serve the racist régime's strategy of physically and mentally abusing black South African children;
5. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its forced recruitment, torture and inhuman treatment of Namibian children with the objective of turning them into their agents against the Namibian people;
6. Requests all relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to intensify the world-wide campaign aimed at drawing attention to, monitoring and exposing these inhuman practices;
7. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the question of detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and Namibia;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;
9. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

Detention on grounds of mental illness

The World Health Organization (WHO) provided the Commission with information on consultations it had held on persons detained on the grounds of mental illness. The consultations stressed the need for agreement on a set of principles for protecting the mentally ill, including protection from neglect as well as abuse, and the treatment of mental illness in the same way as other illnesses, recognizing the divergent legal, cultural and economic situations of those in need of assistance.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,(73) the Commission requested the Sub-Commission's sessional working group, set up in 1984,(74) to complete work on the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees of the rights of persons detained on the grounds of mental ill-health or mental disorders, taking into account information provided in February by WHO.(75) It asked the Secretary-General to assist the working group to complete its work.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(76) the Sub-Commission adopted the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally-ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care, approved by its sessional working group in August,(77) and submitted it to the Commission for further consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/109 without vote.

Implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights

The General Assembly.

Mindful of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also its resolution 42/98 of 7 December 1987, in which it again urged the Commission and the Sub-

Commission to expedite their consideration of this question, so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council,

Endorsing Commission resolution 1988/62 of 9 March 1988,

Taking note of Sub-Commission resolution 1988/28 of 1 September 1988,

Expressing deep concern at the repeated evidence of the misuse of psychiatry to detain persons on non-medical grounds, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission,

Reaffirming its conviction that detention of persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds is a violation of their human rights,

1. Welcomes the progress made by the Working Group of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, which enabled the Sub-Commission, at its fortieth session, to adopt the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally-ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care;

2. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider the subject at its forty-fifth session in the light of the Sub-Commission's recommendations.

Unacknowledged detention

On 8 March,(13) the Commission on Human Rights requested its Sub-Commission to continue to give attention to a draft declaration against the unacknowledged detention of persons.

In August, the Working Group on Detention, having made a preliminary review of the text of the draft declaration which was annexed to its report,(49) recommended to the Sub-Commission that it circulate the draft to Governments, the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for comments.

Detention without charge or trial

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(78) the Commission, taking note of a 1987 explanatory paper by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) on administrative detention without charge or trial,(79) invited all Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to assist by forwarding answers to a questionnaire sent to them on the subject. It requested the Sub-Commission to consider the Special Rapporteur's analysis and make any proposals deemed necessary on the questionnaire.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(80) the Sub-Commission approved a recommendation of the Working Group on Detention(49) that the Sub-Commission consider the Special Rapporteur's study as a matter of priority (see above). It asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 1989 and the Secretary-General to assist him.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In November,(81) the Special Rapporteur presented an analysis of the issues dealt with in his 1987 paper on administrative detention without charge or trial(79) based on replies to questionnaires from 22 Governments, 3 specialized agencies, 3 inter-governmental organizations and 12 NGOs. He stated that due to problems of co-ordination, classification of the purposes of detention had been reduced from six to four categories: prevention of serious disturbances of public order; measures relating to the status of foreigners; disciplinary measures; and situations of poverty or social maladjustment. The Special Rapporteur discussed possible proposals to the Commission, which comprised suggestions made by NGOs concerning flagrant abuses of administrative detention.

Hostage-taking

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(82) the Commission strongly condemned those responsible for hostage-taking in all circumstances and demanded the immediate release of those being held. It called on States to take preventive and punitive steps to put an immediate end to cases of abduction and unlawful restraint. It asked the Secretary-General, whenever a State so requested, to use all available means to secure the release of persons held hostage.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(83) the Sub-Commission called on all parties involved in the war in Lebanon to release immediately and unconditionally all their detainees and hostages and to use their influence on those who might have control of those being held.

Detained UN staff members

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(84) the Commission appealed to Member States to respect the rights of staff members and others acting under the authority of the United Nations and their families. It asked the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure that the human rights and privileges and immunities of United Nations staff members and their families were fully respected and to submit an updated report on the situation of international civil servants and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, including those cases that had been successfully settled five years prior to the Commission's 1989 session.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to the Commission's request, the Secretary-General, on 19 August 1988,(85) submitted a report updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(86) by a vote of 18 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission decided that one of its members should examine the human rights violations of staff members of the United Nations system, their families and experts, as well as the repercussions of those violations on the operation of United Nations organs and agencies. The Secretary-General, heads of the specialized agencies and the various United Nations staff representative organs were asked to assist the designated member.

Extra-legal executions

In January 1988, Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights his sixth report with later addenda(87) on summary or arbitrary executions. The report was based on information received from Governments, NGOs, groups and individuals and described allegations of imminent or actual executions, which had been communicated to the Governments concerned. It summarized replies from those Governments and presented developments regarding international standards for the proper investigation of all deaths under suspicious circumstances. The Special Rapporteur reviewed the current situation in countries where summary or arbitrary executions had been widely reported and situations in restored or new democracies.

The Special Rapporteur recommended: human rights training programmes for law enforcement officers; ratification by Governments of international human rights instruments and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(2) and a review of national laws and regulations; government machinery to check and control law enforcement organs, including military forces; and support by Governments and international organizations for United Nations efforts to adopt an international instrument incorporating international standards for the proper investigation of all deaths under suspicious circumstances. Annexed to the report was an account of the Special Rapporteur's visit to Suriname (16-24 August 1987) to investigate alleged killings by members of the military.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,(88) the Commission recommended a resolution on summary or arbitrary executions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(89) the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide a document describing action by other international forums towards international standards for the investigation of suspicious deaths in detention, including autopsies.

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, (90) the Commission requested the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to report on its work in 1989 and 1990 and to present recommendations to help eliminate the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances. The Commission decided to extend the Group's mandate for two years and encouraged Governments to consider inviting it to their countries. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance, particularly staff and resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1988/107 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

At its 10th plenary meeting, on 13 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/34 of 8 March 1988, approved the decision of the Commission to extend for two years the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances. The Council also approved the request of the Commission to the Secretary-General to ensure that the Working Group received all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources it required to perform its functions, especially in carrying out missions or holding sessions in countries that would be prepared to receive them.

Economic and Social Council decision 1988/107

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89) without vote, 11 May (meeting 6); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1): agenda item 10.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,(91) held three sessions in 1988: its twenty-fourth (New York, 23-27 May) and twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth (Geneva, 12-16 September and 30 November-9 December).(92)

During those sessions, the Group held 14 meetings with government representatives and 28 meetings with representatives of human rights organizations, associations of relatives of missing persons and families or witnesses directly concerned with reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances. Two members of the Group visited Colombia from 24 October to 2 November and provided the Commission with a report on the problem of disappearances there.(93)

In 1988, the Group received reports of some 4,200 cases of enforced or involuntary disappearances and transmitted 3,440 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned. Among the cases which occurred in 1988, 60 were clarified, 50 of them under the urgent-action procedure.

The Group recommended that the Commission: again urge Governments to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against intimidation or ill-treatment; call on Governments to co-operate with the Group and to ensure that in states of emergency the necessary human rights guarantees were maintained; and ask Governments to invite the Group to visit their countries and to make use of the advisory services of the United Nations, particularly human rights training of security forces and the judiciary by qualified experts. Annexed to the Group's report were graphs showing the development of disappearances for the period 1974 to 1988 in countries with more than 50 transmitted cases.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/159 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 42/142 of 7 December 1987 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances, and about the fact that, in certain cases, the families of disappeared persons have been the target of intimidation and ill-treatment,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/34 of 8 March 1988,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend for two years the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting by the Working Group;

3. Also welcomes the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/55 of 13 March 1986 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with greater efficiency;

4. Further welcomes the progress made in the preparation of the draft declaration on enforced or involuntary disappearances;

5. Appeals to the Governments concerned, particularly those which have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group, to co-operate fully with the Working Group so as to enable it, with respect for its working methods based on discretion, to perform its strictly humanitarian role, and in particular to reply more quickly to the requests for information addressed to them by the Working Group;

6. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling the Working Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

7. Extends its warm thanks to the Governments that have invited the Working Group;

8. Appeals to the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or any ill-treatment of which they may be the target;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Working Group to the Commission at its forty-fifth session;

10. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities.

Disappearance of children

On 10 March,(94) the Commission approved a 1987 Sub-Commission request(95) to appoint one or more members to establish and maintain contact with the authorities and institutions responsible for reporting on the situation of disappeared children in Argentina who had been located in Paraguay. It authorized the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance necessary to implement its resolution.

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/138, endorsed the Commission's approval of the Sub-Commission's request and authorized the Secretary-General to provide assistance.

In August,(96) Sub-Commission member Theo van Boven (Netherlands) presented a report on disappeared children in Argentina who had been located in Paraguay. He had visited Argentina from 12 to 15 July where he met with government officials, NGOs, judges, lawyers, psychologists and health professionals. He recommended urging Paraguay to return the children to their country of origin, firm international co-operation and international mechanisms to help find disappeared children and reintegrate them into their legitimate families.

and political rights

Slavery

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 8 March,(97) endorsed the Sub-Commission's 1987 recommendation to change the name of the Working Group on Slavery to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery,(98) and asked the Sub-Commission and the Group to draw up a plan of action on its future work for submission in 1989. The Commission decided to transmit to Member States the Sub-Commission's 1987 recommendation that any step taken to interfere with the freedom of attendance and speech before the Group be strongly condemned. It recommended that the Sub-Commission consider appointing a special rapporteur to review the implementation by Member States, United Nations organs and other appropriate bodies of the recommendations made and the measures taken by United Nations organs and executing agencies, international organizations and Member States to prevent and suppress contemporary forms of slavery and to submit recommendations in 1989. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of a 1983 decision.(99) The Commission recommended a draft, which the Council adopted (see below).

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/34

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

Report of the Secretary-General. In June,(100) the Secretary-General presented a survey of recommendations made by the Working Group since its inception in 1975.(101)

Working Group activities. The Sub-Commission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its thirteenth session (Geneva, 1-5 and 12 August),(102) reviewed and made a number of recommendations on developments in slavery and the slave trade, including the sale of children and child labour (see below, under "Other human rights questions"), debt bondage, traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others, and slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism.

As requested by the Commission (see above), the Group drew up its plan of action for the period 1989 to 1991.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(103) the Sub-Commission approved the Group's plan of action. It asked the Secretary-General to seek means to facilitate the participation of indigenous peoples in the Group and to prepare an annotated agenda of the work of the Group for each of its sessions.

Right to leave a country

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(104) the Commission thanked the Sub-

Commission's Special Rapporteur for the first part of his final report and for the preliminary draft declaration on the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country,(105) and asked that the Sub-Commission be provided with the entire report. It requested the Secretary-General to continue to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June,(106) Special Rapporteur Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia) submitted his final report on current trends and developments regarding the right to leave any country including one's own, and to return to one's own country, and the evolution of related international legal provisions.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that freedom of movement within a country had progressed substantially and noted some progress in the right of a national to leave his own country. National security and public order were among the most common permissible restrictions on the right to leave one's country. He recommended that national laws include provisions on the right of nationals and aliens to leave the country and the right of nationals and permanent residents to return, and effective measures for developed and developing countries to eliminate the problem of the "brain drain". The Special Rapporteur also made suggestions to Governments regarding travel documents. He called for due attention to the conditions of refugees and the reunification of families and discussed the adoption of a draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination relating to the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own.

Annexes to the Special Rapporteur's report were contained in an addendum(107) and included the draft declaration, a questionnaire on recent practice and legislation of States and the development of international law and a list of related communications, draft principles on freedom and non-discrimination formulated by the Sub-Commission in 1963, and the 1986 Strasbourg Declaration on the Right to Leave and Return.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(108) the Sub-Commission decided to examine further in 1989 the Special Rapporteur's recommendations, as well as the draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country. It also asked the Secretary-General to transmit the draft declaration to Member States, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for comments.

Human rights and fundamental freedoms

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(109) the Commission expressed concern that persons were detained for seeking to exercise peacefully their human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly the rights to freedom of expression, assembly and association. It asked Governments to release all persons deprived of their liberty for seeking peacefully to exercise those rights and freedoms or to promote and defend them and called on Governments, pending such release, to take effective measures to safeguard the human rights and fundamental freedoms of such persons.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(110) the Sub-Commission called for the release of all persons detained, in violation of their rights to freedom of speech, association and assembly, for defending the human rights of others and for publicizing alleged violations of such human rights. It urged the Commission to finalize the drafting of a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Freedom of speech

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(111) the Commission, expressing concern at the extensive detention of persons who exercised their right to freedom of opinion and expression, appealed to States to ensure respect and support for those who exercised it and to release those detained solely for doing so. It requested the Sub-Commission to continue considering the right to freedom of opinion and expression and to recommend to the Commission in 1989 further measures to promote and safeguard that right.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(80) the Sub-Commission requested Danilo Turk (Yugoslavia) to prepare a proposal for a study called for by the Commission concerning the right to freedom of expression and opinion, to serve as a basis for future decisions of the Sub-Commission.

Independence of the judicial system

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(112) the Commission requested the Sub-Commission to review and finalize the draft declaration on the independence of justice, as proposed by Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India) in 1985,(44) with a view to its submission in 1989. The Sub-Commission was asked to take into account the comments of Governments, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and other relevant parties.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi presented

comments received, as at 7 June, on the draft declaration on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers from 19 Governments and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs.(113) He also submitted a revised version of the draft declaration.(114)

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(115) the Sub-Commission referred the draft declaration to the Commission for further consideration.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1987 request of the Commission on Human Rights,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in 1988 a report⁽²⁾ containing replies from 10 Governments, 6 specialized agencies and 17 NGOs on their policies regarding the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March,⁽³⁾ by a roll-call vote of 30 to 9, with 3 abstentions, the Commission appealed to States to pursue policies for the implementation of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, and called on them to co-operate in promoting social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom. The Commission again asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and NGOs to comment on their policies for the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights and to report to the Commission in 1989. The Commission asked its Sub-Commission to appoint a special rapporteur to study problems, policies and progressive measures relating to a more effective realization of those rights.

Sub-Commission action. In response to the Commission's request, the Sub-Commission, on 1 September,⁽⁴⁾ decided to appoint Danilo Turk (Yugoslavia) as its Special Rapporteur to prepare a study of problems, policies and progressive measures relating to the more effective realization of economic, social and cultural rights. It recommended that he take account of its guidelines, which were outlined in a 1987 resolution.⁽¹⁾ The Special Rapporteur was asked to submit a preliminary report in 1989. The Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission and the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he needed.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1988, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽⁵⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽⁶⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 92 States.⁽⁷⁾ In 1988, Guatemala became a party to it.

In his report to the General Assembly on the International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on the status of ratifications, accessions and signatures to the Covenant as at 1 August, as well as on other questions related to its implementation (see also below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Implementation of the Covenant

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 7 March,⁽⁹⁾ encouraged States parties to the Covenant to support and co-operate with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985⁽¹⁰⁾ to oversee implementation of the Covenant from 1987 on. It welcomed the Committee's establishment of a sessional working group to consider its methods of work (see below) and asked it to develop general guidelines for preparing reports under the Covenant, taking into account the Secretary-General's guidelines for preparing reports. It encouraged the Committee to consider ways of strengthening dialogue and an information' flow with other treaty bodies and invited States parties to identify benchmarks to measure the progressive realization of rights under the Covenant. It requested the Economic and Social Council to identify ways in which international co-operation and technical assistance would contribute to implementation of the Covenant and asked the Secretary-General to intensify co-ordination between United Nations human rights activities and programmes of the development agencies. The Sub-Commission was asked to identify practical strategies for promoting the Covenant, particularly for the most vulnerable and disadvantaged.

Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held its second session at Geneva from 8 to 25 February.⁽¹¹⁾ It established a sessional live-member working group to consider its methods of work and to develop general guidelines for preparing reports. On 23 February, the Committee discussed recommendations drawn up by the group.

Concerning the rights covered by articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights and the right to social security), the Committee examined reports from Austria⁽¹²⁾ and Zaire;⁽¹³⁾ by articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard and to physical and mental health), reports from Bulgaria,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Byelorussian SSR,⁽¹⁵⁾ Chile,⁽¹⁶⁾ Denmark,⁽¹⁷⁾ Mongolia,⁽¹⁸⁾ Norway, ⁽¹⁹⁾ Poland,⁽²⁰⁾ Romania⁽²¹⁾ and Sweden;⁽²²⁾ and by articles 13 to 15 (the rights to education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation), from Austria,⁽²³⁾ Chile,⁽²⁴⁾ Yugoslavia⁽²⁵⁾ and Zaire.⁽²⁶⁾

Annexed to the Committee's report was a list of States parties and the status of report submissions, a list of Committee members, and the Secretary-General's statement on the budget implications of the Committee's recommendations.

Other action. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the tenth report of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations(27) on progress towards observance of the Covenant's provisions, within ILO's scope of activities. The report detailed progress in the observance of articles 6 to 10 in 12 States.

In January,(28) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the second report of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) describing progress made in the observance of articles 13 to 15.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/4 without vote.

International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of its central responsibilities under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling its resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, by which it established the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to be entrusted, as from 1987, with the important task of overseeing the implementation of the Covenant,

Recalling also its resolutions and decisions relating to its Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, including resolution 1979/43 of 11 May 1979, which remain in force in so far as they are not superseded or modified by the provisions of resolution 1985/17,

Reaffirming the importance of increasing public awareness of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the role that non-governmental organizations can play in that regard,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 41/121 of 4 December 1986 and 42/105 of 7 December 1987 on reporting obligations under United Nations instruments on human rights, which are of relevance to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and in which the Assembly reaffirmed the importance of maintaining summary records of the proceedings of the bodies supervising the implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights, and bearing in mind the relevance to the work of the Committee of the activities and experience of other United Nations treaty bodies,

Recalling also the request of the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/105, that the Council consider changing the periodicity of reporting under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the endorsement by the Assembly, in its resolution 42/102 of 7 December 1987, of the invitation extended by the Economic and Social Council to the Committee to consider recommendations relating to its future work,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its second session, including the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Committee with respect to its future methods of work;

2. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

3. Invites States parties to the Covenant to follow the recommendations made by the Committee to address the problems of non-submission and extended delays in the submission of periodic reports, in particular regarding the need to submit and present the reports in a timely manner and to complete the entire cycle of initial reports before submitting second reports, and requests the Secretary-General to send appropriate reminders to those States parties whose reports are overdue;

4. Welcomes the decisions taken by the Committee on the action it should take to seek supplementary information in cases where reports are incomplete;

5. Invites States parties to the Covenant to review the processes followed in the preparation of their periodic reports on the implementation of the Covenant, including consultation and co-ordination with appropriate governmental departments and agencies, compilation of data and training of staff, and to hold, as appropriate, consultations with interested non-governmental organizations, with a view to ensuring full compliance with relevant guidelines, improving the quality of description and analysis in such reports and limiting reports to a reasonable length;

6. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that States parties be requested to submit a single report within two years of the entry into force of the Covenant for the State party concerned and thereafter at live-year intervals, and requests the Secretary-General to inform States parties to the Covenant of this decision;

7. Welcomes the decision of the Committee to revise and simplify the guidelines for reports of States parties and to place limits on the time devoted to the consideration of the report of each State party;

8. Endorses the request of the Committee that the Secretary-General prepare a report showing clearly the extent and nature of any overlapping of issues dealt with in the principal human rights treaties, with a view to reducing, as appropriate, duplication in the different supervisory bodies of issues raised with respect to any given State party;

9. Takes note of the recommendation of the Committee on its future sessions, but considers that, in view of the various recommendations made by the Committee to expedite its consideration of periodic reports, the current provision for one annual session of three weeks' duration should be maintained for the time being;

10. Authorizes the Committee to establish, within available resources, a pre-sessional working group to meet for a period of up to one week prior to each session;

11. Agrees that an effort should be made to avoid overlapping future sessions of the Committee with sessions of the Commission on Human Rights;

12. Takes note of the decision of the Committee to devote one day during each session to a general discussion of one specific right or a particular article of the Covenant in order to develop in greater depth its understanding of the relevant issues;

13. Welcomes the decision of the Committee to prepare general comments, based on the various articles and provisions of the Covenant, with a view to assisting States parties in fulfilling their reporting obligations, paying particular attention to relevant practices followed by other treaty bodies, and takes note of the methods of work to be followed at future sessions of the Committee;

14. Urges the Committee to encourage States parties, in conformity with article 2, paragraph 1, of the Covenant, to consider identifying bench-marks for measuring achievements in the progressive realization of the rights recognized in the Covenant and, in this context, to pay particular regard to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged persons;

15. Urges the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other appropriate United Nations bodies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, to extend their full co-operation and support to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights by, inter alia, enabling their representatives to attend meetings of the Committee and submitting relevant information to the Committee;

16. Invites non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council to submit to the Committee written statements that might contribute to full and universal recognition and realization of the rights set forth in the Covenant, requests the Secretary-General to make those statements available to the Committee in a timely manner and thanks those organizations that submitted written statements to the Committee for consideration at its second session;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the report of the Committee to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights, its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, other United Nations organs and their subsidiaries, specialized agencies concerned with providing technical assistance and the regional commissions;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights to assist States parties in discharging their reporting obligations under the Covenant, including the holding of training courses on the preparation of reports on the implementation of the Covenant, and to advise States parties of the availability of such assistance;

19. Takes note with appreciation of the conclusions of the Committee on the importance of greater publicity for its work, and encourages the Secretary-General to give publicity to the proceedings of the Committee and to ensure that it receives full administrative support so as to enable it to discharge its functions as effectively as possible;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee, upon its request, with relevant data from official United Nations sources, including information from the specialized agencies and the regional commissions;

21. Decides to transmit the report of the Committee to the General Assembly at its forty-third session for consideration under the agenda item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

Interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/113 by recorded vote.

Indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Recalling that in the preambles to the International Covenants on Human Rights it is recognized that the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby persons may enjoy their economic, social and cultural rights as well as their civil and political rights,

Recalling its resolutions 40/114 of 13 December 1985, 41/117 of 4 December 1986 and 42/102 of 7 December 1987,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977 that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights can never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Convinced that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Desirous of removing all obstacles to the full realization of human rights, in particular colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination in all its forms, apartheid, foreign intervention, occupation, aggression and domination,

Recognizing the fundamental rights of every people to exercise full sovereignty over its natural wealth and resources,

Reaffirming that there is a close and multidimensional relationship between disarmament and development, that progress in disarmament would considerably promote progress in development and that resources released through disarmament measures could contribute to the economic and social development and well-being of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Recognizing that the realization of the right to development may help to promote the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/42 of 14 March 1985, 1986/15 of 10 March 1986, 1987/19 and 1987/20 of 10 March 1987 and 1988/22 and 1988/23 of 7 March 1988, in which the Commission stated that the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights have not received sufficient attention within the framework of the United Nations system,

Requesting the Secretary-General to enhance his efforts under the programme of advisory services to States in the implementation, promotion and protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other United Nations instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Notes the essential importance of national efforts and international co-operation to achieve the full and effective realization of all human rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments;

2. Appeals to all States to pursue policies directed towards the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give more attention to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights under the relevant agenda items;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give publicity to the Human Rights Committee and to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure that they receive full administrative support in order to enable them to discharge their functions effectively;

5. Affirm the importance and relevance, to programmes and activities being undertaken throughout the United Nations system in the field of human rights, of reports submitted by States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

6. Decides to consider the question of the indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

Right to development

Working Group activities. In 1988, the 15-member Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1981,(29) held its eleventh session at Geneva from 11 to 22 January.(30)

As requested by the General Assembly in 1987,(31) the Group considered an analytical compilation of comments on implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,(32) prepared by the Secretary-General and received from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other governmental and non-governmental organizations. The Group recommended that the Commission on Human Rights remind those who had not replied to expedite their responses and compile statements which might be made by Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the subject. The Group reiterated that urgent action should be taken to implement its 1987 proposals aimed at deepening and widening the concept of the right to development.(33) It felt that there was a need for a mechanism within the United Nations to monitor, review and co-ordinate the actions taken by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to implement the Declaration within their work programmes. To enhance the right of development, the Group recommended, among other things: a meeting of eminent persons under the aegis of the Commission, to help further implement the Declaration; strengthening of the cultural and educational base of the development process; an extension of United Nations University programmes emphasizing technology and development; that emphasis be placed on the impact of heavy debt on developing countries' right to development; and further studies on obstacles to development. It also recommended measures towards co-ordinated and early implementation of the Declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March,(34) the Commission requested the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report to the General Assembly in 1988 and to circulate it among Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other governmental and non-governmental organizations, asking them once more to offer their comments and views on implementing and further enhancing the Declaration as a matter of urgency. The Commission decided to convene the Working Group during the last week of January 1989 and directed it to study the analytical compilation and to submit final recommendations in 1989. It also decided that in 1989, based on consideration of the Group's report and the views expressed by Commission members, a decision would be taken on further action on the subject. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group.

By decision 1988/128 of 27 May, the Economic and Social Council transmitted the Group's report to the General Assembly and approved its convening in January 1989 and the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Group.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/127 without vote.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly at its forty-first session of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling also its resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1988/26 of 7 March 1988, approved by the Economic and Social Council,

Reiterating the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Mindful that, pursuant to the proclamation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, the Commission has entered a new phase of its deliberation on this matter, which is directed towards the implementation and further enhancement of the Declaration,

Having considered the report of the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development and all other relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session,

Aware of the interest shown by several Member States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations in the work of the Working Group,

1. Expresses the hope that the replies of Governments, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations, submitted at the request of the Secretary-General based on Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/26 to offer their comments and views on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, will contain practical proposals for further enhancement of the Declaration;

2. Endorses the agreement reached by the Commission that future work on the question of the right to development should proceed step by step and in stages;

3. Calls upon the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, at its twelfth session, to study the analytical compilation to be prepared by the Secretary-General of all replies received in response to Commission resolution 1988/26, if necessary together with the individual replies themselves, and to submit to the Commission at its forty-fifth session its final recommendations on those proposals which would best contribute to the further enhancement and implementation of the Declaration at the individual, national and international levels, and especially on the views of the Secretary-General and of Governments on the means of establishing an evaluation system on the implementation and further enhancement of the Declaration;

4. Calls upon the Commission to decide at its forty-fifth session, on the basis of its consideration of the report of the Working Group and the views expressed by the members of the Commission during the session, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration;

5. Invites the Commission to report on the question to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

6. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to food

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March,(35) the Commission recommended that Governments which had not done so draw up national food security plans as suggested in 1987 by the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur.(33) It urged them to recognize and comply with their obligations, particularly those related to international co-operation based on free consent, and the principles enshrined in the Charter and other instruments. The Commission called on NGOs to support the right to food world-wide and to base their efforts on that right rather than policy statements. The Commission recommended a draft text, which the Economic and Social Council adopted (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/33 without vote.

The right to food

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1983/140 of 27 May 1983, in which it authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mr. Asbjorn Eide, Special Rapporteur, with the preparation of a study on the right to adequate food as a human right and recommended that he give special attention to the normative content of the right to food and its significance in relation to the establishment of the new international economic order,

Noting with satisfaction that a comprehensive final study on this subject was presented by the Special Rapporteur to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-ninth session,

Recalling Sub-Commission resolution 1987/27 of 3 September 1987 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/29 of 7 March 1988,

1. Decides that the study should be published by the United Nations and given the widest possible circulation;

2. Decide to take steps to ensure better co-ordination between specialized agencies and bodies dealing with food-related matters and human rights bodies of the United Nations, if possible through inter-agency co-operative arrangements;

3. Draws the attention of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to the study prepared by the Special Rapporteur, and invites the Committee to submit its observations thereon to the Economic and Social Council at an appropriate time.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/33

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

Right to own property

On 7 March,(36) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Member States, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to communicate their views on the right to own property to the Secretary-General for submission to the General Assembly in 1988, as called for in 1986.(37)

By decision 1988/145 of 27 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of an April note(38) of the Secretary-General informing the Council of progress made in preparing the report to the Assembly.

Also on 7 March,(39) by a roll-call vote of 31 to 11, the Commission called on States to ensure that their national legislation regarding all forms of property did not impair the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or prejudice the right freely to choose and develop political, social, economic and cultural systems.

Report of the Secretary General. In October,(40) the Secretary-General presented the views of 22 Member States, 2 United Nations bodies, 3 specialized agencies and 6 NGOs on the right of everyone to own property alone and in association with others and the relationship between that right and other human rights and its impact on the economic and social development of States. He discussed United Nations and regional instruments relating to the right to property.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/123 without vote.

Respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/132 of 4 December 1986, in which it expressed the conviction that the full enjoyment by everyone of the right to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, is of particular significance in fostering widespread enjoyment of other basic human rights and contributes to securing the goals of economic and social development enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/17 of 10 March 1987, in which the Commission urged States, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to provide, where they have not done so, adequate constitutional and legal provisions to protect the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property,

Reaffirming the right of States and their peoples freely to choose and develop their political, social, economic and cultural systems and to determine their laws and regulations,

Recognizing the value of constructive dialogue in the national context on the ways and means by which States can promote the full enjoyment of the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others,

Recognizing also in this context the importance of enabling everyone to acquire property, alone or in association with others, by taking practical actions that assist the economic development of developing countries,

Convinced that the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and as reaffirmed in paragraph 11 of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons and in article 16, paragraph 1 (h), of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, is of particular significance in fostering widespread enjoyment of other basic human rights,

Reaffirming, in accordance with article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that, in the exercise of his or her rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States,

Noting that the comments of Member States and of specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system, as outlined in that report, consisted mainly of summaries of legal principles associated with the right to own property and that relatively little attention was given to the role of the right of everyone to own property, alone as well as in association with others, in ensuring the full and free participation of individuals in the economic and social systems of States,

1. Recognizes that there exist in Member States many forms of legal property ownership, including private, communal, social and state forms, each of which should contribute to ensuring effective development and utilization of human resources through the establishment of sound bases for political, economic and social justice;

2. Affirm, in accordance with article 30 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that nothing in the Declaration, including the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth therein;

3. Considers that further measures may be appropriate at the national level to ensure respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to provide, where they have not done so, adequate constitutional and legal provisions to protect the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and of the specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system on the means whereby and the degree to which the right to own property alone as well as in association with others contributes to the development of individual liberty and initiative, which serve to foster, strengthen and enhance the exercise of other human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Suggests that Member States and the specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system, in the context of their remarks on the impact of the right to own property alone as well as in association with others, may wish to address, in particular, the right to own the following types of property:

(a) Personal property, including the residence of one's self and family;

(b) Economically productive property, including property associated with agriculture, commerce and industry;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to report his findings to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

8. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 43/123

8 December 1988 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/43/876) without vote, 17 November (meeting 46); draft by United States (A/C.3/43/L.31); agenda item 104. Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 3rd Committee 36-38, 42, 46; plenary 75.

Also on 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/124 by recorded vote.

The impact of property on the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the Declaration on the Right to Development, which assign property a role in the exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling also its resolution 42/115 of 7 December 1987 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/18 of 10 March 1987 and taking note of Commission resolution 1988/19 of 7 March 1988 on the impact of property on the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/20, of 7 March 1988 on recovery of nations' assets illegally removed by violators of human rights,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote higher standards of living, full employment, conditions of economic and social progress and development and solutions of international economic, social, health and related problems,

Recognizing the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recognizing also that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they may freely determine their political status and may freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Recognizing further that the right of all peoples to self-determination includes the exercise of their inalienable right to full sovereignty over all their natural wealth and resources,

Convinced that social justice is a prerequisite for lasting peace and that people can achieve complete fulfilment of their aspirations only within a just social order,

Convinced also that social development can be promoted by peaceful coexistence, friendly relations and co-operation among States with different social, economic or political systems,

Reaffirming that, in accordance with article 28 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration can be fully realized,

Bearing in mind that in no case may human rights and fundamental freedoms be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations or to the rights and freedoms of others,

Recalling its resolution 34/137 of 14 December 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, in which it emphasized the importance of an efficient public sector in the development process,

Reaffirming that, in accordance with article 6 of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, social progress and development require the establishment, in conformity with human rights and fundamental freedoms and with the principles of justice and the social function of property, of forms of ownership of land and of the means of production which preclude any kind of exploitation of man, ensure equal rights to property for all and create conditions leading to genuine equality among people,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the obligation of States to take effective steps with a view to achieving the full realization of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights;
3. Recognizes that there exist in Member States many forms of legal property ownership, including private, communal and State forms, each of which should contribute to ensuring the effective development and utilization of human resources through the establishment of sound bases for political, economic and social justice;
4. Calls upon States to ensure that their national legislation with regard to all forms of property shall preclude any impairment of the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, without prejudice to their right freely to choose and develop their political, social, economic and cultural systems;
5. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, in accordance with resolution 43/123 of 8 December 1988, to take into account the present resolution;
6. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to adequate housing

On 7 March,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 31 to none, with 11 abstentions, expressed deep concern that millions of people did not enjoy the right to adequate housing and reiterated the need for measures to promote the right of all persons to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing. It noted the General Assembly's 1987⁽⁴²⁾ call to States and concerned international organizations to pay special attention to the development of national shelter strategies and settlement improvement programmes within the global strategy for shelter to the year 2000.⁽⁴³⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/43 without vote.

Realization of the right to adequate housing

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1986/41 of 23 May 1986 and 1987/62 of 29 May 1987,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 41/146 of 4 December 1986,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 42/146 of 7 December 1987, in which the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council and its appropriate functional commissions to keep the question of the right to adequate housing under periodic review,

Bearing in mind that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights provide that all persons have the right to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing, and that States should take appropriate steps to ensure the realization of that right,

Recognizing that the provision of housing for the homeless is an integral part of national economic and social development in all countries and an important step towards the realization of the right to development,

Recalling the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Noting with appreciation the measures and action taken and the renewed commitments made during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless by Member States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to advance the realization of the right to adequate housing,

3. Calls upon all States and international organizations concerned to pay special attention to the realization of the right to adequate housing in carrying out measures to develop national shelter strategies and settlement improvement programmes within the framework of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the social aspects of the situation of homeless people to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

Popular participation and human rights

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1987,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report summarizing the views of seven Governments, two United Nations bodies, two specialized agencies and six NGOs on his 1985 study on popular participation as an important factor in the realization of all human rights.⁽⁴⁵⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Commission invited Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs that had not done so to comment on the Secretary-General's 1985 study. It asked the Secretary-General to submit those comments in 1989 and decided to consider at that time a study of laws and practices on the extent to which the right to participation had been established and had evolved at the national level, which the Commission had requested in 1987.⁽⁴⁴⁾

Advancement of human rights

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/125 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

National institutions for human rights protection

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,(1) the Commission reaffirmed the importance of developing national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and of maintaining their independence and integrity, and encouraged Member States to develop funding and other strategies for the establishment of such institutions. It welcomed the 1987 General Assembly request⁽²⁾ to update the Secretary-General's report on national institutions⁽³⁾ and to distribute it at the forty-fourth (1989) session of the Assembly as a United Nations handbook. The Commission further invited the Secretary-General to include in his updated report a list of existing national institutions and all pertinent information provided by Governments, particularly on various models of such institutions and their functioning in implementing international human rights standards.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-fourth session at Geneva from 1 February to 11 March 1988 and adopted 78 resolutions and 7 decisions. In addition, it recommended 9 draft resolutions and 18 draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 27 May, by decision 1988/144, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-fourth session.⁽⁴⁾

With regard to the organization of its work, the Commission decided⁽⁵⁾ to set up informal open-ended working groups on further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms; on the question of a convention on the rights of the child; on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities; and for drafting a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms.

On 8 March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission recommended a decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, stating that the mandates of special rapporteurs should be for two-year periods and that they should continue to report annually. The decision would apply to special rapporteurs on mercenaries, on the implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, on the question of torture, on summary and arbitrary executions, and to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa.

On 27 May, by decision 1988/129, the Council approved the Commission's recommendation.

Organization of work of the 1989 session

On 2 March,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission decided, subject to the approval of the Economic and Social Council, to set up a five-member working group to examine particular human rights violations that might be referred to it at its 1989 session by the Sub-Commission under the confidential procedure governed by a 1970 Council resolution.^(s)

On 27 May, by decision 1988/127, the Council approved the Commission's decision. On the same date, by decision 1988/141, the Council authorized 20 fully serviced additional meetings for the Commission's forty-fifth (1989) session. It noted that the Commission had requested its Chairman to make every effort to organize the session's work within the time normally allotted, with additional meetings only if absolutely necessary.

On 10 March,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission had recommended to the Council the above conditions for organizing its 1989 session.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its fortieth session at Geneva from 8 August to 2 September 1988;⁽¹⁰⁾ it adopted 40 resolutions and 13 decisions. It also recommended to the Commission on Human Rights, its parent body, eight draft resolutions and five draft decisions for adoption.

On 25 August,⁽¹¹⁾ the Sub-Commission decided to continue discussing in 1989 ways of implementing the Commission's resolution on the work of the Sub-Commission, and to review its work biennially thereafter. On 2 September,⁽¹²⁾ it approved the composition of its working groups on communications, slavery and indigenous populations, each representing five regions (Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America, and Western Europe and other).

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission, noting that steps taken by the Sub-Commission to rationalize and streamline its work had not fully achieved the desired results, set out further guidelines for organizing the Sub-Commission's work. The Chairman of the Sub-Commission was requested to report on their implementation in 1989.

Strengthening the Centre for Human Rights

On 24 August,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission adopt a resolution supporting the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the Centre for Human Rights as a co-ordinating unit for bodies dealing with the protection of human rights, and inviting him to request Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to express their views on strengthening the Centre's activities.

Public information activities

The Secretary-General presented to the Commission in 1988 a report⁽¹⁵⁾ on the development of public information activities in the human rights field, with special emphasis on preparations for the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see below) and activities by the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) and the United Nations Office at Geneva. They focused on dissemination of human rights information and distribution of teaching materials; organization of symposia, seminars and workshops on human rights issues; production of radio and audio-visual materials; co-ordination within the United Nations system; and special observances. The report noted the establishment of a new section for external relations, publications and documentation within the Centre for Human Rights, aimed at broadening and deepening public understanding of human rights and the Organization's efforts to advance them.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission encouraged Member States to publicize United Nations human rights activities and give priority to disseminating in their national and local languages the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽¹⁷⁾ the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽¹⁸⁾ and other international conventions. It welcomed the Secretary-General's undertaking that DPI would encourage NGOs to carry out activities in support of United Nations work on human rights, and urged DPI to give special attention to the role of the United Nations information centres (UNICs) in the Organization's campaign. The Secretary-General was requested to establish collections of basic reference materials at each UNIC by the end of 1988, to explore the possibility of co-production arrangements for audio-visual programmes on human rights issues, and to finalize the United Nations teaching booklet on human rights. Member States were urged to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues. The Commission encouraged all those responsible for training in the areas of law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate human rights components in their programmes. It also asked the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States, United Nations organs and NGOs on activities for the proposed world public information campaign on human rights (see below), to ensure proper storage and distribution of United Nations materials on human rights, to provide adequate funding for public information activities in that field and to report on those activities in 1989.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with UNESCO and other organizations, to develop a global programme to prepare teaching materials for all levels of education and for the training of teachers to teach human rights.

World public information campaign

In October 1988 pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁰⁾ and a 1988 request of the Commission,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report on the advisability of launching a world public information campaign on human rights.⁽²¹⁾ The report outlined the aims and scope of the proposed campaign, its objectives being to increase understanding and awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to educate people as to United Nations efforts and the international machinery to realize them. The campaign, directed to all segments of the world's population, was to be financed from existing United Nations resources supplemented by voluntary contributions.

Activities envisaged under the campaign included workshops and training courses, a yearly programme of at least 30 fellowships and between 20 and 25 internships on human rights, special observances, media coverage and promotion activities, and the preparation and dissemination of printed public information and reference materials. The report also provided background information on dissemination of various human rights instruments; commemorations and anniversaries of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; advisory services and training programmes (see below); and the development of public information activities in the human rights field.

In another report,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the implementation of a 1987 General Assembly resolution on public information activities.⁽²⁰⁾ The report noted steps by DPI to establish a collection of basic reference works on human rights at UNICs and to increase promotion of their activities. A teaching booklet was prepared and out-of-stock human rights materials were reprinted and distributed to national focal points. Annexed to the report were replies from Governments to the Assembly's resolution, providing information on their efforts to publicize United Nations activities in the field of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/128 without vote.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are essential to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and that carefully designed programmes of teaching, education and information are essential to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular its resolution 42/118 of 7 December 1987, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/74 of 10 March 1988,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights and on the advisability of launching, within existing resources, a world public information campaign on human rights;

2. Reaffirms the need for information materials on human rights to be carefully designed in clear and accessible form, to be tailored to regional and national requirements and circumstances with specific target audiences in mind and to be effectively disseminated in national and local languages and in sufficient volume to have the desired impact, and for effective use also to be made of the mass media, in particular radio and television and audio-visual technologies, in order to reach wider audiences, with priority being given to children, young people and the disadvantaged including those in isolated areas;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the fullest effective deployment of the skills and resources of all concerned units of the Secretariat and to make available, within existing resources, and in particular from the budget of the Department of Public Information, adequate funding for developing practical and effective human rights information activities, including those within the programme of the World Public Information Campaign-on-Human Rights;

12. Urges all Member States that have not yet done so to nominate national focal points that could be supplied with copies of relevant human rights material and that might also serve as points of liaison with the United Nations in the development and implementation of the World Campaign, and requests the Secretary-General to publish the list of such focal points in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fifth session a report on the current and proposed aims and activities of the World Campaign;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Milan, Italy, 7-9 September) and on human rights and the administration of justice (Tunis, Tunisia, 26 September-1 October), and an international seminar on teaching human rights (Geneva, 5-9 December). Under the fellowship programme, 31 fellows received training during the year (14 from Africa, 7 from Asia, 6 from Latin America, and 2 each from Eastern and Western Europe). In addition, the Centre awarded some 30 internships to outstanding graduate students. The Commission on Human Rights provided advice to the recently established African Commission on Human Rights and Peoples' Rights of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). In addition, the Centre carried out a number of activities financed by the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights (see below).

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General presented to the Commission in 1988 a report⁽²⁴⁾ outlining a medium-term plan of advisory services and technical assistance activities grouped under three main subprogrammes (regional seminars, regional training courses, and expert services and technical assistance), three supportive subprogrammes (fellowships, regional arrangements and national institutions) and ad hoc subprogrammes at the national level. An addendum contained a table of requests from Member States for technical assistance to strengthen their legal institutions.

In another report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General communicated to the Sub-Commission replies from three States, two United Nations bodies and three specialized agencies as at 17 August, concerning technical assistance for strengthening legal institutions, as requested by the Sub-Commission in 1987.⁽²⁶⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽²⁷⁾ the Commission recommended to the Secretary-General that increased emphasis be placed on expert assistance and activities to develop infrastructures to meet international human rights standards, and requested him to: pursue his efforts for a medium-term plan for advisory services and technical assistance; ensure that the Centre for Human Rights became a focal point for co-ordination of advisory services activities, as well as close co-ordination between activities financed under the regular programme and by the Voluntary Fund; bring the need for further technical legal assistance to the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies and agencies; and report to the Commission in 1989 on progress made in implementing the programme of advisory services. It requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to inform Governments of the possibility of availing themselves of services provided under that programme and to include in their recommendations proposals for specific projects. The Commission also appealed to Member States to consider organizing, under the programme of advisory services, national training courses for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards, and encouraged Governments in need of technical assistance to take advantage of relevant expert services.

Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services

The United Nations Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, established pursuant to a 1987 Commission resolution⁽²⁸⁾ and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council later that year,⁽²⁹⁾ became operational in 1988. Activities financed by the Fund included a regional training course for Central American countries on the implementation of international human rights instruments (San Remo, Italy, 12-16 December); a national training course on human rights (Guatemala City, 14-18 November); a national workshop on human rights and the administration of justice (Manila, Philippines, 5-7 December); and publication of a brochure in Portuguese containing the International Bill of Human Rights and of a poster of the Universal Declaration. In addition, the Fund granted seven fellowships and provided assistance, including expert services, under technical co-operation projects in Colombia, Guatemala and Uganda, aimed at developing infrastructures to protect and promote human rights and strengthening relevant national institutions. By the end of 1988, contributions from Governments and NGOs to the Fund totalled some $800,200.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽³⁰⁾ the Commission called on Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals to consider making voluntary contributions to the Fund, and recommended that activities under the Fund be directed towards expert assistance to Governments. It also recommended that the Secretary-General consider financing and implementing through the Fund those projects which could catalyse the realization of international human rights. It requested him to begin operations under the Fund using available resources, to draw the attention of Governments and competent human rights organs to the availability of advisory services and technical assistance under the Fund, and to report to the Commission in 1989 on its operation and administration.

Equatorial Guinea

In a report on the situation in Equatorial Guinea,⁽³¹⁾ submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in 1988, the Secretary-General supported the recommendation of Expert Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) that the implementation of the plan of action proposed by the United Nations for that country in 1981⁽³²⁾ be entrusted to the National Codification Commission, established by the Government. On 8 March,⁽³³⁾ the Commission recommended that Equatorial Guinea consider becoming a party to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,⁽³⁴⁾ and requested it to consider implementing the proposed plan of action, taking into account the Expert's recommendation. The Expert was requested to report in 1989 on progress in implementing the plan.

On 27 May, by decision 1988/133, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to consider the Expert's report on the manner in which Equatorial Guinea intended to implement the plan of action.

Guatemala

In 1988, the Commission considered a report by Hector Gros Espiell (Uruguay), appointed in 1987 as the Expert on Guatemala,⁽³⁵⁾ on advisory services to that country.⁽³⁶⁾ Following his first visit to Guatemala (20-26 September 1987), the Expert concluded that, despite continued problems, particularly regarding indigenous populations and refugees, the human rights situation there had generally improved, and he recommended a broad programme of assistance to further that process.

Activities during 1988 included three missions by the Expert (20-24 June, 19-21 August, 19-21 November) and the commencement of a technical assistance programme to Guatemala for 1988-1989, financed by the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission expressed its appreciation to Guatemala for its collaboration and facilities for the Expert, and requested the Secretary-General to provide Guatemala with advisory services and appropriate assistance to advance democracy and strengthen its human rights institutions. The Commission appealed to Guatemala to give priority to the implementation of measures to prevent any violation of human rights. It asked the Secretary-General to renew the Expert's mandate for one year and requested the Expert to report in 1989.

By decision 1988/131 of 27 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the extension of the Expert's mandate and the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide such advisory services and other forms of assistance in the field of human rights as might be requested by Guatemala.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽³⁸⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended that the Expert on Guatemala, in his forthcoming report, pay particular attention to obstacles resulting from non-co-operation by certain elements of the military, and indicate ways to remedy that situation.

Haiti

In February 1988, André Braunschweig (France), appointed in 1987 as the Expert on Haiti,⁽³⁹⁾ reported to the Commission on advisory services to that country.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Noting that in January 1988 a civilian Government took office in Haiti, the Expert suggested that the country receive assistance to set up an independent judiciary, establish an autonomous police force and reform the prison system. Annexed to the report were extracts from Haiti's 1987 Constitution, relating to human rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission requested Haiti to consider adopting measures to develop full respect for human rights and recommended that it consider becoming a party to existing international human rights instruments. The Secretary-General was asked to provide advisory services and other assistance to encourage Haiti's democratic development. The Commission decided to ask the Secretary-General to extend the Expert's mandate and have him report to the Commission in 1989. It asked the Expert to establish direct contacts with Haiti's Government and the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/132, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Expert's mandate for one year and its request to the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

Further developments. On 20 June, the civilian Government in Haiti was overthrown in a military take-over, which led to a deterioration in the human rights situation. Philippe Texier (France), who replaced Mr. Braunschweig as the Expert on Haiti, continued to follow developments and visited the country from 15 to 22 December. (See also below, under "Human rights violations".)

International human rights instruments

Human rights treaty bodies

In 1988, there were six human rights treaty instruments in force providing for the monitoring of treaty implementation by expert bodies. Those instruments and their respective treaty bodies were the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁽⁴²⁾ (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽¹⁸⁾ (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁽¹⁸⁾ (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽⁴³⁾ (Group of Three); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽⁴⁴⁾ (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); and the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽³⁴⁾ (Committee against Torture).

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Chairmen of the treaty bodies held their second meeting in 1988 (Geneva, 10-14 October).⁽⁴⁶⁾

Note by the Secretary-General. In a May note,⁽⁴⁷⁾ submitted to the Economic and Social Council in response to a March 1988 request of the Commission,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General provided an overview of methods applied under different human rights instruments as regards their financial implications. The note listed relevant provisions relating to the programme budget implications of United Nations instruments in the field of human rights.

On 27 May, by decision 1988/145, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Also on 27 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1988/42 without vote.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Affirming that the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights is of major importance to the efforts made by the United Nations, pursuant to the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role in this connection and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Recalling the many resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights that have affirmed this concern and addressed various aspects of the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 42/105 of 7 December 1987, concerning reporting obligations of States parties to international instruments on human rights,

1. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to international instruments on human rights;

2. Emphasizes the interest and responsibility of States parties to the various human rights instruments in ensuring that legal, financial and administrative difficulties affecting the functioning of the relevant treaty bodies are appropriately addressed;

3. Urges all States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and all States parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to comply fully with their financial obligations under these conventions;

4. Emphasizes that the United Nations has an interest in ensuring that difficulties affecting the functioning of the relevant treaty bodies are appropriately addressed;

5. Affirms its commitment to relevant provisions of various resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, addressing such issues as:

(a) The importance of effective systems of periodic reporting by States parties to international instruments on human rights for reviewing and assisting efforts to promote and protect the rights and freedoms elaborated in those instruments;

(b) The need for the United Nations to ensure that financial difficulties, which may increasingly impede the functioning of certain human rights treaty bodies and deter universal acceptance of certain international instruments on human rights, are appropriately addressed,

(c) The importance of the application of universally recognized criteria in the implementation of provisions of the international instruments on human rights;

6. Requests the Secretary-General fully to inform the General Assembly at its forty-third session, the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989 and the Commission on Human Rights, as its subsidiary body, at its forty-fifth session, as well as the second meeting of chairmen of human rights treaty bodies, of further developments concerning the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the international instruments on human rights.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/42

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote. 24 May (meeting 22): 5-nation draft (E/1988/C.2/L.13), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 10.

SPONSORS: Argentina, Canada, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway.

Sub-Commission action. In a June note,(49) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Sub-Commission the replies from 10 Governments, as at 1 June, to his invitation, issued in accordance with a 1985 Sub-Commission request,(50) to provide information on circumstances that had prevented them from adhering to human rights instruments.

On 1 September,(51) the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to renew the invitation for submission of information; examine further the idea of offering legal training to local staff or of providing experts to help draft legislation and regulations, with a view to enabling States to ratify or accede to those instruments; keep under review the idea of designating regional advisers on international human rights standards; continue informal consultations with government representatives on prospects for ratification; and update the table of country-by-country developments in connection with ratification or accession. The Sub-Commission also requested its Chairman to appoint a member to report in 1990 on information received.

Reporting obligations of States parties

In 1988, problems related to the reporting obligations of States parties to international instruments on human rights and to the functioning of bodies established under such instruments were considered at the second meeting of the Chairmen of the treaty bodies.(46) The meeting made recommendations concerning harmonization and consolidation of reporting guidelines, co-ordination of reporting, measures for expediting consideration of reports, and projects for technical assistance and advisory services to help States parties fulfil their reporting obligations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/115 without vote.

Reporting obligations of States parties to international instruments on human rights and effective functioning of bodies established pursuant to such instruments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/105 of 7 December 1987, taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/42 of 27 May 1988 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/31 of 8 March 1988, and recalling other relevant resolutions,

Affirming that the effective implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights is of major importance to the efforts made by the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to international instruments on human rights is indispensable for supervising the implementation of such instruments, including the consideration of periodic reports of States parties,

Aware of its responsibility with respect to the proper functioning of the bodies established to carry out specific functions regarding the implementation of instruments on human rights adopted by the General Assembly,

Reiterating the fundamental importance that it attaches to the fulfilment of reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights,

Recognizing that the effective implementation of instruments on human rights, involving periodic reporting by States parties to the relevant treaty bodies and the efficient functioning of the treaty bodies themselves, not only enhances international accountability in relation to the protection and promotion of human rights but also provides States parties with a valuable opportunity to review policies and programmes affecting the protection and promotion of human rights and to make any appropriate adjustments,

Expressing concern about the increasing backlog of reports on implementation by States parties of United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies,

Recognizing the burden that coexisting reporting systems place upon Member States that are parties to various instruments, as well as upon the respective treaty bodies themselves, and noting that this burden will become more onerous for the United Nations and the States parties as additional instruments come into force,

Conscious that, in establishing additional treaty bodies, long-term problems both in terms of enhanced reporting obligations and of financial implications should be appropriately addressed,

Concerned that the problem of securing sufficient financial resources may increasingly hamper the proper functioning of treaty bodies, as noted with concern in the recent reports of five treaty bodies,

Reaffirming the importance of providing resources for all bodies supervising the implementation of international instruments on human rights, including sufficient financial resources to ensure the effective functioning of the treaty bodies,

Reaffirming the independent, expert character of the treaty bodies,

Taking note of the conclusions and recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 10 to 14 October 1988,

1. Once again urges States parties to international instruments on human rights with reports overdue to make every effort to present their reports as soon as possible and to take advantage of opportunities whereby such reports can be consolidated;

2. Invites States parties to international instruments on human rights to review the processes followed in the preparation of their periodic reports with a view to ensuring compliance with relevant guidelines, improving the quality of description and analysis and limiting reports to a reasonable length, taking due consideration of the relevant provisions of those instruments;

3. Invites States parties to international instruments on human rights to consider at their meetings further ways of streamlining and otherwise improving reporting procedures, as well as enhancing co-ordination and information flow between the treaty bodies and with relevant United Nations bodies, including the specialised agencies, and requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly of any decisions of the States parties on these issues;

4. Welcomes the efforts of the treaty bodies to streamline and rationalise reporting procedures, particularly by extending the periodicity of reporting, improving the efficiency of work methods and harmonizing and simplifying reporting guidelines;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to consider, as a matter of priority, the finalization of the detailed reporting manual to assist States parties in the fulfilment of their reporting obligations and to allow each of the treaty bodies the opportunity to comment on the draft manual;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, as requested by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, a report showing the extent and nature of any overlapping of issues dealt with in the international human rights treaties, with a view to reducing, as appropriate, duplication in the supervisory bodies of issues raised with respect to any given State party;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide from official United Nations sources a compilation of statistics relevant to the consideration by the treaty bodies of the reports of States parties;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-ordination between the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat with reference to the implementation of human rights treaties and the servicing of treaty bodies;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange, within existing resources and taking into account the priorities of the programme of advisory services, further training courses for those countries experiencing the most serious difficulties in meeting reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights;

10. Invites the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to assist the Secretary-General in the above-mentioned endeavours and to develop complementary training activities in this field;

11. Calls upon all States parties to fulfil without delay and in full their financial obligations under the relevant instruments on human rights;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of strengthening collection procedures and making them more effective;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to convey to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fifth session the conclusions and recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies together with any views and comments he may have thereon;

14. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, in view of its overall responsibilities in the field of human rights, to consider at its forty-fifth session, as a matter of priority, the conclusions and recommendations of that meeting, in particular those identified as matters requiring urgent action, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

15. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To consider entrusting, within existing resources, an independent expert with the task of preparing a study on possible long-term approaches to the supervision of new instruments on human rights, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the treaty bodies, the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights and other relevant materials, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

(b) To review the need for adequate staffing resources in regard to the various human rights treaty bodies;

16. Invites the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies to maintain communication and dialogue with each other on common issues and problems and decides to consider at its forty-fourth session the possibility of convening a meeting in 1990 of the persons chairing the treaty bodies;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session, as a separate item, an item entitled "Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights".

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March 1988,(52) the Commission adopted a resolution on the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,(18) which corresponded largely to resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly later in the year (see below). The Commission asked the Secretary-General to consider, within existing resources and possibilities under the programme of advisory services, ways of assisting States parties to the Covenants to prepare their reports, and to report in 1989 on the status of the Covenants and the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/5 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in the co-ordination of activities to promote the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Considering that the year 1988 marks the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which, conceived as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations and having provided the basis for the International Covenants on

Human Rights, has been and rightly continues to be a fundamental source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 1987/4 of 26 May 1987, General Assembly resolutions 41/150 of 4 December 1986, 42/103 and 42/131, both of 7 December 1987, and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1988/23 and 1988/27, both of 7 March 1988,

Convinced of the continuing need to promote the universal observance and enjoyment of human rights, which contribute to peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights in international efforts to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, so that these instruments acquire genuine universality;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties to the Covenants with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

4. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

5. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation and the necessity for strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances can be assessed;

6. Reaffirms the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights with respect to the implementation by States parties of the International Covenants on Human Rights, and expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which the Committees are exercising their functions;

7. Invites the Secretary-General and Member States to implement the measures set out in the annex to General Assembly resolution 41/150 in order to ensure the success of the activities in celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

8. Decides to include the question of the International Covenants on Human Rights in the provisional agenda for its first regular session of 1989 and to consider under that question the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1988,⁽⁵³⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly, in response to its 1987 request,⁽⁵⁴⁾ on the status of the International Covenants as at 31 July, as well as on questions related to their implementation (see also above, under "Civil and political rights" and "Economic, social and cultural rights").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/114 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/51 of 14 December 1978, 34/45 of 23 November 1979, 35/132 of 11 December 1980, 36/58 of 25 November 1981, 37/191 of 18 December 1982, 38/116 and 38/117 of 16 December 1983, 39/136 and 39/138 of 14 December 1984, 40/115 and 40/116 of 13 December 1985, 41/32 of 3 November 1986, 41/119 and 41/121 of 4 December 1986 and 42/103 and 42/105 of 7 December 1987,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Also recognizing the important role of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in relation to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Welcoming the submission to the General Assembly of the annual report of the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its second session,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports from States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note with appreciation of the results of the meeting of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 10 to 14 October 1988,

Bearing in mind that 1988 marks the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

6. Commends the States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that have submitted their reports under article 16 of the Covenant and urges States parties that have not yet done so to submit their reports as soon as possible;

7. Notes with satisfaction that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have been represented by experts in the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the respective monitoring bodies in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in the future;

8. Again urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

9. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

10. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

11. Calls upon all States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to adhere fully to these two Covenants and to all the rights and principles contained therein;

12. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bear-

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to ensure that the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights are able to hold the necessary sessions and are provided with administrative support and summary records;

19. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates;

20. Again urge the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

21. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories.

8 December 1988 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Pursuant to 1986⁽⁵⁵⁾ and 1987⁽⁵⁶⁾ General Assembly resolutions, a range of activities during 1988 commemorated the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽¹⁷⁾ which was observed on Human Rights Day, 10 December. The Centre for Human Rights held ad hoc inter-agency meetings to discuss preparations for the celebration, and a co-ordinating meeting of representatives of the organizations of the United Nations system (Geneva, 15 January) reviewed the work programme for the year. Information about special commemorative activities was received from 38 Governments and the Holy See, as well as from NGOs. The text of the Declaration was available in some 80 languages following its publication in seven new languages in 1988. It was included in a special anniversary edition of the International Bill of Human Rights, together with the texts of the International Covenants. Other activities included workshops, seminars and training courses focusing on the anniversary (see also above, under "Advisory services") and the production of reference, information and promotional materials, including the Human Rights Newsletter and a new Bulletin on Human Rights. Issues related to human rights and the anniversary were also discussed at a global consultation with NGOs (Geneva, 12 December).

Report of the UNESCO Director-General. In November,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report of the UNESCO Director-General in connection with the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration, as requested by the Assembly in 1983.⁽⁵⁸⁾ The report outlined UNESCO activities in human rights education, information, documentation and the training of specialized groups, as well as activities relating to the International Congress on Human Rights Teaching, Information and Documentation (Malta, 30 August-5 September 1987) and the anniversary.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended that the Special Committee to Select the Winners of the United Nations Human Rights Prize consider making an award to Nelson Mandela on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary, for his personal life-long struggle against apartheid in South Africa.

Other action. On 8 December, at a commemorative meeting held by the Assembly, prizes for outstanding contributions to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms were awarded to M. D. (Baba) Amte (India), John Humphrey (Canada), Adam Lopatka (Poland), Nelson and Winnie Mandela (South Africa) and Monsignor Leonidas Proaño (Ecuador).

