Foreword

THE EVENTS OF 1988 REPRESENTED VIVID EVIDENCE that multilateralism was far more capable of inspiring confidence and achieving results than any of its alternatives. Millions around the world witnessed a gratifying demonstration of the potential of the United Nations and the validity of the hopes they placed in it.

Major strides were made to secure peaceful solutions to long-standing regional questions, including the situations in Afghanistan and the Middle East, the Iran-Iraq war, the question of Cyprus, the independence of Namibia and the prospects for peace in South-East Asia and elsewhere. Those efforts were coupled with the joint expression of the two super-Powers of the time that nuclear war could not be won and must never be fought and the initiation of a constructive dialogue between their Governments to reduce and eventually eliminate the incalculable dangers of modern weapons.

In the economic sphere, the Organization remained engaged in fulfilling its responsibility to humanity to tackle critical humanitarian needs as well as to promote social and economic development on a global scale.

But this volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations is more than a random collection of dry facts of these pressing human concerns-it is one more chapter in a vital and dynamic record of the Organization. And it is a tribute to the work of my distinguished predecessor, Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar. Readers of all persuasions should find something captivating in the crowded happenings and complex issues chronicled in these pages.

HOW TO OBTAIN VOLUMES OF THE YEARBOOK	1091

About the 1988 edition of the Yearbook

The 1988 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS marks the beginning of the process to eliminate the remaining backlog editions (1988, 1989 and 1990). Its scope, content and breadth of coverage have been restructured and redefined to enhance its focus on the main issues and activities during 1988. As in previous volumes, this volume has been designed to serve as the most comprehensive reference tool for use by the research community and those interested in the activities of the United Nations and its related organizations. The Department of Public Information of the United Nations is committed to clear the backlog and maintain the publication of the current volumes of the Yearbook on a timely annual schedule.

Structure and scope of articles

The book is subject-oriented, divided into seven major parts: political and security questions, regional questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations.

The first six parts of the Yearbook are devoted to summarizing pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications. Part Seven briefly describes the activities of each specialized agency, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, based on information prepared by them.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1988 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text. The texts of resolutions and decisions of a purely procedural nature are not reproduced, but are summarized and their numbers highlighted in bold type.

Major reports. Most 1988 reports of the Secretary-General, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly with their document symbols appearing in the REFERENCES.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given, wherever available, on contributions and expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund and cover the 1988 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topic. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

As in previous volumes, information in the 1988 edition may be located in a number of ways: by the table of contents, which highlights the broad subjects and subheadings; by the SUBJECT INDEX, which may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each topic; and by the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS, which provides a numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1988 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text. The Yearbook also contains five appendices. APPENDIX I comprises a list of Member States with dates of their admission to the United Nations; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations, including the members, officers and date and place of session; of each body; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1988; and APPENDIX V gives the location and addresses of the United Nations Information Centres and Services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Parts One to Six of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1988 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/43/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-third session, beginning with A/43/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1988/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1988 sessions, beginning with E/1988/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers; refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund. Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1988/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1983, with 101 (decision 1988/101).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. No resolutions were adopted by the Council at its fifty-fifth session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/- Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

CD/- Conference on Disarmament

CERD/- Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

DC/- Disarmament Commission

DP/- United Nations Development Programme

HS/- Commission on Human Settlements

ITC/- International Trade Centre

LOS/PCN/- Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

TD/- United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

UNEP/- United Nations Environment Programme

UNITAR/- United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/- Economic Commission for Africa

E/ECE/- Economic Commission for Europe

E/ESCAP/- Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

E/ESCWA/- Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

LC/G.- Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONE." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.88.V.4; E/F/R.88.II.E.8; E.88.IX.3.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 14 September 1988. The Assembly took note of it on 17 October (decision 43/404.)

I

Last year, in my report on the work of the Organization, I said that the sails of the small boat in which all the people of the Earth were gathered seemed to have caught a light but favourable wind. At the time, with the clouds of controversy still dark, a less cautious metaphor would have appeared unwarranted. A succession of developments has, however, justified my reasoned hope. With careful and patient navigation, the vessel has come within sight of large sections of the shore.

The developments of the past months have not been fortuitous. They are the result of diplomatic activity sustained over the years by the United Nations and intensified recently. On matters of international peace and security, the principal organs of the United Nations have increasingly functioned in the manner envisaged in the Charter. The working relationship of the Security Council and the Secretary-General has rarely if ever been closer. I am thankful for this as also for the recent improvement in international relations at the global level that has opened new possibilities for successful action by the world body. Multilateralism has proved itself far more capable of inspiring confidence and achieving results than any of its alternatives. Millions around the world have had a gratifying demonstration of the potential of the Organization and the validity of the hopes they place in it.

The international situation is still, of course, marked by points of strain and danger, visible or lurking. Complacency about the resolution of complex problems that still face us is impermissible. However, the possibilities of bringing peace to troubled regions through the efforts of the United Nations have plainly come into view.

II

The conclusion of the Geneva Accords in April represented a major stride in the effort to secure a peaceful solution of the situation relating to Afghanistan and provides a basis for the exercise by all Afghans of their right to self-determination. It is the first instance of the world's two most powerful States becoming co-guarantors of an agreement negotiated under the auspices of the Secretary-General. The full implementation of the Accords in good faith by all the signatories will significantly serve the goal of peace in the region and the world. Immediately after the Accords came into effect, the United Nations Good Offices Mission for Afghanistan and Pakistan (UNGOMAP) began monitoring their implementation, including the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan. Moreover, within weeks thereafter, the United Nations initiated a humanitarian and economic assistance programme, with a Co-ordinator specially appointed by me, to help the people of Afghanistan in meeting their serious economic and humanitarian needs at this critical moment in their history.

On 20 August, a cease-fire was secured in the eight-year-long Iran-Iraq war in the context of the full implementation of Security Council resolution 598(1987). A United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNHMOG) was deployed as at the time and date of the cease-fire. Simultaneously, invitations were extended to the two Governments to send their representatives for direct talks at a high level under my auspices. The talks started on schedule on 25 August. The entire process has exemplified the efficacy of a mandate entrusted to the Secretary-General when actively supported by the Security Council and backed by the complementary efforts of other Member States. For success in the complex task of implementing Security Council resolution 598(1987), it is essential that both Iran and Iraq continue to act on the conviction that genuine peace will provide to each of them opportunities for reconstruction and progress that a fragile situation cannot. On my part, I will do my utmost to help achieve the just and lasting solution envisaged by the Security Council.

There has been an improvement in prospects for the independence of Namibia. Recent diplomatic activity has made a significant contribution to the peace process in southern Africa, which should facilitate a settlement in Namibia without further delay. The date of 1 November 1988 has been recommended for beginning the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978). In the light of these developments, the Secretariat has undertaken a review of its contingency plans in order to hold itself in readiness for the timely emplacement of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia. It is my hope that current efforts will finally succeed in bringing independence to the people of Namibia.

For many years, the question of Cyprus has involved the continuous exercise of the good offices of the Secretary-General on the basis of a mandate entrusted to him by the Security Council. My latest initiative has evoked greater receptivity from both sides. At the discussion the leaders of the two sides had in my presence on 24 August, they expressed their willingness to meet without any preconditions and to attempt to achieve by 1 June 1989 a negotiated settlement of all aspects of the Cyprus problem. Confirming their desire to cooperate with me in my mission, they agreed to start talks on 15 September and to review with me the progress achieved at the initial stage.

During the past year, the prospects for peace in South-East Asia have also improved, through the initiation of a dialogue between the Kampuchean parties and other concerned countries. This is an encouraging trend as it confirms the interest on all sides in achieving a political solution to the problem. I sincerely hope that concrete progress will soon be achieved on the main substantive issues. I have presented to the parties a number of specific ideas intended to facilitate the elaboration of a framework for a comprehensive political settlement. I remain at their disposal to help bring this process to fruition.

After long effort, an appropriate climate has been established for a just and durable solution of the problem of Western Sahara. Along with the head of the Organization of African Unity, I submitted a peace plan to which the parties concerned conveyed their acceptance with some remarks and comments on 30 August. This will entail a significant operation in the area for the United Nations, with both civilian and military components. I hope that, with the necessary goodwill on all sides, we will soon witness a final settlement of the problem, which will undoubtedly help consolidate the present favourable trend in the region.

All these problems, in their different contexts, have been moved towards solutions in consonance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, with diplomatic activity at multilateral and other levels proceeding in convergent directions. For itself, the United Nations does not seek, and was never meant to seek, any kind of diplomatic autarky; what it requires is that diplomacy among Governments, especially those which are concerned with a particular issue, situation or region, should help realize the aims that it has defined. With the United Nations indicating the principles and the direction for efforts to settle a dispute, all relevant points of diplomatic contact and influence in the network of multilateral relationships can be coherently drawn upon to achieve the objectives of peace. Recently, we have had encouraging evidence of the practicality of this process.

There are other regional problems that continue to cause international concern. The situation in the Middle East, a critically important region of the globe, has repercussions on relationships in a far wider sphere. The members of the Security Council have recently expressed their grave concern over the continued deterioration of the situation in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. The uprising since December 1987 has vividly demonstrated the dangers of stalemate resulting from inability to agree on a negotiating process. Even the urgently required measures to enhance the safety and protection of the Palestinian people of the territories, through the application of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, will neither remove the causes of the events that prompted Security Council resolution 605(1987) nor bring peace to the region. As the underlying problems can only be resolved through a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), and taking fully into account the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination, what is needed is an urgent effort by the international community, led by the Security Council, to promote an effective negotiating process towards a solution that will secure the interests of both the Israeli and the Palestinian peoples and enable them to live in peace with each other. The next few months may provide opportunities to accelerate this endeavour.

The situation in Central America is the result of convulsions within societies originating in underdevelopment and unjust socio-economic structures. The signing of the Guatemala Procedure in August 1987 signalled the determination of the five Central American Presidents to find solutions to the region's problems free from outside interference and the pressure of geopolitical conflicts. I agreed to participate in the impartial international verification of the process of pacification. Furthermore, at the request of the General Assembly, I formulated a special plan for economic cooperation for Central America, which was considered by the Assembly in May. However, a year after the signing of the Guatemala Procedure, the momentum for peace appears to be faltering and the considerable progress made to date seems to be seriously threatened. The principal merit of the Agreement lay in its requirement for simultaneous progress on two broad fronts: democratization and the cessation of armed hostilities. Its success depends on full compliance and a concerted effort by the signatories as well as the co-operation of all the Governments and parties involved.

The situation in Korea is a legacy of the Second World War and its aftermath. Sustained dialogue between North and South Korea could lead to real progress towards resolving the outstanding issues. It is necessary for all those who are in a position to do so to help foster an atmosphere conducive to an amicable solution of differences between the two sides. Both Governments are aware of my readiness to assist them whenever and in whatever manner they desire.

The region of southern Africa is suffering from a conflict with three dimensions: the question of Namibia, the acts of destabilization against the neighbouring States of South Africa and the system of apartheid in South Africa itself. I have already referred to the progress made on the question of Namibia. Acts of destabilization have threatened peace in the whole region. Developments in, or relating to, the continuance of a situation of racial discrimination, which is so repugnant to the spirit of our age, lend further force to the repeated and hitherto unheeded urgings of the international community that apartheid be dismantled. These urgings provide a renewed opportunity to the Government of South Africa to signal an acceptance of what is just as well as inevitable—the end of apartheid. I would appeal to that Government to respond to them in that spirit. Postponing or evading this change of course is fraught with dangers which all the people of the country and its neighbours would certainly wish to avoid.

III

The present juncture of efforts and potentialities opens fresh perspectives for our common political endeavour. This seems to have prompted the observation increasingly heard in recent months that we may be entering a new phase of world affairs. I take the observation as neither a politician's promise nor a scientist's conclusion. A vast range of actions and policies is required to prove it right. If opportunities for breakthroughs on a variety of issues are to be seized, it seems to be important that we keep in mind the implications of our experience, whether of success or of stalemate, in the efforts to resolve the major political questions on our agenda. In this report, I shall deal with these implications and the emerging outlook for the United Nations. As the resurgence in public interest in the Organization has been rather sudden, it is appropriate to recall the long background of efforts, accomplishments and set-backs behind our current experience.

We are all aware of the reasons why, during the first four decades of its existence, the United Nations has been unable to put in place the reliable system of collective security that its Charter envisaged. This system was based on the assumption that the grand alliance of the victors of the Second World War would continue and develop into their joint custodianship of world peace. Furthermore, in the words of one of the principal architects of the world organization, the late President Roosevelt, the system implied "the end of the system of unilateral actions, exclusive alliances and spheres of influence and balances of power and all the other expedients which have been tried for centuries and have always failed". The chastening experience of the most extensive war fought on this planet was expected to transform the older patterns of power relations.

However, developments during the early years of the Organization went contrary to expectations. The assumed radical change was hindered by a variety of factors as far as relationships at the highest plane of global power were concerned. A whole set of circumstances created a continuing climate of mutual suspicion and fear. In such a climate, the great Powers often looked at the United Nations from different angles, with the result that issues that could have been resolved through their joint endeavour became instead added subjects of controversy between them. An almost insuperable obstacle was thus placed in the way of the United Nations to give world peace a durable foundation.

In the difficult phase that naturally ensued—and that has lasted for decades—many who believed in the essentiality of the United Nations were thrown on the defensive. They were driven to enumerate the political achievements of the United Nations in specific cases, but these appeared slim in comparison with the great unresolved issues of our time. I believe that the accomplishments of the world Organization, at any stage of its career, were far larger than what appeared from the case usually made in its defence. Along with the undeniable central fact that the United Nations was often brought to an impasse, in the field of maintaining international peace and security, by the inability of the permanent members of the Security Council to develop a common approach, there was also the fact, equally central, that the United Nations did not allow this factor to block its endeavours; with ingenuity and realism, it found other ways of at least defusing conflicts. If, in one vital respect, it fell short of the Charter, in other respects it kept pace with, and often served as a catalyst of, the process of rapid and peaceful change.

The United Nations played a decisive role in the process of decolonization, which has changed the political complexion of the globe and given vast populations control over their destiny. It gave authoritative definition to human rights and devised monitoring and other mechanisms for encouraging greater respect for them. It codified international law. In partnership with its specialized agencies, it established guidelines to deal with new problems and emerging concerns ranging from the environment, population, the law of the sea, the safeguarding of the rights of the hitherto disadvantaged segments of society like women, children, the aging and the handicapped to terrorism, drug abuse and the incidence of AIDS. It has responded to situations of disaster and dire human need; it has provided protection to refugees. It has had notable successes in the campaign for conquest of avoidable disease in the poorer parts of the world; it has taken measures towards food security and child survival. It has raised consciousness of global economic imperatives; through its development programmes and the specialized agencies, it has represented a vital source of economic and technical assistance to developing countries.

In the political field, even when disabled by differences among the permanent members of the Security Council, the United Nations has displayed a capacity for innovation and played a role that on no reckoning can be considered peripheral. It has repeatedly acted to limit and control armed conflicts; without the peace-keeping operations launched by it, the theatres of conflict would have undoubtedly represented far greater danger to the wider peace. On major international disputes, it has suggested terms of just settlement. The formulation of such terms is the first requirement for bringing a dispute within a manageable scope and weeding out its implacable elements: this requirement the United Nations has repeatedly sought to fulfil. Above all, the Organization has maintained emphasis on the great objectives of arms limitation and disarmament, the self-determination of peoples and the promotion of human rights, which are essential for the strengthening of universal peace.

These achievements have been made against the backdrop of the most massive transition in the history of the human race. The emergence of new States has taken place at the same time that there has been a proliferation of global concerns, stemming partly from the emerging problems I mentioned above, partly from the impact of advancing technologies and partly from a new mass consciousness of rights leading to the non-acceptance of old inequities within or between societies. The United Nations has not only given shape and expression to the sense of world community but established a basis for nations to develop a concerted response to their common problems.

IV

Our experience has thus shown that co-operative management of a variety of global problems, reflecting a community of interest among Member States, is an entirely workable idea. We have now come to, or are nearing, a stage where the extension of this approach to resolving some of the major political issues on our agenda is within our reach.

Changes in perceptions and attitudes, of which we have had pronounced signs since the last session of the General Assembly, suggest that we may be witnessing a transition, however slow or occasionally uncertain, towards a new pattern of relationships at the global level. The transition has the logic of necessity behind it. It is certainly justified by the insupportable cost and the incalculable dangers of a self-perpetuating arms race. It could derive support from the realization that security cannot be viewed in military terms alone nor does the application of military power resolve situations in traditionally expected ways. It is, or can be, propelled by the need for greater attention to the problems of economic modernization or to the social problems that economic growth has left untouched. It is evidenced by trends towards horizontal co-operation between States adhering to different social systems without prejudice to their political alignments. It would seem to respond to the multi-polarity of the world's economic power. All these factors, combined with the technological revolution and the sense of global interdependence, seem to call for radical adjustments of outlook on the part of the world's leadership. There is, of course, no guarantee against temporary reverses or set-backs in the process, nor can ambivalence in the relationships of power blocs be excluded. However, the direction appears to be better set and helped by weightier factors now than at any time in recent years. How this transition will affect the United Nations and how it has been affected by the United Nations are questions of practical import that merit the most serious reflection on our part.

The world community has rightly acclaimed the statesmanship displayed by the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in jointly expressing their shared perception that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought, in initiating a constructive dialogue between their Governments and in concluding the Treaty on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, in December 1987. I believe that the international community, articulating its political consciousness through the United Nations, is more than a witness to agreements that narrow the division between the world's most powerful States. It is deeply affected by, and concerned with, the issues at stake. The sustained emphasis by the United Nations on the goals of arms limitation and disarmament, especially in the nuclear field, and the declared non-alignment of the majority of its Member States, with its implied negation of the concept of expanding spheres of rival influence, have helped to provide the political and mental environment for the ongoing process of mutual accommodation between the great Powers. Not only the mathematics of the arms equation and its economic cost but also the attitudes of the world beyond have been factors behind this process.

There is a school of thought that holds that the great Powers do not need the world organization except as a symbol of the world community and that its meetings merely provide a convenient opportunity for periodic bilateral exchanges. The view seems to derive support from the dissatisfaction with the working of the United Nations expressed by one or another of these Powers at different times. However, it fails to recognize their interest in maintaining their positions of respect and influence in a changing world situation. There can hardly be a better place than the United Nations for any Power, large or small, to enhance its influence in the best sense of the term. The United Nations offers every country a forum where, with its resources of knowledge and experience, it can take a lead in framing the universal agenda, draw attention to new concerns and new ways of solving problems and contribute to the process of peaceful change. For a country, large or small, to turn its back, to whatever extent, on the United Nations would be to surrender a good part of its actual or potential influence. To follow a two-track policy—at one level, to owe allegiance to the Charter, and, at the other, to seek to marginalize the United Nations—would be to act contrary to the goal of harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of their common ends.

Moreover, while, in the normal course, the great Powers, like others, resolve or reduce their differences through negotiations outside the United Nations, they need the United Nations to come to grips with issues that concern other nations and that, in one way or another, impinge on their own relationships as well. In this respect, the great Powers need to show a sensitivity to the expressed wishes of the majority of Member States. I have not the slightest doubt that these wishes are based on genuine concerns and not on any primordial opposition, far less hostility, to the policies of one or another major Power. All this argues for greater, not less, support of the United Nations, for engagement and not grudging participation in its work.

I welcome the efforts being made to control rhetorical inflation in the debates of the General Assembly, to promote civility in dialogue and indeed to develop, even if gradually, a balance between debate and negotiation, the parliamentary and the diplomatic approaches, which are equally part and parcel of the United Nations. Continuing public debate is meant to exert pressure towards negotiations; when it can no longer do so, it defeats the aims of its own sponsors. Resolutions are meant to keep alive the goals to be achieved and to ensure that these goals are not lost sight of in a multitude of other concerns. In that perspective, they can become an indispensable factor for the successful outcome of negotiations and can be perceived as resolutions in the full sense of the term, not as incantations or mere formulations of theory. But they become ineffective when they look like stock resolutions. There needs to be an adjustment of political attitudes on all sides to the double requirement of making resolutions more purposeful and of paying respect to them as genuine expressions or reminders of widely shared concerns.

VI

A primary fact of the present world situation is that, while the power to destroy the Earth is concentrated in a few hands, the power to make and strengthen peace is widely dispersed.

This makes the engagement of the United Nations—the only instrumentality that can ensure the full representation of all concerned parties and relevant viewpoints—central to the great task of resolving regional conflicts. The Organization's long experience of handling these conflicts has certain implications that, I feel, need to be taken into account for sound and workable policies in future.

Some of these implications flow so directly from the Charter that to restate them can look like emphasizing the obvious. Yet, at the hopeful stage we have reached now, they have gained fresh pertinence from a practical point of view. The Charter obligation of settling international disputes by peaceful means and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, for instance, would imply that these disputes should be kept under constant review by the Security Council. This, in turn, would preclude an attitude of passivity towards a conflict when it is in a phase of relative quiescence. It would certainly not justify tacit acceptance of an inherently brittle status quo in the context of any conflict.

Another implication of our current and recent experience is that when an armed conflict erupts and as long as it persists the utmost care needs to be taken by other Powers, global or regional, not to add to its size or intensity. This does not exclude sympathy with the side perceived to be the victim. As I said in my annual report five years ago, regional conflicts have been viewed as wars by proxy among more powerful nations. The improved bilateral relations between the major Powers could arrest this dangerous trend. But not only they are involved. When the tensions or differences between the major or middle-sized Powers are grafted onto a conflict that could otherwise be confined to those immediately involved, the conflict is not only widened: it becomes intractable as one or the other party feels encouraged in its obduracy and neither feels any incentive to explore the possibilities of compromise. Moreover, the Charter obligation of activating or supporting the United Nations in resolving a conflict is inconsistent with what may be called permissive neutrality.

The whole Charter system of collective security rests on the permanent members of the Security Council applying a sense of common purpose to addressing a conflict as soon as it erupts. As long as they view regional problems in the framework of their own rivalries, solutions will be blocked. Once this dark shadow is removed from the diplomatic landscape these problems can be addressed in the right perspective. This would result in a more judicious and principled use of the veto. A principle underlying the Charter is that membership of the Security Council, both permanent and non-permanent, is to be regarded as service to the cause of peace rather than as a function of unilateral positions or interests. With the adoption of resolution 598(1987) by the Security Council, there has been a reassuring and unanimous interest in restoring the Council's peace-making capacity. I believe that fresh avenues have been opened for a consideration again of some of the ideas I submitted in my annual reports in 1982 and 1983 about making the Security Council more effective.

The effectiveness of the Security Council, however, requires that once it has made a determination on a dispute all Member States give it full support in the sense not only of accepting an agreed text but of providing strong diplomatic backing for it. The Charter certainly calls for the application of the collective influence of Member States to lending irresistible weight to a just solution. Furthermore, in carrying out its duties under the responsibility of maintaining international peace and security, the Security Council acts on behalf of all Member States.

Peace-keeping operations have proved to be an inescapable necessity in the context of many conflicts. Their success, however, depends not only on the consent of the parties but also on the consistent support of the Security Council, on a clear and practicable mandate, on the readiness of Member States to volunteer troops and on adequate financial arrangements. These considerations become more important in view of the evolving world situation, which could well assign a broader role to the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations. They might possibly have to be extended to the maritime environment and adapted to new types of situations that have international implications. I believe that attention should be paid to the need for the United Nations to be better prepared for launching peace-keeping operations, sometimes at short notice. In the broad context of these operations, it is gratifying that all permanent members of the Security Council are now in favour of the peace-keeping aspect of the Organization's work. The valour, heroism and sacrifice of the soldiers of peace who man these operations evoke the most heartfelt tribute from all of us.

Peace-keeping, of course, can only be a palliative if it is not made to serve as a prelude to, or to accompany, negotiations towards a comprehensive settlement. A situation of stalemate or worse about the resolution of the dispute underlying a conflict can cause frustration and despair, which, in the long run, may jeopardize the usefulness of the peace-keeping operation itself, regardless of how well it has managed to moderate or control the conflict.

Moreover, I feel that better possibilities for peacemaking can be realized by the employment of a more forthright kind of diplomacy. Let us not forget that peace is secured by agreements, not by the illusion of agreements. When negotiations are envisaged, the adoption of a resolution by the Security Council lays the ground for—but does not necessarily conclude—the diplomatic process required. Negotiations on the basis of the resolution are rendered more difficult if different interpretations are put on its provisions by its framers. The adoption of an agreed text on a controversial issue has certainly the merit of defining the terms of its settlement; in this sense, a vague definition (providing a certain latitude for negotiations) is preferable to no definition at all. However, what is required for solutions to emerge is not merely the endorsement of an agreed text by the members of the Council but also their shared understanding of that text and co-ordinated policy on its basis. A cohesive approach in the spirit of the Charter, regardless of differences of perception, interest or ideology, is indispensable for resolving conflicts.

Strengthening the prospects of peace can entail concrete operations for the United Nations in addition to those of peace-keeping. As peace initiatives addressed to specific situations make headway, the tasks, essential from both the political and the humanitarian points of view, of providing relief to the affected populations and arranging the rehabilitation of those displaced fall primarily on the United Nations. The special programme of humanitarian and economic assistance for Afghanistan is a particularly significant example as is the increased co-operation programme in support of efforts for peace in Central America. In addition, emergency relief efforts organized, for instance, for Ethiopia, Lebanon and Mozambique demonstrate the continuing engagement of the United Nations in the alleviation of the massive suffering caused by conflicts or other adverse circumstances. The work in the past years of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and others in meeting the basic needs of destitute refugees and displaced or suffering populations has established a sound basis for this kind of effort. I am grateful for the generous response of Governments to the calls made for material support.

VIII

Resolving conflicts is a prime responsibility of the United Nations, but avoiding them is equally necessary for the maintenance of peace.

The continents of Asia, Africa and Latin America have been the scene of a large number of armed conflicts during the existence of the United Nations. It is one of the most disquieting features of our age that inter-State conflicts should occur when Governments could easily avail themselves of the machinery of the United Nations or of other multilateral organizations to help resolve their disputes. The number of those killed in hostilities between Iran and Iraq provides a massive—and, I hope, conclusive—testimony to the human cost of war.

Fortunately, there are also glimmerings of hope in diverse areas of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Some signs of developing common regional perspectives are visible at several points of the globe. Moreover, encouraging examples have been set of States resorting to judicial settlement of their disputes. I would appeal to Governments to make it a practice, as far as possible, to refer justiciable cases to the International Court of Justice. A tradition will thus be established of having recourse to law, which can avert many possible conflicts, with their incalculable waste. Moreover, the hopes we derive from a change of perception and attitude at the global level will be considerably fortified if similar changes dispel fears and suspicions at the regional level.

In the late twentieth century, violent civil strife and social turmoil are not confined to any one region of the globe. In its current state of flux, human society contains smouldering elements, which often flare in explosive violence. The internationalization of crime, with traffic in drugs and terrorism its most appalling signs, can subvert friendly relations among nations unless Member States strengthen their multilateral co-operation in saving the present and future generations from a new kind of scourge. The United Nations has taken an unequivocal stand on ways and means of fighting these new dangers to human society. These means can be used only if Member States maintain and strengthen a sense of social solidarity.

Global society has been lately much afflicted by disregard for international law. It is obvious that international confidence would rest on quicksand if the domestic necessities felt by Governments were allowed to override the international obligations they have solemnly undertaken. Without international law respected by all States there can be no stable framework for multilateral co-operation in our highly complex world of sovereign States and conflicting interests. It sounds axiomatic yet it needs to be stressed that States or other international persons are bound by treaties that have been properly concluded and that have entered into force. The principle that treaties must be complied with and carried out in good faith, commonly expressed in the maxim pacta sunt servanda, is basic to the Charter. Respect for international agreements is not only one of the fundamental principles of international law; it is the foundation of the organized international community. If this principle were abandoned, the whole superstructure of contemporary international law and organization, including the functioning of the United Nations, the effectiveness of the decisions of its competent organs and resort to international arbitration or judicial settlement of justiciable disputes, would collapse. It is in the equal interest of all States, large or small, to work towards a world where nations will operate within a complete, coherent and viable system of law. Any movement away from this goal holds equal danger for all.

IX

Disarmament and the regulation of armaments, with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, to use the language of the Charter, will remain a decisive test of the improvement of international relations and the strengthening of peace. The Charter envisaged a system for regulating armaments when the arms race had nowhere reached its present scale and when it did not threaten to be, as it is now, both a cause and an effect of tensions between States at the regional as well as the global levels.

Over the years, considerable work has been done in formulating the principles that should govern disarmament and defining the issues involved in it. However, the translation of these principles into actual plans has remained an elusive goal. In a global climate of distrust, at times exaggerated, the arms race acquired an air of inevitability and discussions about halting and reversing it appeared futile. However, the refreshing change signified by the signing of the Treaty on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles by the USSR and the United States as well as the prospect of a reduction in strategic nuclear weapons seemed to furnish a propitious background to the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, which was held from 31 May to 25 June this year. The impressive number of national leaders that attended the session was an indication of the level of concern—and hope—felt all over the world on this issue. The proceedings had a largely non-polemical tone and the bulk of the text proposed for adoption was generally agreed upon.

It was no doubt disappointing that these favourable circumstances did not lead to the adoption of a concluding document with consensus on its entirety. At least two of the questions that blocked this adoption related to controversial issues regarding situations in the Middle East and southern Africa. This showed how regional concerns cast a shadow over the consideration of issues of global war and peace. Nevertheless, the emergence of a better-focused outlook on disarmament was confirmed by a shared acceptance of some important propositions, which provide a basis for productive discussions and action in the General Assembly:

Disarmament is not the exclusive responsibility of the two most powerful States, but a joint undertaking of all States;

While nuclear disarmament must continue to be the primary concern, conventional disarmament has acquired a new importance and urgency;

The qualitative aspect of the arms race needs to be addressed along with its quantitative aspect;

National security needs to be viewed in the broader context of global issues and international concerns;

The goals of disarmament and arms limitation need to be pursued in conjunction with efforts to resolve conflicts, build confidence and promote economic and social development;

The existing machinery for disarmament can and should be utilized better.

Other promising elements in the proceedings of the special session were the common standpoints on the need to conclude a chemical weapons convention at the earliest, to consider the phenomenon of arms transfers, with their impact on situations of actual or potential conflict, to mobilize modern technology in the cause of disarmament and to encourage States with major space capabilities to contribute actively to the objective of the exclusively peaceful use of outer space. It was also agreed that the potentially important role of the United Nations in the verification of multilateral disarmament and arms control agreements needed to be studied in depth.

I believe that, the absence of an agreed final text at the recent special session notwithstanding, all these elements can serve to lend further breadth and substance and a pragmatic tone to the international agenda for disarmament. Immediate attention needs to be directed to the negotiation of those measures in which agreement is possible in the foreseeable future. These include a further reduction of nuclear weapons of the two greatest military Powers and the conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling, acquisition, transfer and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction. The latter has become a compelling need in view of the shocking evidence, which has been documented in the case of the Iran-Iraq war, of the use of chemical weapons. The vast growth in the arsenals of conventional weapons, particularly in the regional context, intertwined as it is with arms transfers, also requires urgent consideration.

The Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, designed to serve as a barrier against the acquisition of nuclear weapons, is the multilateral agreement in the field of arms limitation which has been signed by the largest number of States. Nevertheless, there is a growing concern that intensified efforts are needed to remove the very real danger of the proliferation of these weapons, both vertical and horizontal, which exists today. An important step towards mitigating this danger would be universal adherence to the Treaty. The Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty to be held in 1990 will furnish an opportunity to find new ways and means to strengthen the non-proliferation régime. The success of this Conference would provide a strong impetus to efforts aimed at achieving a complete cessation of nuclear-weapons tests and halting the continuous refinement and spread of these weapons.

Agreements or mechanisms with limited participation, fundamentally important though they are, cannot by themselves transform the political environment caused by the present arms situation or secure the commitment of all required for disarmament measures. Nor can the verification of multilateral arms limitation and disarmament agreements and the relationship between disarmament and development be dealt with successfully except in the multilateral framework. To a great extent, a durable improvement in international relations depends on the success of the United Nations in discharging its mandate in this field.

X

The fortieth anniversary of the proclamation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights comes at a time when the evolving world situation lends fresh point and urgency to the notions of human dignity and larger freedom expressed in the Charter.

A most deplorable feature of the present international scene is the frequency and magnitude of violations of fundamental human rights in different countries and regions. Summary arrests and executions, disappearances of individuals, the systematic practice of torture and killings of unarmed demonstrators continue to impose a heavy burden on the world's conscience. There have been reports of the forced exodus and even massacres of large groups of human beings. Timely demonstration of serious concern by Member States is essential if such appalling situations are to be checked now and prevented in future.

The Organization's work in the field of human rights, beginning with the Declaration, joined later by the two International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to form the International Bill of Human Rights, has set universally accepted standards for the observance of human rights. The work continues as we approach, for example, the adoption of conventions protecting the rights of two especially vulnerable groups: children and migrant workers. A basis has been laid for constructive dialogue between Governments and the relevant expert committees. This year witnessed the first session of the newest such body, the Committee against Torture. Yet the struggle remains to give living reality to the provisions that have been made for promoting respect for human rights. Unless a consciousness of these rights becomes a vital element in the political ethos of a society, they are likely to be denied or truncated.

The key elements are knowledge by the individual citizens of their basic human rights and how to protect them and the existence of adequate national laws, procedures and practice for safeguarding them. For the United Nations, therefore, the twin goals guiding activities in this field, this year and in the years to come, will be the widest dissemination of information on human rights and the provision of advisory services and technical assistance for their protection. The mechanisms patiently developed for monitoring violations of human rights and drawing the attention of concerned Governments to them, often confidentially by the Secretary-General, and the functioning of the United Nations organs as focal points for the expression of their concerns by Governments and non-governmental organizations are proving to be invaluable in the great campaign of universalizing the enjoyment of human rights.

The existing machinery needs to be continually strengthened. Universal ratification and faithful implementation of human rights instruments are of the utmost importance. It is in all these diverse ways that the world community can develop methods to confront and remedy denials of human rights. A strong human rights programme can make our task in other areas significantly easier.

XI

In the economic sphere, the international community needs to act urgently in three areas: debt, trade and commodities, and human resources development.

For many developing countries, the crushing burden of external debt is crippling the development effort. Some progress has been made in dealing with debt problems of the poorest countries, especially those in Africa. I am happy to note the contribution to that end made by the report of the Advisory Group on Financial Flows for Africa, which I constituted last year. But the problems of the middle-income countries are no less pressing. The co-responsibility of debtor and creditor countries for the debt crisis has been increasingly recognized as has the mutual interest in breaking the current deadlock. There is a need promptly to fulfil the commitments made as well as to intensify the search for innovative solutions. Pursuant to a resolution of the General Assembly at the forty-second session, I have personally met with a group of eminent personalities to explore ways and means of finding durable, equitable and mutually agreed solutions to the debt problems of developing countries. I shall make a report to the Assembly separately on this subject.

Debt relief is only one aspect of the problem. Complementary action is needed in increasing financial flows, in particular concessional flows, to support development efforts. An improved international environment is also a prerequisite to restoring and accelerating the pace of economic development. Central to this is progress towards the resumption of more vigorous and healthy growth in international trade. It is imperative that Governments make every effort to achieve concrete results by the time of the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations to be held in Montreal in December. I have also stressed on many occasions the urgency of taking a fresh look at the commodities problem, to see what more can be done in a practical way to alleviate the plight of commodity-dependent countries.

Ultimately, development means improving the human condition. I am gratified by the efforts made by the United Nations and the specialized agencies to draw attention to the importance of human resources development and to spur action to alleviate critical poverty. I hope that these initiatives will gather further momentum in all of the affected parts of the developing world.

The United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development gives me the special responsibility of monitoring developments in Africa. We are currently engaged in a review of progress made so far under the Programme of Action. Despite earnest efforts to carry out adjustments in their national economic policies, most African countries have found little reprieve from the harsh impact of climatic conditions and an unfavourable external economic environment. It seems to me that, while a promising start has been made, a faster implementation of the commitments made by the developed countries is needed to avert a serious set-back to the overall process.

The international community responds generously to emergency requirements and to calls for immediate alleviation of dire needs. Unfortunately, international assistance programmes do not attract the same measure of support when long-term development is at stake. As is demonstrated in Africa, such programmes are necessary if the affected groups are to resume productive lives. Failing this, millions continue to languish in poverty, depending on external assistance for their survival. Remedial action needs to be taken so that they can again become self-reliant and contribute to national development.

Considering the interrelatedness of issues and the interdependence of national economies and bearing in mind the dramatic changes that have occurred in the world economy during the past 40 years, it seems to be imperative that the United Nations system strive to achieve greater harmony and coherence in our collective response to the challenges facing us today and those that lie ahead. However, even as the crucial role of the Organization in the political sphere is being widely supported, the question of how best to utilize its capacity to find integrated solutions to economic and social issues in all their aspects still remains subject to debate.

In my report last year, I had made some suggestions on how to strengthen the Economic and Social Council for fulfilling its responsibilities under the Charter. The Special Commission, established by the Council, has carried out a thorough and useful review of the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations in the economic and social sectors. It was unfortunate that the Commission could not agree on a set of recommendations about the many activities in the economic and social fields which it discussed. Nevertheless, its discussions reveal substantial areas of agreement on important general principles, which could provide a basis for future action.

I welcome the Council's resolution on revitalization which, when implemented, can greatly enhance its ability to give policy guidelines as well as to monitor and co-ordinate the economic and social activities of the United Nations system. The Council's resolution and the report of the Special Commission will be extremely helpful for further deliberations in the context of the ongoing reform process. I should like to touch upon two elements relevant to this process.

First, the Council's effectiveness depends upon its ability to provide authoritative guidance towards a clear definition of priorities. I continue to believe that this ability will be strengthened if the Council meets at a sufficiently high political level, preferably ministerial, to consider issues of major importance for the international community. Such meetings would enhance the Council's status, credibility and effectiveness.

Second, and closely related to the above, Member States need to consider practical steps to identify those issues which are relatively more important and timely for intergovernmental consideration. In doing so, full consideration needs to be given to the fact that financial, monetary, trade and development issues are interrelated and have profound political and social implications. The concept of sustainable development in its broadest sense has relevance in this context.

When global problems call for global solutions, the value of the United Nations to Member States is apparent to all. Successful global initiatives, whether in the political field (which I mentioned earlier) or in the economic, social or humanitarian sphere, mean operational activities at country or subregional level. Two examples may suffice here:

The global AIDS initiative launched under the leadership of the World Health Organization is already being reflected in country-level activities supported by the United Nations Development Programme, which has been designated the operational arm in this important venture. together with the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund for which maternal and child health are primary concerns.

The International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, held at Vienna in 1987, assigned a greatly increased role and responsibility to the United Nations, which it is fully committed to meet. Here again, at the country level, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and the United Nations Development Programme have joined forces to assist in the development and implementation of specific actions.

It is most encouraging that specific focus has been placed by Member States on operational activities for development in the course of the past 12 months. Conditions may now be ripe for the introduction of significant improvements in the nature and organization of these activities to ensure that they are fully responsive to a rapidly changing and diversified context and able to match rising expectations.

The links between specific global goals and provision of support for related national and subregional efforts can surely be built on to ensure that, in the preparation of a fourth international development strategy for the 1990s, we will be able to count on direct support from some of the operational activities of the system in the achievement of specific objectives. This would add both strength and coherence to our overall efforts in the economic and social fields.

XII

The state of the Earth's environment is pre-eminently a problem that should evoke a solidarity of response from all nations. It has, however, reached a stage where, without a global ethic and the necessary law, it can give rise to divisive issues with political implications.

The problem is linked with those of poverty, the growth in the world's population to 5 billion and the prospects for sustainable development. It also involves issues of international responsibility. As such, it has too many aspects for any single country or even a group of countries to be able to deal with effectively. A coherent and well-co-ordinated approach can be developed only at the multilateral level.

This year, with the apprehension that the greenhouse effect has begun to affect our planet, public anxiety around the world has increased about the deterioration of the environment. The United Nations Environment Programme has proceeded, together with the World Meteorological Organization and the International Council of Scientific Unions, to develop internationally accepted assessments of the reality as well as the causes and impact of climatic change. The aim is to co-ordinate government policies to prevent, limit, delay or adapt to this change. With the help of a dialogue between scientists and policy makers, an international agreement needs to be evolved and, if necessary, one or more legal instruments adopted in order to address the effects of this ominous phenomenon in planetary experience.

A constructive precedent has been established in this context with the adoption of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer at a conference convened by UNEP in September 1987. This as well as the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer constitute a major step in the development of international environmental law and set an example of managing a world problem before it leads to irreversible damage to human health and the environment.

These reassuring signs of progress notwithstanding, the crisis deepens as a growing population finds itself driven to use irreplaceable natural resources. Desertification, soil erosion, deforestation, swollen cities becoming gigantic sources of pollution, on the one side, and the emission of pollutants into the air by industry, on the other, can have a cumulative and well-nigh unmanageable effect. The unprecedented drought in certain agricultural areas, the acid rain and the more recent phenomenon of trafficking in, and dumping of, toxic wastes are examples of the vexatious issues that need to be forestalled by timely action. Here again, guidelines have been formulated preparatory to a global convention governing the environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes and their movement across frontiers. The issue will require exchange of information, technical assistance in monitoring and control and emergency response in case of accident.

As the Conference on Sustainable Development convened by the Prime Minister of Norway at Oslo in June so lucidly brought out, all issues in the field of environment call for a genuine working partnership among nations in the interest of keeping their common home in good condition.

XIII

Considering the vast sweep and scope of the possibilities now opening for constructive multilateral action through the United Nations, the financial health of the Organization needs to be immediately restored. The United Nations cannot function without money. It is still seriously short of funds. This situation includes both an immediate shortage of cash, which threatens insolvency in the next few months, and the virtual depletion of reserves. Lack of reserves means that the Organization will not be able to mount new operations.

The impact of the crisis is heightened by the increasing responsibilities of peacemaking and peace-keeping which the Organization has had to assume. Taking into account the new operations which the United Nations is likely to undertake in the next 12 months, its total annual expenses will rise very significantly.

I must ask the General Assembly to consider urgently both the cash and reserves aspects of this crisis and to find ways to ensure that it does not persist. These ways may have to include both new methods of raising money such as voluntary contributions or interest-free loans and also such fundamental measures as changes in the scale of assessments.

I welcome the recent decision of the United States to move towards full compliance with its international legal obligation to pay its assessed contributions to the United Nations. This is a most positive development. Partial payment of arrears will not, however, resolve the financial crisis of the Organization. Until and unless the outstanding contributions of all Member States are paid, the Organization will continue to operate with inadequate current income and virtually without reserves. Meanwhile, if the Organization is to sustain its present and foreseeable peacemaking and peace-keeping operations, its reserves must be replenished by the other means that I have mentioned above.

XIV

Reform and renewal in the United Nations has been one of my main preoccupations. As Secretary-General, I have shared the feeling that the accretions of four decades and a certain inflation of activity had encouraged a bureaucratic resistance to self-review and that we needed a leaner and more effective apparatus. As I have submitted two progress reports on this subject to the General Assembly, the second in April this year, it is not necessary to go into the details of the implementation of Assembly resolution 41/213. I may summarize some of the main points here:

Reform is the joint responsibility of both Member States and the Secretariat. As far as the Secretariat is concerned, a good part of the process pertaining to administration and finance has been completed ahead of the three-year schedule. The appropriations for the programme budget of the current biennium assume an overall vacancy rate of 15 per cent in the Professional and 10 per cent in other categories of staff.

Extensive restructuring has been undertaken in the political and administrative areas of the Secretariat and is under way in the area of public information.

A number of steps have been taken to improve co-ordination among the organizations of the United Nations system and a close look has been taken at field offices so as to avoid duplication and share resources, wherever possible.

A thorough assessment of our management information systems, in the light of current technology, has been initiated with a view to their eventual integration and the better provision of information required by Member States and the Secretariat.

Restructuring in the economic and social fields is related to the intergovernmental review. I have elsewhere in this report dwelt on this in the context of the work of the Economic and Social Council.

There are limits to the economies that can be effected in the Secretariat. An example is the provision of conference and documentation services essential to the conduct of discussions on issues on the international agenda. Without a decrease in meetings included in future calendars of conferences, post reductions of the size that were recommended in this area would gravely disrupt these services. But a decrease in meetings would mean some curtailing of the activities of the intergovernmental machinery and this would require a decision not by the Secretariat, but by Member States.

This brings us face to face with the fact that the Secretariat has grown not through a self-propelled process, but in response to the demands of the more extended intergovernmental machinery it must service. A rationalization of the structures of the Organization at the intergovernmental level would require decisions by Governments based on a re-examination of priorities among programmes and procedures for a better use of available resources. Such decisions, if acceptable to the generality of membership, would lend further substance to the process of reform.

I must add here that the staff of the Organization has faced conditions of severe strain in the most remarkable spirit. It is the undiminished loyalty of the staff to the Organization that has enabled it to perform its most vital functions, despite a very high vacancy rate. Responding to recent positive developments in the political situation, they have shown readiness and enthusiasm for a higher level of activity in the cause of peace. However, there is a limit to the additional effort that can be reasonably required from the staff. I feel that if Member States wish the Organization to maintain, as it must, the highest standards of competence and integrity, they need to ensure that conditions of employment of the staff remain competitive.

Reform is not an end in itself but a means of improving the services the Organization renders to Member States. The emerging world situation, with major conflicts on the way to solution, is bound to impose additional responsibilities on the Organization—political, economic and humanitarian. It would be paradoxical and discordant if the Organization should face financial difficulties precisely when it has to meet the demands of a more constructive phase of international affairs.

The advent of a new year, decade or century, or even a new millennium, does not necessarily open a new page in the calendar of human experience. There seems to be a growing consciousness, however, that, while humanity has made phenomenal progress in the twentieth century, it has also reaped a harvest of wars and upheavals which, with better wisdom, could have been avoided. The current and preceding decades have witnessed much dangerous confusion. It is not a fanciful supposition that Governments will adjust better to a qualitatively changed and changing world environment. If the expectation is right, the United Nations will be used more purposefully than it has been before. I have in mind the use made of it by all Powers—the great, the medium and the small.

The Charter and the working of the world Organization do not promise a problem-free world. What they promise is a rational and peaceful way of solving problems. Perfect justice in relations between nations may be unattainable but inequities can be reduced. To the great dangers of the proliferation of nuclear and conventional weapons, political disputes, violations of human rights, the prevalence of poverty and threats to the environment have been added new sources of conflict. There is a need for the world's wealth of political intelligence and imagination—and compassion—to be employed in coping with these dangers. It can be done through constant and systematic effort only within the United Nations. Non-governmental organizations play an invaluable role in this respect, especially in campaigns for disarmament and human rights; the future is bound to call for even greater dedication from them. Failure to comprehend and come to terms with the demands of emerging situations will mean suffering and privation for the weak and erosion of prestige for the strong. Greater support for the Organization is, therefore, called for not as an exercise in piety nor in a sudden and passing burst of idealism, but in sober and enlightened recognition of necessity in handling the complexities of international affairs.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The Organization's activities in the maintenance of international peace and security were recognized by the award of the 1988 Nobel Peace Prize to the United Nations peace-keeping forces. At the time of the award, in September, the United Nations had nearly 10,000 peace-keeping forces and observers on duty in seven regions of the world.

The Secretary-General characterized the award as a tribute to the idealism of all who had served the Organization, in particular to the valour and sacrifices of those who had contributed and continued to contribute to peace-keeping operations.

The President of the General Assembly, in his statement on the occasion, noted that United Nations peace-keeping operations had helped prevent conflicts and had promoted the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations in general. He observed that the new international atmosphere provided a concrete opportunity for the United Nations to play an even broader role in the system of collective security, of which peace-keeping operations were a fundamental instrument.

The General Assembly welcomed the award with deep appreciation, expressing the conviction that United Nations peace-keeping operations were an integral component of enhancing the effectiveness of the Organization in the maintenance of international peace and security (resolution 43/59 A).

The principal organs of the United Nations on matters of international peace and security continued to function in the manner envisaged in the Charter. International relations at the global level improved markedly, opening up new possibilities for United Nations peacemaking efforts.

The Assembly adopted a number of resolutions relating to issues of peace and security at both the regional and international levels. It recognized the strong resolve of peoples to strengthen international peace and security and promote economic and social development. It reaffirmed the lasting importance and validity of the 1984 Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace (43/22) as well as the fact that peace and security and development were interrelated and inseparable (43/23).

The Assembly, noting the tenth anniversary of the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, underscored the important role that the Declaration played in promoting world peace and international security, common understanding and mutually beneficial co-operation (43/87). It expressed the firm conviction that ensuring international peace and security required concerted efforts and close co-operation among States (43/89).

With regard to regional security questions, the Assembly reaffirmed that the security of the Mediterranean was closely linked with European security and with international peace and security and that efforts were necessary to reduce tension and armaments and to promote peace, security and co-operation in the region (43/84). It affirmed that the implementation of confidence- and security-building measures would contribute to strengthening regional as well as international peace and security (43/85). It called for the continuation and intensification of result-oriented political dialogue and co-operation, in accordance with the United Nations Charter (43/86).

Strengthening of international security

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

In December 1988, the General Assembly, reaffirmed the validity of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security⁽¹⁾ and again urged all States to seek, through the effective use of the United Nations Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension.

The Assembly included the question of the strengthening of international security in its agenda for the first time in 1969, at the request of the USSR,⁽²⁾ and has since then discussed it annually.