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights its significance as a source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Welcoming the progress made so far in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms since the proclamation of the Declaration,

Recalling that Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in co-operation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling also the obligations of Member States under the Charter of the United Nations to respect the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as a basis for the creation of conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

Acknowledging that, despite efforts made by the international community to promote and protect human rights, there is a need for constant vigilance by the international community in this field,

Recalling the responsibility of the international community to promote understanding, friendship and peaceful co-operation among peoples, and to ensure that everyone enjoys the inherent right to life, liberty and security of person,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other,

Underlining the importance of the teaching of human rights at all levels,

1. Stresses the important role of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in encouraging Member States to enshrine the principles of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family in national constitutions and laws;

2. Notes with satisfaction the progress made so far in the field of human rights, including standard setting and codification, since the proclamation of the Declaration and reaffirms its commitment to further progress in this respect;

3. Expresses grave concern at mass and flagrant violations of human rights, including those stemming from racism, all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, and at all violations of human rights that continue to take place in many parts of the world;

4. Affirms the responsibility of the United Nations in protecting and promoting human rights and fundamental freedoms and expresses the determination of the United Nations to deal, through appropriate United Nations bodies, with violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Urges all States to observe the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration and appeals to those States which have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women, and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

6. Reaffirms the importance of the observance and effective implementation of universally recognized standards in the field of human rights as contained in international human rights instruments;

7. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider a programme of action in the field of human rights, including:

(a) Measures to promote the universal ratification of or accession to United Nations instruments in the field of human rights and to strengthen United Nations machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms enshrined in the Declaration;

(b) Activities to develop human rights institutions and infrastructures, drawing upon the assistance of the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, including the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, and drawing also upon the relevant capabilities of the specialized agencies in this field, and other available multilateral and bilateral assistance;

(c) Activities in the area of public information as may be determined by the Commission in considering the world campaign for human rights;

(d) Measures to enhance national and existing regional institutions for the promotion of human rights, through appropriate educational, judicial, legal and other channels, including direct contact among them;

8. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to draw upon the contributions of non-governmental organizations concerned with the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms for the achievement of the above programme of action;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the activities undertaken in pursuance of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "Forty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights".

Electoral processes

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/157 without vote.

Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections

The General Assembly,

Aware of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to take part in the government of his or her country, directly or through freely chosen representatives, that everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his or her country, that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government, and that this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Noting that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides that every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, to vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors, and to have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his or her country,

Condemning the system of apartheid and any other denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling that all States enjoy sovereign equality and that each State has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic, and cultural systems,

1. Emphasizes the significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which establish that the authority to govern shall be based on the will of the people, as expressed in periodic and genuine elections;

2. Stresses its conviction that periodic and genuine elections are a necessary and indispensable element of sustained efforts to protect the rights and interests of the governed and that, as a matter of practical experience, the right of everyone to take part in the government of his or her country is a crucial factor in the effective enjoyment by all of a wide range of other human rights and fundamental freedoms, including political, economic, social, and cultural rights;

3. Declares that determining the will of the people requires an electoral process which accommodates distinct alternatives, and that this process should provide an equal opportunity for all citizens to become candidates and put forward their political views, individually and in co-operation with others;

4. Reaffirms that apartheid should be abolished, that the systematic denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race or colour is a gross violation of human rights and an affront to the conscience and dignity of mankind, and that the right to participate in a political system based on common and equal citizenship and universal franchise is essential for the exercise of the principle of periodic and genuine elections;

5. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-fifth session, to consider appropriate ways and means of enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections, in the context of full respect for the sovereignty of Member States, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

6. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections".

Regional arrangements

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in April 1988 on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights.⁽⁶²⁾ The report noted that contacts between regional bodies and commissions and the United Nations continued to be pursued and strengthened through advisory services and technical assistance activities, particularly those relating to training courses on human rights, and summarized action by the Commission on Human Rights in that respect. (See also above, under "Advisory services".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/152 without vote.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular resolutions 41/153 and 41/154 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling that, in its resolution 41/154, the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of that resolution,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/37 of 10 March 1987 and taking note of Commission resolution 1988/54 of 8 March 1988 concerning advisory services in the field of human rights,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1987/41 of 10 March 1987 and taking note of Commission resolution 1988/73 of 10 March 1988 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian-Pacific region,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level under the auspices of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional intergovernmental organizations,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights may make a major contribution to the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that the exchange of information and experience in this field among the regions, within the United Nations system, may be improved,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Notes with interest that various contacts between regional bodies and commissions and the United Nations have continued to be pursued and strengthened through advisory services and technical assistance activities, particularly those relating to the organization of regional and subregional training courses in the field of human rights;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider the possibility of encouraging these developments;
4. Invites States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider concluding agreements with a view to the establishment within their respective regions of suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;
5. Welcomes the fact that subprogramme 5 of the medium-term plan of activities concerning advisory services and technical assistance activities in the field of human rights, to which the Secretary-General refers in his report, provides for the establishment of regional arrangements where they are still lacking;
6. Notes the announcement by the Secretary-General in his report that, for the advancement of the above-mentioned objective, it is useful to hold seminars in the regions concerned which will draw upon the knowledge and experience of the United Nations development agencies in those regions, as well as upon the experience gained through established arrangements in other regions;

7. Endorses the appeal made to all Governments, in Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/54, to consider making use of the possibility offered by the United Nations of organizing, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, information and/or training courses at the national level for appropriate government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international bodies;

8. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of advisory services and to make, where necessary, the relevant recommendations;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

Asia and the Pacific

In a February report on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in Asia and the Pacific,⁽⁶³⁾ submitted to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council in response to a 1986 Assembly request,⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that there had been no substantive change in the mandate of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) that would enable it to establish a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials at Bangkok, Thailand, but that the ESCAP library continued to receive and disseminate information on human rights.

On 27 May, by decision 1988/145, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights was apprised of regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific by a separate report of the Secretary-General,⁽⁶⁵⁾ which also summarized the conclusions of a 1987 regional training course on human rights teaching.⁽⁶⁶⁾ They included general agreement on the need to advance formal and informal human rights teaching in the region, particularly in rural areas, and on the usefulness of establishing a resource library to collect and disseminate laws, documents and other publications throughout Asia and the Pacific.

On 10 March,(67) the Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue assisting the Executive Secretary of ESCAP in establishing a depository centre, to ensure a continuing flow of human rights materials to the ESCAP library and to report to the Commission in 1989 on the progress achieved. United Nations development agencies in the Asian and Pacific region were encouraged to co-ordinate with ESCAP their efforts to promote the human rights dimension in their activities.

8. Draws attention to the summary of discussions and conclusions in the report, in particular to the need to advance both formal and informal teaching of human rights in the region, with emphasis on the identification of target groups, particularly in rural areas;

9. Notes the general consensus among participants in the training course that it would be useful for the better identification of existing measures and the dissemination of materials to establish a resource library that would collect and disseminate laws, documents and other publications throughout the region;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, incorporating information on progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Recognizes the value of common efforts by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations at international, regional, bilateral and national levels in the field of human rights;

7. Considers that a world public information campaign on human rights would contribute to the promotion and improvement of understanding of human rights;

8. Emphasizes that the wide dissemination of information on human rights is an important task and would contribute to the implementation of universally recognized international human rights standards;

9. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Report of the Economic and Social Council".

Promotion of international co-operation in the humanitarian field

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/121 of 7 December 1987,

Noting that one of the purposes of the United Nations, set forth in its Charter, is to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of a humanitarian character,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which proclaims, inter alia, that recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Guided by universally accepted human values and common aspiration for a better, more just, safe and humane world,

Noting that international co-operation in the humanitarian field could contribute to attaining the ideals of a new international humanitarian order.

Mindful of the significance of the existing workable system to promote, facilitate and co-ordinate humanitarian activities carried out by Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues and the efforts of the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues to promote public awareness of humanitarian problems and to identify alternative approaches for resolving humanitarian problems,

1. Calls upon Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations further to develop international co-operation in the humanitarian field;

2. Reiterates that international co-operation in the humanitarian field will facilitate better understanding, mutual respect, confidence and tolerance among countries and peoples, thus contributing to a more just and non-violent world;

3. Invites Governments to promote, within existing mechanisms, regular exchanges of information and of national experience in addressing humanitarian problems;

4. Encourages the international community to contribute substantially and regularly to international humanitarian activities;

5. Invites all non-governmental organizations concerned with the humanitarian issues examined by the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues and working with strictly humanitarian motives to bear in mind the recommendations and suggestions made in the report of the Independent Commission in the context of their policies and actions in the field;

6. Invites Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to forward to the Secretary-General, on a voluntary basis, their comments concerning further development of international co-operation in the humanitarian field;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his contacts with Governments, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned, as well as with the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues and, taking into account information received, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on possible ways and means of strengthening international co-operation in the humanitarian field.

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were examined again in 1988 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and appointed officials.

In addition, alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Kampuchea, South Africa, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970⁽¹⁾ to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Communications of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities met from 25 July to 5 August 1988. After considering the Working Group's confidential report, the Sub-Commission referred to the Commission for consideration situations which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested human rights violations. The Sub-

Commission decided to defer action on certain communications until 1989 and to take no action on certain other communications.

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

Working Group activities. In 1988, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967,⁽²⁾ submitted to the Commission its interim report,⁽³⁾ as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1987⁽⁴⁾ In the report, the Group re-examined its mandate and considered recent developments in South Africa and Namibia. Developments in South Africa dealt with by the Group concerned the right to life, physical integrity and protection from arbitrary arrest and detention; apartheid, including bantustanization and forced population removals; the right to education and freedom of expression and of movement; and the right to work, the situation of black workers and trade union rights. Issues relating to Namibia included human rights violations affecting individuals; consequences of the militarization of the Territory; the right to work, to education and to health; and information concerning persons suspected of being guilty of the crime of apartheid or of a serious human rights violation.

In July/August, pursuant to Commission and Council resolutions adopted earlier in the year (see below), the Group undertook a fact-finding mission aimed at gathering testimony from witnesses (Geneva, 27 and 28 July; Luanda, Angola, 30 July-2 August; Harare, Zimbabwe, 3-8 August; Lusaka, Zambia, 10-14 August; and Dar-es-Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, 15-18 August).

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission decided to send an urgent message to South Africa to lift immediately the ban and restrictions imposed from 24 February on a large number of black civic, political and trade union organizations and their leaders, and requested the Secretary-General to intervene urgently with a view to defusing the situation.

On 29 February,⁽⁶⁾ by a roll-call vote of 36 to 3, with 4 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned the escalation of human rights violations in South Africa since the imposition of the state of emergency in June 1986, including widespread detention and incarceration of children, use of torture against political opponents and indiscriminate use of force against unarmed demonstrators, and demanded that South Africa immediately abolish the system of apartheid in all its forms. It denounced the policies of "bantustanization" and denationalization, the forced removals of the black population and so-called "voluntary" removals, and rejected South Africa's so-called reforms. Those reforms, it said, fell short of terminating the state of emergency, abolishing apartheid laws, dismantling the "bantustans", lifting bans on political organizations and parties and on the return of political exiles and freedom fighters, and ensuring the release of political prisoners.

The Commission demanded that South Africa desist from its brutal repression, torture and harassment of organizations and individuals opposed to apartheid and from the abduction and assassination of political refugees and members of liberation movements based in neighbouring States. It also demanded that South Africa repeal its ban on political organizations, release unconditionally all political prisoners and ensure that all South Africans were afforded a unified, free educational system. It condemned the South African régime for military pressures and other destabilization policies towards the front-line States, and called on it to respect international standards on trade union rights.

Urging all States to stop any assistance to South Africa, the Commission called on the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions against it, and endorsed, pending the adoption of sanctions, other measures adopted by certain countries against South Africa, including prohibition of the transfer of technology; cessation of exports, sales or transport of oil and oil products; cessation of further investments and financial loans and of support for trade; prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and other coins minted in South Africa; prohibition of imports from South Africa; termination of visa-free entry and of the promotion of tourism to South Africa; termination of air and shipping links; cessation of academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations; suspension or abrogation of agreements; termination of double taxation agreements; and a ban on government contracts with majority-owned South African companies.

Taking note of the Working Group's report,⁽³⁾ the Commission decided that the Group should continue to study human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, and requested it to continue bringing to the Commission Chairman's attention particularly serious violations. It asked the Group, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue investigating cases of torture, ill-treatment and deaths of detainees in South Africa, and authorized the Group Chairman to participate in events connected with action against apartheid organized under the Committee's auspices. The Commission renewed its request to South Africa to allow on-the-spot investigations by the Group of treatment and living conditions in South African and Namibian prisons, and asked the Group to submit its final report in 1989. The Secretary-General was requested to provide the Group with all possible assistance.

Reaffirming the Namibian people's inalienable right to self-determination and independence under conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission, on 29 February,⁽⁸⁾ by a roll-call vote of 34 to none, with 9 abstentions, reiterated that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia was an act of aggression and condemned South Africa for the militarization of Namibia; the use of mercenaries; the recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies; the proclamation of a security zone in Namibia; forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes; torture and brutality against the population and captured freedom fighters; the military conscription of Namibians; the exploitation and depletion of natural resources; and the use of Namibia as a springboard for aggression against the front-line States. The Commission strongly condemned South Africa's attempts to impose a so-called interim government on the Namibian people, declared its laws and proclamations null and void, and called on States to refrain from recognizing or co-operating with any régime imposed by South Africa in Namibia. It also strongly condemned the continued collaboration of certain States and institutions with South Africa and expressed its conviction that such collaboration helped prolong South Africa's domination and control over Namibia. The Commission endorsed the universal rejection of the "linkage" between Namibia's independence and the Cuban military presence in Angola and denounced South Africa's intention to separate parts of the territory from the rest of Namibia. It demanded that South Africa co-operate with the United Nations to bring about Namibia's independence, release immediately all Namibian political prisoners, account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release those who were still alive, and declared South Africa to be liable to compensate the victims and their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for losses sustained.

The Commission asked Member States to ensure that all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction fully applied and complied with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,⁽⁹⁾ and requested the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to bring to the Commission Chairman's attention particularly serious human rights violations in Namibia. It further requested South Africa to allow an on-the-spot investigation by the Working Group of treatment and living conditions in Namibian prisons, and asked the Group to report in 1989. The Secretary-General was requested to provide the Group with all necessary assistance.

Sub-Commission action. On 11 August,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Commission Chairman to address a telegram to South Africa demanding that it immediately release Nelson Mandela and Zephania Mothopeng, President of the Pan African Congress of Azania.

On 25 August,⁽¹¹⁾ the Sub-Commission reaffirmed that apartheid was a crime against humanity and demanded the immediate lifting of the state of emergency, the cessation of all acts of brutality by the South African army and security forces, and the release of all political prisoners. The Sub-Commission, urging South Africa to lift promptly the ban on anti-apartheid organizations, strongly condemned it for the recent imposition of capital punishment on 53 opponents of apartheid; the continuing acts of international terrorism and destabilization carried out against the front-line and other neighbouring States; and the decision to proceed with local government elections organized along racial lines. It called on States to provide assistance to the people of South Africa and Namibia as well as to the front-line countries and to continue efforts towards South Africa's total economic, cultural and political isolation. It appealed to them to put pressure on South Africa not to proceed with the execution of apartheid opponents. Condemning all collaboration with South Africa, the Sub-Commission called on States, particularly Equatorial Guinea and Israel, to cut all military links with that country. It also called for immediate and complete disinvestment from South Africa and urged the foreign companies concerned to ensure that benefits that had accrued to the black labour force were fully respected.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1988,⁽¹²⁾ there were 88 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973⁽¹³⁾ and entered into force in 1976.⁽¹⁴⁾ In 1988, Colombia and Mauritania acceded to the Convention. In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Convention,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to it as at 31 July.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three (Ethiopia, Nicaragua and Sri Lanka)—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions—held its eleventh session at Geneva from 25 to 28 January.⁽¹⁶⁾

The Group examined, in the presence of the representatives of the reporting States, initial reports from Argentina, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka; the second periodic report from Algeria; the third periodic report from Mongolia; and the fifth periodic reports from the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR.⁽¹⁷⁾

The Group also continued to consider whether actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa and Namibia came under the definition of the crime of apartheid. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General summarizing the views of seven States parties, a specialized agency and two NGOs.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Group concluded that, by their complicity, such TNCs must be considered, in conformity with article III (b) of the Convention, accomplices in the crime of apartheid and must be prosecuted for their responsibility in continuing that crime.

Noting with concern that more than 120 reports from States parties were overdue as at 1 February and that 35 States parties had not submitted any report, as listed in a note by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Group urged those parties to fulfil their reporting obligations.

The Group made a number of recommendations, some of which were incorporated into a Commission resolution (see below).

Human Rights Commission action. On 29 February,⁽²⁰⁾ by a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 11 abstentions, the Commission urged States that had not done so to ratify or accede to the 1973 Convention against apartheid without delay and to ratify the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.⁽²¹⁾ It called on States parties to the former Convention that had not yet done so to submit their reports as soon as possible, taking into account the general guidelines laid down by the Group of Three in 1978.⁽²²⁾ It reiterated its recommendation that parties be represented during the Group's consideration of their reports. The Commission requested the Secretary-General once again to invite States parties to express their views on the extent and responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid and asked him to invite States parties, specialized agencies and NGOs to provide it with relevant information concerning the various forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II. The Group was requested to continue examining the extent and nature of TNCs' responsibility for the apartheid system and legal actions that could be taken against TNCs whose operations came under the crime of apartheid, and to report to the Commission in 1989. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and to intensify his efforts to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation.

The Commission called on States parties to terminate their dealings with South Africa and Namibia and to strengthen co-operation in implementing United Nations decisions aimed at preventing, suppressing and punishing the crime of apartheid. It appealed to States, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/97 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/103 of 4 December 1986 and 42/56 of 30 November 1987,

Mindful that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid constitutes an important international treaty in the field of human rights and serves to implement the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued policy of apartheid and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its policy of aggression, State terrorism and destabilization against independent African States,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa, in particular the further escalation of ruthless repression by the Fascist-like apartheid régime,

Mindful of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/14 of 29 February 1988, in which the Commission expressed its conviction that the crime of apartheid is a form of the crime of genocide,

Stressing that the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa is the policy of apartheid and that only the total eradication of apartheid can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution of that conflict,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in Southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness, and therefore will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid.

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention which have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States which have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States which have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia and without whose co-operation such operations could not be halted;

4. Underlines the importance of the universal ratification of the Convention, which would be an effective contribution to the fulfilment of the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the fortieth anniversary of which is being celebrated in 1988;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, which was set up under the Convention, and, in particular, of the conclusions and recommendations contained in that report;

6. Draws the attention of all States to the opinion expressed by the Group of Three in its report that transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia must be considered accomplices in the crime of apartheid, in accordance with article III (b) of the Convention;

7. Calls upon all States of which the transnational corporations continue to do business with South Africa and Namibia to take appropriate steps to terminate their dealings with South Africa and Namibia;

8. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the above-mentioned list among all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

11. Notes the importance of measures to be taken by States parties in the field of teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention;

12. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

Foreign support of South Africa,

Human Rights Commission action. On 29 February,⁽²³⁾ by a roll-call vote of 32 to 7, with 4 abstentions, the Commission expressed satisfaction to the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur, Ahmed Khalifa (Egypt), for his 1987 report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance to South Africa.⁽²⁴⁾ It invited the Rapporteur to continue updating annually the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting South Africa and to report to the Commission through its Sub-Commission; to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of such assistance; and to intensify co-operation with the Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid. The Commission called on States to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and disseminate and publicize his report, and asked the Secretary-General to provide the Rapporteur with all necessary assistance, including two economists, and to give the report wide distribution as a United Nations publication.

Also on 29 February,⁽²⁵⁾ by a roll-call vote of 32 to 7, with 4 abstentions, the Commission vigorously condemned assistance to South Africa by major Western countries and Israel, particularly in the military field, and demanded that that assistance, which it was convinced was a hostile action against the people of South Africa, Namibia and neighbouring States, be immediately terminated. Condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of some Western States, Israel and others with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. It strongly condemned foreign economic activities in Namibia and demanded that TNCs exploiting Namibian resources immediately refrain from new investments or activities, withdraw from the Territory and stop co-operating with South Africa. Noting with appreciation measures taken by some States, parliamentarians, institutions and NGOs to exert pressure on South Africa, the Commission called on them to intensify their efforts to force it to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions. It also called on Governments that had not done so to take legislative, administrative and other measures to prevent nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investing in South Africa and Namibia, to end technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there, and to cease nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

The Commission rejected all policies that encouraged South Africa to intensify its repression of South Africans and Namibians and to escalate its aggression against neighbouring States, and demanded that South Africa cease all acts of aggression and destabilization against those States. Strongly condemning South Africa for its aggression against Angola and the occupation of a part of its territory, the Commission demanded that South Africa withdraw all its troops from that country. It welcomed the General Assembly's request to the Security Council for complete and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular the prohibition of technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies; cessation of nuclear collaboration; prohibition of loans to and investments in South Africa and the cessation of trade; and an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods.

The Commission appealed to States, specialized agencies and NGOs to co-operate with the liberation movements of southern Africa and to intensify, along with regional intergovernmental organizations, their campaign aimed at mobilizing public opinion to enforce economic and other sanctions against South Africa. It urgently requested specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund (IMF), to refrain from granting loans or financial assistance to South Africa.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur presented to the Sub-Commission an updated report, with a later addendum,⁽²⁶⁾ listing banks, insurance companies, firms and other enterprises giving direct or indirect military, economic and other assistance to South Africa. The report contained comments on the subject from 12 States, a United Nations body, 2 specialized agencies, 2 regional intergovernmental organizations, 6 NGOs and 3 other organizations.

Sub-Commission action. On 25 August,⁽²⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission recommend to the Economic and Social Council a resolution requesting the Special Rapporteur to continue updating his report and to provide to the Sub-Commission in 1989 a note on the feasibility of consolidating lists of enterprises doing business in South Africa and an analysis of partial disinvestment of foreign enterprises from that country, enumerating techniques employed to avoid total withdrawal from participation in the South African economy.

Note of the Secretary-General. In September,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/92 by recorded vote.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3382(XXX) and 3383(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 33/23 of 29 November 1978, 35/32 of 14 November 1980, 37/39 of 3 December 1982; 39/15 of 23 November 1984 and 41/95 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Mindful of its resolution 3171(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 relating to permanent sovereignty over natural resources of both developing countries and territories under colonial and foreign domination or subjected to the apartheid régime, Recalling its resolutions on military collaboration with South Africa, as well as Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, 421(1977) of 9 December 1977, 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and 569(1985) of 26 July 1985.

Taking into account, in particular, the relevant decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 25 to 28 May 1988, and by the Council of Ministers of that organization at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,^a

Taking note with satisfaction of the updated report prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist regime of South Africa,

Noting with regret that the request contained in its resolution 41/95 with regard to making available to the Special Rapporteur two economists was not implemented,

Reaffirming that any collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed peoples of southern Africa in their struggle for freedom and independence and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and of the international community,

Considering that such collaboration enables South Africa to acquire the means necessary to carry out acts of aggression and blackmail against independent African States,

Deeply concerned that the major Western and other trading partners of South Africa continue to collaborate with that racist régime and that their collaboration constitutes the main obstacle to the liquidation of that racist regime and the elimination of the inhuman and criminal system of apartheid,

Alarmed at the continued collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field,

Regretting that the Security Council has not been in a position to take binding decisions to prevent any collaboration in the nuclear field with South Africa,

Affirming that the highest priority must be accorded to international action to secure the full implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations for the eradication of apartheid and the liberation of the peoples of southern Africa,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories;

2. Again reaffirms the right of those same peoples to dispose of those resources for their greater well-being and to obtain just reparation for the exploitation, depletion, loss or depreciation of those natural resources, including reparation for the exploitation and abuse of their human resources;

3. Vigorously condemns the collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and other States, as well as the transnational corporations and other organizations, which maintain or continue to increase their collaboration with the racist and colonialist regime of South Africa, especially in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields, thus encouraging that regime to persist in its inhuman and criminal policy of brutal oppression of the peoples of southern Africa and denial of their human rights;

4. Reaffirms once again that States and organizations that give assistance to the racist régime of South Africa become accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, colonialism and apartheid perpetrated by that régime, as well as in the acts of aggression against the liberation movements and neighbouring States;

5. Requests the Security Council once again urgently to consider the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations against the racist régime of South Africa, in particular:

(a) The prohibition of all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa;

(b) The cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field;

(c) The prohibition of all loans to, and all investments in, South Africa and the cessation of any trade with South Africa;

(d) An embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa;

6. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to extend all possible co-operation to the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities for his updated report;

8. Reaffirms that the updating of the report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa is of the greatest importance to the cause of fighting apartheid and other violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia;

9. Invites the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as the Rapporteur may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as other relevant sources, in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist régime of South Africa;

(c) To intensify direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat and the United Nations Council for Namibia, with a view to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating his report;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance, including adequate travel funds, that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view, in particular, to intensifying direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Centre against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to expanding his work on the annotation of certain selected cases as reflected in the list contained in his report and to continuing the computerization of future updated lists;

11. Demands that the Secretary-General, in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1986/145 of 23 May 1986, make available to the Special Rapporteur two economists to help him to develop his work of analysis and documentation of some special cases mentioned in his report;

12. Notes with satisfaction the disinvestment measures, trade restrictions and other positive measures taken by some countries and transnational corporations, and encourages them to continue in this direction;

13. Requests the Special Rapporteur to include in his updated report a list of partial disinvestment of foreign enterprises from South Africa, enumerating various techniques employed to avoid total withdrawal from participation in the South African economy;

14. calls upon the Governments of the countries where the banks, transnational corporations and other organizations named and listed in the updated report are based to take effective action to put a stop to their trading, manufacturing and investing activities in the territory of South Africa as well as in the Territory of Namibia illegally occupied by the racist Pretoria regime;

15. Urgently requests all specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, to refrain from granting loans or financial assistance of any type to the racist régime of South Africa;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the updated report to the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, other bodies concerned within the United Nations system and regional international organizations;

17. Invites the Secretary-General to give the updated report the widest dissemination, to issue it as a United Nations publication and to make it available to learned societies, research centres, universities, political and humanitarian organizations and other interested groups;

18. Calls upon all Governments to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur in making the report even more accurate and informative;

19. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and regional, intergovernmental and other organizations concerned to give wide publicity to the updated report;

20. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to give high priority at its forty-fifth session to the consideration of the updated report;

21. Decides to consider at its forty-fifth session, as a matter of high priority, the item entitled "Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa", in the light of any recommendations which the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee against Apartheid may wish to submit to it.

Trade union rights

In 1988, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa (see above) continued to study trade union rights and the conditions of black workers. Its findings, included in its interim report⁽³⁾ to the Commission as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1987,⁽⁴⁾ were submitted to the Council in April by the Secretary-General.⁽²⁹⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/41 without vote.

Infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/63 of 29 May 1987,

Having examined the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights,

Noting with indignation that dehumanizing conditions imposed on black workers by the Government of South Africa and police intervention in industrial disputes, including mass arrests, banning and even killing of trade unionists, continue,

Aware of the ever-growing importance of the role of the independent black trade union movement in the struggle against apartheid,

Gravely concerned at the recent escalation of the repression against the independent black trade union movement, in particular the severe restrictions placed on the Congress of South African Trade Unions, and efforts to impose further restrictions on trade unions through legislative changes,

1. Takes note of the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa;

2. Condemns the increased repression of the independent black trade union movement by the Government of South Africa;

3. Demands once again that the persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement cease;

8. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1989 the question of allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa as a sub-item of the item entitled "Human rights".

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

submitted to the Commission a report⁽³⁰⁾ on the human rights situation in Afghanistan, following visits to that country in 1987 and to Pakistan from 4 to 11 January and from 5 to 11 February 1988.

He noted that in government-controlled areas of Afghanistan, there were certain improvements in the human rights situation, brought about by the policy of reconciliation, including amnesty decrees, changes in the reform process, decrees concerning the return of refugees, the convening of a Loya Jirgah (Grand Assembly), the adoption of a new Constitution and the pronouncement of a unilateral cease-fire. However, the Special Rapporteur was of the opinion that the policy had not achieved the desired results, stating that incidents of torture and ill-treatment in prisons and killings of political prisoners continued to be reported. Although the Government claimed to have released more than 7,000 prisoners after proclaiming national reconciliation, the number of political prisoners stood at some 3,000 and 545 others were detained or under investigation. The Special Rapporteur had also received information concerning forced labour of some 3,000 youths.

Noting that some local agreements with the opposition forces had led to the cessation of hostilities in several so-called peace zones, he stated that heavy fighting in combat areas continued and had cost the lives of more than 14,000 civilians in 1987. Acts of brutality in violation of humanitarian law were still being reported, as were acts of terrorism in Afghanistan and Pakistan. There were also cases of detention, conviction and imprisonment of foreign journalists in combat areas. In addition, some 8,000 refugees had recently fled to Pakistan. The total number of refugees remained at about 5 million and official estimates of returnees totalled some 111,000. The Government of Afghanistan continued to take steps to facilitate the return of refugees. The Special Rapporteur had been told that 24 reception centres had been set up in frontier towns and villages.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the new Afghan Constitution adopted in 1987, while proclaiming basic human rights and freedoms, did not provide for the implementation machinery, a system for the protection of those rights or a system to ensure free elections and representation for refugees after their return. Nor did it provide any indication that the existing system would be brought into line with the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽³¹⁾ Other deficiencies concerned states of emergency and the reservation system governing many basic rights.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the amnesty be broadened and that amnestied persons not be put under house arrest or police surveillance. He also recommended that the Government implement the human rights provisions of the new Constitution; dismantle the system of revolutionary or special tribunals or prosecutors; and investigate the fate of missing persons. He said that the assistance of specialized agencies and NGOs should be extended to areas not under government control, and that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) should have free access to places requiring humanitarian action. Prisoners held by the opposition should be released and journalists in conflict areas should be protected. The Rapporteur stated that the withdrawal of foreign troops should be accompanied by a universal cease-fire and that adequate precautions should be taken to ensure the protection of civilians during the withdrawal, under the supervision of the international community and humanitarian organizations. Recommendations regarding refugees covered their freedom to return; the creation of conditions conducive to the return of internal refugees; and the holding of elections once foreign troops had withdrawn and the representation of returnees could be ensured.

He further recommended that post-war Afghanistan adopt the status of permanent neutrality and that the United Nations assist it, through the advisory programme, to secure human rights, based on appropriate legislation, monitoring mechanisms and infrastructure to safeguard those rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽³²⁾ by a roll-call vote of 29 to 7, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, noting the Special Rapporteur's report, expressed distress at continuing violations of the right to life, liberty and security of individuals as well as freedoms of expression, assembly, movement and association, and concern at the large number of persons detained without due process of law and the conditions of their detention, as well as reports of torture during interrogation and the killing of political prisoners. It noted that widespread human rights violations continued to cause large flows of refugees and displaced persons and expressed concern that the Afghan authorities, with heavy foreign troop support, were acting without respect for international human rights obligations. The intensified armed conflict included indiscriminate bombardments and military operations targeted primarily on villages and agriculture, with severe consequences for civilians. It was also concerned that the education system did not respect the right of parents to ensure their children's religious and moral education.

The Commission urged that all necessary measures be taken to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights in Afghanistan and that the Afghan authorities continue to co-operate with the Commission and its Special Rapporteur. It called again on the parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and to have him report to the General Assembly in 1988 and the Commission in 1989. It also asked the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/136, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request that the Secretary-General give him all necessary assistance.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In October 1988, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an interim report on the human rights situation in Afghanistan,⁽³³⁾ prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's request. The report analysed the human rights aspect of the Geneva Agreements on Afghanistan, signed on 14 April 1988 (see PART TWO, Chapter III), and reviewed recent developments relating, inter alia, to the Afghan Constitution and constitutional life; the refugee situation; economic, social and cultural rights; and terrorism.

The Special Rapporteur visited Afghanistan from 11 to 19 September. He noted that, in general, there was greater improvement in the human rights situation in government-controlled areas. The policy of reconciliation had led to elections and the establishment of a National Assembly. The Special Rapporteur listed a number of laws with human rights provisions related to freedom of the press, the right to work, personal liberty, freedom of movement and freedom of assembly, but he also expressed doubts as to whether all of those provisions were being fairly implemented. Although he had been informed that 6,997 prisoners had been freed since January 1988, there were still some 2,100 political prisoners in September and 893 others were detained for common-law crimes. The Special Rapporteur attested to improved detention conditions in at least one prison, but said he had been informed that released prisoners of military age were enrolled directly into the army without any possibility of contacting their families. He said he had also continued to receive allegations of executions, disappearances, torture and other ill-treatment of prisoners. The Government had announced a policy for the creation of demilitarized zones in the region of Panshir and the province of Bamian, where military operations were prohibited, and for peace zones that had been cleared of mines. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that a large number of minefields laid by both sides represented a serious danger to civilians and a major impediment to reconstruction efforts in certain areas.

According to official estimates, the number of refugees had increased by some 100,000 since January, while the number of returnees rose to about 151,000 at the end of August. An estimated 1 million internal refugees had begun to return spontaneously at a rate of some 200 persons a day, following the withdrawal of foreign troops from their regions of origin. That withdrawal was reportedly accompanied by heavy bomb attacks and "cleaning-up" operations that included artillery bombardments of residential areas and attacks on civilians that had caused significant losses. The Special Rapporteur had also been informed of the continued use of booby-trap bombs and a sharp increase in the number of victims, including children.

A growing number of terrorist acts was also reported in Afghanistan and Pakistan, causing more than 4,000 civilian deaths. The Special Rapporteur cited three recent terrorist incidents, including rocket attacks on Kabul's airport and residential areas and a bomb blast in a Kabul business centre. He noted that, under the law on terrorism, adopted in Afghanistan in August, all members of the opposition were considered to be terrorists.

The Special Rapporteur estimated the total number of civilian deaths in Afghanistan since 1980 at 1 million. He recommended that the Government: pursue a policy of amnesty; ensure that prisoners and detainees were not tortured or ill-treated and that combatants were treated in conformity with humanitarian law; respect the principles of humanitarian law in combat areas; make every effort to end the growing internal conflict by peaceful means; and oblige the belligerents to apply relevant international instruments, should the international conflict evolve into an internal one. He said opposition movements should: give maps of minefields to the United Nations agencies concerned; respect humanitarian law; refrain from indiscriminate acts; cease their attacks on civilians; and not treat their prisoners as hostages. He also recommended that the troop withdrawal not be accompanied by acts of retaliation or the planting of new mines; that the fate of missing persons be investigated; that ICRC have full access to prisons and detention centres as well as to persons held there; and that consideration be given to advisory services and relief assistance for Afghanistan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/139 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Emphasizing the obligations of all Governments to respect and protect human rights and to fulfil the responsibilities they have assumed under various international instruments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals that could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of all residents of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces,

Recalling all other relevant resolutions, in particular its resolution 42/135 of 7 December 1987,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/67 of 10 March 1988 and Economic and Social Council decision 1988/136 of 27 May 1988,

Welcoming the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan signed at Geneva on 14 April 1988^a as a positive development, which, when fully implemented, should contribute to the creation of a situation that will permit the full enjoyment of human rights, including the right to self-determination, by all the people of Afghanistan,

Welcoming the co-operation that the Afghan authorities have extended to international organizations, in particular to the specialized agencies of the United Nations, to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and to the International Committee of the Red Cross,

Having carefully examined the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in which, while it is recognized that there have been some improvements in the human rights situation in the area controlled by the Afghan authorities, continuing violations of fundamental human rights within the country are revealed,

Recognizing that a situation of armed conflict continues to exist in Afghanistan, leaving large numbers of victims without protection or assistance and contributing to violations of human rights and humanitarian law throughout the country,

Regretting that the Special Rapporteur was unable to visit areas not under the control of the Afghan authorities,

1. Commends the efforts of the Special Rapporteur to fulfil his mandate and takes note of his interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan;

2. Welcomes the co-operation that the Afghan authorities extended to the Commission on Human Rights by permitting its Special Rapporteur to visit Afghanistan from 11 to 19 September 1988;

3. Expresses its serious concern that, in spite of improvements identified by the Special Rapporteur, acts of war continue and violations of human rights persist with the same frequency as in the past, especially affecting the civilian population and threatening the life and security of innocent men, women and children;

4. Expresses its concern that, despite the significant reduction in the numbers of political prisoners as a result of various measures, over two thousand persons are still in prison for political reasons, and urges the Afghan authorities to pursue the policy of amnesty and to guarantee that released prisoners are not placed under surveillance or harassed following their release;

5. Notes with grave concern the continuing allegations of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners on remand and political prisoners;

6. Notes with equal concern the reports of disappearances and urges the Afghan authorities to investigate the fate of all missing persons;

7. Notes also with concern indications that the economic, social and cultural situation in Afghanistan has deteriorated over the years of conflict and has now become critical;

8. Expresses its great concern that more than five million refugees remain outside the country because they fear the climate of insecurity in Afghanistan, the extensive presence of mines and explosives, and the continued bombardments of the civilian population;

9. Calls once again upon all the parties to the conflict, in order to alleviate the suffering of the people of Afghanistan, to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to co-operate fully and effectively with international humanitarian organizations, in particular to facilitate the protection activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross;

10. Underlines that in post-war Afghanistan it will be essential to adopt concrete measures aimed at securing the observance of human rights;

11. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to continue to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

13. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-fourth session, the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan in order to re-examine this question in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. In January, Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) submitted to the Commission a report on the human rights situation in Iran.⁽³⁴⁾ He summarized information received from 11 victims of alleged human rights violations during informal hearings at Geneva on 12, 14 and 15 January as well as pertinent written information, which was communicated to the Iranian Government and dealt with: summary executions; torture and ill-treatment of prisoners; persecution on religious grounds; violations of the right to liberty and security of person; economic pressure on the followers of the Baha'i faith, such as cancellation of business licences, confiscation of property, dismissal from government positions, loss of pensions and denial of higher education; and the evacuation and resettling of 23 Kurdish villages.

The Special Representative received a list of 14,028 persons allegedly killed by government agents during 1981-1987, including 2,000 names not previously published. Annexed to the report was a list of 60 persons allegedly executed or tortured to death in 1986-1987, which had been submitted to Iran with a request for information or comments. The Special Representative also received lists of 17 Baha'is detained in Iran and believed to be in danger of execution; he was subsequently informed, however, that five of them had been released.

He further examined the views of the Iranian Government, which had stated that international law was only partially compatible with Islamic law and that secularism of international human rights instruments justified Iran's selective adherence thereto. The Special Representative noted that the Iranian Government refused to provide detailed replies to allegations of human rights violations, questioning the terms of his mandate, the method of conveying allegations, the qualifications of witnesses and the use of the term "minority" as applied to the members of the Baha'i faith.

In conclusion, the Special Representative, acknowledging the cultural difficulties of applying fully human rights instruments in Iran, noted that the alleged incompatibility between some provisions of international law and Islamic law was a domestic problem and did not affect international obligations, by which Iran was bound as a United Nations Member and party to the Covenants, and expressed the hope that the Iranian Government would come to the complete recognition of all provisions of those instruments and application of their norms. He stated that the method of conveying allegations of human rights violations was in conformity with international practice. He expressed concern regarding continued allegations of summary executions and detention in danger of execution, ill-treatment and torture in prisons and economic pressure on Baha'is. He believed that acts still occurring in Iran that were inconsistent with human rights instruments justified continuing international concern, study and monitoring.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽³⁵⁾ by a roll-call vote of 20 to 5, with 14 abstentions, the Commission noted with satisfaction recent releases of prisoners and welcomed the pardoning of prisoners in the hope that it could be the first stage of a process leading to a general amnesty for political prisoners. The Commission expressed concern, however, about allegations of grave human rights violations in Iran, including execution, because of political and religious convictions, and of maltreatment and torture in prisons, as well as the existence of summary and informal proceedings, the unawareness of defendants of specific accusations, the lack of legal counsel and other irregularities in respect to fair trial. It shared the Special Representative's opinion that denial by Iran of those allegations as a whole, without providing details, was not sufficient for a sensible assessment of the human rights situation there.

The Commission endorsed the Special Representative's conclusion that acts occurring in Iran were inconsistent with international instruments and justified continuing international concern, study and monitoring, and urged Iran to respect and ensure to all individuals within its territory and under its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽³¹⁾ Deciding to extend the Special Representative's mandate and have him report to the Assembly in 1988 and to the Commission in 1989, it renewed its urgent appeal to Iran to respond to his request for information and to permit him to visit that country, and requested the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1988/137 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/69 of 10 March 1988, approved the decision of the Commission to extend the mandate of the Special Representative on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as contained in Commission resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, for a further year. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1988/137

24-8-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) by roll-call vote (24-7-14), 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Belgium, Belize, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Lesotho, Norway, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Cuba, Iran, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, Pakistan, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic.

Abstaining: China, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, India, Liberia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Interim report of the Special Representative. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an interim report of the Special Representative,⁽³⁶⁾ prepared in accordance with the Commission's request. The report was again based on oral and written information concerning alleged violations of human rights, and included consideration of views expressed by the Iranian Government. The Special Representative also informed the Assembly of his meeting with a representative of the Government at Geneva on 27 September.

The Special Representative noted Iran's announcement that it was preparing detailed responses to allegations and its promise for increased co-operation, albeit conditional on the non-use of the term "religious minority" applied to Baha'is and on changes in the method of conveying allegations. He further noted a reported increase in the number of executions in July, August and September 1988 and continuing ill-treatment and torture, both physical and psychological, in Iranian prisons, as well as the existence of summary and informal proceedings and other irregularities contravening international standards on fair trial. The number of political prisoners, reportedly affirmed by an Iranian official, stood at 9,000; according to other sources, it was much higher. The Special Representative continued to receive reports on poor conditions in prisons and expressed concern over the suspension of family visits to political prisoners in Evin prison in Teheran. He stated that allegations concerning the Iranian penitentiary system deserved a thorough investigation by the Government and that the elimination of practices inconsistent with human rights instruments had to be considered at the legislative and executive levels.

With regard to alleged violations of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, harassment of the Baha'i community diminished somewhat; no new arrests or executions were reported, and a number of Baha'is were released from prison, including 13 in July alone, while the sentences of others were reduced. However, 140 Baha'is were still said to remain in prison. According to the official Iranian stand, strongly denied by the Baha'i International Community, Baha'is were persecuted not on the grounds of their faith but for engagement in subversive activities. In conclusion, the Special Representative recommended renewal of the urgent appeal to Iran for full co-operation with him and for compliance with its international obligations, and expressed his belief that the persistence of alleged human rights violations justified continuing monitoring of the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/137 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling its pertinent resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Taking note, in particular, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/69 of 10 March 1988, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Representative for one year and requested him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and to submit a final report to the Commission at its forty-fifth session,

Welcoming the recent cease-fire as a positive development that should contribute to a situation in which human rights and fundamental freedoms can be fully enjoyed,

Taking note of the Special Representative's view that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran continued, during the period under consideration, to indicate its willingness to increase gradually its co-operation with the competent United Nations organs,

Recognizing as a positive development the undertaking by the Iranian authorities to provide a detailed response to allegations of violations of human rights,

Noting, nevertheless, that a detailed response to individual allegations brought to the attention of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran by the Special Representative has yet to be received,

Regretting that, notwithstanding the indication of a greater willingness to co-operate with the Special Representative, a state of full co-operation has yet to be achieved,

Noting the recent contacts between the Special Representative and the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, which it is hoped will lead to a state of full co-operation between the Special Representative and that Government, including a visit to the Islamic Republic of Iran, so that he can fulfil his mandate,

Noting that the Baha'is in the Islamic Republic of Iran continue to be subjected to various forms of harassment and discrimination, although there are indications that the intensity of the campaign of persecution against the Baha'is has diminished somewhat in recent months and that a number of them have been released from prison,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Representative and the considerations and observations contained therein;

2. Once again urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to extend its full co-operation to the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights and, in particular, to permit him to visit that country;

3. Culls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to give immediate effect to its undertaking to provide detailed information concerning the allegations of human rights violations that have been brought to its attention;

4. Expresses once more its deep concern about the numerous and detailed allegations of grave human rights violations in the Islamic Republic of Iran to which the Special Representative has referred in his report, namely, those related to the right to life, the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the right to liberty and security of person, the right to a fair trial and the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

5. Expresses its grave concern that, although the Special Representative observes that the number of alleged violations of the right to life continued to decrease during 1987, the information available to him indicates that there was a renewed wave of executions in the period July-September 1988 whereby a large number of persons died because of their political convictions;

6. Expresses its deep concern at allegations that ill-treatment and torture, both physical and psychological, continued to be common practice in Iranian prisons, especially during interrogation but also immediately after arrest and before and after the final verdict;

7. Expresses its deep concern also at the existence of extremely summary, informal and irregular proceedings, failure to inform defendants of specific accusations against them, lack of legal counsel, absence of an appropriate instance for appeal and other irregularities that contravene international standards on fair trial;

8. Shares the opinion of the Special Representative regarding the importance of prompt investigation into all allegations of irregularities in the treatment of political prisoners and other persons in custody, as well as the necessity of adequate redress for those whose human rights have been violated;

9. Welcomes the intention of the Special Representative to consider in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fifth session several issues pertaining to the legal system applicable in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

10. Endorses the conclusion of the Special Representative that acts continue to occur in the Islamic Republic of Iran that are inconsistent with the provisions of international instruments by which that country is bound and that the persistence of alleged violations of human rights continues to justify continuing international concern and continued monitoring by the United Nations of the situation in that country;

11. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, as a State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect and ensure the rights recognized in that Covenant to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;

13. Decides to keep under consideration the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, during its forty-fourth session in order to re-examine it in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Kampuchea

Both the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed that continued occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces constituted the primary violation of human rights in that country (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

Europe and the Mediterranean

Albania

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March,⁽³⁷⁾ by a roll-call vote of 15 to 11, with 17 abstentions, the Commission decided that consideration of the human rights situation in Albania should be taken up under its public procedure. It recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the confidential material concerning Albania no longer be restricted.

On 27 May, the Council, by a recorded vote of 11 in favour to 13 against, with 29 abstentions, rejected the Commission's recommendation, which had been approved by its Second Committee by a recorded vote of 13 to 10, with 25 abstentions.⁽³⁸⁾

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽³⁹⁾ by 12 votes to 4, with 6 abstentions, the Sub-Commission strongly disapproved the inhuman treatment of minorities living in Albania and requested the Commission to urge Albania to provide adequate constitutional and legal measures consistent with international human rights instruments with a view to ensuring freedom of religion or belief and providing safeguards and remedies against discrimination on grounds of religion or belief. The Sub-Commission also asked the Commission to call on Albania to restore and guarantee all human rights of ethnic and religious minorities, particularly the Greek minority, and to free all political prisoners. The Secretary-General was requested to bring to the attention of the Commission and its Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance allegations of human rights violations in Albania and to inform the Sub-Commission in 1989 of the Commission's deliberations, as well as of any consideration of the matter by the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council.

Cyprus

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Commission decided to postpone consideration of the question of human rights in Cyprus until its 1989 session, when the Secretary-General was to report to it.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported⁽⁴¹⁾ that the two sides in Cyprus agreed to achieve a negotiated settlement of the problem by 1 June 1989. The Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus held seven sessions during 1988, and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus continued, under its mandate, to discharge humanitarian functions on behalf of the Greek Cypriots remaining in the northern part of the island, whose number stood at 639 at the end of November, as well as to make periodic visits to Turkish Cypriots living in the south. (For details, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

Chile

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February). In a report to the Commission on the human rights situation in Chile,⁽⁴²⁾ covering mainly the second half of 1987, Special Rapporteur Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) said that, during his third visit to Chile from 8 to 21 December 1987, he was informed about the detention conditions of 470 persons charged with infringing internal security or related offences, of whom 367 awaited trial and 65 were convicted. He also received information about the promulgation of four new secret laws and other legislation which might place additional obstacles to judicial investigation of human rights questions and reports of 52 new cases of alleged torture in police custody and persons abducted for political reasons, 136 incidents of unjustified violence, 44 cases of political abductions, 33 arrests not acknowledged by the police and 21 deaths. The Special Rapporteur was told that 644 persons were subject to a ban on entering the country and that 40 exiled Chileans who had lost their Chilean nationality were listed as undesirable aliens. He learned about the lack of progress in judicial investigations of outstanding cases, including those of missing detainees, and about live new disappearances.

The Special Rapporteur examined complaints from legal and other documents regarding violations of the rights to life, physical and moral integrity, liberty, security, proper trial and procedural guarantees, to enter and leave the country freely, and freedom of expression and information, as well as alleged disappearances. He noted the full cooperation of the Chilean Government, except for the Minister of Justice, and stated that a forthcoming plebiscite constituted progress in the sphere of respect for human rights, although more limited than general elections. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that on 14 January 1988 the Government announced its approval of the Constitutional Organizational Act on votes and ballots for the election of the President and parliamentarians and for plebiscites; the Act had to be approved by the Constitutional Court and promulgated. He was informed that a new Act concerning State television was adopted to regulate fairly the time available for each political party taking part in the plebiscite. At the same time, the Special Rapporteur noted that there was no longer a ban on media coverage of terrorist activities, that no new administrative banishment orders were issued in the second half of 1987 and that the Government had decided to end the exile of Chileans forbidden to return to their country. He further referred to an order by the Ministries of the Interior and of Defence, instructing police authorities to avoid maltreatment, including torture, and to the agreements allowing ICRC access to persons detained on the premises of police agencies.

On the other hand, however, the Special Rapporteur noted that two decrees, issued on 1 September, banned media coverage of public activities of individuals or organizations and extended the state of emergency in Chile for three months, permitting authorities to prohibit entry into or departure from the country, restrict freedoms of movement and opinion, suspend the right of assembly and censor correspondence and communications. By another decree of 1 September, the state of a threat to internal law and order had been extended for six months, allowing the detention of persons for up to five days in places other than prison and for a further 15 days if "terrorist acts" occurred, restricting the rights of assembly and expression, prohibiting entry into or ordering the expulsion from Chile of persons propagating doctrines contrary to Chile's interests, and banishing individuals to remote parts of the country for renewable periods of up to three months. Yet another decree restricted the freedom of information by subjecting any new publication to prior administrative authorization.

In addition, prolonged periods of incommunicado detention were still frequently ordered, and torture was still practised, although on a smaller scale, as was intimidation, usually carried out by private gangs. Other matters of concern were military courts, characterized by excessively long trials, harshness, wide field of action and their tendency to take over civil cases; the curtailed freedom of the press; and the recurrence of disappearances.

The Special Rapporteur recommended lifting the two states of emergency; ratifying international conventions against torture; speeding up the process of enacting constitutional organization laws; finding urgently the five persons missing since September 1987; clarifying deaths believed to have resulted from illegal executions of opponents of the Chilean political regime; terminating exile without delay; changing the official policy towards the Mapuche population, particularly the legislation on land division; taking measures against acts of intimidation; giving due attention to new and previous allegations of human rights violations; putting an end to unlawful coercion, especially torture; reducing the length of incommunicado detention; and organizing training courses for law-enforcement officials on the proper treatment of persons deprived of their liberty. He also recommended reviewing the system of justice and reforming pertinent legislation, with a view to defining the jurisdictions of the military and civil systems and giving independence to the civil system; revising laws restricting human rights and freedoms, as well as the Code of Penal Procedure, to avert abusive proceedings; and adequately protecting freedom of expression and the activities of the media.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March ⁽⁴³⁾ by a roll-call vote of 34 to none, with 7 abstentions, the Commission expressed again its conviction that the re-establishment of a legal and political order through free elections was fundamental for full respect for human rights in Chile and emphasized the need to re-establish the independence of the Chilean judiciary. It urged the Chilean Government to honour requests from all social and political sectors for the peaceful restoration of democracy and to guarantee full access to all means of communication and control by citizens over the electoral process, as well as the abolition of states of emergency and other restrictions on the freedoms of association and assembly. The Commission expressed its concern at the continuation of such restrictions through the use of repressive methods, particularly military searches and acts of intimidation. It also expressed concern at the persistence of serious human rights violations, such as murder, death in alleged confrontations, abduction, disappearance, torture and ill-treatment, the climate of violence, the maintenance of exile and the denial of fundamental rights during states of emergency, as well as at the failure to conduct full investigations and prosecute those responsible for unresolved cases of such violations.

Expressing dismay at the continued acts of violence from all sources in Chile, the Commission emphasized the need to restore and respect human rights in conformity with various international instruments and, in particular, to: end immediately the application of laws and regulations contrary to the full exercise of those rights; put an immediate end to all forms of torture and desist from intimidation and persecution, abduction, arbitrary arrests and ill-treatment of political prisoners; terminate the activities of gangs and groups violating human rights and punish those responsible, especially their leaders; ensure effective investigations of such violations and judicial remedies against the intimidation of witnesses and defence lawyers, and re-establish the jurisdiction of civilian courts in matters within their competence; guarantee the non-use of anti-terrorist legislation to justify any abuse of authority, torture or inhuman treatment against those who did not commit terrorist acts, as well as due process of law and respect for the rights of persons accused of such acts; end the practice of forced exile and respect the right of Chileans to live in and freely enter or leave their country; restore labour rights and terminate the repression of trade union activities; broaden and guarantee the rights of political parties to campaign peacefully; extend full co-operation to ICRC; and investigate and clarify without delay the fate of disappeared persons who were arrested for political reasons.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and have him report to the Assembly in 1988 and to the Commission in 1989, and recommended that the Economic and Social Council ensure provision of the necessary resources and staff.

On 27 May, the Council, by decision 1988/140, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and its recommendation regarding appropriate financial and staff arrangements.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission affirmed its conviction that restoring a legal and political system based on the participation of all Chileans and on free expression of the people's will was a prerequisite for the full and effective enjoyment and exercise of human rights in Chile. It requested the Commission to urge the Chilean authorities to adopt measures to restore democratic institutions and the principle of legality, and specified measures which largely corresponded to those listed in the Commission's March resolution (see above). Urging Chile to respect and promote human rights in accordance with binding international instruments, the Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission continue to study the human rights situation in that country, and requested specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide the Commission and its Special Rapporteur, through the Secretary-General, with any information on that situation. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the Sub-Commission in 1989 on the results of the Special Rapporteur's investigations, as well as on General Assembly and Commission deliberations and resolutions.

Report of the Special Rapporteur (October). In October,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's request.

The Special Rapporteur noted that Chile had, in May, resumed its co-operation with the Commission, interrupted in March, and had notified him that the number of exiles had been reduced to 518 by 30 August and that the administrative ban on entry to Chile had been lifted on 1 September, ending the exile of all Chileans except the few serving judicial sentences of expulsion. He further noted that the two states of emergency, which had been in force for 15 years, were lifted on 25 August in anticipation of the plebiscite.

Nevertheless, information was received concerning 6 new secret laws promulgated in Chile; 42 cases of violent death, 8 of which were attributed to the Chilean carabineros; 42 new allegations of torture; 64 judicial complaints of unnecessary violence resulting in injury; 1,780 arrests, with proceedings initiated in only 149 cases; and the lack of progress in judicial investigations. Cases of intimidation continued to be reported, as did incidents of prolonged incommunicado detention and an abusive application of restrictions on the freedom of speech. The Special Rapporteur had been informed of police raids in Mapuche communities and of the disadvantage suffered by the 16 opposition political parties, which had access to only 13 per cent of the media space allotted to electoral propaganda in preparing for the plebiscite.

He examined new complaints regarding violations of the rights to life, physical and moral integrity, liberty, security, proper trial and procedural guarantees, freedom of expression and information, and to enter and leave the country, and observed that, while the carabineros were gradually resuming their traditional role of safeguarding public order, terrorist acts continued unabated. Also, the system of justice continued to suffer from major institutional limitations, with the military system undermining and showing a lack of respect for the system of civil justice. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over some remaining penal laws that were a source of repressive measures, as well as the Code of Military Justice with its excessively wide field of application. Continuing harassment of the media was also of concern; as at 5 August, legal proceedings had been brought against 24 journalists accused of alleged insults to the armed forces, of whom 8 had been indicted and 1 convicted.

The Special Rapporteur recommended the completion without delay of the constitutional act relating to the National Congress; ending the system of enacting so-called "secret laws"; undertaking urgent reform of several laws containing excessively harsh provisions contrary to liberal and democratic penal law; desisting from harassing the media, dropping proceedings brought against journalists and pardoning those already sentenced; taking measures to combat violence, especially terrorist acts, and to prevent violent deaths; investigating long-standing and recent cases of disappearance; and finding a legal means to apply agreements between Chile and ICRC to persons detained incommunicado.

During his fourth visit to Chile from 2 to 10 October, the Special Rapporteur observed the presidential plebiscite on 5 October, which, he believed, opened the way for completing the transition to a representative democracy. He noted that the current President and his Government, defeated in the plebiscite, respected the popular will.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/158 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Noting the obligation of the Government of Chile to respect and protect human rights in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile is a party,

Bearing in mind that the concern of the international community at the situation of human rights in Chile has been expressed by the General Assembly in a number of resolutions, particularly resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons and resolution 42/147 of 7 December 1987, in which the Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to take the most appropriate steps for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur,

Recalling the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, particularly resolution 1988/78 of 10 March 1988, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, in view of the persistence of serious violations of human rights in Chile, to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year and to consider that subject as a matter of high priority,

Considering the referendum held on 5 October 1988 to be an important step towards the restoration of democracy in Chile,

Noting the formal acceptance of the results of the referendum and the increase in political activity in Chile,

Noting with satisfaction the termination of the two states of emergency and of the prohibition of free movement into and out of the country,

Deploring the fact that, notwithstanding the repeated visits of the Special Rapporteur to Chile and the adoption of positive measures by the Government, the institutional and legal framework that makes violations of human rights possible has remained unchanged,

Noting that, although opposition publications have in some cases been authorized, they are frequently subject to arbitrary restrictions and limitations,

1. Takes note with interest of the provisional report of the Special Rapporteur, submitted in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/78;

2. Welcomes the positive fact that the Government of Chile has decided to continue to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and again permitted him to visit the country in October 1988, providing him with free access to the facilities for compiling his report, and expresses its confidence that a further visit will be authorized on the same conditions in the immediate future;

3. Welcomes the decision of the Government of Chile to respect the result of the referendum of 5 October 1988 as an expression of the will of the people and an important step towards the rapid restoration of democracy in Chile;

4. Urges the Government of Chile to take the necessary measures to facilitate the full re-establishment of a democratic, pluralist and representative system based on the principle of popular sovereignty;

5. Notes with satisfaction the decision of the Government of Chile to lift the two states of emergency imposed fifteen years ago, permitting greater political activity in the country;

6. Expects that the measures already adopted by the Government of Chile in favour of a transition to democracy will lead to a genuine improvement in the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Chilean people;

7. Expresses once again its concern at the persistence of serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, as stated in the provisional report of the Special Rapporteur;

8. Again urges the Government of Chile to put an end to this situation and to the legislation that makes it possible; to continue adopting measures to permit the restoration of the rule of law in Chile; to ensure the independence of the judiciary and the effectiveness of judicial remedies; to respect human rights in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to comply with its obligations under various international instruments in order to ensure the enjoyment and effective exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

9. Urge the Government of Chile to authorize, in accordance with the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and in conformity with existing laws, the official publication of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

10. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its forty-fifth session, as a matter of high priority, the situation of human rights in Chile, bearing in mind the report of the Special Rapporteur and the pertinent available information, to consider also the measures necessary for the restoration of human rights in Chile, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative (January). Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo (Spain) submitted to the Commission his final report on the human rights situation in El Salvador,⁽⁴⁶⁾ covering mainly the events of 1987.

He noted that the situation of economic, social and cultural rights had deteriorated as a result of a number of factors, including attacks by the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) against the national economic infrastructure. He also pointed to a disturbing number of summary executions attributed to the armed forces and Civil Defence, a resurgence of "death squad" activities and the persistence by guerrilla organizations in practices incompatible with human rights standards. Cases of disappearance and abduction continued to be reported, as did incidents of maltreatment during interrogation of political prisoners. Activities by the criminal justice system to investigate and punish human rights violations remained unsatisfactory, although the number of political prisoners declined. According to the report, guerrilla organizations were responsible for most casualties among civilians maimed or killed by contact mines, while El Salvador's constitutional authorities remained committed to a policy of respect for human rights, which was reflected in the declining number of attacks on human life. The Special Representative noted that FMLN had also committed itself to respect and promote human rights. At the beginning of 1988, however, the dialogue between the Government and the armed opposition, initiated in 1987, was deadlocked.