The Secretary-General, in a September 1988 report and subsequent addendum,⁽³⁾ transmitted replies from Member States to a 1987 Assembly invitation⁽⁴⁾ to submit their views on the implementation of the Declaration. Six States had sent substantive replies as at 23 November 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/88 by recorded vote.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security
The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Aware of the increasing interdependence among nations and of the fact that in the present-day world there is no alternative to a policy of peaceful coexistence, détente and co-operation among States on the basis of equality, irrespective of their economic or military power, political and social systems or size and geographic location,

Convinced that a comprehensive and just solution to pressing international problems, such as achieving peace and security, disarmament and development, can be assured only through negotiations, based on the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in which all countries participate on an equal footing,

Reiterating its conviction that, in the continuing search by the international community for lasting security, multilateral action has an increasingly important role,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations as an indispensable forum for negotiations and reaching agreements on measures to promote and strengthen international peace and security,

Stressing the need for the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, particularly the Security Council, to contribute more effectively to the promotion of international peace and security by seeking solutions to unresolved problems and crises in the world,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States and the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes,

Welcoming the fact that a favourable climate has recently developed within the international community and progress has been recorded in some important fields of arms limitation and disarmament, as well as in the resolution of certain focal points of crisis in the world,

Encouraged by the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, which represents a valuable initial step in the reduction of nuclear weapons,

Noting that the progress in the resolution of certain regional conflicts and the easing of tensions present the international community of nations with the opportunity to take a significant step towards the realization of international peace and security,

Welcoming also the continuation of the process within the framework of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe,

Noting with concern that despite the positive processes and developments, the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security have not been fully implemented and that international relations are still characterized by the policy of competition for spheres of influence, domination and exploitation in many parts of the world by the continuation of the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons, and the danger of its extension into outer space, by the recourse to the use or threat of use of force, military intervention and interference and foreign occupation and by the infringement of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries,

Concerned particularly by the lack of solutions to the world economic problems, in which the deeper underlying problems of a structural nature have been compounded by cyclical factors and which has further aggravated the inequalities and injustices in international economic relations, all of which pose a grave threat to global peace and security,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Urges once again all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations and, to this end:

(a) To refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion, which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

(b) To refrain from supporting or encouraging any such act for any reason whatsoever and to reject and refuse recognition of situations brought about by any such act;

(c) To seek, through more effective utilization of the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension, which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

3. Calls upon all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take immediate steps aimed at:

(a) Promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter;

(b) Halting effectively the arms race and achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control and, to this end, to conduct serious, meaningful and effective negotiations with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and to fulfilling the priority tasks listed in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document;

4. Invites all States, in particular the major military Powers and States members of military alliances, to refrain, especially in critical situations and in crisis areas, from actions, including military activities and manoeuvres, conceived within the context of East-West confrontation and used as a means of pressure or threat to and destabilization of other States and regions;

5. Expresses its conviction that the gradual military disengagement of the great Powers and their military alliances from various parts of the world should be promoted;

6. Emphasizes the role that the United Nations has in the maintenance of international peace and security and in economic and social development and progress for the benefit of all mankind;

7. Stresses that there is a need further to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security and to enhance the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council in accordance with the Charter;

8. Reiterates the need for the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, to ensure the effective implementation of its decisions in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Charter;

9. Emphasizes that there can be no lasting peace and security in the world without the solution of the international economic problems, particularly those of the developing countries, and the ensuring of the sustained growth and development of the world economy;

10. Considers that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, mutually reinforce each other;

11. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist régimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and for the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid;

12. Calls upon all States, particularly the members of the Security Council, to take appropriate and effective measures to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger that the nuclear capability of South Africa constitutes to the African States, in particular the frontline States, as well as to international peace and security;

13. Reaffirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity enabling, under the conditions of interdependence, the full development and independence of all States, as well as the attainment of genuine security, peace and co-operation in the world, and stresses its firm belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of these goals;

14. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the basis of the replies received;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Implementation of the 1978 Declaration on societies and peace

On the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace⁽⁵⁾ the General Assembly reaffirmed its validity and called on all States to spare no efforts towards its full implementation and to adhere strictly to the principles enshrined in it.

The Declaration invited all States to establish, maintain and strengthen a just and durable peace for present and future generations and, in particular, to observe certain principles, including those which stated that every nation and human being, regardless of race, conscience, language or sex, had the inherent right to life in peace; a war of aggression is a crime against peace; and every State had the duty to refrain from propaganda for wars of aggression, to promote equitable political, economic, social and cultural co-operation, to respect the right of all peoples to self-determination, independence, equality, sovereignty, the territorial integrity of States and the inviolability of their frontiers, and to discourage colonialism and racism and advocacy of hatred and prejudice.

Comprehensive system of international peace and security

Pursuant to the request of the General Assembly in 1987,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, in a report of October 1988,⁽⁷⁾ presented the views of Member States and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on how to contribute to the development of a dialogue on ways and means of promoting comprehensive security based on the United Nations Charter and within the United Nations framework. The Secretariat also studied statements and deliberations at the 1986 and 1987 regular and special sessions of the Assembly, as well as statements made in the First Committee and other subsidiary bodies and organs of the Assembly, and in the Security Council. In addition, informal consultations were undertaken with the Chairmen of the regional groups and individual delegations with a view to exploring ways and means of organizing an exchange of views on the matter.

The report noted that in the course of its consideration of ways to promote an exchange of views on the subject, the Organization had made use of a variety of methods, ranging from the appointment of formal committees to informal groups such as ad hoc committees, contact groups, friends of the chairman or rapporteurs. Among the examples cited were the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, the Special Committee on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States, and the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of the Non-Use of Force in International Relations.

Various opinions were expressed during the Assembly's 1987 session on ways to approach the subject. Suggestions included discussions on means to reinforce the effectiveness of the Charter through supplementary measures and norms; a concerted analysis of the implementation of Charter provisions in order to determine those which had not been utilized to their fullest potential; and a clear definition of the areas where new concepts and approaches had emerged so as to ensure that international efforts in that regard were not to the detriment or at the expense of existing norms and practices. It was proposed that thought be given to convening a special Assembly session with broad participation as the forum most competent to examine the issue of a comprehensive system of international peace and security.

Summarizing the views of those regional groups and individual delegations which were consulted informally, the report stated that one group of Member States suggested consideration of the question by the Assembly's First Committee or its other Committees during and outside the regular sessions, as well as by the Special Committee on the Charter, the Security Council, and regional and intergovernmental organizations. It was also suggested that the United Nations take initiatives in that field and participate actively in introducing dialogue on the question in various forums. At the same time, the view was expressed that there was no need to introduce any new agenda item on the subject in the United Nations bodies and specialized agencies and that the existing agenda items should be examined in such a manner as to promote the concept of strengthening international peace and security.

It was also stated that the existing United Nations bodies were competent and possessed the expertise to discuss questions relating to international peace and security. Consequently, any concrete proposals should be considered in the appropriate United Nations forums. The same group of Member States also maintained that the Charter contained the necessary ideas concerning international peace and security and anything that could lead to a redefinition of international security should be avoided.

Certain delegations had expressed preference for an approach which sought to examine concrete proposals relating to the system of international peace and security. The Secretary-General believed that, although they had suggested varying approaches, Member States were clearly in agreement on the desirability of strengthening the United Nations and increasing its effectiveness. It also appeared that further deliberations and consultations would be needed to bring about greater understanding and a wider consensus. For his part, the Secretary-General said he stood ready to assist the Assembly in discussing the subject formally or informally and to study general or specific aspects of it as the Assembly would judge to be of assistance to Member States.

A number of international and national NGOs and political and public figures suggested that scholars whose research was relevant to the study of a "new definition" of global security should be consulted both by their respective Governments and by the Organization. They also underlined the need for growing co-operation between the academic community, politicians and diplomats to broaden the scope of activities conducive to global security.

The five permanent members of the Security Council, in a statement issued after a meeting of their Foreign Ministers with the Secretary-General on 28 September during which they had exchanged views on a wide range of major international issues,⁽⁸⁾ placed particular emphasis on efforts to resolve regional conflicts. They noted with satisfaction the marked improvement in international relations at the global level and the general trend towards dialogue and peaceful settlement of disputes since their previous meeting with the Secretary-General in September 1987. They welcomed the active involvement of the United Nations in the process and stressed their continuing confidence in the Organization, which they believed had an increasingly significant role to play in the achievement of international peace and security.

At its February/March 1988 meeting, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization completed a draft Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field, which the General Assembly approved in resolution 43/51. In resolution 43/164, the Assembly invited the International Law Commission to continue elaborating a draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/89 by recorded vote.

Comprehensive approach to strengthening international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to strengthen further the role and effectiveness of the United Nations on the basis of full and universal implementation of its Charter, in order to ensure international peace and security on a comprehensive basis covering all States and all aspects of their interrelationship,

Expressing the firm conviction that ensuring international peace and security requires concerted efforts and close co-operation among all States on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations in order to resolve issues of crucial importance in the following spheres: disarmament, peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts, international economic co-operation and development, protection of the environment, and human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Affirming that the system of security embodied in the Charter is the fundamental and irreplaceable mechanism for the preservation or restoration of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that in the interest of ensuring international peace and security on a comprehensive basis all States should adhere strictly to the fundamental principles of international law, especially respect for the sovereignty, equality, political independence and territorial integrity of States, non-intervention and non-interference in internal affairs, refraining from the threat or use of force, peaceful settlement of disputes, self-determination of peoples, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, co-operation among States and compliance in good faith with their obligations assumed in accordance with the Charter,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the ways and means of organizing an exchange of views on the subject among the States Members of the United Nations,

Taking note of the suggestions, ideas and views expressed in the deliberations on this matter,

1. Encourages Member States to contribute to an international dialogue, primarily within the framework of the United Nations, its Security Council and General Assembly and their subsidiary bodies, in order to find universally acceptable ways and means and to co-ordinate practical measures to strengthen on a comprehensive basis the system of security laid down in the Charter of the United Nations and to enhance the role and effectiveness of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security in all aspects;

2. Calls upon all States to intensify their practical efforts towards ensuring international security in all its aspects through peaceful means, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

3. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Comprehensive approach to strengthening international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations".

The Chairman of the First Committee, in introducing the item, noted that the relaxation in international relations had created a more favourable background for the consideration of items relating to international security. In that connection, he said the United Nations was the proper instrument to which the international community must turn to find acceptable answers to issues relating to peace and security.

Dialogue to improve the international situation

In 1988, the General Assembly again underlined the need for a result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation. The item had been included in its agenda for the first time in 1986, when the Assembly adopted a resolution on the subject.⁽⁹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 7 December, adopted resolution 43/86 by recorded vote.

Need for a result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Need for a result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation",

Welcoming the favourable trends in the current international environment, in particular the first, though limited, step in the field of nuclear disarmament and the progress reached in solving regional conflicts,

Noting with satisfaction the growing awareness that dialogue and co-operation are imperative in order further to improve international relations, generate a climate of trust and resolve global problems facing humanity,

Conscious of the urgent need for progress in reducing the levels of armament, both nuclear and conventional, and in solving global problems such as the development of equitable international economic relations, measures to alleviate the external indebtedness of the developing countries, protection of the environment and the elimination of racism and apartheid, as well as the removal of hunger and poverty,

Considering that durable peace and security cannot be achieved through confrontation, but only through policies of dialogue and co-operation as well as by measures aimed at strengthening the United Nations in accordance with its Charter, particularly in the nuclear and space age,

1. Reaffirms the obligation of States to abide strictly by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Calls for the continuation and intensification of result-oriented political dialogue and co-operation at the multilateral, regional and bilateral levels, in accordance with the relevant principles of the Charter;

3. Reaffirms its appeal to all Member States to enhance the role of the United Nations as a forum for political dialogue and negotiation in order to preserve peace, strengthen international security, promote arms limitation and disarmament, develop equitable international economic relations, implement the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial domination and foreign occupation, eradicate racism and apartheid, promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and settle other urgent international issues;

4. Appeals to Member States to consider ways and means of strengthening the role and efficiency of the General Assembly as the most representative international forum for dialogue and co-operation, as well as of increasing the political authority of its resolutions;

5. Welcomes the recent encouraging co-operation among the members of the Security Council enabling the Council to carry out more effectively its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, in accordance with the Charter, to facilitate dialogue and co-operation as a means to reduce tensions, to promote the peaceful settlement of regional and international conflicts and to enhance international peace and security;

7. Stresses the importance of a more adequate consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization.

Introducing the draft in the Committee, the German Democratic Republic said its initiative stemmed from the fact that all the major political forces of the world had expressed their commitment to a policy of dialogue and co-operation. In addition, there had been an expression of readiness by States to strengthen the United Nations.

In an earlier statement, the German Democratic Republic said that international dialogue on fundamental issues facing mankind was becoming more result-oriented and that all the major political currents favoured a policy of dialogue and co-operation. The United Nations was becoming a centre for harmonizing the activities of States, as envisaged in the Charter.

Regional and international peace and security

Improvements in international relations during 1988 made possible the settlement of regional conflicts under United Nations auspices and with the co-operation of the two super-Powers-the USSR and the United States. The new international climate coincided with a resurgence of public interest in the Organization, making possible regional approaches to resolving regional conflicts. The Assembly, in December, affirmed that all regional and subregional peace and security endeavours should take into account the characteristics of each region. It further affirmed that the implementation of confidence- and security-building measures, taking into account the United Nations Charter and the specificity of each particular region, would contribute to the strengthening of regional as well as international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/85 without vote.

Strengthening of regional and international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the fundamental responsibility of the United Nations under the Charter is to maintain international peace and security,

Recognizing the need to remove the risk of armed conflicts between States by promoting a change in the international climate from confrontation to peaceful relations and co-operation and by taking appropriate measures to strengthen international peace and security,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to bring about the peaceful resolution of regional conflicts in order to achieve international peace and security,

Noting also with satisfaction that the United Nations peace-keeping forces were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize on 29 September 1988 for effective contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Affirming that all regional and subregional peace and security endeavours should take into account the characteristics of each region, as well as measures adopted therein to strengthen mutual confidence to assure the security of all States involved,

Noting with appreciation the voluntary contributions made by States towards regional and subregional peace-keeping arrangements,

Desiring to facilitate the efforts of the Secretary-General towards the resolution of such conflicts,

Welcoming the positive trends towards the peaceful settlement of various regional and subregional conflicts and the important role played in that regard by the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all States, in the implementation of agreements reached with the United Nations regarding peace-keeping arrangements, further to strengthen co-operation with the Secretary-General in the discharge of his functions deriving from the Charter of the United Nations as well as from the mandates and decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly;

2. Affirms that the adoption and implementation of confidence- and security-building measures, taking into account the Charter and the specificity of each particular region, would contribute to the strengthening of regional as well as international peace and security.

General Assembly resolution 43/85

7 December 1988 Meeting 73 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/43/913) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); draft by Cameroon (A/C.1/43/L.84/Rev.2); agenda item 72.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 1st Committee 47-54; plenary 73.

The original draft by Cameroon had contained a provision recommending the strengthening of the Secretary-General's role in the implementation of agreements reached with the United Nations regarding peace-keeping arrangements which would further enhance the attainment of international peace and security.

Introducing the draft in the Committee, Cameroon said its premise was that the process of peace-keeping arrangements and their implementation involved broad areas of conflict resolution, crisis management and confidence-building measures. In its recent successes, the United Nations had reinforced its fundamental responsibility to maintain international peace and security through various peace-keeping arrangements. While it was undisputed that the Security Council had a central role in maintaining international peace and security, that role must not be divorced from those of other organs of the Organization. The Assembly and its Main Committees, especially the First Committee, bore an equally important responsibility for initiating dialogue, addressing the progressive development of ideas and norms of peace and reviewing major issues of universal concern in the field of disarmament and security, thus facilitating more productive endeavours globally. The veto system in the Council tended to hide consensus opinion among the vast majority of States, all of which had a right to security and shared concerns for peaceful development and progress. The Assembly, on the other hand, presented the world at large with the opportunity to monitor the true collective opinion of States.

South Atlantic zone of peace

Brazil first brought up the question of a zone of peace and co-operation in the South Atlantic at the 1986 General Assembly session, when the Assembly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region situated between Africa and South America, a zone of peace and co-operation.⁽¹⁰⁾

In 1987, the Assembly commended the efforts of the States of the zone to promote peace and regional co-operation and urged them to continue their actions aimed at fulfilling the goals of the declaration through the adoption of concrete programmes; it called on all States to co-operate in promoting the objectives of the zone.⁽¹¹⁾

The first meeting of the States of the Zone of Peace and Co-operation of the South Atlantic took place at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 25 to 29 July 1988. The participants were Angola, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Cape Verde, the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Nigeria, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Uruguay and Zaire.

The participants, in a 33-point final document,⁽¹²⁾ reiterated their determination to develop their relations under conditions of peace and freedom, in an environment free from tensions, and in conformity with the principles and rules of international law and with the United Nations Charter. They expressed their purpose to reinforce constructive relations based on dialogue, understanding, mutual interest and respect for the sovereign equality of all States, to the benefit of the peoples of the region as well as the international community as a whole. They emphasized the importance of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁽¹³⁾ as an essential pillar in the process of strengthening co-operation and peace in the South Atlantic region and expressed their willingness to consult and exchange information on matters related to the development and implementation of the Convention, including mutual knowledge of national legislation and the promotion of studies in that regard. Agreement was also expressed on the necessity of further consultations in conformity with the aims of the declaration establishing the zone of peace.⁽¹⁰⁾ In that connection, the participants decided to meet periodically to pursue common objectives and to take steps to create the post of a co-ordinator who would facilitate the achievement of the objectives of the declaration.

In a September 1988 report,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the views of 11 Governments on the declaration.

Security and co-operation in the Mediterranean

The Secretary-General forwarded the views of nine States on strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean to the General Assembly in September 1988,⁽¹⁵⁾ in reply to its 1987 invitation⁽¹⁶⁾ for States' ideas and suggestions regarding their potential contribution to strengthening peace in the region.

As summarized in the Secretary-General's report, the majority of States that addressed the subject expressed their concern at the persistent tension in the region. They pointed out that the continuing presence of non-regional Powers and the stockpiling in the area of weapons, including nuclear weapons, had created a dangerous situation. The policies of aggression, intimidation, intervention and interference in the internal affairs of the countries in the region were blamed by several States for the persistent tension and were seen as a considerable threat to its peace and security.

Several States emphasized the intimate link between strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean and similar action in Europe and in other regions. Towards that end, a number of States called for extended dialogue between countries participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and the non-participating Mediterranean countries.

Among suggestions for strengthening security and co-operation in the region was the establishment of a Mediterranean forum to include government representatives, scientific, educational, cultural, artistic and other institutions, and eminent individuals specializing in Mediterranean studies as a multidisciplinary framework for promoting co-operation. Another State reiterated its proposal for the application to the region of agreed confidence-building measures; the reduction of armed forces; the withdrawal of ships carrying nuclear weapons; the rejection of nuclear weapons deployment on the territory of non-nuclear Mediterranean countries; an undertaking by nuclear Powers not to use such weapons against any country in the Mediterranean which did not permit their deployment on its soil; and the establishment of a chemical-weapon-free zone.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, in accordance with the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/84 without vote.

Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/102 of 9 December 1981, 37/118 of 16 December 1982, 38/189 of 20 December 1983, 39/153 of 17 December 1984, 40/157 of 16 December 1985, 41/89 of 4 December 1986 and 42/90 of 7 December 1987,

Recognizing the importance of promoting peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and of strengthening further the economic, commercial and cultural links in the region,

Expressing concern at the persistent tension in parts of the Mediterranean region and the consequent threat to peace,

Deeply concerned at the continuing military operations in the Mediterranean and the grave dangers that they create for peace, security and general equilibrium in the region,

Considering, in this regard, the urgency of all States to conform in their actions to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as to the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the need to intensify and promote peace and security and to strengthen co-operation in the region, as provided for in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975,

Recalling the declarations of successive meetings of non-aligned countries concerning the Mediterranean, as well as official declarations on, and contributions to, peace and security in the Mediterranean region made by individual countries,

Reaffirming also the primary role of Mediterranean countries in the promotion of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region,

Recalling also, in this connection, the Final Declaration adopted at Valletta on 11 September 1984 by the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and the commitments assumed by the participants that opened the process of joint efforts with the objective of contributing to peace, security and co-operation in the region,

Taking note of the important meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries held at Brioni, Yugoslavia, on 3 and 4 June 1987,

Welcoming the efforts realized by the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to strengthen regional co-operation in various fields among themselves and between them and the European countries,

Noting the adoption by the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe of the Document of the Stockholm Conference on concrete, militarily significant, politically binding and verifiable confidence- and security-building measures,

Noting also the new developments evolving in the ongoing negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament in Europe, which have a direct relevance and importance for peace and security in the Mediterranean,

Recognizing the strong desire of the non-aligned Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations with the European-Mediterranean and other European countries aimed at strengthening efforts towards the promotion of peace, security and co-operation in the region, and thus contributing to the stabilization of the situation in the Mediterranean,

Taking note of the debate on this item during its various sessions and, in particular, of the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Reaffirms:

(a) That the security of the Mediterranean is closely linked with European security and with international peace and security;

(b) That further efforts are necessary for the reduction of tension and of armaments and for the creation of conditions of security and fruitful co-operation in all fields for all countries and peoples of the Mediterranean, on the basis of the principles of sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, security, non-intervention and non-interference, non-violation of international borders, non-use of force or threat of use of force, the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, peaceful settlement of disputes and respect for permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

(c) That just and viable solutions are needed for existing problems and crises in the region on the basis of the provisions of the Charter and of relevant resolutions of the United Nations, the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to self-determination and independence;

2. Takes note of paragraph 24 of the Document of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, which, inter alia, confirms the intention of the participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to develop good-neighbourly relations with all States of the region, with due regard to reciprocity and in the spirit of the principles contained in the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States, so as to promote confidence and security and make peace prevail in the region in accordance with the provisions contained in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;

3. Calls upon all States participating in the Vienna meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to take all possible measures and to exert every effort in order to ensure substantial and balanced results of this meeting in the implementation of the principles and goals of the Final Act, including those provisions relating to the Mediterranean, as well as the continuity of the multilateral process initiated by the Conference, which also has great significance for the strengthening of peace, security and co-operation;

4. Urges all States to co-operate with the Mediterranean States in the further efforts required to reduce tension and promote peace, security and co-operation in the region in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Encourages once again efforts to intensify existing forms and to promote new forms of co-operation in various fields, particularly those aimed at reducing tension and strengthening confidence and security in the region;

6. Reaffirms also the importance of intensifying and constantly promoting contacts in all fields where common interests exist in order to eliminate gradually, through co-operation, the causes preventing the faster social and economic development of the Mediterranean States, particularly the developing States of the region;

7. Takes note, in this regard, of the idea of the establishment of a Mediterranean forum as a multidisciplinary nary framework for the promotion of co-operation in the region, which would bring together not only the representatives of Governments but also of scientific, educational, cultural and other institutions, as well as prominent individuals specializing in Mediterranean studies;

8. Welcomes any further communication to the Secretary-General from all States of proposals, declarations and recommendations on strengthening peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

9. Renews its invitation to the Secretary-General to give due attention to the question of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and, if requested to do so, to render advice and assistance to Mediterranean countries in their concerted efforts to promote peace, security and co-operation in the region;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, on the basis of all replies received and notifications submitted in the implementation of the present resolution and taking into account the debate on this question during its forty-third session, an updated report on the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

Review of peace-keeping operations

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations held two meetings in 1988, on 10 February and 25 August.⁽¹⁾ In addition, it held six sessions of informal consultations between 30 March and 22 August.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly consider the renewal of its mandate, namely, to carry out a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all its aspects with a view to strengthening the role of the United Nations in that field.

Various proposals and suggestions on its mandate were put forward after extensive deliberations and exchanges of views. Some delegations submitted ideas regarding agenda items for the Committee, including the financial aspect of peace-keeping operations. Issues discussed included United Nations publications on peace-keeping operations, compilation of a registry containing information on the availability of troops and provisions of logistical assistance for peace-keeping operations.

In a statement on 17 October before the Special Political Committee, Nigeria, the Chairman of the Special Committee, said the year had witnessed positive developments in peace-keeping operations whose importance was underscored by the award of the Nobel Peace Prize. Their prominence had been brought about by the significant shift in international relations, with dialogue and co-operation replacing strident rhetoric and conflict. Nevertheless, they were confronted by numerous problems, particularly financial difficulties. In view of the near certainty of further peace-keeping activities in the future, Nigeria urged the Secretariat to expedite ongoing consultations on the establishment of a special fund for peace-keeping operations. Calling for attention also to the practical aspects of such operations, it proposed a register of countries willing to contribute troops, with countries designating the units to be held in reserve on a stand-by basis. It also suggested the preparation by the Secretariat of a manual on peace-keeping operations.

On 14 April, a spokeswoman for the Secretary-General announced that Japan had made a special contribution of $20 million to be used for peace-keeping and peace-making activities, in connection with the Iran-Iraq conflict and the situations relating to Afghanistan and Lebanon. According to the statement, the Secretary-General regarded the Japanese contribution as a source of encouragement to the United Nations and expressed the hope that it would be emulated by many others.

To mark United Nations Day on 24 October, a videotaped message by the Secretary-General was beamed to United Nations peace-keeping forces around the world. The Secretary-General stated that among the many functions the United Nations had been requested to carry out, none was more vital than the maintenance of peace as personified by its peace-keeping operations. The dedication and sacrifice of the men and women in such operations over the past 40 years deserved the gratitude of the international community as a whole and it was, therefore, particularly satisfying that the 1988 Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to the peace-keeping forces.

In June 1988, the Secretariat's Department of Public Information published a full-colour brochure entitled United Nations Peace-Keeping.

In response to the increasing demand for his good offices in the maintenance of international peace and security and for United Nations peace-keeping operations, the Secretary-General announced structural changes in his Executive Office and the Office of Special Political Affairs. The latter, to be headed by only one Under-Secretary-General, was to be responsible for the conduct of all existing peace-keeping operations, with the exception of the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan, as well as for the planning and conduct of future peace-keeping operations. The services of the Secretary-General's Military Adviser would continue to be available to the Office.

Science and peace

By a letter of 9 March 1988,⁽⁴⁾ Costa Rica requested that an item on science and peace be included in the agenda of the 1988 session of the General Assembly. In an accompanying explanatory memorandum, Costa Rica said it was necessary to promote among all scientists a steadfast attitude in favour of using science for peaceful purposes, in order to promote the social and economic development of mankind. It also proposed that every year the week of 11 November be devoted to "science and peace".

Explaining before the Special Political Committee why it had requested inclusion of the item, Costa Rica recalled that in 1986, within the framework of the International Year of Peace, an international association of scientists had proposed holding an International Week of Scientists for Peace to encourage the use of scientific progress for peace and the well-being of mankind. The observance of the Week had met with increasing success during its first two years, Costa Rica added.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 43/61 without vote.

Science and peace

The General Assembly,

Considering that progress in science and technology profoundly affects international peace and security, economic and social development, respect for human rights and many other aspects of civilization and culture,

Considering also that political and economic decisions have a decisive effect on the direction of scientific research and the use of the results obtained thereby,

Recalling that scientific and technological achievements must be used to advance socio-economic progress and the effective enjoyment of human rights throughout the world,

Considering further that the arms race absorbs a substantial proportion of the scientific talent and financial resources used in related research and development, which, in a more peaceful and secure world, could be used to solve other pressing problems facing mankind,

Recalling that in its resolution 40/3 of 24 October 1985, by which it proclaimed the International Year of Peace, it recognized the role of science for peace,

Recalling also its resolution 42/13 of 28 October 1987 on the achievements of the International Year of Peace, in which it urged Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the world community to persevere in their efforts, developing initiatives conducive to the objectives of the Year, and expressed the hope that the ideals and objectives contained in the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace would continue to be an inspiration for concerted action,

Affirming that it is necessary to promote greater awareness among scientists world wide of the usefulness of science to increase international peace, security and co-operation, the social and economic development of mankind, the promotion of human rights and the protection of the environment,

Affirming, in particular, the need for scientists to establish a free and open dialogue between one another, and with political leaders and the public in general, with regard to scientific developments and their present and potential implications for our civilization,

Considering the importance of encouraging scientists to work towards constructive objectives, to improve the climate for arms control and disarmament, and to promote a dialogue on important topics in connection with the positive contributions that scientific knowledge can make to peace, security and ecological balance,

Noting with appreciation the joint efforts made by scientists and members of other professional groups to promote the achievement of those aims through the holding of the First International Week of Scientists for Peace from 10 to 16 November 1986 and the Second International Week of Scientists for Peace from 9 to 15 November 1987,

Considering that the celebration each year of a special week of action devoted to the topic "Science and peace" is an important means of generating and increasing public interest in this topic and of stimulating activities and initiatives leading to the study and dissemination of information on the links between progress in science and technology and the maintenance of peace and security,

1. Decides to proclaim the "International Week of Science and Peace", which will take place each year during the week in which 11 November falls;

2. Urges Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to encourage universities and other institutions of advanced studies, scientific academies and institutes, and professional associations and individuals in the scientific community to hold, during that Week, lectures, seminars, special debates and other activities conducive to the study and dissemination of information on the links between progress in science and technology and the maintenance of peace and security;

3. Urges Member States to promote international co-operation among scientists by facilitating exchanges of experts and information;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of Member States and interested organizations to the importance of the International Week of Science and Peace and invite them to report to him on their activities and initiatives in connection with this event, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

Chapter II

Disarmament

During 1988, the momentum was sustained towards the general improvement in international relations, particularly between the USSR and the United States and between the two major military alliances. The 1987 Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles (INF Treaty) went into effect on 1 June 1988. Progress was also made in the deliberations at the Vienna Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in the field of confidence- and security-building measures as well as new negotiations on conventional armaments in Europe. In the United Nations and in other forums, both the USSR and the United States indicated their intention to move towards a gradual reduction of their armed forces.

The focus of United Nations disarmament activities in 1988 was the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, or third special session devoted to disarmament, which was held from 31 May to 25 June. The special session produced a more focused outlook on disarmament and provided a basis for productive discussion and action at the forty-third regular session of the Assembly, which adopted resolutions on a range of arms limitation and disarmament matters.

At Geneva, the 40-nation Conference on Disarmament, the multilateral negotiating body, continued to make progress in the negotiations on a convention banning the production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons, although the problem of verification remained unsolved. The Conference continued to experience differences in positions and approaches on such long-standing agenda items as a nuclear-weapons test ban, the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, nuclear-weapon-free zones, zones of peace and the relationship between disarmament and development. In view of the need to intensify current multilateral negotiations, the General Assembly welcomed the offer of France to host a conference on chemical weapons in 1989.

The Disarmament Commission, a deliberative body composed of United Nations Member States, submitted to the Assembly at its special session a special report containing specific recommendations on the items included in its agenda.

General aspects

In 1988, a number of communications were received, from countries individually or in groups, concerning arms control and disarmament.

On 3 June, the USSR and the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a joint statement by their leaders following a summit meeting at Moscow from 29 May to 1 June.⁽¹⁾ They reaffirmed their solemn conviction that a nuclear war could not be won and must never be fought, their determination to prevent any war between their States and their disavowal of any intention to achieve military superiority. On 25 July,⁽²⁾ the two countries transmitted to the President of the Conference on Disarmament the text of the Agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Notifications of Launches of Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles and Submarine-Launched Ballistic Missiles, signed on 31 May. On 8 March,⁽³⁾ the United States transmitted the text of the Agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Establishment of Nuclear Risk Reduction Centers, together with its two Protocols, signed in September 1987.

Third special session on disarmament

Work of the Preparatory Committee

In accordance with a recommendation at its 1987 session,⁽⁴⁾ as endorsed by the General Assembly,⁽⁵⁾ the open-ended Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament held its third session in New York (25 January-5 February 1988) to consider substantive issues related to the special session.

The Preparatory Committee, in its report to the special session,⁽⁶⁾ recommended a number of organizational procedures, including the provisional agenda for the session. It annexed an informal paper prepared by the Chairman, containing suggested elements for consideration under substantive items of the provisional agenda. These suggestions related to an assessment and review of the state of affairs in arms limitation and disarmament negotiations, an examination of developments and trends with a view to the elaboration of appropriate concrete and practical measures, and consideration of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the effectiveness of the disarmament machinery, as well as United Nations information and education activities in disarmament.

By decision S-15/22 of 31 May, the General Assembly endorsed the report of the Preparatory Committee and its recommendations.

Work of the special session

The General Assembly convened its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament (New York, 31 May-25 June 1988) in accordance with a 1986 resolution.⁽⁷⁾ The first two special sessions on disarmament were held in 1978⁽⁸⁾ and 1982.⁽⁹⁾

Addressing the special session, the President said its task was to point the way to a more secure world, ultimately free of weapons of mass destruction and the threat or use of force. The Secretary-General stated that all major questions of security and disarmament had bilateral, regional and global dimensions and suggested that the international community should encourage the two major military Powers to sustain and develop the momentum of their mutual relationship, to broaden their understanding and to make progress on issues that had global implications.

On 31 May, by decision S-15/23, the Assembly adopted the agenda for the special session (for list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV). It decided that items 1 to 9 and 16 would be considered in plenary meeting and allocated items 10 to 15 to the Committee of the Whole (see below).

On 14 and 25 June, by resolutions S-15/1 A and B, the Assembly approved the first⁽¹⁰⁾ and second⁽¹¹⁾ reports of the Credentials Committee.

The Assembly had before it special reports of the Conference on Disarmament⁽¹²⁾ and the Disarmament Commission;⁽¹³⁾ reports of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference⁽¹⁴⁾ and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;⁽¹⁵⁾ and reports of the Secretary-General on the World Disarmament Campaign,⁽¹⁶⁾ on developments in the field of arms limitation and disarmament since 1982, including the status of negotiations in bilateral and multilateral forums,⁽¹⁷⁾ on objective information on military matters⁽¹⁸⁾ and on programmes and activities undertaken by the United Nations in the area of women and peace.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Assembly also received many proposals from delegations both during the general debate and in the Committee of the Whole, covering all agenda items. Some were of a comprehensive nature outlining general approaches to disarmament, while others dealt with specific proposals.

On the question of nuclear disarmament, India submitted working papers outlining an action plan for ushering in a nuclear-weapon-free and non-violent world order and on issues surrounding new technologies and the arms race.⁽²⁰⁾ The German Democratic Republic submitted papers calling on the Assembly to make specific recommendations to promote the process of nuclear disarmament leading to the ultimate goal of total elimination of nuclear weapons⁽²¹⁾ and for the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free corridor in Central Europe.⁽²²⁾

New Zealand submitted a proposal calling for the early conclusion of a comprehensive-test-ban treaty through multilateral negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament.⁽²³⁾

The five Nordic States-Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden-submitted a memorandum⁽²⁴⁾ advocating progress in a number of areas relating to non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament to ensure the prolongation and continued effectiveness of the non-proliferation régime after 1995.

Proposals on nuclear-weapon-free zones were submitted by Egypt, recommending that all States in the Middle East declare their intention not to introduce nuclear weapons in the region and suggesting ways to promote that objective,⁽²⁵⁾ while a paper by the German Democratic Republic⁽²⁶⁾ focused on ways of freeing the planet from nuclear weapons and suggested that the time was appropriate for consideration of the whole question of nuclear-weapon-free zones. New Zealand called for express support of the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlateloco) and the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear-Free-Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga), in particular by those States which had been invited to observe restrictions within the zones created by the Treaties.⁽²³⁾

Denmark proposed that appropriate action be taken by the Assembly, reflecting the increased recognition of the importance of conventional disarmament.⁽²⁷⁾ The USSR proposed the elimination of foreign military presence and military bases abroad by the year 2000.⁽²⁸⁾ The United Kingdom proposed language for inclusion in a final document of the session on the transfer of conventional weapons,⁽²⁹⁾ while Trinidad and Tobago proposed language on the use or transfer of prohibited weapons and weapons which cause unnecessary human suffering.⁽³⁰⁾

Argentina outlined criteria for the early conclusion of a convention prohibiting all chemical weapons and installations for their production, and for ensuring universal accession to such a convention,⁽³¹⁾ and the United Kingdom proposed a text dealing with chemical weapons, for inclusion in a final document.⁽³²⁾ On the question of radiological weapons, the Netherlands and Sweden proposed that adequate attention be given to the urgent need for the elaboration of a globally agreed prohibition against attacks on nuclear facilities.⁽³³⁾ Proposals were also submitted on naval armaments and disarmament⁽³⁴⁾ and on the prevention of an arms race in outer space.⁽³⁵⁾

As to verification of disarmament agreements, several proposals were submitted. Canada and the Netherlands focused on the role of the United Nations in this regard and proposed an in-depth study on the subject by a group of experts.⁽³⁶⁾ France focused on the role of the United Nations in contractual verification, investigation procedures and collection of space data.⁽³⁷⁾ Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania proposed an integrated multilateral verification system within the United Nations.⁽³⁸⁾ A similar proposal was submitted by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the USSR,⁽³⁹⁾ and Norway submitted a memorandum on procedures for verification of alleged use of chemical weapons.⁽⁴⁰⁾

Several papers were also submitted on the overall role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament⁽⁴¹⁾ as well as on the conduct of a comprehensive United Nations study on nuclear weapons.⁽⁴²⁾

Other proposals were made on the relationship between disarmament and development⁽⁴³⁾ and on the danger of radiation arising from the clandestine dumping of nuclear wastes.⁽⁴⁴⁾

A general debate on disarmament took place from 1 to 14 June. In the course of 20 meetings, the Assembly heard 135 speakers, including 23 heads of State or Government, 1 Vice-President, 6 Deputy Prime Ministers and 61 Ministers for Foreign Affairs and other heads of delegation. In addition, representatives of the non-member States of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Holy See, the Republic of Korea and Switzerland, as well as the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), made statements. The Assembly was also addressed by representatives of the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization.

On the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee,⁽⁶⁾ the Assembly, by decision S-15/21 of 31 May, established a Committee of the Whole to consider the substantive items on the agenda. The Committee established three working groups: Working Group I dealt with the assessment of the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the first and second special sessions on disarmament; Working Group II dealt with the assessment of developments and trends relevant to the disarmament process and the relationship between disarmament and development; and Working Group III dealt with the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, the effectiveness of the disarmament machinery, and educational and information activities. The Committee heard statements by 87 non-governmental organizations and 20 peace and disarmament research institutes.

The Committee's report to the Assembly⁽⁴⁵⁾ contained, in an annex, a list of the proposals submitted by Member States.

After three weeks of deliberations, the Assembly did not take action on any of the proposals submitted and was unable to reach full agreement on a concluding document. Specifically, no compromise was reached on issues such as nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace, the nuclear-weapon capabilities of South Africa and Israel, the investigatory role of the Secretary-General with regard to the use of chemical weapons and the relationship between disarmament and development.

Consequently, on 25 June, by decision S-15/24, the Assembly took note of the report of the Committee of the Whole as the concluding document of the fifteenth special session of the Assembly.

Review of the third special session

The General Assembly, in accordance with a 1987 decision,⁽⁵⁾ considered at its regular session in 1988 the agenda item "Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its fifteenth special session".

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/77 B by recorded vote.

Third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Convinced that, in the international community's continuing search for lasting security, multilateral action has an increasingly important role,

Welcoming the fact that during recent years a favourable climate has developed within the international community and progress has been recorded in some important fields of disarmament,

Encouraged by the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, which represents a valuable initial step in the reduction of nuclear weapons,

Taking into account that, despite the positive processes and developments, the general situation with regard to armament is far from satisfactory,

Stressing the necessity of mutually complementary bilateral, regional and global approaches for success in disarmament negotiations and the attainment of peace and security,

Expressing its regret that the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament, ended without agreement on a concluding document,

Reaffirming the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, which reflected a historic consensus on the part of the international community that the halting and reversing of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the achievement of genuine disarmament are tasks of primary importance and urgency,

1. Considers that the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly served the purpose of increasing awareness of the areas where future efforts should be concentrated and underscored the urgency that States should work resolutely for the common cause of curbing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and achieving disarmament;

2. take note with appreciation of the numerous constructive proposals submitted by Member States to the General Assembly at its fifteenth special session aimed at advancing disarmament and increasing security;

3. Calls upon all Member States to contribute to the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, as it provides the most appropriate forum for all Member States to contribute actively and collectively to the consideration and resolution of disarmament issues that have a bearing on their security;

4. Considers that the contribution of the special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament has been useful in reviewing and assessing the results of the efforts of Member States in moving forward deliberations and negotiations on all disarmament and related issues, and that they can provide a new direction and impetus for these efforts;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Special sessions on disarmament".

Comprehensive approaches to disarmament

In 1988, all the principal intergovernmental disarmament bodies again discussed enhancing the United Nations role in disarmament and increasing the efficiency of the existing machinery for deliberations and negotiations on the topic. (In addition to the activities of those bodies, this section deals with the measures taken to follow up on the decisions adopted at the 1978 and 1982 special sessions, along with developments relating to a proposed world disarmament conference.)

UN disarmament bodies and their activities in 1988

The United Nations continued its disarmament efforts in 1988, mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary organ of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multi-lateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, met in New York from 2 to 20 May 1988.⁽¹⁾ It also met on 1 December to elect its officers and consider the provisional agenda for its 1989 session.

The Commission's agenda in 1988 included items on aspects of the arms race, particularly a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament; reduction of military budgets; South Africa's nuclear capability; review of the United Nations role in disarmament; naval armaments and disarmament; issues related to conventional disarmament; verification in all its aspects; and guidelines for confidence-building measures.

The Commission established a committee of the whole, which in turn set up a contact group to consider aspects of the arms race and elaboration of a general approach to disarmament negotiations.

The group met between 4 and 17 May. In the course of its work, the group updated some of the texts under consideration and made some progress towards narrowing areas of disagreement, but it was unable to reach a consensus on a complete set of recommendations. The Commission also established two consultation groups to deal with the reduction of military budgets and confidence-building measures, respectively. Substantive and open-ended consultations were held on naval armaments and disarmament, and a working group was established for each of the other agenda items.

The Commission prepared a special report to the General Assembly at its third special session on disarmament, summarizing the work of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies from 1983 to 1988 inclusive.⁽²⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 A without vote.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the special and annual reports of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking into account the relevant sections of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Also taking into account widespread views expressed during the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979, 35/152 F of 12 December 1980, 36/92 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, 38/183 E of 20 December 1983, 39/148 R of 17 December 1984, 40/152 F of 16 December 1985, 41/86 E of 4 December 1986 and 42/42 G of 30 November 1987,

1. Takes note of the special and annual reports of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Commends the Disarmament Commission for its adoption by consensus of a set of principles of verification on disarmament issues as well as a set of guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level, which were recommended to the General Assembly for consideration;

3. Notes that the Disarmament Commission has yet to conclude its consideration of some items on its agenda, but notes also with appreciation the progress achieved on some of these;

4. Recalls the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

5. Stresses the importance for the Disarmament Commission to work on the basis of a relevant agenda of disarmament topics, thereby enabling the Commission to concentrate its efforts and thus optimize its progress on specific subjects in accordance with resolution 37/78 H;

6. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations, at its 1989 substantive session, on the outstanding items on its agenda, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly as well as the results of its 1988 substantive session;

7. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1989 and to submit a substantive report, containing specific recommendations on the items included in its agenda, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the special and annual reports of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the fifteenth special session and the forty-third session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services to this end;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-member multilateral negotiating body, met twice in 1988 at Geneva (2 February-29 April and 7 July-20 September).⁽³⁾ Holding 48 plenary meetings and 18 informal meetings, it considered a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament. The Conference re-established ad hoc committees on chemical weapons, assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons, the prevention of an arms race in outer space and the comprehensive programme of disarmament (details of these questions are discussed elsewhere in this chapter). It continued to consider, but did not take action on, the possibility of increasing its membership by not more than four States. It also held informal consultations on the improved and effective functioning of the Conference.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁵⁾ drew the attention of Member States to the participation in the work of the Conference on Disarmament of States not Conference members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the work of the Conference on Disarmament (43/78 M and I).

The Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 M by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December 1981, 37/78 G of 9 December 1982, 38/183 I of 20 December 1983, 39/148 N of 17 December 1984, 40/152 M of 16 December 1985, 41/86 M of 4 December 1986 and 42/42 L of 30 November 1987,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Expressing its regret that the Conference on Disarmament was not able in 1988 either to establish ad hoc committees or to commence negotiations on nuclear issues on its agenda,

Expressing its expectation that the Conference on Disarmament, in view of the positive current processes in some important fields of disarmament, would be in a position to reach concrete agreements on disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years,

Considering that it is more than ever imperative in the present circumstances to give an additional impetus to negotiations on disarmament at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Notes with satisfaction that further progress has been made in the negotiations on the elaboration of a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, and urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its work with a view to completing negotiations on such a draft convention as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work, to further its mandate more earnestly through substantive negotiations, within the framework of ad hoc committees as the most appropriate mechanism, and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to provide negotiating mandates to ad hoc committees on all agenda items, in keeping with the fundamental role of the Conference as identified in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

UN role in disarmament

Disarmament Commission consideration. In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1987,⁽⁶⁾ the Disarmament Commission⁽¹⁾ in 1988 continued its consideration of the role of the United Nations in disarmament. Working Group II, established on 2 May to deal with the topic, held five meetings and a number of informal consultations between 4 and 19 May. The Working Group, which had 31 working papers before it, set up an open-ended contact group, which held seven meetings between 4 and 16 May.

In carrying out its work, the contact group agreed to use an annex to the 1987 report of the Commission⁽⁷⁾ as the basis for its discussion, on the understanding that all the other documents, views and proposals put forward would be considered on an equal footing. The group discussed machinery aspects of the United Nations role and submitted to the Working Group a working paper that had formed the basis for its deliberations. The paper dealt with the General Assembly and its organs, the Security Council, the Secretary-General, the Conference on Disarmament and other organs. It pointed out that other proposals on the same elements were also before the Commission and that, in addition, proposals had been submitted regarding the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, the World Disarmament Campaign, the specialized agencies, review conferences, Disarmament Week and regional arrangements. The paper outlined areas in which some progress had been made and those on which substantial divergencies remained.

On 19 May, the Working Group agreed to incorporate part of the 1987 annex and the working paper into an annex to its own report⁽²⁾ and recommended that the new annex, which had not been agreed upon, be transmitted to the General Assembly at its special session (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 R without vote.

Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/151 G of 17 December 1984, 40/94 O of 12 December 1985, 41/59 O of 3 December 1986 and 42/38 O of 30 November 1987,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Recognizing the need for the United Nations, in discharging its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament, to play a more active role in the field of disarmament in accordance with its primary purpose under the Charter to maintain international peace and security,

Taking into account the part of the report of the Disarmament Commission relating to this question, and noting the progress made in the consideration of the question at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Bearing in mind the common desire expressed at its third special session devoted to disarmament on the necessity to strengthen the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the increased reaffirmation of faith in the United Nations as an indispensable instrument for international peace and security,

1. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its consideration of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament as a matter of priority at its next substantive session, in 1989, with a view to the elaboration of concrete recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, taking into account, inter alia, the views and suggestions of Member States as well as the aforementioned documents on the subject;

Role of the Security Council

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(s) the Secretary-General submitted in November 1988⁽⁹⁾ a note on action taken regarding the role of the Security Council in the area of disarmament. The Assembly had called on the Council to take the necessary steps for the effective implementation of Article 26 of the Charter of the United Nations with a view to enhancing the central role of the United Nations in facilitating solutions to the issues of arms limitation, disarmament and the strengthening of international peace and security. The President of the Council informed the Secretary-General that the Assembly request, as well as the views of the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR on the role of the Council in disarmament, had been circulated to the members of the Council.

UN resolutions on disarmament

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in August 1988, with later addenda,⁽¹¹⁾ containing information from nine Member States regarding developments in arms limitation and disarmament, including the implementation of relevant Assembly resolutions.

Role of UN organizations and programmes

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1988 a report on the contribution of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament,⁽¹³⁾ outlining the continued efforts in that regard of IAEA, four specialized agencies and five organizations and programmes.

By decision 43/422 of 7 December, the Assembly, taking note of the Secretary-General's report, deferred consideration of the item.

Follow-up to the General Assembly's special sessions on disarmament

At its regular session in 1988, the General Assembly adopted 23 resolutions relating to the implementation of recommendations adopted at its special sessions devoted to disarmament—the first held in 1978 as the tenth special session,⁽¹⁴⁾ the second held in 1982 as the twelfth special session⁽¹⁵⁾ and the third held in 1988 as the fifteenth special session (see above, under “General aspects”). In 1978, the Assembly had adopted a Final Document,⁽¹⁶⁾ and in 1982, a Concluding Document.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Assembly was unable to reach agreement on a document in 1988.

This section deals with resolutions on disarmament and international security, international arms transfers, scientific and technological developments, the United Nations advisory services programme, international co-operation for disarmament, guidelines for confidence-building measures and the 1990s as the third disarmament decade.

Other resolutions relating to these agenda items and dealing with various specific issues are discussed elsewhere in the chapter.

Disarmament and international security

In the Final Document of the tenth special session, the General Assembly had acknowledged that genuine and lasting peace could be created only through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example, leading ultimately to general and complete disarmament under effective international control.

In 1985, the Assembly had noted that the Security Council, which is vested with the responsibility of maintaining international peace and security under Article 26 of the Charter, had not given consideration to the escalating arms race and had called on it to initiate due procedures.⁽¹⁸⁾

In 1988, the Assembly was again seized of the question of international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/76 A by recorded vote.

Disarmament and international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 A of 11 December 1979, 35/156 J of 12 December 1980, 36/97 K of 9 December 1981, 37/100 E of 13 December 1982, 38/73 H of 15 December 1983, 39/63 K of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 A of 16 December 1985,

Expressing the growing alarm of the world community over the dangers of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and its adverse social and economic consequences,

Noting that the present state of the international situation requires that the disarmament principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations become part and parcel of any collective efforts aimed at ensuring a truly safe world, including those undertaken by the Security Council,

Reaffirming that the United Nations under its Charter plays a central role and bears main responsibility in the area of disarmament and the strengthening of international security,

Recalling paragraph 13 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which the Assembly acknowledged that genuine and lasting peace can only be created through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example,

Recalling that, under Article 26 of the Charter, the Security Council is responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, plans for establishing an arms regulation system,

Noting the fact that the Security Council, which is vested under the Charter with the principal responsibility for maintaining international peace and security, has not yet conducted any examination of the question of the adverse effects of the arms race, especially in the nuclear field, on international peace and security, as provided for in the relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, which opens the process of genuine disarmament,

Mindful of the need to use all avenues for further progress through effective measures in the field of disarmament,

1. Calls upon the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, within the framework of its main task, to contribute to establishing and maintaining international peace and security with the least possible diversion of world human and economic resources to armament, and to take the necessary steps for the effective implementation of Article 26 of the Charter of the United Nations with a view to enhancing the central role of the United Nations in facilitating solutions to the issues of arms limitation, primarily in the nuclear field, and disarmament, as well as the strengthening of international peace and security;

2. Recommends that the nuclear-weapon States, which at the same time are the five permanent members of the Security Council, hold joint meetings and provide regular information to the General Assembly, as well as to the Conference on Disarmament, about the state of affairs as regards the range of issues related to disarmament, especially in the nuclear field, the prevention of a nuclear war and the status of the current agreements in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, and about progress at those negotiations which include the participation of the nuclear-weapon States;

3. Recommends that the Security Council consider the question of establishing, under Article 29 of the Charter, such subsidiary bodies as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions to facilitate a solution to disarmament issues;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution within the framework of the agenda item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly".

International arms transfers

In 1988, the General Assembly, in the context of the strengthening of international peace and security, considered the question of international arms transfers. In its 1978 Final Document,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Assembly had advocated that negotiations should be carried out on the balanced reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments, as well as on the limitation of international transfer of conventional weapons, based on the principle of undiminished security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 43/75 I.