The Special Representative recommended to El Salvador's constitutional authorities a speedy repeal of legislation incompatible with international human rights standards and the adoption of laws compatible with those standards, increased monitoring of interrogations of political prisoners, and expanded social reform, particularly of the judicial system. He also recommended that FMLN refrain from planting contact mines in a manner incompatible with international law and from attacking the economic infrastructure. He further recommended that States provide assistance to alleviate and improve the living conditions of Salvadorian citizens who had been displaced or made refugees by the conflict.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Commission emphasized the significance of the Special Representative's observation that respect for human rights was an important part of the Government's policy, and took note of the fact that the opposition was associating itself with proposals concerning democratization and respect for human rights. It expressed concern, however, at continuing human rights violations and at the harassment of humanitarian groups by death squads, and trusted that the Salvadorian authorities would continue to investigate those violations and punish the offenders.

Urging the authorities to hasten the adoption of measures to ensure the efficiency of the judicial system, the Commission called on the Government and opposition forces to do their utmost to implement measures to avoid death or harm to the non-combatant population, and urged them to renew the dialogue aimed at achieving a political solution. States were requested to refrain from intervening in El Salvador's internal situation and to encourage the continuation of the dialogue. The Commission recommended the continuation and broadening of reforms in El Salvador to solve socio-economic problems, and requested the Government and opposition forces to continue applying agreements for the evacuation of the war-wounded. It also encouraged the Government to continue to grant refugees and displaced persons facilities to enable their return, and requested United Nations bodies to assist in promoting and protecting human rights in El Salvador. The Commission extended the Special Representative's mandate and decided to consider in 1989 its positive modification in the light of progress made. It requested him to report to the Assembly in 1988 and to the Commission in 1989.

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/135, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Representative's mandate for one year.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Sub-Commission expressed its concern at the recent increase in the number of human rights violations in El Salvador and at the persistent inobservance of the fundamental norms of humanitarian law. It recommended that the Special Representative develop in his next report his conclusions that death squads were made up of police and army members acting under the orders of superior officers and that they continued to capture for political reasons. It confirmed that non-combatants must not be subjected to military attacks and encirclements by government forces and requested the Special Rapporteur on human rights and disability to undertake all possible measures for the prompt and regular evacuation of the war-wounded and disabled and to report in 1989.

The Sub-Commission strongly urged the Salvadorian Government to ensure respect for human rights by its military, paramilitary and police forces, expressed the hope that the Government and opposition forces would do everything possible to renew their dialogue, and asked the Secretary-General to report in 1989 on the results of the Special Representative's investigation, as well as on General Assembly and Commission deliberations.

Report of the Special Representative (October). In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report on the human rights situation in El Salvador,⁽⁴⁹⁾ prepared by the Special Representative in accordance with the Commission's request.

The Special Representative, who visited El Salvador from 9 to 15 October, reported that the armed conflict between government and guerrilla forces continued, causing serious human rights violations and a deterioration in the economic situation. He had received information regarding many cases of summary execution attributed to government forces and to guerrilla organizations, most of which were non-combatant civilians. He was also informed of numerous arrests or abductions and disappearances attributed to the State apparatus and to guerrilla forces. The Special Representative noted a decrease in the number of political prisoners from 492 in September 1987 to 45 by 10 October 1988 as a result of the Amnesty Act promulgated in October 1987, and the continuing return of refugees and displaced persons, with 1,200 people repatriated from Honduras in August.

He further noted that the Salvadorian criminal justice system remained unchanged and that of 147 investigations of human rights violations initiated since December 1987 only 24 resulted in arrest warrants for perpetrators. The Special Representative also learned of 14 arrests followed by maltreatment. However, he noted the Government's efforts to strengthen respect for human rights and activities of the governmental Human Rights Commission. The Special Representative reiterated the recommendations made in his January report (see above) and added that El Salvador's constitutional authorities should adopt measures to ensure efficient control of all agencies under their authority and dismiss those responsible for human rights violations; investigate and punish the perpetrators of such violations as soon as possible; and pay urgent attention to the basic needs of peasant populations resettled in combat zones. He further recommended that guerrilla organizations refrain from indiscriminate urban terrorist acts and summary executions, and emphasized the need for both sides to the conflict to create conditions for a dialogue conducive to its early peaceful settlement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/145 without vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the humanitarian rules laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols I and II thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that it is the duty of the Governments of all Member States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations which they have assumed under the relevant international instruments,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 35/192 of 15 December 1980, 36/155 of 16 December 1981, 37/185 of 17 December 1982, 38/101 of 16 December 1983, 39/119 of 14 December 1984, 40/139 of 13 December 1985, 41/157 of 4 December 1986 and 42/137 of 7 December 1987, it expressed its deep concern at the situation of human rights in El Salvador,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a special representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, and resolutions 1982/28 of 11 March 1982, 1983/29 of 8 March 1983, 1984/52 of 14 March 1984, 1985/35 of 13 March 1985, 1986/39 of 12 March 1986, 1987/51 of 11 March 1987, as well as Commission resolution 1988/65 of 10 March 1988, in which it extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session and the Commission at its forty-fifth session,

Considering that an armed conflict of a non-international character continues to exist in El Salvador in which the parties involved are under an obligation to apply the minimum standards of protection of human rights and humanitarian treatment provided for in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and in Additional Protocol II thereto, of 1977,

Noting that the Special Representative points out in his report that the question of human rights continues to be an important element of the current policy of the Government of El Salvador,

Concerned, however, because, as the Special Representative has pointed out in his report, there has been an increase in the number of violations of human rights in El Salvador, particularly in the form of threats to human life and integrity, frequent violations of the humanitarian rules of war as well as the systematic destruction of the economic infrastructure as a consequence of the armed conflict,

Concerned also about information reported by the Special Representative regarding the activities of the so-called "death squads",

Recalling that on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City the Central American Governments signed the agreement on the "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", thus manifesting the political will and good faith to fulfil its provisions in order to achieve peace and stability in the region,

Convinced that the strict fulfilment of the commitments assumed by the Government of El Salvador in the agreement signed at Guatemala City will contribute to the promotion, respect and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country.

Deeply concerned about the interruption of the dialogue between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario, the resumption of which in the context of the agreement signed at Guatemala City is one of the best ways of achieving a solution that will help to improve the situation of human rights of the Salvadorian people,

Aware that a negotiated political solution of the Salvadorian conflict can be cut short if external forces do not support the resumption of the dialogue but instead seek in different ways to spur the intensification or prolongation of the war, with ensuing grave effects on the situation of human rights and the possibilities of economic recovery in El Salvador,

1. Commends the Special Representative for his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

2. Notes with interest and emphasizes that it is important that the Special Representative has indicated in his report that the Government of El Salvador continues to be committed to a policy of respect for human rights, although difficulties are being encountered with regard to the implementation of that policy;

3. Expresses its concern, nevertheless, at the fact that there has been an increase in the number of violations of human rights in El Salvador and that non-observance of the humanitarian rules of war continues to be a frequent occurrence;

4. Recognizes the efforts made by the Government of El Salvador related to the investigations designed to determine the responsibility of the instigators of serious violations of human rights, and expresses its profound concern at the fact that the capacity of the judicial system in El Salvador continues to be extremely unsatisfactory, despite the efforts of the Government, and consequently urges the competent authorities to accelerate the adoption of the reforms and measures necessary for ensuring its effectiveness;

5. Notes with satisfaction the comments of the Special Representative to the effect that new forces have been incorporated into the Salvadorian political process, in a context of pluralistic, representative and participatory democracy;

6. Notes with satisfaction that, with the consent of the Government, there have been a number of mass returns of refugees who have decided of their own free will to resettle in rural areas of conflict, and urges the competent authorities to allow and ensure that such persons are assisted in respect of their most basic health and food needs;

7. Requests, in accordance with the recommendations of the Special Representative, that the Government of El Salvador and all the authorities, courts and political forces of the country, including the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario, should adopt appropriate measures to eliminate attacks on the lives and integrity of persons, independently of, during and as a result of combat situations, as well as attacks on the economic infrastructure and, in general, all types of action constituting a violation of the fundamental rights and freedoms of the Salvadorian people;

8. Calls upon the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario, within the framework of the agreement signed at Guatemala City, to make every possible effort to create conditions that would make it possible to renew a magnanimous and open dialogue, leading to the achievement of a global political solution that will end the armed conflict and promote the implementation and strengthening of a pluralistic and participatory democratic process that will involve the promotion of social justice, respect for human rights, and the full exercise of the right of the Salvadorian people to determine freely and without external interference of any kind its economic, political and social system, as recognized in the recent "National Debate";

9. Trusts that the fulfilment of the commitments assumed in the agreement on the "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" will lead to improving the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

10. Renews its appeal to all States to refrain from intervening in the internal situation of El Salvador and, instead of seeking in different ways to spur the prolongation and intensification of the armed conflict, to stimulate dialogue until a just and lasting peace is attained;

11. Requests the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario, with a view to humanizing the conflict, to continue ensuring that the agreements for the evacuation of the war-wounded and war-injured for medical attention will not be made contingent on further prisoner exchanges and negotiations;

12. Requests the competent bodies of the United Nations system to provide such advice and assistance as the Government of El Salvador may require in order to enhance the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

13. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fifth session to consider the situation of human rights in El Salvador and the mandate of its Special Representative, taking into account the evolution of the situation of human rights in El Salvador and the developments linked to the fulfilment of the agreement signed at Guatemala City;

14. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-fourth session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador in order to re-examine this situation in the light of the information provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Haiti

Following military take-overs in June and September, resulting in the suspension of the Constitution and of Parliament, the human rights situation in Haiti continued to deteriorate. In September, 11 people were massacred and 70 seriously injured in an attack on a church during Sunday mass, followed by attacks on two other churches; 23 deaths in prison were reported since April as a result of torture, ill-treatment or summary execution, as well as some 25 cases of non-recognized detention. There were also reports of numerous political assassinations and several cases of disappearance following arrests made by the security forces or unidentified civilians.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission, noting that the civilian Government which took office in Haiti on 7 February 1988 was overthrown on 20 June, expressed its concern at the continuing deterioration in the human rights situation in that country and urged the Government to observe full respect for the human rights of its citizens. The Sub-Commission expressed the hope that the Expert on Haiti (see above, under "Advancement of human rights") would inform the Commission on the extent to which the evolution of the situation influenced his ability to carry out his mandate and recommended that the Commission consider appointing a special rapporteur to study and report on the human rights situation in Haiti, without prejudice to the need to continue rendering advisory services through the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General was requested to inform the Sub-Commission in 1989 of the Commission's deliberations, as well as of any consideration of the matter by the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council.

Middle East

Lebanon

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁵¹⁾ by a roll-call vote of 26 to 1, with 15 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned Israel's persistence in violating human rights in southern Lebanon, manifested in acts of aggression, bombardments of civilian populations, detention and other arbitrary practices, and called on it to end them immediately and to implement Security Council resolutions requiring its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. It called on Governments assisting Israel to exert pressure to end its aggressive and expansionist policy in southern Lebanon. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the resolution to Israel's attention, to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation, and to report to the General Assembly in 1988 and to the Commission in 1989 on the results of his efforts.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the Commission's request, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in September⁽⁵²⁾ that he had asked Israel in July for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution; as at 23 September, he had received no reply.

By decision 43/428 of 8 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1988, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested in 1987,⁽⁵³⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Commission in January 1988⁽⁵⁴⁾ that he had brought the Commission's two 1987 resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Governments and General Assembly and Security Council members, the Committee on Israeli practices, and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; they had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the Council of Europe, the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States and the League of Arab States. Information on human rights in the Israeli-occupied territories, including the resolutions, was disseminated through United Nations press releases, publications, audio-visual programmes, fact-finding missions for media representatives and journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine.

Also in accordance with a 1987 Commission request,⁽⁵³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a list of all United Nations reports issued since 13 March 1987 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.⁽⁵⁵⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 15 February,⁽⁵⁶⁾ by a roll-call vote of 31 to 8, with 4 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed that occupation itself was a fundamental violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, and that Israel's continuous grave violations of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and the 1977 Additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions⁽⁵⁷⁾ were war crimes and an affront to humanity. It strongly condemned Israel's policy of physical violence in occupied Palestine and its continued violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people under the "iron fist" policy. The Commission rejected and reiterated its condemnation of Israel's attempts to subject the West Bank and Gaza Strip to Israeli laws and its decision to annex Jerusalem and to change the architecture, demographic and institutional structure or status of the territories, considering those measures null and void.

It condemned again the establishment of Israeli settlements and the arming of settlers in occupied Palestine; aggression against Islamic and Christian holy places and the obstruction of religious freedoms and practices; evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Palestinians and the denial of their right to return and the settlement of alien populations on their land; mass arrests, collective punishment, administrative detention and torture of detainees; and the repression of cultural and educational institutions, the pillaging of archaeological and cultural property and the expropriation of Palestinian resources. The Commission called on the Israeli authorities to implement Security Council resolutions calling for the immediate return of elected mayors to their municipalities and of deported citizens to their homeland, and urged Israel to refrain from policies and practices violating human rights in the occupied territories. It requested the General Assembly to recommend that the Security Council adopt measures against Israel under the United Nations Charter, and asked the Secretary-General to give the resolution wide publicity and to provide the Commission with all United Nations reports on the situation in the occupied territories.

Also on 15 February,⁽⁵⁸⁾ by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 11 abstentions, the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel for refusing to apply that Convention and for ill-treating and torturing Palestinian detainees and prisoners, urging it to grant prisoner-of-war status to all captured Palestinian fighters and to treat them accordingly. It also strongly condemned Israel for deporting Palestinians, calling on it to refrain from that policy and to rescind its deportation decisions. The Commission urged Israel to co-operate with and allow ICRC to visit all Palestinian and Arab detainees in Israeli prisons, and also urged States parties to the fourth Geneva Convention to ensure compliance with its provisions in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It called on Israel to respect its obligations under the Charter and other international instruments, requested it to release all Arabs detained for fighting for self-determination and liberation and to accord them prisoner-of-war status pending their release, and demanded that it cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian and Arab detainees and prisoners.

By a third resolution,⁽⁵⁹⁾ adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 11 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned Israel for persistently disregarding and defying United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan Heights, and strongly deprecated its failure to end occupation and cease human rights violations. Demanding that Israel allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the occupied Arab territories, the Commission declared once again that Israeli occupation of the Golan Heights and its 1981 decision⁽⁶⁰⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory were acts of aggression. It declared that decision null and void and without international legal effect as a violation of international law and the Charter, and called on Israel to rescind it. It condemned Israel's persistence in changing the Golan Heights' physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status and emphasized that displaced persons must be allowed to return and recover their property. It further emphasized the need for Israel's total and unconditional withdrawal from the occupied Palestinian and Syrian territories, including Jerusalem. The Commission deplored the inhuman treatment, terror and practices applied against Syrian citizens, including the imposition of Israeli citizenship and identity cards on them, which was a flagrant violation of international human rights instruments and humanitarian law, and called on Israel to cease such acts of terrorism. It also condemned Israel for repressing educational institutions in the Golan Heights and imposing courses promoting hatred, prejudice and religious intolerance.

Strongly deploring the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a Security Council permanent member, which had prevented the Council from adopting measures against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Commission reaffirmed its request to all Member States not to recognize any jurisdiction, laws or measures established by Israel in the occupied territories, and called on the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the Commission's resolution. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee on Israeli practices with the resources necessary to visit the occupied territories and investigate Israeli policies and practices, and to give wide publicity to the resolution.

The Secretary-General was requested to report in 1989 on progress in implementing the resolutions and to bring them to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental and international humanitarian organizations and NGOs.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,⁽⁶¹⁾ by a roll-call vote of 16 to 1, with 7 abstentions, the Sub-Commission affirmed that Israeli occupation constituted a gross violation of human rights in the occupied territories and that acts perpetrated by Israel that caused the death or physical harm to Palestinians, as well as the obstruction of delivery of food and medical supplies to their cities, villages and camps, imposition of curfews and attacks on their houses, mosques and hospitals, were grave violations of international law. It also affirmed the right of Palestinians to resist the occupation by all means, including the uprising, and reaffirmed their inalienable rights to return to their homeland, to self-determination and to establish an independent and sovereign State. Reaffirming that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the occupied territories and that Israel's violation of its provisions by torturing and ill-treating Palestinian detainees, imposing collective punishment and administrative detention, expelling and deporting Palestinians and destroying their properties were crimes of war, the Sub-Commission condemned Israel for such practices, calling on it to desist from them and withdraw from the occupied territories. It also condemned Israel for occupying and annexing the Golan Heights, its 1981 decision⁽⁶⁰⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, which, the Sub-Commission reaffirmed, was null and void and had no legal validity, and its inhuman treatment and terrorist practices against Syrians for their refusal of Israeli citizenship and identity cards.

The Sub-Commission requested States and international organizations not to recognize Israeli laws or jurisdiction in respect of the Golan Heights, and supported the call to convene an international peace conference on Palestine and the Middle East, in accordance with a 1983 General Assembly resolution.⁽⁶²⁾ The Secretary-General was asked to provide the Sub-Commission in 1989 with an updated list of reports, studies, statistics, documents and United Nations decisions and resolutions on Palestine and other Arab territories.

Pursuant to a similar request made in 1987,⁽⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General presented such a list in May 1988.⁽⁶⁴⁾

Other alleged human rights violations

On 10 March,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Commission decided to accept Cuba's invitation to its Chairman and live other members, to be appointed following regional consultations, to visit Cuba to observe the human rights situation, and asked them to report on the results of their mission.

On 27 May, by decision 1988/139, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision.

Mass exoduses

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Commission invited Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in efforts to address the problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons and the causes of such exoduses, and requested States to ensure the implementation of the relevant international instruments to avert new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons. It renewed its request to the Secretary-General to inform the Assembly in 1988 of action taken pursuant to the 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,⁽⁶⁷⁾ and asked him to inform the Commission in 1989 of developments concerning efforts to enable the United Nations to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request⁽⁶⁸⁾ and the Commission's resolution (see above), the Secretary-General submitted in October 1988 a report on human rights and mass exoduses, with a later addendum.⁽⁶⁹⁾ He summarized the activities of the United Nations Office for Research and Collection of Information, established in 1987 to provide early warning of situations requiring his attention and to monitor factors related to possible refugee flows and similar emergencies. Those activities focused on identifying existing refugee-related activities and communication channels within the United Nations system; surveying NGOs and services capable of monitoring possible refugee flows; obtaining relevant information on emerging situations; and creating an early-warning system.

The Secretary-General also provided views and information from Brazil, Mexico and the United States on the question of mass exoduses and their related activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/154 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject^a and also in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to special rapporteurs to be taken into account when they are studying violations of human rights in any part of the world,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own and upon the international community as a whole, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for international co-operation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees in parallel with the provision of durable solutions to actual refugee situations.

Reaffirming its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, in which it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Recalling its resolutions 35/196 of 15 December 1980, 37/186 of 17 December 1982, 38/103 of 16 December 1983, 39/117 of 14 December 1984, 40/149 of 13 December 1985, 41/70, 41/148 of 4 December 1986 and 42/144 of 7 December 1987, and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 30(XXXVI) of 11 March 1980, 29(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, 1982/32 of 11 March 1982, 1983/35 of 8 March 1983, 1984/49 of 14 March 1984, 1985/40 of 13 March 1985, 1986/45 of 12 March 1986, 1987/56 of 11 March 1987 and 1988/70 of 10 March 1988, welcoming the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes,

1. Recalls the recommendation of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees that the principal organs of the United Nations should make fuller use of their respective competencies under the Charter of the United Nations for the prevention of new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

2. Invites all Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations concerned to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses;

3. Requests all Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant international instruments, in particular in the field of human rights, as this would contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

4. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to making appropriate recommendations concerning further measures to be taken in this matter;

5. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary steps to discharge the function and responsibilities described in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

7. Notes the establishment by the Secretary-General of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information to co-ordinate information-gathering and analysis with United Nations bodies so as to provide early warning on developing situations requiring the Secretary-General's attention, as well as to provide a focal point within the United Nations system for policy responses;

^aE/CN.4/1503.

8. Urges the Secretary-General to use the resources available to consolidate and strengthen the early warning system in the humanitarian area by, inter alia, early computerization of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information and strengthened co-ordination among the relevant parts of the United Nations system, especially the Office for Research and the Collection of Information, as well as the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the relevant specialized agencies;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the strengthened role that the Secretary-General could play in undertaking early warning activities, especially in the humanitarian area, as well as on any further developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

10. Decides to continue consideration of the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-fourth session.

Genocide

On 7 March,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Commission strongly condemned the crime of genocide and affirmed the necessity for international co-operation towards its elimination. It noted that many States had ratified or acceded to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽²¹⁾ and urged those that had not done so to become parties without delay.

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1988,⁽¹²⁾ 99 States had ratified, acceded or succeeded to the Convention. Two States-Antigua and Barbuda and the United States-became parties in 1988. In July,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 July 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/138 without vote.

Recalling its resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which it approved and proposed for signature, ratification or accession the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,

Other aspects of human rights violations

Recovery of assets illegally removed by human rights violators

On 7 March,⁽⁷²⁾ the Commission, mindful of the need to apply the principle that human rights violators should not be allowed to benefit from their crimes, requested all States concerned to co-operate in the speedy recovery of the assets belonging to the peoples of the Philippines and Haiti illegally removed by the Marcos and Duvalier families, respectively.

Compensation for human rights violations

On 1 September,⁽⁷³⁾ the Sub-Commission recognized that all victims of gross human rights violations should be entitled to restitution, compensation and the means for rehabilitation, and that in the event of death as a result of such violations the victims' dependants should be entitled to fair and just compensation. It decided to discuss the matter in 1989 with a view to considering the possibility of developing some basic principles and guidelines in that respect.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In response to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in August 1988⁽²⁾ on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims.⁽³⁾ A list of States that had ratified or acceded to the Protocols as at 28 July 1988 was annexed to the report.

As at 31 December 1988, 77 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts). Seven States-Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Guyana, Liberia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Qatar and Solomon Islands-did so in 1988. All of these parties-except 11-also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States-France and the Philippines-adhered only to Protocol II.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/161 without vote.

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979, 37/116 of 16 December 1982, 39/77 of 13 December 1984 and 41/72 of 3 December 1986,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Mindful of the need for consolidating and implementing the existing body of international humanitarian law and for the universal acceptance of such law,

Particularly mindful of the need to protect the civilian population, especially women and children, against the effects of hostilities, and of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies and civil defence organizations in this respect,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and to disseminate knowledge of the two additional Protocols,

1. Notes with appreciation the virtually universal acceptance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the increasingly wide acceptance of the two additional Protocols of 1977;

2. Notes, however, the fact that, in comparison with the Geneva Conventions, the number of States parties to the two additional Protocols is still limited;

3. Appeals to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties also to the additional Protocols at the earliest possible date;

4. Calls upon all States becoming parties to Protocol I to consider making the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the status of the additional Protocols based on information received from Member States;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts: report of the Secretary-General".

Rights of the child

Draft convention

Working group activities. The open-ended working group on a draft convention on the rights of the child met twice in 1988—from 25 January to 5 February and on 7 and 10 March,⁽⁴⁾ and from 28 November to 9 December.⁽⁵⁾

At the earlier session, the group completed the first reading of the draft convention and requested that its technical review be completed by 31 August. At the latter session, the group began the second reading of the draft.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission, noting that the working group had completed the first reading of the draft convention, decided to continue its work on the draft as a matter of highest priority, and requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a further session of the group in 1988, with a view to completing the second reading. It also requested the Secretary-General to circulate the text of the draft convention to all States to facilitate their participation in its second reading, and to provide the necessary resources for its technical review. The Commission further recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/40 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 42/101 of 7 December 1987, in which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child, to make every effort at its forty-fourth and forty-fifth sessions to complete it, and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session, in 1989,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention at the forty-fourth session of the Commission,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/75 of 10 March 1988,

1. Authorizes, within existing resources, the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of up to two weeks in November-December 1988, with a view to completing the second reading of the draft convention on the rights of the child prior to the forty-fifth session of the Commission so that it may be submitted, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide to the working group all the support and facilities necessary for the successful completion of its task, to circulate to all States the report of the working group and the text of the draft convention as adopted during its first reading, and to provide the resources necessary for the technical review requested by the working group and for the meeting of the working group in November-December 1988.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/40

27 May 1988 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/89/Add.1) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1988/12 & Corr.1); agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/112 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, as well as Commission on Human Rights and Economic and Social Council resolutions, on the question of a convention on the rights of the child,

Reaffirming that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of unsatisfactory social conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger and disability and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced of the positive contribution that an international convention on the rights of the child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, would make to protecting children's rights and ensuring their well-being,

Noting with appreciation that the first reading of a full text of a draft convention on the rights of the child has been completed by the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind that 1989 marks the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Rights of the Child and the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child,

Considering that these anniversaries could constitute an appropriate target date for completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child and for its adoption by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, in 1989,

Bearing in mind the necessity of taking due account of the cultural values and needs of developing countries in the second reading of the draft convention on the rights of the child, in order to achieve the universal recognition of those rights in the future convention,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/40 of 27 May 1988, in which the Council authorized a meeting of the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of up to two weeks in November-December 1988, with a view to completing the second reading of the draft convention on the rights of the child prior to the forty-fifth session of the Commission;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to the draft convention on the rights of the child and to make every effort at its session in 1989 to complete it and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

3. Invites all Member States to offer their active support to the completion of the draft convention on the rights of the child in 1989, the year of the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Rights of the Child and of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the support and facilities necessary for the successful completion and adoption of the draft convention on the rights of the child;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Adoption of the convention on the rights of the child".

Sale of children and child labour

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a June report⁽⁷⁾ submitted to the Sub-Commission in response to its 1987 request,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the recommendations of the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Slavery and Slavery-like Practices (renamed the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery by the Commission on 8 March 1988) since its first session in 1975,⁽⁹⁾ pertaining, inter alia, to the sale of children, child prostitution and exploitation of child labour.

A preliminary report on the sale of children,⁽¹⁰⁾ submitted by the Secretary-General to the Sub-Commission in July, provided information relating to organ transplant and the foetus trade received as at 20 June from three States, one United Nations body, three specialized agencies, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and nine NGOs. The Secretary-General pointed out, however, that more substantive information was needed to meet the Sub-Commission's 1987 request⁽⁸⁾ that those matters be given a deeper and broader accent in the report.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its thirteenth session (Geneva, 1-5 and 12 August),⁽¹¹⁾ recommended that the Secretary-General, with the support of interested specialized agencies and NGOs, complete his final report on the sale of children for submission to it in 1989, and that Member States be urged to enact legislation against child pornography and consider establishing national institutions to protect children and to promote their rights. (See also above, under "Civil and political rights".)

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽¹²⁾ the Sub-Commission appealed to relevant international institutions to promote the education of children on the dangers of child prostitution and child pornography. It recommended that United Nations agencies dedicated to child welfare study the problem of child labour with a view to assisting in its eradication, and that United Nations and intergovernmental bodies and banks involved in development projects ensure that no child be employed either directly or through local sub-contractors. It further recommended for adoption by the Commission a resolution endorsing the recommendations of the Working Group.

Youth and human rights

In 1988, the Sub-Commission considered the question of a report on human rights and youth, entrusted to Special Rapporteur Dumitru Mazilu (Romania) in 1985.⁽¹³⁾ On 15 August,⁽¹⁴⁾ by a roll-call vote of 15 to 2, with 4 abstentions, the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to seek assistance from the Government of Romania in establishing contact with the Special Rapporteur to help him complete his report, if he so wished. The Sub-Commission was subsequently informed that Romania had rejected the request to allow a visit to the Special Rapporteur, stating that the Secretariat had no juridical basis to intervene in a matter between a citizen and his Government.

On 1 September,⁽¹⁵⁾ by a roll-call vote of 16 to 4, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to invoke the applicability of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations⁽¹⁶⁾ to ensure the completion of the report and, in case of non-concurrence by Romania with the applicability of that Convention, to bring the matter to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights in 1989. It requested the Commission, in the latter event, to urge the Economic and Social Council to request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the applicability of the Convention to the case.

Sexual minorities

In June,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Sub-Commission a study on the legal and social problems of sexual minorities (homosexuals, lesbians and transsexuals), including male prostitution, prepared pursuant to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽¹⁸⁾ and requested by the Sub-Commission in 1987.⁽¹⁹⁾ The study contained a number of recommendations relating to the protection of the rights of sexual minorities.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽²⁰⁾ the Commission requested the Sub-Commission to consider, at its 1988 session, measures to be taken at the national and international levels to eliminate traditional practices affecting the health of women and children, and to report to it in 1990.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽²¹⁾ the Sub-Commission, concerned about continuing harmful practices violating the rights of women and children and taking into consideration a 1986 study of the special working group on the subject⁽²²⁾ and a pertinent resolution of the Commission,⁽²³⁾ requested one of its members, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), to study recent developments regarding such practices and to report to it in 1989. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide her with all necessary assistance.

Human rights and science and technology

UNU report. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission at its 1988 session a preliminary report on human rights and scientific and technological developments,⁽²⁴⁾ prepared by the United Nations University (UNU) in response to a 1986 Commission resolution.⁽²⁵⁾ The report concluded that under prevailing conditions, developments in and transfer of science and technology tended to aggravate inequality of decision-making power and the exercise of autonomy within and among countries as a result of disparities in their institutional competence. The second phase of UNU's work on the subject would focus on assessing various means for minimizing such disparities.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽²⁶⁾ the Commission invited UNU, in co-operation with other interested academic and research institutions, to continue studying the positive and negative impact of scientific and technological developments on human rights, and expressed the hope that it would be informed of the results in 1990.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General presented to the Commission at its 1988 session a report⁽²⁷⁾ on the implementation of a 1986 Commission resolution⁽²⁸⁾ on the use of science and technology exclusively in the interests of international peace and for promoting human rights. The report contained views and comments on that resolution, received as at 27 November 1987 from 10 Governments, one United Nations body and two NGOs.

In June, in response to a 1985 request,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Sub-Commission on the interrelationship between human rights and international peace.⁽³⁰⁾ The report concluded that the interrelationship between peace, disarmament and human rights and development was evident in the Charter of the United Nations, its resolutions and decisions and a number of international treaties and declarations, and that measures for strengthening peace and security would promote human rights standards worldwide, contribute to the elimination of all forms of discrimination, and give way to other considerations of a political, economic or social character. Annexed to the report was a list of reports and studies on the subject, published by the United Nations.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽³¹⁾ by a roll-call vote of 30 to 9, with 4 abstentions, the Commission stressed once again the urgent need to strengthen peace and halt the arms race, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life, and the importance of implementing disarmament measures that would release substantial resources for socio-economic development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries. It called on States to take measures with a view to prohibiting any war propaganda, and requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1990, in the light of comments and views from Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/111 without vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments: the right to life

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, to maintain international peace and security and to develop friendly relations among peoples and international co-operation in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Reaffirming that the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family are the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recalling the fundamental importance of the right to life,

Conscious that it is only the creative genius of man that makes progress and the development of civilization possible in a peaceful environment, and that human life must be recognized as supreme,

Recalling its resolution 42/99 of 7 December 1987,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/60 of 9 March 1988,

1. Reaffirms that all people have an inherent right to life;
2. Recalls the historic responsibility of the Governments of all countries of the world to preserve civilization and to ensure that everyone enjoys his inherent right to life;

Implementation of the Declaration on the use of scientific and technological progress

On 9 March,⁽³²⁾ by a roll-call vote of 30 to none, with 13 abstentions, the Commission stressed the importance of the implementation by all States of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind,⁽³³⁾ and called on all States to ensure that scientific and technological achievements were placed at the service of mankind. The Commission again requested the Sub-Commission to undertake a study on the use of scientific and technological achievements to ensure the right to work and development and decided to consider that study in 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/110 by recorded vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society,

Reaffirming once again the great importance of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Considering that implementation of the Declaration will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and the security of peoples and to their economic and social development, as well as to international co-operation in the field of human rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Realizing that the science and technology of our times create possibilities for providing an abundance of material wealth on Earth and establishing conditions for the prosperity of society as well as the all-round development of every person,

Seriously concerned that the results of scientific and technological progress could be used for the arms race and the development of new types of weapons to the detriment of international peace and security and social progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person,

Emphasizing the growing importance of intellectual work, of interaction between science, technology and society, and of the humanistic, moral and ethical orientation of science and of scientific and technological progress,

Convinced that in the era of modern scientific and technological progress the resources of mankind and the activities of scientists should be used for peaceful economic, social and cultural development of countries and for the improvement of the living standards of all people,

Recognizing that the establishment of the new international economic order calls in particular for an important contribution to be made by science and technology to economic and social progress,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

1. Stresses the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in order to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress and to put an end to the use of these achievements for military purposes;

3. Also calls upon States to take all necessary measures to place all the achievements of science and technology at the service of mankind and to ensure that they do not lead to the degradation of the natural environment;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take into account in their programmes and activities the provisions of the Declaration;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration;

6. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to take appropriate measures and to assist the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in preparing the study requested by the Commission in its resolutions 1982/4 of 19 February 1982, 1984/29 of 12 March 1984, 1986/11 of 10 March 1986 and 1988/61 of 9 March 1988;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Computerized personal files

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) submitted to the Sub-Commission a final report on guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files.⁽³⁴⁾ The report analysed comments and suggestions on the provisional draft guidelines, proposed by the Rapporteur in 1983,⁽³⁵⁾ received from Governments and international organizations in response to a 1985 Sub-Commission request.⁽²⁹⁾ It also commented on proposed amendments with regard to the principles laying a basis for national legislation and to files kept by international organizations and agencies. Annexed to the report were the revised final draft guidelines and a list of bodies that had provided information thereon.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽³⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended a draft resolution to the Commission, by which it would decide to publish the study on the guidelines and recommend them for adoption by the General Assembly.

Hazardous technologies

In a June report with later addenda,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Sub-Commission replies from Argentina and the Philippines, received in response to a 1985 Sub-Commission request,⁽²⁹⁾ and dealing with transnational corporations and enterprises operating in those countries, whose technologies, processes or products might be hazardous to human lives or health. The report noted that replies were also received from Brunei Darussalam, which stated that it had no comments on the subject, and from Cyprus, stating that there were no such corporations or enterprises operating under its jurisdiction. Annexed to the report was the table of contents of the first volume of the Anthology of International Policies on Industrial Process Safety, prepared by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations.

Movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and waste

In May, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a preliminary report on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes⁽³⁸⁾ (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽³⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission a draft resolution, by which it would request States producing toxic and dangerous wastes to ban their exportation to countries technically incapable of their environmentally sound disposal; abrogate existing agreements for the disposal of such wastes and products with those countries; and expedite elaboration of a global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes by the United Nations Environment Programme. The Secretary-General would be requested to report on the convention to the Sub-Commission in 1989.

Chemical weapons and the right to life

On 1 September,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission urged States to curb the spread of chemical weapons and to cut off their supply to countries proven to have used them. It requested the Secretary-General to collect information on the use of chemical weapons and on the danger they represent to life and other human rights, and to report to it in 1989 on the information received.

Human rights of disabled persons

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) submitted to the Sub-Commission a progress report⁽⁴¹⁾ on his study on the relationship between human rights and disability, in response to a 1985 Sub-Commission request.⁽¹³⁾ The report analysed information received from Governments and international organizations dealing with the objectives and focus of the study; multilateral activities relating to the disabled; national legislation and practices; and NGO activities. It also provided general observations on the structure and main points of the final report.

Sub-Commission action. On 25 August,⁽⁴²⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to continue his work and to submit a final report to it in 1990. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide the Rapporteur with all possible assistance.

Human rights of the individual and international law

In response to a 1985 Sub-Commission request,⁽¹³⁾ Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) submitted in July 1988 a study on the status of the individual and contemporary international law,⁽⁴³⁾ mandated by the Commission on Human Rights in 1981 and authorized by the Economic and Social Council the same year.⁽⁴⁴⁾ The study provided an overview of contemporary international law, reviewed institutions and concepts related to the protection of the individual and his responsibilities, discussed the individual as a subject of international duties and as a subject in contemporary international law, and considered the international procedural capacity of the individual and his position in the European Communities and in the inter-American system.

It concluded that the legal doctrine after the Second World War prevailingly recognized a world community of individuals who were subjects of international law along with States, and that the individual became the bearer of rights under the rules of international law. The study recommended greater popularization of international human rights standards and dissemination of information on the promotion, protection and restoration of those rights; creation or development of mechanisms accessible to individuals for protecting their rights, reviewing violations of such rights and ensuring the redress of those violations, and appealing to international procedures when violations occurred; easier access for individuals to international courts and tribunals; and the accordance of personality under international law with certain rights and responsibilities as a subject of such law. Other recommendations dealt with international instruments and the status of the individual and with proposed studies on related topics.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to update her study for submission in 1989. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide the Rapporteur with all necessary assistance.

Chapter XI

Health, food and nutrition

During 1988, the United Nations continued to respond to the international problems relating to health, food and nutrition. The spread of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) posed a greater threat to human health; the World Health Organization reported a 15-fold increase over a four-year period. In October, the General Assembly urged continued support for the world-wide struggle against AIDS (resolution 43/15).

At the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992), the Economic and Social Council, in May, reiterated the need to launch a special global awareness and fund-raising campaign to give added momentum to the Decade (resolution 1988/45). The Assembly, in December, stressed that, for the second half of the Decade, emphasis should be placed on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons (43/98).

For the second consecutive year, world food consumption exceeded production, threatening food security and raising prices. In May, the World Food Council adopted the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World, calling for an urgent review of the efforts made to date in reducing hunger. In December, the Assembly called for the strengthening of technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture (43/190). The Assembly also urged the international community to increase aid to developing countries with the aim of increasing food production, thereby stimulating economic growth and social progress (43/191).

Health

Human and environmental health

A wide array of environmental hazards continued to pose a potential threat to human health. Pollutants and hazardous substances became more numerous and more dangerous with increasing industrialization, urbanization and general development.

The World Health Organization (WHO) co-operated with its Member States in building up their ability to deal with environmental hazards. In co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), WHO continued to monitor and control pollution through the Global Environmental Monitoring System, which provided data on environmental quality throughout the world.

An assessment of global air and water quality based on data collected by WHO and UNEP since the mid-1970s-the most comprehensive assessment of its kind ever made-indicated that more than a billion people lived in areas where the air contained disturbingly high levels of sulphur dioxide and dust. Severe water pollution affected many developing countries. Food contamination, on the other hand, showed a downward trend. (See also PART SEVEN, Chapter V, on the work of WHO.)

AIDS prevention and control

In May, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the WHO Director-General's report on a global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS.⁽¹⁾ The report, requested by the Assembly in 1987,⁽²⁾ gave an epidemiological overview and described WHO's direction and co-ordination of the global AIDS strategy.

Jointly with the United Kingdom, WHO organized the World Summit of Ministers of Health on Programmes for AIDS Prevention, (London, 26-28 January). By the London Declaration on AIDS Prevention, the ministers undertook to devise national programmes to prevent and contain the spread of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection as part of their countries' health systems.

The World Health Assembly in May endorsed the London Declaration and stressed the need to protect the human rights and dignity of HIV-infected people.

The number of AIDS cases reported to WHO continued to rise rapidly in 1988. As at 1 April, 85,273 cases had been reported by 137 of 173 reporting countries-a 15-fold increase over four years. This included 62,536 cases, or 73 per cent, in the Americas, 90 per cent of which were in the United States. Africa and Europe each reported nearly 13 per cent of the world total, while Asia and the Pacific reported slightly over 1 per cent. The report also described modes of transmission and global epidemiological patterns, and estimated that 5 million to 10 million people were currently infected with HIV world-wide.

In March, WHO and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) established an alliance to combat AIDS. The alliance was to support countries in developing, implementing, monitoring and evaluating multisectoral national AIDS plans. In addition, the World Bank was collaborating with WHO in studying the economic impact of AIDS in the developing world and the demographic impact of the disease.

A new WHO AIDS series was launched in January with the publication of Guidelines for the Development of a National AIDS Prevention and Control Programme. The second in the series, Guidelines for Sterilization and High Level Disinfection Methods Effective against HIV was published in April. The guidelines were distributed to all ministries of health.

The annual International Conference on AIDS, the major forum of information exchange, was held at Stockholm, Sweden, in June. A major effort was made to support national programmes in evaluating staff needs, defining skills and providing training. The number of training activities under the global programme increased from 20 in 1987 to 61 in 1988.

A range of scientific and technical meetings were held during the year on matters of global importance, such as blood safety, drug and vaccine development, social and behavioural research, HIV-2, health promotion for AIDS prevention and epidemiological surveillance and modelling.

UNDP action. In a report on co-operation against AIDS,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Administrator recommended that UNDP lend up to $2 million to WHO to finance national AIDS activities between the pledging and the receipt of external funds. He also recommended approval of a $700,000 global blood safety initiative to establish blood transfusion services ensuring adequate and safe blood supplies. The project would be carried out under the WHO global programme on AIDS in co-operation with UNDP, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and the International Society of Blood Transfusion. The funds would be used to prepare a meeting of a consortium of international organizations familiar with the technical, economic and structural needs and concerns of government and medical personnel throughout the world and to finance any activities recommended by the consortium.

On 17 February,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council noted the Administrator's report and approved the two projects.

UNICEF activities. A February 1988 report of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) reviewed the impact of AIDS on women and children and the UNICEF response.⁽⁵⁾ The report discussed the medical and socio-economic problems created by AIDS for infants, children, adolescents and women in developing countries and outlined a policy framework for the Fund's approach to AIDS. It recommended that UNICEF consider the problem of AIDS as it affected children and women; increase co-operation with Governments, the WHO special programme on AIDS and other multilateral, bilateral and non-governmental organizations (NGOs); continue efforts to ensure the safety of immunization programmes and promote equipment sterilization; train staff in the patterns of the disease; increase support for specific projects on health education; and strengthen maternal and child health and primary health care structures, especially in African countries where such care was inadequate.

In April,⁽⁶⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board endorsed the Fund's programme involvement as described in the report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/55 without vote.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/75 of 8 July 1987, General Assembly resolution 42/8 of 26 October 1987, World Health Assembly resolution WHA41.24 of 13 May 1988 and other relevant resolutions,

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In response to a request by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General in April 1988 reported⁽⁸⁾ to the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons⁽⁹⁾ and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992).

Member States and bodies and agencies of the United Nations system had been asked to comment on the Secretary-General's evaluation of the implementation of the Programme of Action during the first half of the Decade as well as on the recommendations of the 1987 global meeting of experts to review the implementation of the Programme.⁽¹⁰⁾ As at 7 April 1988, the Secretary-General had received only 32 replies, 20 from Member States and 12 from United Nations organizations. Because of the small number and late arrival of replies, the Secretary-General said, there were insufficient data on which to establish a priority list for planning global activities and programmes for the remainder of the Decade and beyond. He suggested that the Council might wish to recommend that an additional and more detailed report and analysis be made available to the Assembly, on the understanding that more Governments would respond to the request for comments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/45 without vote.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, by which it, inter alia, proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Noting that in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/26 of 23 November 1984, the Global Meeting of Experts to Review the Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons at the Mid-Point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons was held at Stockholm from 17 to 22 August 1987,

Reaffirming the validity and value of the World Programme of Action in promoting effective measures for disability prevention, rehabilitation and the full participation and equality of disabled persons in social life and development,

Mindful that Member States bear the ultimate responsibility for the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Stressing that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat is the focal point within the United Nations for the implementation and monitoring of the World Programme of Action,

Reiterating the need to give greater publicity to the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons in order to revitalize it,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 42/58 of 30 November 1987 and containing the preliminary conclusions and comments of Member States and relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system on the recommendations contained in paragraphs 10 to 39 of the report of the Global Meeting of Experts and on the report of the Secretary-General on the evaluation of the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Noting with regret that owing to the small number of replies to the Secretary-General's request for comments and to the late arrival of those replies, there were not sufficient data on which to base a list of priorities for planning global activities and programmes for the remainder of the Decade and beyond,

1. Urges all Member States and relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to submit to the Secretary-General, as soon as possible, their comments in accordance with General Assembly resolution 42/58;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a more detailed report and analysis, based on the comments received, so that a list of priorities may be established for planning global activities and programmes for the remainder of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and beyond;

3. Calls upon Member States, organs and bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to make all possible efforts in the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and to promote efforts at all levels in the context of the Decade;

4. Reiterates the need to launch a special global awareness and fund-raising campaign to give added momentum to the Decade;

5. Welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of the Special Representative for the Promotion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, whose activities will be financed from special voluntary contributions;

6. Expresses its appreciation to Governments and non-governmental organizations for their voluntary contributions, which have made possible the appointment of the Special Representative;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons during the second half of the Decade, and requests the Commission to give special attention to the implementation of the World Programme of Action.

Report of the Secretary-General (September). In accordance with the Council's request, the Secretary-General in September submitted a new report to the General Assembly on the implementation of the World Programme of Action and the Decade.⁽¹¹⁾ Eleven more Member States had responded to the request for comments since his April report. Summarizing those comments, the Secretary-General stated that more could and should be done to motivate Governments and organizations to implement the Programme of Action and to undertake activities that would improve the living conditions of persons with disabilities. Experience from the first half of the Decade showed that additional resources had to be mobilized. Priorities for global activities and programmes during the second half of the Decade were suggested, as were national, regional and international activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 43/98 without vote.

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and
United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons.

Recalling its resolution 42/58 of 30 November 1987 and reaffirming all of its relevant provisions,

Noting with appreciation that an interregional meeting of representatives of national committees on disability issues will be held early in 1989 to exchange views and information on enhancing the capabilities of such committees,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/45 of 27 May 1988, in which the Council, inter alia, reiterated the need to launch a special global awareness and fund-raising campaign to give added momentum to the Decade, and in this regard, welcomed the appointment by the Secretary-General of the Special Representative for the Promotion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Noting the important work currently being undertaken by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on human rights and disability, which could serve as a useful basis for the continued efforts to ensure for disabled persons the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Bearing in mind that the mid-decade review to evaluate the implementation of the World Programme of Action was conducted so that a list of priorities could be established for planning global activities and programmes during the remainder of the Decade and beyond,

Taking into account the concrete measures already carried out by the Governments of Member States, the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the Decade, and recognizing that much more should be done to improve the living conditions of disabled persons,

Mindful that Member States bear the ultimate responsibility for the implementation of the World Programme of Action

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations in promoting the exchange of information, experience and expertise and closer regional and interregional co-operation towards more effective strategies and policies to advance the status and welfare of disabled persons.

Stressing that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat is the focal point within the United Nations for the implementation and monitoring of the World Programme of Action,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the United Nations system and by the non-governmental organizations concerned to monitor the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Concerned that, at the mid-point of the Decade, the resource base of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons is significantly reduced from that prevailing during the first half of the Decade, and that unless this trend is reversed and the resource capacities of the Voluntary Fund are strengthened, many priority requests will not be met and the implementation of the World Programme of Action will be seriously affected,

Mindful that, since developing countries are experiencing difficulties in mobilizing resources, international co-operation should be encouraged to assist in national efforts to implement the World Programme of Action and to achieve the objectives of the Decade,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

2. Stresses that, for the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, special emphasis should be placed on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons;

3. Urges Member States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to translate into action at all levels, as appropriate, the priorities for global activities and programmes during the second half of the Decade, such as those set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

4. Renews its invitation to all States to give high priority to projects concerning the prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons within the framework of bilateral assistance, as well as financial support to strengthen organizations of disabled persons;

5. Invites Governments to participate actively in the international co-operation with a view to improving the living conditions of disabled persons by encouraging professional experts, in particular disabled persons, in various aspects of rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunity, including those who are in retirement and willing to work with disabled persons;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, including regional commissions, international organizations and the specialized agencies, to take into account in their programmes and operational activities the specific needs of disabled persons;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take, inter alia, the following measures at the United Nations level:

(a) To disseminate widely the text of the World Programme of Action and all manuals and special publications prepared by the United Nations for the International Year of Disabled Persons, in 1981, and the Decade;

(b) To examine possible ways in which United Nations meetings, information materials and documents can be made more accessible to disabled persons and to determine the financial implications thereof;

(c) To assist Member States in establishing and strengthening national committees on disability issues and similar co-ordinating bodies;

(d) To promote and support the establishment of strong national organizations of disabled persons;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct a feasibility study on the substantive, financial and administrative implications of alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade in 1992, which would include a review of the global progress achieved and obstacles encountered during the Decade and which would provide a mechanism for preparing the actions needed until the year 2000 and beyond, and to submit the study to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the regional commissions to enable them to promote technical co-operation activities and the sharing of national resources for personnel training, the exchange of information, policy and programme development and research and the participation of disabled persons;

10. Endorses the measures proposed by the Secretary-General in his report to strengthen the programmes and activities of the agencies and bodies of the United Nations system and to improve the co-ordination of inter-agency efforts on behalf of disabled persons;

11. Invites the Secretary-General and Member States to involve disabled persons to a greater extent in United Nations programmes and activities, inter alia, through the provision of employment opportunities;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to consider establishing, within existing resources, alternative structures to ensure that the issue of disability is accorded high visibility and to develop the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs as a specialized facilitating agent engaging the available resources of the United Nations system and relevant networks outside the United Nations;

13. Invites the Centre to expand its close collaboration with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in the field of disability, in particular organizations of disabled persons, and to consult with them on a regular and systematic basis on matters relating to the implementation of the World Programme of Action;

14. Calls upon Member States, national committees, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to assist in a global information and fund-raising campaign to publicize the Decade through all appropriate means;

15. Recognizes the important role of non-governmental organizations, especially those representing disabled persons, in the effective implementation of the World Programme of Action, in raising international awareness of the concerns of disabled persons and in monitoring and evaluating progress achieved during the Decade;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session of the progress of work of the Special Representative for the Promotion of the Decade of Disabled Persons;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to administer donated funds, using them for projects under the present structure of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, and to continue to make new provisions in order to offer a selection of projects to donor countries that may be willing to finance a particular programme under the "Special Purpose Contributions";

18. Reaffirms that the resources of the Voluntary Fund should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities in order to implement further the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the Decade, with priority given, as appropriate, to programmes and projects of the least developed countries;

19. Invites Governments and non-governmental organizations to continue their contributions to the Voluntary Fund and calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Voluntary Fund so as to enable it to respond effectively to the growing demand for assistance;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons".

UN trust fund

The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons received nearly 70 requests for assistance in the 18-month period ending June 1988.⁽¹¹⁾ Of those, 24 were approved for funding, involving a resource commitment of $308,213: 4 in Africa, 7 in Asia and the Pacific, 1 in Latin America and the Caribbean, 3 in Western Asia and 9 interregional and global projects.

Projects included promotional activities, support to organizations concerned with disabled persons, data collection and applied research, training, information exchange and technical co-operation. Ngos continued to play a major role as executing agencies. The 1987-1988 biennium saw an increased focus on the integration of disabled persons into society through sports-a priority concern identified in the World Programme of Action.

On 1 April,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General appointed a Special Representative for the Promotion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons to strengthen global efforts to implement the Programme of Action. Financed by voluntary contributions, his activities included promoting the objectives of the Decade, raising funds and co-operating with the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs. Sweden contributed earmarked funds to the Unit to provide two specialized Professionals and one secretary for an initial period of one year. Other extrabudgetary resources from Sweden were to be used to establish one or two posts for special technical advisers on disability to cover selected Member States in Africa and in Asia and the Pacific. Finland also contributed earmarked funds to the Unit for one Professional and one support-staff post.

The 1988 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities resulted in pledges of only $91,000 from nine Governments-a substantial reduction from the $175,933 pledged in 1987.⁽¹³⁾

The Fund's income in 1988, including special earmarked contributions, totalled $1,030,369; expenditures amounted to $627,792.

Food and agriculture

Food problems

World production of staple foods declined by 3 per cent in 1988, falling below aggregate consumption for the second consecutive year. This decline was due to the worst drought in half a century in the United States and Canada, coupled with poor production in many other countries. In a report to the World Food Council (WFC) on the current world food situation,⁽¹⁾ FAO provided an overview of the food supply, food and agricultural trade, official external assistance and food aid, and food availability and nutrition.

While food output, including crops and livestock, decreased by 3.5 per cent in the developed countries in 1988, developing countries increased their overall production by 3.2 per cent (1.2 per cent on a per capita basis).

The decline in cereal supplies and higher international grain prices exacerbated the difficulties for low-income, food-deficit countries facing increased cereal import requirements. World cereal stocks were expected to fall below global food security requirements by the end of the 1988/89 season. FAO estimated that the higher market prices would reduce the volume of food aid in cereals to 3.3 million tons below the level of the previous season.

In April 1988, 23 countries were experiencing exceptional food shortages and required additional and/or emergency food aid. The shortages were particularly severe in Bangladesh, Ethiopia and the Sudan.

In a June report,⁽²⁾ requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1987,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed trends in international agricultural markets with special reference to the share of developing countries. The Council, in decision 1988/177 of 29 July, took note of the report.

WFC activities

The 36-member WFC, the highest international body dealing with food problems, held its fourteenth ministerial session at Nicosia, Cyprus, from 23 to 26 May 1988.⁽⁴⁾ In its report, WFC stated that the living conditions of the world's poorest people were continuing to deteriorate. Famine and food shortages in developing countries continued to exist despite record food surpluses in other parts of the world. In an attempt to address this problem, WFC adopted the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World, calling for an urgent review and assessment of the efforts made to date in reducing world hunger. It further called for the improvement of current policies and programmes as well as new initiatives to eliminate hunger and malnutrition. It asked its President, with the assistance of an ad hoc consultative group, to review the policies and instruments available to combat hunger and malnutrition in developing countries, to identify obstacles that might have hindered their impact and to recommend a course of action to combat hunger more effectively.

WFC called for the pursuit of sustainable global food security through production systems that safeguarded natural resources and protected the environment, emphasized the benefits to all countries of liberalized international trade in agricultural and tropical products, and recommended that UNDP adopt a proposed project to promote regional and South-South co-operation in the food and agricultural sector. It also reaffirmed the call of its 1987 Beijing Declaration⁽⁵⁾ for strengthening South-South co-operation as a means of reinforcing individual and collective self-reliance of the developing countries.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/177 of 29 July, took note of the WFC report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted two resolutions on food and agriculture. Resolution 43/190 was adopted without vote.

Strengthening technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,

Recalling also its other resolutions on technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recalling further resolution 9/85 on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, adopted on 28 November 1985 by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation that the World Food Council at its thirteenth and fourteenth sessions called for the further strengthening of technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture, particularly in food production, institution building, training and enhancement of management capability and the development of agro-industries and trade,

Noting with interest the progress already made in technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture, especially in tripartite co-operative agreements and other existing arrangements among international institutions and organizations and developed and developing countries,

Recognizing the expertise and technological capability accumulated by developing countries in the fields of food and agriculture and food production,

Reaffirming that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves in food and agriculture, that developed countries and the United Nations system should assist and support such activities, and that in addition the United Nations system should play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

1. Endorses the relevant conclusions and recommendations contained in the reports of the World Food Council on the work of its thirteenth and fourteenth sessions;

2. Reaffirms the role and importance of technical co-operation among developing countries in their socio-economic development in general and in their agricultural development in particular, and in the reinforcement and final achievement of their individual and collective self-reliance;

3. Welcomes the progress made in technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture, and emphasizes that such co-operation should be carried out in accordance with the national development plans, objectives and priorities of the developing countries concerned;

4. Affirms that tripartite co-operative agreements and other existing arrangements constitute an effective means of promoting technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture, in particular in food production, and welcomes the progress made so far in this regard;

5. Calls upon the developing countries, in the context of their primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves, to place greater emphasis on technical co-operation in food and agriculture and to strengthen and improve the mechanisms for such co-operation at the national, subregional and regional levels, especially their national focal points, so as to facilitate policy co-ordination and exchange of experience;

6. Urges the developed countries, if so requested by participants in programmes concerning technical co-operation among developing countries, to provide financial and technical assistance to such programmes in food and agriculture, including through participation in tripartite co-operative agreements;

7. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and other international development and financing institutions, to provide increased financial and technical assistance for technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture, and in particular to encourage and take part in tripartite co-operative agreements and other arrangements;

8. Recommends that organizations of the United Nations system and other international development and financing institutions, within their respective spheres of competence, give priority in their programmes of work to technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture;

9. Requests the World Food Council to continue its work in identifying effective ways and means of technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture and to make recommendations thereon to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly on technical co-operation among developing countries, to be prepared pursuant to resolution 42/180 of 11 December 1987, information on the implementation of the present resolution, including recommendations for the enhancement of technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture.

20 December 1987 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/915/Add.3) without vote, 15 November (meeting 42); draft by Bangladesh, Canada, China, Cyprus, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of, Mali, Mexico, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Tunisia for Group of 77, Uruguay and Yugoslavia (A/C.2/43/L.16/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 82 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 2nd Committee 26, 30, 42; plenary 83.

The Assembly also adopted resolution 43/191 without vote.