International arms transfers

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the central role of the United Nations in strengthening international peace and security and promoting disarmament,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, Member States have undertaken to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources,

Also bearing in mind the inherent right to self-defence embodied in Article 51 of the Charter,

Taking into account the general principles outlined in paragraph 22 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Also taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the United Nations studies entitled Study on Conventional Disarmament, Study on all the Aspects of Regional Disarmament, Study on the Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and Military Expenditures, The Relationship between Disarmament and Development, Reduction of Military Budgets, Relationship between Disarmament and International Security, and Comprehensive Study on Confidence-building Measures,

Further taking into account the action programme set forth in the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

1. Expresses its conviction that arms transfers in all their aspects deserve serious consideration by the international community, inter alia, because of:

(a) Their potential effects in areas where tension and regional conflict threaten international peace and security and national security;

(b) Their known and potential negative effects on the process of the peaceful social and economic development of all peoples;

(c) Increasing illicit and covert arms trafficking,

2. Requests Member States to consider, inter alia, the following measures relating to these concerns:

(a) Reinforcement of their national systems of control and vigilance concerning production and transport of arms;

(b) Examination of ways and means of refraining from acquiring arms additional to those needed for legitimate national security requirements, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region;

(c) Examination of the ways and means of providing for more openness and transparency with regard to world-wide arms transfers;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to take into account the above-mentioned matters in its deliberations on the issue of conventional disarmament;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views and proposals of Member States on the matters contained in paragraphs 1 and 2 above and to collect all other relevant information for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to carry out thereafter, with the assistance of governmental experts, a study on ways and means of promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms on a universal and non-discriminatory basis, also taking into consideration the views of Member States as well as other relevant information, including that on the problem of illicit arms trade, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to make available, within the framework of the World Disarmament Campaign, information concerning the question of arms transfers and their consequences for international peace and security;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "International arms transfers".

Scientific and technological developments

In the 1978 Final Document, the General Assembly had stressed the importance of both qualitative and quantitative measures for halting the arms race, including negotiations on the limitation and cessation of qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction and the development of new means of warfare, so that scientific and technological achievements might be used solely for peaceful purposes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/77 A by recorded vote.

Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it unanimously stressed the importance of both qualitative and quantitative measures in the process of disarmament,

Observing that at no stage since the first special session devoted to disarmament has the qualitative aspect of the arms race been seriously addressed by the international community,

Noting with concern the existing potential in technological advances for application to military purposes, thus escalating the level and sophistication of armaments,

Recognizing that such a development will have a negative impact on the security environment while causing a major setback to disarmament efforts,

Stressing, in this context, the importance of effectively addressing this problem and ensuring that scientific and technological developments are not exploited for military purposes but harnessed for the common benefit of mankind,

Emphasizing that the proposal contained in the present resolution is without prejudice to research and development efforts being undertaken for peaceful purposes,

Recognizing the interests of the international community in the subject and the need to follow closely such developments,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to follow future scientific and technological developments, especially those which have potential military applications, and to evaluate their impact on international security, with the assistance of qualified consultant experts, as appropriate, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

2. Invites Member States to establish panels at the national level to monitor and evaluate such developments and disseminate the assessments provided by the Secretary-General;

3. Also invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and proposals as well as the evaluations of the national panels;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security".

Fellowship, training and advisory services programme

In October 1988,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, stating that 25 fellows had been selected to participate in 1988. The programme, comprising lectures, seminars and research projects on disarmament and security matters, began on 15 July at Geneva and ended in New York on 23 November. In the course of their work, the fellows visited IAEA headquarters at Vienna and, at the invitation of the States concerned, offices and institutions in the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Japan, Sweden, the USSR and the United States.

The report described the implementation in 1988 of the regional disarmament programme, which was intended to assist Governments through the organization of training courses at the regional and subregional levels, and the implementation of disarmament advisory services, which aimed to further international co-operation, especially among developing countries, to contribute to disarmament efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of First Committee, the General Assembly, adopted resolution 43/76 F without vote.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985, 41/60 H of 3 December 1986 and 42/39 I of 30 November 1987,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Japan, Sweden, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America for inviting the 1988 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the programme within existing resources;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the programme.

Reaffirming the importance of achieving international co-operation in the field of arms limitation and disarmament,

Taking into account that since its forty-second session there have been important and encouraging developments in the areas of arms limitation and disarmament,

Stressing also the vital importance of proceeding to balanced, mutually acceptable, fully verifiable and effective measures of arms limitation and disarmament, in accordance with established priorities, for the preservation of peace and the strengthening of international security,

2. Calls upon all States to aim at strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in fulfilling its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament and to contribute actively to the consideration and resolution of all disarmament issues that have a bearing on their security and other fundamental interests;

3. Also invites all States to consider, in a spirit of co-operation, ways and means to facilitate both bilateral and multilateral solutions to disarmament.

Confidence-building measures

In 1986,⁽²⁰⁾ the Disarmament Commission had provisionally approved guidelines for confidence-building measures and for their global or regional implementation.

In response to a 1987 Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ the Commission, on 2 May 1988, established a consultation group to finalize the draft guidelines. The group held six meetings between 5 and 18 May. It considered the three outstanding paragraphs contained in an annex to the 1986 report of the Commission and adopted a compromise text which it recommended to the Commission. On 19 May, the Commission adopted by consensus the report of the consultation group and the recommendations contained therein, which formed part of its own report to the Assembly at its third special session.⁽²⁾

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 H without vote.

Guidelines for confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/39 F, adopted without a vote on 30 November 1987,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission containing the agreed text of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level,

Appreciative of the work accomplished by the Disarmament Commission in finalizing the text of these guidelines,

Reaffirming its conviction that confidence-building measures, especially when applied in a comprehensive manner, have a potential to contribute significantly to the enhancement of peace and security and to promote and facilitate the attainment of disarmament measures,

Mindful of the fact that confidence-building measures, while neither a substitute nor a pre-condition for arms limitation and disarmament measures, can be conducive to achieving progress in disarmament,

Realizing that effective disarmament and arms limitation measures which directly limit or reduce military potential have particularly high confidence-building value,

Appealing to all States to consider the widest possible use of confidence-building measures in their international relations,

Aware that there are situations peculiar to specific regions which have a bearing on the nature of the confidence-building measures feasible in those regions,

Noting with satisfaction the encouraging results of specific confidence-building measures agreed upon and implemented in some regions,

Pointing to the example of progress in the implementation of confidence- and security-building measures adopted at Stockholm in 1986 that has contributed to more stable relations and increased security, reducing the risk of military confrontation in Europe,

1. Endorses the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level, as adopted by consensus by the Disarmament Commission at its 1988 substantive session;

2. Recommends these guidelines to all States for implementation, fully taking into account the specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of these guidelines on the basis of national reports on accumulated relevant experience;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Implementation of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures".

Implementation of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade

In 1980, the General Assembly had declared the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade.⁽²²⁾ In its review and appraisal of that Declaration in 1985, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Disarmament Commission, had requested the Secretary-General to report annually on the implementation of the Declaration.⁽²³⁾

In an August 1988 report and later addendum,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, pursuant to the Assembly's request, he had received information from Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Ghana and the USSR, which reflected their continuing commitment to the objectives of the 1980 Declaration.

Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/78 L without vote.

Consideration of the declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, in which it declared the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade,

Recalling also its resolution 34/75 of 11 December 1979, in which it directed the Disarmament Commission to prepare elements of a draft resolution entitled "Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade" for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session for consideration and adoption,

Bearing in mind that the Second Disarmament Decade declared by its resolution 35/46 is coming to an end,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations in the attainment of disarmament,

Noting the progress in the disarmament talks between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and its positive impact on the attainment of global peace and security,

Desirous of maintaining the current momentum in the disarmament process,

Convinced that a third disarmament decade will accelerate the disarmament process,

1. Decides to declare the decade of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade;

2. Directs the Disarmament Commission, at its 1989 substantive session, to prepare elements of a draft resolution to be entitled "Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade" and to submit them to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session for consideration and adoption;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views and suggestions of Member States and of relevant specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency on the possible elements to be included in the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade and to make these available to the Disarmament Commission at its 1989 substantive session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Disarmament Commission in implementing the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade".

General and complete disarmament

Under the subject of general and complete disarmament, the General Assembly discussed the issues of information on military matters, disarmament and development, naval armaments and disarmament, and a review conference of the parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof.

Information on military matters

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General issued a report in May 1988, with subsequent addenda,⁽²⁶⁾ for consideration at the fifteenth special session of the Assembly, containing the views of the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany (on behalf of the member States of the European Community), Hungary, Poland and the United States on ways of ensuring confidence and furthering openness and transparency in military matters.

The report also supplied information on the question of the international system for standardized reporting of military expenditures, implementation of which had been recommended by the Assembly in 1987⁽²⁵⁾ and which was aimed at achieving a realistic comparison of military budgets. Of the 24 States reporting on their military expenditures in 1987, 22 had used the reporting system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 G by recorded vote.

Objective information on military matters
The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 105 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which the Assembly encouraged Member States to ensure a better flow of information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information concerning armaments and to concentrate on the danger of escalation of the arms race and on the need for general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Taking into account the attention paid to the questions of openness and of ensuring an exchange of objective information in the military field at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction that recent agreements in the field of arms limitation and disarmament have provided for qualitatively new standards of openness,

Believing that the adoption of confidence-building measures to promote openness and transparency would contribute to the prevention of misperceptions of military capabilities and intentions which would induce States to undertake armaments programmes leading to the acceleration of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and to heightened international tensions,

Believing also that balanced and objective information on all military matters, in particular of nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements, and thereby help to halt and reverse the arms race,

Recognizing that greater openness and transparency would contribute to enhancing security,

Convinced that greater openness on military activities, inter alia, through transmittal of relevant information on these activities, including on the levels of military budgets, would contribute to increased confidence among States,

Taking into account the work undertaken in the Disarmament Commission on the reduction of military budgets,

Noting with satisfaction that an increased number of States have provided annual reports on military expenditures in conformity with the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures under the auspices of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on this subject to the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

2. Reaffirms its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military capabilities would help relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States on a global, regional or subregional level and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements;

3. Recommends that those States and global, regional and subregional organizations which have already expressed support for the principle of practical and concrete confidence-building measures of a military nature on a global, regional or subregional level should intensify their efforts with a view to adopting such measures;

4. Recommends that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, should implement the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, with the aim of achieving a realistic comparison of military budgets, facilitating the availability of objective information on, as well as objective assessment of, military capabilities and contributing to the process of disarmament;

5. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General before 30 April 1989 measures they have adopted towards these ends, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

6. Also invites all Member States also to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on ways and means of further consolidating the emerging trend towards greater openness in military matters, specifically with regard to the provisions of objective information on military matters, for consideration by the Disarmament Commission at its 1990 session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters".

Naval armaments and disarmament

In 1988, the Disarmament Commission continued consideration of naval armaments and disarmament, on the basis of the 1985 study on the naval arms race,⁽²⁷⁾ the 1987 Chairman's paper on the topic,⁽²⁸⁾ and working papers submitted by delegations in 1987 and 1988.

As in 1987, the Chairman of the Commission entrusted a group with substantive open-ended consultations on the topic. Eight meetings were held on various aspects of the question, including the possibility of measures of naval arms limitation and disarmament and the desirability of applying confidence-building measures at sea, resulting in a number of substantive findings and recommendations. These were incorporated into a working paper by the Chairman⁽²⁹⁾ to form the basis for further discussion of the subject at the third special session devoted to disarmament.

On 19 May, the Commission adopted the report of the Chairman, which was incorporated into its own report to the special session.⁽²⁾

Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2660(XXV) of 7 December 1970, in which it commended the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,

Bearing in mind the provisions of article VII of that Treaty concerning the holding of review conferences,

Also bearing in mind that, in its Final Declaration, the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof, held at Geneva from 12 to 23 September 1983, decided that a third review conference should be held at Geneva at the request of a majority of States parties not earlier than 1988 and not later than 1990,

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

A comprehensive programme of disarmament, as envisaged in the Final Document⁽¹⁶⁾ of the General Assembly's first special session on disarmament in 1978, had been considered annually since 1980 by the Assembly. In 1988, the Conference on Disarmament was unable to reconcile all differences and complete the draft programme.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament continued consideration of a draft comprehensive programme of disarmament between 4 and 8 April and between 29 August and 2 September, in accordance with a 1987 Assembly request⁽³⁵⁾ that it resolve outstanding issues and conclude negotiations on a programme in time for submission to the third special session on disarmament.

The Ad Hoc Committee of the Conference, in April, made some progress, but the report of the Conference to the special session⁽³⁶⁾ reflected points of difference remaining on a number of issues.

The Committee met again between 28 July and 1 September with a view to submitting the comprehensive programme to the Assembly at its 1988 regular session. It also considered a new proposal by Peru relating to the establishment of a zone of peace and co-operation in the South Pacific.⁽³⁷⁾ Although further progress was made in harmonizing positions and narrowing areas of disagreement, the Committee was unable to complete elaboration of the programme and agreed to consider it again in 1989.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 K without vote.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/42 I of 30 November 1987, in which it urged the Conference on Disarmament to resume the work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament at the outset of its 1988 session with a view to resolving outstanding issues and concluding negotiations on the programme,

Having examined the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament concerning its work during the 1988 session of the Conference on Disarmament, which is an integral part of the report of the Conference, and noting the agreement of the Ad Hoc Committee that it should resume its work at the outset of the 1989 session of the Conference with the firm intention of completing the elaboration of the programme for its submission to the General Assembly, at the latest at its forty-fourth session,

Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Comprehensive programme of disarmament".

Verification

The Disarmament Commission, pursuant to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽³⁸⁾ continued consideration of the item on verification in all its aspects in Working Group IV, which held eight meetings between 5 and 18 May 1988. The Group had before it information from 13 Member States in response to the 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽³⁹⁾ a working paper by the Chairman⁽⁴⁰⁾ and another by Canada.⁽⁴¹⁾ The Group considered a number of suggestions for possible recommendations in three major areas of the subject, namely, principles, provisions and techniques, and the role of the United Nations and its Members in the field of verification. It reached agreement on those areas and adopted a text⁽²⁾ by consensus, which it recommended that the Commission submit to the Assembly for consideration at the special session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on verification in all its aspects. Resolution 43/81 A was adopted without vote.

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/38 M of 30 November 1987,

Conscious of the abiding concern of all Member States for preserving respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements on arms limitation and disarmament if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements,

Stressing also that any weakening of confidence in such agreements diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing in this context that, inter alia full confidence in compliance with existing agreements can enhance the negotiation of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Believing that compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is, therefore, a matter of interest and concern to all members of the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations could play in that regard,

Convinced that resolution of non-compliance questions that have arisen with regard to agreements on arms limitations and disarmament would contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications of non-compliance with those obligations for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Also calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of non-compliance questions, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Member States with assistance that may be necessary in this regard;

5. Welcomes efforts by States parties to develop additional co-operative measures, as appropriate, that can increase confidence in compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements and reduce the possibility of misinterpretation and misunderstanding;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements".

7 December 1988 Meeting 73 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/43/894) without vote, 18 November (meeting 43): 38-nation draft (A/C.1/43/L.53); agenda item 139.

Resolution 43/81 B was adopted by recorded vote.

Study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 O of 16 December 1985, 41/86 Q of 4 December 1986 and 42/42 F of 30 November 1987,

Underlining the important role that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has to play in the sphere of disarmament,

Recalling that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that, consequently, all States have the duty to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament,

Noting that the critical importance of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is universally recognized,

Stressing that the issue of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is a matter of concern to all nations,

Reiterating its view that:

(a) Disarmament and arms limitation agreements should provide for adequate and effective measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned in order to create the necessary confidence and to ensure that they are being observed by all parties;

(b) The form and modalities of the verification to be provided for in any specific agreement depend upon and should be determined by the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement;

(c) Agreements should provide for the participation of parties directly or through United Nations organs in the verification process;

(d) Where appropriate, a combination of several methods of verification as well as other compliance procedures should be employed,

Recalling that:

(a) In the context of international disarmament negotiations, the problem of verification should be further examined and adequate methods and procedures in this field should be considered;

(b) Every effort should be made to develop appropriate methods and procedures that are non-discriminatory and that do not interfere unduly with the internal affairs of other States or jeopardize their economic and social development,

Conscious of the fact that the United Nations is already playing a useful role in the field of verification,

Taking note of all proposals that have been put forward in the field of verification by Member States, including those by Canada and the Netherlands, France and the countries of the Six-Nation Initiative,

1. Recognizes that the United Nations, in accordance with its role and responsibilities established under the Charter, can make a significant contribution in the field of verification, in particular of multilateral agreements;

2. Notes with satisfaction the completion by the Disarmament Commission of its work on the subject of verification in all its aspects;

3. Endorses the general principles of verification drawn up by the Disarmament Commission and contained in its report;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts, an in-depth study of the role of the United Nations in the field of verification that would:

(a) Identify and review existing activities of the United Nations in the field of verification of arms limitation and disarmament;

(b) Assess the need for improvements in existing activities as well as explore and identify possible additional activities, taking into account organizational, technical, operational, legal and financial aspects;

(c) Provide specific recommendations for future action by the United Nations in this context;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Verification in all its aspects".

Proposed world disarmament conference

In 1987, the Secretary-General had submitted to the Assembly⁽⁴²⁾ the views of 10 Member States-including the five nuclear-weapon States-on convening a world disarmament conference, first endorsed by the Assembly in 1965.⁽⁴³⁾ The Assembly had requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,⁽⁴⁴⁾ which held no session in 1987, to report to the third special session devoted to disarmament. The Committee met on 14 January and 27 April 1988. Its report⁽⁴⁵⁾ summarized its work since 1982, taking note of the important developments which had taken place in the field of disarmament, particularly in the bilateral sphere. However, while recognizing the continuing validity of the initiative for convening a conference, the Committee recommended that, given the divergence of views on the subject, the work of the Committee be suspended until such time as the Assembly deemed it appropriate to reactivate it.

Nuclear disarmament

Prevention of nuclear war

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the question of the prevention of nuclear war from 7 to 11 March and from 8 to 12 August 1988.⁽¹⁾ In addition to previous documentation, it had before it two new texts submitted by the USSR and the United States: the Agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Establishment of Nuclear Risk Reduction Centers, along with Protocols I and II, signed at Washington, D.C., on 15 September 1987;⁽²⁾ and the Agreement between the same two countries on Notifications of

Launches of Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles and Submarine-Launched Ballistic Missiles, signed at Moscow on 31 May 1988.⁽³⁾ As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire) for an ad hoc committee to consider all relevant proposals, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war.⁽⁴⁾

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission also considered the question of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war. In its report to the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission recommended that all States should co-operate for the adoption of practical and appropriate measures to prevent the outbreak of a nuclear war and to avoid the use of nuclear weapons, and that the Conference on Disarmament should undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations towards that end. It also recommended that the General Assembly welcome the 1987 Agreement on the Establishment of Nuclear Risk Reduction Centers in the United States and the USSR.⁽²⁾

On 7 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/78 B by recorded vote.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in accordance with paragraph 20 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority and that this commitment was reaffirmed by the Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document, it is stated that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States, should consider as soon as possible various proposals designed to secure the avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons, the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives, where possible through international agreement, and thereby ensure that the survival of mankind is not endangered,

Recalling further that, at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, it was generally recognized that the prevention of nuclear war was of utmost concern and that specific efforts, bilateral, regional or multilateral, should be vigorously pursued and measures should be strengthened to reduce and ultimately eliminate the risk of nuclear war,

Reaffirming that the nuclear-weapon States have the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament and for undertaking measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war,

Welcoming measures taken by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to reduce the risk of nuclear war,

Stressing that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Recalling that, in the Political Declaration adopted at the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, all nuclear-weapon States were called upon to enter early into an internationally binding commitment not to be the first to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing that for the sake of international peace and security, military concepts and doctrines must be of a strictly defensive character,

1. Considers that the solemn declarations by two nuclear-weapon States made or reiterated at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, concerning their respective obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, offer an important avenue to decrease the danger of nuclear war;

2. Expresses the hope that those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so will consider making similar declarations with respect to not being the first to use nuclear weapons;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on the item in its agenda concerning prevention of nuclear war and to consider, inter alia, the elaboration of an international instrument of a legally binding character laying down the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war".

The Assembly also adopted resolution 43/78 F on 7 December, again on the First Committee's recommendation and by recorded vote.

Prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all people of the world,

Recalling the provisions of paragraphs 47 to 50 and 56 to 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding the procedures designed to secure the avoidance of nuclear war,

Reiterating that it is the shared responsibility of all Member States to save succeeding generations from the scourge of another world war, which would inevitably be a nuclear war,

Noting that at the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Countries held at Nicosia from 7 to 10 September 1988, the Ministers stated that, being aware that the gravest danger confronting humanity today was the nuclear threat, they welcomed the recent developments in the field of disarmament, which they considered a historic achievement, and emphasized the need to encourage that positive trend through the immediate adoption of measures for the prevention of nuclear war,^a

Recognizing that the prevention of nuclear war requires disarmament measures, and welcoming the first bilateral nuclear disarmament agreement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the elimination of all land-based intermediate-range nuclear forces,

Aware of the essential complementarity which links both bilateral and multilateral disarmament negotiations,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1988 session,

Taking into account the deliberations on this item at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament, and at its forty-third session,

1. Notes with regret that, despite the fact that the Conference on Disarmament has discussed the question of the prevention of nuclear war for several years, it has been unable even to establish a subsidiary body to consider appropriate and practical measures to prevent it;

2. Reiterates its conviction that, in view of the urgency of the matter and the inadequacy or insufficiency of existing measures, it is necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war;

3. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures that could be negotiated and adopted individually for the prevention of nuclear war and to establish for that purpose an ad hoc committee on the subject at the beginning of its 1989 session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Prevention of nuclear war".

On the same date, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/76 E by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Conscious of an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Also convinced that a prohibition of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling that in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1988 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 41/60 F of 3 December 1986 and 42/39 C of 30 November 1987,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the results of those negotiations.

Climatic effects of nuclear war

Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in May 1988⁽⁷⁾ the report of the group of consultant experts appointed by him to study the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, and to examine, inter alia, its socio-economic consequences. The group examined the atmospheric and climatic consequences of nuclear war and its effects on natural ecosystems, agriculture, health and socio-economic systems.

The group reported that conclusive scientific evidence indicated that a major nuclear war, especially if targeted areas were large cities and industrial centres in the northern hemisphere in summer, would entail the high risk of global environmental disruption, with significant reduction of temperatures in that hemisphere and a decrease in rainfall of as much as 80 per cent in temperate and tropical latitudes. The resulting agricultural and ecological devastation would be aggravated by chemical pollutants, an increase in ultraviolet radiation and the likely persistence of radioactive "hot-spots". The group concluded that the widespread impact of a nuclear exchange would constitute a severe threat to world food production and distribution, with the prospect of starvation, a complete breakdown of health care, an increase in damaging ultraviolet radiation and billions of deaths due to direct and indirect effects.

The socio-economic consequences in a world intimately interconnected economically, socially and environmentally would be grave. In addition, the immediate and direct effects of nuclear explosions and the global environmental consequences would each exacerbate the other.

In the group's view, the co-operative, international scientific effort that had identified the new dimensions of nuclear warfare should be continued so as to refine current findings and explore new possibilities. It further suggested that the scientific advances so far achieved should be pursued internationally and underscored the importance of dialogue between the scientific community and public policy makers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 D by recorded vote.

Climatic effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, after referring specifically to the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons, it declared, in paragraph 18, that removing the threat of world war—a nuclear war—is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Recalling also its resolutions 40/152 G of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 H of 4 December 1986, by which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of consultant experts chosen by him, bearing in mind the advisability of wide geographical representation and of their qualifications in a broad range of scientific fields, to carry out a study on the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, which would examine, inter alia, its socio-economic consequences,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General entitled Study on the Climatic and Other Global Effects of Nuclear War,^a

Gravely concerned by the conclusions of that study,

1. Takes note of the Study on the Climatic and Other Global Effects of Nuclear War;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the group of consultant experts that assisted him in the preparation of the study;

3. Commends the study and its conclusions to the attention of all Member States;

4. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the study before 1 September 1989;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution.

Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament

In 1988, the international community remained concerned with the subject of preventing a nuclear war and continued to explore ways of achieving nuclear-arms limitation, banning nuclear-weapon tests, freezing nuclear-weapons production, strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States and creating nuclear-weapon-free zones in many parts of the world.

Following the signing in December 1987 of the INF Treaty between the USSR and the United States,⁽⁸⁾ the parties ratified it on 28 and 27 May 1988, respectively. The Treaty came into force on 1 June.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the question of the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament from 15 to 26 February and from 18 to 29 July.⁽¹⁾ In February, the Conference once again considered a proposal⁽⁹⁾ on a draft mandate for an ad hoc committee to be established to elaborate on paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the Assembly,⁽¹⁰⁾ dealing with negotiations of agreements to achieve nuclear disarmament, and to identify substantive issues for multilateral negotiations. The Conference, in its report⁽¹¹⁾ to the third special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, summarized its work on this issue since 1982 and indicated its failure to reach a consensus on the draft mandate. The Conference also received documentation from several States and welcomed the documents relating to the INF Treaty⁽¹²⁾ by the two major nuclear-weapon States. It expressed the hope for an early conclusion by those States of a treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in their strategic offensive arms.

Despite further informal consultations in July, the Conference was unable to resolve the issue of the ad hoc committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the First Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 E by recorded vote.

Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Believing that all nations have a vital interest in negotiations on nuclear disarmament because the existence of nuclear weapons jeopardizes the vital security interests of both nuclear and non-nuclear-weapon States alike,

Recalling that, in paragraphs 11 and 47 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly stated that the nuclear-arms race, far from contributing to the strengthening of the security of all States, on the contrary weakens it and increases the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war,

Noting that at the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Countries held at Nicosia from 7 to 10 September 1988, the Ministers welcomed the recent developments in the field of disarmament, which they considered a historic achievement, expressed the hope that they would result in further substantive progress in the field of current and future bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament, and emphasized as well the need to encourage this positive trend through the immediate adoption of measures for the reversal of the nuclear-arms race, so as to remove the threat of a nuclear holocaust which endangers the very survival of mankind,^a

Welcoming proposals on the complete elimination of nuclear weapons throughout the world and, especially, the signing of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles,

Considering that it is necessary to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons of all types and versions and their delivery systems as a first step in the process that should lead to the achievement of substantial reductions in nuclear forces, and welcoming in this context the proposals to that end forwarded by the leaders of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania in their various declarations,

Noting that, at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament, and at the 1988 session of the Conference on Disarmament, several proposals on nuclear disarmament were introduced by Member States and that there was general agreement that nuclear disarmament remains a priority objective and represents a central task facing mankind,

Taking into account that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those with the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Convinced of the imperative need to take constructive multilateral action towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

1. Reaffirms that both bilateral and multilateral negotiations on the nuclear and space arms race are by nature complementary to one another;

2. Believes that efforts should be intensified with a view to initiating, as a matter of the highest priority, multilateral negotiations in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

3. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish an ad hoc committee at the beginning of its 1989 session to elaborate on paragraph 50 of the Final Document and to submit recommendations to the Conference as to how it could best initiate multilateral negotiations of agreements, with adequate measures of verification, in appropriate stages for:

(a) Cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems;

(b) Cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(c) Substantial reduction in existing nuclear weapons with a view to their ultimate elimination;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on its consideration of this subject;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament".

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 E without vote.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/59 F of 3 December 1986 and 42/38 H of 30 November 1987,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the most acute and urgent task of the present day is to remove the threat of a world war-a nuclear war,

Recalling and reaffirming the statements and provisions on nuclear disarmament set forth in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and, in particular, provisions that "effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority", contained in paragraph 20, and that "in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility", contained in paragraph 48,

Bearing in mind that the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America agreed in their joint statement issued at Geneva on 21 November 1985 that "a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought" and the common desire they expressed in the same statement calling for early progress in areas where there is common ground, including the principle of a 50 per cent reduction in the nuclear arms of the Soviet Union and the United States appropriately applied,

Noting also that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have conducted intensive negotiations on various issues of disarmament,

Noting further that the Conference on Disarmament has not played its due role in the field of nuclear disarmament,

Believing that the qualitative aspect of the arms race needs to be addressed along with its quantitative aspect,

Bearing in mind that the Governments and peoples of various countries expect that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America will reach agreement on halting the nuclear-arms race and further reducing nuclear weapons,

1. Welcomes the signing and ratification of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, and calls upon the two States strictly to observe and fully to implement the Treaty;

2. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, further to discharge their special responsibility for nuclear disarmament, to take the lead in halting the nuclear-arms race and to negotiate in earnest with a view to reaching early agreement on the drastic reduction of their nuclear arsenals;

3. Reiterates its belief that bilateral and multilateral efforts for nuclear disarmament should complement and facilitate each other;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

7 December 1988 Meeting 73 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/43/856) without vote, 11 November (meeting 34); draft by China (A/C.1/43/L.14); agenda item 64 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 1st Committee 3-25, 30, 34; plenary 73.

On the same date, the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/75 A by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/18 of 18 November 1985, 41/86 N of 4 December 1986 and 42/38 D of 30 November 1987,

Recalling also the Harare Appeal on Disarmament, adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, the Havana Appeal,^a adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries at the special ministerial meeting devoted to disarmament issues held at Havana from 26 to 30 May 1988, and the final documents of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries held at Nicosia from 7 to 10 September 1988,^b

Gravely concerned about the continuing escalation of the arms race, especially in nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, despite the fact that this increases the risk of nuclear war and endangers the survival of humanity,

Convinced that the alternative today in the nuclear age is not between war or peace, but between life and death, which makes the prevention of nuclear war the principal task of our times,

Also convinced that international peace and security can be ensured only through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament,

Further convinced that, in the interest of mankind as a whole, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, in their bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations, should continue their endeavours with the ultimate objective of achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the ratification and commencement of implementation by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America of the Treaty on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament should facilitate and complement each other and that progress at the bilateral level should not be used to postpone or prohibit action at the multilateral level,

1. Calls upon the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to exert every effort to achieve the goal they set themselves of a treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in strategic offensive arms as part of the process leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons;

2. Also calls upon the two Governments to intensify their efforts with the objective of achieving agreements in other areas, in particular the issue of a nuclear-test ban, as a matter of urgency;

3. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament duly informed of progress made in their negotiations.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Also on 7 December, the Assembly, again on the First Committee's recommendation, adopted resolution 43/75 O by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at their meeting at Geneva in November 1985 the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America committed themselves to the objective of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on Earth,

Taking note of the joint statement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America issued following meetings held in Moscow from 29 May to 1 June 1988,^a

Taking note with satisfaction of the report in the joint statement that a joint draft text of a treaty on reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms had been elaborated, through which process the two sides had recorded extensive and significant areas of agreement and detailed positions on remaining areas of disagreement,

Noting the importance of the verification procedures contained in the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles as an example of the high standards of verification that are now achievable in arms control agreements, both bilateral and multilateral,

Believing that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and with full account taken of the security interests of all States, it is possible to achieve far-reaching and effectively verifiable agreements,

Firmly convinced that an early agreement in these negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America in their endeavours, taking into account both the importance and complexity of their negotiations,

1. Welcomes the ratification by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America of the Treaty on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles;

2. Also welcomes the successful commencement of the implementation of the provisions of that Treaty;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking, in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament, the attainment of all the agreed objectives in the negotiations, that is, the resolution of a complex of questions concerning space and strategic nuclear arms with all these questions considered and resolved in their inter-relationship;

4. Invites the two Governments concerned to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

5. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support for the bilateral negotiations and their successful conclusion.

Prohibition of nuclear weapons

In 1988, the General Assembly again considered the question of adequate verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes. To that end, a proposal was made in the Conference on Disarmament that a group of experts be created within the framework of the Conference to study the problem, with the participation of all nuclear Powers at the stage of complete elimination of their nuclear weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/75 K by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981, 37/99 E of 13 December 1982, 38/188 E of 20 December 1983, 39/151 H of 17 December 1984, 40/94 G of 12 December 1985, 41/59 L of 3 December 1986 and 42/38 L of 30 November 1987, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1988 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for both parts of its 1988 session contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering also that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

In 1988, efforts continued towards the negotiation of a comprehensive test-ban treaty in the Disarmament Commission, the Conference on Disarmament and the General Assembly. On 21

January, the heads of State of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania declared in the Stockholm Declaration⁽¹³⁾ that any agreement which left room for continued testing would not be acceptable and that a comprehensive test ban was long overdue.

Note by the Secretary General. Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary General submitted the first annual register⁽¹⁵⁾ of information on nuclear explosions, compiled on the basis of information provided to him between 15 September 1987 and 14 September 1988.⁽¹⁶⁾ The register contained information on nuclear-test explosions reported by the USSR in 1987 and 1988, and on explosions detected in 1987 by New Zealand, a non-nuclear-weapon State.

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1988, as part of its effort to compile proposals for recommendations on a general approach to various aspects of the arms race and questions relating to both nuclear and conventional disarmament, the Disarmament Commission was again unable to reach agreement on a text for a recommendation covering the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty.⁽⁵⁾

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the question of a nuclear-test ban from 15 to 26 February and from 18 to 29 July.

New proposals on a mandate for an ad hoc committee on the issue were made by Czechoslovakia⁽¹⁷⁾ and the Group of 21,⁽¹⁸⁾ but the Conference again could not agree on such a mandate.

By letters dated 5 August⁽¹⁹⁾ and 16 August,⁽²⁰⁾ Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, Sri Lanka, Venezuela and Yugoslavia informed the Conference that they had formally submitted to the three depositary Governments of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (partial test-ban Treaty)⁽²¹⁾ an amendment proposing to convert that Treaty into a comprehensive test ban.

The Conference also considered the reports of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, which met at Geneva for its twenty-fifth (7-18 March)⁽²²⁾ and twenty-sixth sessions (25 July-5 August).⁽²³⁾ The Group's reports gave an account of its work on developing the overall concept of a modern international seismic-data exchange system based on the expeditious exchange of parameter (level I) and wave-form (level II) data and the processing of such data at international data centres. The first phase of activities commenced on an experiment focusing on the exchange and analysis of seismic wave-form segments. The experiment was intended to test methods and procedures to extract, process and transmit the data expeditiously.

A document entitled "Verification of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban: establishing a global seismological network incorporating small-aperture arrays,"⁽²⁴⁾ was submitted by Norway, a non-member of the Conference participating in the Group.

The Conference reported to the third special session on disarmament⁽¹¹⁾ and to the 1988 regular session⁽¹⁾ of the General Assembly on the issue of a nuclear-test ban.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted, on the recommendation of the First Committee, two resolutions (43/63 A and B) on the cessation of all nuclear-test explosions. Resolution 43/63 A was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than thirty years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than fifty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to the attainment of which it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on eight different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Recalling that the Secretary-General, addressing a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 12 December 1984, after appealing for a renewed effort towards a comprehensive test-ban treaty, emphasized that no single multilateral agreement could have a greater effect on limiting the further refinement of nuclear weapons and that a comprehensive test-ban treaty is the litmus test of the real willingness to pursue nuclear disarmament,

Taking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States that act as depositaries of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in article I of that Treaty to conclude a treaty resulting in the permanent banning of all nuclear-test explosions, including all those explosions underground, and that such an undertaking was reiterated in 1968 in the preamble to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, article VI of which further embodies their solemn and legally binding commitment to take effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Noting that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration adopted on 21 September 1985, called upon the nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty to resume trilateral negotiations in 1985 and upon all the nuclear-weapon States to participate in the urgent negotiation and conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, as a matter of the highest priority, in the Conference on Disarmament,

Recalling that the leaders of the six States associated with the five-continent peace and disarmament initiative affirmed in the Stockholm Declaration, adopted on 21 January 1988, that "Any agreement that leaves room for continued testing would not be acceptable",

Taking note with satisfaction of the progress made in the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on the seismic verification of a comprehensive test ban,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

3. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

4. Urges once more all nuclear-weapon States, in particular the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to expedite negotiations to this end;

5. Appeals to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament to promote the establishment by the Conference at the beginning of its 1989 session of an ad hoc committee with the objective of carrying out the multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions;

6. Recommends to the Conference on Disarmament that such an ad hoc committee should comprise two working groups dealing, respectively, with the following interrelated questions: contents and scope of the treaty, and compliance and verification;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions".

Resolution 43/63 B was also adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination, proclaimed since 1963 in the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to continue negotiations to this end,

Bearing in mind also that in 1968 the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons recalled such determination and included in its article VI an undertaking by each of its parties to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date,

Recalling that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965, adopted unanimously, it had stressed that one of the basic principles on which the treaty to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons should be based was that such treaty, which was then to be negotiated, should embody an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations of the nuclear and non-nuclear Powers,

Recalling also that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration adopted by consensus on 21 September 1985, expressed its deep regret that a comprehensive multilateral nuclear-test-ban treaty had not been concluded so far and called for the urgent negotiation and conclusion of such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority,

Noting that article II of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water provides a procedure for the consideration and eventual adoption of amendments to the Treaty by a conference of its parties,

1. Welcomes the submission to the Depositary Governments of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water of an amendment proposal for consideration at a conference of the parties to the Treaty convened for that purpose in accordance with article II of the Treaty;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water".

On 7 December, as recommended by the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/64 by recorded vote.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Convinced also of the consequent urgent need for an end to the nuclear-arms race and the immediate and verifiable reduction and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that an end to nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the ongoing negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in accordance with their joint statement of 17 September 1987, and noting the significant developments on improved verification arrangements to facilitate the ratification of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests, signed on 3 July 1974, and the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976,

Welcoming also the conclusion on 8 December 1987 of the historic Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles and the agreement in principle on and progress made towards an agreement for 50 per cent reductions in the strategic nuclear forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America,

Recalling the proposals by the leaders of the Six-Nation Initiative to promote an end to nuclear testing,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve the discontinuance of all nuclear tests by all States in all environments for all time is through the conclusion, at an early date, of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States,

Reaffirming the particular responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of fundamental importance;

2. Urges, therefore, that the following actions be taken in order that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty may be concluded at an early date:

(a) The Conference on Disarmament should intensify its consideration of item 1 of its agenda entitled "Nuclear-test ban" and initiate substantive work on all aspects of a nuclear-test-ban treaty at the beginning of its 1989 session;

(b) States members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, and all other States should co-operate in order to facilitate and promote such work;

(c) The nuclear-weapon States, especially those that possess the most important nuclear arsenals, should agree promptly to appropriate verifiable and militarily significant interim measures, with a view to realizing a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(d) Those nuclear-weapon States that have not yet done so should adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

3. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take immediate steps for the establishment, with the widest possible participation, of an international seismic monitoring network with a view to the further development of its potential to monitor and verify compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) In this context, to take into account the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including work on the routine exchange and use of wave-form data, and other relevant initiatives or experiments by individual States and groups of States;

(c) To initiate detailed investigation of other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on progress made;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

Nuclear-weapons freeze

Since 1982, the General Assembly had annually called for a freeze on nuclear weapons, but no action had been taken by the nuclear-weapon States. In 1988, the Assembly again considered the issue of a nuclear-arms freeze.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/76 B by recorded vote.

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Convinced that, in this nuclear age, lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the improvement of the relations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and the conclusion of the Treaty on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, as well as their agreement in principle to reduce by 50 per cent their strategic nuclear arsenals,

Convinced of the urgency further to pursue negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of existing nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute an effective step to prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that at the same time it would provide a favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Convinced that the undertakings derived from the freeze can be effectively verified,

Noting with deep concern that nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any action in response to the call made in the relevant resolutions on the question of a nuclear-arms freeze,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to agree to an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree, through a joint declaration, to a comprehensive nuclear-arms freeze, whose structure and scope would be the following:

- (a) It would embrace:
 - (i) A comprehensive test ban on nuclear weapons and on their delivery vehicles;
 - (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;
- (b) It would be subject to appropriate and effective measures and procedures of verification;

3. Requests the nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report, or separate reports, to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-fourth session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Nuclear-arms freeze".

Security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The Conference on Disarmament considered, from 28 March to 1 April and from 22 to 26 August, effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons (also known as negative security assurances). It had on 2 February re-established an ad hoc committee to continue negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on the subject. The Committee, at both sessions,⁽²⁵⁾ considered the question of a single "common formula" to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. In that connection, it also discussed an alternative option whereby nuclear-weapon States would set aside their various unilateral declarations to facilitate effective negotiations and the adoption of a convention, and a further proposal for nuclear-weapon States to give negative security assurances to categories of non-nuclear-weapon States. The discussion, however, revealed that difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests of nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States persisted and the complex nature of the issues involved continued to prevent agreement on a "common formula" for inclusion in a convention. The Committee recommended that work continue to overcome the difficulties.

The Conference adopted the reports of the Committee, which were considered by the General Assembly at its third special session on disarmament⁽¹¹⁾ and its 1988 regular session.⁽¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 43/69.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/72 B of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/155 of 12 December 1980, 36/95 of 9 December 1981, 37/81 of 9 December 1982, 38/68 of 15 December 1983, 39/58 of 12 December 1984, 40/86 of 12 December 1985, 41/52 of 3 December 1986 and 42/32 of 30 November 1987,

Recalling further paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note of the decision of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Seventeenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Amman from 21 to 25 March 1988,³ calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of war,

Considering that, until complete nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the general desire to conclude effective international measures to that end at an early date,

Noting also the unilateral declarations on the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, made by all nuclear-weapon States,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recognizing that effective measures of such security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States would constitute an important contribution to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons,

Aware of the in-depth negotiations on this subject in the Conference on Disarmament during the past ten years,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament^a submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the annual report of the Conference on its 1988 session,

Welcoming the unanimous support in the Conference on Disarmament for continuing the search for a common approach to the substance of negative security assurances and, in particular, to a "common formula", which could be included in a legally binding instrument,

Recognizing the need for a fresh look at the issue, in particular by the nuclear-weapon States, in order to overcome the difficulties encountered at the negotiations in previous years,

Taking note of the proposals on this subject submitted to the Conference on Disarmament,

Considering that the non-nuclear-weapon States having no nuclear weapons on their territories have every right to receive reliable, uniform and unconditional international legal assurances against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need, pending the achievement of complete nuclear disarmament, to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament pursue intensive negotiations in its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons at the beginning of its 1989 session, with a view to reaching such an agreement, taking into account the widespread support in the Conference for the conclusion of an international convention;

3. Appeals to all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate willingness and to exercise the flexibility necessary to reach agreement on a common approach to, including the possibility of a common formula in, an international instrument or instruments of a legally binding character, to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Nuclear non-proliferation

Nuclear-weapon-free

zones and zones of peace

In 1988, the international community again discussed the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace in various regions of the world. Generally, there was continued support for the establishment of such zones in the effort to promote nuclear disarmament and enhance and strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation régime. New proposals were made for the establishment of such zones in the Balkans and in Central and Northern Europe.⁽²⁶⁾ In June, an International Meeting for Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones was held at Berlin.⁽²⁷⁾ On 21 April and 21 October, the USSR and China, respectively, ratified Protocols 2 and 3 of the Treaty of Rarotonga (South Pacific Nuclear-Free-Zone Treaty).

Africa

Since 1964, when the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU),⁽²⁸⁾ the General Assembly had annually called for its implementation. In 1988, as in previous years, the Assembly adopted two resolutions—one on the implementation of the Declaration and the other on the nuclear capability of South Africa.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission continued consideration in 1988 of South Africa's nuclear capability, in response to a 1987 Assembly request.⁽²⁹⁾ The Commission established Working Group I, which based its work on the text of conclusions and recommendations contained in the Commission's 1987 report. It also took into consideration, inter alia, the 1984 report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on South Africa's nuclear capability.⁽³⁰⁾ The Group held nine meetings between 4 and 17 May.

The Commission reported to the third special session of the Assembly on disarmament that, while significant progress had been made in its work on the text of conclusions and recommendations, no consensus had been reached on the text as a whole.⁽⁵⁾ It recommended that work continue in 1989 with a view to elaborating concrete recommendations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1988 report,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that he had continued to follow relevant developments in South Africa and had been in contact with OAU and IAEA, which had provided him with updated information regarding South Africa's nuclear capability in accordance with a 1987 Assembly request.⁽²⁹⁾ With regard to the possibility of signing the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons⁽³²⁾ and the subsequent conclusion of safeguards agreements, discussions were held in August 1988 between the three depositary Governments (USSR, United Kingdom, United States) and South Africa. Those discussions were not conclusive, however, and South Africa continued to hold wide-ranging discussions with many Governments. The depositary Governments indicated that they were resolved to press South Africa further to accede to the Treaty, in the best interest of the countries of the region and of the world.

The Director General of IAEA reported that the General Conference, on 23 September, had resolved to decide in 1989 on a recommendation of the Board of Governors to suspend South Africa from IAEA membership.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/71 A by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December 1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, 39/61 A of 12 December 1984, 40/89 A of 12 December 1985, 41/55 A of 3 December 1986 and 42/34 A of 30 November 1987, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department of Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, as well as of the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Noting the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission, although it made some progress during its substantive session in 1988, failed once again to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

1. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;
2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;
3. Expresses once again its grave alarm at South Africa's possession and continued development of nuclear-weapon capability;
4. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime that enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;
5. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist régime that may enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

6. Demands once again that the racist regime of South Africa refrain from manufacturing, testing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

7. Appeals to all States that have the means to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons and to publicize any information in that regard;

8. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

Abstaining: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/71 B, also on the First Committee's recommendation and by recorded vote.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981, 37/74 B of 9 December 1982, 38/181 B of 20 December 1983, 39/61 B of 12 December 1984, 40/89 B of 12 December 1985, 41/55 B of 3 December 1986 and 42/34 B of 30 November 1987,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity

at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in paragraph 12 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the massive accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by racist régimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, present a challenging and increasingly dangerous obstacle to a world community faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Noting with regret the non-implementation by apartheid South Africa of resolution GC(XXX)/RES/468 adopted on 3 October 1986 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its thirtieth regular session,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity,

Expressing regret that despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission, although it made some progress during its substantive session in 1988, failed once again to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

Alarmed that South Africa's nuclear facilities, particularly those that remain unsafeguarded, enable it to develop and acquire the capability of producing fissionable material for nuclear weapons,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has continued its acts of aggression and subversion against the peoples of the independent States of southern Africa,

Deeply indignant at the persistent policy of hostility by the racist régime of South Africa as demonstrated by its constant encroachment into the territory of Angola, which constitutes an act of aggression against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite repeated appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of these States have, by a ready recourse to the use of veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the implementation of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Stressing the need to preserve peace and security in Africa by ensuring that the continent is a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability;

2. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, in particular its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

3. Also condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa, in particular the decision by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

4. Reaffirms that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

5. Expresses its full support for the African States faced with the danger of South Africa's nuclear capability;

6. Commends the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields;

7. Demands that South Africa and all other foreign interests put an immediate end to the exploration for and exploitation of uranium resources in Namibia;

8. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime;

9. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider once again as a matter of priority during its substantive session in 1989 South Africa's nuclear capability, taking into account, inter alia, the findings of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on South Africa's nuclear capability;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

11. Commends the adoption by the Security Council of resolutions 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and 591(1986) of 28 November 1986 on the question of South Africa, with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

12. Demand once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Latin America

The General Assembly remained seized in 1988 of the item on the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), concerning the application of the Treaty to territories in the region for which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility. Three of those States—the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States—became parties to the Protocol in 1971, 1969, and 1981, respectively. France signed it in 1979, but had not ratified it.

The Treaty's Additional Protocol II had been ratified by the live nuclear-weapon States by 1979.⁽³³⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 7 December 1988, adopted resolution 43/62 by vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 42/25 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979, 35/143 of 12 December 1980, 36/83 of 9 December 1981, 37/71 of 9 December 1982, 38/61 of 15 December 1983, 39/51 of 12 December 1984, 40/79 of 12 December 1985, 41/45 of 3 December 1986 and 42/25 of 30 November 1987 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in-spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the four States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Considering that it is not fair that the peoples of some of those territories are deprived of such benefits without being given the opportunity to express their opinion in this connection,

Recalling that three of the States to which Additional Protocol I is open—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America—became parties to the Protocol in 1969, 1971 and 1981, respectively,

1. Deplores that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations which the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once More urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times and which appears all the more advisable, since France is the only one of the four States to which the Protocol is open that is not yet party to it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled “Implementation of General Assembly resolution 43/62 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)”.

Middle East

In a July 1988 report,⁽³⁴⁾ submitted in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General forwarded the views of four Member States—Burkina Faso, Chad, Egypt and Oman—on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

Egypt had also proposed,⁽³⁶⁾ at the third special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, the formulation of a model draft treaty and the preparation of a study on verification and inspection measures relating to the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/65 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986 and 42/28 of 30 November 1987 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing also the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Invites those countries, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

4. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

6. Extends its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report containing the views of parties concerned regarding the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

7. Takes note of the above-mentioned report;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake a study on effective and verifiable measures which would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, taking into account the circumstances and characteristics of the Middle East, as well as the views and the suggestions of the parties of the region, and to submit this study to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

9. Requests parties of the region to submit to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions with respect to the measures called for in paragraph 8 above;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

Nuclear weapons and Israel

In an October 1988 report,⁽³⁷⁾ submitted in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that he had continued to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities. He forwarded to the Assembly the text of a resolution adopted by the General Conference of IAEA in September 1988, condemning Israel's refusal to submit its nuclear facilities to IAEA safeguards, in compliance with a 1981 Security Council resolution,⁽³⁹⁾ and requesting IAEA, pending the acceptance by Israel to place all its nuclear facilities under its safeguards, to prepare a technical study on different modalities of application of IAEA safeguards in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/80 by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is 42/44 of 30 November 1987.

Recalling its resolution 42/28 of 30 November 1987, in which, inter alia, it called for placing all nuclear facilities in the region under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981, in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting that only Israel has been specifically called upon by the Security Council to place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Taking into consideration resolution GC(XXXII)/RES/487 of 23 September 1988 adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which the General Conference strongly condemned the continued refusal by Israel to renounce the possession of nuclear weapons and to submit all its nuclear facilities to the Agency's safeguards in compliance with Security Council resolution 487(1981),

Deeply alarmed by the information with regard to the continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel,

Aware of the grave consequences that endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Deeply concerned that the declared Israeli policy of attacking and destroying nuclear facilities devoted to peaceful purposes is a part of its nuclear armament policy,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons;

2. Reiterates also its condemnation of the co-operation between Israel and South Africa;

3. Requests once more the Security Council to take urgent and effective measures to ensure that Israel complies with Council resolution 487(1981);

4. Demand once more that Israel place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

5. Calls upon all States and organizations that have not yet done so to discontinue co-operating with and giving assistance to Israel in the nuclear field;

6. Reiterates its request to the International Atomic Energy Agency to suspend any scientific co-operation with Israel that could contribute to its nuclear capabilities;

7. Requests also the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the Secretary-General of any steps Israel may take to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

South Asia

In 1987, the General Assembly had welcomed a proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia and had noted another proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia.⁽⁴⁰⁾

The Secretary-General, in an August 1988 report on developments in respect of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,⁽⁴¹⁾ transmitted the view of Maldives which, while supporting the creation of such a zone, considered as premature any proposal to conclude bilateral or regional agreements or the convening of an international conference, without prior consultation among States of the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/66 by recorded vote,

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986 and 42/29 of 30 November 1987 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting with appreciation the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the recent proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Taking note of the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia; as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Eking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁴²⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions in 1988 (New York, 11-15 April, 11-22 July) as it continued to consider practical measures for achieving the implementation of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.⁽⁴⁴⁾

The Committee also continued the preparatory work for the convening of the Conference on the Indian Ocean. In April, it was unable to arrive at a decision on Sri Lanka's invitation to hold its second session at Colombo, owing to formal objection by one delegation. The Committee adopted by consensus its report to the third special session of the Assembly on disarmament,⁽⁴⁵⁾ in which it urged the Assembly to reaffirm its full support for the implementation of the Declaration and requested the continued assistance of the Secretary-General to enable the completion of its remaining preparatory work for the early convening of the Conference.