Food and agricultural problems

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions on food and agricultural problems, in particular resolution 41/191 of 8 December 1986,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the World Food Conference,

Stressing the imperative need to keep food and agricultural issues at the centre of global attention,

Reaffirming that food and agricultural problems in developing countries should be considered in a comprehensive manner in their different dimensions and in their immediate, short-term and long-term perspectives,

Emphasizing that the continuing gravity of the economic situation in Africa, including the persistence of negative trends in the food and agricultural sectors, requires urgent and decisive action by the international community to accelerate and ensure the full implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, as stressed during the mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Welcoming the support given by the international donor community to agricultural development in developing countries and the efforts of these countries in the development of their food and agricultural sectors,

Noting with concern that the tensions concerning trade in agricultural markets remain very serious, notably owing to the persistence and, in some cases, intensification of all forms of agricultural support, including export subsidies and import restrictions, as pointed out by ministers of Governments of States members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development at their meeting in Paris on 18 and 19 May 1988,

Reaffirming that the right to food is a universal human right that should be guaranteed to all people and, in that context, believing in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure, either at the national or at the international level,

Deeply concerned about the worsening of the locust infestation and its spread to several regions of the developing world, particularly the recent infestation of large regions of Africa, as described in the status reports of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and about the grave consequences of the infestation for agriculture and food production in the countries of the affected regions,

Welcoming the ongoing work of the Global Information and Early Warning System on Food and Agriculture in monitoring the world food situation and in alerting the international community to impending problems,

Concerned that, despite some slight improvements in 1987, the economies of developing countries continue to suffer from depressed international commodity prices, protectionism and worsening terms of trade, growing debt service burden and net outflow of financial resources from developing countries as a whole, which have had a negative effect on international trade and agriculture, particularly for developing countries,

1. Notes with concern that hunger and malnutrition have been increasing since the World Food Conference in 1974, that the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition has increased in the 1980s and that the central objective of the Conference remains largely unfulfilled;

2. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the World Food Council on the work of its fourteenth ministerial session, held at Nicosia from 23 to 26 May 1988, in particular the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World, and calls upon Governments and international and non-governmental organizations to assist the World Food Council fully in implementing the Initiative;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on trends in international agricultural markets with special reference to the share of developing countries;

4. Stresses the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries and the importance of increasing domestic food production, thereby stimulating national economic growth and social progress in those countries, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries, and helping to resolve the problems of hunger and malnutrition in an effective way;

5. Urges, in this context, the members of the international community, in particular the donor countries, to take further determined action in support of the efforts of developing countries by increasing the flow of resources, including concessional flows designated for agricultural development, and to increase their contributions to intergovernmental organizations;

6. Stresses the need for donor countries to increase aid commitments to food and agriculture in developing countries and the need to channel assistance through existing organizations and programmes;

7. Also stresses that the provision of food aid in the context of emergency situations resulting, inter alia, from natural disasters should be reinforced through additional rehabilitation and development assistance in order to help restore food production capacity and self-reliance;

8. Calls for a joint effort by all States and relevant international and intergovernmental organizations to improve the food situation and protect the nutritional levels of affected groups, in particular low-income groups, especially during the implementation of structural adjustment programmes;

9. Affirms that increasing food production in developing countries will significantly contribute to the eradication of poverty and the elimination of malnutrition, and recommends that a higher priority be given to supporting food production in the national development efforts of those countries in order to ensure adequate food supplies and distribution;

10. Stresses that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched on the occasion of the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, presents a unique opportunity to develop a more open, viable and durable trading system, to reverse the disquieting rise in protectionism, and to bring agriculture under the strengthened and operationally effective rules and disciplines of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round, and urges that concerted efforts to this end should be made at the forthcoming mid-term review of multilateral trade negotiations at Montreal, Canada, taking into account the need to provide special and differential treatment for developing countries, considering their food security objectives and the need to avoid potentially adverse effects on those countries, especially those that import food, bearing in mind the overall benefits of trade liberalization;

11. Stresses the need to implement fully the relevant provisions of the Ministerial Declaration concerning tropical products;

12. Also stresses the need to improve global economic conditions in order to establish national, subregional and regional food security in developing countries;

13. Calls upon the international community to support scientific and technological training and research in developing countries in order to promote agricultural development in those countries, and emphasizes the urgency of strengthening international co-operation in the field of transfer of agricultural technology and of facilitating the free exchange of information on experience and technology relating to food production, processing and storage;

14. Also calls upon the international community, through specific and effective measures, to support and complement the efforts made by African Governments to stimulate agriculture and food production and to implement fully the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

15. Urges all States members of the International Fund for Agricultural Development to take decisive action to ensure the timely conclusion of the negotiations on the third replenishment of the resources of the Fund so as to facilitate its adoption by the Governing Council of the Fund in January 1989, thus enabling the Fund to pursue its mandate of assisting developing countries in increasing their food production and in alleviating rural poverty and, to that end, appeals to all parties to make their best efforts to achieve the overall target fixed for the replenishment;

16. Takes note with satisfaction of the fact that the target of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the Fund has been achieved, and appeals for increased contributions to the Fund;

17. Appeals to the international community to contribute generously to the World Food Programme so that the pledging target for the period 1989-1990, as set out in General Assembly resolution 42/164 of 11 December 1987, can be attained and the Programme can continue its activity in support of capital investment and in meeting emergency food needs;

18. Notes with appreciation the eighth replenishment of the International Development Association for the period 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1990, which provides for a total of 12.4 billion United States dollars, and stresses the need to draw upon those resources for the development of food and agriculture;

19. Stresses the need for co-ordinated international action to tackle the long-term problems of migratory pest control, particularly in Africa, and, expressing gratitude for the support of donors and recognizing the efforts made by the affected countries in the fight against the grasshopper and locust infestation, calls upon donors to continue to give high priority to the implementation and continued co-ordination by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of emergency control programmes, as well as longer-term measures, against grasshoppers and locusts currently affecting vast areas of Africa, as well as other regions of the developing world, and to remain prepared to provide financial and technical assistance to affected countries at short notice;

20. Takes note of the establishment, within the framework of the World Food Council, of the informal ad hoc consultative group for the implementation of the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World, and urges all Member States and international organizations to participate actively in the work of the group so as:

(a) To review and assess the policies and instruments currently available to combat chronic hunger and malnutrition in developing countries, particularly in low-income food-deficit countries, and to identify the reasons and obstacles that may have reduced their impact;

(b) To consider concrete and realistic measures that could make existing policies and instruments more effective;

(c) To identify workable initiatives;

(d) To recommend a course of action to combat hunger and malnutrition more effectively;

21. Requests the President of the World Food Council to present to the Council at its fifteenth ministerial session an action-oriented report on the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World;

22. Urges the World Food Council to continue, within its mandate:

(a) To assess the overall impact of structural adjustment programmes in developing countries on the nutritional levels of their populations, especially among children and low-income groups, and to suggest remedial measures in that area, including ways of stimulating the provision of resources to eliminate the suffering of those groups;

(b) To assess the impact of liberalized international trade in agricultural and tropical products on all countries and especially on the food security and development efforts of developing countries and, in this context, to maintain an active interest in the progress and outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

(c) To promote activities related to food security and agricultural trade, as well as to regional and South-South co-operation in food and agriculture, within the context of economic growth and the development needs of developing countries;

(d) To stimulate progress in and contribute more actively to the full implementation of the food policy and programme components of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

23. Also urges the World Food Council to continue to exercise leadership in sensitizing the international community to the nature, extent, causes and consequences of hunger and malnutrition and in recommending appropriate practical policies for remedial action;

24. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the World Food Council, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1989, an updated comprehensive report on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and on the liberalization of international agricultural trade, together with suggestions on ways and means of increasing the share of developing countries in that trade, while avoiding the potentially adverse short-term effects on developing countries, in particular those that import food.

Food aid

CFA activities

At its twenty-fifth session (Rome, Italy, 30 May-9 June),⁽⁶⁾ the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA)—the governing body of the World Food Programme (WFP)—conducted its thirteenth annual review of food aid policies and programmes and approved the WFP Executive Director's annual report covering 1987 activities.⁽⁷⁾

Concerned about the continuing increase in emergency food aid necessitated by man-made disasters, CFA recognized the need for additional contributions to the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) (see below). It requested WFP to continue to give attention to environmental deterioration and the need for sustainable development in designing and implementing projects. It also strongly endorsed a $1.8 billion Action Plan for Africa, the main objective of which was to provide a frame of reference for projecting resource flows to Africa in support of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.⁽⁸⁾ The Committee stressed that WFP had a special role to play in Africa, in emergency situations as well as in regard to the environment, human resources development and the maintenance of infrastructure. It urged that triangular transactions and local purchases in African countries be included within the overall framework of the Plan. It also urged all concerned with food aid to co-operate with WFP in implementing the new International Food Aid Information System by providing timely and accurate data.

The Committee approved 24 projects with a combined value of $439.3 million, as well as three budget increases for approved projects, making a combined total of $466.5 million (equivalent to about 1 million tons of food).

At its twenty-sixth session (Rome, 12 December),⁽⁹⁾ CFA approved 18 projects with a combined value of $224 million and nine budget increases for approved projects. The combined value amounted to $278.6 million, equivalent to about 437,000 tons of food. The Committee also approved the WFP plan of action for the relief and rehabilitation of Afghanistan.

WFP activities

In 1988, WFP—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and FAO—continued to provide developing countries with food aid for development purposes and emergency relief. The amount of food shipped to developing countries rose sharply in 1988, reaching 3.1 million tons, a 28 per cent increase over the previous record set in 1987.⁽¹⁰⁾

With the signing of the Geneva Accords in April (see PART TWO, Chapter III), WFP established a special Afghan task force to prepare for the repatriation of some 6 million refugees from Iran and Pakistan to Afghanistan.

For the third consecutive year, WFP spent a record amount on purchases of food—more than $136 million—though slightly less food was bought because of higher commodity prices. Purchases in developing countries reached a record $108.5 million. During the year, WFP was requested to purchase, transport or monitor 972,000 tons of food, worth $240 million, on behalf of bilateral donors. Actual shipments on behalf of bilateral donors rose 71 per cent, to an all-time high of 566,000 tons.⁽¹¹⁾

Development assistance

At the end of 1988, WFP had 289 active development projects in its portfolio valued at $3.5 billion. Of those, 157 had components, valued at over $1.4 billion, intended to promote environmentally sustainable development.⁽¹¹⁾

WFP in 1988 committed $779 million—representing 1.84 million metric tons of food—for 49 new development projects or project expansions, 25 per cent more than in 1987. It continued to give priority to assisting low-income, food-deficit countries, which received 86 per cent of its commitments in 1988; 3 of every 10 tons of food went to the least developed countries. Commitments for agricultural and rural development, which accounted for 56 per cent of total development commitments, rose from $298 million in 1987 to $433 million in 1988. Human resource development accounted for the rest, most of which was allocated to the feeding of vulnerable groups (mothers, infants, pre-school children) and to students at primary schools.

The countries of sub-Saharan Africa continued to receive top priority, but WFP found it increasingly difficult to formulate sound development projects there. In 1988, $266 million was committed for new projects in the region; at 34 per cent of the total, the share was only slightly less than in 1987, although the proportion of commitments had been going down over the last three years, and current indications pointed towards a further decline.

Emergency operations

More than 15 million people in 29 countries—half of whom were refugees and displaced persons—received emergency food assistance through WFP's 65 operations approved in 1988. The year's commitment of 828,000 tons of commodities, valued at $254 million, nearly matched the record set in 1987, continuing the trend of increased need for emergency food aid.⁽¹¹⁾ Those commitments were drawn mainly from IEFER, which furnished 88 per cent of the commodities.⁽¹²⁾

Man-made disasters continued to require over two thirds of WFP's emergency food aid resources, with long-term assistance needed for large numbers of refugees in Ethiopia, Iran, Malawi, Pakistan and Somalia. Because of the number and severity of hurricanes, typhoons and disastrous floods during the year, 11 per cent of emergency food aid was committed to sudden natural disasters (compared to an average of 3 per cent during the previous three years), its value of $27.5 million unequalled over the previous decade.⁽¹⁰⁾

Sub-Saharan Africa received 65 per cent of the emergency resources, followed by Asia and the Pacific, 26 per cent, Latin America and the Caribbean, 6 per cent, and North Africa and the Middle East, 3 per cent.

WFP resources

WFP's receipts for 1988 totalled about $1.01 billion, while expenditures amounted to $1.1 billion. Net commitments for development projects and emergency operations totalled $1.03 billion.

Pledges and contributions

For the 1987-1988 biennium, combined total resources contributed or pledged to WFP regular resources, the Food Aid Convention and IEFER reached $1.6 billion, including some 4.5 million tons of food. By the end of 1988, 81 countries had pledged a record $1.24 billion, or 89 per cent of the target—the highest percentage in a decade.⁽¹¹⁾

By 31 December 1988, contributions to IEFER for the year amounted to 531,336 tons of food, worth $161.6 million. However, contributions in cereals, at 441,773 tons, fell short of the annual target of 500,000 tons, even though demand substantially exceeded that amount. Twenty-two donors, including two developing countries, contributed to IEFER in 1988.

1986 Food Aid Convention

In 1988, three States (Australia, Federal Republic of Germany, United States) became parties to the Food Aid Convention, 1986, bringing the total number to 14.⁽¹³⁾ The Food Aid Convention, together with the Wheat Trade Convention, 1986, constitutes the International Wheat Agreement, 1986.

Agricultural development

In April, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report⁽¹⁴⁾ prepared by FAO reviewing and analysing agrarian reform and rural development. The report, prepared pursuant to a 1981 decision of the Council,⁽¹⁵⁾ concluded that the basic needs of the rural poor were being less well met than they were at the beginning of the decade. If life for the rural poor was to improve by the year 2000, concerted efforts would have to be made by national Governments and the international community.

The President of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, in the IFAD 1988 annual report, said the third replenishment of the Fund, which was nearing completion, should open the path to a high degree of financial autonomy for IFAD by the end of the next decade. He said that a satisfactory and timely outcome of the upcoming third replenishment would enable the Fund to broaden the coverage and further sharpen the impact of its interventions on behalf of the poor.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/73 without vote.

Third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, in which the international community agreed to increase support, whenever possible, to the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development,

Noting with appreciation that the target of $300 million for the Special Programme has been surpassed,

Recalling also its resolution 1987/90 of 9 July 1987 on food and agricultural problems and the Final Act of the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Stressing the imperative need to strengthen international co-operation to intensify the global effort to assist the hundreds of millions of human beings who, as a result of acute poverty, continue to suffer, especially in rural areas, from hunger or chronic undernutrition,

Noting with appreciation the significant role that the International Fund for Agricultural Development has played in addressing, inter alia, the needs of the rural poor, including smallholders, the landless, rural women and other marginalized groups,

Noting the appeal made by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session to strengthen financing for the fight against poverty and hunger being undertaken by the Fund,

Expressing its appreciation to those recipient developing countries that, by announcing significant increases in their contributions in convertible currency, have ensured that two thirds of their objective of $75 million has already been achieved,

Emphasizing the validity of the unique structure and mandate of the International Fund for Agricultural Development,

Emphasizing also the importance of ensuring the continuity of the lending operations of the Fund,

1. Calls upon all countries to demonstrate political will and flexibility so that the replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development can be completed by the end of 1988, before the next session of the Governing Council of the Fund;

2. Appeals to all States members of the Fund to ensure that positive action is taken to reach an early agreement on the third replenishment;

3. Invites those recipient developing countries that have not yet done so to announce their increased contributions at the earliest possible date.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/73

29 July 1988 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1988/112) without vote, 21 July (meeting 19); draft by Tunisia, for Group of 77 (E/1988/C.1/L.5), orally revised following informal consultations, orally sub-amended by Canada; further orally revised in Council by Committee Chairman, based on informal consultations; agenda item 9.

Nutrition

The elimination of hunger and malnutrition remained an elusive goal in 1988, despite advances in increasing global food production, the Council of the United Nations University (UNU) stated in its report on 1988 activities.⁽¹⁾ Working towards that goal, UNU continued its research, training and information dissemination activities in the areas of food, nutrition and biotechnology. Research by the UNU-associated Institute of Nutrition on the cognitive effects of iron deficiency on schoolchildren in Bangkok, Thailand, confirmed a clear relationship between test performance and iron status. This research was conducted as part of a project on the social and economic consequences of chronic energy deficiency, which sought to document the behavioural, social and economic effects of chronically low energy intake and to co-ordinate an international effort to apply results of the research to national policies. An International Dietary Energy Consultancy Group was also established in connection with the project.

The International Food Data Systems Project released an updated version of its directory of food composition tables and began publication of a new UNU-sponsored Journal of Food Composition and Analysis.

Work began on a joint regional project of the Association of African Universities, and UNU aimed at improving co-ordination of Africa's scientific and technological resources in the areas of food and nutrition. Workshops were held on improving the quality of root and tuber products (Lagos, Nigeria, August-October) and on the development of cereals as weaning foods (Dakar, Senegal, October).

The UNU World Institute for Development Economics Research also focused on the hunger problem. It was studying alternative development strategies and their implications for food entitlements and living standards in five Asian countries. Another study used a simulation model to examine the effects of different economic development scenarios and policy changes on food consumption in sub-Saharan Africa. The investigation focused on why so many African countries, unlike many other developing countries, had been unable to prevent famine and improve nutrition.

In the area of biotechnology, UNU was attempting to strengthen the capacity of scientists in developing countries to employ both traditional and emerging techniques. The former included processes for fermenting foods, and the latter included genetic manipulation of plants and animals as well as new hybrid areas of science, such as bio-electronics. The concluding workshop of the brucellosis research network in Latin America, established to develop vaccines through biotechnology, was held in 1988, and in Africa two small-scale projects on improving food fermentation through biotechnology were initiated.

The FAO/WHO/UNICEF Inter-agency Food and Nutrition Surveillance Programme continued to co-ordinate support for the establishment of national surveillance systems designed to improve the assessment of various nutrition policy options and permit accurate monitoring of changes in nutritional status. Of 10 proposals submitted to the Programme from countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America, 3 were approved in 1988.

Twenty countries participated in an international conference on food and nutrition surveillance in the Americas (Mexico City, September), organized by the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO). Also in the Americas, a regional training course on the methodology of case-study writing in subjects related to food, nutrition and health (Costa Rica, April-June) was given jointly by the Central American Institute of Business Administration, PAHO and UNU.

Malnutrition in South-East Asia was being addressed using a combination of six strategies: development of national nutrition policies, nutrition improvement through primary health care, improved nutrition surveillance capability, national control programmes, information exchange and nutrition research. Vitamin-A and iodine deficiency was vigorously tackled throughout the region.

ACC activities

The fourteenth session of the Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group on Nutrition was held at Geneva from 22 to 26 February.⁽²⁾ The Sub-Committee drew to the attention of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination the potentially important interactions between nutrition and AIDS. Two symposia were held during the session, on cash cropping and nutrition and on nutrition and AIDS. The Sub-Committee also examined work in progress in the following areas: nutritional surveillance; women and nutrition; nutrition and infection; and vitamin-A, iron and iodine deficiencies.

Chapter XII

Human resources, social and cultural development

During 1988, United Nations bodies and agencies continued to promote human resources development, social and cultural development, literacy, crime prevention and criminal justice. The year marked the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations programme in the area of crime prevention and criminal justice.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) reviewed its experience in human resources development since 1970, drawing broad conclusions regarding the evolving nature of such development and technical co-operation needs, as well as the longer-term sustainability and impact of institutions after UNDP support had ended.

Under social development, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit, in 1989, a proposed date and comprehensive outline of a possible programme for an international year of the family (resolution 43/135).

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session (Vienna, 22-31 August 1988) focused on the implementation of conclusions and recommendations of the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and on preparations for the Eighth (1990) Congress.

In January, the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1986, was launched by the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). As the lead agency, UNESCO continued to make preparations for International Literacy Year (1990).

Human resources

In response to a 1986 request by the UNDP Governing Council,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted a report in March 1988⁽²⁾ analysing UNDP experience since 1970 in human resources development (HRD). The analysis was based on a review of over 100 evaluations of projects identifying factors affecting the success of HRD and had involved follow-up visits to several countries.

The Administrator, noting the need for a human resources strategy and planning framework in developing countries, stated that data were lacking on skill availabilities and needs, labour force participation rates, wage rates and incentives needed to correct labour market imbalances and the comparative efficiency of different educational and training systems. Project evaluations pointed to the need for a national focal point where human resources information, not usually found in national accounts and other aggregated data, could be collected and analysed on a continuing basis.

Regarding past experience with project design and linkages, he pointed to a number of factors that compromised project success, including heavy commitments of equipment and tight procurement schedules which were incompatible with more gradualist training requirements; a tendency to stress the development of technical capabilities to the relative neglect of management needs; project formulation without the examination of recurrent cost implications; and unexpected circumstances requiring adjustments and changes in project components. Project experience showed a lack of sensitivity to involving local communities in assessing needs, and designing and implementing projects.

In discussing evolving HRD and technical co-operation needs, the Administrator noted a number of changes that had taken place. There had been a shift away from traditional technical co-operation, characterized by long-term experts and counterpart training overseas, to a need for short-term consultants to upgrade the competence of national staff in very specific fields. In addition, an earlier emphasis on training of counterparts in technical fields was giving way to the training of trainers and the setting up of indigenous training systems. Government policies to stimulate private investment created new demands for technical co-operation, with UNDP being asked to support institutes that taught management and business skills in which private-sector interests were represented. As to high-technology projects, he suggested the formulation of a new type of umbrella consulting project which was highly flexible and from which short-term contracts could be negotiated.

Concerning the sustainability of institutions and measures of project impact, the Administrator stated that project evaluations had concluded that retention of staff trained with UNDP assistance was critical to the process of institution-building and that a key ingredient in project impact was the quality of top management. UNDP resources, he said, were relatively limited and had to be strategically employed. He cautioned against the premature withdrawal of UNDP project support, since evaluations had noted that institutions seldom became self-sustaining as of the official project-termination date.

The Administrator concluded that UNDP's resources were too limited to meet technical needs over an extended period of time and should be used to address critical constraints, for the most part at the national level, by developing systems for policy analysis and more comprehensive human resources planning and by reinforcing training strategies and techniques to respond better to human resources requirements.

Noting with concern the constraints identified in the Administrator's report which limited the impact of UNDP-funded HRD projects, the Governing Council, on 1 July,⁽³⁾ recommended that they be taken into consideration in designing UNDP-assisted projects. It supported the Administrator's intention to devise a methodology to measure the impact of HRD projects on social and economic development and urged him, in designing HRD projects, to take account of the long-term nature of the institutional process. It asked him to collect and synthesize technical co-operation experience, thus ensuring that future UNDP assistance achieved maximum impact; called on him to support those aspects of the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa⁽⁴⁾ that were within UNDP's mandate; and urged him to contribute to implementing specific proposals included in the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP (Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific) Region.⁽⁵⁾ The Council requested UNDP to assist those Governments which sought its help to explore the possibility of financing their human resources requirements beyond traditional sources.

The Committee for Development Planning (see PART THREE, Chapter I) in April recommended that greater national and international priority should be given to restructuring human development programmes to reduce inefficiency and improve delivery and targeting.⁽⁶⁾

Education and literacy

International Literacy Year (1990)

In October,⁽⁷⁾ the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination was informed of the activities undertaken by UNESCO as the lead agency in preparing and organizing International Literacy Year (1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1987.⁽⁸⁾

Activities included the establishment of a secretariat to co-ordinate the activities of the United Nations system for the Year, creation of a high-level inter-sectoral task force to deal with its planning and organization, issuance by UNESCO of journals and bulletins and the publication of guides and newsletters. CCSQ noted that all organizations were invited to establish focal points for activities related to the Year.

CCSQ supported UNESCO's initiative to send missions to organizations to discuss joint action that might be taken in relation to the Year.

UN research and training institutes

In June 1988,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his comments on a report prepared by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in 1987⁽¹⁰⁾ on autonomous research institutes of the United Nations. Those institutes were the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (see below, under "Social aspects of development"), the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) (see PART ONE, Chapter II), the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), the Latin American Demographic Centre and the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (see PART TWO, Chapter V), and the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning. The JIU report did not cover the research and training institutes of the specialized agencies, nor the United Nations University (UNU) (see below), which had been the subject of an earlier JIU report.⁽¹¹⁾

The Secretary-General agreed that the setting up of a reserve fund for each existing institute was a prudent financial measure, but he considered one year's estimated expenditure rather than two and a half to be sufficient; an alternative arrangement could be to encourage donors to create endowment funds (recommendation 1). He stated that assessed contributions would be levied against those countries that participated in the activities of the institutions and would be separate from the assessments under the regular budget of the United Nations (recommendation 2). The income-generating activities suggested by JIU could be a source of support for United Nations research institutes, but the Secretary-General reaffirmed their need to maintain independence and keep within core research mandates (recommendation 3). He stated that, given the specific measures called for in a 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽¹²⁾ concerning the finance and administration of UNITAR, it was unnecessary to comment on recommendation 4. He did not currently intend to consider the JIU proposal that UNIDIR cease to exist as an autonomous research institute (recommendation 6).

On 21 December 1988, the Assembly, by decision 43/453, took note of the 1987 JIU report and of the Secretary-General's comments.

UN Institute for Training and Research

UNITAR activities

Despite the uncertainty and developments in 1988 concerning the future of UNITAR (see below), the period was marked by intense activities aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations. UNITAR's 1988 activities were described by the Executive Director in two reports to the General Assembly, covering the periods 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1988⁽¹³⁾ and 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1990.⁽¹⁴⁾ The latter period was characterized by the implementation of a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹²⁾ by which the Assembly undertook further restructuring of UNITAR.

The UNITAR training programme focused on international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy, economic and social development, and research on training and training promotion. Training courses and seminars in multilateral diplomacy dealt with orientation to the United Nations, drafting international legal instruments, human rights reporting and techniques of multilateral economic negotiations. Training for economic and social development continued to aim at improving the capacity of developing countries to organize and manage their development programmes and projects.

Under the research programme, financed mainly through special-purpose grants, projects focused on the future of the United Nations and an evaluation of United Nations development decades and strategies. The UNITAR/UNDP Centre for Heavy Crude and Tar Sands organized the Fourth International Conference on Heavy Crude and Tar Sands (Edmonton, Canada, 7-12 August). A workshop organized by the UNITAR/UNDP Centre on Small Energy Resources (Rome, Italy, March) dealt with the overall status of energy for rural development in Africa.

UNITAR financing

In 1988,⁽¹⁵⁾ UNITAR'S General Fund income from government contributions and other sources totalled $1,330,128, while total expenditure amounted to $1,273,571. Income of the Special-Purpose Grants Fund was $1,967,734, including $1,601,585 in grants, while expenditure totalled $2,287,450.

A summary of principal findings and conclusions for remedial action by the United Nations Board of Auditors, submitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁶⁾ indicated that 1988 expenditures exceeded allotments, with some projects incurring expenditures even though no allotments had been issued. The Board recommended that expenditures should not be allowed to exceed allotments and that no expenditures should be incurred for any special-purpose projects unless allotments had been issued for the purpose.

The Assembly, by resolution 43/216, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNITAR for 1987, as well as the report of the Board of Auditors thereon.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) had no comments on the Board's report.⁽¹⁸⁾

Restructuring of UNITAR

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1987,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1988 on the restructuring of UNITAR's programme and financing, amendment to the text of its statute and personnel matters.⁽¹⁹⁾ The 1988-1989 core programme, funded largely through the General Fund, was limited to training for international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy. The expanded programme, funded through extra-budgetary resources, included training for economic and social development, and research on the United Nations, energy and natural resources and the future of the main developing regions of the world. A fuller description of the new programme was available in UNITAR Work Programme 1988-1989, published by UNITAR.

At the beginning of 1988, UNITAR had a cash deficit of $2,017,030, made up of an accumulated budget deficit from previous years, uncollected pledges from 1987 and earlier years and other receivables. The deficit was financed in large part by borrowing from the United Nations, to which UNITAR was in debt by $2,056,509 at the end of 1987. The debt due to the United Nations at 31 July 1988 amounted to $1,917,888.

The 1988 budget for UNITAR, incorporating programme restructuring measures, was set at the level of $1,069,700 and was approved by the UNITAR Board of Trustees (New York, 11-15 April). The Board encouraged the Executive Director to continue to manage UNITAR with austerity and urged that all the accumulated financial liabilities should be settled, if possible in 1988.

The amendments to the text of UNITAR's statute, approved by the Secretary-General, incorporated the proposals of the Board and focused on the programmatic, financial, administrative and budgetary arrangements of UNITAR affected by its mandated restructuring. The report contained a proposed amendment concerning the status of full-time UNITAR fellows. A large number of amendments dealt with UNITAR's new financial arrangements, notably the operation of a planned new reserve fund (see below) and the principles to govern the financing of its research and training programmes. The text of the new statute as well as the statute previously in force, together with the stated justification for its revisions, were contained in an addendum to the Secretary-General's report.⁽²⁰⁾

As to personnel matters, it was decided to abolish, effective 30 June 1988, 14 posts involving 6 in the Professional category and 8 in the General Service category. In accordance with the Assembly's 1987 request,⁽¹²⁾ all efforts were made to absorb the released staff within the United Nations system and to ensure that those affected did not suffer loss of rank or benefits. However, that request had to be reconciled with the priorities and provisions of other resolutions requiring staff reduction.

The Secretary-General also discussed the acquisition of the land and subsequent sale of the entire property of the UNITAR building, stating that the objective of the transaction was to establish a reserve fund, the accruing interests of which would be applied to the annual budgetary appropriations of UNITAR. In March 1988, the joint owners of the land confirmed their willingness to sell the property. Subsequently, the Secretary-General sought ACABQ's advice and concurrence on an appropriate means of financing the acquisition of the land. In April, ACABQ informed the Secretary-General that it concurred with his intent to borrow the necessary amount, not to exceed $4.5 million, from funds in his custody, excluding peace-keeping funds. As at the end of 1988, negotiations with the owners of the property were continuing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/201 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/172 of 5 December 1986 and 42/197 of 11 December 1987,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

Recognising the continuing importance and relevance of the mandate of the Institute, particularly in the field of training,

Recognizing also the need for Governments to contribute or increase their voluntary contributions, as appropriate, to the Institute,

Noting with concern the continuing lack of a sufficiently broad base of donor countries supporting the Institute,

Recognizing further the need for the Institute to continue to utilize the services of a small number of senior fellows for its programmes,

Noting with concern that the 1988 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities did not provide the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with the level of resources required for the Institute to maintain a minimum training programme and institutional structure,

Concerned that the absorption, on an exceptional basis, of several professional Staff members of the Institute within the United Nations system, as called for in paragraph 11 of resolution 42/197, has yet to be fully implemented,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to resolution 42/197 and the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;

2. Reaffirms the continuing validity and relevance of the mandate of the Institute, as contained in the amended statute;

5. Requests that the 1989 budgetary proposals of the Institute, as well as those of subsequent years, be submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for review and comment prior to approval by the Board of Trustees of the Institute;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to proceed as rapidly as possible with the acquisition of the land and subsequent sale of the entire property of the Institute, as approved in resolution 42/197;

7. Reiterates its approval of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the Institute should, after the sale of the building, repay the amounts currently owed to the United Nations and use the balance to establish a reserve fund for the Institute;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Board of Trustees at its forthcoming session a complete and current report on his efforts to purchase the land under the Institute building and subsequently to sell the entire property;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the event that the necessary financing is not assured, through the sale of the building and/or voluntary contributions, for the administration of the Institute in the first half of 1989, to present to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session specific recommendations on the future of the Institute, together with detailed financial information;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General, notwithstanding the provisions of article VI, paragraph 1, of the statute of the Institute, to appoint for a one-year period up to nine full-time senior fellows and grant them the status of officials of the United Nations;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the Board of Trustees of the Institute on criteria and qualifications to apply to full-time senior fellows, and to present his recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

12. Renews its appeal to the Secretary-General to give priority consideration to absorbing the remaining four staff members of the Institute who are occupying posts that have been abolished as a result of the restructuring of the Institute;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General to explore new modalities for greater interfacing among United Nations research bodies and requests him to report thereon;

United Nations University

UNU activities

In 1988,⁽²¹⁾ UNU, an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, carried out its research, training and dissemination projects under eight programme areas: peace, culture and governance; the global economy and development; global life-support systems; alternative rural-urban configurations; science, technology and society; food, nutrition and biotechnology (see PART THREE, Chapter XI); human and social development; and global learning and informatics. Training courses were completed by 39 UNU fellows.

A total of 28 new books were published in various languages by UNU or co-publishers around the world. The University's four journals were published: ASSET (three issues); Journal of Food Composition and Analysis (four issues); Food and Nutrition Bulletin (four issues); and Mountain Research and Development (four issues).

UNU continued to make progress in establishing its own research and training centres. In July, the UNU Council approved the establishment of an Institute for New Technologies (Maastricht, Netherlands), which would focus on the implications of new technologies. Discussions continued on the establishment of a research and training centre in Japan that would take the form of an institute of advanced studies. An agreement was signed between UNU and Venezuela concerning biotechnology activities for Latin America and the Caribbean, with a co-ordinating office in Caracas.

UNU Council

The UNU Council met twice during 1988, holding its thirty-first (Brasilia, Brazil, 26-30 July) and thirty-second (Tokyo, 6-10 December) sessions.

In July, the Council focused on the effect of continuing financial difficulties, the preparations for the second medium-term perspective for the period 1990-1995 and UNU's institutional structure.

In December, it dealt with a proposed supplementary and revised programme and budget of UNU for 1988-1989 and reports on the development of research and training centres and programmes. It adopted the second medium-term perspective as presented by the Rector of UNU. During 1990-1995, UNU was to conduct its work within five interrelated areas: universal human values and global responsibilities; new directions in the world economy; sustaining global life-support systems; advances in science and technology; and population dynamics and human welfare.

By decision 1988/113 of 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNU Council on the University's work in 1987.⁽²²⁾

2. Notes with great concern the slow progress in the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

3. Calls upon Member States to make all efforts to promote the speedy and complete elimination of such fundamental elements hindering economic and social progress and development as colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign aggression, occupation, and domination and all forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples, and also to undertake effective measures to lessen international tensions;

6. Reiterates that it is the right of everyone to enjoy the greatest possible degree of physical and mental health;

7. Emphasizes that participation in cultural, sports and recreational activities and the use of leisure without discrimination of any kind promotes the improvement of social life;

The family

International year of the family

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1987,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in September 1988⁽²⁾ on the views and proposals of Governments concerning a United Nations international year of the family. As at 18 August, responses had been received from 45 Governments, of which 39 favoured such a year. Among that group there appeared to be a consensus that the importance of family issues warranted attention and that an international year was an appropriate way of achieving that objective. Governments against an international year considered that it was not appropriate to family issues or that the value of international years, or too many such years, was questionable. Responses indicated that an international year would need to give attention to family issues in an environment fully sensitive to the goal of advancement of women, as reflected in the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.⁽³⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/135 without vote.

Need to enhance international co-operation in the field of protection and assistance to the family

The General Assembly,

Recalling the resolve of the peoples of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

Recalling also its resolution 42/49 of 30 November 1987 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/46 of 27 May 1988 entitled "Achievement of social justice",

Mindful of the importance of the role of the family in society,

Guided by the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, according to which the widest possible protection and assistance should be accorded to the family,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987 in which it endorsed for action the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, which call for social welfare policies to give greater attention to the family,

Recognizing the efforts of States at the local, regional and national levels in carrying out specific programmes concerning the family, in which the United Nations may have an important role to play, and in raising awareness, increasing understanding and promoting policies that improve the position and well-being of the family,

Recalling its resolution 42/134 of 7 December 1987 on the need to enhance international co-operation in the field of the protection of and assistance to the family,

Achievement of social justice

On 27 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/46 without vote.

Achievement of social justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the pledge made by States Members of the United Nations in the Charter to take joint and separate action to promote higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, social progress and development shall be founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person and shall ensure the promotion of human rights and social justice,

Convinced that more extensive regional and inter-regional co-operation is important in strengthening national efforts to promote social progress,

Mindful of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Persuaded of the importance of taking measures to ensure co-ordination within the United Nations system in order to develop a comprehensive approach to developmental social welfare, including better integrated and mutually supportive economic and social development policies, aimed at the achievement of social justice,

1. Considers that the common purpose of the international community must be to create from varied economic, social and political conditions a global environment conducive to sustained development, the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, social justice and peace;

2. Recognizes that social justice is one of the most important goals of social progress;

3. Reaffirms the importance of co-operation among countries in promoting a climate conducive to the achievement by individual countries of the goals of development and social justice and progress;

4. Considers that such co-operation should continue to be a major focus of the activities of the United Nations and its bodies in accordance with the principles of the Charter;

5. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development and other relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies take into account the necessity of achieving social justice for all when considering problems of social development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/153 on human rights in the administration of justice. The resolution was based in part on a review of United Nations functioning in the field.

Extreme poverty

On 27 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/47 without vote.

Extreme poverty

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned that a significant percentage of the world's population lives in conditions of extreme poverty and is forced to live increasingly at the margins of society,

Noting the insufficient attention paid to the phenomenon of extreme poverty, a phenomenon that frequently eludes international and intergovernmental action and current statistical methods,

Recalling its resolution 1987/48 of 28 May 1987, in which it called on non-governmental organizations to participate in follow-up activities to the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes,

Taking into account the provision of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development to the effect that social progress and development are the common concerns of the international community, which shall supplement, by concerted international action, national efforts to raise the living standards of peoples,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 2543 (XXIV) of 11 December 1969 on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Noting the results of the International Conference on the Human Dimension of Africa's Economic Recovery and Development, held at Khartoum from 5 to 8 March 1988, and the Khartoum Declaration adopted by the Conference,^a

Concerned that a deteriorating international economic situation has adverse social consequences, particularly for developing countries, and contributes to extending the boundaries of extreme poverty and increases the number of people living in such conditions,

^aA/43/430.

Bearing in mind the urgent need to take account of the social costs of adjustment policies,

Calling for the strengthening of efforts being made by the international community to alleviate the impact of such policies on those who live in conditions of extreme poverty,

Considering that the Commission for Social Development is the most appropriate United Nations organ for recommending social development policies,

1. Requests the Commission for Social Development to study the phenomenon of extreme poverty with a view to examining the interrelationship between social development and the eradication of poverty and report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989;

2. Invites all Member States to transmit to the Commission for Social Development any studies or reports that they may have on the problem of extreme poverty or, if they have none, invites them to consider undertaking such studies and to transmit them to the Commission;

3. Also invites non-governmental organizations to continue to support follow-up activities to the Inter-regional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in accordance with Council resolution 1987/48;

4. Urges the Commission for Social Development to suggest, on the basis of an assessment of its studies, strategies that will help put an end to the marginalization of people living in extreme poverty, irrespective of the economic and social system to which they belong, and to submit its views to the Economic and Social Council for consideration at its first regular session of 1991;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to include the results of the studies of the Commission for Social Development in his report on the world social situation.

Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs

In his annual report on United Nations technical co-operation, ⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described the activities of the United Nations Office at Vienna/Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (UNOV/CSDHA). He stated that, with funds provided by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), UNOV/CSDHA had fielded several ad hoc advisory missions: to Guatemala to assist in strengthening voluntary social welfare organizations; to Hungary to launch a UNDP-financed project on strengthening social welfare and health programmes; and to the United Republic of Tanzania to participate in a joint UNDP/World Bank project on the social aspects of adjustment. DTCD and CSDHA also had co-operated in formulating World Bank proposals for technical assistance loans for social-sector management in Argentina and Brazil.

In another report on technical co-operation activities, ⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in 1988 UNOV/CSDHA saw an increased commitment by Governments and international agencies towards tackling the social aspects of development. New initiatives dealt with the social effects of adjustment, HRD, particularly among specific population groups, and the problem of critical poverty. The major thrust of the work of UNOV/CSDHA during the year was in translating social development concepts into programmes and in intensifying co-operation with UNDP. Those efforts aimed to strengthen the social content of development projects and promote a comprehensive approach to programming activities which integrated social objectives and programmes into national development plans and UNDP country programmes.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 1988, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) focused on carrying out new research programmes, scheduled for completion in 1989, on the social situation of refugees, improvement of development data, the social impact of the sustained economic crisis and adjustment-related food policy. The research phase of the food systems and society project in West Africa was completed, as was the report on the third socio-economic survey of Afghan refugees in Pakistan, which was carried out in collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in 1986 and subsequently published as the Survey of the Social and Economic Conditions of Afghan Refugees in Pakistan.

In July, the UNRISD Board approved the development of new research efforts in the areas of people's participation in natural resource management, economic reform and social participation in countries with centrally planned economies, and social conflict and development.

The UNRISD research data bank continued to be updated using material from the latest statistical yearbooks and the Economic Time Series data bank. News of UNRISD activities was circulated through a periodic publication, Research Notes.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The United Nations continued in 1988 to focus its activities in crime prevention and criminal justice on the implementation of the conclusions of the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders ⁽⁶⁾ and the preparation for the Eighth (1990) Congress.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1988,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported on progress achieved in implementing 1986⁽⁸⁾ and 1987⁽⁹⁾ General Assembly resolutions. He highlighted the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of resolution 1988/44 (see below, under "Review of the UN programme") and discussed activities carried out by Member States in implementing the Milan Plan of Action⁽⁶⁾ adopted by the Seventh Congress and the norms, guidelines and standards in crime prevention and criminal justice.

Concerning the norms and guidelines, the Secretary-General cited a report⁽¹⁰⁾ he had submitted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (see below) with information from 79 countries indicating that the provisions of the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials⁽⁴⁾ were considered to be of great importance and that they were generally incorporated into or covered by national legislation or practice. The Secretary-General noted other examples where the norms and guidelines were given serious attention, also by way of reports he had submitted to the Committee: 32 Governments⁽¹²⁾ provided information on the application of the 1985 United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (Beijing Rules);⁽¹³⁾ 74 Governments reported on the implementation of United Nations safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty;⁽¹⁴⁾ replies of 57 countries demonstrated the vital role of international co-operation to prevent extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions;⁽¹⁵⁾ and various Governments⁽¹⁶⁾ provided information on measures taken to implement the 1985 Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power.⁽¹⁷⁾

Activities within the United Nations system were carried out by ESCAP, UNDP and the Department of Public Information (DPI). ESCAP published Guide lines on Social Measures for the Prevention of Crime among Youth and on Juvenile Justice: the Role of Youth Organizations in the ESCAP Region; UNDP continued to support the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (ILANUD) (Costa Rica) and the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI) (Uganda), as well as projects related to the control of drug abuse; and DPI issued publications of United Nations criminal justice instruments.

The Secretary-General stated that every effort had been made by the Secretariat to implement the recommendations and conclusions of the Seventh Congress. A major report had been submitted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on proposals for concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action, summarizing initiatives and recommending actions for improved co-operation and mutual assistance.⁽¹⁸⁾

Preparations for the Eighth (1990) Congress included five interregional preparatory meetings of experts held at Vienna on each of the topics of the provisional agenda of the Congress (see below).

Despite severe resource constraints, every effort had been made by the Secretariat to establish a solid basis for an effective programme of international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice. The Secretariat had also initiated activities intended to establish a solid base of regular contacts with Governments and funding agencies, on which a technical assistance programme could be set up. Interregional advisory services continued to be provided to countries, the regional commissions, United Nations interregional and regional institutes and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The Secretary-General in 1988 launched an appeal for more voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/99 without vote.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice under Economic and Social Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950,

Recalling also its resolution 42/59 of 30 November 1987 on crime prevention and criminal justice, in which Member States and the Secretary-General were urged, inter alia, to make every effort to translate into action, as appropriate, the respective recommendations, policies and conclusions stemming from the Milan Plan of Action and the relevant resolutions and recommendations adopted unanimously by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to accord priority attention to the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action by strengthening international co-operation in this field,

Recalling further that in the same resolution the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations related to preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1990, contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/49 of 28 May 1987, and requested the Secretary-General to take immediate steps to ensure successful and cost-effective preparations for the Eighth Congress,

Mindful that 1988 marks the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice and that the scope and extent of present-day criminality exceeds what could have been foreseen by Member States when they vested the United Nations with a leading role in this field,

Bearing in mind the objectives of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, the promotion of more efficient and effective administration of justice, the strengthening of international co-operation and the fight against transnational crime, the observance of human rights and the promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Aware that the spread of crime in the contemporary world and its ever-changing patterns and dynamics require a prompt and effective response appropriate to the particular cultural, political, economic and social circumstances and that modern technological advances facilitate crime prevention and control but also make possible the transnational expansion of organized criminality,

Recognizing that issues related to crime have intensified in complexity and gravity and that economic and financial crises in many developing countries have severely affected the functioning of crime prevention and the criminal justice system,

Reaffirming the crucial functions of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in developing practical crime prevention and criminal justice policies and strategies as a standing expert body of the Economic and Social Council and as the preparatory body for the quinquennial United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Noting with concern that the severe constraints on the human and financial resources available to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat may jeopardize the success of the Eighth Congress and of the programme as a whole,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of its resolution 42/59 and of the relevant recommendations contained therein made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session, during which, inter alia, it reviewed the results of the interregional preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and endorsed their recommendations;

2. Invites the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1989, to give priority attention to the recommendations of the Committee regarding, in particular, the implementation of the resolutions of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the review of the functioning and programme of work in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and the preparations for the Eighth Congress;

3. Welcomes the efforts made by Member States and the Secretary-General to translate into action the recommendations contained in the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh Congress, and urges those Governments which have not yet done so to provide relevant information to the Secretary-General on the implementation of those recommendations;

4. Stresses the necessity for Member States to continue to make concerted and systematic efforts to strengthen international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice as identified in the Milan Plan of Action and to facilitate the adoption by the Eighth Congress of viable and constructive action-oriented strategies against crime;

5. Calls upon all States to become actively involved in the preparations for the Eighth Congress, to participate in the regional preparatory meetings to be held in 1989 and to be represented in the quinquennial congress at a high level, and encourages the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned and the professional community, whose substantive contributions to the congresses have always been of great value, to continue to collaborate in the research and other preparatory activities for the Eighth Congress;

6. Calls upon the specialized agencies, in particular the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization, and other organizations of the United Nations system to give the necessary attention and priority to national, regional and international measures aimed at fighting crime and improving the quality of the administration of justice;

7. Invites Member States to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence as a means of supporting the work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and to forward to the Secretary-General proposals for its revitalization;

8. Encourages Member States and relevant organizations, in particular the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat and the regional commissions, to support and complement the technical co-operation activities in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including the programmes of the United Nations for interregional and regional co-operation for crime prevention, and to provide financial assistance to the regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to apply the priorities identified for the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice both to the Eighth Congress and to the work of the United Nations in the field of criminal justice and crime prevention in general;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources for the preparations for the Eighth Congress, including regional preparatory meetings, and to ensure that the allocation of manpower to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs is sufficient to meet its responsibilities and necessary commitments;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, providing updated information on the preparations for the Eighth Congress;

12. Decides to consider this subject at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice".

Review of the UN programme

In April 1988,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported on initial steps taken to implement an Economic and Social Council resolution adopted in 1987,⁽²⁰⁾ covering research and policy development, technical co-operation, and resources and funding.

He discussed action taken by the General Assembly in 1987⁽⁹⁾ and outlined activities carried out by the Secretariat, which included research and policy development; preparations for the Eighth Congress; technical co-operation projects on specific crime issues and advisory services; and the encouragement of contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence. He also discussed action taken to foster the optimal functioning of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control.

The Secretary-General described the activities of the United Nations interregional and regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders. Those institutes included UNAFRI, ILANUD, the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) (Rome), the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Fuchu, Japan), the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control (Finland) and the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia).

The Secretary-General stated that the involvement of the United Nations system in crime prevention and criminal justice was somewhat limited. There had been close co-operation with NGOs in implementing the recommendations of the Seventh Congress and in preparing for the Eighth.

He concluded that there was a need for vigorous collaboration between States, as an integral part of global co-operation for economic and social development, together with the search for new and effective joint action. He would continue his efforts to reinforce the role of the Secretariat as a central mechanism and catalytic factor in implementing cost-effective activities and programmes in crime prevention and criminal justice.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/44 without vote.

Review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice under Economic and Social Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986 and 1987/49 and 1987/53, both of 28 May 1987, as well as General Assembly resolution 42/59 of 30 November 1987,

Noting that 1988 is the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the programme of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and that the scope and extent of criminal activity have assumed dimensions that could not have been foreseen by Member States when they entrusted the United Nations with a leading role in this field,

Emphasizing the central role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in assisting the Council in the preparations for the quinquennial United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and in developing the programme of work of the United Nations in this field, as specified by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/60 of 8 December 1977 and by the Council in its resolution 1979/19 of 9 May 1979,

Conscious that the effective management of the increasing range of United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice, and the efficient preparation of the quinquennial congresses, require professional, technical and specialized work on the part of the Secretariat, as well as close involvement on the part of the Committee,

Noting with concern that the resources available to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat have decreased, while the commitments of the United Nations in this field have increased,

1. Take note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Acknowledges the work accomplished by the Secretariat in implementing its programme of work in this field, including progress in the preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, following the directives of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council, as specified in its resolutions 1986/11 and 1987/53, while recognizing the major tasks still to be undertaken;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice is supported by adequate resources through such measures as appropriate redeployment of staff and funds, including redeployment from relevant departments at Headquarters, and to ensure that the specialized and technical nature of the programme and the high priority attached by Member States to crime prevention and criminal justice are fully reflected in the management and staffing of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch;

4. Notes with satisfaction the interest shown in, and the support given to, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch by many Governments, as well as by non-governmental organizations and the professional community, which have been involved in the preparations for the Eighth Congress, and invites them to continue to participate actively in such preparations;

5. Welcomes the appointment of the Secretary-General of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

6. Urges the Secretary-General of the United Nations to pay particular attention to the operational aspects of the programme of work, specifically to assist interested countries in developing self-reliance in the area of crime prevention through human resources development, the reinforcement of national machinery, the promotion of joint training activities and the development of pilot and demonstration projects, and invites the United Nations Development Programme and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat and other agencies that provide funding for technical co-operation to continue to provide effective support and assistance for this endeavour;

7. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in co-operation with the Secretariat, to play an active role in the formulation and implementation of technical co-operation projects in crime prevention and criminal justice and to allocate adequate resources and expertise for technical assistance activities through, inter, the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence, and urges the Secretary-General to strengthen existing interregional advisory services;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to foster further close collaboration between the Secretariat and the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice and to co-ordinate the activities of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch with those of the institutes, particularly through the reinforcement of existing contacts, the crime information network, substantive support of technical co-operation projects, staff secondment and exchange of expertise and research findings;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to explore ways and means of ensuring the optimal functioning of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

10. Invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to give priority attention at its tenth session to reviewing the progress made in the preparations for the Eighth Congress and to make specific recommendations thereon, including recommendations on the staff resources to be provided for the preparation and duration of the Congress, to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1989, on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session.

Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control held its tenth session at Vienna from 22 to 31 August 1988.

The Committee had before it reports prepared by the Secretary-General relating to the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Seventh Congress, dealing with United Nations activities in crime prevention and control between 1 October 1985 and 31 March 1988;⁽²¹⁾ a model agreement on the transfer of criminal proceedings;⁽²²⁾ a model agreement on the transfer of supervision of foreign offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released;⁽²³⁾ alternatives to imprisonment and reduction of the prison population;⁽²⁴⁾ draft basic principles on the role of lawyers;⁽²⁵⁾ and the implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary,⁽²⁶⁾ adopted by the Seventh Congress.⁽²⁷⁾ The implementation of the recommendations of the Seventh Congress was also a subject of discussion at an ad hoc inter-agency meeting (Vienna, 1 and 2 September 1988).⁽²⁸⁾ The Committee also considered reports of the Secretary-General on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice;⁽²⁹⁾ on preparations for the Eighth Congress (see below);⁽³⁰⁾ and on progress achieved on domestic violence,⁽³¹⁾ submitted in response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution.⁽³²⁾

In its report to the Economic and Social Council,⁽³³⁾ the Committee recommended 14 draft resolutions for the Council's adoption: statute of a United Nations interregional crime and justice research institute; implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;⁽¹⁷⁾ United Nations network of government-appointed national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and control; UNAFRI; procedures for the effective implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary;⁽²⁷⁾ guidelines for the effective implementation of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials;⁽¹¹⁾ concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action; implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice; implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty;⁽³⁴⁾ effective prevention and investigation of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions; the Beijing Rules;⁽¹³⁾ domestic violence; review of the functioning and programme of the work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice; and the continuation of preparations for the Eighth Congress. A draft decision concerned the report of the Committee on its tenth session and the provisional agenda and documentation for its eleventh session.

Preparations for the Eighth Congress

Preparations for the Eighth (1990) Congress were entrusted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control. In a June report to the Committee,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General discussed continuation of the preparations, reported on the provisional agenda, resource allocations and the appointment of the Director-General of UNOV/CSDHA as the Secretary-General of the Congress, and described the programme of public information activities to be provided by DPI.

Five interregional preparatory meetings of experts were conducted at Vienna on the substantive items of the provisional agenda of the Eighth Congress, as follows: crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development: realities and perspectives of international co-operation (15-19 February); criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures (30 May-3 June); effective national and international action against organized crime and terrorist criminal activities (14-18 March); prevention of juvenile delinquency, juvenile justice and the protection of the young: policy approaches and directions (18-22 April); and United Nations norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard-setting (27 June-1 July). Five regional preparatory meetings were planned for 1989. A number of ad hoc meetings related to items of the provisional agenda were held in 1988 with the co-operation of Governments and on the initiative and with the support of NGOs and academic institutions.

A planning meeting for the Congress was scheduled to take place from 27 August to 7 September 1990. In April 1988,⁽³⁵⁾ Cuba extended an invitation to host the Congress at Havana. On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/146, took note with appreciation of Cuba's offer.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Committee might wish to consider as the theme for the Congress "International criminal justice co-operation for the twenty-first century". He discussed the general preparatory activities for the Congress; categories of participants and observers to be invited; demonstration workshops and information exhibits; and basic documentation.

On 31 August, the Committee approved a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, in which it agreed to the proposed dates and theme of the Congress.

Preparations for the Congress were also discussed at an ad hoc inter-agency meeting (Vienna, 1 and 2 September 1988)⁽²⁸⁾

UN Trust Fund for Social Defence

The United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence had a total income in 1988 of $1,617,506, including $1,407,046 in pledged contributions, while expenditures amounted to $1,349,089.

Most of the contributions were earmarked and used to fund UNSDRI activities and to maintain the United Nations-affiliated Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control.

Cultural development

World Decade for Cultural Development

In January 1988, the Secretary-General and the Director-General of UNESCO launched the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1986.⁽³⁶⁾ They were to report biennially on the progress of the Decade to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session. In February,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, since the Decade was launched in January, it would be preferable to begin the biennial reporting in 1989 and he would propose, in consultation with the UNESCO Director-General, that the Council postpone consideration of the report to its second regular session of 1989.

On 5 February 1988, the Council, by decision 1988/101, decided to consider the report on the progress of the Decade on a biennial basis beginning at its second regular session of 1989 and recommended that the Assembly do the same.

Chapter XIII

Women

In 1988, the United Nations continued the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted in 1985 to overcome obstacles to the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985).

At its March session, the Commission on the Status of Women considered several issues concerning women and development, including the economic aspects of women in development and the problems of rural women. It recommended a number of draft resolutions and decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. On the recommendation of the Commission, the Council, in May, endorsed a comprehensive reporting system to monitor, review and appraise the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies (resolution 1988/22). The system was also endorsed by the General Assembly in December (resolution 43/101) when it emphasized the importance of integrating women into the development process and called on Member States to establish targets to increase women's participation in professional and decision-making positions in their countries.

In July, the Council urged Governments to provide women with adequate education and training facilities and requested United Nations development agencies to pay particular attention to the role of women in rural development, especially in the areas of food, water supply, access to credit facilities and appropriate technologies (1988/29).

The United Nations Development Fund for Women continued to provide resources for plans and projects in developing regions in two priority areas-serving as a catalyst to ensure women's involvement in development activities and supporting innovative and experimental activities benefiting women. In December, the Assembly stressed the importance of strengthening the Fund's technical and financial capacities and invited Governments and others to consider making substantial contributions (43/102).

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women considered 11 initial reports and two second periodic reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on their implementation of the Convention. By the end of the year, the Convention had received 95 signatures and 95 accessions.

Advancement of women

Implementation of the Nairobi Strategies

In response to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1988,⁽²⁾ submitted a report on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.⁽³⁾ The report discussed action taken by the organizations of the United Nations system to implement the Strategies through monitoring and review and appraisal (see below); the Commission on the Status of Women (see below); separate programmes for the advancement of women; steps to ensure the equalization of opportunities for disabled women; the establishment of new five-year targets at each level for the percentage of women in Professional posts and decision-making positions; and development of a public information strategy on issues relating to women.

The report also reviewed the priority themes for consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women in 1989 dealing with equality (equality in economic and social participation); development (women and education, eradication of illiteracy, employment, health and social services, including population issues and child care); and peace (full participation of women in the construction of their countries and in the creation of just social and political systems).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/101 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women
The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 43/108 of 13 December 1985 and 42/62 of 30 November 1987, in which, inter alia, it endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, Taking into consideration Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/18, 1987/19, 1987/20, 1987/21, 1987/22, 1987/23, 1987/24, 1987/25 and 1987/26 of 26 May 1987 and 1988/19, 1988/21, 1988/22 and 1988/29 of 26 May 1988,

Recalling the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted by the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare-Policies and Programmes, held at Vienna from 7 to 15 September 1987.

Noting with concern the serious impact of the world economic situation on the programmes and plans for the advancement of women, especially in the global context,

Monitoring, review and appraisal

In September,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on action taken by the organizations of the United Nations system to monitor the review and appraisal of progress in the advancement of women.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1988/22 (see below), had modified the reporting system proposed by the Secretary-General in January⁽⁴⁾ to form part of a two-year cycle of system-wide monitoring of progress in implementing the Strategies, and established a five-year cycle for review and appraisal. The reporting system aimed at simplifying the substantive aspects of monitoring at the global and regional levels and to extend the review and appraisal at the national level to the whole of the Strategies.

For national monitoring purposes, the United Nations Statistical Office completed a women's indicators and statistical data base in co-operation with the Branch for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna and the statistical services of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization. The data contained over 200 statistical series and indicators for monitoring the situation of women in conformity with the Decade's goals and objectives, the implementation of the Strategies and the priority themes. The Compendium of Statistics and Indicators on the Situation of Women-1986 was prepared using the data base.

On 28 June 1988, the Secretary-General circulated, for the first review and appraisal, a questionnaire to Member States to be returned in early 1989. The first part of the questionnaire consisted of a summary for implementation of the Strategies and the second presented an outline of a national report, including an executive summary.

The Secretary-General noted that systematic monitoring and review and appraisal aspects were being incorporated into the operational activities of the United Nations system and many organizations were elaborating specific procedures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/22 without vote.

Establishment of a comprehensive reporting system to monitor, review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the importance attached by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace to monitoring, review and appraisal as outlined in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind the guidelines set out in its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987, which the Secretary-General was requested to take into account in further developing and implementing the reporting system to monitor, review and appraise progress in the advancement of women,

Recalling its resolution 1987/22 of 26 May 1987, in which it decided to expand the terms of reference of the Commission on the Status of Women to include the functions of promoting the objectives of equality, development and peace, monitoring the implementation of measures for the advancement of women, and reviewing and appraising progress made at the national, subregional, regional, sectoral and global levels,

Reaffirming the request made by the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/62 of 30 November 1987, that the Secretary-General invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

Reaffirming the appropriateness of a two-year cycle of system-wide monitoring of progress made in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and a five-year cycle of longer-term review and appraisal to continue the cycle established by the World Conference,

Recognizing that effective monitoring, review and appraisal should be conducted at the national, regional, sectoral and international levels to achieve optimal results,

Mindful of the need to avoid duplication of reporting obligations, in view of the burden that coexisting reporting systems place on Member States, especially those with limited resources, and in view of the financial stringencies facing the United Nations system,

1. Endorses the comprehensive reporting system to monitor, review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides that its intergovernmental subsidiary bodies, including the regional commissions, should monitor, as necessary, the follow-up to their recommendations relating to the advancement of women;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include the resolutions of those bodies in the report requested by the General Assembly in resolution 42/178 of 11 December 1987 and the results of their monitoring activities in his biennial report to the Commission on the Status of Women on monitoring the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on monitoring, review and appraisal of progress at all levels in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, in the manner set out in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Decides that the biennial reports of the Secretary-General on monitoring of progress made by the organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies should be considered by the Commission in even-numbered years, beginning in 1990;

6. Also decides that, for the purpose of monitoring progress at the national level, the Secretary-General should, within existing resources, make available a summary compilation of available statistical indicators relating to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and submit a progress report on national reporting of statistics and indicators on women to the Commission in odd-numbered years, beginning in 1989;

7. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system to incorporate in their regular work programmes, as necessary, monitoring, review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and to submit reports thereon to their governing bodies;

8. Decides that the first quinquennial report on review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies will be considered by the Commission at its thirty-fourth session, in 1990, and that subsequent reports will be considered in 1995 and 2000, so as to continue the five-year cycle of reporting established during the United Nations Decade for Women;

9. Encourages Member States to make use of the reports prepared for the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and other relevant international bodies in the preparation of the quinquennial review and appraisal reports, in order to minimize duplication of effort;

10. Encourages the provision of technical assistance to national machinery for the advancement of women and the sharing of support and expertise among such machineries, particularly those in developing countries, to facilitate the preparation of the national reports for the quinquennial review and appraisal;

11. Requests the Commission to make action-oriented recommendations for the further implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies following the quinquennial review and appraisal;

12. Decides that, after consideration by the Commission, the monitoring, review and appraisal reports should be made available to the General Assembly so that the Assembly may be kept informed of progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

ANNEX

Comprehensive reporting system to monitor, review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

I. Biennial monitoring of progress made by the organizations of the United Nations system

1. The Secretary-General should prepare biennial reports on monitoring of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women by the organizations of the United Nations system, including monitoring at the regional level. The reports should address the three interrelated and mutually reinforcing objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies: equality, development and peace. Each objective should be reported on separately, as appropriate.

2. An introductory commentary should be included covering the basic strategies, relevant institutions, mandates and programmes of action employed to advance each objective.

3. An account of measures taken for the implementation of the basic strategies for international and regional co-operation set out in chapter V of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies should be included under each objective.

4. The reports should contain specific information on:

(a) Measures to ensure the integration of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in the programmes of the organizations of the United Nations system, including measures to strengthen institutional co-ordination and focal points on the status of women;

(b) Progress made by each organization in establishing and meeting five-year targets at each level for the percentage of women in professional and decision-making positions, as called for by the General Assembly.

5. Reports should be prepared according to a standardized format.

6. In order to minimize duplication of effort, the biennial monitoring reports should make use of reports prepared to meet other reporting requirements, inter alia, any other reports required under sub programme 5A of the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989 to cover the period 1990-1991, the biennial reports requested by the General Assembly in resolution 42/178 of 11 December 1987 and reports on the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations Secretariat, as requested by the General Assembly.

II. Quinquennial review and appraisal

7. The quinquennial review and appraisal will be based on responses from Member States to a questionnaire on the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, including an assessment of the effectiveness of methods and programmes introduced and an account of new programmes planned as a result of the national review and appraisal.

8. The national reports should address the three interrelated and mutually reinforcing objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies: equality, development and peace. Each objective should be monitored and reported on separately.

9. Each national report should include an introductory commentary covering the basic strategies and programmes of action employed to advance each objective and a review and appraisal of their effectiveness.

10. The national reports should include, under each of the three objectives, an account of measures taken to implement the basic strategies for international and regional co-operation set out in paragraphs 356 to 365 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

11. The questionnaires should be simple and direct and structured according to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

12. The national reports should include an account of the measures taken to meet relevant international standards, such as the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the conventions of the International Labour Organisation.

13. Non-governmental bodies should be invited to submit reports for the quinquennial review and appraisal.

14. The biennial statistical reports provided by the Secretary-General to the Commission on the Status of Women for monitoring progress at the national level should be consolidated and made available to the Commission for the quinquennial review and appraisal.

15. Every five years, the Commission should review its conclusions on priority themes on the basis of a compilation of relevant resolutions and should select priority themes for the following five-year period.

16. Reports of Member States to relevant international supervisory bodies, such as the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development should be made available in a consolidated form to the Commission on the Status of Women for consideration in the quinquennial review and appraisal.

17. Reports prepared by the regional commissions on changes in the situation of women within their region, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 42/178, should be made available to the Commission every five years for the review and appraisal.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/20 of 26 May 1987, in which it recommended that an extended session of the Commission on the Status of Women be held in 1990, at which Member States would be represented at a high level, in order to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1987/24 of 26 May 1987, in which it endorsed the priority themes to be considered at the next five sessions of the Commission, regardless of any process of review and appraisal that might take place,

Considering the importance of the review and appraisal process to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, and of the role of non-governmental organizations in that process,

Recalling its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987, in which it established a five-year cycle of review and appraisal of progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

Recognizing the role of non-governmental organizations in contributing to the preparations for the session of the Commission in 1990,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1988/22 of 26 May 1988 on the establishment of a comprehensive reporting system to monitor, review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

Concerned about the limited time and resources available to the Commission and Governments to prepare for the session in 1990,

1. Decides that the duration of the thirty-fourth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, to be held in 1990, shall be ten days, in order that the Commission may review and appraise progress made by Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide additional interpretation facilities, within available resources, so that the Commission may establish a subsidiary body during its thirty-fourth session, in order to make maximum use of the time available;

3. Decides that the Commission should review preparations for the 1990 review and appraisal at its thirty-third session, under the agenda item entitled "Monitoring and implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women";

4. Also decides that the documentation for the 1990 review and appraisal should be prepared according to the requirements of the comprehensive reporting system set out in Council resolution 1988/22 and according to the provisional agenda outlined in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Encourages Governments to provide responses of high quality to the questionnaire on which the review and appraisal will be based;

6. Proposes that assistance be made available to Governments, on request, for the preparation of their responses to the questionnaire;

7. Requests the live regional commissions to hold, within available resources, regional review and appraisal meetings in preparation for the global review and appraisal;

8. Invites non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to submit their views, in writing, on their contribution to the 1990 session of the Commission, for presentation in consolidated form to the Commission at its thirty-third session;

9. Recommends that in 1990 the Commission make a recommendation to the General Assembly on the convening of a world conference to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

Programme planning

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its March session, had before it a note by the Secretary-General on programme planning and co-ordination matters.⁽⁵⁾ He stated that the first stage for implementing the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development was for each organization of the United Nations system to incorporate that plan, as appropriate, into its own medium-term proposals. (For details on the system-wide medium-term plan, see below under "Women and development".)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/18 without vote.

Programme planning and activities to advance the status of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the high priority that Member States attach to activities to advance the status of women,

Welcoming the priority given by the Secretary-General to the advancement of women in the programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989,

Noting the important roles played by the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women in achieving the global equality of women,

Concerned that activities to advance the status of women should not suffer disproportionately from the impact of restructuring and retrenchment measures,

Stressing the need to ensure that budgetary resources allocated to activities for the advancement of women are commensurate with the priorities of Governments,

Referring to the reports of the Secretary-General on programme planning matters pertaining to the status of women,

I. Medium-term planning matters

1. Reiterates the recommendation made by the Commission on the Status of Women that the Secretary-General should identify the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the status of women in general as a global priority for the period 1990-1995 in the introduction to the next medium-term plan;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his proposals for the next medium-term plan, to formulate a separate major programme on the advancement of women, which should include the four existing or proposed sub-programmes of the global social development issues programme which relate to women and incorporate the intersectoral presentation of activities called for by the General Assembly in resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985;

II. Programme budget matters

1. Decides that the Secretary-General's proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 and subsequent programme budgets should provide for full funding from the regular budget for the implementation of all aspects of legislative mandates for the advancement of women;

2. Also decides that the Trust Fund for the Preparatory Activities for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, established by the Secretary-General pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1983/132 of 26 May 1983, should be continued on an interim basis for the biennium 1988-1989 as a special trust fund for the monitoring, review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, for the purpose of facilitating global exchange of information, enhancing the preparation of the work of the Commission on the Status of Women regarding priority themes, and disseminating the results of its discussions of those themes and on monitoring, review and appraisal to a wider audience, in conformity with paragraph 1 of section I above;

3. Recommends that the Trust Fund maintain a close and continuous relationship with other United Nations organs, in particular the United Nations Development Fund for Women, with a view to avoiding duplication;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the future of the Trust Fund to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session;

5. Reiterates the recommendation made by the Commission that the Secretary-General should accord the highest priority in the programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 to the programme elements concerned with policy development in support of the Commission and include activities to that end in the sub programme on the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation;

6. Reaffirms the view of the Commission, as expressed in its resolution 32/1 of 16 March 1988, on the level of resources necessary to implement its mandates effectively and efficiently, expressed in its submission to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields;

7. Recommends that the Branch for the Advancement of Women be renamed the Division for the Advancement of Women, such a change to be carried out without financial implications.

26 May 1988 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/90) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1988/15/Rev.1); agenda item 11.

System-wide co-ordination

The twelfth ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women (Vienna, 24-29 March 1988)⁽⁶⁾ recommended that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) request its subsidiary bodies dealing with substantive, operational and personnel questions to include regularly in their agendas the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, together with other measures to advance the status of women. The meeting also adopted recommendations on priority themes of the Commission in 1989 (see above) and 1990, the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development (see below) and the update of the world survey on women in development (see below). The ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) (Programme Matters) (New York, 3-5 October)⁽⁷⁾ took note of the meeting's recommendations.

In January,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) on the scope and general approach of a 1989 cross-organizational programme analysis on the activities of the United Nations system related to the advancement of women (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/122, decided to defer until its second regular session consideration of a four-part draft resolution, recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women,⁽⁹⁾ concerning system-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate women in development.

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Council adopted resolutions 1988/60 C and D. Resolution 1988/60 C was adopted without vote.

Inter-agency co-ordination in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1985/46 of 31 May 1985, 1986/71 of 23 July 1986 and 1987/86 of 8 July 1987 concerning the preparation of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and the cross-organizational programme analysis of activities related to the advancement of women,

Concerned that many provisions of Commission on the Status of Women resolution 1987/5 of 16 January 1987 relating to the preparation of the final draft of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development are as yet unimplemented,

1. Stresses that the cross-organizational programme analysis to be submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in 1989 should present a comprehensive factual picture of the United Nations system's mandates and activities related to the advancement of women, attempt a comprehensive diagnosis of co-ordination problems and suggest remedial action;

2. Recommends that the activities analysed should include programme activities at the programme element level, technical co-operation projects and regular programmes of technical assistance, grant-based development assistance, and funding by international development-financing institutions;

3. Decides that the legislative mandates to be analysed should include international instruments, intergovernmental resolutions and decisions, other legislative instructions, directives and guidelines, and international strategies, plans and programmes of action relating to the status of women that are still in force;

4. Further decides that the directions given by the Commission on the Status of Women, in its resolution 1987/5 and the annex thereto, for the preparation of the final draft of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development should be fully implemented.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/60 C

27 July 1988 Meeting 39 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1988/114) without vote, 15 July (meeting 8); draft by Commission on women (E/1988/C.3/L.1); agenda item 17.

Resolution 1988/60 D was also adopted without vote.

Legislative linkage as a means of co-ordinating the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling paragraph 320 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which it is stated that specific, appropriate attention should be paid to the advancement of women in the preparation of new instruments and strategies,

Welcoming the decision of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office at its 238th session to place on the agenda of the International Labour Conference in 1989 the question "Night work", as defined in the Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 89) and other relevant conventions,

Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure that specific action is taken to integrate the concerns of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women into the activities mandated by the General Assembly in the following resolutions: resolution 42/104 of 7 December 1987 on the International Literacy Year, resolution 42/106 of 7 December 1987 on the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, resolution 42/163 of 8 December 1987 on the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, resolution 42/177 of 11 December 1987 on the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, resolution 42/186 of 11 December 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, resolution 42/187 of 11 December 1987 on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, and resolution 42/193 of 11 December 1987 on the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/30 without vote.

National machinery for the advancement of women
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/24 of 26 May 1987, in which it recommended the convening of expert group meetings to assist in the preparation of the work of the Commission on the Status of Women on priority themes and endorsed the topic entitled "National machinery for monitoring and improving the status of women" as one of the three priority themes of the thirty-second session of the Commission,

Recognising that national machinery or its equivalent is an essential element in the promotion and implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the Seminar on National Machinery for Monitoring and Improving the Status of Women, held at Vienna from 28 September to 2 October 1987, and the Seminar on Information Systems for the Advancement of Women for National Machinery, held at Vienna from 25 to 29 January 1988,

2. Urges Governments that have already established such machinery or its equivalent to recognize its essential importance in the promotion and implementation of national policies for the advancement of women, the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and therefore requests Governments to provide adequate political, financial and human resources to enable such machinery or its equivalent to function effectively;

3. Encourage Governments, in accordance with their own administrative systems, to make every effort in establishing or strengthening national machinery for the advancement of women, or its equivalent, to do so, as appropriate, on the basis of the recommendations of the Seminar on National Machinery for Monitoring and Improving the Status of Women and the Seminar on Information Systems for the Advancement of Women for National Machinery;

4. Stresses the importance, for Governments, of establishing and maintaining formal and informal mechanisms for co-operation between national machinery or its equivalent and specialized centres of responsibility in sectoral departments and ministries, including mechanisms to support greater co-ordination of efforts to promote the interests of women in both national and international policies;

5. Calls upon Governments to develop information systems that include statistics and indicators on the status of women;

6. Invites national machineries or their equivalents to exchange information, bilaterally and multilaterally, on issues of common interest, including information on innovative policies, programmes and research;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the regional commissions, to promote such information exchange by supporting regional and subregional meetings of national machineries or their equivalents, using -resources from the regular programme of advisory services for the biennium 1988-1989 and from the regular budgets of the live regional commissions thereafter, and by annually updating and distributing the Directory of National Machinery for the Advancement of Women;

8. Invites Governments of developing countries to give priority, within the context of their overall requests for development assistance, to proposals for assistance to strengthen national machinery for the advancement of women or its equivalent;

9. Recommends that international development agencies respond positively to requests from Governments for assistance in strengthening national machinery for the advancement of women or its equivalent;

10. Urges the national machinery for the advancement of women or its equivalent in each Government to participate actively in the preparation of and follow-up to the work of the Commission on the Status of Women by co-ordinating the collection of all forms of information for the comprehensive reporting system to review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and report for the Commission's consideration of priority themes;

11. Endorses the continuation of the information system on women initiated by the Secretary-General and its further development in official languages of the United Nations, consistent with the priorities determined by Governments and taking advantage of all sources of funding beyond those already mandated, including the contributions of interested Governments;

12. Recommends that statistics and other information on women be an integral part of all relevant major statistical and public information programmes of the United Nations system, including those of the United Nations Office at Vienna and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat;

13. Recommends that the services of an inter regional adviser be made available, through the regular programme of technical co-operation, to assist, on request, national machineries or their equivalents in carrying out effectively their review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and in preparing the reports called for in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

14. Decides that the questionnaire to be prepared by the Secretary-General to collect information for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies should contain a specific section on national machinery or its equivalent;

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (IN STRAW) held its eighth session at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 8 to 12 February 1988.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Board reviewed IN STRAW'S 1987 activities and considered IN STRAW training strategies on women in development (WID); new communication technologies as applied to WID; the proposed 1988-1989 IN STRAW programme budget; network building through co-operative arrangements with Governments, United Nations bodies and non-governmental, academic and women's organizations; and fund-raising.

In decisions it adopted and brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, the Board stated its intention to examine IN STRAW publications in depth for future policy guidelines and action. It recommended that prototype curricula and teaching materials on women and development be developed. It further recommended that IN STRAW communication facilities and linkages with other United Nations information systems be further upgraded and expanded to academic institutions. The regional commissions were requested to assist IN STRAW in establishing new focal points and to co-operate with existing focal points and correspondents. The Board recommended that IN STRAW and the regional commissions jointly co-ordinate their strategies within the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995 and convene consultations prior to the Board's 1989 session.

IN STRAW activities

Reporting on the Institute's work in 1988, the IN STRAW Director stated that the work programme for the year had included 26 programmes in research and training on women and development in five programmatic clusters: statistics, indicators and data on women; issues relevant for policy design; sectoral issues, focusing on inter-agency co-operation in the areas of drinking-water supply and sanitation and new and renewable sources of energy; training methods for WID; and network building. The Director noted that the close interrelationship between the IN STRAW research, training and information programmes had been further strengthened, thus contributing to the expansion of the 1988 work programme.

Within its programme on statistics, indicators and data on women, IN STRAW organized three training workshops: two national workshops (Beijing, China, 2-8 June; Athens, Greece, 10-14 October) and a subregional workshop for Central America (San José, Costa Rica, 5-9 December).

IN STRAW began, in October 1988, implementation of the statistics component of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) project, funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), on improving African women's role in informal-sector production and management. IN-STRAW co-operated with ECA and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) in implementing a study on the time-use of women and developing statistics and indicators on the situation of women in the ESCWA region.

Under its programme on alternative approaches to women and development, IN STRAW co-sponsored an international training seminar on women and the economy, focusing on women managers and entrepreneurs (Halifax, Canada, 25-28 July), and co-operated with the Society for International Development in a conference on poverty, development and collective survival: public and private responsibilities (New Delhi, India, March).

IN STRAW, in co-operation with the Bulgarian Academy of Sciences (its focal point in Bulgaria), organized an interregional consultative meeting on women in co-operatives: implications for development (Plovdiv, Bulgaria, 20-24 June).

Under the programme on the role of women and new and renewable sources of energy, IN-STRAW prepared, in collaboration with the ILO International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training (Turin, Italy), a multi-media modular training package on women and new and renewable sources of energy. The package contained a pedagogical scheme, additional reading, a bibliography, a lesson plan, key issue check-lists for group work, a trainer's guide and two evaluation forms; it was supplemented with sound slide packages and transparencies.

The IN STRAW training manual for women entrepreneurs and managers in industry was prepared in collaboration with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

The Institute prepared a training package on women and development which was presented during a joint training seminar with UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund (Santo Domingo, 28 November-2 December).

IN STRAW organized an international consultative meeting on communications for women in development (Rome, Italy, 24-28 October) with financial support from Italy and the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung (Federal Republic of Germany).

At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held in November 1988, 23 Member States pledged $1,199,364 to IN STRAW for 1989. As at 31 December 1988, the balance of the Trust Fund for IN STRAW amounted to $1,685,933.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/31 without vote.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/25 of 26 May 1987,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 42/65 of 30 November 1987,

Having considered the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its eighth session,

Convinced that the programme activities of the Institute have helped to promote greater general awareness of the linkages between research, training and information in questions relating to women and development, which is an essential prerequisite for bringing about developmental changes benefiting women and society,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its eighth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the work done by the Institute in its innovative research on economic activities of women, particularly in the informal sector of the economy, and with its flexible modular approach to training, which strengthens national training capabilities and should be further developed;

3. Takes note of the programme budget of the Institute for the biennium 1988-1989, approved by the Board of Trustees at its eighth session, which is consistent with the goals of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

4. Recommends that the Institute, in keeping with its statute, continue to co-operate with the organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of its programmes and possibly implement research and training projects within its area of competence funded by the United Nations Development Programme;

5. Renews its appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other potential donors to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

Women and development

Commission action. The Commission on the Status of Women⁽¹⁾ made a number of recommendations concerning women in development in resolutions it adopted on the system-wide co-ordination of activities to integrate WID and on rural women and development. Under the priority theme of development, the Commission discussed the problems of rural women, including food, water resources, agricultural technology, rural employment, transportation and environment. It had before it a report of the Secretary-General,⁽²⁾ prepared in collaboration with United Nations bodies and specialized agencies whose work covered rural women, which outlined the current situation of rural women, indicated the limitations to improving their conditions and suggested policy measures to overcome those limitations.

UNICEF action. At its 1988 session,⁽³⁾ the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) discussed a progress report⁽⁴⁾ on achievements made in implementing UNICEF's policy on WID, which the Board had adopted in 1987.⁽⁵⁾ The report reviewed the follow-up, implementation and field application of the policy and recommendations for action to strengthen UNICEF's commitment towards incorporating women into mainstream development activities. Special orientation and training was required to widen the expertise of programme staff in regional and country offices to assist in monitoring and participate in field-work of selected country programmes. Programme officers specializing in WID issues were needed, as was a personal commitment of senior management, for which an accountability system to monitor programme implementation performance was recommended. The report stressed the importance of organizing training workshops to develop field staff perspectives and skills in areas of operational methodology. The Board endorsed the recommendations for action as proposed in the report.⁽⁶⁾

UNDP action. In a March report with later addendum,⁽⁷⁾ the UNDP Administrator discussed the way in which WID perspectives were reflected in the work of UNDP. He also addressed other issues, such as staff training, including the participation of agencies and government representatives; complementarity with the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) (see below); co-operation between the UNDP Division for WID with relevant units of United Nations organizations, agencies, Governments and non-governmental organizations (NGOS); and the 1988 work plan.

On 1 July,⁽⁸⁾ the UNDP Governing Council, having considered the report of the Administrator, noted an initiative taken by the Division for WID to examine the feasibility of more gender-responsive programming and asked the Administrator to submit a progress report thereon in 1989. The Council encouraged the expansion and diversification of the staff training programme and requested information on its development in 1989. It further requested the Administrator to report in 1989 on the complementarity between the Division for WID, UNIFEM and IN STRAW and on how WID perspectives were reflected in the work of UNDP.

UNEP activities. The Senior Women's Advisory Group on Sustainable Development of the United Nations Environment Programme contributed to a workshop on women and environment for sustainable development (Bangkok, Thailand), held by the International Council on Social Welfare, Asia and the Pacific.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/29 without vote.

Rural women and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/24 and its decision 1987/121, both of 26 May 1987, in which it endorsed the decision of the Commission on the Status of Women to consider problems of rural women as the priority theme under the objective of development at its thirty-second session,

Recognizing that the economic and financial crises that are affecting most of the developing countries have severely affected the socio-economic status of women,

Bearing in mind the enormous burden on women engaged in food production,

Bearing in mind also that the majority of women in developing countries are active in agriculture as farmers in their own right or as wage labourers in commercial agriculture,

Recognizing women's limited access to and control of agricultural resources, such as land, appropriate agricultural technologies, credit and training,

Recognizing that better health and sanitation are among the goals of development,

Bearing in mind that fetching water for domestic use is a major time-consuming task and primarily the responsibility and concern of women,

Recognizing that education is the basis for improving the status of women,

Aware that the lack of education and training for women in developing countries reduces their socio-economic options, particularly employment opportunities,

1. Urges Governments:

(a) To undertake projects exclusively designed for rural women;

(b) To involve women in the design, planning and implementation of such projects;

(c) To design projects to improve access to water supplies and sanitation and to promote the development of agricultural technologies and extension services for women;

2. Urges Governments to provide women with adequate education and training facilities to ensure their access to equal employment opportunities;

3. Appeals to donor countries to increase aid and fellowships to improve the status of women in developing countries;

4. Requests the development agencies of the United Nations system to pay particular attention in their programmes to the general role of women in rural development, especially in the areas of food, water supply, access to credit facilities and appropriate technologies;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a seminar on women and rural development, using the resources available in the Trust Fund for the Preparatory Activities of the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women and drawing on the results of the Interregional Seminar on National Experience Relating to the Improvement of the Situation of Women in Rural Areas, held at Vienna from 17 to 28 September 1984 in preparation for the World Conference.

Updating the survey on women in development

Pursuant to a 1986 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report⁽¹⁰⁾ containing the first draft of an update of the 1985 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development.⁽¹¹⁾ The first draft elaborated material contained in a 1987 report of the Secretary-General.⁽¹²⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/21 without vote.

Updating of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development in the light of the deterioration in the status of women in the developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that, in compliance with resolution 1986/64 of 23 July 1986, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-second session, a first draft of the updated World Survey on the Role of Women in Development,

Taking into account the fact that the preliminary assessments of that survey and of other studies prepared by specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system point to a deterioration in the status of women in developing countries, which is apparent in worsening working conditions, reduction in income, declining or stagnating health services and reduced access to education,

Considering that this deterioration, which is in marked contrast to expectations for an improvement in the status of women, makes it difficult to achieve the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and is becoming an obstacle to the effective implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Reaffirming the need to examine in depth the role of women in development, in particular the situation of women in developing countries and the problems hindering their advancement,

1. Recommends that in updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development particular emphasis be given to those factors that contribute to the deteriorating status of women in developing countries, namely:

(a) The economic crisis, including the problem of external debt servicing, which has resulted in worsening working conditions, particularly in low-paying employment and in the informal sector of the economy;

(b) The long-term effects of the inability of certain sectors of the economy adequately to absorb female labour;

(c) The decline in women's income, particularly in agricultural regions;

(d) The gap that evidently exists between the income levels of men and women;

(e) The long-term effects of the decline in the levels of education, nutrition and health that is evident in a large number of developing countries as a result of adjustment policies;

2. Also recommends that when preparing the updated survey, the Secretary-General make a special effort to adopt approaches that strike a balance between traditional viewpoints on adjustment policies and more innovative approaches that take into account the social cost to women of adjustments arising from, among other things, debt servicing;

3. Considers that in the updated survey attention should be devoted to alternative policies for managing the problem of external indebtedness in developing countries, which might in turn help eliminate the current obstacles to the achievement of the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.

Integration of women in economic development programmes

In March, the ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women⁽¹³⁾ (see above) recommended the organization of a joint activity with interested organizations to consolidate and simplify existing guidelines and check-lists concerning the issue of WID, and that a review be carried out of existing guidelines for projects on the incorporation of WID, in order to prepare a consolidated set of guidelines for use by field staff, UNDP was to initiate the process. In September,⁽¹⁴⁾ CCSQ (Operational Activities) (OPS) agreed to review, in 1989, the consolidated set of guidelines.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/49 without vote.

Economic aspects of women in development
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 42/178 of 11 December 1987 and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, particularly paragraphs 120, 137, 142, 147, 282 and 312 thereof,

Having reviewed annex I to the World Economic Survey 1988 on selected indicators of the Socio-economic attainment of women and taking into consideration the useful comments made thereon,

Recognising the essential role of the economic activities of women in both the formal and the informal sectors of the economies of all countries and the positive role of women in promoting growth and development,

Convinced that further analysis of the economic activities of women in developing and developed countries is necessary for the design and implementation of social and economic policies,

Calls upon the Secretary-General to devote a separate section in the World Economic Survey to the economic aspects of the situation of women and their contribution to economic development, taking into account, inter alia, their participation in the evolution of labour markets.

By decision 1988/122 of 26 May, the Council deferred until its second regular session consideration of a four-part draft resolution (see above, under "System-wide co-ordination").

On 27 July, the Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1988/60 B without vote.

Intergovernmental co-operation to integrate women effectively in economic development programmes and activities

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 1986/65 of 23 July 1986 and 1987/65 of 8 July 1987,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 42/178 of 11 December 1987,

Emphasising the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in promoting co-operation among intergovernmental bodies to integrate women fully in economic development programmes and activities,

1. Considers that intergovernmental co-operation in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women would be considerably strengthened if each of the United Nations intergovernmental bodies concerned were to include in its agenda an item on activities for the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies within its field of competence, in particular, activities concerned with monitoring, technical co-operation, institutional co-ordination, research and policy analysis, the participation of women in decision-making, and public information, and transmit its report on that agenda item to the Commission on the Status of Women;

2. Decides that the reports requested in Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/65 and decision 1987/182 of 8 July 1987 should first be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session for consideration and then to the Council at its second regular session of 1989;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the measures taken in 1986, 1987 and 1988:

(a) To ensure coherent implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies by central, regional and sectoral intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations;

(b) To harmonize the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies with all relevant United Nations intergovernmental decisions and other international strategies and plans and programmes of action;

4. Further requests that the reports referred to in paragraph 2 of the present resolution be consolidated in a single report structured according to the three aspects of co-ordination defined in resolution 1988/60 A;

5. Recommends that, in the light of the importance of the overall co-ordination of United Nations activities, particularly between the units of the Secretariat in New York and Vienna, provision continue to be made for the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs to maintain liaison in New York.

Medium-term plan for women and development

ACC action. In March,⁽¹³⁾ the ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women (see above) adopted two recommendations on the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development (1990-1995).⁽¹⁵⁾ One recommended that organizations of the United Nations system should continue to incorporate in their planning and policy documents proposals consistent with the plan. The other discussed the preparation by ACC of an initial report on the plan's implementation.

CCSQ(OPS), in April,⁽¹⁶⁾ noted that although most of the activities in the plan would be undertaken by individual organizations, there was considerable scope for joint action, particularly in the area of technical co-operation, training and advisory services.

CPC consideration. In response to a 1987 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to CPC, in January 1988,⁽¹⁸⁾ a report proposing a general framework and approach to preparing a cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) on the advancement of women, to be reviewed by CPC in 1989. The COPA was to be prepared as a monitoring tool for implementing the system-wide medium-term plan and would also incorporate activities relating to equality and peace.

In May,⁽¹⁹⁾ CPC concluded that the Secretary-General's report provided a useful basis for the COPA, which would cover the main objectives of ity, development and peace and encompass the the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies of equal-related priority themes of employment, health and education.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/121, decided to defer until its second regular session consideration of a draft resolution, recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women,⁽¹⁾ concerning the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women.

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee! the Council adopted resolution 1988/59 without vote.

System-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women: equality, development and peace

Affirming its determination to give adequate attention to all the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

1. Urges all United Nations bodies, including the regional commissions, and the specialized agencies that have not yet done so to develop and implement comprehensive policies for the advancement of women and to incorporate them in their organization's medium-term plans, statements of objectives, programmes and other major policy statements;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and within existing financial resources, to initiate the formulation of a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, directed towards the objectives of equality, development and peace, for the period 1996-2001, taking into account the priorities recommended by the Economic and Social Council, the provisions of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the views and decisions of the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, on the content of the plan, as well as experience in developing the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995;

3. Recommends all United Nations bodies, including the regional commissions, and the specialized agencies to take Commission on the Status of Women resolutions 1987/1 and 1987/2 into account in the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989, through the Commission on the Status of Women.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/59

27 July 1988 Meeting 39 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1988/114) without vote, 19 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on women (E/1988/C.3/L.1); agenda item 17.

Technical co-operation

In his annual report on United Nations technical co-operation,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General described WID activities, particularly those of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD). Training was emphasized, with another module added to the computer training package demonstrating the impact of changes in the role and status of women on the economy. DTCD maintained close collaboration with INSTRAW in training, which was also provided through community development projects. DTCD provided seed money to finance a programme on water use and conservation, which included the training of trainers and the purchase of teaching materials and equipment to build a demonstration village sanitary installation. Fellowships awarded to women in the area of population rose from 36 in 1987 to 58 in 1988. Under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, the percentage of women from Namibia and South Africa receiving scholarships was 54 per cent and 44 per cent, respectively.

An interregional seminar (Mali) focused on the involvement of women in drawing up and managing water resources programmes. In other projects, special components were designed to improve traditional technologies and acquaint women with ways of benefiting from ongoing development programmes.

The DTCD Task Force on Women focused on the need to involve primary users-community women in rural areas-at the planning stage as well as during other phases of a project cycle.

UN Development Fund for Women

The Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women met twice in 1988, in New York, from 5 to 11 April and from 6 to 12 September.⁽²¹⁾ It approved the Fund's 1988-1989 work plan, which featured the implementation of two regional plans-the African Investment Plan, including the development of activities in the northern African States, and the Participatory Action Plan for Latin America and the Caribbean-and the development and implementation of the Asia and Pacific Development Strategy, including preparation of a strategy for programming in Western Asia. The work plan also included the replenishment of two facilities, one for monitoring and evaluation and the other for mainstream programming initiatives.

In April,⁽²²⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Governing Council (see below) his annual report on the operations, management and budget of the Fund in 1987. The report gave an overview of the management of UNIFEM, highlighting operational activities, and provided information on its financial status.

In a report on the 1988 activities of the Fund,⁽²¹⁾ the Administrator stated that activities carried out with organizations of the United Nations included a mission to the Pacific, mounted with the support of the UNDP office in Suva, Fiji. The mission proposed a project for incorporating women in national and project development planning and a strategy for executing it. In Mexico, collaboration between UNDP, UNIFEM and ILO resulted in a proposal aimed at enhancing women's participation in an ongoing UNDP/ILO/government project. In Argentina, a mission resulted in the provision of financial assistance by UNIFEM for activities to enhance women's participation in and benefits from a $20 million credit project of the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the Inter-American Development Bank. In Guatemala, UNIFEM assisted in the formulation of credit programmes to help women producers who were often overlooked in large-scale credit schemes. UNIFEM collaborated with the World Bank in two joint missions.

Activities with intergovernmental organizations included support for a regional conference of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference on women and food technology (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, May 1988) and preparation of a plan for co-operation between UNIFEM and the Inter-American Institute for Co-operation on Agriculture (San Jose, Costa Rica).

The Fund's work with government and national organizations focused on assistance to Zambia in designing a strategy to incorporate the issue of WID into the country's five-year development plan and recommendations to strengthen the Ministry of Community Development, Culture, Youth and Sports in the United Republic of Tanzania. In the Philippines, UNIFEM supported the National Commission on the Role of Filipino Women in preparing a development plan for women. In Guatemala, UNIFEM, in collaboration with national women's organizations, helped to plan a national workshop on women, in preparation for a subregional conference hosted by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (September).

As to project support for developing innovative and experimental activities benefiting women, UNIFEM reviewed some 124 proposals, of which 38 were recommended for funding for a total of $4.9 million. Two specialty areas in which UNIFEM was pioneering approaches dealt with women and food cycle technologies and credit support systems.

At the November 1988 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, 32 countries pledged $4.7 million to UNIFEM general resources for 1989. Total pledges were expected to reach $7 million, a 23 per cent increase over the previous year.

In October,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the UNDP Administrator's report on 1987 UNIFEM activities to the General Assembly.

UNDP Council action. On 17 February 1988,⁽²⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council, taking note of a report on UNIFEM⁽²⁵⁾ containing proposals for changing from full to partial funding, approved that change on the understanding that financial and administrative issues arising from it would be referred to the Council's Budgetary and Finance Committee at its 1988 regular session. At that session (Geneva, 6 June-1 July),⁽²⁶⁾ the Committee recommended that the Council approve the implementation of the partial funding system, effective 1988; decide that UNIFEM should establish and maintain, on a fully funded basis, an operational reserve of 45 per cent of outstanding recommended project approvals and unspent allocations; and request the Administrator to submit a report on the implementation of the system in 1990.

On 1 July 1988,⁽²⁷⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report on the operations, management and budget of UNIFEM in 1987⁽²²⁾ and its February decision,⁽²⁴⁾ and adopted the recommendations of the Budgetary and Finance Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 43/102 without vote.

United Nations Development Fund for Women
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its decisions set forth in resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984,

Emphasizing the catalytic role of the United Nations Development Fund for Women in the United Nations development co-operation system, with the goal of ensuring the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities at the pre-investment stages, and supporting activities directly benefiting women in line with national and regional priorities,

Recognizing that the Fund's dynamism lies in its flexibility and the complementarity of its innovative and catalytic priority roles,

Recognizing the initiatives of the Fund to assist national machineries on women, planning and other relevant ministries and intergovernmental organizations to integrate the concerns of women and to ensure their involvement in development programmes at all levels,

Noting the Fund's regional priority frameworks and its increased co-operation with regional and national development banks and larger funds, through which critical resources have been leveraged for women in development activities,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General, containing the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Notes the Fund's continued co-operation with units throughout the United Nations system concerned with women and development, and with the planning and sectoral ministries and the national machineries on women in development of developing countries;

3. Stresses the importance of the continuous strengthening of the technical and financial capacities of the Fund to enable it to preserve and augment its flexible approaches to supporting activities at the national, regional and global levels, including those of the regional commissions and of the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

4. Reaffirms the dual priorities of the Fund to serve as a catalyst in respect of mainstream development activities, as often as possible at pre-investment stages, and to support innovative and experimental activities in line with national and regional priorities, and recognizes the forceful interrelationship between the two approaches;

5. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals that have pledged and contributed to the Fund;

6. Notes with concern that the Fund's resources have been insufficient to enable it to respond adequately to the increasing number of requests received;

7. Commends national committees on the Fund and non-governmental organizations for their initiatives in the development of education and public awareness programmes and resource mobilization on behalf of the Fund;

8. Invites Governments, non-governmental organizations and others to consider making substantial contributions to the Fund;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the Fund submitted pursuant to Assembly resolution 39/125.

Status of women

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-second session (Vienna, 14-23 March 1988),⁽¹⁾ recommended 17 draft resolutions and two decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. The resolutions dealt with: women and children under apartheid; women and children in Namibia; Palestinian women; women and peace in Central America; discrimination against women; violence against women; international peace and co-operation; rural women and development; the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women; improvement of the status of women in the United Nations system (see PART SIX, Chapter II); programme planning and activities to advance the status of women; system-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate WID; the Commission's 1990 session; updating the world survey on women and development; a reporting system to monitor, review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies; enlargement of the Commission; and national machinery for the advancement of women. The decisions dealt with the provisional agenda for the Commission's 1989 session and the mandate of the office of the Co-ordinator for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1988/122 of 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council deferred until its second regular session consideration of a four-part draft resolution (see above, under "System-wide co-ordination").

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1988/60 A without vote.

Co-ordinating role of the Commission on the Status of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Convinced that it must play a more forceful and dynamic role in reviewing and co-ordinating all activities of the United Nations system relevant to women's issues,

Referring to the reports of the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on co-ordination matters pertaining to the status of women,

Considers that the central substantive co-ordinating role of the Commission on the Status of Women in advancing the status of women and integrating women in development has three distinct aspects:

(a) Intergovernmental co-operation, which relates to action taken by the United Nations central, regional and sectoral intergovernmental bodies to achieve a coherent and complementary approach to implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women within the United Nations;

(b) Inter-agency co-ordination, which relates to measures taken by organizations of the United Nations system to co-ordinate the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies;

(c) Legislative linkage, which relates to action taken by the Commission on the Status of Women to link the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to all relevant United Nations intergovernmental decisions and other international strategies and plans and programmes of action.

Approved by Third Committee (E/1988/114) without vote, 15 July (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1988/C.3/L.1); agenda item 17.

In May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted decision 1988/125 without vote.

Enlargement of the Commission on the Status of Women

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, recalling its resolution 1987/23 of 26 May 1987, in which it accepted, in principle, the enlargement of the Commission on the Status of Women and decided that the Commission at its thirty-second session should consider proposals to that end and submit them to the Council at its first regular session of 1988, noting that the membership of the United Nations had increased from 120 Member States in 1966 to 159 Member States and that the Commission had not been enlarged proportionately, bearing in mind the principle of equitable geographical distribution for the allocation of seats, considering that issues related to women had grown in complexity and in number, particularly in the developing world, and recalling its resolution 1988/19 of 26 May 1988, by which it decided that the Commission should hold in 1990 a session of extended duration to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, decided:

(a) To take action on draft resolution XIII, entitled "Enlargement of the Commission on the Status of Women", contained in the report of the Commission, and the amendments proposed thereto,^a at its first regular session of 1989;

(b) To invite the Commission to offer its views on the question of its enlargement, in the light of the foregoing considerations and the discussions held during the first regular session of the Council of 1988;

(c) To urge that, in the mean time, consultations should be held with a view to assisting the Council in its consideration of the issue.

On 26 May, by decision 1988/123, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its 1988 session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1989 session.

Role of women in society

In December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 43/425 without vote.

The role of women in society

At its 75th plenary meeting, on 8 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, having reaffirmed its profound conviction that all Governments, international organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations should pay due attention to their activities to the importance of the role of women in society in all its interrelated aspects-as mothers, as participants in political, economic, social and cultural development and as participants in public life-and recalling its resolutions 39/123 of 14 December 1984, 40/101 of 13 December 1985, 41/110 of 4 December 1986 and 42/64 of 30 November 1987, decided to recommend that the Commission on the Status of Women, during the consideration at its next sessions of the priority themes under the heading "Equality", including "Equality in economic and social participation" at its thirty-third session, should consider the provisions of the Assembly resolutions on the role of women in society, with a view to formulating recommendations for appropriate action by concerned United Nations organs and bodies, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Women and peace

The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on access to information and education for peace,⁽²⁾ one of the areas under the priority theme of peace selected by the Economic and Social Council in 1987.⁽³⁾ The Secretary-General discussed women's access to information and education for peace and the role of women in education for peace, including family and early childhood development, formal education, society and decision-making processes. He also described the role of the United Nations in promoting the participation of women in education for peace. He concluded that women needed full access to information and education, as well as knowledge of the techniques for the non-violent resolution of conflicts. Special classes, courses and training seminars could encourage women to develop their interests in peace. The Secretary-General suggested a number of issues for further research on the role of women in the education of societies for life in peace and activities to increase women's participation in education for peace.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/28 without vote.

Expressing the need for equal participation of women in all efforts to strengthen and maintain international peace and security and to promote international co-operation, disarmament, the process of detente and respect for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Referring to General Assembly resolution 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,

Recalling that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000, emphasized that the main principles and directions for women's activities aimed at strengthening peace, formulated in the Declaration, should be put into practice,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 42/61 of 30 November 1987, in which the Assembly invited the Commission on the Status of Women to give adequate attention to all the priority themes under the headings of equality, development and peace in recognition of the complexity of all the subject areas addressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and in other policy documents, including the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation,

Stressing that access to information, education for peace and the eradication of violence against women within the family and society are important for the implementation of the Declaration,

Welcoming the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-range and Shorter-range Missiles, signed in Washington, D.C., on 8 December 1987, as an important step in promoting international peace and co-operation and a contribution to the creation of favourable conditions for the attainment of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Noting that the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament will provide manifold opportunities to support the participation of women in all activities related to peace, disarmament and security at the national, regional and international levels,

Wishing to encourage the active participation of women in promoting international peace, security and co-operation and the elimination of violence against women within the family and society,

1. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to give adequate attention to the implementation of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation and to the elimination of violence against women within the family and society;

2. Appeals to all Governments to take practical institutional, educational and organizational measures to facilitate the participation of women on an equal footing with men in activities related to peace, disarmament negotiations and the resolution of conflicts, and to inform the Secretary-General of the activities that they have undertaken at all levels to implement the Declaration;

3. Invites Member States to use the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament as an occasion to support the full participation of women in the establishment of conditions conducive to the maintenance of peace and to the elimination of inequality, poverty and violence against women within the family and society;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament on programmes and activities undertaken by the United Nations system relating to women and peace, in particular those activities relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to take adequate steps to ensure that publicity is given to the Declaration.

Women and peace in Central America

On 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/20 without vote.

Women and peace in Central America

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace recognized that women must participate fully in all efforts to strengthen and maintain international peace and security and to promote international co-operation,

Recalling also that the World Conference also recognized that the situation of violence and destabilization in Central America hindered the fulfilment of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, which were essential to the advancement of women,

Taking note of the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, at Guatemala City, on 7 August 1987, by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua,

Recognising the valuable contribution of the Contadora Group and its Support Group to the process of bringing peace to Central America,

Convinced of the exceptional importance to the peoples of Central America, particularly the women, of achieving peace, reconciliation, development and social justice in the region, as well as ensuring their economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Considering that the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/1 of 7 October 1987, requested the Secretary-General to promote a special plan of co-operation for Central America,

Eager to encourage the active participation of women in the promotion of peace and development in Central America,

1. Expresses its gratification at the strong desire for peace manifested by the Presidents of the Central American countries in their signing of the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America".
2. Calls upon the Presidents of the Central American countries to continue their joint efforts to achieve peace in Central America, particularly the efforts aimed at establishing the Central American Parliament, in order to guarantee propitious conditions for the attainment in the region of the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and requests the international community to support those efforts;

3. Urges all States to support the peace efforts, fully respecting the principles of the self-determination of peoples and non-intervention;

4. Also urges the international community to ensure that programmes of technical, economic and financial co-operation for the region take account of the particular needs and interests of Central American women;

5. Recommends to the Secretary-General that the special plan of co-operation for Central America should include specific activities in support of the advancement of women in the region;

6. Exhorts the Governments of the Central American countries and of the countries of the Contadora Group and its Support Group to encourage and guarantee the full participation of women at all levels in the search for peace, pluralism, democracy and comprehensive development in the Central American region;

7. Urges national and international governmental and non-governmental women's organizations to participate in and support actively the process of peace and development in Central America.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/20

26 May 1988 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/90) without vote, 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1988/15/Rev.1); agenda item 11.

Palestinian women

Pursuant to a 1986 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on the situation of Palestinian women living within and outside the occupied Arab territories,⁽⁵⁾ based mainly on information received from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. The Secretary-General stated that the difficult living conditions of Palestinian women indicated the need for special attention and assistance. The assistance being provided to the Palestinian people by the United Nations did not focus adequately on women's needs. The Secretary-General suggested that the needs of the Palestinian women should be ascertained through special missions, and programmes of assistance should be designed to go beyond the delivery of services.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/25 by recorded vote.

Situation of Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Referring to the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of Palestinian women living within and outside the occupied Arab territories,

Mindful of the humanitarian principles and provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 thereof,

Noting with deep concern the escalating Israeli oppression and ill-treatment of the Palestinian people, including women and children in the occupied Palestinian territories,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the situation of Palestinian women and children inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territories to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session;

2. Strongly condemns the application of an "iron-fist" policy by Israel, the occupying Power, against Palestinian women and their families in the occupied Palestinian territories;

3. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War is applicable to territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

Women and children under apartheid

In accordance with a 1986 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on political and social developments concerning the situation of women living under apartheid in South Africa and in Namibia.⁽⁷⁾ He also reviewed assistance to South African and Namibian refugees. The Secretary-General stated that black people, particularly black women, in South Africa and Namibia continued to suffer under apartheid, unable to change conditions affecting their daily lives, such as free movement and access to education, employment and other basic services. Their situation deserved full international assistance from Governments and NGOs. Although a considerable effort had been made to provide assistance, it was not sufficient to meet the growing needs.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1988/23, urged Member States and United Nations organizations to give effect to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies that dealt with women and children under apartheid. By resolution 1988/24, it called on women to support and assist all bodies struggling to end colonialism in Namibia.

(For details on women and children living under apartheid, see PART TWO, Chapter I. For information on the question of Namibia, see PART FOUR, Chapter III.)

Violence against women

The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on efforts to eradicate violence against women within the family and society,⁽⁶⁾ one of the areas under the priority theme of peace selected by the Economic and Social Council in 1987.⁽⁷⁾ The Secretary-General reviewed international concern on the issue, discussed the nature of violence against women within the family and society and surveyed efforts to eradicate violence against women at the national, regional and international levels. He made a series of recommendations to eradicate violence against women, among them, increasing public awareness; making the issue a priority in relevant United Nations agencies and bodies and other international and regional organizations; reviewing and reformulating educational curricula to emphasize gender equality, partnership, tolerance, mutual respect, self-reliance and self-esteem; and organizing seminars to help women speak out about the problem.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1988, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/27 without vote.

Efforts to eradicate violence against women within the family and society

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which it was stated that violence against women was a major obstacle to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on efforts to eradicate violence against women within the family and society and the views of the Commission on the Status of Women expressed during its thirty-second session,

Noting and fully appreciating the efforts being undertaken by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and researchers throughout the world,

Mindful of the need to continue and accelerate both short-term and long-term efforts already under way to eradicate the problem of violence against women,

1. Calls upon Member States to take the necessary steps to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also calls upon concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and researchers to continue to consolidate their efforts and establish close collaboration with the relevant units and organizations of the United Nations system in the eradication of violence against women within the family and society;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report and, in this regard, to ensure close collaboration between the Branch for the Advancement of Women and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and research institutions concerned;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session the relevant recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence in the Family with Special Emphasis on its Effects on Women, held at Vienna from 8 to 12 December 1986, so that the Committee may review them and provide guidance on their implementation;

Elimination of discrimination against women

Convention on discrimination against women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established under the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,⁽¹⁾ held its seventh session in New York from 16 February to 4 March 1988.⁽²⁾

The Committee considered 11 initial reports of States parties (Argentina, Australia, Dominican Republic, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Mali, New Zealand, Nigeria, Senegal, Uruguay) and two second periodic reports (Hungary, Sweden) on legislative, juridical, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention.

CEDAW adopted a general recommendation stating that States parties should make more use of temporary special measures, such as positive action, preferential treatment or quota systems, to advance women's integration into education, the economy, politics and employment. It also recommended that States parties establish or strengthen effective national machinery, institutions and procedures to advise on the impact on women of government policies, monitor the situation of women comprehensively and help formulate new policies and effectively carry out strategies and measures to eliminate discrimination; take steps to ensure the dissemination of the Convention, their reports under article 18 and CEDAW reports in the language of the States concerned; and include in their reports action taken in respect of the recommendation. On the subject of resources, CEDAW recommended to States parties that they take measures to ensure that adequate resources and services were available to it. A fourth recommendation stated that States parties should take further direct measures in accordance with article 4 of the Convention to ensure the full implementation of article 8 and to ensure to women on equal terms with men and without any discrimination the opportunities to represent their Government at the international level and to participate in the work of international organizations.

CEDAW also suggested that the Economic and Social Council request the General Assembly to approve eight additional meetings of the Committee in 1989 and provide it with the necessary resources (see below).

Meeting of the States Parties. At their fourth meeting (New York, 7 and 8 March 1988),⁽³⁾ the States parties to the Convention elected 11 members of CEDAW to replace those whose terms were to expire in April 1988 (see APPENDIX III).

The States parties took note of reports submitted in 1986⁽⁴⁾ and 1987⁽⁵⁾ on reservations to the Convention and of views expressed thereon by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. They endorsed an Assembly request of 1987⁽⁶⁾ that the Secretary-General provide a compilation of relevant statistics from official United Nations sources to assist CEDAW in considering periodic reports. They requested the Secretary-General to make available, within existing resources, adequate and appropriate staff to assist CEDAW and to take due account, when preparing the 1990-1991 programme budget, of the Convention's article 17, paragraph 9, by providing the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the Committee.

Chapter XIV

Children, youth and aging persons

During 1988, some 14 million children died in the developing countries, most of them from the effects of frequent infection and prolonged under-nutrition. In an effort to reduce infant and child mortality and improve the quality of life for children, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued to pursue its child survival and development strategy, which incorporated immunization and primary health-care programmes; activities to control diarrhoeal diseases through the use of oral rehydration therapy, safe water supply and improved sanitation; support for breastfeeding and growth monitoring, improved nutrition and food security; and efforts to provide basic urban services and meet the needs of children in especially difficult circumstances. Basic education, maternal health care and activities to improve the status of women in development were also among the crucial components of UNICEF's strategy. During the year, UNICEF expended $400 million on programmes in 121 countries and territories, mostly in developing regions. At its 1988 session (18-29 April), the UNICEF Executive Board adopted 25 resolutions covering the full range of the Fund's activities.

The serious education and unemployment problems facing young people were considered by the General Assembly, which, in December, called on all States, United Nations bodies and governmental and non-governmental organizations to give priority to measures supporting education and employment opportunities for young people, and requested the Secretary-General and youth organizations to improve existing channels of communication between youth and the United Nations (resolution 43/94). It also requested that priority be given to the follow-up to International Youth Year (1985) and that the Secretary-General consider including the United Nations Youth Fund among the programmes eligible for funding through the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities. Also in December (43/136), the Assembly invited all States to submit their views on measures that should be taken to implement the principles and objectives of the 1965 Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples.

Member States also recognized the needs of an increasing number of elderly people, aged 60 years and over. In December, the Assembly stressed the need to accelerate implementation of the 1982 International Plan of Action on Aging, and called on specialized agencies, regional commissions and other funding organizations to continue their support for activities related to the question of aging (43/93). It also recommended that aging be a priority theme in the medium-term plan starting in 1992 and in the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000). It appealed to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging.

Children

UN Children's Fund

As in previous years, programmes for children were primarily carried out by the United Nations Children's Fund, which provided assistance for child survival and development (CSD), primary health care (PHC), water supply and sanitation, education, social welfare, household food security and emergency relief. Its immunization and oral rehydration therapy (ORT) programmes saved the lives of some 2.5 million children during the year. According to UNICEF, positive changes in international relations, growing support for child-oriented actions, the success of its country programmes and a rapidly developing consensus on the rights of the child gave hope that ambitious goals for children in the 1990s could be achieved. These included: reduced infant and child mortality, universal child immunization (UCI) and PHC, and universal basic education and literacy.

In 1988, UNICEF co-operated in programmes in 121 countries and territories. The majority (42) were in Africa, followed by Asia (34), Latin America and the Caribbean (30) and the Middle East and North Africa (15). UNICEF also provided technical or advisory services in 15 higher-income developing countries.

Programme expenditures totalled $400 million, of which 40 per cent ($158 million) was spent on child health; 17 per cent ($69 million) on water supply and sanitation; 13 per cent ($52 million) on planning and programme support services; 9 per cent ($37 million) on education; 8 per cent ($32 million) on emergency relief; 7 per cent ($29 million) on community and family-based services; and 6 per cent ($23 million) on child nutrition.

In his report on 1988 activities,⁽¹⁾ the UNICEF Executive Director noted that CSD activities continued to gain momentum during the year. Together with the World Health Organization (WHO), the Fund adopted a number of health goals for the year 2000. They included the eradication of polio, the elimination of guinea-worm disease, and a 90 per cent reduction in measles cases, by 1995. UNICEF continued its advocacy for alternative economic-adjustment policies in developing countries, and promoted inter-agency co-operation at all levels. It continued to collaborate also with the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on key issues related to children and women. The Executive Director noted that issues affecting children were becoming more prominent on national political agendas, and the Fund submitted to its Executive Board a list of goals for the 1990s and strategies to achieve them.

The Executive Board held its 1988 regular session in New York from 18 to 29 April.

Programme policy

Medium-term plan

At its 1988 regular session, the Board reviewed UNICEF's performance in 1987 and endorsed⁽³⁾ the programme objectives of the medium-term plan for 1987-1991.⁽⁴⁾ Their basic goals included: the reduction of maternal, infant and child mortality and the improvement of maternal and child health (MCH); the protection and improvement of children's well-being and their environment; improvements in the well-being of women and their role in development; and appropriate child spacing to protect the health of mothers and children in the overall context of development.

The plan emphasized the need to assess the Fund's goals for the 1990s, to meet the objectives of the child survival and development strategy by the year 2000, and to promote the concept of "adjustment with a human face" (see below).

Global strategy for children

In April, the Board requested⁽⁵⁾ the Executive Director to report to its 1989 session on the goals, targets and elements of a global strategy for the well-being of children. The Board considered that this strategy should address basic needs, as well as the main problems and risks facing children, their mothers and families, and strengthen nations' ability to deal with those problems on their own. Special attention would be given to the needs of the least developed countries and the most effective use of international assistance. The Board recommended the integration of both the global and UNICEF strategies in country programming and the medium-term plan.

Policy reviews

The Executive Board considered, among other matters: an implementation strategy for UNICEF policy on women in development; co-operation in water supply and sanitation; and the impact of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) on women and children and guidelines for the Fund's participation in global events.

The policy review on women in development⁽⁶⁾ described activities in Ethiopia, India, Kenya and Togo, and recommended action to incorporate women's needs and priorities into all aspects of UNICEF-supported programmes. The Board endorsed those recommendations in April.⁽⁷⁾ (For detailed treatment of UNICEF policy on women in development, see PART THREE, Chapter XIII.)

In response to a 1987 Board request,⁽⁸⁾ the report⁽⁹⁾ on water, sanitation and health for all by the year 2000 reviewed co-operation in UNICEF-supported programmes since the 1970s, linkages with PHC and guidelines for future action. It recommended that efforts towards the goals of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade be extended to the year 2000 and noted a shift from technology-oriented water and sanitation projects to an emphasis on community mobilization involving women, hygiene education and human resources development.

The Board agreed that the Fund should continue to promote the use of low-cost technologies and advocate their acceptance in national planning and local implementation. It urged that higher priority be given to human resources development and recommended that greater attention be paid to social mobilization.

After consideration of another policy review paper,⁽¹¹⁾ the Board endorsed⁽¹²⁾ the 1988-1989 UNICEF programmes on AIDS, together with the Executive Director's recommendations that the Fund: consider AIDS as it affected children and women in UNICEF country programming exercises; consider education and advocacy in preventive programmes and emphasize the needs of children and mothers affected by the disease; continue efforts to ensure the safety of immunization programmes and promote equipment sterilization in all aspects of MCH care; and strengthen its collaboration with Governments and concerned organizations.

Another report⁽¹³⁾ provided guidelines for UNICEF participation in global events for fund-raising, advocacy and the development of strategic alliances with other organizations and individuals. In April, the Board approved⁽¹⁴⁾ the guidelines, subject to amendments. It also requested⁽¹⁵⁾ the UNICEF Executive Director to report at its 1989 session on the implementation of 1987 General Assembly resolutions on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond⁽¹⁶⁾ and on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.⁽¹⁷⁾

UNICEF Maurice Pate Award

In April 1988, the Executive Director submitted to the Board a proposal⁽¹⁸⁾ to amend the status of the Maurice Pate Memorial Award, established in 1966⁽¹⁹⁾ to commemorate the first UNICEF Executive Director. The proposal broadened the criteria for the award's recipients. The UNICEF Maurice Pate Award may be conferred upon an institution, agency or individual in recognition of an extraordinary contribution to the advancement of the survival, protection and development of children. The Executive Board approved⁽²⁰⁾ the proposal, subject to amendments, together with an allocation of $25,000 from general resources as the award's stipend.⁽²¹⁾ The 1988 Award was presented to Pembinaan Kesejahteraan Keluarga (Family Welfare Movement—PKK) of Indonesia for its role in rallying community participation in CSD activities in that country.

Adjustment with a human face

UNICEF continued its global advocacy for alternative economic-adjustment policies to protect social programmes in the face of budget cuts and ensure that the well-being of children was not sacrificed for the sake of financial stability. Leaders of the seven major industrialized countries attending a Toronto summit meeting made commitments to "offset" official debts, and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank made provisions for the most seriously affected African countries. In July, UNICEF signed an agreement with the African Development Bank at Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, for the joint financing of key CSD programmes and the analysis, design and implementation of structural adjustment policies "with a human face". The Amman Declaration of the North-South Round Table meeting, in September, urged that human resources development be a central goal of development.

In April, the Executive Board requested⁽²²⁾ the Fund to continue its assistance to countries interested in initiatives on debt relief for child survival.

Activities related to structural adjustment continued in Brazil, Ghana, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mozambique, the Niger, Sierra Leone and Somalia. The goal of Ghana's Programme of Action to Mitigate the Social Cost of Adjustment was to protect the poor for two years at a cost of $84 million (about 6 to 8 per cent of the cost of international support for Ghana's structural adjustment programme). In the Philippines, UNICEF continued its advocacy for debt relief for child survival and co-operated in the formulation of alternative adjustment programmes. In Indonesia and Pakistan, advocacy for adjustment with a human face continued to lay the foundation for economic growth to sustain existing social services and protect the poor. In Sri Lanka, a "poverty alleviation" symposium, organized by the Central Bank and based on the Fund's analytical support, provided opportunities for continued UNICEF advocacy. In the Sudan, negotiations were in progress with the Midland Bank of the United Kingdom on debt relief for child survival.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

A deteriorating economic situation, armed conflicts, recurrent natural disasters, mass population displacements, growing urbanization, declining food production and increasing malnutrition continued to affect the quality of life and survival prospects of millions of African children in 1988. UNICEF continued to adapt its strategies to the continent's difficult situation, with programme expenditures totalling $146 million, or 36 per cent of its global programme commitment.

In April, the Executive Board endorsed UNICEF programme policies and strategies for Africa⁽²³⁾ and asked the Executive Director to initiate or strengthen, as a priority, programmes aimed at preparing the African child for its role in development.⁽²⁴⁾ In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/1, the Board also requested⁽²⁵⁾ the Executive Director to prepare a report on the Fund's contribution from 1 June 1986 to 31 July 1988 to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.

The Board further approved⁽²⁶⁾ a five-year policy framework⁽²⁷⁾ for the Bamako Initiative, adopted at a meeting of African Ministers of Health (Bamako, Mali, September 1987) to revitalize and expand MCH/PHC services in Africa. The Board authorized UNICEF to seek funding from interested donors and approved $2 million from general resources for preparatory work as well as up to $30 million of supplementary-funded resources to initiate action at the country level.

The Executive Director reported significant progress in UNICEF-supported programmes in Africa during the year.⁽¹⁾ Eight countries achieved child immunization coverage levels of 75 per cent or more and another 12 were within striking distance of this goal. The year saw a positive move from ORT, as a means of preventing diarrhoeal dehydration, towards the control of diarrhoeal diseases (CDD) through linkages with water and sanitation projects, breast-feeding and personal hygiene, and their integration with MCH/PHC programmes. With the endorsement of the Bamako Initiative by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1988, many countries began to discuss the realignment of their essential drugs projects with the Initiative's approach.

The Fund provided emergency assistance to many countries, including Angola, Mozambique and the Sudan. The Executive Director released $500,000 from the Emergency Reserve Fund to support NGO activities in southern Sudan, where armed conflict had led to massive population displacements and high death rates caused by malnutrition and disease.

In eastern and southern Africa,⁽²⁸⁾ programmes to strengthen national and local capacities focused on improvements in health, family food security and nutrition, basic education, and the role of women as producers and mothers. In the area of PHC, several countries had fully integrated their CDD/ORT activities into the expanded programme of immunization (EPI) or MCH/PHC projects, and Kenya, Malawi and Mauritius reported a decline in diarrhoeal cases and deaths. The Fund continued to supply States with oral rehydration salts (ORS) packets and provided training for diarrhoea treatment units. In June, Madagascar became the sixth country in the region to start local ORS production, following the examples of Burundi, the Comoros, Kenya, Mozambique and Zambia. Several countries also made efforts to cope with the spread of malaria and acute respiratory infections (ARI), using staff and equipment from UCI projects.

UNICEF supported national AIDS control plans in several areas, including health education and social mobilization to change sexual behaviour, stronger sterilization procedures in immunization programmes, and the care of AIDS cases and orphans. Steps were taken to reduce maternal and infant mortality by increasing the number of births attended by trained personnel and through support for family planning.

Although there were above-average harvests in the region, many countries, particularly in southern Africa, failed to benefit because of disruptions caused by wars, civil strife and the influx of refugees. UNICEF took steps to estimate the extent of food insecurity and to identify policy options to redress the problem. Direct interventions to improve household food security and nutrition were undertaken in Ethiopia, Mozambique, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania, mainly as part of UNICEF/WHO joint nutrition support programmes (JNSP).

As a result of severe economic difficulties and a massive decrease in school enrolments, national education systems continued to suffer. The Fund advocated innovative and cost-effective approaches to basic education that emphasized self-reliant, community-based actions.

In west and central Africa,⁽²⁹⁾ mid-term programme reviews with UNICEF partners (Ghana, Nigeria and Sierra Leone) and the preparation of new country programme recommendations (Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau, the Niger and Togo) strengthened intersectoral co-ordination and programme development. Although there was a decline in the nutritional status of mothers and children in central and west Africa as a result of economic hardship and rising food prices, some success was achieved in reducing levels of low birth weight and severe and moderate early childhood malnutrition. The Fund supported nutrition surveys, training and health education projects, and helped to equip nutrition rehabilitation centres in most Sahelian countries. With a combination of national immunization days and strengthened routine services, four countries—the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Senegal and Togo—raised the coverage rate for all antigens to more than 50 per cent and reported high access to immunization services. Cape Verde and the Gambia achieved better than 75 per cent coverage for six antigens, but in many countries of the region progress towards UCI was impeded by the lack of service infrastructure, especially in rural areas, and by serious financial difficulties. In the difficult economic climate, financial planning and monitoring of national and external inputs became increasingly important to ensure the most efficient use of limited resources.

In January, in conjunction with UNESCO, the Fund organized a regional seminar on development of the young child, which analysed the living conditions of African children and their CSD implications; examined possible interventions for children in difficult circumstances; and reviewed support for CSD programmes through education.

Latin America and the Caribbean

At a regional conference on poverty, held in Colombia in September, it was acknowledged that 170 million people—more than 40 per cent of the region's population—lived in poverty, and that some 61 million of that group lived in extreme poverty. The combination of economic decline, rising inflation, wage reductions and greater unemployment, coupled with heavy external and social debt burdens and environmental deterioration, made it increasingly difficult for Governments to meet the minimum needs of their citizens. Social service budgets stagnated or were cut in many countries, contributing to a high level of child malnutrition and deficient pre-natal and other health care for women. To meet these challenges, the Fund continued its efforts to raise awareness of children's problems and to ensure that activities benefiting poor children and women received the highest priority. UNICEF programme expenditure for the region totalled $37 million, or 9 per cent of total global programme expenditure.