In July, the open-ended Working Group of the Committee agreed on 20 substantive issues and principles,⁽⁴⁶⁾ which it considered a good basis for further elaboration in the subsequent preparation of a draft final document of the Conference on the Indian Ocean. The Committee agreed to update a 1983 document⁽⁴⁷⁾ containing the views of its members on a zone of peace which were arranged on the basis of an informal list of seven topics: geographical limits; foreign military presence; nuclear weapons; security; peaceful settlement of disputes; use of the Indian Ocean by foreign vessels and aircraft; and other matters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/79 without vote.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-1012 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981, 37/96 of 13 December 1982, 38/185 of 20 December 1983, 39/149 of 17 December 1984, 40/153 of 16 December 1985, 41/87 of 4 December 1986, 42/43 of 30 November 1987 and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the establishment of zones of peace in various regions of the world under appropriate conditions, to be clearly defined and determined freely by the States concerned in the zone, taking into account the characteristics of the zone and the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and in conformity with international law, can contribute to strengthening the security of States within such zones and to international peace and security as a whole,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security, as well as to the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and peaceful development of the States of the region,

Convinced that agreement on such action should be facilitated by encouraging developments in international relations that could have beneficial effects on the region,

Also convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Further convinced that the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area is an important consideration bearing on the question of the urgent convening of the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo and that the further easing of tension in the area would enhance the prospect of success of the Conference,

Considering that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration,

Recalling the decision of the Ad Hoc Committee to make every effort, in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area and of progress made in the harmonization of views, to finalize, in accordance with its normal methods of work, all preparations for the Conference, including dates for its convening,

Noting that, in accordance with resolution 42/43, the Ad Hoc Committee submitted a report, adopted by consensus, to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, and urged it to reaffirm its full support for the implementation of the Declaration,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee has requested the Secretary-General to continue to extend to it all necessary assistance in order to facilitate the intensification of the Committee's work towards the implementation of its mandate and to enable the completion of its remaining preparatory work for the early convening of the Conference, as repeatedly called for by the Assembly, in particular in its resolution 42/43,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Reaffirms full support for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace;

3. Reiterates and emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo, as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace adopted in 1971;

4. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions, and requests the Committee to intensify its work with regard to the implementation of its mandate;

5. Notes with satisfaction that in the implementation of the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee, including the preparatory work for the convening of the Conference, as called for in the relevant resolutions recommended by the Committee and adopted by the General Assembly by consensus, progress has been made by the Working Group of the Ad Hoc Committee in its meetings during the sessions of the Committee in 1988;

6. Urges the Ad Hoc Committee to intensify its discussions of substantive issues and principles, including those identified by the Chairman of the Working Group in his report dated 14 July 1988, with the aim of elaborating elements that might be taken into consideration during the subsequent preparation of a draft final document of the Conference;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold two preparatory sessions during the first half of 1989, the first with a duration of one week and the second with a duration of two weeks, for completion of the remaining preparatory work relating to the Conference on the Indian Ocean to enable the convening of the Conference at Colombo in 1990 in consultation with the host country;

8. Notes that the Ad Hoc Committee will, during its preparatory sessions in 1989, continue to keep under review the need to organize its work more effectively in order to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

9. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee should commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, which took place in July 1979, during its preparatory sessions in 1989;

10. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his consultations on the participation in the work of the Committee by States Members of the United Nations which are not members of the Committee, with the aim of resolving this matter at the earliest possible date;

11. Also requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to consult the Secretary-General at the appropriate time on the establishment of a secretariat for the Conference;

12. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records, in recognition of its preparatory function.

Preparation for the

1990 Review Conference of NPT

The 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons⁽³²⁾ provides for the holding of review conferences at intervals of five years. The first three conferences were held in 1975,⁽⁴⁸⁾ 1980⁽⁴⁹⁾ and 1985.⁽⁵⁰⁾ The 1985 Conference had proposed to the depositary Governments, in its Final Declaration, that a fourth conference be held in 1990.

At the request of 66 States, transmitted by the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States,⁽⁵¹⁾ the General Assembly included an item on the implementation of the conclusions of the Third Review Conference and establishment of a preparatory committee for the fourth conference in the agenda of its 1988 regular session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/82 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the conclusions of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and establishment of a Preparatory Committee for the Fourth Review Conference
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2373(XXII) of 12 June 1968, the annex to which contains the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Bearing in mind the provisions of article VIII, paragraph 3, of that Treaty concerning the holding of successive review conferences,

Noting that, in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, held at Geneva from 27 August to 21 September 1985, the Conference proposed to the Depositary Governments that a fourth conference to review the operation of the Treaty be convened in 1990, and also noting that there appears to be a consensus among the parties that the Fourth Review Conference should be held at Geneva in August/September of that year,

1. Notes that, following appropriate consultations, an open-ended preparatory committee has been formed of parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons serving on the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency or represented in the Conference on Disarmament, as well as any, party to the Treaty that may express its interest in participating in the work of the preparatory committee;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and its preparation.

Prohibition or restriction of other weapons

Progress was made in 1988 by the Conference on Disarmament in elaborating a convention banning the development, production and stockpiling of chemical, biological and radiological weapons. In addition, efforts to prevent an arms race in outer space continued to receive attention both within and outside the United Nations.

Chemical and biological weapons

During 1988, efforts continued in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly towards the elaboration of a convention on a comprehensive ban of chemical weapons.

During the Assembly's 1988 regular session, the United States proposed the convening of a conference to consider actions to uphold the authority and, in its words, to reverse the serious erosion of the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous and Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare. France offered to host the conference, which was later scheduled to take place in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989.

In May and August 1988, the Security Council, in resolutions 612(1988) and 620(1988), condemned the continued use of chemical weapons, contrary to the obligations under the Geneva Protocol, and called on States to continue to apply, establish or strengthen strict control of the export of chemical products serving for the production of chemical weapons. It also decided to consider appropriate and effective measures should there be any future use of chemical weapons.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament continued negotiations on a convention banning chemical and biological weapons from 14 to 25 March and from 15 to 19 August.⁽¹⁾

The Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, re-established by the Conference on 9 February, held 21 meetings between 12 February and 12 September and its Chairman also held informal consultations. The Committee submitted to the Conference a report on its inter-sessional work in January⁽²⁾ and a special report,⁽³⁾ submitted in view of the third special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament. Both reports contained the rolling text of the draft convention, reflecting the stage of negotiations reached.

New documents were submitted to the Conference on the multilateral exchange and provision of data relevant to the convention by the Federal Republic of Germany⁽⁴⁾ and the USSR;⁽⁵⁾ on the order, method and technology for the destruction of chemical weapons and their facilities by the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy,⁽⁶⁾ the USSR⁽⁷⁾ and the United States;⁽⁸⁾ and on the use of chemical weapons by Australia,⁽⁹⁾ the Federal Republic of Germany⁽¹⁰⁾ and Iran.⁽¹¹⁾ The United States made proposals for monitoring chemical activities not prohibited by a convention, and the Federal Republic of Germany put forward a case for checks on production facilities in the industry and a list of super-toxic lethal chemicals relevant to the convention.⁽¹³⁾ The USSR disclosed the size of its chemical weapons stockpile⁽¹⁴⁾ and the United Kingdom provided information on its past production of chemical warfare agents.⁽¹⁵⁾

Other ideas and proposals were put forward in working papers submitted to the Ad Hoc Committee. New documents on verification problems were submitted by the German Democratic Republic, on the possible composition, size and decision-making process of the executive council of the envisaged verification inspectorate,⁽¹⁶⁾ by Canada, on factors involved in determining the inspectorate's personnel and resource requirements;⁽¹⁷⁾ and by Finland⁽¹⁸⁾ and Norway⁽¹⁹⁾ (both non-members), on verification procedures.

The work of the Committee was conducted in three working groups. It was decided to focus efforts in the first instance on articles III to XVI of the proposed convention and to consider articles I and II on general provisions and on definitions and criteria in July. On 29 April, the Conference adopted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee,⁽³⁾ which formed an integral part of its own report to the third special session of the Assembly on disarmament.⁽²⁰⁾

In July, the Committee continued the negotiations and further elaboration of the convention and agreed that its three working groups would consider, respectively: permitted activities and economic and technological development; general provisions on scope, definitions and criteria, declarations, elimination of chemical weapons, chemical weapons production facilities and assistance; and national implementation measures, the organization to achieve the objectives of the convention, consultations, co-operation and fact-finding. The Committee Chairman conducted open-ended consultations to prepare for multilateral trial inspections in the chemical industry.

On 20 September, the Conference adopted the Ad Hoc Committee's report,⁽²¹⁾ which formed part of its own report to the General Assembly at its 1988 regular session.⁽¹⁾ The Ad Hoc Committee recommended to the Conference that further negotiation and drafting of the convention make use of the appendices to its report and other documents reflecting the results of the work of the Committee. It also recommended that it examine further the question of undiminished security during the destruction period and the proper place in the text of the proposed convention for provisions concerning the issue. The Committee further recommended that it be re-established at the outset of the 1989 session.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1988⁽²³⁾ that the group of experts he had appointed to assist him in the development of further technical guidelines and procedures for the timely and efficient investigation of reports of the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons had been unable to complete its final consolidated report. Accordingly, he recommended that, given the importance of the task, more time be provided for completing the mandate. In an annex to the report, the Secretary-General provided replies received from 21 Member States in response to his request for names of qualified experts and laboratories that might be in a position to assist him in his mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/74 A without vote.

Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a chemical weapons convention
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/37 C of 30 November 1987,
Recalling also the rules and principles of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict,

Reaffirming its dedication to protecting humanity from chemical and biological warfare,

Expressing deep dismay at the use of chemical weapons in violation of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of other rules of customary international law, at indications of their emergence in an increasing number of national arsenals and at the growing risk that they may be used again,

Recalling the provisions of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and other relevant rules of customary international law,

Recalling also the necessity for adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Bearing in mind the resolutions of the Security Council on chemical weapons adopted during 1988,

Noting that prompt and impartial investigation of reports of possible use of chemical and bacteriological weapons would further enhance the authority of the Geneva Protocol,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the meeting of the group of qualified experts established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 42/37 C to develop further the technical guidelines and procedures available to the Secretary-General for the timely and efficient investigation of reports of the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons,

Recalling that, in its resolution 620(1988) of 26 August 1988, the Security Council decided to consider immediately, taking into account the investigations of the Secretary-General, appropriate and effective measures in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Secretary-General, and noting the procedures available to him in support of the principles and objectives of the Geneva Protocol,

1. Renews its call to all States to observe strictly the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, and condemns vigorously all actions that violate this obligation;

2. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to accede to the 1925 Geneva Protocol;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to pursue as a matter of continuing urgency its negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

4. Calls upon all States to be guided in their national policies by the need to curb the spread of chemical weapons pending the conclusion of such a convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out promptly investigations in response to reports that may be brought to his attention by any Member State concerning the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons that may constitute a violation of the Geneva Protocol or other rules of customary international law in order to ascertain the facts of the matter, and to report promptly the results of any such investigation to all Member States, in accordance with the procedures established by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/37 C;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, pursuant to resolution 42/37 C, with the assistance of the group of qualified experts provided by interested Member States, to continue his efforts to develop further technical guidelines and procedures available to him for the timely and efficient investigation of such reports of the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons, and to report to Member States as soon as possible;

7. Requests Member States and the relevant international organizations to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the above-mentioned work;

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction.

Reaffirming the urgent necessity, particularly following recent United Nations reports, of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and taking note with satisfaction of the proposal to convene a conference to that effect,

Reaffirming also the urgent necessity of the adherence by all States to the Convention of the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Taking note of the Final Document of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by consensus on 26 September 1986, and, in particular, of article IX of the Final Declaration of the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which incorporates, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, and noting that following the precedents set over the past four years, consultations are continuing during the inter-sessional period, thus increasing the time devoted to negotiations,

Convinced of the necessity that all efforts be exerted for the continuation and successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

Expressing the hope that the conference referred to above will also give a strong impetus to that end,

Conscious of the need to share data relevant to the negotiations on a future convention banning all chemical weapons on a global basis and of the fact that the provision of such data would be an important confidence-building measure.

Noting the bilateral and other discussions, including the ongoing exchange of views between the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the framework of the multilateral negotiations, on issues related to the prohibition of chemical weapons,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made at all levels by States to facilitate the earliest conclusion of a convention and, in particular, the concrete steps designed to promote confidence and to contribute directly to that goal,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the work of the Conference on Disarmament during its 1988 session regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons, and in particular appreciates the progress in the work of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons on that question and the tangible results recorded in its report;

2. Expresses again none the less its regret and concern that, notwithstanding the progress made in 1988, a convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges again the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of high priority, to intensify, during its 1989 session, the negotiations on such a convention and to reinforce further its efforts by, inter alia, increasing the time during the year that it devotes to such negotiations, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, with a view to the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest possible date, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons for this purpose with the mandate to be agreed upon by the Conference at the beginning of its 1989 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the results of its negotiations;

5. Encourages Member States to take further initiatives to promote confidence and openness in the negotiations and to provide further information to facilitate prompt resolution of outstanding issues, thus contributing to an early agreement on, and universal adherence to, a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

6. Recognizes the importance of declarations made by States on whether or not they possess chemical weapons and of further international exchanges of data in connection with the negotiations on a multilateral convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction;

7. Welcomes the offer by the French Government to convene in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989 a conference of the States parties to the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous and Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, and of other interested States;

8. Expresses the hope that all States will contribute actively to the objectives of the conference.

Follow-up to the 1986 Review Conference

At the 1987 Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts⁽²⁴⁾ of the parties to the 1971 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,⁽²⁵⁾ the modalities for a standard procedure for the exchange of information and data on bacteriological and toxin weapons were finalized and adopted. The modalities provided for the first exchange of such information to take place by 15 October 1987 and thereafter by 15 April on an annual basis. In 1988, the second exchange of data and information took place in accordance with that procedure.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/74 B without vote.

Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Recalling its resolution 39/65 D of 12 December 1984, in which it noted that, at the request of a majority of States parties to the Convention, a second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention would be held in 1986,

Recalling that the States parties to the Convention met at Geneva from 8 to 26 September 1986 to review the operation of the Convention with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble to and the provisions of the Convention, including the provisions concerning negotiations on chemical weapons, were being realized,

Recalling also its resolution 41/58 A of 3 December 1986, in which it, inter alia, noted with appreciation that on 26 September 1986, the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction adopted by consensus a Final Declaration,

Pursuing its resolution 42/37 B, and noting with satisfaction that at the time of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention there were more than a hundred States parties to the Convention, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

1. Notes with appreciation that, in accordance with the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, an Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from States parties to the Convention was held at Geneva from 31 March to 15 April 1987, which adopted by consensus a report finalizing the modalities for the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration, thus enabling States parties to follow a standardized procedure;

2. Notes that the Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from States parties to the Convention agreed in its report that the first exchange of information and data should take place not later than 15 October 1987 and that thereafter information to be given on an annual basis should be provided through the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat not later than 15 April;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the second such exchange of information and data has commenced, and calls upon States that have not yet exchanged information and data to do so;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the relevant parts of the Final Declaration;

5. Calls upon all States that have not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so without delay, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention and to international confidence.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

In 1988, the Conference on Disarmament continued consideration of the general question of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons. However, the positions of Member States remained divided, in particular with regard to the need to initiate negotiations on specific types of new weapons, once such weapons had been identified.

At its 1988 regular session, the General Assembly requested the Conference on Disarmament to continue its negotiations on the prohibition of radiological weapons with a view to a prompt conclusion of its work (resolution 43/75 C) and to intensify further its efforts to reach an agreement prohibiting armed attacks against nuclear facilities (43/75 J).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" from 28 March to 1 April and from 22 to 26 August.⁽¹⁾

The Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons, re-established on 2 February, held six meetings from 29 February to 26 August, with a view to reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of such weapons. It also held a number of informal consultations and re-established two contact groups. Contact group A discussed possible elements for a convention, such as the definition of radiological weapons, the peaceful uses of such weapons, the cessation of the use or threat of use of these weapons, and measures of verification and compliance. Contact group B considered issues relevant to the prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities, in particular those pertaining to verification and compliance, as well as other main elements.

The Ad Hoc Committee took note of IAEA's readiness to provide technical assistance to the Conference in its work relating to the prohibition of armed attacks against nuclear installations.

On 26 April, the Conference adopted the Committee's report as part of its own report to the Assembly's third special session on disarmament.⁽²⁰⁾ That report reflected the current state of issues before the Committee.⁽²⁶⁾

On 6 September, the Conference adopted the report of the Committee on the second part of its session as part of its own report to the 1988 regular Assembly session.⁽¹⁾ That report⁽²⁷⁾ indicated that the work of the Committee had contributed to the clarification of the different approaches to the issues under consideration. The Committee recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the 1989 session of the Conference and that it draw on the annexes of its report as a basis for future work.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1988 report on the prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities,⁽²⁸⁾ prepared in response to a 1987 Assembly request,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General referred to the relevant parts of the report of the Conference on Disarmament to the Assembly,⁽¹⁾ which dealt with the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 C without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/38 B of 30 November 1987,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1988 session and that of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament that deal with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the reports of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Recognizes that the Ad Hoc Committee in 1988 made a further contribution to the clarification and better understanding of different approaches that continue to exist with regard to both of the important subjects under consideration;

3. Takes note of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1989 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its negotiations on the subject with a view to a prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end and drawing upon the annexes to its report as a basis of its future work, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

General Assembly resolution 43/75 C

7 December 1988 Meeting 73 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/43/856) without vote, 14 November (meeting 35); 4-nation draft (A/C.1/43/L.9); agenda item 64 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 1st Committee 3-25, 27, 35; plenary 73.

On the same date, again on the First Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 J by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/99 C of 13 December 1982, 38/188 D of 20 December 1983, 39/151 J of 17 December 1984, 40/94 D of 12 December 1985, 41/59 A and I of 3 December 1986 and 42/38 F of 30 November 1987 on, inter alia, the conclusion of an agreement prohibiting military attacks against nuclear facilities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this subject submitted pursuant to resolution 42/38 F,

Gravely concerned that armed attacks against nuclear facilities, though carried out with conventional weapons, could be tantamount to the use of radiological weapons,

Recalling also that Additional Protocol I of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 prohibits attacks on nuclear electricity-generating stations,

Deeply concerned that the destruction of nuclear facilities by conventional weapons causes the release into the environment of huge amounts of dangerous radioactive material, which results in serious radioactive contamination,

Firmly convinced that the Israeli attack against the safeguarded nuclear facilities in Iraq constitutes an unprecedented danger to international peace and security,

Recalling further resolutions GC(XXVII)/RES/407 and GC(XXVII)/RES/409, adopted on 14 October 1983, in which the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency urged all member States to support actions in international forums to reach an international agreement that prohibits armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes,

1. Reaffirms that armed attacks of any kind against nuclear facilities are tantamount to the use of radiological weapons, owing to the dangerous radioactive forces that such attacks cause to be released;

2. Requests once again the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its efforts to reach, as early as possible, an agreement prohibiting armed attacks against nuclear facilities;

3. Requests again the International Atomic Energy Agency to provide the Conference on Disarmament with the technical studies that could facilitate the conclusion of such an agreement;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Recalling its previous resolutions on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Determined to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

Dumping of radioactive wastes

In 1988, the question of the dumping of industrial waste was a major concern of the international community. The Council of Ministers of OAU, in May, adopted a resolution,⁽³⁰⁾ declaring such dumping in Africa by transnational corporations and enterprises to be a crime against Africa and calling on African countries to put an end to agreements or arrangements either concluded or in the process of being concluded for the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes. It also requested international organizations and agencies to assist African countries to establish mechanisms for monitoring and controlling the movement and disposal of such wastes and that the issue be placed on the agenda of the General Assembly. The Group of African States subsequently requested the inclusion of the item.⁽³¹⁾ The matter was also discussed, on the basis of a working paper by Nigeria,⁽³²⁾ at the third special session of the Assembly on disarmament. The paper proposed that the Assembly reflect the growing awareness of the dangers posed to mankind by the clandestine disposal of nuclear and industrial wastes and condemn those activities. It also proposed that the Assembly call on States to take steps, including domestic legislation, barring transnationals and other enterprises within their jurisdiction from such activities.

In September, the General Conference of IAEA adopted a resolution, calling on IAEA to ensure that it in no way allowed nuclear-waste dumping practices, and to give priority to requests by developing countries for assistance in nuclear-waste management. IAEA was also requested to establish a working group of experts to elaborate an internationally agreed code of practice for international transactions involving nuclear wastes. The United Nations Environment Programme was also working towards the drafting of a convention on the control of the transboundary movement of hazardous wastes.

The Conference on Disarmament, in its ongoing negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, also addressed the issue of the dumping of radioactive wastes for hostile purposes or in armed conflict, or the deliberate use of any radioactive material to cause destruction, damage or injury through the decay of such material.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 Q by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes for hostile purposes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolution CM/RES.1153(XLVIII) concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa, adopted on 25 May 1988 by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,

Recalling resolution GC(XXXII)/RES/490 on the dumping of nuclear wastes, adopted¹ on 23 September 1988 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-second regular session,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Determined to prevent all nuclear-waste dumping practices that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Aware of the in-depth consideration of the question of the dumping of radioactive wastes for hostile purposes in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1988 session,

1. Calls upon all States to ensure that no nuclear-waste dumping practices occur that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;

2. Welcomes the decision of the International Atomic Energy Agency to establish a representative technical working group of experts with the objective of establishing an internationally agreed code of practice for international transactions involving nuclear wastes;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to take into account, in the ongoing negotiation for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, the deliberate employment of nuclear wastes to cause destruction, damage or injury by means of radiation produced by the decay of such material;

5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session the developments on the ongoing negotiations on this subject.

Dumping of radioactive wastes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolution CM/RES.1153(XLVIII), concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa, adopted on 25 May 1988 by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,

Mindful of the serious concerns raised by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth session concerning the grave implications that the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes could have on the national security of African countries,

Recalling resolution GC(XXXII)/RES/490 on the dumping of nuclear wastes, adopted on 23 September 1988 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-second regular session,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Aware of the potential hazards underlying the dumping of nuclear wastes and also the transboundary radiological consequences, which could have adverse implications on regional and international security and in particular on the security of the developing countries,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Aware also of the consideration by the Conference on Disarmament during its 1988 session of the question of the dumping of radioactive wastes, which cause destruction, damage or injury by means of radiation produced by decay of such material,

Conventional weapons

Some noteworthy developments took place in the conventional disarmament field in 1988. The two major military alliances undertook substantive preparatory work towards new negotiations on conventional armed forces in Europe that would supersede the Vienna Talks on Mutual Reduction of Forces and Armaments and Associated Measures in Central Europe. The "Group of 23" (the 16 North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NAM) parties and the 7 Warsaw Treaty parties) discussed the mandate for the new negotiations, to take place in the context of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE), and agreed that the new forum would be known as "Negotiations on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe". The United States and the USSR also indicated their intention to reduce their armed forces significantly and to ensure that those forces would be largely of a defensive character.

Disarmament Commission consideration. In response to two 1987 General Assembly resolutions,⁽³³⁾ the Disarmament Commission continued consideration of the question of conventional disarmament, with a view to facilitating the identification of possible measures in the fields of conventional arms reduction and disarmament. The Commission established Working Group III, which had before it the Study on Conventional Disarmament,⁽³⁴⁾ the views of Member States on the Study,⁽³⁵⁾ and working papers presented by China,⁽³⁶⁾ Denmark,⁽³⁷⁾ Hungary,⁽³⁸⁾ India⁽³⁸⁾ and the United Kingdom.⁽⁴⁰⁾ The Group held seven meetings and a number of informal consultations between 4 and 17 May. It was unable to reach agreement on a set of recommendations and therefore recommended that the work of the Commission on conventional disarmament continue in 1989.

On 19 May, the Commission adopted the Group's report, which was incorporated into its own report to the General Assembly at its third special session on disarmament.⁽⁴¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 D without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/38 E of 30 November 1987,

Welcoming the wide support expressed by Member States for greater attention to be given to conventional disarmament,

Also welcoming the increased awareness of the implications of many aspects of the conventional arms buildup, both in its qualitative and its quantitative aspect,

Taking into account that conventional disarmament is a necessary part of the disarmament process,

Recalling the central role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament,

Having examined the reports of the Disarmament Commission to the General Assembly at its fifteenth special session and at its forty-third session,

1. Maintains that the United Nations should continue to encourage and facilitate disarmament efforts in all fields;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue at its 1989 session the substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session with a view to facilitating possible measures in the fields of conventional arms reduction and disarmament;

3. Also request the Disarmament Commission for this purpose to include in the agenda for its 1989 session an item entitled "Substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament";

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

On the same date, the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/75 F without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and particularly its paragraph 81, which provides that together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should be resolutely pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, and which stresses that States with the largest military arsenals have a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions,

Also recalling that in the same document it is stated, inter alia, that priorities in disarmament negotiations shall be: nuclear weapons; other weapons of mass destruction, including chemical weapons; conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects; and reduction of armed forces, and that it stresses that nothing should preclude States from conducting negotiations on all priority items concurrently,

Further recalling that in the same document it is stated that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority, and that real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis,

Aware of the dangers to world peace and security originating from, and the loss in human life and property caused by, wars and conflicts fought with conventional weapons, as well as of their possible escalation into a nuclear war in regions with a high concentration of conventional and nuclear weapons,

Also aware that with the advance in science and technology, conventional weapons tend to become increasingly lethal and destructive and that conventional armaments consume large amounts of resources,

Believing that resources released through disarmament, including conventional disarmament, can be used for the social and economic development of people of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Noting that the ongoing conventional disarmament negotiations in Europe have gained increasing importance,

Bearing in mind its resolution 36/97 A of 9 December 1981 and the Study on Conventional Disarmament conducted in accordance with that resolution, as well as its resolutions 41/59 C and 41/59 G of 3 December 1986, and 42/38 E and 42/38 G of 30 November 1987, and the consideration by the Disarmament Commission at its 1988 session of the question of conventional disarmament,

Bearing in mind also the efforts made to promote conventional disarmament and the related proposals and suggestions, as well as the initiatives taken by various countries in this regard,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the efforts aimed at resolutely pursuing the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament;

2. Believes that the military forces of all countries should not be used other than for the purpose of self-defence;

3. Urges the countries with the largest military arsenals, which bear a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions, and the member States of the two major military alliances to conduct negotiations on conventional disarmament in earnest through appropriate forums, with a view to reaching early agreement on the limitation and gradual and balanced reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons under effective international control in their respective regions, particularly in Europe, which has the largest concentration of arms and forces in the world;

4. Encourages all States, while taking into account the need to protect security and maintain necessary defensive capabilities, to intensify their efforts and take, either on their own or in a regional context, appropriate steps to promote progress in conventional disarmament and enhance peace and security;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider further, at its 1989 substantive session, issues related to conventional disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 1st Committee 3-25, 30, 36; plenary 73.

Regional approach to conventional disarmament

In 1988, the Assembly continued consideration of the question of conventional disarmament on a regional scale, including confidence- and security-building measures and conventional disarmament in Europe.

The Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries (Nicosia, Cyprus, 7-10 September)⁽⁴²⁾ recommended that States should consider and adopt measures at the regional level to strengthen peace and security through the limitation and reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons. It also noted the negotiations on conventional disarmament in Europe between the Warsaw Pact and NATO in the context of CSCE.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/75 S by recorded vote.

Conventional disarmament on a regional scale

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/94 A of 12 December 1985, 41/59 M of 3 December 1986 and 42/38 N of 30 November 1987,

Taking note of the final documents of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries held at Nicosia from 7 to 10 September 1988,

Reiterating the primary responsibility of the militarily significant States, especially nuclear-weapon States, for halting and reversing the arms race, and the priority assigned to nuclear disarmament in the context of the advances towards general and complete disarmament,

Drawing attention to the fact that together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, conventional disarmament measures should be resolutely pursued, in the context of which conventional disarmament on a regional scale acquires urgency and renewed importance,

Affirming that regional or subregional arms limitation and disarmament processes complement and enhance global disarmament efforts,

Expressing its firm support for all regional and subregional peace and disarmament endeavours that take into account the characteristics of each region, as well as for unilateral measures to strengthen mutual confidence and assure the security of all States involved, making possible regional agreements on arms limitation in the future,

Emphasizing that the adoption of such disarmament measures should take place in an equitable and balanced manner in order to ensure the right of each State to security and that no individual State or group of States may obtain advantages over others at any stage of this process,

Noting with satisfaction the positive trend towards the peaceful settlement of various regional and subregional conflicts and the important role played in that regard by the United Nations,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the initiatives towards arms limitation and disarmament adopted jointly or unilaterally by some countries at the regional and subregional levels, as well as at the systematic implementation of confidence-building measures, limitation of the acquisition of conventional weapons and the reduction of military spending, with a view to allocating the resources thus released to the socio-economic development of their peoples;

2. Expresses its keen satisfaction at efforts to bring about the peaceful solution of conflict situations and regional and subregional crises, which would facilitate setting in motion specific measures for conventional disarmament on a regional scale through negotiated agreements under strict and effective international control;

3. Again expresses firm support for the United Nations system, and for the Secretary-General in particular, in the efforts to find solutions to conflict situations, thereby reaffirming the primary role of the United Nations in promoting peace and disarmament, and for the strict observance of the principles and norms embodied in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to persevere in his current peace efforts in various areas of tension in the world;

5. Requests the United Nations to provide assistance to States and regional institutions that might request it with a view to establishing disarmament measures on a regional scale;

6. Appeals to all States to facilitate the progress of regional disarmament, refraining from any action, including the threat or use of force, that might impede the achievement of this objective;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament on a regional scale".

Europe

The General Assembly in 1986⁽⁴³⁾ had welcomed the measures adopted at the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, covering the whole of Europe and designed to reduce the dangers of armed conflict and of misunderstanding or miscalculation of military activities.

Significant progress towards that end had since been achieved and agreement reached on a new regulating forum in the CSCE context. In 1988, it was agreed that the new forum would be known as "Negotiations on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the First Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/75 P without vote.

Confidence- and security-building measures and conventional disarmament in Europe

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,

Reaffirming the need for continued efforts to build confidence, to lessen the risk of military confrontation and to enhance mutual security,

Reaffirming also the great importance of increasing security and stability in Europe through the establishment of a stable, secure and verifiable balance of conventional armed forces at lower levels, as well as through increased openness and predictability of military activities,

Considering that further negotiations in the field of confidence- and security-building measures, as well as a new negotiation on conventional armaments and forces, both within the framework of the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, should promote the process of strengthening confidence, improving security and developing co-operation in Europe, thereby contributing to international peace and security,

1. Welcomes the progress achieved so far in the deliberations at Vienna on issues concerning the above-mentioned negotiations;

2. Urges Member States that will participate in the above-mentioned negotiations to contribute actively to the attainment of their objectives as agreed;

3. Invites all States to consider the possibility of taking appropriate measures with a view to reducing the risk of confrontation and strengthening security, taking due account of their specific regional conditions.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocols

As at 31 December 1988,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the number of States parties to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons)⁽⁴⁵⁾ was 30, following accession by Cyprus and ratification by France during the year. The Convention and Protocols had entered into force in 1983.⁽⁴⁶⁾

The Secretary-General submitted, in response to a 1987 Assembly request,⁽⁴⁷⁾ a report⁽⁴⁸⁾ containing information on action taken with respect to the Convention and Protocols between 1 September 1987 and 31 August 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/67 without vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982, 38/66 of 15 December 1983, 39/56 of 12 December 1984, 40/84 of 12 December 1985, 41/50 of 3 December 1986 and 42/30 of 30 November 1987,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Also notes with satisfaction that, consequent upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

4. Notes that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols;

5. Requests the Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the prevention of an arms race in outer space from 29 February to 4 March and from 1 to 5 August.⁽¹⁾

The Ad Hoc Committee, re-established by the Conference, held 17 meetings between 8 March and 7 September to examine and identify issues pertaining to the item, existing agreements and proposals and future initiatives.

New documents submitted under the item included the Stockholm Declaration of the Six-Nation Initiative, adopted on 21 January 1988 by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, on the complete banning of anti-satellite weapons,⁽⁴⁹⁾ a USSR document on establishing an international system of verification of the non-deployment of weapons of any kind in outer space,⁽⁵⁰⁾ and a Venezuela proposal⁽⁵¹⁾ to amend article IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (outer space Treaty).⁽⁵²⁾ The Committee also received a number of working papers.

The Ad Hoc Committee, in its reports to the Conference,⁽⁵³⁾ concluded that its work had advanced and developed further the examination and identification of issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space. It considered that the legal régime applicable to outer space did not by itself guarantee the prevention of an arms race and recognized the need to enhance the effectiveness of the régime and for strict compliance with existing bilateral and multilateral agreements. The Committee acknowledged the importance of paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the first special session devoted to disarmament,⁽⁵⁴⁾ which called for further measures and international negotiations to be held in accordance with the spirit of the outer space Treaty. It also gave preliminary consideration to a number of proposals and initiatives to prevent an arms race in outer space and to ensure exploration for peaceful purposes.

The Committee recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the Conference's 1989 session with an adequate mandate, taking into account all relevant factors, including the work of the Committee since 1985.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1987 Assembly request,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, in an August 1988 report and later addenda,⁽⁵⁶⁾ informed the Assembly that he had received the views on all aspects of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space from 11 Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/70 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming also the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes,

Recalling the obligation of all States, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, to refrain from the threat or use of force, including in their space activities,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, have undertaken, in article III, to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming, in particular, article IV of the above-mentioned Treaty, which stipulates that States parties to the Treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the Earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner,

Reaffirming also paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty.

Bearing in mind its resolutions 36/97 C and 36/99 of 9 December 1981, as well as resolutions 37/83 of 9 December 1982, 37/99 D of 13 December 1982, 38/70 of 15 December 1983, 39/59 of 12 December 1984, 40/87 of 12 December 1985, 41/53 of 3 December 1986 and 42/33 of 30 November 1987 and the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Recognizing the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective,

Gravely concerned at the danger posed to all mankind by an arms race in outer space and, in particular, by the impending threat of the exacerbation of the current state of insecurity by developments that could further undermine international peace and security and retard the pursuit of general and complete disarmament,

Encouraged by the widespread interest expressed by Member States in the course of negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty in ensuring that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Noting the grave concern expressed by the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at the extension of an arms race into outer space and the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, and also to the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting also that in 1988 the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment, undertook the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Convinced that additional measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Emphasizing also the necessity of maintaining the effectiveness of relevant existing treaties, and in this context reaffirming the vital importance of strict compliance with the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems,

Recognizing that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America could facilitate the multilateral negotiations for the prevention of an arms race in outer space in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Noting the importance in this context of bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America that have continued since 1985, including at their summit meetings in Washington and Moscow on a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms,

Hopeful that concrete results would emerge from these negotiations as soon as possible,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question, welcoming the re-establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space during the 1988 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, to continue to examine and to identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Reaffirms that general and complete disarmament under effective international control warrants that outer space shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it shall not become an arena for an arms race;

2. Recognizes, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Conference on Disarmament, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, the need to consolidate and reinforce that régime and enhance its effectiveness, and the importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes that further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, taking into account all relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1988 session of the Conference and at the forty-third session of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1989 session, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit aimed at reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

10. Calls upon all States, especially those with major space capabilities, to refrain, in their activities relating to outer space, from actions contrary to the observance of the relevant existing treaties or to the objective of preventing an arms race in outer space;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space, submitted in accordance with resolution 42/33 of 30 November 1987;

12. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Other disarmament issues

The question of military budgets continued to occupy the attention of various disarmament bodies, notably the Disarmament Commission, where work continued on a text of principles to govern further actions of States in that regard. The Secretary-General presented an updated report on the economic and social consequences of the arms race.

Reduction of military budgets

Although agreement by the Disarmament Commission on the last paragraph of the proposed principles that should govern the action of States in freezing and reducing military budgets was not reached in 1988, some progress was achieved with respect to the question of transparency and comparability of military data.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission, pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ continued consideration of the text of paragraph 7, the last outstanding paragraph, of the set of principles to govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military expenditures, as elaborated in 1986⁽²⁾ and 1987.⁽³⁾ That paragraph dealt with the principles of transparency, comparability and availability of data, through the use of the standardized international reporting instrument.

A consultation group, established by the Commission on 2 May, held seven meetings and a number of informal consultations between 4 and 18 May. It considered a formulation proposed by the Chairman, as well as other proposals for paragraph 7 which had been submitted in 1986 and 1987. While a general agreement was reached on most of the elements of paragraph 7, the group was unable to achieve a consensus formulation. It recommended to the Commission a draft text of the principles, which was subsequently submitted to the Assembly's third special session on disarmament.⁽⁴⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In September, with later addenda,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽⁶⁾ submitted a report on military expenditures, as disclosed by 31 States. As in previous years, a majority of the reporting States used the standard reporting instrument, consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/73 without vote.

Reduction of military budgets

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Reaffirming once again the provisions of paragraph 89 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, according to which the gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities for the reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that the freezing and reduction of military budgets would have favourable consequences on the world economic and financial situation and might facilitate efforts made to increase international assistance for the developing countries,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, all Member States unanimously and categorically reaffirmed the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, as well as their solemn commitment to it,

Recalling also that in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, it is provided that during this period renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources thus saved to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries, -

Recalling further the provisions of its relevant resolutions, in which it considered that a new impetus should be given to the endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditures, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Considering that the identification and elaboration of the principles that should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets and the other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

Noting that the Disarmament Commission, at its 1986 substantive session, agreed upon the above-mentioned principles with the exception of one outstanding paragraph on which it was generally felt that further consideration was needed,

1. Declares again its conviction that it is possible to achieve international agreements on the reduction of military budgets without prejudice to the right of all States to undiminished security, self-defence and sovereignty;

2. Appeals to all States, in particular to the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of (developing countries);

3. Reaffirms that the human and material resources released through the reduction of military expenditures could be reallocated for economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets" and, in this context, to conclude, at its 1989 substantive session, its work on the last outstanding paragraph of the principles that should govern further actions of States in the field of freezing and reduction of military budgets, and to submit its report and recommendations to the General Assembly not later than at its forty-fourth session;

5. Draws anew the attention of Member States to the fact that the identification and elaboration of the principles that should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets could contribute to harmonizing the views of States and creating confidence among them conducive to achieving international agreements on the reduction of military budgets;

6. Urges all Member States, in particular the most heavily armed States, to reinforce their readiness to cooperate in a constructive manner with a view to reaching agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

Economic and social consequences of the arms race

In May 1988, the Secretary-General, pursuant to 1985⁽⁷⁾ and 1986⁽⁸⁾ General Assembly requests, submitted a report⁽⁹⁾ which updated, with the assistance of a group of consultant experts, a 1982 report on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures.⁽¹⁰⁾

The 1988 report sought to highlight the harmful effects of the arms race on world peace and security, the economy and the social welfare of States. Specifically, it dealt with the economic and technological implications of the various categories of armaments and forces; the natural, economic and human resources devoted to the arms race and the implications of policy decisions; the economic development and social welfare implications of military outlays; and the international consequences of the arms race. It also made recommendations to reduce and reverse the negative consequences of the arms race, while avoiding consequent counter-productive effects.

The group of experts concluded that military expenditures had extensive social and economic consequences, particularly among the leading high-technology military spenders, and contributed to economic stagnation and structural dislocation. In some developing countries, economic development and military spending were competing priorities.

In the experts' view, there was a close correlation between disarmament and the reallocation of national resources for development, while, at the international level, the progress made in arms limitation and conflict settlement should allow the attention of the international community to be shifted to problems of underdevelopment, insecurity and ecological deterioration. Furthermore, industrialized countries should assume a greater responsibility for fostering development co-operation in the context of official development assistance. The experts emphasized the promotion of international action, for both disarmament and development, and in that regard suggested a more effective role for the United Nations system.

The experts proposed that national studies be conducted on the macro-economic dimensions and social consequences of converting resources from military to civilian use. In addition, they supported the call for a periodic assessment of the impact of world-wide military spending on global economic prospects, and suggested that the United Nations support studies on the effects of military expenditures on international trade and finance and the impact of arms reduction on the national and international economy.

The group endorsed the idea of an improved and comprehensive data base on military budgets and expenditures to facilitate the above studies and suggested the encouragement of national policies of self-restraint in military expenditures until appropriate international agreements were negotiated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/78 J by recorded vote.

Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security",

Recalling its resolutions 2667(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2831(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 3075(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 32/75 of 12 December 1977, 35/141 of 12 December 1980, 40/150 of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 I of 4 December 1986,

Deeply concerned that the arms race, particularly in nuclear armaments and military expenditures, continues to increase at an alarming speed, representing a heavy burden for the economies of all States and constituting a grave danger for world peace and security,

Recalling also the numerous statements made by the representatives of Governments during the disarmament negotiations and particularly at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament, to the effect that the vastly increased military budgets have also contributed to current economic problems in certain States and that existing and planned military programmes constitute a huge waste of precious resources which might otherwise be used to elevate living standards of all peoples and solve the problems confronting developing countries in achieving economic and social development,

Reaffirming the need for all Governments and peoples to be informed about and to understand the situation prevailing in the field of the arms race and disarmament,

Bearing in mind the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign, solemnly launched at the twelfth special session, which is intended to promote public interest in and support for the reaching of agreements on measures of arms limitation and disarmament,

Recalling further paragraph 93 (c) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it is provided that the Secretary-General shall periodically submit reports to the Assembly on the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Considering that the elaboration of such reports should be viewed as a measure aimed at building confidence among States,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the updated report of the Secretary-General on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and military expenditures;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General and the consultant experts as well as to the Governments and international organizations that have rendered assistance in the updating of the report;

3. Recommends that the report be brought to the attention of public opinion and also taken into account in future actions by the United Nations in the field of disarmament;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the reproduction of the report as a United Nations publication and to give it broad publicity in the framework of the World Disarmament Campaign;

5. Recommends that all Governments ensure the widest possible distribution of the report, including its translation into the respective national languages;

6. Invites the specialized agencies as well as inter-governmental, national and non-governmental organizations to use their facilities to make the report widely known;

7. Reaffirms its decision to keep the item entitled "Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security" under constant review, and decides to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session.

World Disarmament Campaign

As in previous years, the World Disarmament Campaign—launched by the General Assembly in 1982 at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament⁽¹⁾—continued to inform, educate and generate public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

The Sixth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held on 27 October 1988, during Disarmament Week.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In May 1988,⁽²⁾ in response to a request of the Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session, of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, the Secretary-General submitted an evaluation of the World Disarmament Campaign's activities and financial situation from 1982 to 1988. He observed that the Campaign had firmly established its place on the international disarmament scene and had become the focal point for contact between organizations, research/educational institutes, individuals and the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA). Support from non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and Member States had been crucial to the Campaign's effective functioning. Despite its financial constraints, the Campaign had translated the objectives given to it by the Assembly and implemented activities to further its goals. It had offered a structured framework for fostering public understanding of the efforts of the United Nations in disarmament.

In an October report,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of activities carried out by the United Nations system, including publishing and dissemination of information material, particularly in connection with the third special session on disarmament, and the holding of special events and publicity programmes. Within the Campaign framework, DDA, in co-operation with the Soviet Peace Committee, convened a United Nations meeting of experts (Dagomys, USSR, 12-16 April) to discuss the conceptual issues and technical aspects of verification.

The Department of Public Information (DPI) continued to inform the public about United Nations activities concerning disarmament through radio, television, press releases, films and photographs, and by organizing events at Headquarters and United Nations information centres around the world. For the third special session on disarmament, DPI, in co-operation with DDA, organized a number of activities for NGOs.

Financing

The Sixth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held in New York on 27 October, with 66 delegations participating.

Either during the Conference or at other times during the year, the following pledges were earmarked for the Campaign: Australia ($A 30,000), Austria ($10,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), Cyprus ($1,000), Finland (50,000 markka), German Democratic Republic (100,000 mark), Greece ($5,000), Indonesia ($5,000), Mexico ($5,000), New Zealand ($5,000), Norway ($15,000), Philippines (10,000 pesos), Sri Lanka ($5,000), Sweden (150,000 kronor), Zaire ($1,000); for the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research: Australia ($A 20,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), China ($10,000), German Democratic Republic (50,000 mark), USSR (200,000 roubles and $20,000); for the regional centre in Asia: Nepal ($7,000), New Zealand ($5,000), Norway ($10,000); for the regional centre in Latin America and the Caribbean: Colombia ($1,000), Peru ($15,000) Uruguay ($1,000).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/76 C by recorded vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Recalling also its resolution 42/39 G of 30 November 1987,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General of 19 May 1988 and 4 October 1988 on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign by the United Nations system,

Having also examined the part of the report of the Secretary-General of 10 October 1988 dealing with the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the Sixth United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign, held on 27 October 1988,

1. Reiterates its commendation of the manner in which, as described in the above-mentioned reports, the World Disarmament Campaign has been geared by the Secretary-General in order to guarantee "the widest possible dissemination of information and unimpeded access for all sectors of the public to a broad range of information and opinions on questions of arms limitation and disarmament and the dangers relating to all aspects of the arms race and war, in particular nuclear war";

2. Recalls that, as was also agreed by consensus in the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it is likewise an essential requisite for the universality of the Campaign that it receive "the co-operation and participation of all States";

3. Endorses once more the statement made by the Secretary-General on the occasion of the Third United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign to the effect that such co-operation implies that adequate funds be made available and that consequently the criterion of universality also applies to pledges, since a campaign without world-wide participation and funding will have difficulty in reflecting this principle in its implementation;

4. Reiterates its regret that most of the States that have the largest military expenditures have not so far made any financial contribution to the Campaign;

5. Decides that at its forty-fourth session there should be a seventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States that have not yet announced any voluntary contribution may do so;

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund should not be earmarked for specific activities inasmuch as it is most desirable that the Secretary-General enjoy full freedom to take the decisions he deems fit within the framework of the Campaign previously approved by the General Assembly and in exercise of the powers vested in him in connection with the Campaign;

7. Notes with appreciation that the Secretary-General has given permanent character to his instructions to the United Nations information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials to local languages;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the Campaign by the United Nations system during 1989 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1990;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

On 7 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions on regional centres for peace and disarmament-expressing satisfaction that the centre in Africa had become operational (43/76 D), welcoming the inauguration of a centre in Latin America (43/76 H) and welcoming the signing of an agreement on the establishment of a centre in Asia (43/76 G).

Africa

In October 1988,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, which was established in 1986, at Lomé, Togo,⁽⁵⁾ and which during the initial phase functioned under the auspices of DDA. The Centre's activities included the organization of training programmes on the peaceful settlement of disputes, the prevention and management of crises and confidence-building among African States, the organization of seminars and conferences, research and study, advisory services to Member States and the dissemination of information and documentation. Latin America

As agreed by the General Assembly in 1986,⁽⁶⁾ the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October of that year.

In an October 1988 report,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the Centre's initial activities had focused on disseminating information and on establishing contacts with relevant institutions and organizations, as well as responding to queries from the public, with a view to promoting better understanding of and generating wider support for the objectives of the United Nations in the field of arms limitation and disarmament. Efforts were being made to set up a resource centre that could be used by organizations and individuals concerned with issues of peace, security, disarmament and development.

In response to a 1987 Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ a conference of experts on the strengthening of political co-operation in Latin America in the areas of peace, disarmament, development and security was held (Lima, 6-9 December), preceded by a preparatory meeting from 4 to 6 May. The Centre also hosted a conference on conflict zones, peace and development during Disarmament Week.

Disarmament studies and research

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In a report outlining the activities of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) for the period September 1987 to September 1988,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General said it organized a conference on disarmament research, with the assistance of the Institute for World Economics and International Relations of the USSR (Sochi, USSR, 22-24 March). Representatives of 46 institutes and organizations from different regions participated. Preparations continued for the convening of a conference on conventional disarmament in Europe, rescheduled for January 1989.

As part of its lecture programme, UNIDIR, with the co-operation of the United Nations Information Service and in association with the Geneva International Peace Research Institute, organized a symposium on United States-USSR negotiations on nuclear and space arms (Geneva, 18 April). UNIDIR issued seven publications and, in March, commenced publication of a quarterly newsletter. Work continued to expand, update and maintain the sample files of the computerized data base.

The UNIDIR fellowship programme, enabling scholars from developing countries to undertake research on disarmament, continued. A survey was conducted of medium-term perspectives in the field of disarmament and arms limitation, with a view to defining the future research agenda. Three research projects were initiated: on national concepts of verification, on verification by airborne systems, and a second project on problems related to outer space.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies held two sessions in New York in 1988, its eighteenth (26-29 April) and nineteenth (26-30 September).⁽¹³⁾ The Board reviewed the situation in the area of disarmament, including studies and implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, and discussed its own role. In addition, it continued to act as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR.

The Board approved the report of the Director on the activities of UNIDIR (see above) and its own work programme for 1989. It also directed the secretariat to investigate the matter of the scheduling of its second annual sessions, which since 1986 had taken place in late September, in contravention of a 1979 General Assembly decision according to which no subsidiary organ was permitted to meet at Headquarters during a regular Assembly session, unless explicitly authorized⁽¹⁴⁾

In considering the proposed annual budget of UNIDIR for 1989, the Board noted that there had been a significant increase in the number of donors, with 17 new donors either having made or pledged voluntary contributions during the period under review, in response to the Director's fund-raising efforts. Contributions for 1989 totalled $958,000, including $392,600 in non-convertible currencies.

The Board adopted the proposed 1989 budget estimates and recommended a subvention of $221,100 from the United Nations regular budget towards meeting the costs of the Director and staff, raising UNIDIR's net income to $1,179,100. In October,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee accordingly. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended that the Assembly approve the subvention for 1989, which the Assembly did by resolution 43/218 A on the revised budget appropriations for 1988-1989, under the section on disarmament affairs activities.

UN disarmament studies programme

The Advisory Board, which advised the Secretary-General on various aspects of United Nations studies on disarmament and arms limitation, reported that two studies, on the climatic and other global effects of nuclear war and on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and military expenditures, had been completed. The Board discussed the question of verification, emphasizing its significance as well as the difficulties involved, and was informed of a number of proposals, submitted to the third special session of the Assembly on disarmament, which might lead to subjects for United Nations studies: multilateral verification, developments in nuclear weapons and certain aspects of conventional arms transfers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 43/75 N by recorded vote.

Comprehensive United Nations study on nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the central role and primary responsibility of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, in accordance with the Charter,

Recognizing that nuclear disarmament and arms limitation remain a priority objective and represent a central task of the international community,

Chapter III

Peaceful uses of outer space

During 1988, the United Nations continued to promote international co-operation in the use of outer space for peaceful purposes through the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Sub-Committees. In December, the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendations on a variety of issues (resolution 43/56).

Science, technology and law

General aspects

The Committee on outer space,⁽¹⁾ in accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ continued its consideration, as a matter of priority, of ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes. The Committee, at its thirty-first session (New York, 13-23 June), agreed that an effective way to maintain outer space for peaceful purposes was to strengthen international co-operation in the exploration and peaceful uses of outer space, through multilateral, regional and bilateral co-operative activities and the promotion of specific projects to assist all countries, especially developing countries.

The Committee decided to consider at its next session the advisability of the Assembly's declaring 1992 as international space year, and recommended that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its next session, scheduled for February/March 1989, consider possible activities during such a year. It also recommended that a new item, on a review of the current status of spin-off benefits of space technology, be included in the agenda of its next session.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

The Secretary-General in August⁽³⁾ reported on the progress made in implementing the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82).⁽⁴⁾ The report covered the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, inter-agency and regional cooperation, various studies, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, technical advisory services, the International Space Information Service and voluntary contributions.

The Working Group was re-established in 1988 by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee with a view to improving the execution of international co-operation activities, particularly those included in the United Nations Programme on Space Applications (see below), and to increase such co-operation and make it more efficient.⁽⁵⁾

The Working Group, meeting in New York between 18 and 26 February, proposed that the emphasis of the Programme on Space Applications remain on long-term, project-oriented, on-the-job training in specific areas of space technology, and recommended that the activities proposed for 1988 and 1989 by the Expert on Space Applications be fully implemented (see below). Other recommendations dealt with promoting better access to and experiences of space-related subjects in higher education, intensive participation of international and regional financial and development institutions, extensive regional co-operation on space-related projects, greater interaction among application specialists and experimental and theoretical scientists and greater co-operation with non-governmental organizations. The Working Group encouraged countries with relevant capabilities to provide financial and technical assistance to developing countries for the development of low-cost community receivers for communication satellites and low-cost power sources to operate the system in unelectrified areas.

In addition, the Working Group renewed its 1987 recommendation⁽⁶⁾ that the Committee on outer space request all Member States and international organizations with space-related activities to inform the Secretary-General of activities that could be the subject of greater international co-operation. Nine Member States (Austria, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Netherlands, Pakistan, Sweden, United States, USSR) responded to the Secretary-General's request for such information.⁽⁷⁾

The Working Group's report was adopted by the Sub-Committee and annexed to its report,⁽⁵⁾ and its recommendations were endorsed by the Committee on outer space.⁽¹⁾ The Committee recommended that the Working Group be reconvened in 1989 to continue its work.

One of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 was that an international space information service be established within the Outer Space Affairs Division of the United Nations, consisting initially of a directory of sources of information and data services. Accordingly, the Division in 1988 issued Information System on Space Science and Technology: A Directory,⁽⁸⁾ which summarized the principal functions of institutions that operated space science and technology information systems. It also highlighted the areas of specialization of each of the centres, the type of system in operation there, the geographical areas covered by their collections, the languages of the systems, the users for whom service was provided and the class of services provided, the availability of training opportunities and the possibilities of collaborative arrangements with other institutions world-wide.

UN Programme on Space Applications

In 1988, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications continued to focus on providing long-range fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services to Member States and regional institutions; acquiring and disseminating space-related information; organizing a series of regional and international training courses, seminars, workshops and technical expert meetings; and promoting greater co-operation between developed and developing countries as well as among developing countries. Programme activities were described in a December report of the United Nations Expert on Space Applications to the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.⁽⁹⁾

The Programme received the following fellowship offers in 1988: Austria renewed its annual offer of two fellowships for training in microwave technology; Brazil renewed its offer of 10 fellowships for training and research in remote-sensing technology; the German Democratic Republic offered three fellowships in basic space sciences, satellite geodesy and remote sensing; and the USSR renewed its annual offer of 10 fellowships in geodesy, cartography and aerial photography and established six additional fellowships in the areas of scientific instrument manufacturing, theoretical and experimental astrophysics, systems and methods of space-information processing and studies of Earth rotation and lithosphere-plate movement using space technology. The European Space Agency (ESA) renewed its annual offer of four fellowships in communications engineering, telecommunications, remote-sensing information systems and satellite meteorology.

In 1988, the Programme conducted one seminar, two training courses and two workshops: the United Nations/ESA Training Course on Applications of Remote-Sensing and Agro-Meteorological Data to Drought Assessment and Vegetation

Monitoring (Nairobi, Kenya, 6-22 April),⁽¹⁰⁾ the United Nations International Seminar on the Development and Applications of Satellite Communication Systems (Beijing, China, 19-23 September),⁽¹¹⁾ the United Nations/ESA Workshop on Microwave Remote-Sensing Technology (Bangkok, Thailand, 26-30 September),⁽¹²⁾ the thirteenth United Nations/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization International Training Course on the Applications of Remote Sensing to Water Resources (Rome, Italy, 12-30 September; Sardinia, Italy, 2-7 October)⁽¹³⁾ and the United Nations Workshop on Regional Space Information Systems (Lima, Peru, 24-28 October).⁽¹⁴⁾

The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ noted with satisfaction that a guidebook, Fellowship and Training Opportunities offered Within the Framework of the United Nations Space Applications Programme, had been issued, along with corresponding booklets, for the use of applicants to fellowship programmes and training courses.

As part of its mandated technical advisory services, the Programme provided assistance to the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in revising a project document on the establishment of a remote-sensing information programme for Africa, an ECA remote-sensing training centre at Ile Ife, Nigeria, in developing a training curriculum for a postgraduate diploma course, a project in China aimed at establishing a national telecommunications development centre, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in preparing a draft proposal on improving indigenous capabilities in remote-sensing technology by providing education to educators and Member States in the Indian Ocean region and on the Atlantic coast of Africa in preparing proposals on using space technology and information in evaluating, managing and assessing marine and coastal resources.

In 1988, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, China, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Thailand, the USSR and the United States provided support to Programme activities.

The United Nations Expert on Space Applications, in a report⁽¹⁵⁾ considered by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in 1988, proposed that the Programme in 1989 continue to focus on implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations. Activities proposed for 1989 included: long-range fellowship programmes for in-depth education, research and training of space technologists and application specialists in order to stimulate the growth of indigenous capability and an autonomous technological base; provision of technical advisory services on space technology to Member States on request; six additional workshops and training courses; collaboration with the University of Tennessee's Space Institute (United States) and the American Institute for Aeronautics and Astronautics in organizing an international symposium on the roles of developing countries in space commercialization; and updating the directories Education, Training, Research and Fellowship Opportunities in Space Science and Technology and its Applications and Information System on Space Science and Technology. The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ recommended that the General Assembly approve the activities proposed for 1989.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee⁽⁵⁾ continued to stress the necessity of ensuring continuous and effective consultations and co-ordination in the field of outer space activities among United Nations organizations and of avoiding duplication of activities. The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ noted with appreciation the participation in its work and that of its Sub-Committees by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, and requested that concerned organizations continue to keep it informed of their activities relating to the peaceful uses of outer space. The Committee endorsed the view of the Sub-Committee that the United Nations should continue to seek the support of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other international funding institutions and that the Secretariat should take note of, and operate within, UNDP funding procedures.

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (Geneva, 3-5 October),⁽¹⁶⁾ convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, found that the existing inter-agency machinery for consultation and co-ordination in applying space technology had worked satisfactorily.

The co-ordination of outer space activities within the United Nations system in 1989, 1990 and future years was discussed in a November report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁷⁾ prepared at the request of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee. The report covered remote sensing, communications, meteorology, use of space technology for land, maritime and aeronautical mobile services and other activities.

Science and technology aspects

At its twenty-fifth session (New York, 16-26 February),^(s) the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued to examine remote sensing of the earth by satellites, including its applications for developing countries, the use of nuclear power sources in outer space and the geostationary orbit, among other issues. In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Sub-Committee paid special attention to the theme "microgravity experiments in space and their applications".

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee⁽⁵⁾ reiterated the view that remote sensing from outer space should be carried out, taking into account the urgent need to assist the developing countries. The Sub-Committee noted the remote-sensing activities of the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development carried out for the benefit of developing countries, as well as those of FAO, which were applied to agriculture, forestry, rangelands and fisheries. It emphasized the importance of making remote-sensing data available at a reasonable cost and in a timely manner, and noted the continuing programmes of France, the USSR and the United States for remote-sensing satellites and the planned remote-sensing satellite systems of Brazil, Canada, China, India, Japan and ESA.

The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ recognized the importance of continuing international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of remote-sensing systems. It also recognized the example of international co-operation evidenced by the free distribution of meteorological information, and encouraged all countries and agencies to continue that practice. The Committee endorsed the decision of the Sub-Committee to retain the topic as a priority item on the agenda for the next session.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee reconvened the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, which met in New York from 22 to 25 February.⁽⁵⁾ The Group considered the complete dispersal (burn-up) of the fuel of a nuclear reactor versus its intact re-entry. It was noted that complete dispersal might not be possible with certain types of nuclear reactor fuel. The Group also took note of the concept of a nuclear-fuel containment system which would withstand the heat of re-entry, aerodynamic forces and impact with the ground, guaranteeing that no radioactive material would be released to the environment. It stated that the feasibility and safety aspects of the two concepts required further investigation.

The Group considered the possibility that a space object carrying a nuclear power source could collide with a particle of space debris. It noted that the probability of such a collision could become considerable in view of the long orbital lifetime of nuclear power sources and encouraged national studies of the issue. It was of the opinion that, if the core of a nuclear reactor returning to the Earth became flooded, it should be designed in such a way that it would remain sub-critical in all credible scenarios.

The Sub-Committee adopted the Group's report, and the Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendations that the topic be retained as a priority item on the 1989 agenda of the Working Group. The Committee also agreed that the Sub-Committee should have more time in 1989 to consider the safe use of nuclear power sources and recommended that the Secretariat take that into account in preparing the provisional agenda.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

In January, the Secretariat issued a study on the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit.⁽¹⁸⁾ A geostationary satellite is one that remains above a fixed point on the Earth's surface by maintaining a rotation along the equatorial plane, at an altitude of about 36,000 kilometres, that is synchronous with the Earth's orbit. The study covered scientific aspects of the geostationary orbit, the current occupation of the orbit, space objects crossing the orbit and determination of the position of objects in the orbit. At the end of 1987, there were nearly 300 space objects in or close to the geostationary orbit, the majority of which were inactive. The Sub-Committee took note of the various current and planned satellite communications programmes of Member States and international organizations. The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ endorsed the recommendation of the Sub-Committee that it continue consideration of the item at its next session.

Other questions

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee⁽⁵⁾ heard special technical presentations by China on microgravity science/space experiments, as well as on remote sensing; by the USSR on the Mir space station and life sciences, including space medicine; and by the United States on microgravity experiments in space, manned space flight, remote sensing, the ecosphere-biosphere, planetary exploration, life sciences and astronomy.

On the subject of space transportation programmes, the Sub-Committee noted developments in China, France, India, Japan, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and ESA, and stressed the importance of international co-operation in providing all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.

In its consideration of matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine, the Sub-Committee noted that studies of human physiology during manned space flights had led to important advances in medical knowledge, particularly studies of biological rhythms in space in the absence of normal terrestrial environmental rhythms, which had implications for such phenomena as jet-lag. The microgravity conditions of space flight had also been used to study techniques for processing pharmaceutical products and for growing single crystals of protein in order to study their molecular structure, as well as for investigating the effects of microgravity on plants, animals and humans. Studies were also continuing on the use of controlled ecological life-support systems to maintain a habitable environment during long space flights. The Sub-Committee noted that such studies had important potential benefits for all and that efforts should be made to promote international co-operation to enable all countries to benefit from them.

The Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) presented to the Sub-Committee a progress report on the international geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme. The Sub-Committee noted the importance of assessing global changes in the climate and their impact on life and the important role of space science and technology in that effort. It took particular note of the recent observations of the ozone hole over Antarctica and the need for further studies of it.

On the subject of planetary exploration, the Sub-Committee noted the ongoing work directed towards investigating planets, asteroids and comets and the plans to conduct a detailed mapping of Venus, to probe Jupiter's atmosphere, to observe the polar region of the Sun, to probe the surface of a comet nucleus and ultimately to return samples of the Martian surface to Earth.

In its consideration of matters relating to astronomy, the Sub-Committee noted that the use of astronomical spacecraft for making observations from above the atmosphere had greatly advanced knowledge of the universe by permitting observations to be made in all regions of the electromagnetic spectrum. Studies at infrared, visible, ultraviolet, X-ray and gamma-ray wavelengths had provided new information concerning the evolution of stars, galaxies and the universe as a whole. Satellites were being developed to gather additional information.

The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ endorsed the decision of the Sub-Committee to continue consideration of those issues at its next session.

COSPAR and IAF on 16 and 17 February conducted a symposium on microgravity experiments in space and their applications, which had been designated for the special attention of the Sub-Committee in 1988. The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that it focus on the theme "Space technology as an instrument for combating environmental problems, particularly those of developing countries" at its 1989 session. The theme would relate to problems such as desertification, deforestation, floods, erosion and pest infestation.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Sweden and the United States submitted reviews of national and international space activities in 1988⁽¹⁹⁾ to the Committee on outer space. COSPAR submitted a report⁽²⁰⁾ on the progress of space research in 1987-1988 and IAF⁽²¹⁾ reported on highlights in space technology and applications in 1988. They jointly submitted to the Committee a report on environmental effects of space activities.⁽²²⁾

Legal aspects

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-seventh session at Geneva from 14 to 31 March 1988.⁽²³⁾ It continued to consider the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space, and ways to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit. It also adopted a new agenda item.

Nuclear power sources in outer space

On 14 March 1988, the Legal Sub-Committee re-established its Working Group on the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. The Group had before it a working paper submitted by Canada and two submitted by China.

The Canadian paper proposed seven revised draft principles concerning: (1) the applicability of international law; (2) safety assessment and notification; (3) guidelines and criteria for safe use; (4) notification of re-entry; (5) assistance to States; (6) the responsibility of States; and (7) compensation. The Chinese papers proposed two draft principles concerning the relation with other international treaties and the settlement of disputes.

The Working Group reached a consensus on principle 1, stating that activities involving the use of nuclear power sources in outer space should be carried out in accordance with international law, and added an eighth draft principle, based on China's proposal, on dispute settlement procedures.

The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue consideration of the item in 1989. It also agreed that the Sub-Committee should be allocated more time to consider the safe use of nuclear power sources, and recommended that the Secretariat take that into account in preparing the provisional agenda of the Sub-Committee.

Geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

On 14 March, the Legal Sub-Committee re-established its Working Group on matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit.

The Working Group continued consideration of issues raised in previous years.⁽²⁴⁾ In order to facilitate further discussion of issues on which converging opinions had emerged, the Chairman convened an open-ended working party of States' representatives ("Friends of the Chairman") for informal consultations. After the conclusion of those consultations, the Chairman presented to the Group a text declaring that all States should be guaranteed equitable access to the geostationary orbit. The text was generally accepted by the "Friends of the Chairman" to be a valid basis for further negotiations in the context of developing a legal régime for the geostationary orbit.

The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue to consider the item in 1989.

New agenda item

On 29 March, the Legal Sub-Committee adopted by consensus a new agenda item entitled "Consideration of the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries".

The Committee on outer space⁽¹⁾ recommended that the Sub-Committee consider the item in 1989.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/56 without vote.

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication

(c) Consider the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries;

5. Urges the Legal Sub-Committee at its twenty-eighth session, in the context of paragraph 4 (c) above, to pursue, with a view to finalizing, its consideration of the question of the establishment of a working group under this agenda item in order to ensure a satisfactory outcome of the substantive deliberations under this item;

Chapter IV

Other political questions

In 1988, questions related to information, effects of atomic radiation and Antarctica were again on the General Assembly's agenda.

The Assembly requested that the 1988 recommendations of the Committee on Information be implemented within existing resources (resolution 43/60 A) and called on Member States, United Nations organizations and other groups to contribute to the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (43/60 B).

As to atomic radiation, the Assembly requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue to work to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation (43/55).

On the issue of Antarctica, the Assembly expressed its conviction that for any minerals régime on Antarctica to be beneficial to all mankind, it should be negotiated with the full participation of all members of the international community; it regretted that, notwithstanding its previous resolutions calling for a moratorium on negotiations without such full participation, the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties had proceeded with negotiations and adopted a convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resources activities (43/83 A). The Assembly also appealed to those Parties to exclude South Africa from their meetings (43/83 B).

In the ongoing efforts towards finding a solution to the Cyprus question, the Security Council expressed its strong support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission and, on his recommendation, twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus.

During 1988, the Security Council held a total of 55 meetings and adopted 20 resolutions. The Assembly resumed and concluded its forty-second session and held the major part of its forty-third session, with 152 items on its agenda. It also held its fifteenth special session, devoted to disarmament.

The Assembly requested continued co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (43/2) and the League of Arab States (43/3). It also invited the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean to participate in its work in the capacity of observer (43/6).

As there were no new admissions to the United Nations during 1988, its membership remained at 159.

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations continued to focus on two broad objectives: publicizing the Organization's goals and work, and enhancing the information capabilities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC). Information policies and activities were considered by the General Assembly's Committee on Information at its tenth session (New York, 27 June-13 July, 8 and 9 September). In its report to the Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Committee submitted 20 draft recommendations, with proposed amendments, most of which related to the operations of DPI. The Assembly acted on those recommendations in resolution 43/60 A.

Mass communication

At its 1988 session, the Committee on Information focused on the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order, examined the public information policies and activities of the United Nations in the light of the evolution of international relations, and evaluated the efforts made and progress achieved by the United Nations system in the field of information and communication.

The Committee recommended, inter alia, that the United Nations system and developed countries be urged to co-operate with the developing countries to strengthen their information and communication infrastructures and promote their access to advanced communication technology. It also recommended that DPI strengthen its co-operation with the Broadcasting Organization of Non-Aligned Countries, the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries and its economic information project (Eco-Pool), and the news agencies of developing countries.

Proposed new world
information and communication order

The Committee on Information recommended that all countries and the United Nations system co-operate in establishing a new world information and communication order, based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing diversity of sources and access to information and, in particular, recognizing the need to change the dependent status of developing countries in the area of information.

The Committee also recommended that the mass media be encouraged to give wider coverage to the efforts of the international community towards global development and the efforts of developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress.

International Programme for the Development of Communication

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Director-General of UNESCO reported on two issues:⁽³⁾ implementation of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC)—a project aimed at helping developing countries to build their communication infrastructure—and the social, economic and cultural effects of the accelerated development of communication technologies.

At its ninth session (Paris, 2-8 February 1988), the IPDC Intergovernmental Council approved contributions from the IPDC Special Account for 55 projects, including 24 current ones that required additional funding. Three of the projects were interregional, 16 regional and 36 national.

Africa received allocations of $570,000; Asia and the Pacific, $475,000; Latin America and the Caribbean, $450,000; the Arab States, $350,000; and interregional projects, $110,000.

Among the projects in Africa were editorial training at the Pan African News Agency, computerization of Cameroon News and the launching of a rural radio network in Guinea. Projects in Latin America and the Caribbean included the modernization of television training facilities at the Caribbean Institute of Mass Communication, the promotion of exchanges and improvement of audio-visual production in the region, and the consolidation and development of the Latin American and Caribbean Broadcasting Union. Asia and the Pacific received allocations for, among other things, a community broadcasting development project in Tonga, press development and the training of women in communication for nutrition and health. The Arab States received allocations for the Khalifa Broadcasting Training Institute in Yemen, the higher institute of journalism in Morocco and the acquisition of mobile units for the production of films and video materials in Egypt, among others.

Interregional activities included skills acquisition in engineering, planning and management for the development of broadcasting and the creation of an interregional network of women journalists.

During the year, UNESCO continued its collaborative research into the impact of new communication technologies. Thirty interdisciplinary studies of such technologies and their impact were in progress in all regions of the world. The studies, which were co-ordinated by research institutes or non-governmental organizations, included an assessment of the impact of direct broadcasting satellites in the Maghreb region of Africa and in various Asian countries, popular media and the new technologies in the Caribbean and the impact of new technologies on the endogenous cultures of Africa.

UN public information

The Committee on Information recommended that the United Nations system, through its information services, co-operate in promoting a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations. Other recommendations dealt with co-operation by DPI with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries and with UNESCO, the dissemination by DPI of information concerning United Nations activities regarding human rights, the right to freedom of opinion and expression under the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁴⁾ the serious economic situation in Africa and other global economic problems, the World Disarmament Campaign, the Middle East situation, apartheid, the illegal occupation of Namibia and peace-keeping operations. The Committee made a number of other recommendations concerning the organization and operation of DPI.

DPI activities

During 1988, DPI, through its radio, visual and publications services and information centres (see below under respective headings for details), continued to implement United Nations information activities.

In September 1988,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported on questions relating to information, including implementation, mainly by DPI, of the 1987 recommendations of the Committee on Information, as endorsed by the General Assembly.⁽⁶⁾

In accordance with requests by the Assembly, DPI developed a multi-media public information programme, in co-operation with the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, focusing on the fortieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration. A feasibility study was completed on the consolidation and co-ordination of all United Nations public information activities, with DPI as the focal point.

In line with the major priority assigned to Africa's economic crisis, DPI's bimonthly publication African Recovery continued to report on major developments and key issues. DPI worked closely with the Non-Governmental Liaison Service of the United Nations Office at Geneva in its major "Africa Four Years On" conference (April 1988). It also supported the Non-Governmental Liaison Service at Headquarters in its outreach activities, including the "Africa Focus" project in 10 United States and Canadian cities.

Information material on the external debt of developing countries was being prepared in 1988 and several television series on development issues were initiated.

The ninth annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries was held (20 September-28 October 1988) to provide training and briefings on major issues before the United Nations to 16 young journalists.

DPI also continued promoting United Nations activities for disarmament-most of them focused on the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament (see PART ONE, Chapter II)-through press releases, lectures, briefings, film screenings and exhibits.

Activities were also undertaken in connection with the campaign against apartheid and the struggle for the independence of Namibia.

Systematic monitoring and evaluation of activities continued to be emphasized. Those functions were to be carried out by the Programme Evaluation and Communications Research Unit of the Division for Committee Liaison and Administrative Services in the reorganized DPI. In addition, a modest function seeking to generate data on public opinion trends about the United Nations was to be added for the purpose of providing a reliable information base.

DPI provided coverage of all United Nations intergovernmental meetings in both English and French and issued daily summaries of meetings.

With regard to the 1987 recommendation that the Secretary-General continue to intensify his efforts to secure adequate resources for continuing the World Newspaper Supplement, the Secretary-General said that the principle held by the agencies supporting the project was that it should be self-supporting and the participating major newspapers were continuing to find ways towards that end.

The policies and activities of DPI during 1988 were reviewed by the Committee on Information. It had before it, among others, reports on: the enhancement of co-operation with Member States in DPI's short-wave broadcasts;⁽⁷⁾ improvement in the distribution of taped radio programmes and curtailment of certain DPI radio programmes (see below);⁽⁸⁾ the reassessment of the effectiveness of the UN Chronicle;⁽⁹⁾ and DPI's progress in recruiting nationals from developing countries to achieve a more balanced geographical distribution of its staff.⁽¹⁰⁾

In April,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported on action taken by DPI on 1986 recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC).⁽¹²⁾ The restructuring of DPI, he said, should provide a good opportunity to implement those recommendations. The recent decision on the clarification of the terms "redissemulator" and "target audience" would no doubt facilitate the solving of a number of other problems associated with the implementation of activities, monitoring, evaluation, feedback mechanisms, dissemination etc. In June 1988,⁽¹³⁾ CPC took note of the report.

Radio and Visual Services Division

The Committee on Information in 1988 recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to strengthen and expand the Middle East/Arabic Unit of the DPI Radio and Visual Services Division as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, and to ensure full programming by the Caribbean Unit, including implementation of the provisions of a 1983 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ by which the Assembly had requested the introduction of full programming in French/Creole and limited programming in Dutch/Papiamentu.

The Secretariat reported on the results of steps taken by DPI to improve the distribution of taped radio programmes and resume the ones that had been curtailed. As at June 1988, DPI produced 31 different regular taped programmes in 16 languages: Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, English, French, Hindi, Indonesian, Portuguese, Russian, Sesotho, Spanish, Swahili, Tswana, Turkish, Xhosa and Zulu. An average of approximately 2,500 tapes/cassettes were distributed each week.

Taped radio programmes were distributed by air-mail and pouch by the newly created Dissemination Division of DPI to more than 1,460 recipients and users in some 161 countries and Territories. Feedback concerning the utilization of those programmes was provided through contacts with broadcasting organizations, listeners' mail, reports from United Nations information centres (UNICs) and information provided by delegations and staff members.

Among measures taken by DPI to resume curtailed radio programmes in some non-official languages was collaboration with a number of national and local broadcasting organizations in adapting United Nations programmes.

UN information centres and services

In his September 1988 report on information questions,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General also dealt with the strengthening of the United Nations information centres and services. He stated that, with the establishment of regional desks in the Information Centres Division at Headquarters, it would be possible for DPI to evaluate and manage more accurately and effectively the activities of its 67 operational UNICs and services. Further, as a result of the introduction of office automation for the UNICs by modernizing communications equipment, 25 UNICs were being linked with Headquarters through electronic mail. In addition, DPI had introduced a new system of rotation of UNIC directors and Headquarters officials, with clear procedures and guidelines for the appointment of the former, including the designation of qualified female candidates to those posts. Media profiles were being developed for all countries in which UNICs were operating, to help identify the countries that could benefit from DPI's training programmes in broadcasting.

In June,⁽¹⁵⁾ CPC took note of an April report of JUNC on the policies for distributing material through UNICs.⁽¹⁵⁾

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Joint United Nations Information Committee, the inter-agency co-ordinating body for information activities in the United Nations system, held its fifteenth session at Geneva (29-31 March 1988).⁽¹⁶⁾ It considered the current public image of the United Nations system and recognized the need for agreed projects that would positively enhance that image. It further discussed inter-agency projects, such as the publications Development Forum and Africa Recovery Report; the work of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services at Geneva and in New York, which played a particularly important role in development education; audio-visual information dissemination; and international expositions, years, decades and other special events.

JUNC stressed the need for information departments to avoid overlapping and duplication of work. Also, system-wide priority issues, such as the theme of Africa economic recovery and development and the full and equal participation of women in development, called for mutually supporting activities and co-operation in the field of information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/60 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on questions relating to information,

Reaffirming the mandate given to the Committee on Information by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/182 of 18 December 1979,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Encouraging the Secretary-General to continue necessary action in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, with particular emphasis on securing a co-ordinated approach to priority issues before the Organization,

Taking note of the comprehensive report of the Committee on Information, which served as an important basis and stimulated further deliberations,

1. Urges the full implementation of the following recommendations:

(1) All countries, the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should co-operate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process, and based, inter alia, on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing diversity of sources of information and free access to information and, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the field of information and communication, as the principle of sovereign equality among nations extends also to this field, and intended also to strengthen peace and international understanding, enabling all persons to participate effectively in political, economic, social and cultural life and promoting human rights, understanding and friendship among all nations. The ongoing efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which retains the central role in this field, to eliminate gradually the existing imbalances in the field of information and communication and to encourage a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information in accordance with the relevant resolutions of that organization, adopted by consensus, should be reaffirmed;

(2) Considering the important role that the media worldwide can freely play, particularly under the present situation, it is recommended that:

(a) The mass media should be encouraged to give wider coverage to the efforts of the international community towards global development and, in particular, the efforts of the developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress;

(b) The United Nations system as a whole should co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services, in promoting a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system in all its endeavours, in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolutions, with particular emphasis on the right to self-determination and the elimination of all forms of racism, aggression, foreign domination and occupation, in order to create a climate of confidence, the strengthening of multilateralism and the promotion of the development activities in the United Nations system;

(c) All countries should be urged to extend assistance to journalists for the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and to ensure respect for their physical integrity;

(3) Considering the existing imbalances in the international distribution of news, particularly that affecting the developing countries, it is recommended that urgent attention should be given to the elimination of existing imbalances by, inter alia, diversifying the sources of information and respecting the interests, aspirations and socio-cultural values of all peoples;

(4) The United Nations system as a whole, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the developed countries should be urged to co-operate in a concerted manner with the developing countries towards strengthening the information and communication infrastructures in the latter countries and promoting their access to advanced communications technology, in accordance with the priorities attached to such areas by the developing countries, with a view to enabling them to develop their own information and communications policies freely and independently and in the light of their social and cultural values, taking into account the principle of freedom of the press and information. In this regard, support should be provided for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries;

(5) Note should be taken with appreciation of regional efforts, especially among the developing countries, as well as co-operation between developed and developing countries to develop further the media infrastructure in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information, with a view to encouraging a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(6) Article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression and that this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, and article 29, which stipulates that these rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, should be recalled;

(7) The relevant paragraphs of General Assembly resolution 59(I) of 14 December 1946, in which the Assembly stated, inter alia, that freedom of information is a fundamental human right, must be reiterated;

(8) The primary role that the General Assembly is to play in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information having been reaffirmed, the Secretary-General is requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened and improved, keeping in view the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the priority areas such as those stated in section III, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 35/201 of 16 December 1980 and other pertinent resolutions of the Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, so as to ensure an objective and more coherent coverage of, as well as better knowledge about, the United Nations and its work. The Secretary-General is further requested to ensure that the Department of Public Information:

(a) Co-operate more regularly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, especially at the working level, with a view to maximizing the contributions of the Department to the efforts of that organization in further promoting the attainment of a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(b) Strengthen its co-operation with the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, with the Eco-Pool of the News Agencies of Non-Aligned Countries and with the Broadcasting Organization of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as with intergovernmental and regional organizations and with the news agencies of the developing countries. In this regard, the Department of Public Information should monitor, as appropriate, important meetings of the Movement, in particular its summit meetings, as well as those of intergovernmental and regional organizations, as this constitutes a concrete step towards the promotion of a wider and better balanced dissemination of information;

(c) Continue to disseminate information about the United Nations activities in the field of human rights, decolonization and the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination and foreign occupation;

(d) Give the widest possible dissemination of information pertaining to acute world economic problems in general and, in particular, to the severe economic difficulties of the least developed countries and the need for strengthening the international economic co-operation aimed at resolving the external debt problems of developing countries;

(e) Do its utmost to disseminate widely and to publicize the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and the tremendous efforts of the African countries towards recovery and development, as well as the positive response by the international community to alleviate the serious economic situation prevailing in Africa;

(f) Continue adequate coverage of the World Disarmament Campaign;

(g) Disseminate adequately and accurately, in conformity with relevant United Nations resolutions on the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East, information relating to the struggle of the Palestinian people, particularly its current uprising, and of the Arab population in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, for the attainment and exercise of their inalienable national rights, and report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1989;

(h) Strengthen its activities and the dissemination of information on the policies and practices of apartheid, giving due attention to the unilateral measures and official censorship imposed on the local and international media with regard to all aspects of this issue, and report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1989;

(i) Further intensify its efforts in order to alert world public opinion to the illegal occupation of Namibia and continue to disseminate adequately and accurately, with the full assistance of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the United Nations system as a whole, information relating to the struggle of the oppressed people of Namibia for self-determination, national independence and freedom as well as to the need for the full and speedy implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia;

(j) Continue adequate coverage of the United Nations activities pertaining to the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

(k) Further cover adequately and with impartiality the activities of all United Nations peace-keeping operations, in view of the paramount importance of such operations for the maintenance of international peace and security;

(l) Continue to disseminate information concerning United Nations resolutions on terrorism in all its forms, including General Assembly resolutions 40/61 of 9 December 1985 and 42/159 of 7 December 1987;

(m) Strengthen its information programmes relating to women and their role in society;

(n) Strengthen its coverage of the efforts made by the United Nations system and Member States in their campaign against illicit trafficking of narcotics and drug abuse;

(9) In the light of the present international situation, the Department of Public Information should continue its efforts to promote an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations system among the peoples of the world and to strengthen the image of the United Nations system as a whole. In this connection, the Secretary-General is requested to ensure that the Department of Public Information:

(a) Continue to maintain consistent editorial independence and accuracy in reporting for all material it produces, taking necessary measures to ensure that its output contains objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur;

(b) In the context of the review of its role, performance and method of work, continue to explore the feasibility of applying modern technologies for the collection, production, storage, dissemination and distribution of information materials, including the use of satellite facilities, and report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1989 with regard to the effects of the application of such technologies on prevailing arrangements;

(c) Consider expanding the programme of telephone news bulletins that are paid for by its users;

(d) Continue its co-operation with those countries which have expressed readiness to assist the United Nations in resuming the short-wave broadcasts through their respective national networks free of charge and encourage expansion of this type of co-operation with those developed and developing countries with recognized capabilities in this field;

(e) Take adequate measures to resume the taped radio programmes, which it temporarily curtailed, bearing in mind the objective of their effective utilization and maximum audience impact and report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

(11) The Secretary-General is urged to continue his efforts to secure a sound and stable financial basis for the Department of Public Information to produce its publications on time, particularly Development Forum, The United Nations Yearbook, the UN Chronicle, the Africa Recovery Report and the World Newspaper Supplement, and to ensure that they retain their editorial policy of intellectual independence and reflect adequately the United Nations activities, and to submit a report thereon to the Committee on Information at its 1989 substantive session;

(12) The unique function of the United Nations information centres, recognized as one of the most important means of disseminating information about the United Nations among the peoples of the world, should be enhanced. In this regard, United Nations information centres should intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local media information and educational institutions and non-governmental organizations recognized by the Economic and Social Council in a mutually beneficial way and arrange for constant evaluation of their activities in this regard. Every effort should be made to establish close co-ordination with other field offices of the United Nations system, particularly those of the United Nations Development Programme, in order to avoid duplication of work, taking into account the functional autonomy of the United Nations information centres. The Department of Public Information should ensure open and unhindered access by all people to all United Nations information centres and to all materials distributed through the centres. It is also urged to accelerate the process of linking the remaining United Nations information centres that have not been linked with electronic mail;

(19) The United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should aim at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already taken within the United Nations system, including, in particular:

(a) Development of human resources as indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;

Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its thirty-seventh session in 1988 (Vienna, 6-17 June), continuing its work on the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987.⁽¹⁾ The report, including scientific annexes, presented to the Assembly in 1988,⁽²⁾ was the tenth substantive report prepared by the Committee since its establishment in 1955;⁽³⁾ its preparation took place from the thirty-first (1982) to thirty-seventh sessions.

The report contained a summary of the main conclusions reached by the Committee regarding radiation levels and doses received by the world's population, and expected to be received in the future, from various natural and man-made sources of radiation, and an assessment of the risks of induction of various types of harm by radiation, both in the short and the long term. The report also dealt with methods of comparing exposures, regarding which the Committee concluded that it preferred to follow its practice of comparing collective dose commitments from the main radiation sources rather than estimated detriments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/55 without vote.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 42/67 of 2 December 1987, in which, inter alia it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations, resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

Bearing in mind the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit, as soon as the relevant studies are completed, shorter reports with supporting scientific documents on the specialized topics mentioned by the Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty-three years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the Scientific Committee's intentions and plans for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the Scientific Committee's work and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of the Scientific Committee's future reports to the General Assembly.

Antarctica

Minerals régime

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1988 a report on an eventual minerals régime on Antarctica.⁽²⁾ In 1987, the Assembly had reaffirmed that any such régime should take fully into account the interests of the international community and had called on the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties—Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of India, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay^a—to impose a moratorium on the negotiations to establish a minerals régime until all members of the international community could participate fully in such negotiations.

The Secretary-General said he had received a letter from Australia⁽³⁾ conveying a statement by the Chairman of the Antarctic Treaty Special Consultative Meeting on Antarctic Mineral Resources (Wellington, New Zealand, 2 May–2 June), regarding the adoption on 2 June of a convention to regulate mineral resources activities in Antarctica. According to the Chairman, the aim of the convention was to fill a significant gap in the 1959 Antarctic Treaty system. The convention prohibited exploration for and extraction of mineral resources unless a rigorous procedure for permission to do so was followed. It provided for an advisory committee of scientific and technical experts to undertake comprehensive environmental evaluations at all stages of the decision-making process, and for a system of protected areas so that parts of Antarctica of special sensitivity could be placed off limits for minerals activity.

The Secretary-General further reported that, on 18 August, New Zealand had transmitted an authenticated copy of the Final Act of the Fourth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting on Antarctic Mineral Resources.

On 8 June, he had received a statement⁽⁴⁾ by Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, the Congo, Ghana, Indonesia, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe, expressing the utmost regret and deep concern about the adoption of the convention.

Concluding, the Secretary-General said he was not in a position to provide any evaluation of the negotiations of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative ^aSpain and Sweden became Consultative Parties in September 1988.

Parties as he was not in receipt of an invitation to their meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/83 A by roll-call vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983, 39/152 of 17 December 1984, 40/156 A and B of 16 December 1985, 41/88 A and B of 4 December 1986 and 42/46 A and B of 30 November 1987,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and the resolution on Antarctica adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985, as well as the decision of the Council of Ministers of the League of Arab States meeting at Tunis on 17 and 18 September 1986 and resolution 25/5-P(IS) adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Kuwait from 26 to 29 January 1987,

Taking into account the debates on this item held since its thirty-eighth session,

Welcoming the increasing awareness of and interest in Antarctica shown by the international community,

Convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue forever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Reaffirming the principle that the international community is entitled to information covering all aspects of Antarctica and that the United Nations should be made the repository for all such information in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 41/88 A and 42/46 B,

Conscious of the particular significance of Antarctica to the international community in terms, inter alia, of international peace and security, environment, its effects on global climatic conditions, economy and scientific research,

Taking into account all aspects pertaining to all areas covered by the Antarctic Treaty system,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the question of Antarctica,

Reaffirming that the management, exploration, exploitation and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international co-operation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

1. Expresses its conviction that any minerals régime on Antarctica, in order to be of benefit to all mankind, should be negotiated with the full participation of all members of the international community;

2. Further expresses its deep regret that the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties have proceeded with negotiations and adopted on 2 June 1988 a convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities, notwithstanding General Assembly resolutions 41/88 B and 42/46 B, calling for the imposition of a moratorium on negotiations to establish a minerals régime until such time as all members of the international community can fully participate in such negotiations;

3. Reiterates its call upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to all meetings of the Treaty parties, including their consultative meetings;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on his evaluations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

5. Urges all States Members of the United Nations to co-operate with the Secretary-General and to continue consultations on all aspects relating to Antarctica;

Participation of South Africa

Also in August 1988,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in response to a 1987 resolution,⁽⁶⁾ by which the Assembly had viewed with concern the continuing participation of South Africa in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties and appealed to the Parties to take urgent measures to exclude South Africa from such meetings. In a May 1988 reply to a note verbale of the Secretary-General, Australia, on behalf of the Parties, recalled an earlier note on the subject reproduced in a 1987 report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁷⁾ That note, Australia stated, continued fully to reflect the Parties' position.

Cyprus question

Throughout 1988, the Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus, entrusted to him by the Security Council. In February, Oscar Camilión assumed his functions as the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus. The Secretary-General appealed to all concerned to take stock of the situation afresh and to make positive gestures that would create favourable conditions for the resumption of negotiations. In bringing the leaders of the two sides together for talks, he conveyed to them through his Special Representative certain specific suggestions regarding an early meeting at which they would agree to hold urgent non-binding discussions with a view to achieving, by an agreed date, an overall settlement on the basis of 1977⁽¹⁾ and 1979⁽²⁾ high-level agreements. Negotiations between the two sides took place on various occasions during the year.

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP)—on 15 June (resolution 614(1988)) and 15 December (resolution 625(1988))—which continued its peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks.

Although the question of Cyprus was included in the agenda of the forty-third (1988) General Assembly session (decisions 42/465 of 19 September and 43/402 of 23 September), it was not discussed. However, in suspending the session on 22 December, the Assembly retained the question on its agenda (decision 43/459).

Cyprus and Turkey addressed communications to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the situation throughout the year. Those from Turkey forwarded letters from the Turkish Cypriot community signed by Rauf R. Denktas as "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", or by Ozer Koray as the "representative" of that "Republic".

In February, George Vassiliou was elected President of Cyprus. In a pre-election statement,⁽³⁾ Cyprus brought to the Secretary-General's attention what it called ominous developments, saying that it had requested United Nations assistance to help facilitate the temporary transfer of Greek Cypriots from the occupied areas so as to allow them to vote. However, the pseudo Minister for Foreign Affairs of the illegal entity in the Turkish-occupied area had stated that the Greek Cypriots there were considered citizens of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus and would not be authorized to vote. In reply,⁽⁴⁾ Mr. Koray said that no applicant was refused permission to cross to the South; in fact, the 70 Greek Cypriots and Maronites who had applied did cross during the two weeks of the elections.

In a statement of 13 February,⁽⁵⁾ Mr. Denktas stressed that the elections were for the head of the Greek Cypriot Administration in southern Cyprus only and not the "President of Cyprus" as a whole. He expressed the hope that the new leader would adopt a constructive and realistic posture towards a negotiated solution on the basis of a binational, bizonal federation, as previously agreed and as also envisaged by the Secretary-General's 1986 draft framework agreement.⁽⁶⁾ On 22 February,⁽⁷⁾ Mr. Denktas, reiterating that Mr. Vassiliou had been elected solely by Greek Cypriots and was their leader only, invited him for informal talks. Repeating his invitation on 26 February for a meeting on equal terms,⁽⁸⁾ Mr. Denktas underlined that the stumbling-block to a settlement in Cyprus was the false title of "the Republic" or "Government of Cyprus", which, he said, had been usurped for 24 years.

Report of the Secretary-General (May/June). In his report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus from 1 December 1987 to 31 May 1988,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General summarized UNFICYP activities and his good offices mission and reported on the situation regarding the maintenance of the status quo.

He noted that during the period under review, UNFICYP continued to monitor the military forces of both sides and there was no significant change in its estimate of the number of Turkish soldiers in Cyprus. Although the Turkish force's tank replacement programme was complete, most of the tanks that were to have been withdrawn were still on the island. In addition, while there was no apparent increase in the manpower of the Cyprus National Guard, its modernization programme had continued with the acquisition of some new armoured vehicles, a few anti-tank helicopters and a limited air-defence capability. During the reporting period, there was no change in the situation in Varosha (a community near the port of Famagusta, just inside the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces' cease-fire line), where students continued to be accommodated in hotels inside the fenced area and no date for their departure had been obtained. The presence of settlers from Turkey in the northern part of the island continued to be a matter of great concern to the Cyprus Government. The Turkish Government and the Turkish Cypriot side had not changed their position in that regard, and the Secretary-General urged that, in view of the sensitivity of the issue and its possible bearing on future negotiations, nothing should be done to change the demographic composition of the island.

The Secretary-General stated that a serious threat to the status quo resulted from a decision in mid-April by the Turkish Cypriot side to change existing practice for the control of persons passing between the northern and southern parts of the island. The new practice required that certain categories of Cypriots and foreign nationals using the Ledra Palace crossing point should present passports for stamping. The Secretary-General shared the assessment of the Cyprus Government, which had protested that the new practice purported to establish procedures at the crossing point appropriate to that of an international frontier and was in violation of a 1983 Security Council resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ and urged Mr. Denktas to restore the status quo without delay.

Cyprus again complained about the desecration of churches in the north and provided photographs of two specific sites. The Secretary-General considered it the responsibility of those concerned to ensure that no desecration or destruction took place.

Cyprus also protested the changing of place-names in the northern part, which the Turkish Cypriot side said had resulted from the need to bring place-names into conformity with modern Turkish usage.

It further protested the decision of the Turkish Cypriot side to expropriate Greek Cypriot-owned immovable property in the island's northern part and to transfer it to Turkish Cypriot individuals and organizations. Responding to specific complaints regarding property in the Kyrenia and Famagusta districts, the Turkish Cypriot side restated its earlier position that, in accordance with existing procedures, no actual transfer of ownership had taken place. The Turkish Cypriot authorities also refuted as not correct allegations about distribution to individuals of property listed as archaeological sites in the Famagusta area.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to help the displaced and the needy on the island. The Secretary-General noted that, during the period under review, the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus held four sessions, including 16 meetings, and focused its attention on interviewing Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot witnesses concerning those cases before it. The Committee decided to undertake in future a general review of the investigations and reports concerning cases presented to it so far.

The Secretary-General reported that, in view of both tension and hope prevailing on the island, the need for UNFICYP to continue to fulfil its indispensable role was even more important, and recommended that the Security Council extend the Force's mandate for a further six months. Referring to that recommendation, he indicated that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had agreed, while Turkey, supporting the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, had indicated that the draft resolution (see below) was unacceptable as a basis for UNFICYP's extension and that its position on the issue would be explained before the Council.⁽¹¹⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 15 June to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend UNFICYP's mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure^b to Ozer Koray. On that day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 614(1988).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 31 May 1988,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1988,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1988;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1988;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 614(1988)

15 June 1988 Meeting 2816 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/19936).

Mr. Koray said the Turkish Cypriot side rejected in toto the resolution as a basis for extending UNFICYP's mandate; it could not accept any resolution which purported to endorse the Greek Cypriot side as the so-called "Government of the Republic of Cyprus". The position of the Turkish Cypriot side continued to be that the principle, scope, modalities and procedures of co-operation of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus and UNFICYP should be based only on decisions to be taken solely by the Government of that Republic.

Supporting that position, Turkey said the resolution contained a number of controversial elements to which it had fundamental objections and it could not consent to a renewal of UNFICYP's mandate on that basis.

Report of the Secretary-General (November/December). Reporting to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus from 1 June to 30 November 1988,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General updated information on UNFICYP activities, his good offices mission and the question of the maintenance of the status quo.

At his invitation, the leaders of the two sides met the Secretary-General in Geneva on 24 August and expressed their readiness to seek a negotiated solution, acknowledging that that would require a determined and sustained effort by both sides, as well as the creation of an atmosphere of mutual confidence. They agreed to meet without any preconditions and to attempt to achieve by 1 June 1989 a negotiated settlement of all aspects of the Cyprus question. They met in private in Cyprus, together with the Secretary-General's Special Representative, between 16 September and 7 November. Those talks enabled them to explain to each other their views and concerns about a wide range of key issues.

^b Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

The Secretary-General met with the two leaders again on 22 and 23 November in New York to review the outcome of the first round of talks, which had proved helpful in building a good working relationship and in clarifying many of the issues and difficulties facing the two sides, and to decide on how to proceed. Both sides agreed with his suggestion that the next round of talks, to begin at Nicosia on 19 December 1988, be devoted to developing, on a non-committal basis, a wide range of options for resolving the issues, taking into account the interests and concerns of both sides. They also accepted his invitation for a meeting with him again in March 1989 to launch the next phase of talks.

The Secretary-General noted, however, that while it was the first time in the past quarter of a century that the leaders of both sides had committed themselves to a personal and sustained effort to reach an overall settlement and to try to achieve that by a specific date, their positions on the main issues remained far apart. The positive rapport created between the two leaders and their personal commitment to the negotiating process was an auspicious beginning, which could be sustained only if both sides found a way to tackle the difficult issues confronting them. It was vital that during the coming months the parties manifested the necessary will to break free from their long-held positions and seek solutions that would reconcile the interests of each community. It was important that all Cypriots should feel that the talks represented a joint effort towards a common goal.

The Secretary-General said that both sides had expressed concern on several occasions about the strength of military forces on the island. UNFICYP, for its part, remained concerned about the level of forces in Cyprus and continued to monitor them. During the period under review, Greek Cypriots held numerous demonstrations close to the United Nations buffer zone, forcing their way inside the zone on several occasions. Those events were marked by violence against UNFICYP personnel, leading to dangerous situations in two areas of the buffer zone in Nicosia. Cyprus had since assured the Force Commander that it would in future take whatever steps were necessary to ensure respect for the status quo in the buffer zone.

The Secretary-General noted that in Varosha the situation regarding the students had not changed and efforts were still being made to secure a date for their departure. With regard to the question relating to procedures at the Ledra Palace crossing point, the situation prevailing before his May/June report had been restored.

As in his previous report, the Secretary-General, referring to his recommendation that the Council extend UNFICYP's mandate for a further six months, indicated that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had agreed, while Turkey, supporting the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, indicated that the draft resolution (see below) was unacceptable as a basis for UNFICYP's extension and that its position on the issue would be explained before the Council.⁽¹³⁾

The Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus continued its interviews of witnesses and pursued its activities with a view to reaching conclusions on the cases before it as soon as possible.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 15 December to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend the UNFICYP mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. Ozer Koray was also invited to participate under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure.^b

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 625(1988).

The Security Council, taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 30 November 1988,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1988,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1989;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1989;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 625(1988)

15 December 1988 Meeting 2833 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20324).

Mr. Koray, for the Turkish Cypriot side, voiced reservations on the resolution similar to those expressed in June (see above). Turkey also objected to the text for reasons similar to those stated previously. Following consultations in the Council, the President concluded the meeting with the following statement:⁽¹⁴⁾

"The members of the Security Council expressed their support for the effort launched on 24 August 1988 by the Secretary-General in the context of the mission of good offices in Cyprus. They welcomed the readiness of the two parties to seek negotiated settlement of all aspects of the Cyprus problem by 1 June 1989.

"They called upon all parties for full co-operation with the Secretary-General in ensuring the success of the process currently under way."

Peace-keeping and humanitarian assistance

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by the Security Council in 1964,⁽¹⁵⁾ continued throughout 1988 to supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. It also provided security for civilians in the area between the lines; discharged its functions with regard to the security, welfare and well-being of the Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus; regularly visited Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and supported United Nations relief operations.

The area between the cease-fire lines-the buffer zone-was kept under constant surveillance by UNFICYP through a system of 142 observation posts, 50 of which were permanently manned as at 30 November. The number of cease-fire violations remained at a low level, but the number of shooting incidents increased slightly. UNFICYP continued to be successful in restoring the status quo ante. In Nicosia, the Force continued its efforts to reduce tension at certain points where troops of both sides continued to be in dangerous proximity to each other and where a significant number of cease-fire violations and other related incidents had occurred. The UNFICYP civilian police continued to work in close co-operation with both the Cyprus and the Turkish Cypriot police, contributing to the protection and movement of civilians between the cease-fire lines. UNFICYP also continued to monitor new civilian construction projects close to the lines in Nicosia to ensure their civilian nature and alleviate concerns on both sides.

Overflights of the buffer zone continued, with nine such flights by Turkish forces or civilian aircraft and eight from the south; all overflights were protested.

Temporary visits to the south by Greek Cypriots living in the north continued through the good offices of UNFICYP. Thirty Greek Cypriots transferred permanently to the south, leaving 639 residing in the north. UNFICYP continued visiting Turkish Cypriots living in the south and assisting them in maintaining contact with their relatives in the north; 30 reunions involving 180 persons were arranged. Frequent contacts between members of the Maronite community residing on opposite sides of the lines continued.

Emergency medical services, including medical evacuation and the delivery of medicines, were provided for both civilian communities, and the anti-mosquito programme arranged by UNFICYP continued. UNFICYP distributed 454 tons of food and other related items provided by Cyprus and the Cyprus Red Cross to Greek Cypriots in the north. Food continued to be provided by the World Food Programme to some 22,000 children and persons in social welfare institutions.