In April,⁽³⁰⁾ the Executive Board established a special adjustment facility for Latin America and the Caribbean, to be funded from general resources in the amount of $2 million a year for five years, and requested the Executive Director to report in 1990 on its use and allocation criteria. Programme activities in Latin America and the Caribbean in 1988⁽³¹⁾ helped to achieve progress in child development; expand primary education and literacy, particularly for women; develop innovative interventions benefiting children in especially difficult circumstances; encourage women's participation in development; and strengthen public awareness of children's needs. Support for immunization increased substantially, but only eight countries, in addition to the English-speaking Caribbean, were expected to attain UCI by 1990.

UNICEF was encouraging the formulation of regional and national CDD/ORT and ARI plans of action and co-sponsored an International Conference on Food and Nutrition Surveillance in September.

Accelerated urbanization, accompanied by unemployment and family disintegration, as well as armed conflict in Central America and violence in Colombia and Peru, resulted in a growing number of children in especially difficult circumstances. The Fund advocated and supported national initiatives to protect children at high risk, and national child boards or committees were established or consolidated in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras.

Asia

In 1988, UNICEF programme expenditures in Asia totalled $167 million, some 42 per cent of the Fund's global programme budget. Although a number of countries reported remarkable economic growth,⁽³²⁾ disparities in income distribution, political volatility, external debt burdens and natural disasters significantly affected the situation of women and children and the ability of Governments to deliver services to them. Severe flooding in Bangladesh, drought in Pakistan, and typhoons and hurricanes in the Philippines and Viet Nam meant that an increasing share of the Fund's work reverted to reconstruction, thereby hampering the normal flow of development activities.

Progress was made in many areas, however, most notably in immunization. Rapid increases in coverage were recorded in Indonesia, Pakistan and the Philippines, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand showed signs of achieving UCI before the end of 1990. Diarrhoeal diseases remained among the leading causes of morbidity and mortality in the region, although most countries had established national programmes for CDD. The distribution of ORS and the promotion of ORT were of special importance to the Pacific island countries, where high mortality from diarrhoea underscored the need for integrated CDD programmes.

Nutrition surveillance continued, accompanied by growth monitoring and family food production programmes as an integral part of national agricultural strategies. Increasing attention was paid to the control of iodine deficiency disorders (IDD) through salt iodation and iodized oil supplements. Many countries also pursued vitamin-A deficiency control through surveys, training and capsule distribution, together with iron/folic acid supplementation as part of MCH programmes. A special emergency mission to Bangladesh provided advice on post-flood interventions, and a regional workshop was held in Indonesia (August) to consider the linkage of food and nutrition surveillance with anti-poverty programmes.

In collaboration with NGOs, UNICEF supported skills training and income-generating activities for women and promoted female literacy. In Bangladesh, 26 UNICEF-assisted NGOs developed revolving funds to support income-generating activities and to extend credit to poor women. Training in EPI, health education, nutrition and child development was provided for female leaders in Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. The Fund co-operated in a literacy programme for girls and women in Indonesia, focusing on school drop-outs and illiterate women from the lowest income groups.

In South Central Asia, poverty was aggravated by a higher than usual incidence of drought, floods, earthquakes and human conflict.⁽³³⁾ The reduction of infant mortality remained a priority, and UNICEF tried, with some success, to help Governments introduce broad-based, interrelated services targeted on interventions such as immunization and ORT, combined with improved infant feeding and education for girls. Rates of maternal malnutrition, morbidity and mortality remained high throughout the region, however, as did the proportion of low-weight births.

The summit of the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation (SAARC) (Islamabad, Pakistan, December) reviewed progress in the situation of children and reiterated the commitment to give the highest priority in national planning and human resources development to the needs of children. The summit declared that 1989 would be the SAARC Year against Drug Abuse, and 1990, the SAARC Year of the Girl Child.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1988, UNICEF programme expenditures in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $38 million—10 per cent of the global budget. Despite the continuing economic stagnation and deteriorating circumstances of some countries, child survival efforts in the 17 States where the Fund had active programmes prevented an estimated 72,000 infant deaths during the year,⁽³⁴⁾ and the number of lives saved was expected to accelerate with a surge in immunization coverage. Immunization rates for important childhood diseases rose to 75 per cent in Iran, Lebanon and Morocco and to 50 per cent outside the war zones in the Sudan. Average coverage levels for children to the age of one year were 73 per cent for diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus (DPT) vaccine and 69 per cent for measles, and the UCI goal of 80 per cent coverage in the region by 1990 seemed well within reach.

In the Sudan, UNICEF relief co-ordination, supply operations and staff dedication were critical factors during the August flood emergency and the meningitis epidemic earlier in the year. In Lebanon, the Fund assisted with water supply and distributed food and drugs through the district-level liaison network used for immunization campaigns. In March, during the first months of the intifadah in the West Bank and Gaza, UNICEF deployed an international physiotherapy team to help young people injured in the uprising. During the Iran-Iraq cease-fire in November, the Fund launched rehabilitation initiatives in both countries to help national authorities accelerate the opening or re-opening of rural PHC units in the affected areas.

Social mobilization was used to promote a wide range of activities and issues throughout the region, including immunization in Iran, Morocco and Saudi Arabia; ORT in Iran and Jordan; and the draft Convention on the Rights of the Child (see below) in Algeria, Egypt and Turkey. In March, the Persian Gulf area countries launched a UNICEF-supported communications project to link health educators and media policy makers from Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates in a sustained effort to support CSD activities. In October, a health education programme jointly sponsored by UNICEF, UNESCO and WHO went public in Bahrain, Egypt, Jordan, Morocco and the Sudan with the aim of turning the region's primary schools into focal points for community self-reliance in PHC.

Other programme developments in the region included an immunization/ORT/breast-feeding campaign in Iran; an expanded pilot project against ARI in Turkey; new emphasis on women's education and development in Democratic Yemen, Morocco and Oman; training and income-generating activities for women in Egypt and the Sudan; stronger links between water and sanitation projects and CDD in Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic; and accelerated water drilling in the Sudan. ORT programmes stagnated, except in Iran, Jordan and Syria, and tetanus toxoid coverage, although increasing in the region, remained among the lowest worldwide. An accelerated tetanus toxoid immunization campaign was launched in Egypt in November.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Child survival and development

UNICEF, together with WHO, the World Bank, UNDP and the Rockefeller Foundation, continued to support the Task Force for Child Survival in 1988. In March, a meeting sponsored by the Task Force adopted the "Talloires Declaration" which proposed several CSD goals for the 1990s.

Immunization

With the UCI/1990 goal approaching, coverage accelerated in all regions, led by impressive gains in Asia and eastern and southern Africa. In 1988, more than 60 per cent of children in the developing world received three doses of combined DPT and oral polio vaccine (OPV) before their first birthday, an increase of more than 50 per cent since 1981. The gap between anti-tuberculosis vaccine, the traditional leader in coverage, and the third doses of DPT and OPV was narrowed significantly as a result of reduced drop-out rates, and those achievements, when coupled with increased measles coverage, resulted in an estimated 1.5 million fewer child deaths during the year. Some 240,000 other children were spared the crippling effects of poliomyelitis. Many Middle East and North African countries reached 80 per cent coverage for all antigens during the year, while Latin America and the Caribbean also made progress towards UCI. Rapidly improving coverage rates in China, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, the Philippines and, to some extent, Bangladesh fueled optimism for the attainment of global UCI targets in 1990 and for preventing the deaths of an additional 2 million children a year from immunizable diseases.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases

Public awareness and use of ORT rose significantly between 1980 and 1988 with the result that over 60 per cent of the developing world's population was living within reach of a trained, regularly supplied provider of ORS in 1988. Of the 300 million ORS packets distributed during the year, two thirds were produced in developing countries. UNICEF provided assistance to more than half of the 55 ORS-producer countries, 10 of which were self-sufficient. It was estimated that as many as 1 million child deaths were averted during the year through the use of ORT. In December, the Third International Conference on ORT (Washington, DC.) addressed the issue of sustainability.

Primary health care

Several trends could be discerned in PHC developments in 1988, including heightened interest in health financing; sustainability; decentralization; management issues and the training of health personnel at the district and community levels; and the integration of vertical programmes. Following the Safe Motherhood Conference (Nairobi, Kenya, 1987), several countries developed programmes or undertook studies and surveys on maternal health care and maternal mortality reduction, and inter-regional or national seminars on the issue were held in Brazil, Egypt, Indonesia, the Philippines and the Sudan. ARI was increasingly recognized as a major cause of death in children under live years of age in developing countries, and UNICEF began to promote training for health workers in the use of new, simplified diagnostic and management criteria developed by WHO. The two organizations were also developing operational modalities for ARI control in Bolivia, the Gambia and Thailand. The Fund also supported efforts to deal with the prevention and management of malaria by providing drugs in endemic areas.

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

During 1988, the direct and indirect impact of AIDS on women and children reached dramatic proportions in many developing countries in Africa and in the Caribbean, where half of all human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)-infected individuals and AIDS cases were women, with a 30 to 50 per cent chance of infecting their newborn children. Data for the year indicated HIV seroprevalence rates of up to 27 per cent for women of reproductive age in urban areas of some African countries, and over 10 per cent in many others. To protect adults and their children from HIV infection, a variety of intensive and creative health education channels were mobilized urgently. In April,⁽¹²⁾ the Executive Board approved a policy and programme direction for UNICEF involvement in AIDS-prevention projects that were part of national AIDS plans and consistent with the WHO Global Programme on AIDS. It also approved special prevention projects for supplementary funding in Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. More than $4 million in supplementary funding was raised from bilateral donors, National Committees and advances from the Infant Mortality Reduction Reserve Fund. UNICEF provided training in AIDS prevention for its health staff in the field as well as for health workers, and began to add AIDS prevention to other child survival messages. In Uganda, AIDS prevention was included in a UNICEF-assisted school health education project. The Fund also continued to monitor the sterilization of immunization equipment to prevent the transmission of HIV and other infections.

Breast-feeding, nutrition and growth monitoring

UNICEF activities in the area of nutrition concentrated on improving household food security, growth monitoring and promotion, food and nutrition surveillance, promotion of breast-feeding, and the control of micro nutrient deficiencies. To bolster household food security, the Fund promoted income-generating activities for women, support for vulnerable households and small farmers, and the production and processing of improved varieties of cassava and soya beans-the staple food for some 40 per cent of the population in sub-Saharan Africa. Growth monitoring and nutrition education were commonly included in community-level PHC and were featured in major programmes, including the Integrated Child Development Service scheme in India, the family nutrition improvement programme in Indonesia, and the Child Pastorate Programme of the National Conference of Bishops in Brazil. Growth-monitoring techniques-weighing, plotting, interpreting and counselling-received greater attention in many countries. Although the gap between awareness of and the practice of breast-feeding remained a major problem among mothers and health professionals, changes in hospital policies led to higher breast-feeding initiation rates and to a reduction of mortality and morbidity in infants.

UNICEF assistance in vitamin-A deficiency control ranged from surveys to support for comprehensive programmes aimed at increasing the production and consumption of dark green leafy vegetables and other dietary sources of the vitamin. The Fund joined with the International Vitamin-A Consultative Group and WHO in preparing and publishing guidelines on the use of vitamin-A supplements to treat and prevent vitamin-A deficiency and xerophthalmia. UNICEF co-operated in IDD control through salt iodation in 24 countries, strengthened monitoring arrangements for salt quality control, and continued its support for the International Council for the Control of IDD.

Childhood disability

During 1988, UNICEF was involved in childhood disability prevention, in the broader context of CSD, including immunization against polio, the control of vitamin-A deficiency and IDD. Activities also included family education on disability prevention. Early detection and community-based rehabilitation activities were reported from 37 countries.

Water supply and sanitation

Sanitation services continued to lag far behind water supply in 1988, and deficits in rural areas were much higher than those in urban areas. The Fund spent $69 million on water supply and sanitation programmes, $4 million more than in the previous year.

Basic education

A global crisis in education, with over 900 million illiterates and 120 million children aged 6 to 11 years out of school, led UNESCO, the World Bank, UNDP and UNICEF to agree to co-sponsor a world conference on basic education for all in 1990. Almost all countries reported the integration of education into CSD activities and the accelerated incorporation of CSD themes in primary school curricula and teacher training. Children's education was threatened by civil strife in several countries. Imaginative responses included rehabilitation training for teachers to cope with war-traumatized children (Mozambique), decentralization to keep schools open (Lebanon), the introduction of child rights into primary school curricula (Thailand), and conflict resolution (Education for Peace) in Central America.

Urban basic services

UNICEF assistance benefiting the urban poor shifted gradually from strategy-oriented goals to impact-oriented targets such as immunization cover age, decrease in infant mortality, access to basic drugs and, ultimately, to PHC and basic services coverage.

In 1988, the coverage and sustainability of EPI in urban areas were addressed by all country offices. Experience indicated that all start-up activities were generally delayed in urban slums and shanty towns by administrative matters and that the countries which achieved the highest immunization coverage in urban areas were those with the greatest experience with large-scale urban basic services (UBS). Immunization campaigns were also found to generate higher demand among the urban poor for PHC. Countries with long traditions in UBS, such as Colombia, India, Indonesia, Peru, the Philippines and Sri Lanka, continued to implement large-scale intersectoral programmes in which the Fund assisted with software and facilities, while channelling other agencies' hardware towards the poor and the poorest.

Women in development

In 1988, the Fund continued its child-specific interventions to strengthen the socio-economic resource base of women. Women-related concerns were fully integrated into situation analyses in Bolivia, the Central African Republic, Egypt, Mexico and Rwanda, and studies on the status of women were completed in Brazil, Burma, Dominica, Indonesia, Oman and the Sudan. Country programme submissions and CSD initiatives reflected heightened awareness of the interrelationship between the socio-economic situation of women and the welfare of the child. Emphasis was placed on non-formal education as a means of reinforcing women's position in both the household and the community. In Bangladesh and Indonesia, national programmes supported women as key disseminators of CSD messages and linked their participation in literacy programmes with economic activities, vocational training and health education. The subregional women's education and child survival programme in Central America expanded, as did functional literacy programmes in Angola, Cape Verde, Chad and Guinea. Brazil, Democratic Yemen and the Lao People's Democratic Republic were developing similar initiatives. Credit programmes geared towards low-income women were consolidated in Bangladesh, Egypt and India, and a subregional programme on income-generating activities was being developed in the Caribbean. In Brazil, an effort was under way to form credit solidarity groups, revolving loan funds and a national institution to extend credit to low-income women. In Africa, emphasis remained on support for co-operatives and credit-sharing groups.

Emergency relief and rehabilitation

During the year, natural disasters were particularly severe and frequent, and they often coincided with the effects of armed conflict. The Fund provided emergency relief totalling $32.2 million to 43 countries to offset the impact of 14 weather-related emergencies (floods, typhoons and hurricanes), 7 epidemics, 12 armed-conflict situations, 3 drought-related conditions and 1 economic emergency. Most assistance went to Africa (25 countries), where Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Somalia and the Sudan remained the most seriously affected countries. The Executive Director's Emergency Reserve Fund made 17 releases totalling $3.5 million to 15 countries during the year.⁽³⁵⁾

Children in especially difficult circumstances

UNICEF remained involved in programmes for children in armed conflict and for working and street children. It provided basic services to displaced persons, including children, and was beginning to develop appropriate educational support systems for the psycho-social needs of children in armed conflicts. In 1988, 13 countries in Latin America and 7 countries in other regions submitted projects to the Executive Board for working and street children, and 20 other States were preparing similar projects for supplementary funding. UNICEF signed a letter of agreement for joint activities with project CHILDHOPE and co-operated with the International Labour Organisation (ILO) to publish training materials.

Other activities

During the period October 1987-September 1988, the Fund completed some 218 programme evaluations, 42 per cent of which dealt with immunization and diarrhoeal diseases, 11 per cent with water and environmental sanitation, 10 per cent with education, 8 per cent with nutrition and 5 per cent with women. The supply operations of UNICEF, which accounted for some 50 per cent of programme assistance, amounted to $215 million during 1988.⁽³⁶⁾

UNICEF finances

UNICEF income in 1988 totalled $711 million,⁽³⁷⁾ compared with $572 million in 1987. Income comprised $437 million for general resources and $274 million for supplementary funds, including $39 million in emergency contributions, mostly for Africa. Contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations represented 70 per cent of the total ($498 million), and those from private sources 19 per cent ($136 million). Around 1 per cent ($6 million) was received from the United Nations system and 10 per cent ($71 million) from miscellaneous sources, including exchange-rate revaluations of assets and liabilities.

Expenditures in 1988 totalled $516 million, compared with $479 million in 1987. At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities in November, 75 Governments pledged a total of $263 million for 1989 UNICEF general resources, compared with $213 million in 1987.

New programme commitments of $230,631,000, to be financed from general resources,⁽³⁸⁾ were approved in April.⁽²¹⁾

Medium-term financial plan

At its 1988 session, the Executive Board approved⁽³⁹⁾ the medium-term financial plan for the period 1988-1991,⁽⁴⁾ including the preparation of up to $200 million in programme expenditures from general resources for 1989, subject to resource availability and the validity of income/expenditure estimates. The plan projected the Fund's total income at $560 million for 1989, $585 million for 1990 and $612 million for 1991, and recommended programme expenditures of $340 million in 1990 and $150 million in 1991.

Financial policy decisions

In April 1988, the Executive Board adopted a set of rules to expand supplementary funding policies and revised the relevant financial regulations.⁽⁴⁰⁾ It authorized the temporary allocation of general resources to supplementary-funded projects under certain conditions and decided to discontinue use of the term "noted" projects and refer to them as projects for supplementary funding, or supplementary-funded projects. The Board also acted⁽⁴¹⁾ on problems related to the payment of recurrent costs.⁽⁴²⁾ It requested UNICEF to help Governments reduce recurrent costs through improved programme management; the use of low-cost technologies and community-based service delivery; and more effective targeting of services towards the needs of vulnerable groups, especially children and women. It also requested the Fund to promote new approaches to local resource generation in recipient countries, to monitor the impact of economic and social-sector policies on vulnerable groups, and to assist in identifying long-term solutions to the financing of recurrent costs. The Board also urged UNICEF to establish operational guidelines for the financing of recurrent costs related to its field activities.

1986 accounts

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁴³⁾ the Board of Auditors undertook an expanded audit of the 1986 UNICEF accounts. The Board had withheld an audit opinion on the Fund's 1986 financial statement in 1987 because of the timing of income from pledged supplementary resources, the temporary allocation of general resources to supplementary-funded projects, the level of reported expenditures, funding approval for UNICEF fortieth anniversary activities, and technical accounting issues. The audit was completed in March 1988, the accounts were certified, and the Board's conclusions⁽⁴⁴⁾ were submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). In October,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Committee considered the Board of Auditors' report and the Secretary-General's note,⁽⁴⁶⁾ and forwarded its comments to the UNICEF Executive Director.

Organizational questions

UNICEF structure

In April 1988, the Executive Board reviewed the function and organizational structure of the UNICEF external relations system⁽⁴⁷⁾ and requested⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Executive Director to address its restructuring in the context of the revised 1988-1989 and 1990-1991 biennial budgets, including a review of regional offices and offices in Geneva, Tokyo and Sydney, as well as the Greeting Card Operation (see below).

UNICEF Board

At its 1988 regular session, the Executive Board adopted 25 resolutions on programme, administrative and budgetary matters. In the light of its increased work-load, it requested the Economic and Social Council to allocate four additional meetings to its two-week regular session.⁽⁴⁹⁾

UNICEF fortieth anniversary (1986)

In 1988, the Executive Director reported to the Board on the Fund's fortieth anniversary in 1986.⁽⁵⁰⁾ The report included an overview of fund-raising activities, including the Sport Aid and First Earth Run campaigns. It gave the status of the Special Account for Special Events, and summarized expenditures, income and budget adjustments related to anniversary activities. In April, the Board noted that anniversary events had so far raised a total of $38.9 million against expenditures of $7.7 million, and approved, post facto, those expenditures, including $4,696,847 for Sport Aid that was eventually offset by commercial receipts.⁽⁵¹⁾

Greeting Card Operation

For the third consecutive year, UNICEF's Greeting Card Operation⁽⁵²⁾ made a record profit. ($38.5 million). New sales structures and training programmes were implemented in Asia and Latin America; a programme to test the feasibility of UNICEF retail shops was launched in Europe; and a new product line was tested in the United States. In May, the Fund formally opened the Danny Kaye Visitors Centre at UNICEF House in New York.

The work plan for the 1988 season⁽⁵³⁾ was endorsed by the Executive Board in April. The Board approved expenditure estimates of $31 million for the financial year 1988/89 and noted that gross revenues were estimated to be $80.2 million.⁽⁵⁴⁾

Draft Convention on the Rights of the Child

At its 1988 session, the Executive Board requested⁽⁵⁵⁾ UNICEF to support the United Nations Centre for Human Rights with a technical review of the draft Convention on the Rights of the Child. The aim was to complete the second reading in 1988 and submit it for adoption by the General Assembly in 1989. The Fund was also requested to continue its co-operation with Governments and NGOs to raise awareness of the draft Convention and encourage their participation in the process leading to its adoption.

In May, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, adopted a resolution urging completion of the draft Convention and the drafting of an African charter for children. Parliamentarians, religious leaders and media personnel from Africa, Asia and Latin America agreed on specific measures to promote the draft Convention at all levels, and national and regional NGO networks pledged to support regional charters for the protection of child rights.

UNICEF completed a comprehensive examination of the text prior to the second reading, as requested. (For details on the draft Convention, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Tenth anniversary (1989) of the International Year of the Child

The Board invited Governments to observe the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child (IYC) in 1989 by assessing their achievements in relation to the goals established during IYC. It also requested UNICEF to co-operate with Governments, National Committees and NGOs in attaining the goals through country programmes and advocacy.⁽⁵⁶⁾

International Child Development Centre

In April, the Board took note⁽⁵⁷⁾ of the progress report⁽⁵⁸⁾ on the organization, planning and initial activities of the International Child Development Centre at Florence, Italy, which began operations in September 1988. The Centre was to provide a forum for international professional exchanges, advocate innovative strategies for the benefit of children, and provide training facilities.

NGO relations

During 1988, UNICEF co-operation with NGOs continued to expand. Rotary International worked with the Fund to combat polio in over 70 countries and was the first institution to receive the International Child Survival Award. The Fund worked closely with NGOs to promote the draft Convention on the Rights of the Child, and, through the NGO Committee on UNICEF, sought to broaden the network of organizations promoting children's rights, breast-feeding and responses to AIDS.

Inter-agency co-operation

In February, the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, comprising UNDP, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Food Programme, UNICEF and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, met with senior representatives of IMF and the World Bank, and agreed to work towards broader adjustment policies that took better account of social implications. In April, the Board welcomed UNICEF's initiative to rationalize the field-office structure of its member organizations, and requested the Executive Director to report on the Fund's operational activities for development.⁽⁵⁹⁾

UNICEF continued to co-operate with the World Bank in such areas as health, nutrition, education, water supply and sanitation, urban development, women in development, and safe motherhood, and it pressed for more attention to nutrition and human issues in the World Bank's consultative groups and UNDP round tables. The long-standing collaboration between the Fund and WHO progressed in 1988 across a broad span of programme fields, and the Third International Conference on ORT (Washington, D.C., December) was co-sponsored by the two organizations together with UNDP, the World Bank and the United States Agency for International Development.

Co-operation with UNESCO emphasized female enrolment in schools, and, as a member of the International Working Group on Education, UNICEF was responsible for female and basic education.

Youth

In 1988, United Nations activities on youth—persons aged 15 to 24 years—concentrated on follow-up to guidelines, endorsed by the General Assembly during International Youth Year (IYY) in 1985.⁽¹⁾ Despite serious resource constraints, the United Nations Office at Vienna/Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (UNOV/CSDHA), as the focal point on youth matters within the United Nations system, continued to promote the integration of youth in development and to monitor project proposals for funding by the United Nations Youth Fund. Inter-agency co-operation in the field of youth during the follow-up to IYY resulted in more critical research on youth, intensified technical co-operation activities and advisory services to Governments, and improved working relations with NGOs and between United Nations bodies at the field level. Additional steps were taken to promote the HOPE '87 initiative aimed at reducing unemployment among young people.

Follow-up to International Youth Year (1985)

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General in a September 1988 report⁽³⁾ reviewed policies and programmes involving young people, especially in relation to development and peace. He said that efforts to develop long-term planning for youth had expanded youth-related programmes within and outside the United Nations system and increased global awareness of the needs and aspirations of young people. However, planning for youth was hampered by limited financial resources at all levels. He suggested that the United Nations Youth Fund be included among the programmes for which funds were pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, and that CSDHA establish a consultative forum of NGOs to discuss their greater involvement in the implementation of youth policies and programmes.

Co-ordination and information

In a March 1988 report on co-ordination and information in the field of youth,⁽⁴⁾ submitted in response to a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General described follow-up activities to IYY, reviewed co-ordination efforts in the field of youth, and listed suggestions for further co-ordination and greater resource mobilization.

In co-operation with the Government of China and the All-China Youth Federation, as well as the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), CSDHA organized an Interregional consultative meeting on integrated planning of youth policies, strategies and programmes (Beijing, 17-23 October). The meeting was the first international technical exchange on the implementation of youth guidelines since their endorsement in 1985. The Beijing Statement, adopted by the meeting, emphasized the need for substantive interregional exchanges on youth issues. The Centre also organized a seminar on the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency through community participation in co-operation with DTCD (Beijing, 19-25 October). The seminar adopted guidelines and recommendations relating to community-oriented programmes and the strengthening of international co-operation in the field of juvenile justice, including the establishment of a juvenile justice information network.

By decision 1988/147 of 27 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.⁽⁴⁾

ACC activity. The informal inter-agency technical working group on youth, at its sixth session (Vienna, 8 and 9 March 1988),⁽⁶⁾ reviewed progress after IVY and suggested action to enhance technical assistance in the field of youth. The group underlined the need for Governments to integrate youth policy with their national development planning.

Strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations

In response to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁷⁾ a September 1988 report⁽³⁾ of the Secretary-General gave an overview of national, regional and international activities to strengthen communication between the United Nations and youth and with youth organizations.

CSDHA's youth Information Bulletin, published three times a year since January 1988, highlighted major issues and activities. In January, CSDHA and the International Union of Students initiated a quarterly newsletter, IYY Follow-up, addressed primarily to national co-ordinating mechanisms and youth NGOs.

Other publications featuring youth issues included the twice-weekly Newswire and monthly Intercom (UNICEF), the Bulletin on Narcotics (Division of Narcotic Drugs), Momentum and The Youth Development Newsletter (ESCAP), CEPAL Review (ECLAC), and Youth News (United Nations Volunteers).

The right of youth to education and work

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution on the right of youth to education and work,⁽⁸⁾ and an Assembly request of 1987,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General's report described the work of the Institute of HOPE '87 (Hundreds of Original Projects for Employment). The Institute was established in 1987⁽¹⁰⁾ at the initiative of Austria to share nations' expertise with educational and vocational training and to develop programmes that could serve as models. By September 1988, the Institute had negotiated with 17 countries to establish affiliated HOPE '87 offices, prepared a model training manual for HOPE '87 personnel, set up a data bank, and conducted project feasibility studies. In August, Austria approved the establishment and funding of the Institute's Permanent Secretariat, with a 1989 budget of 1.5 million Austrian schillings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/94 without vote.

Question of youth

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 40/14 entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace", adopted on 18 November 1985 by the General Assembly acting as United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year, and its resolution 42/54 of 30 November 1987,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, by which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and its resolution 42/55 of 30 November 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions 40/16 of 18 November 1985 and 42/53 of 30 November 1987, entitled "Opportunities for youth",

Recalling further its resolution 36/29 of 13 November 1981 and its subsequent resolutions in which it, inter alia, recognized the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted on the basis of its resolutions 42/52, 42/53, 42/54 and 42/55 of 30 November 1987,

Bearing in mind that the preparation for and observance in 1985 of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace offered a useful and significant opportunity for drawing attention to the situation and the specific needs and aspirations of youth, for increasing co-operation at all levels in dealing with youth issues, for undertaking concerted action programmes in favour of youth and for improving the participation of young people in the study, decision-making processes and resolution of major national, regional and international problems,

Recognizing that the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth provide a constructive framework for a long-term strategy in the field of youth,

Expressing its serious interest in systematically consolidating and building further on the results of the International Youth Year in order to contribute to the increasing active participation of young people in the political and socio-economic life of their countries,

Convinced of the importance of the effective and efficient functioning of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations as a basic prerequisite for the adequate information of young people and their active participation in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies at the national, regional and international levels, and also for informing the United Nations of the problems facing youth, with a view to finding solutions to such problems,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with special regard to the right to education and to work,

Recognizing that in many countries the majority of young people, under prevailing critical social and economic conditions, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their right to education and to work and that insufficient education and unemployment of young people limit their ability to participate effectively in the development process, and emphasizing the importance of adequate education of young people and access for them to appropriate technical and vocational guidance and training programmes;

1. Calls upon all States, all United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through its Commission for Social Development, the specialized agencies and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to continue to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, in accordance with their experience, conditions and priorities, and to submit to the Secretary-General their views and proposals on the specific ways and means to implement fully the guidelines;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to promote and monitor intensively, by using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as a focal point, the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of the United Nations bodies and of the specialized agencies, specifically on such themes as communication, health, housing, culture, youth employment and education;

3. Calls upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines relating to the channels of communication adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17, not only in general terms but also by concrete measures that take into account the issues of importance to young people;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue in this respect to make use at the national, regional and international levels of the already existing structures of co-operation between youth and the United Nations system in accordance with the additional guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, contained in the annex to resolution 36/17, and to encourage other United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to do the same;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to develop methods that specifically indicate how the channels of communication could efficiently be attuned to youth-related projects and activities of the United Nations organs and of the specialized agencies, and to include in his report thereon to the General Assembly concrete suggestions for co-operation between the United Nations system and the non-governmental youth organizations;

6. Calls upon youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations by putting forth their proposals for co-operation with the United Nations system and, where such mechanisms do not exist, recommends that national co-ordinating committees of the International Youth Year should similarly continue to act as channels of communication;

7. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations, interested United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through its Commission for Social Development, and specialized agencies to continue to give priority to the formulation and implementation of effective measures for securing the exercise by youth of the right to education and to work, with a view to resolving the problem of unemployment among youth;

8. Calls upon Member States to pay increased attention to the promotion of youth employment in all sectors of the economy in order to enable more young people to obtain appropriate education and vocational training, thereby facilitating their integration into social and professional life;

9. Invites national co-ordinating bodies and bodies implementing policies and programmes in the field of youth to give appropriate priority in the activities to be undertaken after the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace to the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work;

10. Stresses the importance for youth and youth organizations of the freedom of association, in accordance with the relevant national legislation, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international human rights instruments, so as to enable their active and direct participation at all stages of implementation of the policies, projects and activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels in the field of youth, and stresses the need to intensify the efforts for educating youth in accordance with national experience, conditions and priorities and to act effectively as channels of communication;

11. Emphasizes that providing education and employment to each young person is a worthy goal for all States and should serve the full development of the human being, which can best be ensured by countries that respect the fundamental rights and freedoms of everyone;

12. Notes with appreciation the establishment by the Government of Austria of a permanent secretariat of the Institute of HOPE '87, for the promotion of youth employment;

13. Recommends that the Secretary-General continue to explore the possibilities for the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs to support, within the framework of its activities, the work of the Institute of HOPE '87 secretariat, including the question of affiliating, on the basis of the relevant regulations of the United Nations and the proposed letter of understanding, as outlined in his report, the Institute of HOPE '87 secretariat to the Centre, on the understanding that the financial resources for the secretariat would be raised exclusively from special voluntary contributions;

14. Invites Governments again to include youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings and international conferences dealing with youth-related issues, thus enhancing and strengthening the channels of communication through the discussion of such issues, with a view to finding solutions to the problems confronting youth in the contemporary world;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to consider including, on an annual basis, the United Nations Youth Fund among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution, paying attention to the deliberations and conclusions of the Commission for Social Development in March 1989, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session under the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth";

17. Decides to consider the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth" at its forty-fourth session on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General.

Youth declaration on peace

In a letter of 18 August 1988,⁽¹¹⁾ Romania requested the inclusion in the agenda of the Assembly's forty-third session of a supplementary item dealing with, inter alia, evaluating the implementation of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples.⁽¹²⁾ An explanatory memorandum stated that this inclusion was in line with United Nations declarations aimed at promoting human rights, strengthening peace and countering racism and incitement to war, as well as the follow-up to IYY.

By its decision 43/402 of 23 September 1988, the General Assembly endorsed Romania's request and allocated the item to the Third Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/136 without vote.

Evaluation of the implementation of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples

The General Assembly,

Recalling that one of the fundamental objectives of the United Nations is to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Reaffirming the importance of the strict observance and full implementation of the purposes and principles inscribed in the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, the development of friendly relations among nations and understanding and co-operation among States and peoples,

Convinced that young people are interested in their future and wish to live in peace, freedom and friendship among all peoples,

Aware of the important role of youth in society, in all fields of activity, as well as of the fact that youth should also contribute to the further promotion of the common ends of peace and welfare of humankind,

Convinced also that the education of youth in the spirit of the ideals of peace, mutual respect, friendship and co-operation between peoples should be a priority and permanent task of all States,

Emphasizing the essential role of Governments, governmental and non-governmental organizations, the mass media and educational systems in promoting these ideals among nations and, primarily, among youth,

Reaffirming the lasting validity and importance of the principles and objectives of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 2037(XX) of 7 December 1965,

Stressing the necessity of the implementation of the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights towards the promotion among youth of the ideals of peace, mutual respect and understanding between peoples,

Noting that 1990 will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples,

1. Appeals to all States to adopt effective measures in accordance with their legislation, particularly in the fields of teaching, education, culture and information, in order to strengthen the efforts for the promotion among nations and, primarily, among youth of understanding, mutual respect and friendship among nations, for the creation of an international climate free from mistrust and discord;

2. Stresses the role of the mass media in supporting by all means the implementation of these objectives with a view to promoting the ideals and conceptions meant to contribute to the enhancement of friendly relations and co-operation among States;

3. Invites all States to submit to the Secretary-General their views and comments on the impact of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples since its adoption and on the measures that should be taken, at the national and international levels, for the implementation of the principles and objectives set forth in the Declaration, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the matter to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

4. Requests the Commission for Social Development to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session its views on the present resolution under the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth".

General Assembly resolution 43/136

8 December 1988 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/43/815) without vote, 3 November (meeting 31); draft by Romania (A/C.3/43/L.17/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 144.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 3rd Committee 15-22, 25, 31; plenary 75.

UN Youth Fund

In accordance with its mandate, the United Nations Youth Fund continued to provide technical and material support to catalytic and innovative activities in the field of youth. Special attention was paid to strengthening national capacities, promoting the integration and participation of youth in national development, and expanding the body of knowledge on youth and development. Particular importance was attached to data collection and information exchange activities, as well as applied research on youth.

Since becoming operational in 1984, the Fund had received about 275 requests for assistance, of which 39 were approved for funding as at June 1988, involving a total resource commitment of $300,000. Although the Fund's project grants were modest, $7,500 on average, they had mobilized matching resources, totalling about $1 million since IYY. To give new impetus to resource mobilization for the Fund, the Secretary-General recommended that it be included among activities for which funds were pledged at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

Aging persons

The United Nations continued in 1988 to consider the question of persons aged 60 and over in the context of the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging, adopted in 1982 by the World Assembly on Aging⁽¹⁾ and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.⁽²⁾ The Plan's primary aim was to assist States in strengthening their capacities to deal with aging populations.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) approved a system-wide approach to implementation of the Plan, formulated in March 1988 at the inter-agency meeting on co-ordination of policies and programmes in the field of aging (see below). The General Assembly welcomed the approach and recommended that the next inter-agency meeting coincide with the second review and appraisal of the Plan in 1989. The Assembly also supported the 1987 recommendation of the Commission for Social Development⁽³⁾ that the Secretary-General, when preparing the medium-term plan for 1990-1995, give priority to the elaboration of strategies to implement the Plan of Action through co-ordination of United Nations activities on aging and adequate budget allocations.

On 15 April, the Secretary-General officially inaugurated the International Institute on Aging at Valletta, Malta, which was established pursuant to a 1987 resolution of the Economic and Social Council.⁽⁴⁾ The Institute, which was to be funded from voluntary contributions by Governments, NGOs and individuals, received seed money and support from DTCD and an initial $300,000 over two years from UNDP. The Secretary-General appointed the UNOV Director-General as Chairperson of the Institute's Board.

In keeping with the same 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁴⁾ Yugoslavia requested in 1988 a feasibility study on the establishment of a United Nations-affiliated institute on aging at Belgrade.

A preparatory meeting for the establishment of an African gerontological society was held at Dakar, Senegal (17-22 December), in co-operation with CSDHA. It elaborated the draft statutes, rules of procedure and a work programme that envisaged five main activities: research, training, education, exchange of information, and work on operational projects.

Implementation of the Plan of Action

In February 1988, the Secretary-General circulated to Governments a questionnaire to obtain their views and experiences in implementing the Plan of Action, while UNOV/CSDHA elicited comments from United Nations organizations and NGOs. The results of the inquiry were to be a basis for the second review and appraisal of the Plan in 1989. The 48 responses from Governments as at September 1988 revealed their concern over the escalating cost of social expenditures, the weakening of traditional support systems for the elderly, and the condition of such vulnerable groups as elderly women. Forty-seven States, 28 of which were developing countries, reported having national machineries for action on aging.

To facilitate an exchange of information, CSDHA prepared a Handbook on Organizations Active in the Field of Aging. It described the activities of 270 organizations and educational institutions and listed the countries and regions in which they would like to co-operate on aging-related projects. Beginning in 1988, a Bulletin on Aging was to be issued three times a year, with one issue devoted to technical and specialized information previously contained in the Periodical on Aging, which had been discontinued for want of resources.

The Centre continued its co-operation with NGO committees on aging in New York and Vienna and collaborated with the Committee for the Promotion of Aid to Co-operatives in preparing a Manual on Co-operatives for Aging. It also participated in a number of non-governmental conferences, including the Seminar on Elderly Women (Washington, D.C., 30 June) and the Fifth International Conference on Legislation concerning Veterans and War Victims (Bad Ischl, Austria, 21-24 April).

Other activities. The Population Division of the Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs was engaged in research to provide planners in developing countries with a better understanding of the socio-economic consequences of aging and available policy options, and the United Nations University continued its research on the impact of aging persons on welfare resources. The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) convened an expert seminar on the promotion of national infrastructure for aging populations in the region (Bangkok, Thailand, 14-17 December 1987), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) completed a project on the socio-economic implications of changing age distributions, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) was preparing a survey on the use of the skills and experience of the elderly in the education of young people and adults.

Policy and programme co-ordination

An ad hoc inter-agency meeting on system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes in the field of aging (Vienna, 10 and 11 March)⁽⁵⁾ was attended by nine United Nations organizations and the International Institute on Aging. It adopted a system-wide approach to implementation of the Plan of Action to deal with constraints, priority objectives, strategies for implementation, and a framework for co-ordination.

The ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters), in March,⁽⁶⁾ approved the system-wide approach and recommended that a further inter-agency meeting be convened in 1989, in conjunction with the thirty-first session of the Commission for Social Development and the second review and appraisal of the Plan of Action.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September, responding to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ on aging-related activities and preparations for the second review and appraisal of the Plan of Action. He suggested, among other things, that the Assembly endorse a programme of measures to the year 2000; identify aging as a priority theme in the medium-term plan starting in 1992 and in the strategy for the fourth development decade (1991-2000); and urge Governments and concerned bodies to participate in activities marking the tenth anniversary of the World Assembly on Aging in 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/93 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging and related activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, by which it endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging, adopted by consensus by the World Assembly on Aging,

Recalling also its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it expressed its conviction that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society, and reaffirming that developing countries, in particular, need assistance in order to implement the Plan of Action, keeping in mind its resolution 41/96 of 4 December 1986, in which it requested the Secretary-General to review the world aging situation every six years,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/96, in which it urged Governments to intensify their efforts, within the context of their own national priorities, cultures and traditions, to implement the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action,

Reaffirming also its resolution 42/51 of 30 November 1987, in which it considered that the tenth anniversary of the World Assembly on Aging should be marked in 1992 by appropriate follow-up activities in order to maintain awareness on a global level of issues affecting the aging,

Taking into consideration the preliminary findings of the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging, which indicate that co-ordinating mechanisms and national machineries are essential for implementing the Plan of Action,

Noting with concern that the United Nations does not have the necessary resources to deal effectively with requests for assistance and expert advice in the field of aging,

Alarmed by the large reduction in the staff working on the programme on aging at the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, which makes it difficult for the United Nations Office at Vienna to carry out the mandates given to it in the Plan of Action and reaffirmed repeatedly in General Assembly resolutions,

Taking into consideration that there will be a marked increase in the population over the age of sixty years, and that increasingly women will constitute the majority of these elderly populations,

Acknowledging the request of the Government of Yugoslavia for a feasibility study on the establishment of a United Nations-affiliated institute on aging at Belgrade,

Recalling its requests to the Secretary-General to respond favourably to the request of the African Regional Conference on Aging, held at Dakar in December 1984, for assistance in establishing an African gerontological society,

Acknowledging also the guide for future activities relating to aging in the Asian and Pacific region adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at the Expert Seminar on the Promotion of National Infrastructures for Aging Populations in Asia and the Pacific, held at Bangkok from 14 to 17 December 1987,

Appreciating the invaluable role played by non-governmental organizations in promoting greater awareness of issues that involve aging and in advocating measures to implement the Plan of Action,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging;
2. welcomes the system-wide approach to issues of aging worked out jointly by the concerned agencies and bodies of the United Nations system at the inter-agency meeting on system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes in the field of aging, held at Vienna on 10 and 11 March 1988, and recommends that the next meeting be held to coincide with the second review and appraisal of the International Plan of Action on Aging, in 1989;

3. Expresses its satisfaction that the International Institute on Aging has been established in Malta in co-operation with the United Nations and was officially inaugurated by the Secretary-General on 15 April 1988;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the activities of the International Institute on Aging;

5. Stresses the imperative need to increase the impetus of the implementation of the Plan of Action at national, regional and international levels, and appeals for resources to be provided commensurate with the requirements;

6. Urges the Secretary-General, in compliance with the views of Member States as reflected in his report, to maintain and strengthen the existing programmes on aging and to strengthen the United Nations system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes on aging, with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs continuing in its role as focal point in the United Nations system for activities relating to aging;

7. Supports the recommendation made to the Secretary-General by the Commission for Social Development in its resolution 30/1 of 4 March 1987 that, in preparing the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995, he should give priority to the careful elaboration of practical strategies to implement the Plan of Action by providing fuller co-ordination of aging activities in the United Nations system and maintaining adequate programme budget allocations;

8. Recommends that aging should be considered a priority theme in both the proposed medium-term plan for the period starting in 1992 and in the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000);

9. Urges that the staff of the Aging Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs be maintained at levels which will permit the Centre to carry out its mandates as the focal point in the United Nations for all matters relating to aging;

10. Urges the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, working in close co-operation with concerned centres and institutes as well as non-governmental organizations, and utilizing the networking mode of operation, to conduct further research and studies in order to assist Member States in developing demographic and socio-economic profiles of their elderly populations, so that ways and means of ensuring the full and effective participation of the elderly in development can be identified;

11. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to pay particular attention to the specific problems faced by elderly women and to the discrimination suffered by these women because of their sex and age;

12. Decides to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the World Assembly on Aging in the plenary General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, in 1992, and requests the Commission for Social Development to include in its second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action a draft programme of substantive activities to mark this occasion;

13. Strongly appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging, bearing in mind that the Fund is particularly well placed to act as a catalyst for resource mobilization;

14. Welcomes the Secretary-General's efforts at finding options for the optimal use of the original resources of the Trust Fund for the Promotion of a United Nations Programme for the Aging, which include the formulation of a concerted programme of measures to the year 2000, and the proposal to create a world foundation on aging, which would encourage both the private and the public sector to support the work of the United Nations system in the field of aging;

15. Culls upon the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other funding organizations concerned to continue to support activities relating to the question of aging, in particular by providing assistance for projects that fall within their mandate;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Question of aging".

General Assembly resolution 43/93

8 December 1988 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/43/808) without vote, 3 November (meeting 31); 13-nation draft (A/C.3/43/L.15), orally revised; agenda item 89. Sponsors: Austria, Barbados, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Malta, Samoa, Senegal, Sudan, United States, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 3rd Committee 15-22, 25,31; plenary 75.

Trust funds

As at June 1988, the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging supported nine projects with a total commitment of $209,700. Three of those projects were interregional and global, and there were two each in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean. Country and regional projects accounted for 72 per cent of all grants by the Fund in 1987-1988, with 42 per cent ($87,811) of resources allocated for information exchange, 36 per cent ($76,600) for support to organizations of the elderly, 12 per cent ($25,000) for research and 10 per cent ($20,300) for training activities.

Among the projects supported in 1988 were a national training course on caretaking for the elderly in China (September); a project on the settlement needs of elderly refugees in Uganda; and a conference on aging demography and well-being in Latin America (Gainesville, United States, 23-25 February), which reviewed the implementation of the Plan of Action in the region and assessed future policy and research priorities. Other projects included, inter alia, an international seminar on policies and strategies for the participation of the elderly in development (Rabat, Malta, 2-5 February); an international conference on aging populations in the context of urbanization (Sendai, Japan, 12-16 September); and a meeting of the preparatory group for establishing an African Society of Gerontology.

The Director-General of UNOV continued to manage the Fund. Projects were approved for financing on the recommendation of the Social Development Trust Fund Operations Committee, established in 1987 to appraise funding proposals.

The Fund not only provided direct substantive and financial support to developing countries, but also acted as a catalyst for resource mobilization. In 1987-1988, its grants attracted an estimated $800,000 in additional resources—a ratio of 4:1. Expenditures in 1988 totalled $302,841, leaving a balance of $242,265 as at 31 December 1988. Without an immediate and sustained effort to strengthen the Fund, many constructive projects would fail to materialize, the Secretary-General stated in a September report on the question of aging.⁽⁸⁾ He called on Member States to give serious consideration to the Fund's situation and recommended that the Assembly set a goal of mobilizing million by 1992, which could generate an estimated additional $8 million in matching resources.

The Trust Fund for the Promotion of a United Nations Programme for the Aging, established in July 1986⁽⁹⁾ on a provisional basis until 31 December 1987, was extended through 1988, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁰⁾ Among the options being reviewed for use of the Fund's resources, set at $18,000, was the creation of a world foundation on aging, to encourage private-sector support for United Nations activities in the field.

No action was taken by the Assembly's Third Committee on a proposal to merge the two trust funds into a United Nations International Fund for Aging, administered by UNDP and eligible for funding through the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The General Assembly had deferred consideration of that proposal in 1986.⁽¹¹⁾

Chapter XV

Refugees and displaced persons

While the number of refugees swelled to over 12 million in 1988, some events occurred that offered hope for solutions for nearly half the world's refugee population. The signing of an agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan created an opportunity for millions of Afghans, constituting the world's largest refugee population, to return to their country, and the return of more than 80,000 Ugandans from the Sudan was the largest such movement anywhere in the world. Progress was made towards securing the independence of Namibia, which in turn paved the way for the organized return home of several thousand Namibians. Other large refugee repatriation movements in 1988 included Burundians, Chadians, Ethiopians, Mozambicans and Zimbabweans; Iraqi Kurds; Sri Lankan Tamils; and Central Americans.

The impact of those positive achievements was qualified, however, by an increase in the number of refugees and asylum-seekers world-wide. This was especially true in Africa, where hundreds of thousands of Somalis and Sudanese sought refuge in Ethiopia, and several thousand Ethiopians, Mozambicans and Sudanese fled to neighbouring countries. Those same tendencies also occurred in South-East Asia, where the number of asylum-seekers rose by more than 11 per cent over 1987, and in Europe, where the number increased by almost one third.

While more States acceded to the major international instruments on refugees, bringing the total number of signatories to 106 to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, its 1967 Protocol, or both, there was also an increase in actions by States that deteriorated the plight of asylum-seekers, posing a threat to the humanitarian institution of asylum.

The General Assembly endorsed the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action, adopted by the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, which called for international action in the fields of protection, assistance, refugee aid and development, emergency preparedness, public information and mobilization of resources to deal with the deteriorating humanitarian situation in southern Africa (resolution 43/116). The Assembly also welcomed decisions to hold conferences on Indo-Chinese (43/119) and Central American (43/118) refugees in 1989.

The Nansen Medal, awarded since 1954 in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, went in 1988 to Syed Munir Hussain, Secretary of the States and Frontier Regions Ministry of Pakistan from 1982 to 1987. The Medal was awarded for his supervision of the world's largest refugee assistance programme—the Afghan refugee relief operation—for the Pakistani Government.

UNHCR programme and finances

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its thirty-ninth session (Geneva, 3-10 October 1988) the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,⁽¹⁾ emphasizing the importance of dealing with the underlying causes of refugee movements, called on the High Commissioner to continue his efforts to provide international protection through voluntary repatriation, local integration in countries of first asylum or resettlement in third countries. The Committee expressed its concern about the lack of adequate international protection for various groups of refugees, including a large number of Palestinians, and hoped that efforts would continue within the United Nations system to address their protection needs. (Palestinian refugees are dealt with in PART TWO, Chapter IV.) States were urged to abide by international prohibitions against expulsion and refoulement, or forcible return, of refugees, and were called on, along with the High Commissioner and others, to ensure the protection of refugees from arbitrary detention and violence. The Committee further encouraged all States hosting refugees to consider ways of facilitating their employment, invited States to promote measures favourable to stateless persons and called on the High Commissioner to implement measures intended to address the irregular movement to other countries of refugees who had found protection.

Regarding the promotion and dissemination of refugee law, the Committee called on States that had not done so to accede to the 1951 Convention⁽²⁾ and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,⁽³⁾ and, if applicable, to the 1969 Organization of African Unity (OAU) Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa,⁽⁴⁾ in order to ensure the widest possible application of the basic principles of refugee law. It urged States to initiate or participate in training courses in refugee law and protection, and requested the Office of the High Commissioner (UNHCR) to provide information to the Committee on specific promotional activities world-wide, including their financial implications.

On the subject of international solidarity and refugee protection, the Committee, stressing that the principle of international solidarity was fundamental in encouraging a humanitarian approach to granting asylum and in implementing international protection in general, invited all States to support the protection functions of the High Commissioner, as well as to abide by their own humanitarian responsibilities towards refugees, particularly to safeguard the right to seek and enjoy asylum from persecution and to ensure full respect for the principle of non-refoulement.

The Committee recommended that States and UNHCR take into account the following guidelines when dealing with cases of stowaway asylum-seekers: stowaways must be protected against forcible return to their country of origin; they should be allowed to disembark at the first port of call and have their refugee status determined by the authorities without implying a lasting solution in that country; and UNHCR should be requested to assist in finding a durable solution for those found to be refugees.

As to the special needs of refugee women, the Committee called for the reinforcement of measures to enhance their physical security and called on host Governments to strengthen their support of UNHCR's protection activities as they related to women. Relevant Governments were also called on to support the Special Resettlement Programme for Women-at-Risk. The High Commissioner was encouraged to expand his public information activities relating to refugee women and to develop training modules on the special needs of refugee women and the means of addressing them. The Committee requested the High Commissioner to provide at its next session a detailed progress report on the implementation of policies and programmes for refugee women, and called on host countries, the donor community and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to support the High Commissioner in implementing that programme.

The Committee welcomed plans to organize international conferences on Indo-Chinese and Central American refugees in 1989, and called on the international community to support them (see below). Regarding the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action, adopted by the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa (see below), the Executive Committee requested the High Commissioner to ensure their implementation and to participate in formulating strategies for rendering humanitarian assistance to internally displaced persons. The High Commissioner was further requested to report to the Committee at its next session on the role of UNHCR in implementing the Declaration and Plan of Action.

Within the framework of strengthening programme planning, implementation and monitoring, the Committee endorsed the High Commissioner's efforts in creating special programmes for refugee women and children, training staff, and providing technical support, evaluation services and the specifications and means of delivering supplies and food aid, and called on him to continue to provide assistance to refugees under the care of national liberation movements recognized by OAU and the United Nations.

The Committee called on the High Commissioner to encourage further study of the issue of durable solutions to the refugee problem, and appealed to Governments to continue to create and promote conditions conducive to attaining such solutions. It supported UNHCR's promotion of voluntary repatriation as the preferred long-term solution, and called for more resources to be devoted to that goal. When voluntary repatriation was not feasible, UNHCR was encouraged to promote local integration and resettlement.

The Committee made a number of recommendations regarding refugee aid and development. Recognizing the need to ensure compatibility between refugee aid and the national development plans of developing refugee-asylum countries, the Committee recommended that low-income asylum countries be provided with assistance to strengthen their social and economic infrastructure to enable them to cope with the burden of dealing with large numbers of refugees and returnees. It called on Governments and the High Commissioner to provide technical support to developing countries in needs assessment, formulation of concrete projects and plans of action in areas hosting large numbers of refugees. The Committee further expressed its desire that the issue of refugee aid and development receive prominent attention by the Sub-Committee on Administrative and Financial Matters in 1989, and requested UNHCR to submit to the Executive Committee at its session that year a report describing in detail the role and mandate of UNHCR and the breakdown of financial resources being allocated to developing asylum countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural)

Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/117 without vote.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-ninth sessions, and having heard the statements made by the High Commissioner on 16 and 18 November 1988,

Recalling its resolution 42/109 of 7 December 1987,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner, which are undertaken in the common interest of humanity,

Noting with satisfaction that, following recent accessions, more than one hundred States are now parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Noting with concern that, despite developments that offer hope for solutions to refugee problems, refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner continue to face, in certain situations, distressingly serious problems,

Particularly concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers continue to be seriously jeopardized on account of military or armed attacks and other forms of violence, and noting that further efforts should be made in dealing with the problem of rescuing asylum-seekers in distress at sea and, in this context, also noting the problems relating to stowaway asylum-seekers,

Stressing the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection, particularly in the context of the increasing complexity of the contemporary refugee problem, and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this essential function,

Noting the efforts of the High Commissioner to continue to address the special problems and needs of refugee and displaced women and children, who in many cases are exposed to a variety of difficult situations affecting their physical and legal protection as well as their psychological and material well-being,

Emphasizing the need for States to assist, on as wide a basis as possible, the efforts of the High Commissioner to promote speedy and durable solutions to the problems of refugees,

Realizing in this context that voluntary repatriation or return remains the most desirable solution to the problems facing refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner, and welcoming the fact that in various parts of the world it has been possible for significant numbers of them to return voluntarily to their countries of origin,

Recognizing that the enhancement of basic economic and social rights is essential to the achievement of self-sufficiency and family security for refugees, as well as to the process of re-establishing the dignity of the human person and realizing durable solutions to refugee problems,

Recognizing that durable solutions for refugees in developing countries can, in the majority of cases, be achieved through a development-oriented approach and that the heavy burden placed on a host country as a result of growing influxes of refugees requires sufficient resources to redress the negative impact and the strain on its socio-economic infrastructure in rural and urban areas,

Welcoming the conclusions and decisions on refugee aid and development adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-ninth session as a tangible recognition of the need to ensure the compatibility of refugee aid and national development plans of the developing asylum countries,

Commending those States that, despite severe economic and development problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner into their territories, and emphasizing the need to share the burden of these States to the maximum extent possible through international assistance, in accordance with the conclusions on refugee aid and development adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-ninth session,

Stressing the need for the international community to continue to provide adequate resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution may be in sight, with particular attention given to refugees who have already spent an inordinately long time in camps,

Welcoming the valuable support extended by Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out his humanitarian tasks, and recognizing the need for continuing and increasing co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and other bodies of the United Nations system and with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Also welcoming the decision of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-ninth session to open sessions of its two sub-committees and informal meetings to participation as observers by States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies which are not members of the Executive Committee,

Noting the High Commissioner's continuing efforts to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office, particularly in strengthening field activities and responsibilities,

Commending the High Commissioner and his staff for the dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, and paying tribute to those staff members who have endangered their lives in the course of their duties,

1. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the function of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide international protection and the need for Governments to co-operate fully with his Office in order to facilitate the effective exercise of this function, in particular by acceding to and implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement;

2. Endorses, in this regard, the conclusions on international solidarity and refugee protection adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-ninth session;

3. Notes with particular concern the continued violation, in certain situations, of the principle of non-refoulement, recalls existing prohibitions as contained in conclusions 4 and 5 adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its twenty-eighth session, stresses the need to strengthen measures to protect refugees against such action and appeals to all States to abide by their international obligations, taking fully into account their legitimate security concerns;

4. Appeals to all States that have not yet become parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees to consider acceding to these instruments in order to enhance their universal character;

5. Condemns all violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated by military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements and other forms of violence;

6. Endorses once again the conclusions on military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-eighth session, and again calls upon all States to observe these principles;

7. Commends the High Commissioner for the work undertaken by his Office to identify and meet the special needs of refugee children and, in particular, for the guidelines of the Office on refugee children, and invites the High Commissioner to pursue his efforts on behalf of refugee children, drawing on the valuable contributions that non-governmental organizations continue to make in this area;

8. Endorses the conclusions on refugee women adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-ninth session, and urges States to extend their full co-operation to the High Commissioner in his efforts to ensure that the special needs of refugee women in the fields of protection, assistance and durable solutions are met;

9. Notes the close connection between the problems of refugees and of stateless persons and invites States actively to explore and promote measures favourable to stateless persons in accordance with international law;

10. Recognizes the importance of fair and expeditious procedures for determining refugee status and/or granting asylum in order, inter alia, to protect refugees and asylum-seekers from unjustified or unduly prolonged detention or stay in camps, and urges States to establish such procedures;

11. Recognizes the importance of achieving durable solutions to refugee problems and, in particular, the need to address in this process the root causes of refugee movements in order to avert new flows of refugees, taking into account the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, and to facilitate the solution of existing problems;

12. Urges all States to support the High Commissioner in his efforts to achieve durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to his Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, including assistance to returnees as appropriate, or, wherever appropriate, through integration into countries of asylum or through resettlement in third countries;

13. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries which, despite limited resources, continue to admit, on a permanent or temporary basis, large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers;

14. Urges the international community, in accordance with the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to assist the above-mentioned countries in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden that care for refugees and asylum-seekers represents;

15. Supports broadly the purpose of a Project Planning Fund along the lines stipulated in paragraph 32 of the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-ninth session and, in particular, the following recommendations:

(a) The Office of the High Commissioner should remain a focal point for encouraging refugee-related technical assistance and capital investment in developing asylum countries;

(b) Assistance to refugees should be additional to funds earmarked for development programmes in developing asylum countries;

(c) The High Commissioner should be requested to prepare a comprehensive report in which the nature and operational aspects of the Project Planning Fund and the mandate of the Office of the High Commissioner, as well as the role of development-oriented agencies and non-governmental organizations, would be clearly defined;

16. Recognizes with appreciation the work done by the High Commissioner to put into practice the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, as initiated at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa and reaffirmed in the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, urges the High Commissioner to continue that process, wherever appropriate, in full co-operation with appropriate international agencies, and further urges Governments to support these efforts;

17. Emphasizes the essential role of development-oriented organizations and agencies in the implementation of programmes that benefit refugees and returnees, urges the High Commissioner and those organizations and agencies, in accordance with their respective mandates, to strengthen their mutual co-operation towards the attainment of durable solutions, and calls upon the High Commissioner to continue to promote such co-operation;

18. Welcomes the various initiatives undertaken by the High Commissioner in regard to the promotion and dissemination of the principles of refugee law and protection and calls upon his Office, in co-operation with Governments, to intensify its activities in this area, bearing in mind the need, in particular, to develop practical applications of refugee law and principles and to continue to organize training courses for governmental and other officials involved in refugee activities;

19. Calls upon all Governments to contribute, in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing and in every way feasible, to the High Commissioner's programmes with the aim of ensuring that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner are met.

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR voluntary funds expenditure in 1988 amounted to $545.5 million,⁽⁵⁾ compared to $461.4 million in 1987.⁽⁶⁾ Of that, $395 million was spent on General Programmes and $150.2 million went to Special Programmes and other trust funds. Total income for 1988 amounted to $529.1 million, compared to $475.6 million in 1987.⁽⁷⁾

Although financial support from the donor community in 1988 was the highest ever received by UNHCR, it was inadequate to cover all programme needs. Against a General Programmes budget of $420 million, $395 million was spent. However, combined contributions and secondary income amounted to only $385 million, forcing the High Commissioner to seek donor approval to advance funds from the 1989 General Programmes reserve to cover the shortfall.