As co-ordinator of humanitarian assistance to Cyprus, UNHCR continued to assist the displaced and the needy and to promote bicomunal projects regarding sewerage, conservation work and rehabilitation of the handicapped. Two major multisectoral projects provided $10 million to assist in communal and bicomunal activities. The 1988 programme was co-ordinated by the Cyprus Red Cross Society and involved constructing medical and educational facilities and overseas procurement of equipment and supplies for health, education, agriculture, veterinary services and water resources management.

Joint activities were maintained between the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot communities in the framework of ongoing projects, assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Regular joint meetings took place under the Nicosia Master Plan, whose main focus was to ensure the best utilization of funds made available by UNHCR and the Federal Republic of Germany for projects in the old walled city of Nicosia. The European Economic Community agreed to provide 4 million European currency units to fund projects on both sides in the walled city. With UNDP funding, emergency assistance and expertise were provided to halt damage to the Selimiye-St. Sophia national monument in the Turkish Cypriot quarter of Nicosia.

Commanded by Major-General Gunther G. Greindl of Austria, UNFICYP, as at 30 November 1988, had a strength of 2,124, including 35 civilian police. Its military contingents came from Austria (410), Canada (575), Denmark (341), Finland (7), Ireland (8), Sweden (7) and the United Kingdom (741). Civilian police were from Australia (20) and Sweden (15).

UNFICYP financing

In 1988, contributions to UNFICYP, which continued to be financed by voluntary contributions and by troop-contributing Governments, totalled $20, 412, 776 from 23 countries. Estimated six-month costs totalled some $46 million, of which troop-contributing Governments absorbed in the order of $33 million for such items as regular pay and allowances and normal matériel expenses, while United Nations expenditures amounted to $13 million.

The accumulated deficit for UNFICYP since its inception in 1964 was in the order of $164.2 million as at 30 November 1988.

Expressing concern over the precarious financial situation which continued to place an unfair burden on the troop-contributing countries, the Secretary-General, on 26 February⁽¹⁶⁾ and 14 September 1988⁽¹⁷⁾ renewed his appeal to States for voluntary contributions to finance UNFICYP, again stressing its indispensable contribution to international peace by maintaining calm in Cyprus, a condition crucial to his mission of good offices. Annexed to his appeals were details of the Force's financing.

Institutional machinery

Security Council

In 1988, the Security Council held 55 meetings and adopted 20 resolutions. Twenty-one meetings were devoted to the situation in the Middle East and related questions; nine each to the situation in South Africa and related questions, and to the situation between Iran and Iraq, including four to Iran's complaint against the United States regarding the shooting down of its passenger airliner; four to Tunisia's complaint against Israel following the assassination in Tunis of four persons, among them a member of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization; two each to the extension of the mandate of UNFICYP, a complaint by the Republic of Korea regarding the blowing up in mid-air, on 29 November 1987, of its passenger airliner, the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and the situation in Nicaragua; one each to the situation in Afghanistan, Angola and Western Sahara; and one (private) to consideration and adoption of the Council's report to the General Assembly.

Agenda

The Security Council considered 14 agenda items during 1988—its forty-third year. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting (for list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV). Seven items were included in the Council's agenda for the first time. They concerned: the destruction on 29 November 1987 of a Korean Air Lines passenger aircraft (see PART TWO, Chapter III); the United Kingdom's decision to conduct military manoeuvres in the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands from 7 to 31 March 1988 (see PART FOUR, Chapter I); the United States' decision of 16 March to send American troops to Honduran territory (see PART TWO, Chapter II); a complaint by Tunisia of violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity by Israel on 16 April, which resulted in the loss of human life (see PART TWO, Chapter IV); the destruction of a civil aircraft of Iran Air by a United States missile (see PART TWO, Chapter III); the situation relating to Afghanistan (see PART TWO, Chapter III); and the situation in Angola (see PART TWO, Chapter I). The Council President issued a statement in connection with an attack by South Africa on the territory of Botswana (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

On 15 September,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, of 12 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.⁽²⁾ He listed 126 other matters not discussed by the Council during the period, but of which it remained seized. By decision 43/415 of 29 November, the Assembly took note of those matters.

Membership

In 1988, the question of equitable representation on the Security Council and increase in its membership again was not considered. By decision 43/458 of 22 December, the General Assembly decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth (1989) session.

Pursuant to rule 15 of the provisional rules: of procedure of the Security Council, the Secretary General, in December,⁽³⁾ reported to the Council the credentials of Canada, Colombia, Ethiopia, Finland and Malaysia, which had been elected by the General Assembly on 26 October as non-permanent Council members for a two-year term beginning 1 January 1989. In his opinion, those credentials were in order.

Report for 1987/88

At a private meeting on 8 November 1988, the Security Council unanimously adopted its report covering the period from 16 June 1987 to 15 June 1988.⁽⁴⁾ The General Assembly took note of the report by decision 43/416 of 29 November.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two regular sessions during 1988, to resume and conclude its forty-second (1987) session and to hold the major part of its forty-third.

The first part of the forty-second session had been held from 15 September to 21 December 1987⁽⁵⁾ and resumed in 1988 from 29 February to 2 March, from 18 to 23 March, from 11 to 13 May, on 16 and 17 August and on 19 September, when it was declared closed after concluding consideration of the remaining agenda items. The Assembly also held its fifteenth special session, devoted to disarmament (see PART ONE, Chapter II), from 31 May to 25 June 1988.

The forty-third regular session opened on 20 September and continued until its suspension on 22 December. During the general debate, from 26 September to 13 October, the Assembly heard 153 statements by heads of State or Government and heads or members of delegations.

Agenda

As decided by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽⁶⁾ six items remained on its agenda for its resumed forty-second session in 1988. On 16 August 1988, the Assembly, by decision 42/402 B, included in the agenda of its forty-second session an additional item on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group.

On 19 September, the Assembly included items in the draft agenda of its forty-third session on: armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security (decision 42/463); the current financial crisis of the United Nations (decision 42/464); the question of Cyprus (decision 42/465); and consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq (decision 42/466).

The forty-third session initially had 149 items on the agenda, which was adopted by the Assembly on 23 September; three additional items were later included.⁽⁷⁾ (For list and allocation of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.) The agenda was adopted by decision 43/402. Under the same decision, the Assembly allocated the items to the appropriate Main Committees and decided to hold one plenary meeting on item 77, on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, on the understanding that the Special Political Committee would remain seized of the item for its customary consideration. The request for a special meeting on the uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories under agenda item 77 had been made by Democratic Yemen for the Arab Group of Member States at the United Nations.⁽⁸⁾

Inclusion of the items and their allocation to the Assembly's Main Committees or plenary meetings⁽⁹⁾ had been recommended by the General Committee⁽¹⁰⁾ on the basis of the preliminary⁽¹¹⁾ and annotated preliminary⁽¹²⁾ list of items, a 141-item provisional agenda⁽¹³⁾ and a seven-item supplementary list.⁽¹⁴⁾

Following a statement by its President that, with the exception of seven items, consideration of the 1988 agenda had been concluded, the Assembly, by decision 43/459 of 22 December, retained those seven items. They were 15 (c), 37, 46, 47, 48, 82 and 137 (for the titles of the items, see APPENDIX IV).

Organisation of the 1988 session

On 23 September 1988, by decision 43/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the forty-third (1988) session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; the schedule of meetings; meeting records; the general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply and length of statements; concluding statements; election of the Chairmen of the Main Committees; questions related to the programme budget; documentation; resolutions; special conferences; meetings of subsidiary organs; and the closing date of the 1988 session.

Subsidiary organs

By decision 43/403 A of 20 September, adopted on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences,⁽¹⁶⁾ the General Assembly authorized the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly on the Review and Appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 to hold meetings during the 1988 session.

By decision 43/403 B, adopted on 23 September and 14 November, on the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences⁽¹⁷⁾ and the General Committee,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Assembly authorized the following subsidiary organs to hold meetings during the 1988 session: Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies; Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Fund for South Africa; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa; Selection Panel for Human Rights Prizes; Special Committee against Apartheid, United Nations Council for Namibia; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East; and World Food Council.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting on 11 October 1988, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General indicating that credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's forty-third session had been submitted by 123 Member States. The Legal Counsel explained that the memorandum related solely to Member States that had submitted formal credentials.

On 5 December, at its second meeting, the Committee examined a 2 December memorandum from the Secretary-General, which was orally updated by the Legal Counsel, reporting that formal credentials from 24 other Member States had been received. In addition, information concerning the appointment of their representatives to the forty-third session had been communicated to the Secretary-General by six Member States, by means of a cable, letter or note verbale. The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of all those Member States, including those that had communicated by cable, letter or note verbale, on the understanding that the latter would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee, acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Chairman, adopted a draft resolution by which it accepted the credentials received. The Committee also recommended two draft resolutions to the Assembly. On 18 October and 9 December, the Assembly, by resolutions 43/10 A and B, respectively, approved the first⁽¹⁸⁾ and second⁽¹⁹⁾ reports of the Credentials Committee.

Co-operation with other intergovernmental organizations

League of Arab States

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in August 1988 on the co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States (LAS).⁽²⁾

The report described consultations and exchanges of information that had taken place between the two organizations and summarized follow-up action on proposals for co-operation agreed on in 1983,⁽³⁾ as well as progress made on proposals adopted at a 1985 joint United Nations/LAS meeting on social development.⁽⁴⁾

The report of the second joint meeting of representatives of the United Nations and of LAS and its specialized organizations (Geneva, 29 June-1 July 1988) was issued as an addendum⁽⁵⁾ to the Secretary-General's report. Taking note with satisfaction of the progress achieved, the meeting stressed the need further to strengthen and enhance co-operation and agreed to develop an effective programme of co-operative activities based on the multi- and bilateral proposals adopted in 1983. The meeting agreed on specific conclusions and recommendations in the following areas: international peace and security; economic, financial and technical co-operation; food and agriculture; industrial development; maritime transport; proposed co-operation between the Arab Maritime Transport Academy, UNDP and the International Maritime Organization; telecommunications; standardization and metrology; co-operation between LAS and the United Nations regional commissions; and co-operation between the LAS General Department for Economic Affairs and United Nations agencies and organizations.

The meeting also identified priorities for co-operation in the fields of social development, labour matters, human resources, cultural affairs, refugees, humanitarian activities and emergencies.

In carrying out projects in the Arab region, the meeting recommended that the United Nations and the specialized agencies give priority to co-operation with Arab organizations and utilize Arab expertise.

Statements in the Security Council. In 1988, the Secretary-General of LAS and its Permanent Observer to the United Nations made statements at a total of six Security Council meetings, in which they had been invited to participate in accordance with rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^b Those meetings dealt with the Middle East situation, including the occupied Arab territories, and Tunisia's complaint about violation by Israel of its territorial integrity and sovereignty on 16 April which resulted in the loss of human life.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In response to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1988 a report on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference.⁽⁷⁾

The report described consultations which had taken place between representatives of the two organizations since the Secretary-General's 1987 report;⁽⁸⁾ it also outlined co-operation in political and security matters and in the areas of economic, social and cultural development. The third general meeting between representatives of the two organizations (Geneva, 4-6 July 1988) noted with satisfaction the progress achieved in the seven designated priority areas of co-operation-food security and agriculture; science and technology development; investment mechanisms and joint ventures; education and eradication of illiteracy; refugee assistance; technical co-operation; development of trade-despite resource constraints, and made specific recommendations for those and other areas of co-operation.

Statements in the Security Council. During 1988, the Permanent Observer of the Conference, under rule 39 of the Security Council's provisional rules of procedure,^b participated in two Council meetings, which dealt with the situation in the occupied Arab territories.

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to co-operate more closely in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional co-operation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking note of the third general meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Geneva from 4 to 6 July 1988, in compliance with General Assembly resolution 42/4 of 15 October 1987,

Noting the encouraging progress made in the seven priority areas of co-operation as well as in the identification of other areas of co-operation,

Convinced that the strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985, 41/3 of 16 October 1986 and 42/4 of 15 October 1987,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Approves the conclusions and recommendations of the third general meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Draft by Jordan (A/43/L.2); agenda item 24.

Observer status for OPANAL

In a letter of 15 August 1988,⁽⁹⁾ Mexico requested the General Assembly, under rule 14 of its rules of procedure, that an item regarding observer status for the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (OPANAL) in the General Assembly be included in the agenda of its forty-third session. In an explanatory memorandum, Mexico recalled that the Agency was established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) as an independent organization to ensure compliance with the obligations assumed by States parties under the Treaty. It noted that as the Assembly had included in its agenda items on the prohibition of nuclear weapons in Latin America and had adopted many resolutions on the question, participation by OPANAL in those items that were of concern to it would facilitate the Organization's work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/6.

Observer status for the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Noting the desire of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean for co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency,

1. Decides to invite the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

Other institutional questions

National liberation movements

By resolution 43/160 A, the General Assembly decided that the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization were entitled to have their communications relating to the sessions and work of the Assembly issued and circulated directly, and without intermediary, as official Assembly documents. It also decided that they were entitled to have their communications relating to the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under the Assembly's auspices issued and circulated directly, and without intermediary, as official conference documents.

By resolution 43/160 B, the Assembly once again called on the States concerned to accord to the delegations of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States and accorded observer status by international organizations, the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character.⁽¹⁾ (For details, see PART FIVE, Chapter V.)

Composition of UN organs

In 1988, as in every year since 1979, consideration of the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations was deferred, based on a recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which reported that none of its members had requested to speak on the substance of the item.⁽²⁾ Acting on that recommendation, the General Assembly on 6 December adopted decision 43/420, by which it included the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth (1989) session.

Implementation of UN resolutions

On 7 December, by decision 43/421, the General Assembly, at the request of Cyprus, deferred consideration of the item on implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations and decided to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth (1989) session.

PART TWO

Regional questions

Chapter I

Africa

In 1988, the United Nations continued to consider and act on a number of political issues in Africa, in particular South Africa's apartheid policy and its aggression against neighbouring States. It was also kept informed about other conflicts among African States.

The question of apartheid was debated by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee against Apartheid among others. The Assembly adopted a series of resolutions dealing with South Africa's apartheid policies, which showed continuing agreement among the majority of Member States on apartheid and on the Organization's role in the struggle to abolish it.

The Security Council, in June, strongly condemned South Africa for its latest attacks on Botswana. Allegations of aggressive acts by South Africa were made to the Council by Mozambique, Namibia and Zambia. In September, the Council called on South Africa to cease its continued illegal occupation of Namibia.

Following requests by Angola and Cuba concerning the redeployment and withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, the Security Council in December decided to establish under its authority a United Nations Angola Verification Mission and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to implement that decision.

In March, June and November, the Council called on South Africa to stay the execution and commute the death sentences of anti-apartheid activists. In the case of the Sharpeville Six, it urged all States and organizations to use their influence to save their lives.

The Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte. It also appealed for contributions to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which provided scholarships for students from the region, and called for continued co-operation with the Organization of African Unity,

South Africa and apartheid

South Africa's system of enforced racial separation-the policy of apartheid-continued to be of major concern to the international community throughout 1988. The General Assembly, the Security Council and various other United Nations bodies continued their activities aimed at pressuring the apartheid regime into dismantling its system of racial discrimination, which had been condemned as a crime against humanity. In the Assembly's view, comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations remained the most peaceful and effective means through which the international community could exert pressure on South Africa.

As in previous years, the world community was particularly concerned with the escalation of repression and State-induced terror against opponents of apartheid; the continued intransigence of South Africa demonstrated through the extension of the state of emergency, the large number of arbitrary arrests, the increased use of vigilante groups and the muzzling of the press; its acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring States; and the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

It was against this political background that the General Assembly in December adopted eleven resolutions aimed at sustaining and strengthening international pressure against the apartheid policies of South Africa.

General aspects

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council,⁽¹⁾ reviewed the situation in South Africa and the Committee's activities aimed at intensifying the international campaign against it. The report, which included recommendations for further action, covered the period until August 1988; developments later in the year were described in the Committee's 1989 report.⁽²⁾

The Committee followed with grave concern the rapidly deteriorating situation in and around South Africa and the regime's mounting reign of terror in the face of unprecedented nation-wide resistance to apartheid.

It reported that despite the intensification of South Africa's repression and annihilation of opponents, resistance to apartheid persisted and was now taking different forms. An alliance between organized black workers and youth was developing into a significant component of the strategic resistance, as was the role of church leaders and religious institutions. There was also growing opposition by democratic whites, as prominent Afrikaners raised their voices in opposition to apartheid. The End Conscription Campaign, the biggest organization of whites affiliated with the United Democratic Front (UDF), carried out effective campaigns against induction into the South African Defence Force, as a result of which the organization was virtually banned in August.

During 1988, the Committee repeatedly drew the international community's attention to South Africa's repressive policies by issuing statements, especially in connection with arrests and detentions of anti-apartheid activists. It also drew attention to the fact that the apartheid régime continued arbitrarily to impose death sentences and carry out executions as part of an ongoing campaign aimed at crushing and suppressing the struggle for liberation. The Committee condemned those executions and urged the Governments and peoples of the world to intervene to prevent further executions.

The Committee continued to promote an international campaign against South Africa's racial policies. It organized, assisted and participated in a number of meetings, conferences and seminars to mobilize public opinion against the apartheid régime and for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions as well as sports and cultural boycotts against South Africa. The Committee also campaigned for the release of all political prisoners and the improvement of the situation of women and children under apartheid.

In the conclusions to its 1988 report, the Committee stated that the Pretoria régime had escalated its repression, trying to crush every opposition in the country; at the same time, the Government had recently pursued diplomatic efforts aimed at settling the conflict in southern Africa.

The renewal of the state of emergency and the series of repressive measures against anti-apartheid organizations and domestic and foreign media suggested that the régime could advance its objectives only through the indiscriminate use of force and State-sponsored terrorism; the enactment of those measures was designed to stifle opposition to its so-called reforms and to the nationwide municipal elections scheduled for October 1988.

According to the Committee, Pretoria's constitutional scheme excluded blacks from participation in Parliament and restricted them to "homelands" and township councils. The so-called reforms gave an appearance of power-sharing without substance. As the centre-piece of the reformist scheme, the National Council, soon to be called the Great Indaba, was intended to be an advisory body. In the Committee's view, the scheme preserved the fragmentation of the population, maintaining the most critical national issues as the domain for decision-making by whites. As long as the state of emergency remained in effect, political prisoners and detainees remained imprisoned, anti-apartheid and political organizations continued to be banned, a peaceful solution remained elusive and the country continued its downward spiral into violence.

Thus, apartheid was not only being aggressively maintained, but was camouflaged through "reforms". Therefore, the challenge to the international community remained as high as ever, and the imposition of sanctions continued to be of crucial significance.

Recent developments proved once more, in the Committee's opinion, that the régime could not solve the conflict in the country through violence; despite relentless attacks on all fronts, the opposition was regrouping; its activities ranged from armed resistance to strikes and boycotts. It was imperative that the international community exercise further economic and political pressure in order to induce the régime to introduce fundamental changes towards the eradication of apartheid.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly: condemn the apartheid system and the régime's acts of repression, aggression, destabilization and terrorism; reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggle, including armed resistance, for the elimination of apartheid; call for assistance to the national liberation movements as well as to the front-line States subjected to aggression and destabilization by South Africa; demand that the apartheid régime lift the state of emergency and end its repressive policies and violent practices, release all political prisoners and detainees, rescind the bans on political organizations and individuals and repeal restrictions on the freedom of the press; emphasize that only negotiations with the genuine representatives of the resisting majority could bring about a peaceful, just and lasting settlement of the racial conflict; request the Security Council to adopt comprehensive and mandatory sanctions; and, pending their adoption, call on States to terminate military, nuclear, financial, technological and other relations with South Africa, strengthen and co-ordinate measures and strictly enforce their implementation.

The Committee further recommended that the Assembly urge the international community to intensify its efforts to implement fully United Nations resolutions on cultural, sports, consumer and other boycotts and to facilitate implementation of the policy of cultural isolation of South Africa; urge ratification or accession to the international conventions against apartheid, including the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, which had entered into force on 3 April; convene a special session in 1989 on apartheid and its destructive consequences; and authorize the Committee to continue mobilizing international action against apartheid through publicity, meetings, seminars, conferences, hearings, consultations, missions and other related activities.

In resolution 43/50 F, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's work programme.

International action to eliminate apartheid

In accordance with a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1988⁽⁴⁾ submitted replies from 28 Governments to his request for information regarding the Assembly's appeal to consider, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, national legislative or other measures to increase the pressure on the South African régime. Such measures included the cessation of further investment in and financial loans to South Africa; an end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa; prohibition of the sale of kruggerand and all other coins minted in South Africa; cessation of all military, police or intelligence co-operation with South Africa, in particular the sale of computer equipment; an end to nuclear collaboration with South Africa; and cessation of the export and sale of oil to South Africa.

Some of the Governments that sent replies emphasized that they did not maintain any relations with South Africa, in conformity with resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and/or regional organizations. Others reaffirmed previous policies concerning cessation of links with South Africa and newly adopted measures. All replies affirmed commitment to those policies and adherence to the 1987 as well as other Assembly resolutions.

Special Committee's conclusions and recommendations. The Special Committee against Apartheid concluded that although the international community had taken a number of positive steps to isolate South Africa and put pressure on the authorities to dismantle apartheid, there were still loopholes in the economic measures. While some States were gradually reducing their economic links with South Africa, others were filling the gap in defiance of United Nations resolutions calling for the complete isolation of the régime. The techniques adopted by some corporations to disinvest while maintaining links with South Africa through licensing and other arrangements had attracted attention and criticism.

The Committee considered the total isolation of South Africa to be an urgent task of the international community, as it would force the Government to accept the inevitable course of events and to undertake negotiations with the leaders recognized by the overwhelming majority of the people of South Africa.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, in a November report⁽⁵⁾ on contacts between Member States and South Africa since the adoption of a November 1987 General Assembly resolution on the situation in Namibia resulting from its occupation by South Africa,⁽⁶⁾ observed that, while the majority of States had taken measures to comply with the numerous United Nations resolutions calling for total eradication of apartheid, some Member States, as well as their multinational corporations, continued to do business as usual with the racist régime. In the Council's view, the continued opposition to comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by those same trade and political partners of South Africa constituted the single most significant impediment to genuine international efforts to end apartheid, thus encouraging South Africa to resist the will of the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 K by recorded vote.

Concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the continuous aggravation of the situation in South Africa caused by the policy of apartheid, and in particular by the extension and further tightening of the nation-wide state of emergency,

Convinced that the root-cause of the crisis in southern Africa is the policy of apartheid,

Noting with grave concern that in order to perpetuate apartheid in South Africa the authorities there have committed acts of aggression and breaches of the peace,

Convinced that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of majority rule on the basis of the free and fair exercise of universal adult suffrage can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution in South Africa,

Noting that the so-called reforms in South Africa have the effect of further entrenching the apartheid system and further dividing the people of South Africa.

Recognizing that the policy of bantustanization deprives the majority of the people of their citizenship and makes them foreigners in their own country,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to take all necessary action for the eradication of apartheid, and, in particular, the need for increased and effective pressure on the South African authorities as a peaceful means of achieving the abolition of apartheid,

Encouraged, in this context, by the growing international consensus, as demonstrated by the adoption of Security Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985, and the increase in and expansion of national, regional and intergovernmental measures to this end,

Considering sanctions to be the most effective peaceful means available to the international community to increase pressure on the South African authorities,

Convinced of the vital importance of the strict observance of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council instituted a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, and Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 concerning the import of arms, ammunition and military vehicles produced in South Africa, and of the need to make these embargoes fully effective in conformity with Council resolution 591(1986) of 28 November 1986,

Commending the national policies not to sell and export oil to South Africa,

Considering that measures to ensure effective and scrupulous implementation of such embargoes through international co-operation are essential and urgent,

Noting, in this respect, the efforts undertaken by the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Noting with deep concern that, through a combination of military and economic pressures, in violation of international law, the authorities of South Africa have resorted to economic reprisals and aggression against, and destabilization of, neighbouring States,

Alarmed by the seriously deteriorating situation of millions of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in southern Africa caused by these policies and actions,

Considering that contacts between apartheid South Africa and the front-line and other neighbouring States, necessitated by geography, colonial legacy and other reasons, should not be used by other States as a pretext for legitimizing the apartheid system or justifying attempts to break the international isolation of that system,

Convinced that the existence of apartheid will continue to lead to ever-increasing resistance by the oppressed people, by all possible means, and increased tension and conflict that will have far-reaching consequences for southern Africa and the world,

Convinced that policies of collaboration with the apartheid regime, instead of respect for the legitimate aspirations of the genuine representatives of the great majority of the people, will encourage its repression and aggression against neighbouring States and its defiance of the United Nations,

Expressing its full support for the legitimate aspiration of African States and peoples, and of the Organization of African Unity, for the total liberation of the continent of Africa from colonialism and racism,

1. Strongly condemns the policy of apartheid that deprives the majority of the South African population of their dignity, fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Strongly condemns the South African authorities for the killings, arbitrary mass arrests and detention of members of mass organizations as well as other individuals who are opposing the apartheid system and the state of emergency, and for the detention of and use of violence against children;

3. Further condemns the overt and the covert aggressive actions, which South Africa has carried out for the destabilization of neighbouring States, as well as those aimed against refugees from South Africa and Namibia;

4. Demands that the authorities of South Africa:

(a) Release immediately and unconditionally Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, detainees and restrictees;

(b) Immediately lift the state of emergency;

(c) Abrogate discriminatory laws and lift bans on all organizations and individuals, as well as end restrictions on and censorship of news media;

(d) Grant freedom of association and full trade union rights to all workers of South Africa;

(e) Initiate without pre-conditions a political dialogue with genuine leaders of the majority population with a view to eradicating apartheid without delay and establishing a representative government;

(f) Eradicate the bantustan structures;

(g) Immediately end the destabilization of front-line and other States.

5. Urges the Security Council to consider without delay the adoption of effective mandatory sanctions against South Africa;

6. Also urges the Security Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the mandatory arms embargo instituted by it in resolution 418(1977) and of the arms embargo requested in its resolution 558(1984) and, within the context of the relevant resolutions, to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from South Africa;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to consider national legislative or other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on the apartheid régime of South Africa, such as:

(a) Cessation of further investment in, and financial loans to, South Africa;

(b) An end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa;

(c) Prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa;

(d) Cessation of all forms of military, police or intelligence co-operation with the authorities of South Africa, in particular the sale of computer equipment;

(e) An end to nuclear collaboration with South Africa;

(f) Cessation of export and sale of oil to South Africa;

(g) Other measures within the economic and commercial fields;

8. Recognizes the pressing need, existing and potential, of South Africa's neighbouring States for economic assistance, as a complement and not as an alternative to sanctions against South Africa, and appeals to all States, organizations and institutions:

(a) To increase assistance to the front-line States and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in order to increase their economic strength and independence from South Africa;

(b) To increase humanitarian, legal, educational and other such assistance and support to the victims of apartheid, to the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and to all those struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in South Africa;

9. Welcomes the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, which was held at Oslo from 22 to 24 August 1988;

10. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action for the cessation of all academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid régime of South Africa, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid,

11. Commends the States that have already adopted voluntary measures against the apartheid regime of South Africa in accordance with General Assembly resolution 42/23 G of 20 November 1987 and invites those which have not yet done so to follow their example;

12. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the total eradication of apartheid and for the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society in which all the people, irrespective of race, colour or creed, enjoy fundamental freedoms and human rights;

13. Pays tribute to and expresses solidarity with organizations and individuals struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sanctions and boycotts

The Special Committee reported in 1988 that the international campaign to isolate and put pressure on South Africa had intensified and was marked by significant new developments.

In an initiative to promote gold sanctions against South Africa, the World Gold Commission, a London-based anti-apartheid organization, was launched in June. Convinced that non-South African gold suppliers could mine enough gold to satisfy the world's jewellery industry, the Commission had formulated specific proposals with respect to the imposition of gold sanctions against South Africa, notably a ban on gold imports, the release of gold from national reserves and the establishment of a fund for the training of students in the techniques of mining and marketing gold.

The Commission had reported that the Italian jewellery industry, the largest buyer of South African gold, could feasibly switch from South African to non-South African gold. Those findings prompted all three Italian trade union federations to launch a campaign focusing on the jewellery manufacturing centres of northern Italy. The work of both the Commission and the trade unions led a significant number of Italian manufacturers to take steps to obtain their gold supplies from countries other than South Africa.

People's sanctions were also a major force behind the initiatives to tighten, expand and increase the scope of sanctions against South Africa. Examples included the refusal of consumers to purchase South African products, the refusal of workers to handle goods from South Africa and the demands of shareholders to have stocks divested from companies operating in or having links to South Africa. Trade unions and anti-apartheid movements were instrumental in organizing people's sanctions.

In its conclusions, the Committee said that sanctions continued to be of crucial significance. The sanctions imposed by a number of countries had significantly contributed to common efforts of the international community and had had a considerable impact even if their implementation had been at times hesitant and on the whole unco-ordinated. Partly as a result of sanctions, South Africa's economy was experiencing slow rates of growth, and the compound effects of disinvestment, the denial of long-term credit and the lack of new capital investment were beginning to be felt. The Committee welcomed in that context the new measures adopted or being considered by the Commonwealth and the United States Congress. It noted that as a result of measures undertaken in recent years, South Africa's trade with the Nordic countries had virtually ceased and that with the United States had decreased.

The Committee regretted, however, that while some countries were gradually reducing their economic links with South Africa, others were filling that gap, notable among them the Federal Republic of Germany, which had become the largest exporter to South Africa, followed by Japan and the United Kingdom. Equally disturbing in the Committee's view was the fact that some newly industrialized countries, particularly in the Far East, were filling the economic gap created by sanctions.

The Committee considered that sanctions should be targeted at key areas of the economy, such as banning imports of coal and agricultural products, the supply of loans and credit, the transfer of technology and direct air flights to and from South Africa. The Committee also called for the strengthening of sanctions as well as improved coordination, standardization and implementation and a more effective centralized monitoring and reporting system. States deciding to introduce sanctions should adopt national legislative measures to penalize violators.

Action by the Council for Namibia. In a November report on contacts between Member States and South Africa,⁽⁵⁾ the Council for Namibia expressed the view that opposition to comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by some countries constituted the single most significant impediment to genuine international efforts to end apartheid. It therefore was of utmost importance for the Security Council to reconsider the imposition of mandatory sanctions against the Pretoria régime under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The call for sanctions was repeated in the Council's annual report to the General Assembly.⁽⁷⁾

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries), in August,^(*) reiterated its request to all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions, to act individually or collectively to effectively isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally and encouraged those Governments that had unilaterally taken certain measures against it to take additional ones.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 C by recorded vote.

Comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/23 C of 20 November 1987,

Recalling also its earlier resolutions and those of the Security Council calling for concerted international action to force the racist régime of South Africa to eradicate apartheid,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 188 to 194,

Noting with satisfaction the entering into force on 3 April 1988 of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports,

Gravely concerned at the continuing defiance by the apartheid régime of the will of the international community, the regime's provocative non-compliance with resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, its escalating terror against the people of South Africa, its continuing illegal occupation of Namibia, and its acts of military aggression and political and economic destabilization against independent African States,

Expressing serious concern at the continuing violation of the arms embargo against South Africa,

Noting with grave concern that some Member States and transnational corporations have continued economic relations with South Africa, while some others have begun to exploit opportunities created by sanctions imposed by other States thus substantially increasing their trade with South Africa,

1. Reaffirms that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security, and that it is a primary responsibility of the United Nations to assist in efforts to eliminate apartheid without further delay;

2. Encourages States that have not yet done so to accede to the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, and calls upon all States to support the work of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports;

3. Culls upon those States which have increased their trade with South Africa and, particularly, Japan, which recently emerged as the most important trading partner of South Africa, to sever trade relations with South Africa;

4. Decides once again that the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations would be the most appropriate, effective and peaceful means to bring apartheid to an end and to discharge the responsibilities of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, which are threatened and violated by the apartheid régime;

5. Urgently requests the Security Council, therefore, to consider immediate action under Chapter VII of the Charter with a view to applying comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa and calls upon those Governments which are opposed to the application of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions to reassess their policies and cease their opposition to the application of such sanctions by the Security Council;

6. Appeals to the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America to co-operate in the imposition of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions by the international community against racist South Africa as a means for achieving peaceful change in that country;

7. Urges the Security Council to strengthen the mandatory arms embargo imposed by its resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 and 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 in order to bring to an end the continued violations of the arms embargo.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council met in March to consider the situation in South Africa. On 8 March, the Council voted on a draft resolution⁽⁹⁾ by Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia and Zambia, which would have had the Council impose sanctions under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. The proposed sanctions, in accordance with Article 41, were to include the prohibition of the import of South African iron, steel, krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa. Also prohibited would have been computer exports to South Africa; investment in and loans to South Africa; the promotion of and support for trade with it; the export and sale of oil to it; and all forms of military, police or intelligence co-operation. The vote was 10 to 2, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, Italy, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: France, Federal Republic of Germany, Japan.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of permanent members. (For further details on the Council's consideration and action on the question of South Africa, see below.)

National measures against South Africa

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General in November submitted a report on implementation of national measures adopted against South Africa.⁽¹¹⁾ The report dealt with the nature and scope of measures taken against South Africa, the degree of their applicability and the machinery for monitoring and reporting. It further discussed problems relating to their implementation, in particular the existence or absence of co-ordination and the degree of enforcement.

Annexed to the report was a description of measures regarding trade in commodities, financial flows and investment, transfer of technology, and transport and services, prepared by a consultant to the Centre against Apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 D by recorded vote.

Imposition, co-ordination and strict monitoring of measures against racist South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on sanctions against South Africa, Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 191 to 194, and of the Secretary-General's report on implementation of national measures adopted against South Africa,

Considering that measures taken by States individually and some collectively, while commendable, vary in coverage and degree of enforcement, which allows for the exploitation of existing gaps and loopholes,

Concerned at the increasing number of States that exploit the trade gaps created by the imposition of these measures,

Commending the action taken by labour unions, women's organizations, student groups and other anti-apartheid organizations for the isolation of the apartheid regime,

1. Urges all States that have not yet done so, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, to adopt legislative and/or comparable measures to impose effective sanctions against South Africa and, in particular:

(a) To impose embargoes on the supply of all products, technologies, skills and services that can be used for the military and nuclear industry of South Africa, including military intelligence;

(b) To impose embargoes on the supply of oil and petroleum products;

(c) To prohibit the import of coal, gold, other minerals and agricultural products from South Africa and Namibia;

(d) To induce transnational corporations, banks and financial institutions to withdraw effectively from South Africa by ceasing equity and non-equity investment, transfer of technology and know-how, and provision of credit and loans;

(e) To sever all air, sea and other transport links with South Africa,

(f) To prevent, through appropriate measures, their citizens from serving in South Africa's armed forces and other sensitive sectors;

(g) To take appropriate measures to ensure the effectiveness of the sports and cultural boycott of the racist régime of South Africa;

2. Also urges all States to monitor strictly the implementation of the above measures and adopt when necessary legislation providing for penalties on individuals and enterprises violating those measures;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on new legislative and/or comparable measures adopted and implemented by States against South Africa, especially in areas in which the South African economy depends on the outside world.

Oil embargo

The 11-member Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1986,⁽¹²⁾ reported to the Assembly in October.⁽¹³⁾ The Group focused its attention on the flow of oil and petroleum products to the country and on ways and means to assist Member States in implementing embargoes or comparable policies. It also concerned itself with the role of companies that owned oil refineries in South Africa and with transnational corporations (TNCs) that had assisted South Africa in converting coal to oil and in its hydrocarbon exploration projects. It collected and evaluated its own information on oil deliveries to South Africa, but also considered information on violations of the oil embargo from other sides. On 10 June, the Group and the Special Committee against Apartheid had established a task force on the hearings on the oil embargo against South Africa, to be held during the first half of 1989.

The Group had noted that large foreign oil companies and corporations controlled a significant portion of the oil refining and distribution infrastructure in South Africa. The international community attached special importance to an oil embargo because of Pretoria's dependence on outside sources of petroleum and on outside aid in procuring and transporting the petroleum it needed. South Africa had attempted to lessen its dependence on external petroleum supplies by resorting to the conversion of coal to motor fuels and by stockpiling crude oil and petroleum products.

However, oil-from-coal conversion satisfied only one fourth of the country's motor fuel demand and, combined with stockpile drawdowns, could maintain motor fuel supplies at normal levels for only six to seven months. Offshore oil exploration had not resulted in significant discoveries.

Efforts to make an oil embargo mandatory had failed. Owing to its voluntary nature, the oil embargo had neither been strictly applied nor closely monitored, and had therefore not been fully effective.

The Group recirculated a questionnaire sent in 1987 to Member States concerning measures they had taken to prevent the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa. In 1988, it received 36 replies; in 1987, 50 Governments had responded, 29 of which again sent replies in 1988. Many Governments either annexed their legislation or comparable measures with respect to the oil embargo, referred to legislation and policies concerning the prohibition of any form of trade or transaction with South Africa or announced that they did not have any oil trade with that country. Some States had not introduced specific legislative or other measures, but instead had incorporated the embargo as a general policy of sanctions.

In its conclusions, the Group stated that a mandatory oil embargo was urgently needed; despite an almost universally declared policy that no oil or petroleum products should be supplied to South Africa, that policy was not being implemented unanimously.

In order to tighten all loopholes in the embargo, the Group suggested that the administrative measures enforced by States that export, ship and handle oil include "end user" and other destination restriction clauses to prevent companies and traders from attempting to circumvent the embargo by falsifying discharge certificates and other documentation.

The Group recommended that the Assembly request the Security Council to consider invoking Chapter VII of the Charter to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa. Pending such a decision, the Assembly should request Member States to adopt legislative or comparable measures to that effect.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. At its August session,⁽⁸⁾ the Committee on colonial countries called on those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take effective measures to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 43/50 J.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Recalling its resolutions on an oil embargo against South Africa, in particular resolution 42/23 F of 20 November 1987,

Noting that, while oil-exporting States have committed themselves to an oil embargo against South Africa, very few major shipping States have done so,

Concerned that the racist regime of South Africa has been able to circumvent the oil embargoes and comparable measures adopted by States,

Commending action taken by labour unions, student groups and anti-apartheid organizations against companies involved in the violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, and for the enforcement of the embargo,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would complement the arms embargo against the apartheid régime, and serve to curtail both its acts of aggression against the front-line States and its repression of the people of South Africa and Namibia,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa;

2. Urges the Security Council to take action without further delay to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa as well as the supply of equipment and technology to, financing of and investment in its oil industry and coal liquefaction projects;

3. Requests all States concerned, pending a decision by the Security Council, to adopt effective measures and/or legislation to broaden the scope of the oil embargo in order to ensure the complete cessation of the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia, whether directly or indirectly, and in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate to each nation, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibility for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent access by South Africa to other sources of energy, including the supply of raw materials, technical know-how, financial assistance and transport;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to apartheid South Africa, including the provision of finance, technology, equipment or personnel for the prospecting, development or production of hydrocarbon resources, the construction or operation of oil-from-coal or oil-from-gas plants or the development and operation of plants producing fuel substitutes and additives such as ethanol and methanol;

(f) To prevent South African corporations from maintaining or expanding their holdings in oil companies or properties outside South Africa;

(g) To terminate the transport of oil to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(h) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered or owned by their nationals, that have unloaded oil in South Africa in contravention of embargoes imposed;

(i) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo, and to publicize cases of successful prosecutions in conformity with their national laws;

(j) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo, including ways and means to prevent such violations, and to take concerted measures against violators;

4. Decides to hold hearings in April 1989 on the strengthening of the oil embargo against South Africa, to be organized by the Intergovernmental Group in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid;

5. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including proposals for strengthening the mechanism to monitor the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

6. Requests all States to extend their co-operation to the Intergovernmental Group in the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Intergovernmental Group with all necessary assistance for the implementation of the present resolution.

Sports and cultural boycott

The Special Committee continued its activities aimed at strengthening international efforts to curtail cultural and sporting contacts with South Africa, mainly through its regular publication of registers of entertainers, actors and sportspersons who had performed in South Africa and by supporting activities of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in that regard.

A major development designed to strengthen the existing boycott of apartheid in sports was the entry into force on 3 April of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports which the General Assembly adopted in 1985.⁽¹⁴⁾ As of 31 December 1988, 75 States had signed the Convention, 36 of which had ratified or approved it. In addition, 1 had acceded to the Convention.⁽¹⁵⁾ In a statement of 18 March, the Chairman of the Special Committee urged States that had signed the Convention to expedite their processes of becoming parties.

On 14 April, a register of sports contacts for 1987 was released. Like previous registers, it included a cumulative list, by country, of sportspersons who had participated in sports events in South Africa. An increasing number of requests for deletion from the register were received.

On 25 January, the President of the International Tennis Federation announced that players would no longer be required to play in South Africa. In June, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) convened a special meeting and issued a declaration denouncing apartheid and urging all international sports organizations to cut their remaining ties with South Africa. IOC also announced that it would establish a co-ordination commission to study and follow all matters concerning apartheid in sports.

International boxing organizations also expressed their opposition to apartheid and cooperated with the Special Committee in efforts to isolate apartheid sports. The World Boxing Council undertook firm measures against boxers competing in South Africa. In September, the International Amateur Boxing Federation decided to expel Israel for five years following the participation of Israeli boxers in competitions in South Africa.

In August, the Special Committee adopted policy guidelines for implementation of a cultural boycott of South Africa. The policy sought to persuade artists, entertainers and others not to perform in South Africa or to engage in any cultural contacts with it. The guidelines were endorsed by the participants in the Symposium on Culture against Apartheid, organized jointly by the Special Committee, the Ministry of Culture of Greece and the Hellenic Association for the United Nations (Athens, 2-4 September).

A register of entertainers, actors and others who had performed in South Africa between January 1981 and June 1988 was published by the Special Committee in August. The register also contained a list of persons whose names had been deleted since the publication of the 1987 register. Several of the few remaining internationally known entertainers and artists pledged they would not again undertake cultural activities in apartheid South Africa and their names were therefore deleted from the register.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 43/50 D, the General Assembly urged States, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to adopt comparable measures, including action to ensure the effectiveness of the sports and cultural boycott of the racist régime of South Africa. Resolution 43/50 K contained an appeal to Governments and organizations to cease academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid régime, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid. In resolution 43/50 C, the Assembly encouraged States that had not yet done so to accede to the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, and called on all States to support the work of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports, which was to be established under the Convention. In resolution 43/26 A, the Assembly condemned the continuing collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other countries, including cultural contacts, stating that such collaboration helped prolong South Africa's control over Namibia.

Relations with South Africa

Military and nuclear relations

Despite a mandatory arms embargo, South Africa continued to build up its military strength and to trade in armaments. It also increased its security and defence budget, which for 1988/89 was 22 per cent over the previous year's budget. As in the past, actual defence spending for the period was expected to exceed the allocated amount significantly.

In addition to increasing its military and security expenditures, the régime expanded its armaments industry, as well as the export of military equipment. According to the South African Minister for Defence, the Armaments Corporation of South Africa had over the previous 13 years exported weapons to 39 countries, with sales totalling $800 million annually.

In the Special Committee's view, the régime appeared to have acquired the military technology to upgrade its existing armaments. Loopholes allowed South Africa to circumvent the arms embargo, as did the absence or non-enforcement of laws and regulations banning all forms of military collaboration with South Africa, the thriving international market of weapons and military technology and the lack of firm international action against embargo violations.

In January 1988, the Federal Republic of Germany informed the Committee that it had completed its investigations into the alleged sale of blueprints of naval submarines to South Africa by a German company. A fiscal review was dropped after the authorities concluded that the plans were not detailed enough to enable the construction of a U-boat. The Committee noted, however, that no public prosecutor had been assigned to the case and that the fiscal authorities seemed to have focused on possible violations of the country's export laws. A parliamentary committee was investigating the case.

In February, it was reported that Austrian spotter planes were among the military items recently acquired by South Africa. Also in February, the Special Committee requested an investigation of reported arms exports from South Africa to Sri Lanka.

In March, South Africa participated in an arms exhibition at Santiago, Chile. The Committee had urged Chile to cancel its invitation and expressed astonishment that two South African naval vessels had been invited to pay an official call to Chilean ports.

In June, the Special Committee requested the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom to investigate alleged deliveries of high-tech dual-purpose, multi-sensor platforms to South Africa involving British Aerospace and Messerschmit-Bölkow-Blohm. The equipment, produced in accordance with the requirements of the South African Defence Force, was capable of being used for locating tanks, missiles, grenades and other ammunition, as well as for preparing military operations. The two Governments reportedly had issued export licences on the basis of South Africa's assurance that the system would be used for satellites. By the time the matter had been brought to the attention of the Federal Republic of Germany, one platform had already been delivered.

On 2 November, the Committee encouraged Finland not to proceed with the purchase of Crotale missiles from the French company Thomson-CSF, which was linked to South Africa. In a reply received on 21 November, the Finnish Government indicated that the purchase did not contradict the spirit of the United Nations sanctions against South Africa.

In August, South Africa indicated to the International Atomic Energy Agency its intention to adhere to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons⁽¹⁶⁾ and to open its nuclear facilities to international inspection, but only on condition that it be allowed to trade in nuclear fuels and technology. In exchange, it would undertake not to produce nuclear weapons.

The Committee called again on all States to terminate relations with South Africa, including those in the military and nuclear fields.

The Committee also considered South Africa's relations with Israel, including its military relations, which were covered in a separate report (see below).

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, in its 1988 annual report,⁽⁷⁾ noted that in addition to its vast military-industrial complex and the most formidable army in Africa, South Africa possessed a nuclear-weapon capability. Its nuclear programme had been developed with the assistance and collaboration of certain Western and other countries, including Israel. South Africa's role as a major uranium producer, which to a considerable extent came from illegally occupied Namibia, had given it a formidable advantage in securing support from Western countries for its own nuclear programme. The Council called on States to terminate all military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. In August,⁽⁸⁾ the Committee on colonial countries, condemning the military and nuclear intelligence collaboration with South Africa, urged the Security Council to adopt further measures to widen the scope of its 1977 resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ on a mandatory arms embargo to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Committee also called for scrupulous observance of the Council's 1984 resolution⁽¹⁸⁾ enjoining Member States to refrain from importing South African armaments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 B by recorded vote.

Military collaboration with South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Security Council on the arms embargo, as well as other resolutions on collaboration with South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, including annex I thereof,

Considering that the full implementation of an arms embargo against South Africa is an essential element of international action against apartheid,

Taking note of the statement adopted on 18 December 1987 by the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 concerning the question of South Africa, which "noted with alarm and great concern that large quantities of arms and military equipment, including highly sophisticated matériel, were still reaching South Africa directly or via clandestine routes",

Regretting that some countries surreptitiously continue to deal in arms with South Africa and allow South Africa to participate in international arms exhibitions,

1. Strongly urges those States which directly or indirectly infringe the arms embargo and continue to collaborate with South Africa in the military, nuclear, and military intelligence and technology fields, in particular certain Western States and Israel, to terminate forthwith such acts;

2. Urges the Security Council to consider immediate steps to ensure the scrupulous and full implementation of the arms embargo imposed by the Council in resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 and its effective monitoring;

3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Aspects of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa were taken up in a number of other Assembly resolutions. In resolution 43/50 D, the Assembly urged States to impose embargoes on the supply of all products, technologies, skills and services that could be used for South Africa's nuclear and military industry, including military intelligence. In resolution 43/50 K, it urged the Security Council to take steps for strict implementation of the arms embargo and to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from it.

In resolutions 43/71 A and B, the Assembly condemned South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration with it, and called on all concerned to desist from further collaboration. In resolution 43/88, the Assembly called on States, particularly Security Council members, to promote the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger that the nuclear capability of South Africa constituted to African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security.

In decision 43/410, the Assembly considered that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by South Africa constituted a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission, while posing a threat to all mankind. The Assembly condemned the continuing support to South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and expressed concern at the grave consequences for international peace and security of the collaboration between South Africa and certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries in the military and nuclear fields. It called on States to end such collaboration, in particular to halt the supply of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increased South Africa's nuclear capability.

Foreign investments and credits

According to the Special Committee, South Africa relied heavily on trade credits, but its relations with international finance remained tenuous. However, while long-term credits to South Africa had virtually ceased, short-term credits-whose main sources were the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom-were increasing. Japan, the United States and the Commonwealth (except for the United Kingdom) had banned new loans to South Africa, and some countries had also stopped export credit guarantees. South Africa had been able to attract limited amounts of capital from Far Eastern countries with large capital surpluses. Otherwise, there was little prospect of South Africa's having access to external capital lending. In 1988, studies by the United States Congress and the Commonwealth Secretariat showed that international financial confidence in South Africa had eroded.

In the area of investments, a reported 500 TNCs had sold their holdings in South Africa since corporations started withdrawing from there in the 1970s. Of United States-based TNCs with subsidiaries in South Africa, 60 per cent had disinvested since 1985. Of United Kingdom-based corporations, about 20 per cent had withdrawn; this represented a significant volume of disinvestment, since an estimated 40 per cent of all foreign investment in South Africa was United Kingdom-based. Companies based in the Federal Republic of Germany had disinvested about 6 per cent of their operations. Disinvestment by companies based in Australia, Canada, Denmark, the Netherlands and other Western European States had also taken place.

According to the Special Committee, two trends had emerged: the number of companies ending their direct investment in South Africa had dropped in 1988 from their peak 1987 levels, and a number of firms had retained non-equity links with South Africa under agreements affecting such matters as licences, technology transfers, management, assembly, distribution and franchise. Such arrangements, while allowing withdrawing companies to avoid public criticism, afforded them continued profit-making opportunities and provided South Africa with a continued flow of technology.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Foreign investments and credits were addressed by the General Assembly in resolution 43/50 D, urging States to adopt a number of unilateral measures, including inducing banks and financial institutions effectively to withdraw from South Africa by ceasing to provide loans and credits. In resolution 43/50 K, the Assembly made a similar call, appealing at the same time for national legislative and other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on South Africa.

Related action was also taken in resolution 43/29.

Transnational corporations

Activities of the Commission on TNCs. Among the documents considered at the April 1988 session of the Commission on TNCs⁽¹⁹⁾ were three reports of the Secretary-General, dealing respectively with the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia,⁽²⁰⁾ the responsibilities of home countries of such corporations,⁽²¹⁾ and the follow-up to the public hearings on their activities.⁽²²⁾ (For details see PART THREE, Chapter V.) Following their consideration, the Commission recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. The Council acted on it by adopting resolution 1988/56.

The role of TNCs in South Africa was addressed by the General Assembly in several 1988 resolutions. In resolution 43/50 D, the Assembly called on States to induce TNCs effectively to withdraw from South Africa by ceasing equity and non-equity investment and the transfer of technology and know-how. In resolution 43/97, the Assembly called on all States whose TNCs continued to do business with South Africa to terminate those dealings.

IMF and World Bank relations with South Africa

In 1988, as in previous years, United Nations bodies called on the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to terminate their relations with South Africa. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1988/53, deplored the financial and other links of IMF with South Africa in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions, and urgently called on it to end such collaboration.

The Assembly, in resolution 43/30, regretted that the World Bank and IMF continued to maintain links with the racist Pretoria regime, expressed the view that all links should be discontinued and, pending such action, called on those organizations not to extend any support or loans to South Africa.

Israel-South Africa relations

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request to keep relations between South Africa and Israel under review,⁽²³⁾ the Special Committee, in an annex to its 1988 report,⁽¹⁾ covered recent developments concerning relations between the two countries.

Figures in the Special Committee's report covering the second half of 1988⁽²⁾ indicated a decline in trade between the two countries. However, information emanating from South Africa indicated the contrary. According to the South African press, total trade between Israel and South Africa rose to $341 million in 1988, up from $247 million in 1987. Imports of goods from South Africa to Israel in 1988-major among them mineral products, petrol, coal and base metal-exceeded exports by some $80 million. Exports from Israel totalled $131 million, mainly chemical products, precious stones, metals and machinery, but also medical and optical products, rubber, plastics and textiles.

The Special Committee found that despite having taken limited measures against South Africa, Israel continued to have dealings with that country, particularly in the military field, a fact of particular concern to the Committee. Israel's military collaboration with South Africa extended not only to arms trade and upgrading of South Africa's weaponry systems, but also to training and advising its forces. In view of the veil of secrecy surrounding the nature and length of the military agreements between the two countries, the Committee felt that Israel's affirmation that it would refrain from new undertakings with South Africa in the realm of defence did not adequately contribute to the international community's efforts towards isolating South Africa and eliminating apartheid as soon as possible.

By a July letter to the Centre against Apartheid, Israel said it would continue its endeavour to curtail its relations with South Africa and would refrain from new undertakings in the realm of defence. It added that no new investments in South Africa had been approved and that cultural ties had been completely severed with those institutes connected in any way with the apartheid régime. It said that Israeli civil servants were forbidden to visit South Africa and that Israeli authorities, including its Customs Services, had taken all necessary steps to prevent Israel from being used as a transit point for the transfer of goods and services to and from South Africa. Israel also mentioned its training programmes for black South Africans and invitations to some prominent black leaders to visit Israel.

The Committee said that however useful such programmes and visits might be, they could not substitute for restrictive measures against South Africa.

Although data were limited because of the secretive nature of the relations between the two countries, information suggesting continuing collaboration between them, particularly in the military field, did exist. According to the Committee, Israel's arms sales to South Africa amounted to about 10 per cent of its total annual arms exports. A joint missile programme was believed to have started in 1987. In August 1988, South Africa unveiled a modernized and integrated navigation and weapon system, which Israeli experts were believed to have helped develop. In the vein of trade for military use, Israel's State television claimed that Israel imported steel from South Africa for its arms industry.

Concluding, the Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to keep the relations between the two countries under review, that it condemn the continuing collaboration between them and that it call on Israel to cease such collaboration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On December 5, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 E by recorded vote.

Relations between South Africa and Israel

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 42/23 D of 20 November 1987,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, particularly annex I on recent developments concerning relations between South Africa and Israel,

1. Calls upon Israel to abide by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council by terminating forthwith all forms of military, nuclear, intelligence, economic and other collaboration, particularly its long-term contracts for military supplies, with South Africa;

2. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to monitor the relations between South Africa and Israel and keep them under constant review, including the implementation of the measures adopted by Israel, and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

In resolution 43/106, the Assembly denounced the collusion between Israel and South Africa and expressed support for the 1983 Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel.⁽²⁴⁾ Israel was among the countries condemned for maintaining ties with South Africa, which, according to the Assembly, encouraged the latter to persist in suppressing the aspirations of the people to self-determination and independence. In resolution 43/92, Israel, together with other countries, was again condemned for collaborating with South Africa in many areas, including the military and nuclear fields, thus encouraging it to persist in its brutal oppression of the peoples of southern Africa and the denial of their human rights. In resolution 43/80, the Assembly reiterated its condemnation of the co-operation between the two countries in the field of nuclear armament.

Situation in South Africa

General political situation. In its 1988⁽¹⁾ and 1989 reports,(s) the Special Committee against Apartheid provided information on the general political situation in South Africa during 1988. According to those reports, the Government had shown no genuine inclination towards finding a solution for the political crisis in the country. Instead, it had tried to crush opposition by extending the state of emergency, thereby creating an atmosphere of terror in which the police, the army and vigilante groups acted with virtual impunity. Parallel to the internal suppression, the Government had stepped up its terrorist activities abroad against members of national liberation movements with the aim of weakening them and undermining their standing within the international community.

On 24 February, Pretoria imposed severe restrictions on the activities of 17 leading anti-apartheid organizations and 18 individuals committed to peaceful forms of struggle, as well as on the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU). In imposing those restrictions, the régime appeared, in the words of the Committee, to be trying to woo back white voters and to avert a popular boycott of the nation-wide municipal elections scheduled for 26 October (see below), which, in the Committee's opinion, were an attempt by Pretoria to reassert its authority and give a semblance of legitimacy to its régime and its new proposed constitutional plan of power-sharing based on ethnicity.

The regime had developed ways to deal with the economic crisis of the country in parallel with its political strategy. A recently announced economic package emphasized privatization, deregulation, drastic cuts in official expenditures and a wage freeze in the public sector. Aimed at boosting private investment and production as well as reducing public sector deficits, the economic restructuring would, in the Committee's view, lead to deterioration of the living standards of low income groups, particularly black workers.

Repression of the population. Under the prolonged state of emergency, which was extended once more in June, police violence increased, as did attacks by vigilante groups and death squads against apartheid opponents, resulting in the creation of a new category of people in South Africa: internal refugees from repression.

Detention without charge or trial, even of children, and attacks and murders by vigilante groups were used to intimidate the opposition. In that climate of State-induced terror, foreign and domestic media were severely restricted.

Under the cover of the state of emergency, the basic apartheid laws continued to be enforced. Human rights monitors estimated that since the state of emergency was imposed in 1986, more than 30,000 persons had been detained for varying periods of time.

The 1988 Amnesty International report pointed to an unprecedented increase in the application of death sentences for political offences. The case of the so-called Sharpeville Six focused the attention of the international community on death sentences in political cases (see below).

Resistance to apartheid. As government pressure increased, so did resistance against apartheid. As mounting repression hindered the activities of political organizations, the black labour movement and religious organizations became leading opposition forces. Anti-apartheid resistance was adopting different political forms, switching from high-profile, mass-recruitment rallies to a system of block and street committees. In that process of political regrouping, the alliance between organized black workers and youth continued to grow in significance.

The National Anti-Apartheid Conference, convened by COSATU in September 1988 with the participation of more than 70 organizations, attempted to discuss unity and organization against repression and one person one vote in a democratic South Africa. Although the Conference was banned, it generated a debate on the content of political alliances, and some of the scheduled participants met in secret at Cape Town to discuss ways of continuing the process of creating a broader coalition. The nation-wide boycott of the municipal elections on 26 October indicated both the depth of the popular rejection of the structures created by the régime and the ability of community groups to organize themselves in spite of the state of emergency.

The black labour movement continued to play an important role in the opposition to apartheid, fighting not only for economic but also for political objectives, in actions often co-ordinated with other grass-roots organizations. An important development was the growing efforts of the trade union federations—COSATU and the National Council of Trade Unions—to take united action in opposition to the 1988 Labour Relations Amendment Act, which was designed to undermine the activities of the non-racial labour movement. In June, both federations called for three days of national protest against the Labour Bill, the state of emergency and the restrictions on anti-apartheid organizations. In spite of threats by management and authorities, more than 2 million blacks participated in the stay-away.

The Committee noted that despite gains made by the non-racial trade unions at collective bargaining, black South Africans still earned the lowest average monthly income. By far the most important demands precipitating strikes were, therefore, for improved wages and working conditions.

There were 1,025 strikes in 1988, resulting in the loss of 914,388 work-days; an estimated 161,534 black workers, as opposed to 145 white workers, participated in the strikes.

Despite a sustained attack on youth organizations since 1984, actions by youth and students demonstrated that their organizations had partly survived the effects of the state of emergency. In line with the general political trend, the anti-apartheid youth and student organizations were engaged in efforts to strengthen their political constituency by reaching out to youths in churches, sports organizations, township clubs and other such bodies. Finding common ground for political action seemed to be the major purpose of those efforts.

The Committee also reported that church leaders and religious institutions were opposing apartheid more forcefully than ever. The South African Council of Churches (SACC) continued to lead the churches in opposing the régime and also in providing humanitarian aid to the victims of apartheid. In June, religious leaders attended an SACC convocation to discuss the situation in South Africa and to formulate non-violent strategies for fighting apartheid. In September, SACC decided to defy any laws entrenching residential segregation and to condemn the Labour Relations Amendment Act as an instrument of racism. SACC also endorsed the decision to boycott the October municipal elections and resolved to oppose the media restrictions imposed under the state of emergency.

The Special Committee further reported wider opposition by democratic whites, individuals and organizations such as the End Conscription Campaign, which was eventually banned in August, the Five Freedoms Forum and the Johannesburg Democratic Action Committee. The Institute for a Democratic Alternative for South Africa sponsored several meetings between whites, in particular Afrikaners, and African National Congress (ANC) representatives, in an attempt to widen the range of forces opposed to apartheid.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1988/41, the Economic and Social Council dealt with the infringement of trade union rights in South Africa. It condemned the increased repression of the independent black trade union movement; demanded that it cease; demanded the unconditional release of trade unionists; and requested immediate recognition of the population's right to form and join trade unions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 A by recorded vote.

International solidarity with the liberation struggle in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/23 A of 20 November 1987,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 183 to 194,

Gravely concerned at the escalating repression of and State terror against opponents of apartheid and the increasing intransigence of the racist régime of South Africa, exemplified by the continuous extension of the state of emergency, the imposition of severe restrictions on peaceful anti-apartheid organizations and individuals, the increasing number of arbitrary detentions, trials, torture and killings, including those of women and children, the increased use of vigilante groups and the stifling of the press,

Noting with serious concern the racist régime's continuing acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring independent African States, including assassinations and abductions of freedom fighters in those States and elsewhere, and the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia,

1. Reaffirms its full support to the majority of the South African people in their struggle, under the leadership of their national liberation movements, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, to eradicate apartheid totally, so that all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, may enjoy equal and full political and other rights, and participate freely in the determination of their destiny;

2. Reaffirms also the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa and their right to choose the necessary means, including armed struggle, to attain the eradication of apartheid, and the establishment of a free, democratic, unfragmented and non-racial South Africa;

3. Condemns the racist regime and its policies and practices of apartheid and, in particular, the execution of patriots and captured freedom fighters in South Africa and demands that the racist régime:

(a) Stop the execution of political prisoners at present on death row;

(b) Recognize prisoner-of-war status of captured freedom fighters in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol I of 1977 thereto;

4. Demands again:

(a) The lifting of the state of emergency;

(b) The immediate and unconditional release of Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners and detainees;

(c) The lifting of the ban on all political organizations and opponents of apartheid;

(d) The safe return of all political exiles;

(e) The withdrawal of the régime's troops from black townships;

(f) The repeal of restrictions on the freedom of the press;

(g) The end of the policy of bantustanization and forced population removals;

(h) The end of military and paramilitary activities aimed at the neighbouring countries;

5. Demands in particular that all detained children be unconditionally released and that the abhorrent practice of applying repressive measures to children and minors cease immediately;

6. Considers that the implementation of the above demands would create the appropriate conditions for free consultations among all the people of South Africa with a view to negotiating a just and lasting solution to the conflict in that country;

7. Appeals to all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, mass media, and city and other local authorities as well as individuals to increase urgently political, economic, educational, legal, humanitarian and all other forms of necessary assistance to the people of South Africa and their national liberation movements;

8. Also appeals to all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to step up material, financial and other forms of support to the front-line and other neighbouring independent States;

9. Urges all countries to contribute generously to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund set up by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries with the aim of increasing support to the national liberation movements fighting the apartheid regime and to the front-line and other neighbouring independent States;

10. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity—namely, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other appropriate bodies;

11. Requests Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to exert their influence towards the implementation of the present resolution.

On 28 November, by decision 43/414, the Assembly took note of the Special Political Committee's report on hearings of organizations and individuals in connection with South Africa's apartheid policies.⁽²⁵⁾ Altogether, the Committee heard statements by 14 persons.

Municipal elections

Nation-wide municipal elections of black representatives to officially sanctioned "community councils" were scheduled for 26 October 1988. Organizations such as the banned UDF and the Azanian People's Organization rejected the elections, which were widely boycotted. The constitutional plan envisaged that the municipal council representatives elected would become political representatives to the regional and national councils and the building blocks of the National Council, which, through an intricate consultative process, would devise a "new constitution" providing Africans with limited political representation at the national level.

The Special Committee Chairman, in a statement of 12 October, denounced South Africa's plans to conduct municipal elections, saying that, far from answering the black majority's demands for full political rights, the regime was trying to impose an official body for blacks that would function solely in an advisory capacity. That scheme, he said, would further entrench the current constitution, which had been overwhelmingly rejected by the black majority in 1984 and declared null and void by both the Security Council⁽²⁶⁾ and the General Assembly.⁽²⁷⁾ The Committee considered that the scheduled elections were devoid of any legitimacy since they were to take place amid a state of emergency, severe restrictions on popular organizations and their leaders and a general climate of harassment, intimidation and violence against the anti-apartheid opposition. The municipal officials chosen in the so-called elections would have no more legitimacy than the current councillors, who continued to be rejected by the black majority.

On the average, only 5 per cent of the eligible voters in the African townships voted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/13 by recorded vote.

Pretoria's racial "municipal elections"

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/11 of 15 November 1983, in which it stated its conviction that the "constitutional proposals" were aimed at depriving the indigenous African majority of all fundamental rights and further entrenching apartheid and accordingly rejected them,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security,

Gravely concerned that the so-called nation-wide municipal elections of 26 October 1988 are an extension of the "constitutional proposals" of 1983,

Welcoming the united resistance of the oppressed people of South Africa against these "municipal elections",

Alarmed that the Pretoria racist régime has declared illegal all advocacy against these "municipal elections" and further intensified repressive State violence, including the bombing of buildings that house the offices of anti-apartheid organizations as well as the mass arrest and detention of its opponents, in a bid to crush all resistance to these "municipal elections",

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Firmly convinced that the holding of these "municipal elections" will further aggravate the already explosive situation inside apartheid South Africa,

1. Declares that the "municipal elections" are contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and that the enforcement of the "municipal elections" and their results will inevitably aggravate tension and conflict in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole;

2. Rejects these "municipal elections" and all insidious manoeuvres by the racist minority régime of South Africa further to entrench white minority rule and apartheid;

3. Also rejects any so-called "negotiated settlement" based on the outcome of the "municipal elections" and other extensions of the "constitutional proposals" of 1983;

4. Solemnly declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa;

5. Requests the Security Council, as a matter of urgency, to consider the serious implications of the so-called "municipal elections" and to take all necessary measures, in accordance with the Charter, to avert the further aggravation of tension and conflict in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole.

The General Assembly, in resolution 43/106, commended the efforts of the democratic forces within various sections of the South African society striving for the abolition of apartheid and the creation of a united non-racial democratic society. It condemned the holding of municipal elections, the restrictions imposed on democratic movements, the extension of the state of emergency, the wanton killing of peaceful demonstrators and the increased attacks on religious community leaders.

In resolution 43/157, the Assembly reaffirmed that apartheid should be abolished and that the systematic denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race or colour was a gross violation of human rights and that the right to participate in a political system based on common and equal citizenship and universal franchise was essential for the exercise of periodic and genuine elections.

Opponents of apartheid

There was a substantial escalation in the number of political trials in 1988, which continued to be used as a weapon to silence opposition and deprive anti-apartheid organizations of their leadership. According to South Africa's Centre for Applied Legal Studies, 37 political trials involving 112 accused were completed between December 1987 and March 1988 alone. In the middle of 1988, 62 trials were taking place involving 691 accused, including five treason trials with 50 accused, and at least 70 political prisoners were on death row, the most prominent of whom were the so-called Sharpeville Six.

The six prisoners, accused in the murder of a black deputy mayor of the Sharpeville township by a crowd protesting a rent increase in September 1984, had been sentenced in 1985 on the basis of the doctrine of "common purpose", according to which a group could share in the aim of committing a murder, even if it did not actually take part in the crime. Upholding their convictions and sentences, the Appeal Court acknowledged that it had not been proved that their conduct had contributed causally to the mayor's death. Domestic and international pressure persuaded the authorities to commute their death sentences on 23 November to terms of imprisonment ranging from 18 to 25 years.

International action was also called for in the case of another death-row prisoner, 24-year-old Paul Tefo Setlaba, scheduled to be executed on 24 November. He was sentenced to death in 1986 on charges of murder relating to the death of a police informer, also on the basis of common purpose.

In a statement of 29 November, the Special Committee Chairman welcomed the release from prison of Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) President Zephania Mothopeng. At the same time, he expressed hope that this humanitarian gesture was also a political one and would be followed by the release of Nelson Mandela and the other political prisoners, which had to be the first step in the negotiations for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in South Africa. The Special Committee considered that Member States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs should redouble their efforts to that effect.

On 9 December, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee called for international efforts to secure the release of three UDF leaders convicted of high treason and of eight other opponents of apartheid convicted of terrorism. The Special Committee considered the sentences of Patrick Lekota (12 years), Popo Molefe (10 years), Moses Chikane (10 years) and Thomas Manihala (6 years) to be flagrant examples of using the judiciary as an instrument to suppress any political opposition to the apartheid rule. The harsh judgement rendered after a three-year trial, was widely condemned both within and outside South Africa.

On 29 March, the Chairman issued a statement condemning the assassination of the head of the ANC mission in Paris, Dulcie September. On 8 April, the Chairman condemned the attempted assassination at Maputo, Mozambique, of ANC activist Albie Sachs, who was seriously injured by a car bomb.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 March⁽²⁸⁾ Sierra Leone, on behalf of the Group of African States, requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation in South Africa. Zambia made several similar requests, on 2 March⁽²⁹⁾ 15 March⁽³⁰⁾ 16 June⁽³¹⁾ and 23 November⁽³²⁾. On the basis of those requests, the Council held seven meetings between 3 March and 23 November.

Meeting numbers. SC 2793-2797, 2799, 2817, 2830.

The Council invited the following countries, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Botswana, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Guyana, India, Kuwait, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Africa, Tunisia, Zimbabwe. Under rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, the Council also invited the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia. Under the same rule, at the request of Algeria, Senegal and Zambia, it invited Neo Mnumzana, representative of ANC⁽³³⁾ Lesaohana Makhanda, representative of PAC⁽³⁴⁾ and Helmut Angula, representative of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).⁽³⁵⁾

On 16 March, the Council adopted resolution 610(1988) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 503(1982) of 9 April 1982, 525(1982) of 7 December 1982, 533(1983) of 7 June 1983 and 547(1984) of 13 January 1984 in which, inter alia, it expressed its grave concern that the Pretoria regime's practice of sentencing to death and executing its opponents has adverse consequences on the search for a peaceful resolution of the South African situation,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in South Africa, the worsening human suffering resulting from the apartheid system and, inter alia, the South African regime's renewed state of emergency, its imposition on 24 February 1988 of severe restrictions on eighteen anti-apartheid and labour organizations and eighteen individuals committed to peaceful forms of struggle and the harassment and detention of church leaders on 29 February, all of which further undermine the possibilities of a peaceful resolution of the South African situation,

Having considered the question of the death sentences passed on 12 December 1985 in South Africa on Mojalefa Reginald Sefatsa, Reid Malebo Mokoena, Oupa Moses Diniso, Theresa Ramashamola, Duma Joseph Khumalo and Francis Don Mokhesi, known as the Sharpeville Six, as well as the decision to execute them on Friday, 18 March 1988,

Conscious that the Court proceedings of the Sharpeville Six show that none of the six young South Africans convicted of murder was found by the Court to have caused the actual death of the Councillor and that they were convicted of murder and sentenced to death only because the Court found that they had a "common purpose" with the actual perpetrators,

Deeply concerned at the Pretoria regime's decision to execute the Sharpeville Six on Friday, 18 March 1988, in defiance of world-wide appeals,

Convinced that these executions, if carried out, will further inflame an already grave situation in South Africa,

1. Calls upon the South African authorities to stay execution and commute the death sentences imposed on the Sharpeville Six;

2. Urges all States and organizations to use their influence and take urgent measures, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, the resolutions of the Security Council and relevant international instruments, to save the lives of the Sharpeville Six.

^a Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

16 March 1988 Meeting 2799 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/19627).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Earlier, on 8 March, the Council had voted on a draft resolution which would have had the Council impose sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of permanent Council members. (For further details see above.)

On 17 June, following South Africa's rejection of an appeal to reopen the case to ensure a fair trial, the Security Council adopted resolution 615(1988) unanimously.

The Security Council.

Recalling its resolutions 503(1982) of 9 April 1982, 525(1982) of 7 December 1982, 533(1983) of 7 June 1983, 547(1984) of 13 January 1984 and 610(1988) of 16 March 1988 in which, inter alia, it expressed its grave concern that the Pretoria régime's practice of sentencing to death and executing its opponents has adverse consequences on the search for a peaceful resolution of the South African situation,

Deeply concerned at the decision on 13 June 1988 of the Pretoria Supreme Court to reject an appeal to reopen the case to ensure a fair trial,

Deeply concerned also at the Pretoria régime's decision to execute the Sharpeville Six in defiance of world-wide appeals,

Convinced that these executions, if carried out, will further inflame an already grave situation in South Africa,

1. Calls once again upon the South African authorities to stay execution and commute the death sentences imposed on the Sharpeville Six;

2. Urges all States and organizations to use their influence and take urgent measures, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, the resolutions of the Security Council and relevant international instruments, to save the lives of the Sharpeville Six.

Following South Africa's decision to implement the death sentence against Mr. Setlaba, the Council, on 23 November, adopted resolution 623(1988).

The Security Council.

Having learned with grave concern of the intention of the South African authorities to implement the death sentence imposed on Mr. Paul Tefo Setlaba, an anti-apartheid activist, on the basis of so-called "common purpose", Strongly urges the Government of South Africa to stay execution and commute the death sentence imposed on Mr. Paul Tefo Setlaba in order to avoid further aggravating the situation in South Africa.

Security Council resolution 623(1988)

23 November 1988 Meeting 2830 13-0-2

B-nation draft (S/20290).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United Kingdom, United States.

South Africa informed the Secretary-General that it rejected the Council resolutions: in a 16 March letter,⁽³⁶⁾ it expressed strong objection to resolution 610(1988), which it regarded as interference in an internal South African matter. On 17 June,⁽³⁷⁾ it expressed its regret that the Security Council had found it appropriate to express its views on the case of the Sharpeville Six by adopting resolution 615(1988).

Women and children under apartheid

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1986 resolution⁽³⁸⁾ and a 1987 decision⁽³⁹⁾ of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General transmitted to the 1988 session of the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII) a report on new developments from 1 September 1985 to 30 September 1987 concerning the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and on assistance to women who had become refugees as a result of apartheid.⁽⁴⁰⁾

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that black women in particular continued to suffer from the inhuman practice of apartheid. As they had not been able to change conditions affecting their daily lives, such as free movement, access to education, employment and basic services, their situation deserved increased attention and international assistance. Although considerable effort had been made so far to provide assistance, it was not sufficient to meet the growing needs. Because of intensified repressive action, attention and assistance were not only essential for meeting pressing needs, but also for enabling the population to develop their potential to take an active part in constructing a new society.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/23 by recorded vote.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1986/22 of 23 May 1986 on women and children under apartheid,

Noting the concern of women throughout the world about the continuing degradation and abuse to which African women and children are subjected daily by the white minority régime of South Africa,

Recalling that that concern was expressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which also contain proposals for various forms of assistance to be rendered to women and children inside South Africa and to those who have become refugees,

Recognizing that the inhuman exploitation and dispossession of the African people by the white minority régime are directly responsible for the appalling conditions in which African women and children live,

Also recognizing that the equality of women cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle for national liberation and self-determination of the people of South Africa against the racist régime of Pretoria,

Referring to the report of the Secretary-General on new developments concerning the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and measures of assistance to women from South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as a result of the practice of apartheid,

1. Condemns unequivocally the South African régime for the imposition of the state of emergency, the forcible separation of black families, the detention and imprisonment of women and children and the banning of seventeen non-violent anti-apartheid democratic organizations, as well as individuals;

2. Urges the South African régime to accord the Sharpeville Six, one of whom is a woman, a fair trial based on international legal standards and to stop the execution of political prisoners;

3. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners, among whom are included an increasing number of women and children;

4. Commends the tenacity and bravery of those women inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression, who have been detained, tortured or killed, or whose husbands, children or other relatives have been detained, tortured or killed and who, despite this, have remained steadfast in their opposition to the racist régime;

5. Acknowledges the efforts of those Governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals that have campaigns for and applied sanctions against the racist regime;

6. Appeals to all countries to support educational, health and social welfare programmes for women and children under apartheid,

7. Also appeals to the international community for increased assistance to women and children refugees in southern Africa;

8. Calls upon Governments, in view of the deterioration of the situation in South Africa, to impose, as a matter of urgency, comprehensive sanctions in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

9. Urges Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to give effect forthwith, in consultation with the national liberation movements, to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies that deal with women and children under apartheid, giving particular attention to education, health, vocational training, employment opportunities and the strengthening of the women's sections of the liberation movement;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on monitoring the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies regarding women and children under apartheid to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/23

26 May 1988 Meeting 15 44-2-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1988/90) by recorded vote (34-2-8), 13 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1988/15); agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Belize, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, India, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Ireland, Italy, Japan, Portugal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 43/134, the General Assembly dealt with torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa and Namibia. The Assembly expressed grave concern about reports of the increasing number of repressive measures against children there and demanded the immediate release of children held in detention. It also demanded that the so-called rehabilitation camps and re-education centres in South Africa be immediately dismantled, as they served only to abuse black children physically and mentally.

Aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation

United Nations aid to victims of apartheid was provided through national liberation movements and directly to individuals for education and training. Legal assistance, relief and education grants were given by the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory South African legislation. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa offered additional educational assistance (see below).

Assistance to national liberation movements

In 1988, several United Nations organizations, notably the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), continued to provide assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), namely, ANC and PAC of South Africa and SWAPO of Namibia.

By a July decision,⁽⁴¹⁾ the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to continue to assist the national liberation movements with maximum efficiency and flexibility, in accordance with the first programme of assistance for 1987-1991.

The Administrator reported⁽⁴²⁾ that the programme continued to emphasize activities intended to: promote professional expertise and human resources development through formal education and other types of training aimed at assisting individuals sponsored by national liberation movements in preparing themselves for eventual technical, managerial and administrative responsibilities in their countries; and foster among followers of national liberation movements self-reliance in countries of asylum.

During the year, 18 projects were being implemented: ANC and PAC had 3 ongoing projects each, SWAPO benefited from 8 projects and 4 projects covered all three national liberation movements. Total UNDP commitments under the national liberation movement indicative planning figure (IPF) amounted to $11 million. Of the 18 projects, 8 were in the education sector ($4.7 million), 4 dealt with planning, programming and aid co-ordination ($1.8 million), 3 were in food production ($1.8 million), 2 were geared to training and supporting health personnel ($3.1 million) and 1 preparatory assistance project was being used to formulate projects in the maintenance and repair of mechanical equipment ($15,000).

All three ongoing ANC projects, with an IPF of $1.6 million, were executed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; they supported ANC's education sector. The PAC programme consisted of two projects in the education sector, being executed by UNDP, and one in food production, being executed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. UNDP's contribution was $1.2 million.

In addition, 10 projects, focusing on maintenance and repair activities, health services, educational support, development aid co-ordination and food production, were in various phases of formulation and approval: 6 with ANC, 2 with SWAPO and 2 with PAC. Pipeline project costs were estimated at $3.5 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1988/53, the Economic and Social Council requested United Nations organizations to increase their assistance to the liberation movements in South Africa. It noted with satisfaction the arrangements made by several of those bodies that enabled representatives of national liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate as observers in their proceedings and called on those that had not done so to make such arrangements, including defraying costs of the participation of those representatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly on a number of occasions took action on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU. In resolution 43/50 A, it decided to continue the funding of the New York offices of ANC and PAC to enable them to participate effectively in the work of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other bodies. It made an urgent appeal for increases of assistance to the people of South Africa and their national liberation movements. A similar appeal was contained in resolution 43/50 K. In resolution 43/106, the Assembly again called for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance to the victims of racism and apartheid through the movements recognized by OAU. In resolution 43/30, it reiterated its recommendation that the United Nations system broaden its co-operation with colonial peoples and their movements and be flexible in formulating and preparing assistance programmes. It also recommended that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements be put on the agenda of future high-level meetings between OAU and the United Nations. It echoed the call of the Economic and Social Council regarding the participation of representatives of the liberation movements as observers in meetings of international institutions on matters concerning their countries.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

In October,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established in 1965⁽⁴⁴⁾ to provide assistance to persons persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, had made 11 grants totalling $3.5 million since the previous report.⁽⁴⁴⁾ During that period, the Fund received $3.1 million in voluntary contributions from 30 Governments, and a further $918,117 was outstanding. Total income of the Fund since its inception was $32.4 million, and the total amount of grants was $30.4 million. The available balance was $1.9 million as at 31 August 1988.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 I without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 42/23 H of 20 November 1987,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Gravely concerned at the continued nation-wide state of emergency and security regulations which criminalize and stifle political dissent and protest,

Increasingly alarmed by the continued detentions without trials, forced removals, bannings, restriction orders, political trials, death sentences imposed on opponents of apartheid, harassment of trade unions, church and other organizations and individuals involved in peaceful protest and dissent,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian and legal assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia is more than ever necessary to alleviate their plight and sustain their efforts,

Strongly convinced that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the extensive needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for generous and increased contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and Namibia;

5. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa.

Other aspects

Public information

In accordance with a 1987 resolution,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Department of Public Information (DPI) in 1988 continued its activities against the policy and practice of apartheid, including dissemination of information.

In a September report on information questions,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in addition to the regular audio and visual materials regularly produced by DPI, new campaign programmes had been formulated with the Centre against Apartheid. Access was gained to prestigious television shows where the United Nations story was seen by hundreds of millions of viewers. Projects undertaken included preparation of an exhibit of art against apartheid, participation of the cast of the musical Sarafina in commemoration of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, preparation of a film vignette for the twenty-fifth anniversary meeting of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the observance of the seventieth birthday of Nelson Mandela, a ceremony to honour the president of the World Boxing Council and boxers for individual and collective action against apartheid in sports and the organization of a travelling exhibit against apartheid, as well as coverage of numerous events at Headquarters and in the field.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 H by recorded vote.

Dissemination of information against the policies of apartheid of the régime of racist South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming the legislative mandate of its resolutions 32/105 H of 14 December 1977, paragraph 4, and 33/183 I of 24 January 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to undertake, in co-operation with Member States, a regular programme of radio broadcasts directed at South Africa,

Recalling also its resolutions 13(I) of 13 February 1946, 595(VI) of 4 February 1952, 1335(XIII) of 13 December 1958, 1405(XIV) of 1 December 1959, 3535(XXX) of 17 December 1975, 32/105 B of 14 December 1977, 33/115 of 18 December 1978, 34/181 and 34/182 of 18 December 1979, 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 of 16 December 1981 and 40/64 D of 10 December 1985, in which it requested the Secretary-General to intensify and expand radio programmes for broadcast to southern Africa,

Strongly convinced of the need to intensify and expand activities aimed at mobilizing world public opinion against the evil system of apartheid in South Africa,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations and its specialized agencies in the dissemination of information against apartheid, as enshrined in the relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Bearing in mind the malicious propaganda activities of the racist régime of South Africa, which continues to commit numerous acts of military aggression and destabilization against the front-line States and other neighbouring States in the region, and the imperative need to effectively counter these activities,

Alarmed at the planned reduction in the establishment of the Anti-Apartheid Programmes Section of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat,

Concerned at the continuous reduction in programme output over the years, and distressed at the prospect of the Department of Public Information's proposal to further reduce radio programmes directed at the people of South Africa and Namibia at this crucial period when the racist regime has escalated its disinformation campaign and mass media black-out,

Bearing in mind resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 regarding the restructuring of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and, in particular, the need to ensure that reforms are implemented with flexibility and not have a negative impact on mandated and priority programmes,

Noting with appreciation that the Secretary-General has initiated radio programmes in co-operation with Member States whose broadcasts can be heard in southern Africa in the main languages spoken in South Africa, which are English, Afrikaans, Sesotho, Setswana, Xhosa and Zulu,

Taking into consideration that radio is the commonly and widely used as well as easily accessible medium of communication in the region,

1. Urges the Secretary-General to:

(a) Intensify, increase and expand these radio broadcasts as well as the production of audio-visual material and to maintain, without interference, the unique linguistic features and characteristics of these programmes;

(b) Provide all appropriate technical and financial assistance to radio stations of those Member States which are broadcasting or willing to broadcast to South Africa, in order to enable their radio transmitters to be heard inside South Africa;

(c) Ensure regular monitoring and evaluation of the impact of these programmes;

(d) Retain and commensurately increase the personnel in these programmes in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular, resolution 42/220 of 21 December 1987;

(e) Further strengthen and enhance these radio programmes by engaging, at the upper echelons of the Secretariat and senior policy-making and supervisory levels, personnel from the region who will readily understand, interpret and be responsive to developments in the region;

(f) Maintain these radio programmes as an exclusively separate entity for purposes of enhancing their effectiveness;

2. Appeals to all Governments, non-governmental organizations and the specialized agencies to co-operate with the Secretary-General in order to ensure the widest possible dissemination of information against apartheid, in particular, these radio programmes;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States and international organizations which have provided the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat with their broadcasting facilities, as well as their contribution to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid, and request those which have not done so to do the same;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Meetings, missions and observances

As part of its work to promote the international campaign against apartheid, the Special Committee against Apartheid organized or co-sponsored a number of meetings, missions and observances in 1988.

Meetings. Among the meetings supported or sponsored by the Special Committee were a seminar on the role of the Latin American and Caribbean media in the international campaign against apartheid (Lima, Peru, 7-9 March); a conference organized by the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid on southern Africa's future and Europe's role (Lusaka, Zambia, 23-30 March); the Anti-Apartheid Asia and Oceania Workshop, organized by the Japan Anti-Apartheid Committee (Tokyo, 27-29 August); a symposium on culture against apartheid (Athens, Greece, 2-4 September); the International NGO Conference for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in the Second United Nations Decade (Geneva, 11-14 October); a seminar for teachers on South Africa and apartheid (New York, 28 and 29 October); an international conference on apartheid (Lagos, Nigeria, 7-9 November); and a conference of the European Campaign against South African Aggression on Mozambique and Angola (Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany, 8-10 December).

Missions. In his efforts to promote the anti-apartheid struggle, the Committee Chairman visited Botswana, Lesotho and Zimbabwe in May and held consultations with the authorities there. He also visited the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR in August, meeting with governmental and non-governmental officials. At the invitation of the President of France, the Chairman attended ceremonies marking the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (Paris, 10 December).

Observances. As in previous years, the Special Committee held commemorative meetings on the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia (9 August), and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).

Proposed special session

The Special Committee against Apartheid participated in the Conference of Foreign Ministers of the Non-Aligned Countries (Nicosia, Cyprus, 7-10 September). The final declaration of the Conference⁽⁴⁸⁾ called for the convening in 1989 of a special session of the General Assembly on apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa. That call was endorsed by the eightieth Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Sofia, Bulgaria, 19-24 September),⁽⁴⁹⁾ in which the Special Committee Chairman also participated. The convening of a special session was among the recommendations the Special Committee made in its report to the General Assembly.⁽¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/50 G without vote.

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned at the escalating repression mounted against the opponents of apartheid in South Africa,

Further concerned about the racist régime's continued aggression against the front-line States and its destructive consequences,

Taking note of the Declaration of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries held at Nicosia from 7 to 10 September 1988,

Indignant at the continued non-implementation of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions by South Africa,

South Africa and the front-line States

Prospects for peace in southern Africa received impetus following negotiations sponsored by the United States and supported by the USSR, which resulted in an agreement between Angola, Cuba and South Africa that allowed the inception of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and included a series of practical steps designed to create conditions necessary to settle the conflict.⁽¹⁾ The Security Council, acting on a report of the Secretary-General, decided to establish under its authority the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to implement it.

While such peaceful solutions were emerging, the destructive effects of apartheid, aggression and destabilization were evident in the region. Recognizing that reality, the General Assembly in December called for a special session focusing on apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa to be convened in the latter part of 1989 (see above). Destabilization, carried out directly by South Africa or through Resistência Nacional de Moçambique (RENAMO), had had a profoundly destructive effect on Mozambique.

According to the Special Committee against Apartheid, at least 400,000 persons had died because of acts of destabilization, and millions of others had been displaced. In addition, the disruption of its economy had made Mozambique dependent on foreign donors, who supplied it with $800 million plus 500,000 tons of grain each year.

Several violations of Botswana territory and attacks on Botswana nationals, allegedly carried out by South Africa, were reported during the year.

The Special Committee estimated that the nine countries of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference-Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe-lost $60 billion (at 1988 prices) in gross domestic product between 1980 and 1988 as a result of South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization. Those sums related to war damage, particularly in Angola and Mozambique, higher spending on defence, loss of economic production, boycotts and embargoes imposed by Pretoria and caring for the growing number of refugees and internally displaced people.

In March, the Chairman of the Special Committee made a statement at a conference on South Africa's future and Europe's role (Lusaka, Zambia, 23-30 March) in which he proposed that an emergency programme be set up for concerted bilateral and multilateral assistance to the front-line States to counter South Africa's economic destabilization, as well as to reduce their dependence on South Africa.⁽²⁾ In that connection, he emphasized the importance of the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid (AFRICA) Fund of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in providing support to the national liberation movements and the front-line States.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, in August,⁽³⁾ urged the United Nations system to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the front-line States to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity. It welcomed the establishment of the AFRICA Fund and invited United Nations organizations and agencies to co-operate with the Fund in providing emergency assistance to the front-line States and national liberation movements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly dealt with South Africa's relations with the front-line States in several 1988 resolutions. In resolution 43/50 A, it urged countries to contribute generously to the AFRICA Fund and appealed to all States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to step up material, financial and other forms of support to the front-line and other neighbouring independent States. Similar calls were made in resolution 43/26 A, when the Assembly condemned South Africa for using Namibia as a springboard for armed invasions, subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States, particularly Angola. The Assembly, in resolution 43/116, reiterated its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts on behalf of the international community to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance to the front-line and other neighbouring States to help them withstand the effects of South Africa's aggression and destabilization. It called on the international community to provide increased assistance to southern African countries to help them strengthen their capacity to provide for the care of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in their countries.

In resolution 43/209, the Assembly, reaffirming the importance of close co-operation between the United Nations and the front-line States, strongly urged the international community to provide the assistance necessary to enhance the capacity of those States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa.

It also appealed for the support of national and collective emergency programmes prepared by the front-line States and other bordering States.

Situation in Angola

UN verification mission

By letters of 17 December, Angola⁽⁴⁾ and Cuba⁽⁵⁾ informed the Secretary-General that, considering the fact that South Africa had formally undertaken to accept the implementation of the 1978 Security Council resolution on Namibia⁽⁶⁾ with effect from 1 April 1989, it was their intention to sign, on 22 December, an agreement providing for the redeployment to the north and the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, in accordance with a timetable arrived at by the two countries. As the agreement also provided for verification by the United Nations, Angola and Cuba accordingly asked the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to recommend to the Security Council that a group of United Nations military observers be set up to carry out that mandate, in conformity with the agreements the two countries had already reached with the Secretariat.

In order to help the Security Council in its consideration of the request, the Secretary-General, on 17 December, submitted a report⁽⁷⁾ concerning the proposed arrangements for the operation of such an observer mission. According to the report, the bilateral agreement provided that the withdrawal of Cuban troops would begin on 1 April 1989 ("D-Day") and would be completed within 27 months. Angola and Cuba had informed the Secretary-General that 3,000 troops would be withdrawn before 1 April. The duration of the observer mission would be approximately 31 months, starting seven days before the beginning of the Cuban troop withdrawal and ending one month after its completion.

The observer group, UNAVEM, would be under the command of a Chief Military Observer who would be responsible to the Secretary-General, who in turn would report to the Security Council. As for the strength of the mission, the Secretary-General estimated that 70 military observers and about 20 civilian support personnel would be needed. An advance party of approximately 30 observers would be deployed on or about 3 January 1989, while the remaining 40 would be deployed on or about 20 March. The Secretary-General estimated that the cost of the full 31-month period of UNAVEM would total approximately $20.4 million, of which $9.8 million would be required during 1989.

Following approval by the Council of the proposed arrangements for an observer mission, the Secretary-General, by a letter of 22 December,⁽⁸⁾ reported that on the same date a tripartite agreement had been signed by Angola, Cuba and South Africa, as had the bilateral agreement between Angola and Cuba, as result of which the arrangements for the establishment of UNAVEM had entered into force. The Secretary-General proposed that UNAVEM be composed of contingents from the following Member States: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Congo, Czechoslovakia, India, Jordan, Norway, Spain and Yugoslavia. He also informed the President of the Council of his intention to appoint Brigadier-General Péricles Ferreira Comes (Brazil) as Chief Military Observer.

By a letter of 23 December,⁽⁹⁾ the President transmitted to the Secretary-General the Council's approval of his proposals.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 20 December 1988, in accordance with an understanding reached in prior consultations. On that date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 626(1988).

The Security Council,

Noting the decision of Angola and Cuba to conclude a bilateral agreement on 22 December 1988 for the redeployment to the north and the staged and total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, according to the agreed timetable,

Considering the request submitted to the Secretary-General by Angola and Cuba in letters dated 17 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 17 December 1988,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations therein;
2. Decides to establish under its authority a United Nations Angola Verification Mission and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to this effect in accordance with his aforementioned report;
3. Also decides that the Mission shall be established for a period of thirty-one months;
4. Further decides that the arrangements for the establishment of the Mission shall enter into force as soon as the tripartite agreement between Angola, Cuba and South Africa on the one hand, and the bilateral agreement between Angola and Cuba on the other, are signed;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council immediately after the signature of the agreements referred to in paragraph 4 and to keep the Council fully informed of further developments.

Security Council resolution 626(1988)

20 December 1988 Meeting 2834 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20339).

Botswana-South Africa armed incidents

According to a press release issued on 21 June by Botswana⁽¹⁰⁾ and transmitted the following day, South Africa had violated its territory and carried out two attacks on Botswana nationals in or near the capital city of Gaborone. During the first incident, three unarmed policemen were injured, and in the second, a bomb destroyed a vehicle and damaged a house. Two members of the South African commando unit charged in the attacks were said to have been arrested on the night of 20 June and brought to trial on 22 June, according to a 23 June letter from Botswana.⁽¹¹⁾

A similar incident, during which four persons were killed, had been reported in March.⁽¹²⁾ In previous years, such as in June 1985,⁽¹³⁾ the Security Council condemned a South African attack on Botswana's capital, and in May 1986,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Council considered, but did not act on, charges of further attacks on a village near Gaborone. More allegations against South Africa were brought forward in 1987.⁽¹⁵⁾

Following consultations, the President of the Security Council on 24 June issued the following statement on behalf of the Council members:

"Members of the Security Council have learnt with a profound sense of shock and indignation of South Africa's latest attacks on the territory of Botswana in flagrant violation of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of that country carried out by the commandos of that régime on the night of 20 June 1988 which resulted in the injury of three unarmed Botswana policemen who were going about their normal duties near the capital city of Gaborone.

"Members of the Security Council further express their grave concern at South Africa's total disregard of the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular Security Council resolution 568(1985) by which the Security Council, inter alia, strongly condemned South Africa's attack on Botswana as an act of aggression against that country and a gross violation of its territorial integrity and national sovereignty.

"Members of the Council are also deeply disturbed by the explosion of a bomb in Gaborone West which destroyed a vehicle and damaged a house belonging to a Botswana national on the morning of 21 June 1988. They noted that the Government of Botswana, after a thorough investigation, had reached the conclusion that the two incidents were related.

"They strongly condemn these aggressive acts, provocation and harassment perpetrated by South Africa against the defenceless and peace-loving nation of Botswana in violation of international law.

"They reiterate their call to the South African Government to refrain from any further such aggressive acts and destabilization against Botswana and other front-line and neighbouring States as such acts can only aggravate tensions in southern Africa.

"They further reiterate the fact that peaceful change in southern Africa can only be brought about by the total eradication of apartheid which is the root cause of tension and conflict in both South Africa and the region as a whole."

By a letter of 24 June,⁽¹⁷⁾ South Africa stated that despite its repeated requests that Botswana curtail the activities of terrorists operating from inside its territory, terrorist infiltrations into South Africa continued, and that it was clear that the bulk of terrorists infiltrating South Africa, as well as their armaments, equipment and logistic support, did so through Botswana. South Africa wished to live in peace with all its neighbours, but was compelled to take action when neighbouring States ignored its legitimate concerns regarding terrorist attacks.

Annexed to the letter was a press release of 21 June issued by the South African Defence Force (SADF), according to which a patrol, while gathering information in Botswana near the South African border, was involved in the shooting incident with the Botswana police. The latter fired on the patrol, which was forced to return their fire, wounding members of the Botswana police. This action, the press release said, was not aimed against the Government or the people of Botswana, and the accusation that South Africa was guilty of State terrorism was preposterous. The two persons held in Botswana in connection with the incident had not been involved. Regarding their alleged connections with SADF, no comment would be made unless Botswana provided more details. Further, the action had to be seen against the background that 23 ANC terrorists were being held in connection with 16 acts of terror that had occurred during the previous three months.

Also annexed was a message of 22 June from South Africa to Botswana reiterating that the action had been directed against ANC. South Africa unequivocally denied any complicity in explosions that reportedly had occurred in or near Gaborone on 21 June. Against the background of the incidents, as well as recent bomb explosions in several major South African cities, South Africa considered it imperative that a ministerial meeting between the two countries be convened at the earliest possible date.

By a 28 June letter,⁽¹⁸⁾ South Africa stated that neither Botswana's communication of 2 June nor the Security Council statement correctly reflected the situation, but that the facts were as follows: over the past two years, South Africa had met regularly with the Botswana Government in an attempt to obtain its co-operation in ensuring the security of the common borders against terrorist incursions. Botswana was well aware that its territory continued to be used by terrorist elements infiltrating South Africa, and the frequency of those incursions had increased over the past few weeks. On 8 May, four white terrorists had been apprehended at Broederstroom, near Johannesburg.

They had an arsenal of weapons and ammunition, including a ground-to-air missile, radio equipment, ANC documents and various explosive devices and mines. The action of the SADF unit on 21 June had been aimed at transit facilities and logistic support bases used by terrorists. Arrangements were being made for further discussions with Botswana, South Africa added.

Mozambique-South Africa relations

By a 23 November note,⁽¹⁹⁾ Mozambique reported to the Secretary-General that during an attack on its forces by South African soldiers in Maputo province on 28 July, one South African was killed and some matériel was captured. South Africa had since requested the return of the body of the dead soldier and the captured matériel. South Africa, by a 13 December letter,⁽²⁰⁾ refuted the accuracy of Mozambique's report of the incident, stating that the confrontation was between Frente de Libertação de Moçambique (FRELIMO) and RENAMO contingents. Although SADF, which had been patrolling the border on the South African side, had decided to vacate the area, one of its soldiers was killed in the cross-fire. Subsequently, the FRELIMO patrol had mistakenly seized some abandoned SADF equipment on South African territory, but had since apologized to South Africa for the incident and had undertaken to return the equipment.

South Africa expressed dismay that the matter had been publicized by Mozambique in a manner not provided for in the 1984 Nkomati accord,⁽²¹⁾ while the Joint South Africa/Mozambique Security Commission (JSC), the primary forum for addressing such incidents, was carrying out its investigations.

South Africa annexed to its letter a joint press communique issued on 15 November by JSC expressing the determination of the two Governments to work together to counteract forces that were trying to undermine peace and stability.

Mozambique, in a note of 28 December,⁽²²⁾ maintained that the unprovoked attack on its forces by South African soldiers, supposedly searching for ANC personnel, had taken place well within its territory. No Mozambican forces had at any time crossed the border into South Africa, and no ordnance had fallen into South Africa.

Comorian island of Mayotte

The question of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—remained on the General Assembly agenda in 1988. The Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975, following a referendum in 1974. France, the former colonial Power, had continued to administer the island of Mayotte, whose inhabitants had voted to remain associated with it.

In a September report to the General Assembly,^(a) the Secretary-General said he had addressed a note verbale to the Comoros and France, drawing their attention to a 1987 Assembly resolution on the question of the island of Mayotte⁽²⁾ and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information for inclusion in his report. A similar communication had been sent to OAU. In the 1987 resolution, the Assembly had reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte; invited France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the 1974 referendum on self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros; called for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the French President to seek a just solution to the question of Mayotte; and urged France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Comoros with a view to ensuring Mayotte's effective and prompt return to the latter.

France responded in August that under a December 1976 act adopted by the French Parliament, Mayotte had acquired the status of territorial collectivity of France; the act gave the island a special status that did not close the door to any change. Conscious of its responsibilities and as a demonstration of open-mindedness, France had undertaken to seek a solution to the problem of Mayotte that was in keeping with national as well as international law. France remained prepared to work towards a just and lasting solution that was consistent with the French Constitution and that respected the wishes of the people concerned; it continued to maintain a constructive dialogue with the Comoros at the highest level.

In September, Comoros stated that it had continued to seek ways of promoting progress on the question of Mayotte. In June, following the reelection of François Mitterrand as President of France, the President of the Comoros, on a private visit to France, had expressed to the French President the desire to speak with him before the end of the year to seek a solution to the question of Mayotte, in accordance with resolutions adopted by international organizations.

Among them, OAU, at the summit meeting of heads of State (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, May) had again reviewed the situation and reaffirmed the validity of the claim of the Comoros to the island. The Final Declaration adopted by the Conference of Non-Aligned Countries (Cyprus, September) reaffirmed the position of the Non-Aligned Movement in support of returning the island to the Comoros.

The Comoros said it remained confident that the international community, in particular the United Nations, would be able to bring pressure to bear on France so that a satisfactory solution could be found that was consistent with law and justice and conducive to the climate of peace and calm that must prevail in the region.

Concluding, the Secretary-General stated that he had maintained close contact with all parties and had informed them of his readiness to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful solution to the problem in accordance with the 1987 resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/14 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985, 41/30 of 3 November 1986 and 42/17 of 11 November 1987, in which, inter alia, it affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced also that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

The item on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India was included in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly's 1988 regular session, in accordance with a 1987 Assembly decision.⁽⁴⁾ On 23 September, by decision 43/402, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included the item in its agenda and allocated it to the Special Political Committee.

On 31 October, the Chairman informed the Committee that he had held consultations with the delegations concerned, in particular France and Madagascar.⁽⁵⁾ In view of the ongoing periodic contacts between the authorities of those two countries, it was requested that the Committee postpone consideration of the item to the 1989 regular Assembly session.