Special appeals were issued in 1988 to meet the needs of new refugee emergency situations, such as Mozambican refugees in southern Africa, Somali and Sudanese refugees in Ethiopia, Burundi refugees in Rwanda and Iraqi Kurds in Iran. Appeals were also made to cover the financial requirements of returnee programmes in Afghanistan, Burundi, Central America, Ethiopia, Sri Lanka, Uganda and Viet Nam, as well as other activities outside the General Programmes.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee approved a target of $428.8 million for General Programmes in 1989.

Efforts made in 1988 to expand the donor base and increase contributions to voluntary funds were successful, as the number of donors increased by 19.6 per cent and income increased by 18.2 per cent.

Contributions

Contributions in cash and in kind in 1988 totalled $482.7 million, compared to $427.9 million in 1987. Paid cash contributions amounted to $339.8 million in 1988, and outstanding cash pledges amounted to $86 million. Contributions in kind amounted to $9.6 million, with an additional $47.3 million outstanding. In addition to those contributions, $3,694,608 ($834,948 from Canada and $2,859,660 from the European Economic Community) was transferred to the World Bank for administration and implementation of the Income-Generating Project for Refugee Areas in Pakistan. Intergovernmental organizations provided $47.6 million, while NGOs and private sources provided $6.8 million.

1987 accounts

The audited financial statements on funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 1987⁽⁷⁾ showed a total expenditure of $461.4 million and a total income of $475.6 million. In October 1988, the Executive Committee took note of the report of the Sub-Committee on Administrative and Financial Matters⁽⁸⁾ and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).⁽⁹⁾

On 21 December, in resolution 43/216, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements of UNHCR and endorsed the observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ.

Refugee assistance and protection

Assistance

During 1988, as in previous years, UNHCR co-operated with concerned Governments and the international community to meet the humanitarian needs of refugees world-wide.⁽¹⁾ Those efforts centred on the promotion of durable solutions, namely, voluntary repatriation, local integration in the country of first asylum or resettlement in another country. In 1988, $239 million was obligated for the promotion of those solutions. Of that amount, $27.8 million was made available under Special Programmes for the rehabilitation of returnees in their country of origin. The largest voluntary repatriation movement of the year was the spontaneous return of more than 80,000 Ugandan refugees. Other major repatriation movements involved a number of African refugee groups, Sri Lankan Tamils from India, Iraqi Kurds and Central Americans. Resettlement in a third country continued to be the only feasible option for a significant number of refugees, including more than 50,000 Indo-Chinese. UNHCR expenditure for promotion of resettlement and transportation of refugees amounted to $18.8 million under General Programmes.

Where political or other factors precluded rapid identification of durable solutions, UNHCR provided intermediate assistance including food, shelter, water, health services and sanitation, clothing, household utensils and basic education. In 1988, the largest care and maintenance programme was that for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, for which $43.3 million was obligated under the General Programmes. Over $6.2 million of that was devoted to income-generating and self-sufficiency activities, another major UNHCR assistance area during 1988. Care and maintenance programmes were also implemented in Ethiopia, Malawi, Somalia and Thailand. At the same time, refugee operations were recognized as vehicles for economic development. In many cases, UNHCR redirected its operational expenditures to local businesses in order to benefit both host countries and refugees.

UNHCR emergency activities fell into the two broad categories of response and preparedness. Frequently UNHCR was forced to resort to its Emergency Fund, which allowed the High Commissioner to allocate up to $10 million annually. In 1988, $9.9 million from that Fund was used, mainly in response to emergencies in Africa and South-West Asia. UNHCR participated in a co-ordinated effort by the United Nations to promote national emergency preparedness in southern Africa. Other preparedness activities included management training and development of resource materials, an early warning project and a feasibility study on establishing emergency stockpiles.

Social services continued during the year, with an emphasis on promoting the self-sufficiency of refugees. A total of 70 refugee counselling projects were implemented in Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America and the Middle East, at a cost of $4.3 million. These included provision of information on the availability and use of community resources and establishment of referral links to facilitate access to employment, training and education, health services, housing and social security. Medical facilities and physical, social and mental treatment and rehabilitation support were made available to some 13,000 disabled refugees in several asylum countries at a cost of $1.1 million.

Primary education continued to be provided through multisectoral projects. Post-primary, vocational/technical and academic education was provided by 110 UNHCR programmes. UNHCR promoted co-ordination among the education ministries of Malawi, Mozambique and Zimbabwe in order to improve the quality of the Mozambican curriculum in refugee camps, to develop a refugee teacher-training scheme and to provide Mozambican textbooks to about 70,000 refugee children. Activities had been undertaken for phasing refugee educational schemes into the national system of Somalia, and guidelines on primary education for refugee children were being prepared. The costs of supplies for refugees and for UNHCR operations amounted to $70.9 million in 1988, and some $72.9 million in food aid to refugees was channelled through UNHCR.

In-depth evaluations of UNHCR operations in 1988 concentrated primarily on the extent to which assistance activities were consistent with the durable solutions envisaged in various country programmes. Major evaluations of country and regional programmes were carried out in the Horn of Africa, western and southern Africa and Latin America. During 1988, the UNHCR self-evaluation system underwent the first major change since its introduction in 1980, with self-evaluations being prepared for all major operational activities rather than for individual projects.

To consolidate UNHCR activities aimed at protecting and assisting refugee women, the UNHCR Steering Committee on Refugee Women was established in February 1988 under the chairmanship of the Deputy High Commissioner. The Committee was to assess, review and develop policies, procedures and guidelines; promote public awareness of refugee women's problems; and ensure the availability of adequate human resources for the staffing of activities.

In response to a decision of the Executive Committee (see above), UNHCR formulated a detailed work-plan with a view to integrating the needs of refugee women into the mainstream. Efforts concentrated on institutional changes aimed at ensuring that the needs of women were systematically considered and regularly reported on.

Approximately half the world's refugees were children under 18 years of age. Accordingly, the newly established Working Group on Refugee Children focused on developing guidelines for field offices in their activities concerning refugee children. In August, UNHCR distributed to its officers and relevant organizations Guidelines on Refugee Children, which addressed issues such as determination of refugee status for children, the situation of unaccompanied minors and the effects on children of extended residence in refugee camps.

Assistance to refugees in Africa

The overall number of refugees in Africa increased during 1988. Refugees continued to flee from Mozambique into Malawi and from the Sudan into south-western Ethiopia, and two new influxes occurred without advance warning from north-western Somalia into eastern Ethiopia and from Burundi into Rwanda. The great majority of the Burundi refugees repatriated voluntarily within a few months, and other significant repatriation movements occurred to Chad and Ethiopia (see below). The new and continued refugee influxes required mobilization of substantial emergency assistance. Progress in promoting self-reliance was mixed, with benefits of better harvests in some countries offset by economic difficulties in many asylum countries.

In 1988, the total expenditure in Africa under UNHCR voluntary funds amounted to $250.1 million, of which $175.3 million was obligated under General Programmes (mainly for care and maintenance operations) and $74.9 million under Special Programmes (mainly for the needs of newly arrived refugees).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/158, took note of oral reports made on behalf of the Secretary-General by the High Commissioner on the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti, assistance to refugees in Somalia, the situation of refugees in the Sudan, assistance to student refugees in southern Africa, and assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia.

Follow-up to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

In response to a 1987 resolution of the General Assembly,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General in August 1988 submitted a report⁽³⁾ on follow-up activities to the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa.⁽⁴⁾

Nineteen projects aimed at strengthening the social and economic infrastructure of host countries to enable them to deal with large numbers of refugees and returnees had been funded in 15 African countries, four of which had been completed. Planning missions were initiated in Ethiopia, Malawi, Somalia and the Sudan, and eight new projects to benefit refugees and local populations in asylum countries, to be financed through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Trust Fund for Refugee-Related Development Projects in Africa, were being prepared. As at 15 April 1988, total resources under the Trust Fund amounted to $9,069,827, while the commitment for project and programming activities was $6,630,530, leaving a balance of $2,439,297 for financing pipeline projects and additional programming activities.

Refugees in southern Africa

More than 100,000 Mozambicans received assistance under a consolidated emergency programme in the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. By year's end, 13,000 Mozambicans had been transferred to a new settlement in Zambia.

UNHCR intensified its preparations for the repatriation of Namibian refugees in accordance with a 1978 Security Council resolution,⁽⁵⁾ which set out a plan for Namibia's transition to independence. The number of South African refugees reported to have found asylum in other southern African countries remained at about 35,000, over half of whom received UNHCR assistance in 1988.

Malawi

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General in August 1988 submitted a report on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi.⁽⁷⁾ In 1988, some 20,000 Mozambicans per month fled to Malawi, resulting in a total of 552,669 as at 1 June.

An inter-agency mission that visited Malawi in 1987 found that the country's rural subsistence economy was under severe strain owing to the refugee burden. Food production and water resources in the affected areas were insufficient to satisfy the needs of both the Malawi population and the displaced persons. The environment had been severely damaged by wood-cutting and cultivation on fragile hillsides. Health, education and community services were also under heavy strain. The mission concluded that the Malawi economy would not be able to cope with the expanded emergency conditions without major support from the international community and development investment. It was estimated that $90.8 million in emergency assistance would be required in 1988 to finance food, water, health and education, as well as public works programmes designed to increase the amount of cultivable land and expand food production. The proposed action programme of economic development initiatives addressed both emergency needs and long-term development goals.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, by decision 1988/110, the Economic and Social Council took note of an oral report made by the representative of UNHCR on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/148 without vote.

Assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/132 of 7 December 1987 on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi, as well as on the report of the inter-agency mission on this subject,

Having considered that part of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees regarding the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Gravely concerned about the continuing serious social and economic impact of the massive presence of refugees and displaced persons, as well as its far-reaching consequences for the country's long-term development process,

Appreciating the important measures that the Government of Malawi is taking in order to provide shelter, protection, food, education and health and other humanitarian services to thousands of refugees and displaced persons,

Recognising the heavy burden placed on the people and Government of Malawi and the sacrifices they are making in caring for the refugees and displaced persons, given the country's limited social services and infrastructure, and the need for adequate international assistance to enable them to continue their efforts to provide assistance to the refugees and displaced persons,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States, the various organs of the United Nations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in Malawi,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations of the inter-agency mission to Malawi, particularly on the need to strengthen the country's socio-economic infrastructure in order to enable it to provide for the immediate humanitarian relief requirements of the refugees and displaced persons as well as the long-term national development needs of the country,

Recognizing the need to view refugee-related development projects within local and national development plans,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi, particularly with regard to the findings and recommendations of the inter-agency mission;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of Malawi is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons, in spite of the serious economic situation it faces, and stresses the need for additional resources to lessen the impact of the presence of refugees and displaced persons on the country's long-term development process;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees and displaced persons in Malawi;

4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the massive presence of refugees and displaced persons in the country and its implications for the long-term socio-economic development of the whole country;

5. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to continue providing the Government of Malawi with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees and displaced persons, as well as the development programmes recommended by the inter-agency mission;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees and displaced persons and programmes recommended in the report of the inter-agency mission;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees and displaced persons in their settlements;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Conference on refugees in southern Africa

The Assembly in 1987⁽⁸⁾ had welcomed the OAU decision to hold an International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa. The Conference (Oslo, Norway, 22-24 August 1988)⁽⁹⁾ adopted the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action, which emphasized the need to link emergency aid to development assistance activities in order to promote self-sufficiency and to minimize the risk of dependency. Accordingly, the Conference urged all States to provide sufficient resources to support both emergency and development programmes on behalf of refugees, returnees and displaced persons. The 90 States participating in the Conference agreed to undertake activities in the areas of emergency preparedness, needs assessment and delivery of assistance, recovery and development, and resource mobilization. In the context of emergency preparedness, the Conference called on the United Nations system, OAU, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to implement training programmes for relief officials in asylum countries in order to enable better use of resources. On the subject of internally displaced persons, the Conference requested the Secretary-General to conduct studies and consultations aimed at ensuring the timely implementation and co-ordination of relief programmes, and called on the international community to co-operate in ensuring the safe transport of relief and emergency goods.

The Conference recommended voluntary repatriation of refugees wherever possible, while recognizing that local integration or resettlement in a third country was sometimes a necessary alternative, especially in the case of South African and Namibian refugees. The Conference emphasized the need for all members of the international community to share the refugee burden equally, and accordingly urged African States to admit refugees from southern Africa not only into their countries, but also into their national educational and employment systems, enabling them to have access, where feasible, to financial and land resources. As part of the follow-up and evaluation process, the Secretary-General was called on to provide for the regular appraisal of the Declaration and Plan of Action, in co-operation with UNHCR, the World Food programme (WFP), the United Nations Children's Fund, UNDP, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/116 without vote.

International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/106 of 7 December 1987 on the convening of an International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa,

Gravely concerned about the constant deterioration of the situation in southern Africa arising from the domination and oppression of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia by the minority racist régime of South Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, held at Oslo from 22 to 24 August 1988, and the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa adopted by the Conference and contained in the annex to that report,

Taking note with appreciation of the active participation of His Excellency General Moussa Traoré, President of the Republic of Mali and current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, His Excellency Mr. Robert Mugabe, Prime Minister of the Republic of Zimbabwe and Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and Her Excellency Mrs. Gro Harlem Brundtland, Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Norway, at the Conference,

Aware of the valuable contribution made by the Governments of Norway and the other Nordic countries to the successful convening of the Conference,

Recognizing the importance of the financial and technical assistance provided by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the preparation and organization of the Conference,

Noting with satisfaction the successful outcome of the Conference,

Conscious of its responsibility to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa in order to assist them in coping with the situation resulting from the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa,

Noting the absence of an operational mechanism within the United Nations system dealing specifically with the problems of assistance to internally displaced persons,

Noting with indignation that South Africa's policy of apartheid, its illegal occupation of Namibia, and its direct and indirect acts of aggression, intimidation and destabilization through armed terrorists continue to be the main causes of refugee flows and increasing displacement of persons in southern Africa,

Convinced that there is an urgent need for the international community to extend maximum and concerted assistance to southern African countries sheltering refugees, returnees and displaced persons and also to highlight the plight of these persons,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa;

2. Endorses the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa adopted by the Conference;

3. Calls upon the international community to provide increased assistance to the countries of southern Africa to enable them to strengthen their capacity to provide the necessary facilities and services for the care and well-being of the refugees, returnees and displaced persons in their countries;

4. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, on behalf of the international community, to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance for the front-line and other neighbouring States to help them to withstand the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to implement those specific tasks and responsibilities assigned to them in the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake studies and consultations in order to consider the need for the establishment, within the United Nations system, of a mechanism or arrangement to ensure the implementation and overall co-ordination of relief programmes to internally displaced persons;

7. Urges all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations to undertake the measures required of them under the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action;

8. Express its gratitude to the Government of Norway for acting as host to the Conference, and to all the Nordic countries for their generous assistance towards the convening of the Conference;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for the valuable assistance that they provided to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the organization of the Conference;

10. Commends the Organization of African Unity for having convened the Conference and for focusing the attention of the international community on the grave humanitarian problems of the southern African region;

11. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fourth session on the basis of a report to be submitted by the Secretary-General.

Student refugees in southern Africa

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988.⁽¹¹⁾ Those refugees were South Africans and Namibians who had been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia. There had been no massive exodus of refugees from either South Africa or Namibia during the period under review, but it was feared that the ongoing school boycott in Namibia, in protest of South Africa's policy of stationing troops close to schools, would intensify and ultimately lead to a substantial increase in the number of Namibian student refugees. In addition, lack of security in countries bordering South Africa necessitated the evacuation of most newly arriving refugees, mostly young males, into other countries in the southern and eastern African regions.

In Botswana, the number of refugees remained stable at about 1,000 South Africans and 200 Namibians. Of these, 180 South Africans and 120 Namibians continued to benefit from educational facilities offered at the Dukwe Settlement. Swaziland was host to 6,500 South Africans, 220 of whom were receiving UNHCR educational assistance. Educational assistance was also provided to South African and/or Namibian students in Cameroon, Ghana, Kenya, Lesotho, Sierra Leone, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/149 without vote.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/138 of 7 December 1987, in which it, inter alia, requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who had been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa continue to be successfully implemented,

Noting with concern that the discriminatory and repressive policies that continue to be applied in South Africa and Namibia cause a continued and increasing influx of student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure that the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation that they have extended to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on matters concerning the welfare of the refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, which were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and all other competent United Nations bodies, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance so as to facilitate and expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

9. Calls upon agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

10. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1989, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Refugees in other African countries

Chad

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1988 submitted a report on emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad.⁽¹³⁾ Spontaneous and organized return of Chadians from neighbouring countries, especially Cameroon and Nigeria, continued during 1988. UNHCR continued to provide tools and seeds to returnees, install water supplies and, in collaboration with WFP, distribute food.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/143 without vote.

Emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/128 of 7 December 1987 on emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad, as well as all its previous resolutions on this question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad,

Deeply concerned the persistence of the harmful effects of the drought, desertification, floods and infestations of locusts and grasshoppers, which are compounding the already precarious food and health situation in Chad,

Conscious that the large number of voluntary returnees and displaced persons resulting from the war and the drought in Chad poses a serious problem of their integration into society,

Considering that the mass return of returnees to Chad and of displaced persons in the northern region poses serious social and economic problems for the Government of Chad,

Bearing in mind the many appeals made by the Government of Chad for international emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad,

1. Endorses the appeals made by the Government of Chad for emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

2. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support, by generous contributions, the efforts being made by the Government of Chad to assist and resettle the voluntary returnees and displaced persons;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the action undertaken by the various organizations of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies with a view to mobilizing emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

4. Again requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

5. Calls upon:

(a) The Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize special humanitarian assistance for the resettlement of displaced persons in the northern region of Chad;

(6) The international community to support the efforts made by the Government of Chad to implement the programmes for repatriating and resettling the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Djibouti

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1988 submitted a report on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti.⁽¹⁵⁾ The UNHCR multi-purpose assistance programme for 1988 focused on the improvement of community and preventive health care, nutrition and educational services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/142 without vote.

Humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/137 of 4 December 1986 and 42/126 of 7 December 1987 on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti, as well as all its previous resolutions on this question,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,

Deeply concerned about the plight of the refugees and the constantly increasing inflow of displaced persons which has severely affected the inadequate social services and the infrastructure of the country,

Aware of the heavy economic and social burden placed on the Government of Djibouti and the consequent unfavourable effects on the development of that country, given the delicate nature of its resources,

Appreciation the determined and sustained efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the growing needs of the refugees and displaced persons, despite its modest economic resources and limited means,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to implement appropriate and lasting solutions with respect to the refugees in Djibouti,

Appreciating the assistance provided by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti and appreciates the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to keep their situation under constant review;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to implement appropriate and lasting solutions with respect to the refugees in Djibouti;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies for their assistance to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti;

4. Urges the High Commissioner to intensify his efforts to mobilize, on an emergency basis, the necessary resources to implement lasting solutions with respect to the refugees in Djibouti and the constant inflow of displaced persons;

5. Calls upon all Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to support the determined and sustained efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the urgent needs of the refugees and displaced persons and to implement lasting solutions as regards their situation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Ethiopia

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1988 submitted a report on assistance to displaced persons and returnees in Ethiopia.⁽¹⁷⁾

Ethiopia reported the largest increase in the number of refugees in 1988, with the number of Sudanese refugees in the south-western region rising from nearly 260,000 to some 350,000, the majority of whom were women and children. The remote location of the camps and the severe malnutrition of some new arrivals continued to demand a high level of support. In May, the High Commissioner appealed for $26.7 million in donations to assist the Sudanese refugees.

In addition, more than 300,000 Somalis entered south-eastern Ethiopia in 1988, a region devoid of natural resources and difficult to reach. Vital supplies were airlifted to those refugees as part of a major relief operation. In July, the High Commissioner appealed for international support for a relief programme valued at $11 million, based on a tentative planning case-load of 120,000, but despite a rapid increase in the number of Somali refugees to some 400,000, only $1.2 million had been contributed in cash by August.

Other assistance in the form of food, agricultural tools, seeds, livestock and home construction materials was provided to Ethiopian refugees returning home from Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/144 without vote.

Assistance to refugees and returnees in Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its resolutions, in particular resolution 42/139 of 7 December 1987, as well as all those of the Economic and Social Council, on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the increasing number of refugees and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia,

Deeply concerned about the massive flow of refugees and voluntary returnees into the country and the enormous burden this has placed on the country's infrastructure and meagre resources,

Deeply concerned also about the grave consequences this has entailed for the country's capability to grapple with the effects of the prolonged drought,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia and of the need for adequate assistance to refugees, voluntary returnees and victims of natural disasters,

1. Commends the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies for their assistance in mitigating the plight of the large number of refugees and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

2. Appeals to Member States and to international organizations and voluntary agencies to provide adequate material, financial and technical assistance for relief and rehabilitation programmes for the large number of refugees and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

3. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his efforts in mobilizing humanitarian assistance for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of voluntary returnees and the large number of refugees in Ethiopia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1989, of the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Rwanda

In August, some 55,000 refugees from northern Burundi fled to Rwanda, requiring immediate emergency assistance. A commission, comprising representatives from UNHCR, Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire, with OAU representatives as observers, was established to promote conditions conducive to the early voluntary return of those refugees. Repatriation began spontaneously in October and continued through UNHCR-organized convoys. The great majority of refugees had returned within two months.

Somalia

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General in August 1988 submitted a report on assistance to refugees in Somalia.⁽¹⁹⁾ All of them were Ethiopian, and many were women and children. The second phase of a project to re-enumerate the refugees, consisting of a socio-demographic survey, was begun in 1988.

Concrete steps were taken to promote refugee-related development projects and to identify labour-intensive schemes benefiting both refugees and the local population. The Qoroley Refugee Settlement Project, approved in May, was to produce a feasibility study and technical plan for the settlement of refugee families who had been living in refugee camps for eight years. The project was intended to serve as a model for other development projects for refugees in Somalia.

UNHCR continued its efforts to promote repatriation and self-sufficiency in Somalia, including road rehabilitation and agricultural development. Food assistance, co-ordinated by WFP, was expected to amount to about 42,000 metric tons in 1988, at an estimated cost of $53 million. On the basis of a nutritional survey conducted in 1988, rations were increased and steps were taken to improve the timing of deliveries.

Prospects for the voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees in Somalia improved during the year as a result of high-level discussions between UNHCR and Somalia, in which the parties agreed on the need to redirect the programme from relief assistance towards repatriation. In Somalia, that included the promotion of area development and rehabilitation projects aimed at creating durable economic assets and helping to redress the ecological and other consequences of the presence of refugees. Another objective was to ensure that refugee services that could contribute to national development were integrated into national structures. In north-western Somalia, however, the UNHCR assistance programme was seriously disrupted by the outbreak of conflict in May

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly, on 8 December, adopted resolution 43/147 without vote.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981, 37/174 of 17 December 1982, 38/88 of 16 December 1983, 39/104 of 14 November 1984, 40/132 of 13 December 1985, 41/138 of 4 December 1986 and 42/127 of 7 December 1987 on the question of assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Deeply concerned about the heavy burden that has been placed on the fragile economy of Somalia by the continuing presence of large numbers of refugees,

Concerned about the need to ensure continuing and adequate supplies of food in refugee camps in Somalia,

Conscious of the pressure that the refugee presence continues to impose on the public services, in particular education, health, transport and communications, and water supplies,

Noting with concern the deleterious effect of the refugee presence on the environment, which has resulted in widespread deforestation, soil erosion and the threat of destruction to an already fragile ecological balance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of Somalia is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees, in spite of its own limited resources and fragile economy;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in Somalia;

4. Calls upon the High Commissioner to ensure, as appropriate, that the care, maintenance and rehabilitation needs of the refugees are adequately covered;

5. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum and timely material, financial and technical assistance to enable the Government of Somalia to implement the projects and activities identified in the report of the 1987 inter-agency mission annexed to the report submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its forty-second session as the basis for a comprehensive programme of action combining both refugee-related humanitarian and developmental needs;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme to assume the leading role, as required by the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, in the conceptualization, implementation and monitoring of refugee-related projects, and to be involved in the mobilization of the financial and technical means required, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner and the World Bank,

7. Requests the pertinent organizations of the United Nations system, namely the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Food Programme, to prepare, in consultation with the Government of Somalia, detailed project documentation for the implementation of those projects and activities identified in the report of the Secretary-General as priority endeavours for a comprehensive programme of action;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue and expand their activities in Somalia, in co-operation with the Government of Somalia, to protect and rehabilitate its damaged environment;

9. Recognizes the important role that non-governmental organizations are playing with regard to programmes for the care, maintenance and rehabilitation of refugees, particularly in activities related to small-scale development projects, and in the fields of health and agriculture;

10. Calls upon the international community to support the activities of non-governmental organizations in Somalia in the planning and implementation of refugee projects and refugee-related development activities;

11. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 of the progress made in their respective fields of responsibility with regard to those provisions of the present resolution which concern them;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the High Commissioner and United Nations Development Programme, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

In response to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General in August 1988 submitted a report on the situation of refugees in the Sudan.⁽²¹⁾ Government sources had indicated that there were approximately 2 million displaced persons and 1 million refugees in that country. The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship, after discussions with Sudanese authorities, reinstituted the United Nations Emergency Operations Group, composed of the local representatives of the key United Nations agencies, in order to ensure an effective and concerted response to the critical humanitarian situation resulting from drought, civil strife and the presence of refugees. The Group was to co-ordinate emergency and rehabilitation assistance requested by the Government for refugees and displaced persons as well as for the stricken population in drought-affected areas. The Secretary-General in March appealed for assistance in implementing ongoing projects in areas affected by refugees.

UNHCR continued to provide assistance to nearly half of the more than 800,000 refugees estimated to be in the Sudan, the majority of whom were Ethiopian. More than 300,000 Ethiopians were receiving UNHCR assistance; a substantially higher number had spontaneously settled in towns and rural areas and were therefore unassisted.

Some 30,000 Ethiopian refugees, the majority fleeing armed conflict, arrived in eastern Sudan in the second half of 1988. Most were accommodated with relative ease at existing reception centres. As part of the overall effort to link refugee assistance to national development, UNHCR, in co-operation with the World Bank, prepared an agricultural project in southern Kassala province to benefit small farmers, including refugees.

More than 80,000 Ugandan refugees in the Sudan returned to their country of origin in the largest such movement anywhere in the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/141 without vote.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/129 of 7 December 1987 and its other previous resolutions on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 42/129 and the action taken by the concerned organizations, and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts made by the Government of the Sudan for the reception of the refugees and the provision of protection, shelter, food, health, education and other humanitarian services to the ever increasing number of refugees who have been crossing the borders into the Sudan since the early 1960s,

Recognizing the heavy burden shouldered by the people and the Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices they are making in acting as host to more than one million refugees, who constitute approximately 7.5 per cent of the total population of the country,

Concerned that the great majority of the refugees have spontaneously settled in various urban and rural communities throughout the country and are thus sharing the already meagre resources and services allocated to the indigenous population,

Expressing grave concern at the devastating and far-reaching effects of the successive calamities, ranging from the 1984 drought to the heavy rains and floods and the locust infestations, that have afflicted the country, thus exacerbating the already deteriorating situation resulting from the presence of this great number of refugees,

Gravely concerned also that the Government of the Sudan, besides dealing with the difficult prevailing economic and social problems, has the additional task of taking care of more than 1.5 million nationals displaced as a result of the 1984 drought, the civil strife in the southern part of the country and the rains and floods of August 1988,

Recognizing the serious task undertaken by the Government of the Sudan to initiate a wide-ranging rehabilitation programme to redress the impact and damages incurred by the natural disasters,

Considering those serious circumstances, which render the Government of the Sudan less prepared than ever to meet its obligations to its own people, and the more serious consequences, which affect the capacity of the Government of the Sudan to receive and grant asylum to additional numbers of refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in the Sudan,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of refugees in the Sudan and expresses its appreciation for the appeal made by the Secretary-General to Member States and the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations;

2. Takes note also of the report submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and in particular of the new trends identified in the area of refugee aid and development;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, donor countries and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the presence of massive numbers of refugees in the country on the security and stability of the country and the overall negative impact on its basic infrastructure, which arrests the socio-economic development of the whole country;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the shrinking resources available for refugee programmes in the Sudan and the serious consequences of this situation for the country's ability to continue to act as host and provide assistance to refugees;

6. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to provide the Government of the Sudan with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees;

8. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and Oceania

At the request of Sri Lanka, UNHCR in 1988 launched a programme to promote the return of Sri Lankan Tamils from India. Transportation for the returnees was provided by India, and reception, registration and initial assistance were provided by Sri Lanka and UNHCR. Reintegration assistance was also planned for Sri Lankan Tamils returning voluntarily from countries other than India. By year's end, some $8.3 million had been spent towards implementation of the programme.

In India, there were more than 6,000 registered refugees at year's end, mainly from Afghanistan and Iran. UNHCR assistance included primary and secondary education for children, as well as higher education and vocational training for adults. A total of 1,002 refugees in India were resettled in third countries during 1988, and 62 Afghans and 30 Iranians voluntarily repatriated.

During the year, UNHCR expenditure in the region stood at $64.3 million under General Programmes and $18.2 million under Special Programmes.

Indo-China

At the end of 1988, some 156,000 Indo-Chinese asylum-seekers were in UNHCR-assisted camps in Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand, with Thailand being host to the majority of the case-load. Despite efforts to promote voluntary repatriation, resettlement remained the principal durable solution. The increase in arrivals, particularly "boat people", was not offset by the resettlement of some 50,000 Indo-Chinese in third countries, and the number of registered asylum-seekers in South-East Asian camps, particularly in Hong Kong and Malaysia, rose by 11.5 per cent compared to 1987. Progress was made in Viet Nam, however, with more than 21,000 persons leaving through the reactivated Orderly Departure Programme.

In July, the Foreign Ministers of the Association of South-East Asian Nations called for an international conference on Indo-Chinese refugees to be held in 1989.⁽²²⁾ The UNHCR Executive Committee welcomed the proposal in October 1988.⁽²³⁾

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/119 without vote.

International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the continuing humanitarian and other problems posed by the presence in the South-East Asian region of large numbers of refugees, displaced persons and those seeking refuge,

Recognizing that the problem of refugees, displaced persons and those seeking refuge is of international concern.

Convinced that there is an urgent need for the international community to find a comprehensive and durable solution to the problem which is acceptable to all parties concerned,

Appreciating the continuing efforts of the South-East Asian countries aimed at solving this problem, as well as the endeavours of the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees, displaced persons and those seeking refuge in South-East Asia;

Noting the call in the Joint Statement on Indo-Chinese Refugees, issued at Bangkok on 4 July 1988 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations at their twenty-first Ministerial Meeting, for the convening of an International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees at the ministerial level, in early 1989, to be preceded by a preparatory conference at the senior official level,

Noting the expressions of support given by all States concerned, including those of the South-East Asian region, to the convening of the Conference,

Taking note of the decision by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its thirty-ninth session to endorse the proposal for the convening of the Conference,

Bearing in mind the need for adequate preparation by the parties concerned to ensure the success of the Conference,

1. Welcomes the call by the Association of South-East Asian Nations for the convening of an International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees and expresses the strong desire that the Conference take place at the ministerial level at the earliest possible date during the first half of 1989;

2. Also welcomes the decision by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the convening of the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the States members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations and other States concerned, to convene the Conference and to extend all possible assistance to the parties concerned for the organization of the Conference;

4. Appeals to all States, the specialized agencies and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide all the necessary support and resources needed by the High Commissioner for the preparation and the holding of the Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Europe and North America

The number of new asylum-seekers in Europe increased to 240,000 during 1988, compared to 188,000 in 1987. Reversing the trend of previous years, most of the new asylum-seekers were of European origin. In addition, Hungary took in some 13,000 Romanian asylum-seekers, on whose behalf it sought UNHCR assistance. Another 50,000 Iraqi nationals were admitted to Turkey and granted temporary sanctuary as well as assistance and protection. UNHCR maintained close contact with Governments and NGOs to ensure preservation of the humanitarian tradition and the principles of the 1951 Convention⁽²⁴⁾ and the 1967 Protocol⁽²⁵⁾ relating to the Status of Refugees.

An agreement concluded in August between France, Suriname and UNHCR led to the creation of a tripartite commission to supervise the voluntary repatriation of some 8,000 Surinamese nationals in the French overseas department of Guiana.

In North America, Canada and the United States saw an expansion in their role as countries of first asylum during 1988. In the United States, there was a sharp increase in the number of Central American refugees, and accelerated procedures were introduced to determine the eligibility of their asylum requests.

During the year, UNHCR's operational expenditure in Europe and North America amounted to $19 million under General Programmes and $1.3 million under Special Programmes.

Latin America and the Caribbean

UNHCR had assisted about 124,000 refugees in Central America and Mexico by the end of 1988. The number of returnees increased considerably during the year, especially from Honduras, from where 2,476 Salvadorians and 7,965 Miskito and Sumo Nicaraguans repatriated. More than 37,000 refugees remained in Honduras at year's end, however, including Nicaraguans, Salvadorians and Guatemalans. In addition, 1,921 Guatemalans returned from Mexico, while 41,273 remained. Smaller repatriation movements occurred from the Dominican Republic (to Haiti) and Costa Rica (to El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua), bringing the total number of returnees in the region to 13,684. In southern Latin America, the estimated refugee population stood at 23,900, of whom 7,370 received UNHCR assistance. Though new Chilean asylum-seekers were registered, approximately 900 refugees, mostly Chileans, were assisted in repatriation.

During 1988, UNHCR expenditure in the region totalled $32.8 million under General Programmes and $6.5 million under Special Programmes.

In October,⁽²³⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee welcomed the September decision of the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Nicaragua to hold an international conference on Central American refugees in 1989.⁽²⁶⁾ The Secretary-General in September had reported⁽²⁷⁾ that UNHCR was providing support to the Governments of the region to prepare national profiles and programmes of solutions in preparation for the conference.

In October,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported on threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives in Central America, stating that he was gratified by the concrete measures taken to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of refugees in the region; he emphasized particularly the decision to hold an international conference on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/118 without vote.

International Conference on Central American Refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987 concerning the peace initiatives undertaken in connection with the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed by five Central American Presidents at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, 42/110 of 7 December 1987 on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons of Central America, 42/204 of 11 December 1987 on special economic assistance to Central America and 42/231 of 12 May 1988 on the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Also taking note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Gravely concerned about the present situation in the Central American region, the flows of refugees to neighbouring countries and countries outside the region, and the impact of those flows of refugees on the social and economic development of the area,

Conscious of the need to address the problem of Central American refugees who have found asylum in some Central American countries, including Belize and Mexico, and desirous of contributing to the search for lasting solutions of benefit to the countries and communities of asylum and origin,

Taking into account that, as stated in point 8 of the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, the Central American countries have undertaken, as a matter of urgency, to address the problem of refugees, including their repatriation and relocation through bilateral and multilateral processes,

Welcoming the establishment of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Central American Refugees, consisting of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Nicaragua, and emphasizing the importance of the success of their work,

Welcoming with satisfaction the San Salvador communique on the Central American refugees, signed on 9 September 1988, whereby it was decided to convene an International Conference on Central American Refugees, to be held at Guatemala City in May 1989,

Emphasizing that the general objective of the Conference is to examine the needs of Central American refugees and concrete proposals for practical solutions to their problems, as a contribution to peace in the region,

Reiterating the paramount importance of humanitarian and apolitical considerations, both in dealing with and in solving the problem of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, and the need to ensure that this approach is strictly observed by the countries of origin and of asylum and other interested participants,

Expressing its appreciation for the work done by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in support of the preparation for the Conference, and for its co-operation with the Preparatory Committee,

Recognizing the priority given in the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America to the section of the emergency programme which is designed to promote activities for solving the problem of refugees, displaced persons and repatriated persons,

Recognizing that the task of seeking solutions goes further than emergency activities and is linked with aspects concerning the development of the region and assistance for the displaced populations in the countries of origin and of asylum that are directly affected by the massive presence of refugees,

Emphasizing that, among the possible solutions, voluntary repatriation is the most appropriate solution for solving the problems created by the massive presence of refugees in the countries and communities of asylum,

Recognizing that the tripartite commissions, composed of representatives of the country of asylum, the country of origin and the Office of the High Commissioner, constitute an ongoing mechanism for solving the problem of refugees and that they require support in order to continue the current voluntary repatriation programmes in conditions of personal and material security,

1. Welcomes the decision adopted by the countries members of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Central American Refugees to convene the Conference at Guatemala City in May 1989;

2. Supports the undertaking made by the countries represented in the Preparatory Committee to continue to deal with the problems relating to the refugees and their voluntary repatriation, as well as with the preparatory work for the Conference and the Conference itself, on a purely humanitarian and apolitical basis;

3. Welcomes the decisions in support of the Conference adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States at its eighteenth session and by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Urges that, in the context of the Conference, consideration should be given to the problems of displaced persons and to the effects of the massive presence of refugees in countries of asylum, as well as to those solutions which the affected countries deem applicable;

5. Exhorts all Member States, organs, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as the regional and subregional, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations engaged in the humanitarian task of helping Central American refugees, to participate in the Conference and to provide all the resources, co-operation and support necessary for preparing and holding it, and for following up the results;

6. Appeals to the international community to increase its assistance to the countries of asylum and of origin of Central American refugees in order to strengthen their capacity to provide the means and services necessary for the solution of the problem of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, in accordance with national development programmes;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all States to participate in the Conference and to adopt the means necessary for ensuring its success;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to establish the necessary co-ordination between the Conference and the implementation of the section of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America relating to refugees, displaced persons and repatriated persons;

9. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to organize the Conference, in close co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme and with the organs, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in co-ordination with the Preparatory Committee, bearing in mind the third point of the San Salvador communique on the Central American refugees;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 and to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

South-West Asia,

North Africa and the Middle East

During 1988, UNHCR took steps to prepare for the voluntary repatriation of Afghans, including signing agreements with Afghanistan and Pakistan and holding discussions with Iran and representatives of the Afghan refugees to define the conditions of voluntary repatriation and to outline the material assistance needed. UNHCR's role included protecting the refugees and spontaneous returnees, building the capacity to respond to large-scale repatriation movements and providing direct support to the returnees in Afghanistan. A total of $12 million was obligated for those activities during 1988.

In Pakistan, preparations for the repatriation of more than 3 million Afghan refugees were accelerated during the second half of the year, especially in the areas of health and training, even as assistance continued to be delivered to newly arriving refugees from the border areas of Afghanistan where military conflict had intensified.

In Iran, UNHCR contributed $10.6 million towards the care and maintenance of Afghan refugees, in addition to Iran's own considerable contribution. In addition, at the request of Iran, UNHCR provided $8.3 million in assistance to some 70,000 Kurdish refugees from Iraq, primarily for medical supplies, shelter and other basic necessities.

A large number of Somalis entered the Persian Gulf region during the year, and the UNHCR regional office at Beirut, Lebanon, continued to provide assistance to some 5,900 stateless refugees. Other groups receiving UNHCR assistance in the area during the year included 1,000 refugees of Eritrean origin living on the coast of the Red Sea and a group of 70,000-80,000 persons in Yemen from Democratic Yemen. In connection with the peace plan proposed in 1988 by the Secretary-General and OAU to end the dispute in Western Sahara (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), wherein UNCHR was called on to participate in the census of Western Saharan refugees, UNHCR was preparing a contingency plan towards their repatriation. Meanwhile, it continued to assist vulnerable Sahraoui groups in Algeria.

Chapter XVI

Drugs of abuse

The abuse of drugs remained a serious threat to all countries and segments of society in 1988. Health hazards were heightened by a trend towards the simultaneous consumption of two or more drugs and by the emergence of more potent narcotic substances. In its annual report, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) stated that the illicit production and trafficking of drugs by internationally linked criminal organizations continued to undermine the integrity of national economies and imperil the security of some countries. During the year, heavy emphasis was placed on bringing to justice the master-minds of criminal syndicates involved in the illicit production, manufacture and distribution of drugs.

In an effort to address the upsurge in illicit trafficking and associated criminal activity, work continued throughout 1988 on preparing a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The United Nations Conference for the Adoption of a Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances was convened at Vienna from 25 November to 20 December and adopted the text of the Convention, which was opened for signature on 20 December.

The General Assembly strongly condemned the involvement of children in drug trafficking and urged the establishment of national and international programmes to protect children from the illicit consumption of drugs and from involvement in illicit production and trafficking (resolution 43/121).

The Economic and Social Council recommended follow-up activities to the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (resolution 1988/9), including the establishment of an international drug assessment system and the convening of a second interregional meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies to promote implementation of the 1988 Convention against Illicit Trafficking.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the principal policy-making body of the United Nations on drug control issues, considered matters relating to the reduction of illicit demand and drug law enforcement, and made recommendations to the Economic and Social Council for adoption. INCB continued its evaluation and overall supervision of the implementation of drug control treaties.

Drug abuse and international control

The Secretary-General, in his annual progress report⁽¹⁾ on international co-operation in drug abuse control, submitted in response to a 1979 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ outlined the activities of the various United Nations entities involved in drug abuse control, particularly the follow-up to the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking.⁽³⁾

During 1988, the Division of Narcotic Drugs focused its efforts on fostering and strengthening international co-operation to cope more effectively with drug abuse. It expanded its activities to meet increasing demands for services and advice from Member States, requests for material, and for supportive action and legal advice.

The Division established and strengthened national laboratory services in Member States, developing a network of laboratories at regional and international levels and facilitating scientific information exchanges. National laboratories in Chile, Ghana, Madagascar and Uruguay received laboratory equipment, chemicals and reagents. With the financial support of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC), the Division launched a regional project for Africa to establish 19 laboratories over a three-year period. Five of the laboratories were targeted for assistance in 1988.

The Division produced and distributed drug identification kits, updated its reference standard collection and provided Governments with samples of the reference standards. It issued a working manual on the identification of the most commonly trafficked drugs, established regional training centres in forensic analysis and developed a network of collaborative laboratories to provide advanced training in methods of drug analysis for biological fluids. The Division also started work on the establishment of the International Drug Abuse Assessment System.

Information activities included quarterly summaries of drug seizures and trends in illicit trafficking and updating of the list of national bodies authorizing the import/export of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as the list of authorized national manufacturers of such substances.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) assisted in the execution of projects financed by UNFDAC and others and provided funding for programmes from its own resources. UNDP's support to the Fund continued under the agreement signed by both bodies in 1987.⁽⁴⁾ Under its interregional programme, UNDP contributed $120,000 to the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) for a research project on drug abuse in the context of development: prevention, treatment and rehabilitation.

Four projects were carried out by UNDP in Asia and the Pacific, providing training in treatment and rehabilitation techniques, law enforcement and narcotics detection, and aviation security. At the national level, UNDP funded projects in Indonesia and Sri Lanka. In Thailand, UNDP, UNFDAC, the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund were financing an integrated rural development project to replace opium/poppy cultivation with food and cash crop production.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNDP provided administrative support through its field offices to UNFDAC-supported drug control programmes and served as executing agency for its projects in Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay and Peru.

The World Health Organization (WHO) promoted a public health approach to reduce the harm caused by psychoactive substances, and its European Regional Office co-operated with the Commission of European Communities and the Council of Europe in a multi-country project to stimulate health promotion at the community level.

WHO also supported prevention initiatives in Jordan, Malaysia, the Marshall Islands and the Republic of Palau, by improving education on substance abuse for health professionals. It developed strategies to meet the needs of high-risk groups, collected data on drug-related mortality and morbidity and, in collaboration with other United Nations agencies, prepared guidelines on drug abuse reporting systems, with special emphasis on health aspects.

WHO produced training materials for community health workers in developing countries on drug abuse assessment and on the organization of primary health-care services for drug abusers. It acted as the executing agent for national programmes in Afghanistan, the Bahamas, Burma, China, Colombia, Jamaica, Mauritius and Sri Lanka, and its regional offices participated in evaluation, treatment and rehabilitation projects in Africa, South-East Asia and the Western Pacific.

The International Labour Organisation (ILO) focused on the rehabilitation and social reintegration of recovering addicts and the reduction of drug and alcohol problems in the workplace. It developed a drug and alcohol education campaign for incorporation into the workers education programme. The post of Inter-regional Adviser on Alcohol and Drug-related Matters was created on 1 January 1988 to support ILO assistance and technical advice at the regional level.

Assistance in vocational and social rehabilitation programmes, and projects to combat drug and alcohol abuse among workers, was provided to Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, India, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Somalia, Sri Lanka and Thailand. ILO continued its project in Bolivia to eliminate illicit plantings of drugs, as well as its projects in Burma, Thailand, Zimbabwe and the countries of South-East Asia, on the selection of appropriate treatment and rehabilitation programmes and social reintegration of former addicts.

Activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in 1988 included a role as executing agency for UNFDAC-financed projects in Africa and Asia; the preparation of audio-visual materials for community programmes in Benin; and the production of education materials on drug addiction for a project in Burma. Through its Caribbean Network of Education Innovation for Development (CARNEID), UNESCO collaborated closely with the Caribbean Community to formulate preventive education projects.

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) concentrated on legal, technical and other means of suppressing the illicit transportation of drugs by air. The ICAO Council requested the Air Navigation Commission to study targets identified in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control⁽⁵⁾ related to the prevention of drug abuse in the workplace; the surveillance of air approaches to frontiers; and controls over aircraft in international airspace.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) reviewed the drug situation in the region with a view to creating a regional drug information network. A workshop was held at Bangkok, Thailand (15-19 February), as part of an ongoing project to standardize the format for data collection and analysis of drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation in the region.

Other drug control-related activities were carried out by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, UNSDRI, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Maritime Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, by decision 43/428, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report on international co-operation in drug abuse control⁽¹⁾

UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During 1988, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control continued to expand its programmes, intensify activities in key areas, and improve the quality of its services. The UNFDAC programme budget for 1988 was $60.4 million, a 52 per cent increase over 1987 ($39.8 million). Technical co-operation activities were extended to 40 countries through 88 projects for area development operations, preventive education and public information, treatment and rehabilitation of drug-dependent persons, and law enforcement. There were also 33 regional and global projects providing training, research, advisory services and information exchange.

Among new UNFDAC initiatives in 1988 were: the launching of a $20 million project to control drug abuse and illicit trafficking in India; the design of a new programme of co-operation with the Lao People's Democratic Republic; the initiation of direct collaboration with the co-ordinator for the United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes in Afghanistan; the expansion of operations in Bolivia with a $4 million project for basic rural sanitation services and an agreement to match the Bolivian Government's efforts to eradicate illicit coca production; a $22.2 million integrated rural development and crop substitution project and a project to strengthen prevention and treatment services in Colombia; two integrated rural development projects in Peru at a total cost of $15 million; the implementation of a $12 million multi-sectoral project in Brazil; the signing of a memorandum of understanding with the Government of Mexico for a $15 million drug control programme; and the successful completion of a customs inspection facility in Yugoslavia. UNFDAC's programme activities in the Caribbean were strengthened by the establishment of an office to assist in the design of master plans and the completion of an $800,000 regional telecommunications system for the control of illicit drug traffic. An intensive effort to address the drug problem in Africa led to the formulation and implementation of projects in 17 countries with a multi-year global commitment of $7.5 million. This activity included a $2.6 million multi-sectoral project in Morocco and two projects in Nigeria at a total cost of about $2 million.

Review of UN drug control programmes

In March, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁶⁾ to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in which it reviewed the implementation of CPC's decisions by substantive secretariat units of United Nations drug control programmes. The review was also intended to assist the Committee in its examination of future medium-term plans and programme budgets of drug control programmes.

The evaluators reported mixed success in implementing CPC's recommendations. They observed that while some efforts had been successful, others had been affected by a lack of resources and still others depended on the capacity of Member States. They recommended that the Secretariat should: systematically collect bilateral and multi-lateral conventions relating to the tracing, freezing and seizing of illegally acquired assets and the extradition of persons arrested for drug crimes; strengthen the technical capability of the Division of Narcotic Drugs in drug demand reduction and pursue preventive education efforts and information dissemination campaigns with the involvement of local communities, non-governmental organizations and relevant specialized agencies; and effectively implement existing arrangements for co-ordination and co-operation among United Nations drug control entities.

CPC consideration. In May,⁽⁷⁾ CPC endorsed the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report and recommended that the question of a possible merger of the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariat of INCB should be further explored.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/13 without vote.

Strengthening of co-operation and co-ordination in international drug control

The Economic and Social Council,

Cons&ring that the implementation of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, forms the basis for national and international drug control,

Aware that the adherence of as many States as possible to the existing international drug control treaties is essential to achieving regional and international co-operation and co-ordination in reducing illicit demand for drugs, in suppressing illicit trafficking, in improving training, administrative practices and data collection, and in undertaking joint activities,

1. Urges all States that have not already done so to accede to the existing international drug control treaties;
2. Also urges parties to those treaties to implement the Provisions thereof;

3. Invites Governments to establish appropriate national mechanisms for the adequate co-ordination of activities and co-operation between agencies engaged in drug abuse prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, the control of the supply of illicit drugs and the suppression of illicit trafficking;

4. Recommends that Governments, where they have not already done so, seek to establish at the regional level an organizational structure to stimulate, where appropriate, common activities and training seminars and workshops on drug control, to be held at regular intervals, for the following purposes:

(a) To undertake research and surveys to assess the nature and extent of drug abuse;

(b) To provide training in drug law enforcement and improve administrative practices;

(c) To introduce programmes to prevent drug abuse at the national and regional levels, having due regard to the prevailing socio-cultural and socio-economic conditions;

(d) To exchange experiences and consult on innovative policies, measures or experiments regarding the reduction of drug supply and demand;

(e) To make use of any expert knowledge and other resources in the region and solicit expertise from other regions, where appropriate;

5. Recommends that Governments and international organizations, as appropriate, consider the following activities in greater detail, with a view to implementing them:

(a) Studies of patterns of illicit consumption, with a view to bringing about greater awareness of the problem and sharing of information and providing policy guidance on effective countermeasures;

(b) The development of public education programmes, including the use of kits, publications and audio-visual equipment, to reduce the demand for illicit drugs in specific target groups and to make the general population aware of the hazards of drug abuse;

(c) Programmes in prevention, law enforcement and administrative practices required by the international drug control treaties, including the production and dissemination of manuals and other training materials, where appropriate, as well as programme-evaluation;

(d) The detection and identification of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and their origins, as well as precursors and essential chemicals that could be diverted to illicit use, and the provision of equipment for these purposes;

(e) The constitution of ad hoc groups to co-ordinate, on a multilateral basis and among police forces, strategies to identify and immobilize drug trafficking organizations;

(f) The development of a methodology for the collection and analysis of data on illicit trafficking;

(g) The establishment of mechanisms for the speedy and secure exchange of information between drug law enforcement authorities locally, nationally and across common borders, and the provision of appropriate communications equipment where needed;

(h) The improvement of co-ordination among all agencies concerned with regard to the scope, content and scheduling of seminars and other training programmes, in order to enhance their effectiveness;

6. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations Secretariat and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, as well as the International Criminal Police Organization and the Customs Co-operation Council, to support, whenever possible, the efforts and initiatives undertaken by Governments as recommended in the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations concerned for consideration and implementation, as appropriate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/13

25 May 1988 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/87) without vote, 5 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1988/13); agenda item 13.

Resources for UN drug control programmes

INCB, in its 1988 report,⁽⁸⁾ stated that the financial crisis facing the United Nations had imposed constraints on its operating programmes. This had resulted in a freeze on recruitment and lower priority being accorded to activities related to voluntary control measures for psychotropic substances and the monitoring of precursors and essential chemicals. The Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna informed the tenth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs (8-19 February) of her concern about the budgetary and staffing situations of the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariat of INCB and their devastating effects on the capacity of both bodies to deal with the work-load imposed on them by the international community.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 12 February,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission concluded that any reduction below the approved total appropriation for the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 relating to INCB and the Division of Narcotic Drugs would be irreconcilable with the efforts of Governments and the United Nations to intensify the global struggle against drug abuse. It urged all States to make urgent representations to the Secretary-General in support of this conclusion. The Commission recommended that CPC should maintain and possibly strengthen the level of resources available to the drug control units.

International campaign

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report,⁽¹⁰⁾ submitted in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of the status of the international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking. The report summarized action taken by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretariat's Division of Narcotic Drugs with regard to drug control programmes and the resources available for them. He also reported that on 25 February 1988 he had received the Commission's delegation to discuss its conclusions on the financial situation of the United Nations drug control units.

Follow-up to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

In 1987,⁽¹²⁾ the General Assembly welcomed the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline for Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control (CMO), adopted by the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (Vienna, 17-26 June 1987),⁽³⁾ and requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to identify suitable measures for follow-up. In February, the Secretary-General submitted a note⁽¹³⁾ to the Commission outlining inter-agency follow-up to the Conference, action taken by the General Assembly, and proposals for the Commission to consider in identifying suitable modalities for implementing the recommendations of the Conference. The Secretary-General also discussed the question of the adequacy of resources for United Nations drug control entities and noted the need to restore those resources to their former level and to allocate further resources to cover additional activities envisaged in CMO. He added that the level and scope of programmes and activities of the Secretariat would be determined by its mandates and by the financial resources available from the regular budget and extrabudgetary resources. He also noted the need to strengthen the Office of the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna to assist in the general co-ordination and follow-up of CMO.

In later addenda, the Secretary-General outlined action taken or planned by the Division of Narcotic Drugs, INCB, other agencies and programmes of the United Nations system and the regional commissions to implement the relevant recommendations of the Conference. The Commission, at its tenth special session (Vienna, 8-19 February),⁽¹⁵⁾ recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption follow-up activities to be taken by Member States and agencies of the United Nations system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/9 without vote.

International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the successful conclusion of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, in particular the adoption of the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control,

Affirming its commitment to the Declaration of the Conference as an expression of the political will of nations to combat the drug menace,

Noting that in the Declaration of the Conference the Secretary-General was requested to make proposals, in the context of the United Nations programme and budget and within available resources, that reflect the priority attached to the field of drug abuse control,

Noting also that in the Declaration of the Conference, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs was requested to examine the most suitable modalities for following up the activities referred to in the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline, as appropriate, at the international level,

Urging Governments to take early action to conclude a new convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, to which the General Assembly and the Conference have attached high priority,

Recognizing the important contributions of the United Nations drug control bodies and their distinct mandates and responsibilities, and welcoming the Secretary-General's efforts to increase co-ordination of activities related to drug control following: the Conference,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/112 of 7 December 1987, inter alia, requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control, to identify suitable measures for follow-up to the Conference and, in that context, to give appropriate consideration to the report of the Secretary-General on the Conference,

1. Urges Governments and organizations to adhere to the principles set forth in the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and to utilize the recommendations of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control in guiding the development of national and regional strategies and particularly bilateral, regional and international co-operative arrangements;

2. Welcomes the prompt action taken by the Secretary-General to identify suggestions for activities to build upon the achievements of the Conference;

3. Urges those Member States that have not yet done so to accede to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

4. Urges Governments, as a priority goal in the follow-up of the Conference, to provide additional resources to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in order to enable it to strengthen its co-operation with the developing countries in their efforts to implement drug control programmes;

5. Invites intergovernmental and regional and international non-governmental organizations that are referred to under the particular targets of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline to provide to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at future sessions, information on activities undertaken in pursuit of those targets;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to review the procedure for the submission of written reports on drug matters in the United Nations and to report thereon to the Commission;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to review, within available resources, current information systems in the United Nations drug control units and to develop an information strategy and submit it, with its financial implications, to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-third session, with a view to the creation, within existing United Nations structures, of an information system integrating input from national, regional and international sources in a computerized data base, so as to facilitate the linkage, retrieval and dissemination of information on all aspects of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and the chemicals used in their illicit processing and manufacturing;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to support, within available resources, the activities of relevant non-governmental organizations in the drive against drug abuse and to co-ordinate the activities of the appropriate United Nations agencies with them;

9. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure continued inter-agency co-operation in implementing and reporting on activities related to the targets established in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline and to ensure that the ad hoc inter-agency meetings on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control consider how such activities can be included by each specialized agency in its regular programme and budget, and to continue to report on such inter-agency co-operation;

10. Invites the regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies to take the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline into account in their discussions, with a view to enhancing co-operation to combat illicit drug trafficking;

11. Recommends that the Secretary-General convene a second interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies at an appropriate time following the adoption of the convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, with a view to promoting co-operation in the implementation of the convention;

12. Recommends that, in developing activities to implement the guiding principles contained in the Declaration of the Conference and the targets of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline, the United Nations drug control bodies, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations give particular emphasis in the coming year to the activities identified in the annex to the present resolution;

13. Decides to keep under review the action taken with respect to the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline adopted by the Conference.

ANNEX

Suggested activities for follow-up to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking by organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations

A. Prevention and reduction of demand

1. The Division of Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations Secretariat, in collaboration with other United Nations drug control bodies and the World Health Organization should help Governments improve data collection, should establish valid, reliable and practical procedures that national authorities may adopt and should undertake other activities identified in targets 1 and 2 of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control.

2. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in collaboration with the World Health Organization and appropriate United Nations bodies, should solicit, compile and analyse information on educational and public information methods that have been proved effective in the prevention of drug abuse, and disseminate this material to States on request.

3. The International Labour Organisation should supply resource kits for the promotion and implementation of programmes to reduce drug abuse in the workplace, and monitor their effectiveness.

4. Non-governmental organizations with special expertise in the field of drugs should collaborate with Governments and appropriate United Nations bodies to ensure that effective education and prevention activities are identified and information on them is widely disseminated.

B. Control of supply

5. The International Narcotics Control Board, in collaboration with the World Health Organization and other competent entities, should assist countries, on request, in improving their capacity for monitoring the manufacture, importation, dispensing and distribution of substances under international control.

6. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat and the International Narcotics Control Board, should assist national drug regulatory authorities in developing and strengthening their pharmaceutical administrations and control laboratories in order to enable them to control pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

7. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with United Nations drug control bodies, non-governmental organizations and others involved in the rational use of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, should assist national educational authorities in developing training materials and conducting training courses to ensure that medical practitioners and other health personnel are well trained in the rational use and prescription of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

8. The Customs Co-operation Council should continue to develop, as a high priority, an internationally recognized customs nomenclature for selected precursors, specified chemicals and equipment.

9. The Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, in collaboration with development assistance bodies and other bodies with relevant experience and in consultation and agreement with the Governments concerned, should support crop surveys and monitoring efforts, using such technologies as high-resolution satellite imagery and aerial photography.

10. The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control should continue to encourage contributions and develop master plans for narcotics control, including the eradication of illicit crops and, where appropriate, the substitution of those crops through integrated rural development programmes.

11. The Division of Narcotics Drugs of the Secretariat should convene an expert group to make recommendations on the eradication of illicit plants using methods that do not harm the environment or humans.

12. International financing institutions should contribute more to integrated rural development in support of the eradication of illicit plantings and crop substitution programmes.

13. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in collaboration with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and other United Nations bodies, should improve methodological approaches to integrated rural development, eradication of illicit crops and crop substitution.

C. Suppression of illicit trafficking

14. The Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, in co-operation with the International Criminal Police Organization, the Customs Co-operation Council and with other United Nations drug control bodies, should continue to organize appropriate training courses for law enforcement personnel, making the most effective use of available information sources.

15. The Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat should continue to give high priority to its programme of scientific and technical assistance to Member States that have limited resources, and should collaborate with the World Health Organization in this regard. The programme should include the establishment and strengthening of national laboratory services, an expanded training programme involving qualified national laboratories, the development of recommended methods of testing, and the provision of pure reference standards and scientific and technical information.

16. The International Criminal Police Organization and the Customs Co-operation Council should co-ordinate the dissemination of profiles of drug trafficking organizations and information on their methods of operation.

17. The International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Maritime Organization, the World Tourism Organization, the International Air Transport Association and the International Chamber of Shipping should, if they have not already done so, consider and set standards, in co-operation with the Customs Co-operation Council, to improve the control of movements of passengers and goods, with a view to curbing illicit traffic in drugs.

18. The Universal Postal Union should study ways to prevent the use of the international mails for drug trafficking and make recommendations for action to combat this problem.

19. The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and regional and bilateral programmes should, on request, assist countries in equipping and strengthening their law enforcement authorities.

D. Treatment and rehabilitation

20. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with other organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental and other relevant bodies, should, on request, provide Governments with the basic information they need to develop clear policies for treatment and rehabilitation programmes appropriate to their national needs.

21. The World Health Organization, the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat and other competent international bodies, including non-governmental organizations, should solicit, compile, analyse and disseminate information on treatment modalities and techniques that have been proved effective and on appropriate evaluation methodologies that could be easily adapted for national use.

22. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with other competent international bodies, including non-governmental organizations, should solicit, compile, analyse and disseminate material that has been found effective in the training of personnel who treat and help rehabilitate former drug addicts.

23. The International Labour Organisation should prepare and publish guidelines for programmes to reintegrate former addicts in occupational activities or vocational training.

24. The World Health Organization should continue to explore with Governments and report on the development of:

(a) Preventive and health education programmes as a means of interrupting the transmission through intravenous drug abuse of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV);

(b) Appropriate treatment and counselling for drug misusers who are HIV positive or who have developed acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS).

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/9

25 May 1988 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/87) without vote, 5 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1988/13); agenda item 13.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, responding to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ informed the Assembly of action taken by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General as follow-up to the Conference. He indicated that, as requested by the Assembly, the Declaration and CMO were issued in all official languages of the United Nations and that the first annual International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking was observed on 26 June 1988 in many parts of the world.

The Secretary-General reported that the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on the Co-ordination of International Drug Abuse Control of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination held two sessions in 1988 (Vienna, 13 February;⁽¹⁷⁾ Geneva, 1 and 2 September⁽¹⁸⁾). In September, participating entities considered, among other items, the follow-up to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and CMO and ways to make their related activities more effective. Particular attention was given to the immediate steps recommended by the Economic and Social Council in May for follow-up to the Conference (see above). They also discussed the gap between the resources available to the United Nations system as a whole and the actions required of it by CMO. They agreed to attempt, on an experimental basis, to quantify the level of resources allocated by two of the main specialized agencies for drug abuse control programmes, as well as the expanded activities recommended by the Conference, to give Member States a clearer idea of the financial implications of effective United Nations follow-up to the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 43/122 without vote.

International campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/122 of 13 December 1985, 41/125 of 4 December 1986, 42/112 and 42/113 of 7 December 1987 and the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the Economic and Social Council adopted to implement the international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Recalling with satisfaction the successful conclusion of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, in particular the adoption of the Declaration, as an expression of the political will of nations to combat the drug menace, and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, a compendium of recommendations for implementation,

Conscious that the global problem of illicit trafficking in and illicit production and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances continues to have a devastating effect on individuals and on States,

Emphasizing that the connections between drug trafficking and international criminal organizations and the violence and corruption associated with them are highly detrimental to the democratic institutions, national security and economic, social and cultural structures of States,

Bearing in mind the need to ensure the implementation of the courses of action recommended in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline, particularly in the areas of education and public information with regard to the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Noting that the collective responsibility of all States for the international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking was highlighted in the Declaration,

Recognizing that measures to prevent and control supply and to combat illicit trafficking can be effective only if they take into consideration the close link between illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including illicit production and abuse, and the social, economic and cultural conditions in the States affected, and are formulated and implemented in the context of the social and economic policies of States, taking due account of community traditions and the harmonious development and conservation of the environment,

Reiterating that the transit routes used by drug traffickers are constantly changing and that an increasing number of countries in all regions of the world, and even entire areas, are particularly vulnerable to the illicit transit traffic because of their geographical location and other considerations,

Emphasizing that, in order to stop the illicit transit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, regional and Interregional co-operation and action and necessary support and assistance are required to strengthen the capability of States and regions, including those hitherto unaffected,

Noting that the new convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, when adopted, should, together with the existing international instruments, greatly enhance the international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Taking note of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 4(S-X) of 12 February 1988 concerning the financial and human resources available to the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat and the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board,

Considering the importance of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control as a major source of multilateral funding and expertise for drug abuse control efforts of the developing countries and the Fund's success in fund-raising and its improved operations,

Recalling its decision to observe 26 June each year as the International Day Against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking,

15. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat includes in its publications information designed to prevent the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, especially by young people;

3. Recommends that, in developing activities to implement the guiding principles contained in the Declaration and the targets of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline, the United Nations drug control bodies, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations should give particular emphasis to activities identified in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/9 of 25 May 1988;

Supply and demand

Narcotic raw materials for licit use

The Economic and Social Council, in resolutions adopted in 1986⁽¹⁹⁾ and 1987,⁽²⁰⁾ requested INCB to continue to monitor the implementation of its resolutions aimed at re-establishing and maintaining a world-wide balance between demand for a supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes and, in particular, at reducing excessive stocks of opiate raw materials for licit purposes, as provided for in the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs.⁽²¹⁾ However, the Board had to defer the implementation of the Council's resolutions so as to devote its reduced resources to other treaty-based functions which had been accorded higher priority.

INCB reported⁽⁸⁾ that global consumption of opiates had stabilized since the mid-1970s at approximately 200 tonnes per year in morphine equivalent. Since 1980, production of opiate raw materials had been in approximate balance with the consumption of opiates. The consumption of pholcodine and ethylmorphine declined and the demand for codeine levelled off despite the abundance of raw materials and low prices. World consumption of dihydrocodeine continued to increase, and the demand for morphine doubled in recent years as a result of its increased use for the treatment of terminally ill patients.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/10 without vote.

Demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986 and 1987/31 of 26 May 1987,

Re-emphasizing the central role in the control of the production of and trade in opiates played by the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961,

Reaffirming the fundamental need for international co-operation and solidarity in all activities relating to the control of narcotic drugs,

Bearing in mind that the maintenance of a world-wide balance between the licit supply of and the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes is an important aspect of an international strategy and policy for drug abuse control,

Concerned that large stocks of opiate raw materials held by traditional supplier countries continue to impose heavy financial and other burdens on them,

Having considered the section of the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1987 on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes, including the observation that world demand and production have been in approximate balance and that, over the next several years, the demand for opiates will remain at the present level,

1. Urges all Governments seriously to consider ways of resolving the problem of excess stocks in order to bring about an expeditious improvement in the current situation;

2. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to review the available information on the problem and to enter into a dialogue with interested Governments and other parties in order to develop a practical and effective solution, which may involve international development assistance organizations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments and appropriate international agencies for consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/10

25 May 1988 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/87) without vote, 5 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1988/13); agenda item 13.

Demand reduction

The Division of Narcotic Drugs, in its programme for the prevention and reduction of the illicit demand for drugs, provided assistance to national authorities, particularly through the programme for the utilization of community resources for the prevention and reduction of drug abuse which was supported by UNFEDAC. Under the programme, seminars and workshops were held, including the Workshop on the Utilization of Community Resources for the Prevention and Reduction of Drug Abuse for Asia and the Pacific Region (Manila, Philippines, 7-11 December 1987). The Division also encouraged the development of national pilot programmes and projects.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. On 16 February,⁽²²⁾ the Commission urged professional pharmacy bodies and associations to offer patients information on the appropriate and safe use of pharmaceuticals containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to develop mechanisms for detecting and preventing the use of such drugs or substances for non-medical purposes. It requested schools of pharmacy and post-graduate education institutions to emphasize in their curricula the control and rational use of psychoactive substances and control of the distribution chain, and to expand, in collaboration with other entities and the pharmaceutical industry, research into trends of abuse of such substances.

On 18 February,⁽²³⁾ the Commission recommended that the Division of Narcotic Drugs extend the programme on the utilization of community resources to prevent and reduce drug abuse through regional workshops, and called for more financial support for that programme.

On 19 February,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission recommended that the Secretary-General establish an international drug abuse assessment system for the collection, analysis, evaluation and assessment of drug abuse information so as to improve the quality of data submitted to the Commission; develop data and classification procedures; and provide training in the handling and reporting of drug abuse data.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/16 without vote.

Improved measures for reduction of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/112 of 7 December 1987, welcomed the successful conclusion of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and, in particular, the adoption of the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control,

Concerned about the growing abuse of drugs in most parts of the world,

Recognizing that measures for prevention, public awareness, treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration are essential in curbing drug abuse,

Aware that existing strategies for the reduction of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and conventional methods for the evaluation of preventive measures and methods of treatment have not always been effective owing to the complexity of the causes of the phenomenon,

1. Urges all Governments to foster, through national policies, the best possible conditions for the healthy development of, and a meaningful life for, all young people and to facilitate their integration into the community, so as to mitigate the social and economic circumstances that encourage abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

2. Recommends that scientific research into the factors that might promote or prevent drug dependence should be strengthened and that the methodologies and results of such research should be made available to all States;

3. Appeals to all Governments to develop and implement comprehensive national strategies for drug abuse prevention and public awareness that are designed to meet the particular situation and needs of the target groups and provide for long-term and continuous measures;

4. Also appeals to all Governments to create a national network of counselling and treatment services to advise high-risk groups and help misusers by providing appropriate treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration programmes aimed at reducing the harm associated with drug abuse and leading to a drug-free life;

5. Calls upon all Governments to engage non-governmental organizations as partners in the development and implementation of prevention strategies and the establishment of counselling and treatment services, in view of the importance of community commitment to demand reduction programmes;

6. Requests Governments to take suitable measures, as part of their national strategies in their campaigns against drug abuse, to reduce excessive and inappropriate use of medicinal products containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including such measures as special education and training of medical, pharmaceutical and paramedical personnel on all aspects of the abuse problem and the rational use of such drugs;

7. Calls upon the Governments of countries facing problems of drug abuse to take, when appropriate, the necessary measures to reduce significantly the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all Governments to implement the present resolution in accordance with the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control.

Illicit traffic

Preparation of convention against illicit traffic

On 5 February 1988, by decision 1988/102, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to consider and, if possible, approve at its tenth special session the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to prepare recommendations on the next measures necessary to conclude the preparation of the convention.

In February,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission had before it the initial draft convention prepared by the Division of Narcotic Drugs, which included a draft preamble, implementation articles and final clauses. It also had before it comments on the draft received from Governments and an account of the Commission's deliberations at its 1987 session.⁽²⁶⁾ In addition, the Commission had the revised text of articles completed by the open-ended inter-governmental expert group on the preparation of a draft convention at its 1987⁽²⁷⁾ and 1988 sessions (Vienna, 25 January-5 February 1988),⁽²⁸⁾ a summary of comments from Governments on the expert group's revised text,⁽²⁹⁾ and a background note by the Secretary-General on progress in preparing the new convention.⁽³⁰⁾

The Commission recommended that the Council convene a conference of plenipotentiaries to adopt the convention, preceded by a meeting of a review group to continue its preparation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/8 without vote.

Preparation of an international convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/141 of 14 December 1984, in which the Commission on Narcotic Drugs was requested to initiate, as a matter of priority, the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/143 of 14 December 1984, 40/120, 40/121 and 40/122 of 13 December 1985, 41/125, 41/126 and 41/127 of 4 December 1986 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling further that the Commission, pursuant to resolution 1(S-IX) of 14 February 1986, considered an initial draft convention, which included fourteen articles, and the comments of Governments thereon, at its thirty-second session, held from 2 to 11 February 1987,

Considering that, as provided for in Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/27 of 26 May 1987, the open-ended Intergovernmental Expert Group met twice in 1987 to review the working document which consolidated the draft convention and, wherever possible, to reach agreement on the articles of the convention, and prepared revised working documents,

Considering also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/111 of 7 December 1987, requested the Secretary-General to consider convening a further meeting of the Intergovernmental Expert Group for a period of two weeks immediately prior to the tenth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in order to continue revision of the working paper on the draft convention, and also requested the Commission to consider and, if possible, approve the draft convention at its tenth special session and to prepare recommendations on measures to be taken to conclude the preparation of the convention, including the possibility of convening a plenipotentiary conference in 1988 for its adoption.

Recalling the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, in which the Conference called for the urgent but careful preparation and finalization of the draft convention to ensure its entry into force at the earliest possible date,

Having received the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its tenth special session,

Bearing in mind the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984, the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984 and the Lima Declaration of 29 July 1985, in which profound alarm was expressed at the seriousness of the problem,

1. 2. Expresses its thanks to States that have submitted their comments on the working documents on the draft convention or proposals for textual changes thereto;

3. Expresses its thanks to the Intergovernmental Expert Group for the work accomplished during its meetings held from 29 June to 10 July 1987, from 5 to 16 October 1987 and from 25 January to 5 February 1988;

4. Reminds States of the importance and urgency of proceeding with the work on the preparation of the draft convention in the most expeditious manner, with a view to ensuring that the convention is effective, widely acceptable and enters into force at the earliest possible time;

5. Takes note of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its tenth special session, annex II to which contains texts of draft articles for the proposed convention;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit by 15 March 1988 for consideration the relevant parts of the report of the Commission, with any relevant annexes and such background documentation considered pertinent, to all States, the specialized agencies, the International Narcotics Control Board and the International Criminal Police Organization and other interested intergovernmental organizations;

7. Decides to convene, in accordance with Article 62, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations and within the provisions of General Assembly resolution 366(IV) of 3 December 1949, a conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

8. Also decides to convene, within available resources, a review group for the conference to meet for a period of up to two weeks, preferably at Vienna, not later than mid-June 1988, the proceedings of which shall be governed, mutatis mutandis, by the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council;

9. Instructs the review group:

(a) To review the texts of draft articles 1 to 6 with a view to submitting them to the plenipotentiary conference; in addition, the group may review the remaining draft articles and related texts with a view to making those changes that may be necessary to achieve overall consistency in the text of the draft convention to be submitted to the plenipotentiary conference;

(b) To consider organizational matters relating to the conference and the draft provisional rules of procedure to be prepared by the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To arrange for the conference to be held in 1988, not sooner than four months after the meeting of the review group;

(b) To invite to participate in the conference and the meeting of the review group:

(i) All states; I

(ii) Specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations interested in the matter, with the same rights as they have at sessions of the Economic and Social Council;

Conference for the adoption of the international convention against illicit traffic

On 25 May, by decision 1988/120, the Economic and Social Council decided to hold a conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances at Vienna from 25 November to 20 December 1988.

The review group established by the Council (Vienna, 27 June-8 July) reviewed articles 1 to 6 of the draft convention and considered organizational matters concerning the plenipotentiary conference.⁽³¹⁾ It recommended to the conference the revised draft convention and further proposals relating to its text, the draft provisional rules of procedure of the conference, and a draft provisional agenda. It also recommended that a one-day consultation be held immediately preceding the conference to settle organizational and procedural questions.

On 26 July, by decision 1988/159, the Economic and Social Council authorized the holding of one-day pre-conference consultations immediately prior to the opening of the conference.

In an October report⁽³²⁾ submitted in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of progress in preparing the draft convention and preparations for the conference and the convention's adoption. He indicated that a one-day pre-conference consultation was to be held on 23 November 1988, and that he had designated the Director of the Secretariat's Division of Narcotic Drugs as executive secretary of the conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 43/120 without vote.

Preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984, 40/120, 40/121 and 40/122 of 13 December 1985, 41/125, 41/126 and 41/127 of 4 December 1986, 42/111, 42/112 and 42/113 of 7 December 1987 and other relevant provisions,

Emphasizing the importance of the contribution that will be made by the convention in supplementing the existing international instruments on the subject, namely, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Underlining the importance of the appeal made in paragraph 3 of the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, in which the Conference called for the urgent and careful finalization of the preparation of the draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which today becomes more urgent owing to the continuous aggravation of the problem,

Noting with appreciation the progress made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its tenth special session in the preparation of the draft convention,

Underlining the importance of the valuable contribution of the Secretary-General, the useful observations of the Member States and the work of the open-ended Intergovernmental Expert Group, which met twice during 1987 and once during 1988 and which prepared revised working papers, and the conclusions of the Review Group convened at Vienna from 27 June to 8 July 1988,

Taking into consideration that the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1988/8 and in its decision 1988/120 of 25 May 1988 decided to convene at Vienna, from 25 November to 20 December 1988, the Conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved in the preparation of the draft convention,

1. Welcomes with appreciation Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/8, in which it decided to convene the Review Group in mid-June 1988 at Vienna, with the mandate of continuing the preparation of the draft convention and preparing the organizational aspects of the Conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General, and the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its tenth special session and the recommendations therein, approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1988/8 and decisions 1988/118 and 1988/120 of 25 May 1988 and 1988/159 of 26 July 1988, in which it decided, inter alia to convene the Conference of plenipotentiaries to adopt the convention, and to extend to ten working days the thirty-third session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in order to allow it to consider suitable measures to be taken prior to the entry into force of the convention;

3. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug abuse control, to identify suitable measures to be taken prior to the entry into force of the convention;

4. Urges all States to adopt a constructive approach with a view to resolving any outstanding differences over the text of the convention;

5. Requests all States, while reaffirming their commitment to the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking as an expression of the political will of nations to combat the drug problem, to assign the highest priority to the Conference of plenipotentiaries and to participate actively in it, at the highest possible level, for the adoption of the convention;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and all related organs established by the Commission for their effectiveness in responding to its request to prepare the draft convention;

7. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, particularly on the conclusions of the Conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

The United Nations Conference for the Adoption of a Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances (Vienna, 25 November-20 December 1988)⁽³³⁾ was attended by representatives of 106 States. It was also attended by representatives of the Pan Africanist Congress of Anzania and the South West Africa People's Organization, as well as by a number of specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, United Nations organs and related bodies, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). On 19 December,⁽³⁴⁾ the Conference adopted the text of the Convention, which was opened for signature on 20 December 1988.

The Convention, which was subject to ratification, acceptance, approval or act of formal confirmation and was open for accession, was to remain open for signature at Vienna until 28 February 1989 and, thereafter, in New York until 20 December 1989, the Secretary-General being the depositary. As at 31 December 1988, 44 States had signed the Convention.⁽³⁵⁾ The Convention required 20 ratifications prior to its entry into force.

The Conference also adopted its Final Act,⁽³⁶⁾ containing three resolutions recommending the widest possible use of the records and communication system of the International Criminal Police Organization to address the goals of the Convention; the provisional application of the Convention before its entry into force; and the provision of sufficient resources to the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariat of INCB to enable them to discharge their tasks under international drug control treaties.

Drug law enforcement

INCB noted that the drafting of a new international treaty to combat illicit drug trafficking was at an advanced stage and that Governments were already enacting legislation to prevent money-laundering and to confiscate traffickers' assets. Regional and international co-operation among enforcement agencies had seriously disrupted traffickers' operations and offered the best prospects for confronting international criminal organizations. During the year, countries in Eastern and Western Europe and North America had concluded formal co-operative agreements and had achieved significant results, including the destruction of traffickers' networks.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered recommendations from the three regional meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEAs) held during 1987 in Africa, Asia, and Latin America and the Caribbean, and the work of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East. HONLEA, Africa,⁽³⁷⁾ had recommended, inter alia, the establishment of national mechanisms to monitor trends in drug abuse; the co-ordination of preventive measures and the collection of data for drug abuse assessment; the development of relevant training programmes; the creation of a regional drug control organization; and the expansion of international co-operation to provide information, equipment, financial resources and training.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/15 without vote.

Meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies: Asia and the Pacific, Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1845(LVI) of 15 May 1974, in which it requested the Secretary-General to convene regular meetings of the heads of national drug law enforcement agencies of the countries in the Asia and Pacific region, its resolution 1985/11 of 28 May 1985, in which it requested the Secretary-General to convene regular meetings of the heads of the national drug control and law enforcement agencies of States in the African region, and its resolution 1987/34 of 26 May 1987, in which it invited Governments of Latin American and Caribbean countries to participate in a regional meeting, with a view to establishing regular meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies in that region,

Recalling also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 37/198 of 18 December 1982, requested the Secretary-General to explore the feasibility of establishing, on a continuing basis, co-ordination mechanisms for drug law enforcement in regions where they did not exist,

Noting that these regional meetings have been granted the status of subsidiary organs of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to which they report,

Bearing in mind that three regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies were successfully convened in 1987,

Recognizing the valuable contribution that these meetings have made, and can continue to make, to international co-operation and co-ordination, on a regional and interregional basis, in the field of drug law enforcement and other areas of international drug control,

1. Confirms, in the light of the terminology used at the First Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, held at Vienna from 28 July to 1 August 1986, that each of the three regional meetings should in future be designated "Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies", followed by an indication of the region;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to convene these three regional meetings at the capitals of States in the respective regions that may wish to act as host or at the headquarters of the regional commission concerned, annually, beginning in 1988, except in years when an interregional meeting is held, to provide the financial resources required from available resources and, if necessary, to seek additional extrabudgetary resources;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, at his discretion, to invite States outside the region that request observer status and that are actively involved in countering the illicit drug traffic in, through or from the region to send observers to the meetings, on the understanding that any expense would be borne by the States concerned;

4. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to include in the agenda of its regular and special sessions a separate item entitled "Development and promotion of more effective action against illicit drug trafficking through regional co-operation in drug law enforcement", under which it should consider reports or recommendations of the meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies and the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East and take appropriate action.

Also on 25 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1988/12 without vote.

Reduction of the illicit supply of drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that drug law enforcement training is critical to the fight against illicit drug trafficking and in the promotion of international co-operation and co-ordination,

Emphasizing the need for international and up-to-date drug law enforcement training,

Reaffirming Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolutions 5(XXXII) and 6(XXXII) of 10 February 1987,

1. Reaffirms the recommendations of the First Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Africa;

2. Requests the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations Secretariat, in co-operation with the International Criminal Police Organization, the Customs Co-operation Council, other interested organizations and Member States, to establish, as a matter of high priority, a long-term international drug law enforcement training strategy, aimed, inter alia, at the improvement of appropriate training techniques, tools and materials;

3. Also requests the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat to establish an annual plan and a regular schedule for drug law enforcement training programmes and activities, to co-ordinate them with interested intergovernmental organizations and national agencies in different regions and to encourage Governments, especially those of transit States and developing countries, to take adequate advantage of these programmes and activities;

4. Urges Member States to increase the funds available to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to support drug law enforcement training programmes and activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 43/121 without vote.

Use of children in the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and rehabilitation of drug-addicted minors

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/127 of 4 December 1986 and 42/113 of 7 December 1987, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and of the Economic and Social Council adopted to implement the international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Recalling the provisions of the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the guidelines contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control,

Alarmed by the fact that drug dealers' organizations are making use of children in their illicit production of and trafficking in drugs, and by the increase in the number of drug-addicted children,

Conscious of the physical and psychological damage inflicted on children by the illicit use of narcotic drugs and of its serious effects both on their potential for development and on their relationships with their families and society,

Having in mind the provisions of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child,"

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 42/101 of 7 December 1987 on the question of a convention on the rights of the child, which affirm that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education,

1. Strongly condemns drug trafficking in all its forms, particularly those criminal activities which involve children in the use, production and illicit sale of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

2. Urges all States to join together in order to establish national and international programmes to protect children from the illicit consumption of drugs and psychotropic substances and from involvement in illicit production and trafficking;

3. Invites the Governments of those Member States which are most affected by drug use among their child population to adopt urgent additional measures, as part of their national strategies, to prevent, reduce and eliminate drug use by children, with the aim of ensuring for children a social and family environment that will preserve their health, physical fitness and well-being;

4. Calls upon all States to promote the adoption, by their competent legislative organs, of measures providing for suitably severe punishment of drug-trafficking crimes that involve children;

5. Urges all Governments, competent international organizations and non-governmental organizations to give high priority, in their campaigns to prevent drug addiction among children and to rehabilitate children so addicted, to the dissemination of necessary information and the provision of appropriate advice for all sectors of their communities with regard to the serious effects of the illicit use of drugs among children, as well as to the promotion of appropriate community action;

6. Appeals to the competent international agencies and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to assign high priority to financial support for prevention campaigns and programmes to rehabilitate drug-addicted minors conducted by government bodies dealing with such matters, and also appeals to all competent international and national agencies to provide all possible support to the non-governmental organizations engaged in such action;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat includes in its publications, as a matter of priority, information designed to prevent the use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances among children.

Regional issues

Africa

In its 1988 report,⁽⁸⁾ INCB stated that drug abuse and illicit trafficking were expanding rapidly in the African region. Nationals of a large number of countries were actively participating in the traffic, which was spilling over into previously unaffected States.

Illicit cultivation of cannabis increased throughout the region. In addition to Morocco, cultivation was noted in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritius and Nigeria, and in other parts of eastern and southern Africa. An alarming trend was the emergence in some areas of cannabis varieties with a higher content of tetrahydrocannabinol.

Heroin addiction was on the rise in many African countries, especially in Kenya, Mauritius and Nigeria. Much of the heroin, however, mainly from India and Pakistan, was trafficked onwards to markets in Europe and North America.

The appearance of cocaine in illicit African channels was another ominous development. The drug, which originated in South America, was trafficked through Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Morocco and Nigeria. Cocaine seizures were also reported in Cameroon, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Rwanda, Tunisia and some countries in the southern sub-region. Nigeria also reported cases of cocaine

Psychotropic substances such as methaqualone, amphetamines, secobarbital, diazepam and flunitrazepam continued to be routed in millions of tablets to Africa's illicit markets. Although diversions of methaqualone from licit channels had almost ceased, illicit trafficking continued from clandestine laboratories in India and, recently, within Africa itself. Cases of psychotropic substance abuse were reported with increasing frequency. Enormous quantities of pemoline, a psychoactive substance not yet under international control, were being routed towards western Africa, and who had recommended its inclusion in Schedule IV of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.⁽³⁸⁾

The INCB report noted that a majority of African countries did not have effective drug control administrations. It recommended that, among other things, Governments enact adequate drug control legislation; restrict distribution channels for drugs and substances required for licit purposes; strengthen law enforcement services; and provide treatment and rehabilitation services for addicts.

The second meeting of HONLEA, Africa, was held at Dakar, Senegal (18-22 April). It recommended the establishment of regional structures for the co-ordination of drug control programmes; adherence to international drug control treaties; and the creation of national administrations to apply those treaties.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/11 without vote.

Co-ordination of drug control activities in the African region

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1987, specifically paragraphs 125 to 139 concerning drug abuse and illicit trafficking in Africa,

Concerned that several States of the African region are not, yet parties to the international conventions on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Also concerned at the increasing incidence of drug abuse and illicit trafficking in the African region.

Considering that there is a need to strengthen preventive arrangements and control machinery at the national and regional levels,

1. Calls upon those States of the African region that have not yet done so to accede to the existing international conventions on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, within the limits of the resources available and within the structure of the Economic Commission for Africa, a focal point to be responsible for co-ordinating and promoting measures to combat drug misuse and abuse and illicit traffic in drugs throughout the entire African region;

3. Urges the States of the African region that have not yet done so to establish national agencies with responsibility for co-ordinating action to combat drug misuse and abuse and illicit traffic in drugs, in accordance with article 35 of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and article 21 of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-third session on the measures taken to implement the present resolution.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/87) without vote, 5 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1988/13); agenda item 13.

Asia

East and South-East Asia. Despite campaigns to eradicate opium poppy cultivation, opium production in the region remained high, facilitating the manufacture of heroin in clandestine laboratories operating near the borders of Burma, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand. In Thailand, opium production for the 1987/1988 crop year was estimated at 27 tonnes, and the number of heroin abusers nationally remained at between 200,000 and 300,000. Thailand continued to be a transit country for much of the opiates produced in the region. In Malaysia, opium and heroin continued to be trafficked across the northern borders and coastline. Opium and heroin from the region were also trans-shipped through Hong Kong for domestic consumption and for markets in Australia, Europe and North America. Attempts to traffic drugs through China were also reported.

Control programmes in the region resulted in the destruction of some 1,740 hectares of poppy in Thailand during the 1987/1988 crop year, and large seizures of heroin. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, 50 illicit drug producers and traffickers were arrested and convicted in June. A Dangerous Drugs (Forfeiture of Property) Act, enacted in Malaysia, provided for the confiscation of assets derived from trafficking. The countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations continued to strengthen drug control programmes with emphasis on the training of law enforcement and drug rehabilitation officials.

In Hong Kong, more than 400 kilograms of heroin were seized during the first half of the year, and seizures of cannabis from the Philippines as well as cannabis resin from Nepal also increased. In 1988, new regulations required that records be kept of receipts and disposals of all psychotropic substances and export declarations for substances controlled under Schedule III of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.⁽³⁸⁾ The Dangerous Drugs Ordinance, amended in 1987, extended the presumption of trafficking in cases of possession to cocaine, amphetamines, methaqualone and quinalbarbitone.

South Asia. New regulations were enacted in India, providing for preventive detention for illicit drug activity and more stringent controls over the manufacture and movement of acetic anhydride used in the production of heroin. To combat escalating drug abuse, especially in heroin, the Government surveyed the extent of abuse, and established demand reduction programmes. In March, INCB held consultations with India on the expiration of the transitional reservations relating to the non-medical use of cannabis, and on the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolutions regarding the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs.

Bangladesh and Nepal reported an increase in drug abuse. In Nepal, the number of abusers was estimated at 20,000, most of whom were under 30 years of age. Bangladesh amended its legislation to provide severe penalties for drug offences.

Oceania

Drug abuse created a major problem in Australia, where heroin, cocaine and psychotropic substances, particularly amphetamines, remained available. Heroin was mainly trafficked from South-East Asia and the Near and Middle East, but was also locally manufactured from codeine tablets. During 1987 and the first half of 1988, approximately 7 tonnes of cannabis and 9.5 tonnes of cannabis resin were seized and four heroin and eight amphetamine laboratories were destroyed. A nation-wide cocaine data collection system to monitor the extent of abuse was being established as part of a national campaign against drug abuse, which also incorporated a strategy for the prevention and treatment of cocaine abuse.

The detection and eradication of cannabis cultivation continued in New Zealand, where cannabis abuse accounted for 90 per cent of all drug offences. The number of cocaine seizures remained significant, however, and a marked increase in the illicit traffic of lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) was reported.

The fourteenth meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific, was held at Bangkok (3-7 October 1988).

Near and Middle East

Huge quantities of opium, heroin and cannabis resin seized within the Near and Middle East and abroad reflected the scale of the region's production. Trafficking in heroin to Europe continued, while large quantities of psychotropic substances, in particular fenetylline, were trafficked in the opposite direction. During the first half of 1988, Jordan reported seizures of more than 11,000 depressant tablets, and Kuwait more than 500,000 stimulant tablets. Also in the first six months of the year, almost half a tonne of opium was seized in Iran. Turkey remained a transit country for heroin into Europe and the Government was aware of the need to strengthen controls. Illicit cultivation of cannabis and opium poppy continued in Egypt, Lebanon and Pakistan, where opium production might have doubled during the 1987/1988 growing year.

INCB emphasized the need for financial and technical assistance from the international community to implement supply/demand reduction measures, to establish treatment and rehabilitation services in the region, and to develop co-operative drug control programmes with neighbouring countries.

The Sub-Commission on Illicit Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East held its twenty-third session in 1988 (Vienna, 3-4 February).⁽³⁹⁾ The Sub-Commission recommended that the incidence and patterns of drug abuse be studied and evaluated to provide policy guidance on effective countermeasures. It also recommended the establishment of information exchange mechanisms among local drug law enforcement authorities and a long-term international drug law enforcement training strategy to standardize training techniques, tools and materials. The Sub-Commission called on Member States to allocate more funds for United Nations drug control programmes, discussed the possible expansion of its membership and decided to refer the issue to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. At its February session,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission, noting the interest of Egypt, India and Jordan in full membership in the Sub-Commission, recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the membership of the Sub-Commission be enlarged.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1988/14 without vote.

Enlargement of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1775 (LIV) of 18 May 1973, by which it authorized the establishment of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East,

Taking note of the report of the Sub-Commission on its twenty-third session, particularly paragraph 8 thereof,

Noting the interest expressed at the tenth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs by three States from the geographic area of the Sub-Commission in participating actively in the deliberations of the Sub-Commission,

Welcoming all forms of international co-operation at the regional level that tend to reinforce co-ordination of the fight against the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

1. Decides that the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East shall continue to meet annually at a capital in the region, whenever possible, and at the United Nations Office at Vienna prior to regular or special sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

2. Welcomes and authorizes the enlargement of the Sub-Commission;

3. Endorses the membership of Egypt, India and Jordan in the Sub-Commission;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, at his discretion, to invite States outside the region that request observer status and that are actively involved in countering the illicit drug traffic in, through or from the region to send observers to the meetings of the Sub-Commission, on the understanding that the expenses would be borne by the States concerned.

Europe

Eastern Europe. Although drug addiction did not constitute a major public health problem in Eastern Europe, some countries intensified activities to prevent the abuse of certain narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances diverted from local sources, and increased efforts to suppress transit traffic along the Balkan route and through the USSR. A seminar (Tashkent, USSR, June), attended by representatives of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and the USSR, worked out a common approach to the assessment of drug addiction in those countries. Abuse of certain pharmaceuticals and toxic inhalants recently increased in Hungary, although the number of addicts remained small. In its efforts to curtail the abuse of alkaloid decoctions illicitly prepared from poppy straw, Poland reduced the area licensed for legitimate poppy cultivation. As a result of wide-ranging campaigns for the early identification of drug abusers, the number of registered addicts in the USSR increased to nearly 51,000. Cases of abuse of organic solvents, predominantly by teenagers, were also reported in the Soviet Union. Co-operation among Soviet, Western European and North American authorities resulted in the confiscation of several tonnes of cannabis and the arrest of some major traffickers.

Western Europe. Drug abuse and illicit trafficking remained widespread throughout the region, leading to a sharp increase in drug-related deaths, mainly from heroin and psychoactive substances. Cocaine seizures were on the rise, and a number of coca paste-refining laboratories were detected and destroyed in Spain. There were indications that the abuse of cannabis was stabilizing or in decline in most Western European countries but the quantity of heroin seized increased. Psychotropic substances were trafficked from the region to other parts of the world in large quantities, and some substances of licit origin, including diazepam, flunitrazepam and benzodiazepines, were increasingly abused in Western Europe itself. The abuse of stimulants and amphetamines in particular was a major concern in Scandinavian countries, where the average age of abusers declined. An INCB study revealed that large amounts of phenobarbital manufactured in Europe were exported to Afghanistan and Pakistan to be used as an adulterant for heroin.

There were a number of legislative initiatives on drug control. On 31 December 1987, France made it illegal to aid and abet the laundering of funds derived from drug trafficking. In March 1988, Spain extended the scope of its penal laws to investigate bank accounts and confiscate assets from trafficking. Similar provisions had been introduced earlier by Italy, Portugal and the United Kingdom, and most other Western European countries were preparing legislative amendments to the same effect.

North America

In 1988, new legislation was enacted in the United States to provide additional education, treatment and rehabilitation programmes as well as stringent new penalties for both drug traffickers and users. It established the cabinet-level post of Director of National Drug Control Policy and created a system of recording and tracing sales by United States manufacturers of specific chemicals and precursors used to process raw materials into drugs. A survey among high-school and college students showed a 20 per cent decline in cocaine abuse, although the quantity of cocaine seized was on the rise. Seizures of heroin remained at the same level as in 1987. Cannabis eradication activities continued throughout the country, together with the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets. During the year, the United States participated in a number of international enforcement operations which seriously disrupted organized drug trafficking and resulted in substantial seizures of assets.

Cannabis and its derivatives continued to be the most abused drugs in Canada, but cocaine abuse was increasing. Ample quantities of heroin were available on the illicit market, and the clandestine manufacture of some psychotropic substances continued. Canada expanded its drug control programmes and increased their emphasis on financial aspects of drug trafficking.

In Mexico, opium poppy cultivation was expanded, with smaller fields being planted in remote areas at high altitude to reduce the effectiveness of aerial eradication efforts. Despite severe economic problems, Mexico gave the highest priority to its drug law enforcement campaign and dedicated an increasing percentage of its budget to that goal. The Mexican armed forces became more involved in drug control efforts, with 25,000 soldiers engaged full time in manual eradication. During the first half of 1988, nearly 1,500 hectares of opium poppy and 1,000 hectares of cannabis were destroyed manually and by aerial spraying. The Mexican navy conducted interdiction operations in territorial waters and was responsible for crop eradication in some coastal areas. A number of major traffickers were arrested during the year, and there were significant seizures of assets.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Increasing drug abuse and the expansion of illicit production and trafficking, mainly of cocaine, affected more and more countries in Latin America and the Caribbean in 1988. Despite eradication efforts, illicit coca cultivation spread significantly in the Andean countries and elsewhere in the region. In response, national authorities intensified their anti-drug activities with: coca and cannabis eradication campaigns; co-ordinated drug seizure operations; treatment and rehabilitation programmes for drug abusers; and strengthened banking regulations for the seizure of traffickers' assets. Several countries placed precursors-essential chemicals and solvents used in the illicit manufacture of cocaine under control. Bolivia and Peru, the world's two main coca-producing countries, made further inroads on the vast and uncontrolled cultivation of the coca bush with the aim of reducing production to levels required for legitimate medical and industrial purposes. Bolivia prohibited all coca bush cultivation in excess of 12,000 hectares, and encouraged crop substitution in areas of excessive production. In Peru, authorities eradicated nearly 700 hectares of illicit coca, destroyed 30 laboratories and seized more than 2 tonnes of coca paste during the first half of 1988. Other efforts included the development of drug interdiction programmes for the pan-American and central highways as well as for the Amazon River and its principal tributaries, and a drug prevention curriculum for public schools.

Enforcement operations and the aerial eradication of cannabis in Colombia resulted in increased seizures of clandestine laboratories and cocaine base. Aerial reconnaissance established that almost all coca cultivation had been destroyed in Ecuador. However, Ecuador remained a major transit country and drug abuse was rapidly increasing, particularly in the coastal areas. Large-scale cannabis cultivation and trafficking continued in Paraguay, which also served as a transit country for cocaine from Bolivia. A conference was held in July to heighten public awareness of drug issues.

In Central America and the Caribbean, 211 hectares of illicitly cultivated opium poppy were destroyed in Guatemala, and nearly 400 drug-related arrests were made in Belize during the first half of the year. Panama reported seizures of drugs in transit and of chemicals. The Caribbean, with free ports and insufficiently strict banking controls in some countries, provided ready facilities for international drug trafficking and money-laundering. Cocaine trafficking via the Bahamas to the United States was on the rise, but there was a marked decline in cannabis traffic. Local cocaine and cannabis abuse increased alarmingly, and the Board sent a mission to the Bahamas at the invitation of its Government late in the year. Jamaica continued intensive cannabis eradication operations and took action to combat the violation of its airspace by traffickers. Illegal airstrips were destroyed and, in July, the Government announced plans for legislation to permit the seizure of traffickers' assets.

The second meeting of HONLEA, Latin America and the Caribbean, was held at Lima, Peru (12-16 September 1988).

Conventions

INCB reported that, during 1988, Somalia, Uganda and the United Arab Emirates acceded to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs,⁽²¹⁾ bringing the total number of States parties to the Convention in its original or amended forms to 125.⁽³⁵⁾ Since the Board's last report, the German Democratic Republic and Uganda became parties to the 1972 Protocol⁽⁴⁰⁾ amending the Convention, bringing the number of States parties to 81. The number of States parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances⁽³⁸⁾ rose to 92, with the adherence in 1988 of Canada, Czechoslovakia, Uganda and the United Arab Emirates.

INCB noted that certain control measures required for psychotropic substances under the 1971 Convention had not yet been adequately implemented due to human resource and financial difficulties in national drug control administrations. To improve the monitoring of international trade and reduce the diversion of psychotropic substances into illicit channels, INCB recommended the extension of the import/export authorization system.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, on 8 February, decided that acetyl-alpha-methylfentanyl,⁽⁴¹⁾ alpha-methylfentanyl,⁽⁴²⁾ 3-methylfentanyl,⁽⁴³⁾ 1-phenethyl-4-phenyl-4-piperidinol acetate (ester) (also referred to as PEPAP)⁽⁴⁴⁾ and 1-methyl-4-phenyl-4-piperidinol propionate (ester) (also referred to as MPPP)⁽⁴⁵⁾ should be included in Schedules I and IV of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs. It also decided that methamphetamine racemate⁽⁴⁶⁾ should be included in Schedule II of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances, and that 5-allyl-5-l-methylbutyl) barbituric acid (secobarbital)⁽⁴⁷⁾ should be transferred from Schedule III to Schedule II of that Convention.

On the same date, the Commission decided,⁽⁴⁸⁾ in accordance with article 3, paragraph 4, of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances, to terminate in part the exemptions granted by Finland to the preparations of Gastrodyn comp. and Trimigrin, so that the requirements of article 8, paragraph 1, and of article 11, paragraph 5, should also apply to those two preparations.

Organizational questions

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its tenth special session at Vienna from 8 to 19 February 1988.⁽¹⁵⁾

On 25 May, by decision 1988/119, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its tenth special session.

Also on 25 May, the Council, by decision 1988/118, extended the duration of the Commission's thirty-third (1989) session to 10 working days and included in its agenda an item on the development and promotion of more effective action against illicit drug trafficking through regional co-operation in drug law enforcement.

Functioning of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies

In 1987,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Economic and Social Council established a Special Commission on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields and requested all subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly and the Council to submit to the Special Commission their views and proposals on the recommendations of the 1986 Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations⁽⁵⁰⁾ regarding their functioning. On 19 February,⁽⁵¹⁾ responding to that request, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs transmitted to the Special Commission its views and proposals on its functioning and that of its subsidiary machinery. It considered that there was no need to change the functioning or to amend the existing terms of reference or reporting channels of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs or its subsidiary organs, but decided to keep its functioning under continuous review for possible improvement.

International Narcotics Control Board

In 1988, INCB held its forty-third and forty-fourth sessions at Vienna, from 24 May to 3 June and from 10 to 21 October, respectively.

On 25 May, by decision 1988/117, the Economic and Social Council took note of the INCB report for 1987.⁽⁵²⁾

Chapter XVII

Statistics

During 1988, the Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to focus on further developing the System of National Accounts, revising and harmonizing international economic classifications, improving the demographic, social and environment statistics of developing countries and pursuing its technical co-operation activities, particularly training activities related to a future population and housing census.

In June, the Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination discussed policy issues and other matters relating to United Nations statistical activities. The Secretary-General issued a number of reports for consideration by the Statistical Commission in 1989. The Commission, which meets biennially, did not meet in 1988.

In July, the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1988/181, took note of a number of reports on international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, which were of relevance to the United Nations work in the field of statistics.

UN statistical bodies

ACC Sub-Committee

The Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (twenty-second session, Geneva, 6-10 June 1988)(1) considered co-ordination questions related to work being planned or carried out by the organizations of the United Nations system. They included the processing and dissemination of trade statistics, publication and dissemination policy, revision of the System of National Accounts (SNA), service statistics, indicative patterns of consumption, population and housing censuses, tourism and migration statistics, social statistics and indicators, environment statistics, status in employment classification, price statistics, harmonization of economic classifications, co-ordination of technical co-operation in statistics and co-ordination of ad hoc statistical inquiries to countries from non-statistical units of international organizations.

The Sub-Committee also considered the National Household Survey Capability Programme, the Living Standards Measurement Study and the Social Dimensions of Adjustment Study. It reviewed the base year for statistics, the Directory of United Nations Serial Publications and the functioning of the ACC machinery. In addition, it reviewed inter-agency inputs into preparations for the twenty-fifth (1989) session of the Statistical Commission.

The Sub-Committee agreed that, in the light of technological changes, high priority should be given to the intensification of co-operation with respect to data dissemination policies and practices. It considered as one of its objectives the achievement of a consistent dissemination policy among international organizations to ensure that their statistical data were available to as wide a range of users as possible.

Economic statistics

Energy, environment and industry statistics

An October report by the Secretary-General⁽²⁾ outlined progress made by the Statistical Office in energy and industry statistics since the 1987 session of the Statistical Commission.

As a follow-up to its activities in new and renewable sources of energy, the Office prepared a project proposal to assist developing countries in expanding and improving their statistical data base for energy planning. Funds were being sought for the project, which was expected to be co-ordinated with regional projects of a similar nature. In the area of training, two workshops on energy statistics methodology were planned for China.

In the area of industrial statistics, a new computerized system was created to compile, process and disseminate the results of the 1983 world programme in industrial statistics. A review of the industrial statistics programme was being conducted to identify additional indicators suitable for the annual data collection. The data were being sought by supplementary questionnaires, and, as at March 1988, 83 additional tables had been supplied by developing countries.

In a report on environment statistics in 1988,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General described the Statistical Office's ongoing methodological work, which focused on the preparation of A Framework for the Development of Environment Statistics⁽⁴⁾ and technical reports on statistics of the environmental aspects of human settlements and of the natural environment. Concepts and Methods of Environment Statistics. Human Settlements Statistics-A Technical Report⁽⁵⁾ was published and a report on statistics of the natural environment was in the process of preparation.

The Office, following a recommendation by the SNA expert group meeting on production accounts and input-output tables (see below) that environmental accounts be developed as satellite accounts to SNA, elaborated a framework for environmental accounts. This was discussed at a joint United Nations Environment Programme/World Bank expert group meeting on environmental accounting and SNA (Paris, 21 and 22 November), which made recommendations on the structure, concepts and classifications of an environmental accounting framework.

The development of the proposed global programme of environment statistics continued. In this regard, the Office revised past and current activities of the regional commissions and other international organizations. The Office did not envisage any comprehensive data collection at the global level until a sufficient number of regional and national programmes of environment statistics had been established.

National accounts and balances

The Secretary-General submitted a progress report on the revision of the System of National Accounts, which continued to be co-ordinated, planned and organized by the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts, composed of the Statistical Office of the United Nations and those of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the European Communities, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank and the United Nations regional commissions.

Global expert meetings were held on public sector accounts (Washington, DC., 25-29 January), which made recommendations to harmonize SNA guidelines with IMF government finance statistics; on production accounts and input-output tables (Vienna, 21-30 March), which made recommendations to redefine concepts relating to statistical units, taxes and secondary products, to make them more operational; and on financial flows and balances (Washington, DC., 6-14 September), which made recommendations on redefining the financial sector to reflect new developments in financial institutions, markets and instruments and give new guidelines on national and sectoral balance sheets.

Work on preparation of the first draft of the revised SNA commenced and the Inter-Secretariat Working Group (Washington, D.C., 16 and 17 September) discussed the first set of chapters and reviewed those SNA issues remaining to be resolved. The Group also prepared a work programme for further work on SNA.

During 1988, the Statistical Office continued work on links between SNA and the System of Balances of the National Economy (MPS) with special attention to the problems linking the concepts and classifications of the two systems.⁽⁷⁾ Both national accounting systems underwent intensive development processes. A revised version of MPS was published and implementation of the changes started. However, progress on linking was limited in the revision of a publication on comparisons of SNA and MPS.

A note by the Secretary-General⁽⁸⁾ outlined the direction of the work related to MPS carried out by the Standing Commission for Co-operation in the Field of Statistics of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA), in particular with respect to the development of a unified methodology for the computation of gross domestic product for CMEA member countries and the adaptation of the updated MPS for the improvement and elaboration of the methodology used in international comparisons of the major indicators of the development of the economies of CMEA countries.

Price statistics

The Statistical Office continued to co-ordinate the International Comparison Programme (ICP), involving comparisons in price statistics, used for assessing the relative economic development of countries. A report by the Secretary-General⁽⁹⁾ indicated that progress achieved in phase V of ICP was slower than expected in 1988. In particular, difficulties were encountered with respect to core comparisons. Concerning the methodology of ICP, a compromise agreement was reached by international organizations on the question of fixity, and an expert group on ICP met (Luxembourg, 6-10 June) to review the entire methodology in the light of the experiences of regionalization and the method of aggregation to be used. Plans and prospects for phase VI of ICP were also elaborated.

Service statistics

Although the increasing importance of the service sector in the world economy, particularly in production and trade, had been widely recognized, statistics on services, in both developed and developing countries, needed significant improvement. That need for better statistics in the field of international trade in services became apparent in the framework of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART THREE, Chapter IV). The Secretary-General, in an October report,⁽¹⁰⁾ informed of the activities of the Statistical Office, which had allocated special priority to the development of statistics in services, both in collecting information on national practices and in elaborating classifications, the conceptual background and various organizational and methodological problems. In particular, the Office circulated a questionnaire to national statistical offices on the collection, availability and use of service statistics. The report also outlined a programme of work at the international level covering the next several years and proposed the creation of an intersecretariat working group on service statistics within the framework of the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities.

The third meeting of the Voorburg Group on service statistics (Wiesbaden, Federal Republic of Germany, 4-6 October 1988) discussed statistics of trade in services and the problems of quantity and price indices of services. The Group agreed to continue its activities in view of the many unresolved problems in services statistics and the limitations on the development of a methodology.

Preliminary summaries of the United Nations/IMF survey on trade in services statistics and on the United Nations survey on quantity and price indices of services were prepared and circulated to national statistical offices.

Trade statistics

Consequent to Standard International Trade Classification (SITC) Revision 3, work was completed on a classification by broad economic categories—defined in terms of SITC Revision 3—and volume I of the commodity indexes for SITC Revision 3 was planned to be completed by the end of 1988.

The Statistical Office continued work on volume II of Methods Used in Compiling the United Nations Price Indexes, for External Trade, covering descriptions of the unit value and quantum indexes of exports of machinery and transport equipment, manufactured goods, fuel, and raw materials and imports of minerals, fuel and related materials and exports and imports of market economies.

A draft description of the methodology for the indexes for exports of manufactured goods was compiled, and work continued on describing the methodologies for other indexes and on improving the index of machinery and transport equipment.

International economic classifications

The Secretary-General submitted in October 1988 a progress report on the harmonization of international economic classifications.⁽¹¹⁾ The report indicated that the final draft of the third revision of the International Standard Industrial Classification (ISIC) of all economic activities,⁽¹²⁾ used both nationally and internationally in classifying data according to economic activity in the fields of population, production, employment, national income and other economic statistics, was completed and circulated. The final draft (provisional) of the Central Product Classification (CPC),⁽¹³⁾ providing a framework for international comparison of statistics dealing with goods, services and assets, was also completed. Both documents were being considered by countries and international organizations to ensure harmonization between national and various international economic classifications. The report also summarized some conceptual issues relating to ISIC and CPC dealing with non-transportable goods and services.

The third United Nations Expert Group Meeting on Harmonization of Economic Classifications (New York, 25-29 April) agreed to recommend the two documents to the Statistical Commission for approval in 1989. The Group also pointed out the need to maintain co-ordination among the classifications, including the procedures to maintain and update ISIC and CPC as well as the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System of the Customs Co-Operation Council. The Group made proposals on how to develop the explanatory notes for the services part of CPC, which were taken up by the Statistical Office. It was expected that draft explanatory notes would be available to the Commission in 1989.

Social and demographic statistics

Social indicators

The Secretary-General submitted in December 1988 a report on current activities in international work on social statistics.⁽¹⁴⁾ The report reviewed recent work on general sources and methods and on indicators in selected subject-matter fields, as reported by international agencies, and described methods and objectives of current international work on social and related statistical classifications. In particular, it described the key roles of the United Nations framework for the integration of social, demographic and related statistics and of the illustrative basic classifications for indicators in the United Nations Handbook on Social Indicators. It outlined the current work of the Statistical Office on the development of statistics and indicators on women and special population groups and on international compilation and dissemination of social statistics. In addition, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) and the Statistical Office, in co-operation with other interested offices and organizations, implemented an active programme of technical co-operation and training in developing countries in social statistics and indicators, especially concerning the situation of women and disabled persons.

In another report,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on work undertaken by the Statistical Office and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women towards the preparation of a technical report on the development of statistical concepts and methods and their relation to the SNA, to assist countries to compile statistics systematically so as to identify and measure women's contribution to the economy.

The International Labour Office also submitted a report⁽¹⁶⁾ on the International Classification of Status in Employment (ICSE). It examined the departures in national practice from the existing international classification, discussed some problems of concept and application, and made proposals for future work on a possible revision of ICSE.

Population and housing census

In an October report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General described the developments which had occurred and the preparations made by the Statistical Office, regional commissions and countries towards carrying out a population and housing census in the 1990s. In an annex to the report, a census calendar was presented indicating dates of national population and/or housing censuses taken or anticipated during the decade 1985-1994.

Supplementary principles and recommendations for population and housing censuses were being finalized for publication, and the International Labour Organisation adopted the revised International Standard Classification of Occupations.

The regional commissions for Asia and the Pacific, for Latin America and the Caribbean, for Africa and for Europe held meetings to review or evaluate national experiences in conducting the 1980 censuses in order to achieve further improvements in the quality and coverage of censuses, and to consider recommendations for the 1990 round of censuses.

Civil registration and vital statistics

A proposal for an International Programme for Accelerating the Improvement of Vital Statistics and Civil Registration Systems, developed by the Statistical Office, the World Health Organization and the International Institute for Vital Registration and Statistics, was prepared and forwarded to several international organizations for comment.

The programme would help to promote, support and encourage developing countries in accelerating the development and improvement of their civil registration and vital statistics systems during the 1990s, so that they would become a component of the socio-demographic data base needed for monitoring population trends and development.

Patterns of consumption

The Secretary-General and the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development reported on the development of indicators on patterns of consumption: qualitative aspects of development.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report summarized the work undertaken on three national case-studies and the responses of Governments to the inquiry by the Secretariat on their experiences and views, including information provided on data sources, dissemination and timeliness of socio-economic indicators on patterns of consumption.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

In a November 1988 report,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted proposals on the long-range future of the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP). The report described the progress made in programme implementation and arrangements for programme co-ordination and management. It reviewed NHSCP training activities and the execution of technical studies. The work programme for the biennium 1989-1990 was also outlined. A draft plan of operations, providing for the extension of NHSCP through 1991 and containing suggestions on possible avenues for development beyond 1991, was presented to the Programme Review Committee.

World Bank household survey initiatives

A World Bank report⁽¹⁹⁾ reviewed its initiatives in the design and implementation of permanent integrated household surveys: the Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS) programme, aimed at providing the means of assessing living standards in developing countries, and the Social Dimensions of Adjustment (SDA) programme, designed to assist in minimizing the impact of macro-economic adjustment measures on sub-Saharan Africa. The report provided the rationale and background for the two initiatives, reviewed and evaluated LSMS surveys and detailed the orientations of the SDA project and its organizational and operational status. The report also described steps taken by the Bank to co-ordinate its activities with those of other international agencies, including NHSCP.

Other statistical activities

Technical co-operation

The Secretary-General summarized the technical co-operation programmes in statistics of organizations of the United Nations system and several multilateral and bilateral organizations outside the system for the period 1985-1988.⁽²⁰⁾ DTC and the regional commissions assisted developing countries to strengthen and extend national services and capabilities for collecting, processing, disseminating and using a broad range of development-related statistics. Projects covered such topics as general economic statistics and national accounts, social and demographic statistics, statistics on women and special population groups and integrated statistical services. The main activities of DTCD in 1988 included work related to the 1990 round of population and housing censuses, the promotion of NHSCP, assisting developing countries least advanced in statistics and promoting the use of microcomputers in statistical work.⁽²¹⁾

In 1988, the total United Nations technical co-operation programme in statistics provided technical support for the formulation and execution of country projects at an estimated cost of $24 million.

Special issues

In a report on the current state of statistics and statistical development in developing countries,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General presented an overview of long-term trends in statistical development and reviewed national experiences in carrying out selected major statistical activities through the relevant regional commissions and specialized agencies. The report concluded that the overall availability of data from developing countries had improved, but, although achievements had been considerable and had contributed to capability-building, they had not been the same for all developing countries. Moreover, the amount of external resources devoted to statistical development had generally formed a minor part of technical co-operation efforts of multilateral and bilateral agencies. Accordingly, the report proposed strategies for accelerating statistical development and for better mobilizing needed human and financial resources.

Programme questions

In an overall review of the statistical activities of the United Nations system, the World Tourism Organization and the Inter-American Statistical Institute for the period 1986 to mid-1988,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General described major achievements, activities cancelled and those significantly modified. The Secretary-General also submitted updated information on the work of the Statistical Office⁽²⁴⁾ and reports on recurrent statistical publications of the United Nations,⁽²⁵⁾ on the recruitment and selection of professional staff for work in national statistical offices and statistical services of the United Nations,⁽²⁶⁾ and on the proposed work programme of the Statistical Office for 1990-1991 and the preliminary proposals for the medium-term plan for 1992-1997.⁽²⁷⁾

Chapter XVIII

Institutional arrangements

In 1988, a Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council completed an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. The Chairman of the Commission reported that it had diagnosed the problems but much ground remained to be covered on the means for effective and practical reform.

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/174 reviewing the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations in the economic and social fields and requesting the Secretary-General to seek the views of all Member States.

The Economic and Social Council, meanwhile, reviewed its structure and functioning. In July, the Council adopted resolution 1988/77, which set forth measures aimed at revitalizing its policy formulation, monitoring, operational activities, co-ordination, working methods and organization of work. The Council also adopted guidelines for the selection of subjects for and the timing of international decades and the procedures for proclaiming them (1988/63).

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) held Joint Meetings in July on the response of the United Nations system to development problems.

Restructuring questions

Report of the Secretary-General. In an April 1988 progress report,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General described action he had taken to implement recommendation 25 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations. Recommendation 25, relating to economic and social matters, was one of 60 recommendations aimed at the reform and renewal of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in 1986.⁽²⁾ The Secretary-General stated that the Secretariat had reviewed its programmes but would await the outcome of the in-depth study being conducted by the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council before making specific recommendations. The Special Commission was established in 1987 to study the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. The Secretary-General said that the Secretariat's programme review had indicated that there was less overlapping of analytical work being done on the world economy than had been suggested, but that there was room for streamlining activities such as the short- to medium-term analysis of the economic situation and prospects. He said that more emphasis would be given to regular monitoring and the integrated study of major economic, social and environmental trends, as well as to substantive and operational activities within the Secretariat in some fields. Consultations were taking place among the entities concerned to streamline their activities and strengthen co-operation. In this context, the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) had identified possibilities for strengthening their co-operation in analytical work on the world economy and in the development of data bases for that purpose. They were also changing their internal structures to give greater focus and coherence to their responses to intergovernmental mandates. A study was also being carried out on the future role and activities of the regional commissions.

In a later report⁽³⁾ to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of recommendation 29 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts. As requested by the Assembly in 1987,⁽⁴⁾ he reviewed his decision to assign to the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services the functions of the Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters relating to the technical secretariat servicing of intergovernmental and related meetings and special conferences. He concluded, after considering the recommendations of the Experts and those of the Assembly on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, that the goal of avoiding duplication and of ensuring effective servicing of intergovernmental meetings and conferences could best be achieved by consolidating the related technical servicing functions in one office, as he had done.

CPC action. CPC considered the report of the Secretary-General and recommended that he keep the matter under review, taking fully into account the outcome of the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields.⁽⁵⁾

Special Commission's study. In accordance with a 1987 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁶⁾ a Special Commission of the Council submitted in June 1988 a report⁽⁷⁾ on the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. The study had been called for in 1986 by the General Assembly,^(*) which approved the recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financing functions. The in-depth study (recommendation 8)⁽⁸⁾ was a priority recommendation.

The Special Commission, which met in New York between 2 March 1987 and 23 May 1988, was attended by the representatives and observers of 104 States, eight specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the European Community and two non-governmental organizations (NGOs)—the International Chamber of Commerce and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Its report covered the work of nine sessions which, among other things, considered the organization of the Commission's work and methodology for the study; reviewed informal working papers prepared by the Secretariat; established an informal working group of the whole for an exchange of views on the functioning of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council; was briefed on consultations held with executive heads of United Nations organizations; approved a programme of work for 1988; reviewed the functioning of individual bodies of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields; and requested that the Chairman prepare a consolidated discussion paper on proposals related to the functioning of those bodies. The paper was issued on 21 April and was the subject of informal consultations. On 29 April, the Commission requested the Chairman to prepare a text on its draft conclusions and recommendations. The Chairman stated that the Commission had diagnosed the problems, but because there was insufficient common ground on various issues, he would have to exercise his judgement in putting together a balanced package for possible implementation.

At the ninth session (2-6, 11 and 23 May), the Commission had before it the Chairman's text. On 11 May, the Chairman informed members of the outcome of informal consultations on the draft conclusions and recommendations, during which sentiments had been expressed that the divergent views on major outstanding issues could not be reconciled. The Chairman said that while this was disappointing, he could not impose an agreement on Commission members.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/112, took note of an oral progress report made on 13 May by the Chairman of the Special Commission on the in-depth study. On 29 July, by decision 1988/182, the Council took note of the report of the Special Commission on the in-depth study and transmitted it to the General Assembly for consideration at its 1988 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/174.

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with all Member States and seek their views on ways and means of achieving a balanced and effective implementation of recommendations 2 and 8 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, taking into consideration all relevant reports, including the report of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, as well as the outcome of the discussions in 1989 on the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council, and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a detailed report in order to enable Member States to consider and take appropriate action with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of the intergovernmental structure and its Secretariat support structures as well as programme delivery in the economic and social fields;

3. Decides to consider, at its forty-fourth session, the report of the Secretary-General called for in paragraph 2 above, and his final report on the implementation of resolution 41/213, under the item entitled "Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations".