By decision 43/419 of 6 December, the Assembly, acting on the Committee's recommendation, included the item in the provisional agenda of its 1939 session.

879 were awarded to students from South Africa and 479 went to Namibians. The Programme's activities were described in a report of the Secretary-General covering 1 October 1987 to 31 August 1988.⁽¹⁾

For Namibians, 201 new scholarships were awarded and 278 were extended, while 35 awards were completed. For South Africans, the figures were 406 new awards, 473 extensions and 250 completions. Students studying in Africa numbered 750, while 455 were in North America, 89 in Europe, 61 in Asia and 3 in Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Programme, in accordance with the recommendations of its Advisory Committee, strengthened its co-operation with scholarship agencies, educational institutions and foundations, such as the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Assistance, the World University Service, the International Institute of Education, the Bishop Tutu Southern African Refugee Scholarship Fund and the African-American Institute.

The Advisory Committee noted that the Programme was able to develop its co-operative activities with intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance for southern Africa and welcomed the ongoing computerization of its activities.

In his concluding remarks, the Secretary-General again appealed for generous financial and other support for the Programme to meet the increasing demands being made on it.

During the period under review, the Programme received $4,035,132 in voluntary cash contributions from 27 States.

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

Co-operation between the United Nations and OAU was outlined by the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ in an August 1988 report and a later addendum.⁽²⁾ Their co-operation encompassed consultations and exchange of information, the situation in southern Africa, economic and social development and information and publicity.

In accordance with a request contained in the 1987 Assembly resolution, the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-

General of OAU, convened a meeting between representatives of the United Nations system and OAU (New York, 31 August-2 September). The meeting reviewed the current state of co-operation between the two organizations and measures taken or planned to alleviate the adverse socio-economic impact of emergency situations in Africa, including ways of co-operating to bring about a more effective response to such situations.

The meeting stressed the need for an integrated approach, covering preparedness, prevention, response and rehabilitation aspects. Joint efforts should focus on the following: moving from emergency food relief to household food security; rehabilitating and strengthening basic services, especially primary health care and shelter; providing special assistance to vulnerable groups; and enhancing the capacities of key institutions and programmes to address the emergency situation.

Noting that rehabilitation needs were not receiving adequate support, the meeting stated that long-term support of rehabilitation programmes should go hand-in-hand with emergency assistance; both the United Nations system and OAU had an important role to play in mobilizing assistance from the international community for self-sustained recovery and long-term self-reliant development. The meeting recommended that donors establish a capacity within their aid structures to deal specifically with rehabilitation programmes. The United Nations was seen as having an important role to play in supporting the implementation of rehabilitation efforts and the establishment and maintenance of permanent national emergency mechanisms.

The meeting called for intensified efforts to address the root causes of emergency situations and agreed on the need to give priority to environmental aspects of such situations. It also called for co-ordination with regard to programmes for refugees and displaced persons, with new approaches to allow them to become self-reliant and to channel their energies into genuine development.

The meeting emphasized the need for the United Nations to intensify its co-ordination efforts in order to provide timely and effective support to Governments in the field of disaster prevention and preparedness and related areas. Emphasis was further placed on specific responsibilities and capabilities within the United Nations in assisting OAU and African countries in early warning systems, needs assessment, resource mobilization, pipeline management, disaster preparedness, training and support and socio-economic research.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/12 by recorded vote.

Chapter II

Americas

Some progress was made in 1988 towards achieving peaceful solutions to the conflicts in Central America. However, outbreaks of violence continued on both sides of the Nicaragua/Honduras border. The civil war in El Salvador continued, with the Government accusing the insurgents of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional of engaging in terrorist activities aimed at seizing power. Panama accused the United States of, among other things, mobilizing unauthorized military forces on its territory and withholding payments related to use of the Panama Canal, in violation of treaties signed between the two countries.

The Security Council considered the Nicaragua situation without taking action on it. The General Assembly adopted resolutions exhorting the Central American States to continue their efforts to achieve peace in the region and appealing to countries outside the region to facilitate those efforts (resolution 43/24), and calling for an end to the trade embargo against Nicaragua (43/185). The Assembly also called for greater co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (43/4).

Central America situation

In his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said that the procedure for establishing a firm and lasting peace in Central America, signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting (Guatemala City, August 1987),⁽¹⁾ had signalled the determination of the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua to find solutions to the region's problems free from outside interference and the pressure of geopolitical conflicts. However, a year later, the momentum for peace appeared to be faltering and the considerable progress made so far seemed to be seriously threatened. Noting that the principal merit of the so-called Guatemala Procedure lay in its requirement for simultaneous progress on two broad fronts—democratization and the cessation of armed hostilities—he said its success depended on full compliance and a concerted effort by the signatories, as well as on the co-operation of all the Governments and parties involved.

That assessment was also reflected in the Uruguay Declaration,⁽²⁾ adopted by the member States of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action (Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela) at their second meeting (Punta del Este, Uruguay, 27-29 October). Among other things, the Declaration called on the international community, especially those countries with the most resources, to intensify its support for the political, economic and social reconstruction of the countries of the region in order to revitalize the peace process.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1988 submitted a report⁽⁴⁾ on the situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives. He stated that in the months immediately following the signing of the Guatemala Procedure, significant progress had been made towards fulfilling the commitments set forth in it: national reconciliation commissions were established in each country; amnesty decrees were issued, although not all of them fostered open political activity; states of siege or emergency were lifted; relatively firm measures were taken to expand or strengthen political pluralism; and specific action was taken to arrange a cessation of hostilities. In addition, a treaty establishing a Central American Parliament was signed and ratified by four of the five legislative organs. On the other hand, progress had apparently not been made towards fulfilling the commitments on non-use of territory to attack other States and on terminating aid for irregular forces and insurrectionist movements. The Secretary-General appealed to countries outside the region to refrain from action likely to undermine the peace process and instead to facilitate it, emphasizing in that connection the interest and willingness to help of the Contadora Group (Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela), the Contadora Support Group (Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay) and the European Community. He appealed to countries in the region and elsewhere to renew their collective commitment to peace, and pledged his support in fulfilment of that objective.

Joint Declaration of the Central American Presidents. On 16 January, the Central American Presidents issued at San José, Costa Rica, a Joint Declaration,⁽⁵⁾ reaffirming their determination to comply with the Esquipulas II agreements. Acknowledging that their commitments had not been entirely fulfilled, they promised to comply immediately with their obligations under the agreements, including dialogue, talks leading to a cease-fire agreement, general amnesty and democratization, including the lifting of states of emergency, freedom of the press, political pluralism and an end to the functioning of special courts. They also announced a new mechanism for verifying compliance with the agreements (see below).

Verification process. The Secretary-General, in his report of October, said that the International Verification and Follow-up Commission (established under the Esquipulas II agreements to verify and monitor their fulfilment and composed of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) or their representatives and the Foreign Ministers of the Central American countries and the Contadora and Support Groups) had stressed the importance of on-site inspection, particularly with regard to the security commitments set forth in the agreements, for objective, independent and effective verification. A joint United Nations/OAS mission sent to evaluate the need for on-site inspection concluded that in view of the lack of unanimity among the five Central American Governments, conditions did not permit on-site verification of commitments regarding a cease-fire, non-use of territory to attack other States and termination of aid for irregular forces and insurrectionist movements (see below).

The Central American Presidents, in their Joint Declaration (see above), emphasized the necessity of verifying the compliance of Governments with the Esquipulas II agreements, particularly the termination of aid for irregular groups, the non-use of territory to support them and freedom of electoral processes. Accordingly, they decided that the primary function of the Executive Commission established under Esquipulas II, consisting of the Central American Foreign Ministers, would thenceforth be to verify, monitor and follow up all the commitments set forth in the agreements and the Joint Declaration. The Commission was also to secure the co-operation of States and impartial bodies that had indicated a desire to co-operate in the Central American peace process.

At its fifth meeting (Guatemala City, 23 and 24 March and 7 April),⁽⁶⁾ the Executive Commission agreed that the national reconciliation commissions would verify the fulfilment of those commitments by means of on-site inspections or any other procedures they deemed necessary. The Commission said it would request the assistance of an auxiliary technical group composed of specialized personnel from Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and Spain, which had indicated a desire to co-operate. The Commission urged members of irregular armed forces and insurrectionist movements to make serious efforts to reach a cease-fire agreement, and reiterated its vigorous demand to Governments of the region and outside the region to terminate aid to such groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/24 without vote.

The situation in Central America:
threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983 and 562(1985) of 10 May 1985 and its resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983; 39/4 of 26 October 1984; 41/37 of 18 November 1986 and 42/1 of 7 October 1987, as well as the initiative of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the Organization of American States of 18 November 1986.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 42/1,

Recognising the far-sighted and unfailing determination, as well as the decisive contribution, of the Contadora Group and its Support Group in favour of peace in Central America,

Convinced that the peoples of Central America wish to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and justice, without outside interference, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Aware that the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, is the outcome of the decision by Central Americans to take up fully the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for Central America,

Aware also of the political will which inspires them to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, establishing commitments to be fulfilled in good faith, through the verifiable performance of actions aimed at achieving peace, democracy, security, co-operation and respect for human rights,

Recognizing the importance of the Joint Declaration of the Central American Presidents issued at San José on 16 January 1988, whereby they undertook to fulfil immediately, unconditionally and unilaterally the obligations contained in the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, which must necessarily be "subject to special verification",

Welcoming the recognition given by the Central American Presidents to the tremendous efforts made by the International Verification and Follow-up Commission in helping to implement the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting,

Bearing in mind the particular importance which the implementation of its resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988 has for the improvement of the living standards of the Central American people,

1. Commends the desire for peace expressed by the Central American Presidents in signing on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" and in issuing on 16 January 1988 at San José their Joint Declaration;

2. Expresses its strongest support for the agreement;

3. Exhorts the Governments to continue their efforts to achieve a firm and lasting peace in Central America and fervently hopes that the Central American Presidents at their next meeting will evaluate and give a new impetus to the process of fulfilling the undertakings assumed in the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting;

4. Urges the five Central American countries to adopt immediately formulae that will enable them to overcome the obstacles impeding the advancement of the regional peace process;

5. Exhorts the five Central American countries, with the utmost urgency, to promote and supplement the agreed verification machinery, with the co-operation of regional or extra-regional States and bodies of recognized impartiality and technical capacity, which have shown a desire to collaborate in the Central American peace process;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve peace, especially by taking the measures necessary for the development and effective functioning of the essential verification machinery;

7. Appeals to the countries which are outside the region but which have links with it and interests in it to facilitate the implementation of the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting and to abstain from any action which may impede such implementation;

8. Urges the international community and international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with the Central American countries for the implementation of the activities supporting the goals and objectives of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 42/231, and as a way of assisting the efforts being made by the countries of the region to achieve peace and development;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives",

General Assembly resolution 43/24

15 November 1988 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote
13-nation draft (A/43/L.26); agenda item 22.

SPONSORS: Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela.

In related action, the Assembly, by resolution 43/118, welcomed the decisions of OAS and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in support of an international conference on Central American refugees, to be held in Guatemala in May 1989. (For details concerning Central American refugees, see PART THREE, Chapter XV.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1988/20, called on the Central American countries and the Contadora Group and its Support Group to encourage and guarantee the full participation of women at all levels in the search for peace, pluralism, democracy and comprehensive development in the region.

Nicaragua situation

By a note of 8 February to the Secretary of State of the United States,⁽⁷⁾ Nicaragua protested what it called terrorist and criminal acts committed against its people by United States-supported mercenaries. It said that 18 civilians, including four children, were killed and 18 were injured in an incident on 4 February in which a bus was mined, and that nine people were killed and 31 injured on 6 February when a fragmentation grenade was thrown into a group of civilians protesting the earlier attack.

In a press release issued on 16 March,⁽⁸⁾ Honduras alleged that several hundred Nicaraguan troops had entered Honduran territory on 15 March and that bombs had been dropped from aircraft. Honduras had subsequently requested immediate assistance from the United States.

Nicaragua addressed three notes to the Honduran Foreign Minister protesting further attacks. One, of 18 March, described rocket attacks in the Amaka sector, on 17 March, by jets coming from Honduras.⁽⁹⁾ Another, of 19 March, alleged that Nicaragua had been infiltrated by approximately 30 mercenaries who had clashed with a unit of the Sandinista army on 18 March.⁽¹⁰⁾ That note also stated that the incursion had been openly supported by the Honduran army, which had fired rifle shots at a Sandinista army border post. Nicaragua charged that aircraft coming from Honduras had violated Nicaraguan airspace on 26 occasions between 15 and 18 March, and that a number of those incursions had been accompanied by attacks on Nicaraguan territory. The third note, also of 19 March, described two attacks by F-5 aircraft in which several bombs were dropped on Nicaragua on 19 March.⁽¹¹⁾ On 23 March,⁽¹²⁾ Honduras, by a note to the Nicaraguan Foreign Minister, charged that approximately 350 Nicaraguan soldiers had entered Honduras the previous day. Nicaragua categorically rejected the accusation.⁽¹³⁾

At the urgent request of Nicaragua,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Security Council met on 18 and 22 March to consider what Nicaragua called the serious situation created by the escalation of threats and aggression against it and by the decision of the United States to send troops to Honduras.

Meeting numbers. SC 2802, 2803.

The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Colombia, Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua, Peru, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Addressing the Council, Nicaragua, referring to the decision by the United States to send 3,200 troops to Honduras, accused the United States of attempting to abort the Esquipulas II accords (see above) and efforts to achieve a cease-fire in the region. According to Nicaragua, the first grave provocation had occurred on 17 March, when two United States jets coming from Honduras had bombed the Amaka sector, an area bordering Honduras, and two missiles had been launched against Nicaraguan troops in San Andrés de Bocay. Nicaragua stated that it had requested the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and OAS to send a technical mission to investigate the Bocay incident and to make specific recommendations for the disarmament and withdrawal of what it called the mercenary troops located in Honduras. Nicaragua asked Honduras to abide by the accords by dismantling contra bases and by disarming and expelling the mercenaries. It also urged the United States to put an end to what it called its illegal assistance to the Contras and to comply with the 1986 ruling of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua⁽¹⁵⁾ (see below).

Honduras replied that Nicaragua had carried out a broad-ranging offensive in the northern part of the country against its own insurgents, and some 1,500 Nicaraguan troops had entered the Bocay sector of Honduras, using artillery and the air force. Honduras reaffirmed its right of self-defence, saying that it had faced repeated acts of aggression by the Sandinista People's Army. Given the excessive military buildup in Nicaragua, Honduras had requested United States assistance in strengthening its security position. The troops dispatched in response to that request would be carrying out readiness exercises and would remain until the Sandinistas withdrew their troops from Honduras. Honduras stated that the 17 March attacks had been carried out against a Sandinista military post in Bocay, in Honduran territory, which had been providing logistical support for the aggressive activities of the Nicaraguan troops operating in Honduras. The action was intended to cut off the supply of matériel and logistical support to those troops. Honduras called on Nicaragua to withdraw its troops from Honduran territory and border areas immediately.

According to the United States, the deployment of troops was designed to show its staunch support for Honduras at a time when that country's territorial integrity was being violated by the Sandinista army. Because the troops had been deployed to an air base rather than to an area of ongoing hostilities, the United States did not believe that its action constituted either a threat or the use of force against Nicaragua. The United States disputed Nicaragua's claim that its troops had been in hot pursuit of insurgents. Rather, it alleged that the invasion had been a planned offensive in clear violation of international law, and was part of a plan to destroy the Nicaraguan resistance as an effective lighting force in order to stifle internal dialogue and demoralize the democratic opposition groups within the country.

Colombia read out a communique issued on 18 March by the Contadora and Support Groups, expressing their profound concern at the escalation of the foreign military presence in Honduras; reiterating the need for strict compliance with the principles of non-intervention, prohibition of the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes; appealing to Honduras and Nicaragua to reduce the tension in their border area immediately; appealing for an end to the foreign military presence in the area; and urging the Secretary-General to dispatch an observer mission immediately. Colombia further stated that it was pleased that the Secretary-General had already proceeded to send the requested observer mission. The communique was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 21 March.⁽¹⁶⁾

Honduras took exception to the communique, saying that it could not be accused of failing to abide by its international obligations as a result of exercising its right of self-defence, and said that the only military escalation it was concerned about was that of the Sandinista People's Army, which it said had invaded Honduras. Honduras reiterated its opposition to an observer mission, since a mechanism-the Executive Commission (see above)-had already been set up by the Central

^a Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

American Presidents for the purpose of implementing the peace process. To accede to Nicaragua's request would go against the political will of the Presidents expressed in their Joint Declaration of January (see above). On 23 March, Honduras transmitted to the Secretary-General its reply to the communiqué,⁽¹⁷⁾ stating that it was ironic that increasing concern should be expressed about the presence of United States troops in Honduras when they were sent at the Government's request, and that there should be such an interest in denouncing the presence of foreign troops in Honduras while nothing was said about the 6,000 military advisers from the Soviet bloc which Nicaragua had on its territory.

Nicaragua thanked the Secretary-General for his prompt response to its request to send a technical mission to investigate the recent border incidents. Nicaragua alleged that contrary to the United States declaration that its troops would be stationed 120 miles from the Nicaraguan border, they were currently within 15 miles of the border.

The United States said that Nicaragua's attack on Honduras had been premeditated and that Nicaragua had repeatedly attempted to delay and obstruct cease-fire talks.

The Council adjourned without taking action.

In a letter of 5 April to the President of the Security Council,⁽¹⁸⁾ Honduras requested a meeting of the Council on 11 April to discuss the collateral effects which the restoration of peace in Nicaragua had on the situation in Central America, in the light of recent developments. It withdrew the request on 8 April⁽¹⁹⁾ in view of the results of the Esquipulas II Executive Commission meeting concluded the previous day (see above).

Sapoá agreement

The Government of Nicaragua and the Nicaraguan resistance, meeting at Sapoá, Nicaragua (21-23 March),⁽²⁰⁾ with the aim of contributing to reconciliation within the framework of the Esquipulas II agreements, agreed to end offensive military operations for 60 days beginning on 1 April 1988, during which a definitive cease-fire would be negotiated. During the first 15 days, the resistance forces were to move to mutually agreed areas. Nicaragua agreed to a general amnesty, to be implemented gradually under the direction of the Secretary-General of OAS. The Contras agreed to arrange for and accept humanitarian assistance only, which was to be provided by neutral organizations. Nicaragua guaranteed unrestricted freedom of expression, agreed to allow all persons who had left the country for political or other motives to return without being punished for any political or military activities, and confirmed the right of all persons who had been "reintegrated into a peaceful life" to participate in national, municipal and Central American Parliament elections.

A commission, composed of the President of the Episcopal Conference of Nicaragua and the Secretary-General of OAS, was established to verify compliance with the agreement.

Nicaragua, in a note to the United States Secretary of State on 20 April,⁽²¹⁾ accused that country of providing humanitarian aid, through its Agency for International Development (AID), to armed members of the resistance who had remained in Honduras. In a similar note, it accused Honduras of permitting such aid to be provided. Nicaragua charged that this action violated both the Sapoá agreement, requiring that humanitarian aid be provided by neutral organizations, as well as the Esquipulas II agreements, which prohibited aid to irregular forces except that intended for repatriation and relocation assistance. On 21 April,⁽²²⁾ Honduras replied that Nicaragua's protest was unfounded. It stated that the aid had been approved, with the concurrence of Nicaragua, once a provisional cease-fire had been agreed upon, precisely to facilitate the agreements. It was the intention of Honduras that aid reach groups of Nicaraguans who did not enjoy the protection of UNHCR. Nicaragua, in a note of 10 May to the United States Secretary of State,⁽²³⁾ protested a plan by AID, reported in The New York Times, to provide cash to the Contras, and, in a note of 12 August to the Secretary-General,⁽²⁴⁾ denounced the approval by the United States Senate of $27 million in so-called humanitarian aid for the Contras.

1986 ICJ Judgment

Responding to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1988⁽²⁶⁾ reported that there had been no new developments regarding compliance with ICJ's 1986 Judgment concerning military and Paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua.⁽¹⁵⁾ (See PART FIVE, Chapter I, for ICJ action on this matter.)

The Assembly, in resolution 43/11, urgently called for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment in conformity with the United Nations Charter.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1988 submitted a report⁽²⁸⁾ summarizing action taken by States to reduce the negative effects of the trade embargo imposed by the United States against Nicaragua in 1985.⁽²⁹⁾ Czechoslovakia, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Malawi, Nicaragua, Norway, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR had provided information in response to a request of the Secretary-General.

Nicaragua reported that the embargo had had serious, far-reaching consequences, as its economy had relied largely on foreign trade, particularly with North America. In 1980, sales to the United States had represented 36 per cent of its total exports, but by 1986, the percentage had fallen to zero. Nicaragua had also traditionally depended heavily on imports from the United States, especially for intermediate goods for industry, agriculture and construction, capital goods and consumer goods. The embargo had resulted in a loss of $65 million between May 1985 and December 1987 because of higher import prices, mainly on inputs for the production of basic foodstuffs for domestic consumption and for the manufacture of chemicals for export. The most serious effects of the embargo in the medium and long term would be a reduction of public services, including water and power, and a deterioration of the health system. Nicaragua estimated that the damage caused by the embargo between May 1985 and the end of 1987 amounted to $254 million.

With the exception of Denmark and Norway, the above-mentioned States indicated their opposition to the embargo. Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Norway, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR described various levels of financial, technical and/or in-kind assistance they had been providing to Nicaragua. These took the form of, among other things, development aid, vocational training, hospital facilities and medical supplies, food and loan deferments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 43/185 by recorded vote.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/188 of 17 December 1985, 41/164 of 5 December 1986 and 42/176 of 11 December 1987, as well as its resolutions 42/204 of 11 December 1987 and 42/231 of 12 May 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the trade embargo against Nicaragua,

1. Deplores the continuation of the trade embargo contrary to its resolutions 40/188, 41/164 and 42/176 and to the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986, and once again requests that those measures be immediately revoked;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

El Salvador situation

In 1988, El Salvador continued to accuse the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario (FMLN-FDR)-the Salvadorian opposition movement-of terrorist activities that it said were part of a guerrilla war designed to achieve a violent take-over of power. By a communiqué of 6 September,⁽³⁰⁾ El Salvador denounced an attack on 1 September in which private dwellings were destroyed and two persons were injured in machine-gun fire. On 14 September,⁽³¹⁾ it condemned street unrest that had occurred during a demonstration the previous day in which one soldier was killed and several police officers were shot. The Government accused armed opposition groups of using the demonstration to incite disorder. El Salvador also said that FMLN had attacked an army brigade and conducted a transport stoppage, blocking the delivery of humanitarian assistance to victims of hurricane Gilbert. On 26 September,⁽³²⁾ El Salvador charged that the transport stoppage, imposed from 19 to 21 September, had been accompanied by acts of sabotage against the national electricity grid. In addition, it said, a Red Cross ambulance was machine-gunned, offices of the National Telecommunications Administration were destroyed and various military posts were attacked. On 20 December,⁽³³⁾ the Government denounced the abduction by FMLN-FDR of two relief workers and requested humanitarian agencies to intercede to secure their speedy and safe release. El Salvador accused FMLN-FDR of detonating four car bombs on a busy street in the capital on 23 December,⁽³⁴⁾ resulting in at least three civilian deaths, dozens of casualties and extensive material damage, and of threatening freely elected municipal mayors in three departments. El Salvador asked the special representative of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, organizations monitoring the human rights situation in El Salvador and Governments to condemn those actions. (See PART THREE, Chapter X, for details on the human rights situation in El Salvador.)

Other questions relating to the Americas

Co-operation with OAS

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1988 submitted a report on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States.⁽²⁾ He reported that he and the Secretary-General of OAS had collaborated as members of the International Verification and Follow-up Commission provided for under the Esquipulas II agreements (see above). Regarding co-operation in the area of economic, social and cultural development, the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Maritime Organization, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and UNHCR had various types of co-operative arrangements with OAS, including technical co-operation, joint workshops and training programmes, and preparation of publications.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/4 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/11 of 28 October 1987, relating to the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Bearing in mind that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, and whose activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling also that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles, and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind resolution AG/RES.880(XVII-0/87) adopted on 14 November 1987 by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States on co-operation between the two organizations,

Underscoring the need to continue strengthening the co-operation that already exists between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, especially in respect of economic and social development, as well as the initiative by their Secretaries-General regarding co-operation in the peace process in Central America,

Convinced of the need for more efficient and co-ordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, as well as his efforts to strengthen that co-operation;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue taking the necessary measures for promoting and expanding co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and the Organization of American States in order to increase the capacity of the two organizations for the attainment of their common objectives;

3. Recommends that a general meeting should be held between representatives of the Organization of American States and of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, on a date and at a place to be determined, for the purpose of holding consultations on projects, measures and procedures which will facilitate and broaden co-operation between those organizations;

4. Recommends that in 1989 local meetings should be promoted between resident representatives of the two organizations, in each country which is a member of both organizations, in consultation with the national authorities of those countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

General Assembly resolution 43/4

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Saint Lucia, Trinidad and Tobago, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 43/76 H on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America, made recommendations regarding the work of the Centre and changed its name to "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean".

Bolivia-Chile

In a continuing dispute over its lack of access to the Pacific Ocean, Bolivia, in a 14 April press release from its Foreign Ministry,⁽³⁾ reiterated its condemnation of Chile's diversion of the Lauca River in 1962, saying that it demonstrated Chile's total disregard of international law. The diversion of the river had done serious harm to the country and was a major factor in the impoverishment of the rural zone, Bolivia said. In addition, Bolivia condemned what it called a new affront-Chile's recent action changing the name of the Arica-La Paz international railway to "Regional Railway of Arica", which Bolivia said was a prelude to new action designed to reinforce its isolation from the sea. It urged the United Nations and other international institutions to express their solidarity with Bolivia.

Political conditions in Haiti

By a letter of 7 January to the Secretary-General,⁽⁴⁾ the United States disputed allegations by Cuba⁽⁵⁾ that it had disrupted elections in Haiti. The United States said it had provided $6.6 million to the Haitian Provisional Electoral Commission and had made continued aid dependent on the holding of free and fair elections and respect for their results. The tragic events of 29 November 1987 had resulted in the suspension of the electoral process and the suspension by the United States of all military aid to Haiti, except funds for anti-narcotics co-operation, as well as all economic aid routed through the Government of Haiti. The United States said that its action in cutting off that assistance was a clear signal of its disapproval of the disruption of elections. It reaffirmed its support for the efforts of the Haitian people to secure a democratic political system.

Panama-United States

Panama transmitted several communications to the Secretary-General in 1988 protesting what it called warlike actions taken by the United States in Panama, which it said violated international law as well as the Panama Canal Treaty and the Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, signed by the two Governments in 1977.

By a letter of 9 March,⁽⁶⁾ Panama said that its Foreign Minister had announced that certain military exercises being conducted by the United States constituted a prelude to an armed invasion of Panama. He said that United States troops had been mobilized in Panama unilaterally and without authorization, in violation of the 1977 treaties as well as the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Panama.

On 22 March,⁽⁷⁾ Panama transmitted excerpts from a message to the nation by its Minister in Charge of the Presidency, issued the previous day, denouncing what he called the United States aggression against Panama. He listed several measures which he said had been arbitrarily imposed by that country on Panama, including obstruction of negotiations on the external debt service, withholding payments for use of the Panama Canal, withholding Panamanian funds deposited in United States bank accounts, banning exports to Panama and barring Panamanian planes and ships from entering the United States. Those actions, he said, were clear manifestations of an undeclared war against Panama.

By a communiqué of 24 March⁽⁸⁾ from its Foreign Ministry, Panama said that it had received information that five days earlier, at a briefing at the Southern Command headquarters, an expert in psychological warfare in the United States army had instructed some 40 American journalists on how to misrepresent events in Panama in order to help in ousting the Commander-in-Chief of the Panamanian defence forces. The communiqué stated that article I of the agreement on the implementation of article IV of the Panama Canal Treaty prohibited members of the United States armed forces from engaging in political activity or interfering in the internal affairs of Panama. Panama reaffirmed the illegality of the presence of the Southern Command in its territory and its overt use for destabilizing purposes, and protested the way in which the United States armed forces were endangering the security of Panama and undermining the credibility of the United States press. It accused the United States of manipulating information as part of a plan to subjugate Panama in order to maintain its military bases there beyond 1999.

Panama on 5 April⁽⁹⁾ transmitted the text of a decision adopted by the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System (Caracas, Venezuela, 28 and 29 March), calling on the United States to revoke immediately the economic enforcement measures taken against Panama, and exhorting it to abide by the provisions of the Panama Canal treaties.

By a letter of 14 April,⁽¹⁰⁾ Panama accused the United States of numerous acts it said were in violation of the United Nations Charter and international law, and said the warlike mobilization of United States armed forces constituted the first and only threat to the Panama Canal since the end of the Second World War. In addition to the increase in troops, those acts included violations of Panamanian airspace and waters, various provocative acts and economic measures, such as the withholding of payments, which had brought about a severe money supply crisis and paralysed banking and a number of production activities.

By a communique of 5 July,⁽¹¹⁾ Panama accused the United States of using the administrative régime of the Panama Canal as a weapon of aggression and economic coercion, in violation of the Panama Canal treaties. It said that the United States had withheld payments amounting to over $100 million which were due to Panama under the treaties, as well as proceeds of income-tax and education-insurance deductions from the salaries of Panamanians employed by the Panama Canal Commission and the United States armed forces. The communique said that since October 1979, when the treaties had entered into force, Panama had scrupulously fulfilled its obligations under the treaties and it was determined to ensure the Canal's efficient and safe operation not only while the treaties remained in force but also after it assumed full control and administration of the Canal in 2000.

Chapter III

Asia and the Pacific

During 1988, intensified diplomatic activity resulted in major breakthroughs in the conflicts between Iran and Iraq, in Afghanistan and in Kampuchea.

In April, Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan were signed at Geneva and United Nations military observers were sent to monitor the situation. Describing the Agreements as a major step towards a peaceful solution to the situation in Afghanistan, the Secretary-General said that their full implementation in good faith by all the signatories would serve the goal of regional and world peace.

In August, a United Nations-sponsored cease-fire went into effect in the eight-year Iran-Iraq war, followed by direct talks between the parties under the Secretary-General's auspices. United Nations military observers began overseeing the cease-fire and the withdrawal of forces to internationally recognized boundaries. During the year, the Security Council again condemned the use of chemical weapons in the war, and decided to consider appropriate action should there be any such future use. It again stressed rapid implementation of its resolution 598(1987) as the only basis for a settlement of the conflict. It made that statement after considering the downing in the Persian Gulf of an Iranian passenger plane by the United States navy.

After the Secretary-General had presented specific proposals for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem, all parties and countries concerned agreed to work towards a solution and to examine key substantive issues. The Secretary-General reported that prospects for peace in the region had improved through initiation of the dialogue.

East Asia

Korean question

The annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) on the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement⁽¹⁾ was received by the Security Council in June 1988. The report was submitted by the United States⁽²⁾ on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950

Council resolution.⁽³⁾ It provided information on the activities of UNC and major incidents and issues discussed during 1987 by the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), established to supervise the Armistice Agreement's implementation and settle violations of it through negotiation.⁽⁴⁾

The report stated that the capability of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to initiate a major attack against UNC and the Republic of Korea remained a threat to international peace. MAC, which served as the only official channel of communication between the opposing military commanders in Korea and provided a mechanism for defusing serious and accidental incidents to prevent further escalation of tension, held four meetings during 1987. Among the issues it considered, UNC detailed an offensively oriented build-up by the Democratic People's Republic of more than 3,500 tanks, over 2,000 self-propelled artillery pieces, as well as MIG-23 aircraft and SA-3 missiles. Those modern and reinforced forces, deployed close to the demilitarized zone (DMZ), reduced warning time for UNC and the defence forces of the Republic of Korea and posed a serious threat to the south. UNC therefore considered maintenance of defence preparedness and joint UNC/Republic of Korea defence training exercises such as "Team Spirit" essential.

A major incident occurred on 7 October 1987, when a Democratic People's Republic warship, or warships, attacked an unarmed fishing boat of the Republic of Korea and sank it in international waters west of the Republic of Korea island of Paengyong-Do, killing 11 fishermen. UNC pointed out that the attack violated international-law regarding minimum force and insisted that the Democratic People's Republic apologize for the sinking and punish those responsible.

The report stated that in spite of the hostility of the Democratic People's Republic and its use of MAC for propaganda purposes, UNC continued to approach meetings of MAC and its subordinate agencies in the positive manner intended by the Armistice Agreement. It presented numerous proposals to help reduce military tensions, which were, however, rejected by that Republic.

On 22 January 1987, UNC conveyed the Republic of Korea's invitation to the military authorities of both the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the People's Republic of China to observe the annual "Team Spirit" military training exercises (February/March). The former, however, responded with propaganda against the exercises.

At a 30 July 1987 meeting of MAC, UNC requested that the Korean People's Army/Chinese People's Volunteers (KPA/CPV) return the remains of UNC military personnel killed during the Korean War, as this was both an Armistice and humanitarian issue. It noted that, in the past, remains had been returned through MAC, as required by the Armistice Agreement. KPA/CPV, however, reiterated its position that searching for and disinterring remains did not fall within the purview of MAC, but it agreed to return them whenever they were discovered. Emphasizing its humanitarian actions over the years in returning military and civilian personnel, both alive and deceased, UNC proposed a multinational team composed of representatives of several UNC nations, accompanied by the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC) members of MAC, to assist the Democratic People's Republic's search for UNC military remains.

Earlier, at a 26 May meeting of MAC secretaries, UNC passed to KPA maps of three temporary prisoner-of-war camps and associated burial sites located along the Yalu River in the Democratic People's Republic, which, it felt, should prove helpful in recovering the remains of 374 UNC military and civilian personnel. KPA, however, maintained that the remains would be returned through MAC if and when discovered, and denied any obligation to search for and disinter them based on UNC information.

Concluding, the report stated that, at a 22 September 1987 MAC meeting, UNC expressed concern that the Democratic People's Republic was setting the stage for a serious incident designed to discourage nations from participating in the 1988 Seoul Olympics, and warned that the Republic alone would be held responsible if hostile acts arose from its attempts to create false impressions of high tension in the Korean peninsula.

Throughout 1988, the President of the Security Council received a number of communications from the two Koreas.

On 7 January,⁽⁴⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted its President's New Year address, in which he proposed high-level North-South talks to study the question of reunification. He also proposed that both sides adopt a non-aggression declaration whose implementation could be guaranteed by increasing NNSC authority and organizing a neutral nations' inspection force. By a 21 March communiqué⁽⁵⁾ from the KPA Supreme Command and a Foreign Ministry statement⁽⁶⁾ two days later, it protested against the 1988 "Team Spirit" military exercises. On 10 May,⁽⁷⁾ the Democratic People's Republic denounced a 19 April UNC special report⁽⁸⁾ which refuted that Republic's July 1987 allegations⁽⁹⁾ of UNC violations of the Armistice Agreement, adding that violations committed by United States forces and the Republic of Korea army during January-March 1988 totalled 36,100. A 27 July KPA/CPV report⁽¹⁰⁾ to MAC charged that the latest joint military exercises were the most provocative ever.

The Republic of Korea, on 8 July,⁽¹¹⁾ transmitted a special declaration by its President enunciating policies that he hoped would open a new chapter of inter-Korean relations and lead to unification. It was followed by a 16 July⁽¹²⁾ statement of foreign policy measures in pursuance of that declaration. On 12 July,⁽¹³⁾ the Democratic People's Republic denounced the special declaration as a divisionist proposal. On 22 July,⁽¹⁴⁾ it transmitted a letter from its Supreme People's Assembly to the Republic of Korea National Assembly proposing parliamentary talks between the two sides and a draft joint declaration on non-aggression between them. It further conveyed a 20 July⁽¹⁵⁾ letter addressed to the United States Congress from the Supreme People's Assembly proposing talks between the two bodies.

During August and September, the Secretary-General received a request by 10 Western and other States⁽¹⁶⁾ for inclusion of a supplementary item entitled "Fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the Government of the Republic of Korea" in the agenda of the 1988 regular session of the General Assembly. Objections to discussing the anniversary of an individual country, especially a divided nation, were made by China on 16 September⁽¹⁷⁾ and by Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Cuba, Madagascar, Mali, Nicaragua, Zambia and Zimbabwe on 19 September.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Democratic People's Republic, on 6⁽¹⁹⁾ and 16 September,⁽²⁰⁾ denounced the move to include the item as a provocative act designed to wreck North-South dialogue and legalize the division of Korea.

On 15 September,⁽²¹⁾ 13 Eastern European and other socialist States requested inclusion in the agenda of the same Assembly session of an additional item on the situation on the Korean peninsula and implementation of the resolution on the question of Korea adopted by the General Assembly in 1975.⁽²²⁾

On 10 October 1988,⁽²³⁾ the Democratic People's Republic forwarded excerpts from a report by its President, in connection with the fortieth anniversary of the founding of that Republic. A 7 November communiqué⁽²⁴⁾ described a joint meeting of the Central People's Committee, the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly and the Administration Council, during which new comprehensive peace proposals to the United States and South Korean authorities were made.

Destruction of Korean airliner

In mid-February 1988, the Security Council considered an allegation by the Republic of Korea that "agents of North Korea" had planted a time-bomb on a Korean Air Lines (KAL) commercial passenger plane, causing it to explode in mid-air off the coast of Burma on 29 November 1987. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea charged Japan, the Republic of Korea and the United States with collusion to fake the incident. It also accused Bahrain of involvement.

The Republic of Korea, on 10 February 1988,⁽²⁵⁾ presented the findings of its investigation into the destruction of KAL flight 858, maintaining that two agents of the Democratic People's Republic were responsible. On the same day,⁽²⁶⁾ the Democratic People's Republic forwarded statements of 15, 25 and 26 January from the Korean Central News Agency, its Foreign Ministry and the Central Committee of the National Democratic Front of South Korea, refuting the findings and alleging that the incident had been fabricated to divert attention from civil and political unrest in the South.

Communications condemning the attack on the airliner were received from the Federal Republic of Germany on behalf of the 12 States Members of the European Community (EC),⁽²⁷⁾ and from Bolivia⁽²⁸⁾ and Paraguay.⁽²⁹⁾ Bahrain⁽³⁰⁾ rejected allegations by the Democratic People's Republic⁽²⁶⁾ that as a result of bribery it had extradited to the Republic of Korea a woman and the body of a man who, it said, were responsible for the explosion. It said that it had done so out of its commitment to international norms following a request from that Republic.

Japan and the Republic of Korea, on 10 February,⁽³¹⁾ requested the Security Council to consider the matter urgently. On 16 February,⁽³²⁾ the Democratic People's Republic objected, stating that Japan, the Republic of Korea and the United States were exploiting the incident for political purposes.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council held meetings on 16 and 17 February to consider the matter. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited Bahrain to participate in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

Meeting numbers. SC 2791, 2792.

The USSR objected to the Council's consideration of what it said were groundless assertions by the Republic of Korea. Discussion of the matter, it said, would have negative consequences for the situation on the Korean peninsula.

According to the Republic of Korea, a man and a woman—both North Koreans carrying Japanese passports—had boarded a KAL flight from Baghdad, Iraq, to Seoul, placed explosives in an overhead luggage compartment and disembarked at the first stop, Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates. Nine hours later, the plane exploded over the sea off the coast of Burma. After the two people had been stopped in Bahrain for questioning, they took poison, resulting in the man's death. The woman, who survived, was extradited to the Republic of Korea and confessed on 23 December. The Republic charged that the terrorist act was intended to disrupt the upcoming Olympic games in Seoul.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea said the KAL incident was a fake drama put together by authorities in the South, aided by Japan and the United States, because of an insecure political situation in the South.

Bahrain, Japan and the United States rejected the charges of collusion in the affair as groundless, and Japan added that it, too, was a victim because the two accused had pretended to be Japanese.

At the conclusion of the debate, the Council President said it was a tragedy that 115 lives had been lost needlessly.

South-East Asia

Kampuchea situation

After nine years of conflict in Kampuchea, the heads of both the Coalition of Democratic Kampuchea and the People's Republic of Kampuchea met for the first time in late 1987 and early 1988 and announced agreement on the need for a peaceful political solution to the problem of Kampuchea.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

During the first half of 1988, the Secretary-General and his Special Representative presented to all the parties concerned specific ideas for a comprehensive settlement of the Kampuchea problem.

In November, by resolution 43/19, the General Assembly reiterated that the principal elements of a settlement should be: withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea; restoration of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity; the right of Kampuchians to determine their own destiny; and a commitment by all States to non-interference.

In other action, the Assembly, in December, by resolution 43/119, welcomed the call of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) for an international conference on Indo-Chinese refugees, hoped that the conference would be held at the ministerial level early in 1989, and appealed for the necessary support and resources needed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) (see PART THREE, Chapter XV).

The four Kampuchean parties—the National United Front for an Independent Neutral Peaceful and Co-operative Cambodia, headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk; the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), led by Son Sann; the Party of Democratic Kampuchea, led by Khieu Samphan; and the authorities in Phnom Penh, headed by Hun Sen—as well as the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and the six members of ASEAN (Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand) held the Jakarta Informal Meeting (JIM) (Bogor, Indonesia, 25-28 July).⁽¹⁾ Participants agreed to work towards setting up an independent, sovereign neutral and non-aligned Kampuchea based on self-determination and national reconciliation. All shared the view that the two key interlinked issues were the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces, to be carried out in the context of an overall political solution, and the prevention of a recurrence of genocidal practices and cessation of all foreign interference and external arming of opposing Kampuchean forces. They also saw the need to set definite timetables and to provide effective international supervision of those processes. Key issues to be resolved were specified and a working group was set up to make recommendations to a second JIM at ministerial level.

A ministerial meeting of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Nicosia, Cyprus, 5-10 September)(*) established a Committee on Kampuchea, complementary to the JIM process. Some parties called for an international peace-keeping force to oversee a future settlement, while others preferred an international control commission.

Throughout 1988, the Secretary-General received numerous communications relating to the situation in Kampuchea. Among them were letters from China, Democratic Kampuchea, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam.

On 6 January,⁽³⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted, as requested by the People's Republic of Kampuchea, a message from Hun Sen, President of the latter's Council of Ministers, informing of a four-point agreement reached between him and Prince Norodom Sihanouk following their meeting in France from 2 to 4 December 1987. He said the meeting was a prelude to a solution to end the war in Kampuchea and to the restoration of peace there and in South-East Asia. A second round of talks was held on 20 and 21 January 1988.

Democratic Kampuchea, on 31 May,⁽⁴⁾ conveyed a message from its President to heads of State or Government of the donor countries to the Kampuchean Humanitarian Assistance Programme, and a statement from its Foreign Ministry, calling on those and other countries to make the granting of humanitarian assistance and other aid to Viet Nam conditional on the total withdrawal of its forces from Kampuchea.

Viet Nam, on 7 July,⁽⁵⁾ criticized ASEAN for continuing to slander it and the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Jointly with the Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 8 July,⁽⁶⁾ it denounced ASEAN's attempt to turn the upcoming informal Jakarta "cocktail party" into negotiations between Viet Nam and the four Kampuchean parties.

Activities of the Committee of the Conference on Kampuchea. During 1988, the 10-member Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea met on 12 January, 11 February, 16 June and 1 and 25 August.⁽⁷⁾ It undertook one consultation mission in accordance with its mandate to assist in seeking a comprehensive political settlement. The mission visited Beijing, Bangkok and Vienna from 27 June to 8 July.

The mission consulted extensively with the Governments concerned on the prospects for a settlement, in an effort to encourage negotiations leading to the implementation of the Declaration on Kampuchea, adopted in 1981 by the International Conference.⁽⁸⁾ They expressed the view that a settlement must be based on the withdrawal of all foreign forces, national reconciliation, the right of Kampuchians to determine their own destiny and the establishment of a non-aligned and neutral Kampuchea.

In Beijing, the Foreign Minister and two Deputy Foreign Ministers informed the mission that China would support all efforts aimed at achieving a fair and reasonable political settlement.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk briefed the mission in Bangkok on the deliberations that had led the three partners of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) to adopt their declaration of 25 June for the upcoming JIM in July.⁽⁹⁾ The Prince said he considered three points in that declaration to be necessary conditions for any settlement. They were the formation of a provisional quadripartite government following the second phase of Vietnamese withdrawal; the simultaneous dismantling of the Phnom Penh régime and CGDK; and the introduction of an international peace-keeping force.

The mission then briefed the ASEAN Foreign Ministers and focused on the upcoming JIM. They also met the CGDK Vice-President in charge of foreign affairs, who supported the June declaration and emphasized that total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces was the key to a solution. While in Bangkok, the mission also met with KPNLF, which stressed that any solution should provide for the disarming of all factions and a United Nations peace-keeping force.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁾ reported in October 1988⁽¹¹⁾ that during the year he and his Special Representative, Rafeeuddin Ahmed, had maintained close contact with the States most concerned and other interested parties. Early in 1988, Mr. Ahmed met with Prince Sihanouk in Paris, and, in June in New York, the problem was discussed in detail with the Foreign Ministers of China, Indonesia and Viet Nam.

In the light of those discussions, the Secretary-General felt it was time to formulate specific ideas towards a framework for a comprehensive political settlement. He asked Mr. Ahmed to travel to South-East Asia to present those ideas to the four Kampuchean parties, and to Viet Nam, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the ASEAN countries. Accordingly, the Special Representative visited Bangkok, Phnom Penh and Vientiane, where he met with the interested parties, before returning to Bangkok for a meeting with ASEAN Foreign Ministers on 4 July.

In September, Mr. Ahmed again travelled to the region to take stock of the situation because of developments in the intervening period, especially the initiative of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and JIM.

The Secretary-General held further discussions in New York with Prince Sihanouk, the leaders of the countries of the region and the President of the International Conference on Kampuchea. He stated that the process of dialogue, which the Kampuchean parties and other concerned countries had initiated and seemed determined to pursue until a framework for a comprehensive political settlement was agreed, was encouraging. It confirmed the interest of all sides to abandon confrontation and to seek a political solution through genuine negotiations and mutual accommodation. He was convinced that with good will and co-operation it should be possible to bring peace to Kampuchea.

Meanwhile, the Secretary-General continued to co-ordinate humanitarian relief assistance to the Kampuchean people along the Thai-Kampuchean border. His Special Representative for co-ordination of the programmes, Shah A. M. S. Kibria, had been in close touch with interested Member States.

Some 292,000 Kampucheans were under the care of the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO). In addition, there were some 14,000 Kampuchean refugees, mainly in the Khao-I-Dang holding centre, assisted by UNHCR. Both groups were totally dependent on international relief. The future of Khao-I-Dang was the subject of particular attention, and the United Nations remained in contact with UNHCR and the Thai Government on that question.

Providing humanitarian assistance to the population within Kampuchea were the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, UNHCR, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), five national Red Cross Societies and 16 other voluntary agencies. However, creation of a secure environment for the border camps remained difficult. To combat violent crime at the evacuation sites, the Thai Government replaced Task Force 80 with a Displaced Persons Protection Unit to work closely with UNBRO and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

To improve primary education facilities at the evacuation sites, efforts were under way to train 2,000 teachers and teacher trainers, to expand and upgrade the curriculum and to provide the necessary supplies for primary education for all school-age children. Prospects for extending skills-training and educational facilities to secondary level students were being explored with the authorities.

The Secretary-General reported progress on the question of voluntary repatriation of Kampucheans, with the parties concerned indicating willingness to co-operate with UNHCR to speed up the processing of individual applications.

Although Kampuchea was expected to have a better harvest in 1988, its food situation remained fragile following the 1987 drought, although international assistance helped mitigate the effects. Mr. Kibria appealed for funding for a number of projects proposed by FAO to help the population become self-sufficient in basic foods.

At a September 1988 meeting in New York, donors responded to the Secretary-General's appeal for help, providing some $14 million for the Kampuchean Humanitarian Assistance Programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In decision 1988/143 of 27 May, the Economic and Social Council expressed concern at the continued violation of human rights by the foreign occupying force in Kampuchea of Kampuchean nationals, as well as of innocent displaced Kampucheans seeking temporary shelter along the Thai-Kampuchean border; and at the unresolved dilemma of the approximately 292,000 Kampuchean civilians stranded in Thailand as a result of attacks by the foreign forces on the Kampuchean civilian border encampments since 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November 1988, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 43/19.

The situation in Kampuchea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983, 39/5 of 30 October 1984, 40/7 of 5 November 1985, 41/6 of 21 October 1986 and 42/3 of 14 October 1987,

Recalling also the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1(I) adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 42/3,

Deploring that foreign armed intervention and occupation continue and that foreign forces still remain in Kampuchea, thus causing continuing hostilities in that country and seriously threatening international peace and security,

Noting the continued and effective struggle waged against foreign occupation by the Kampuchean forces under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1988/143 of 27 May 1988 on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation,

Greatly disturbed that the continued fighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced an additional large number of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing also that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Seriously concerned about reported demographic changes being imposed in Kampuchea by foreign occupation forces,

Convinced that, to bring about lasting peace in South-East Asia and reduce the threat to international peace and security, there is an urgent need for the international community to find a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem, with effective guarantees, that will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea under effective international supervision and control, the creation of an interim administering authority, the promotion of national reconciliation among all Kampucheans under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, the non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of a recent past and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Recognizing that the Jakarta Informal Meeting held at Bogor, Indonesia, from 25 to 28 July 1988 was a significant development, which marked for the first time the participation of the parties directly involved and other concerned countries,

Reiterating its conviction that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22, 35/6, 36/5, 37/6, 38/3, 39/5, 40/7, 41/6 and 42/3 and calls for their full implementation;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea under effective international supervision and control, the creation of an interim administering authority, the promotion of national reconciliation among all Kampucheans under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, the non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of a recent past, the restoration and preservation of the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, the reaffirmation of the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea, with effective guarantees, are the principal components of any just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Takes note with appreciation the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on its activities during 1987-1988 and requests that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference;

4. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene when necessary and to carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate;

5. Reaffirms its commitment to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time, in accordance with Conference resolution 1(I), and its readiness to support any other conference of an international nature under the auspices of the Secretary-General;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult with and assist the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee and to provide them on a regular basis with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

7. Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in following the situation closely and requests him to continue to do so and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

8. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other humanitarian organizations, national and international, that have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to provide emergency assistance to those Kampucheans who are still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the various encampments in Thailand;

9. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as necessary;

10. Urges the States of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

11. Reiterates the hope that, following a comprehensive political solution, an intergovernmental committee will be established to consider a programme of assistance to Kampuchea for the reconstruction of its economy and for the economic and social development of all States in the region;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea".

Participation and representation of Democratic Kampuchea in UN bodies

The question of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials was again raised in the Credentials Committee on 11 October 1988 with respect to the General Assembly's forty-third (1988) regular session. Several States expressed opinions on those credentials, which were accepted when the General Assembly on 18 October adopted resolution 43/10 A, approving the Committee's first report.⁽¹²⁾

International security in South-East Asia

Several communications were received by the Secretary-General in 1988 dealing with general aspects of relations among countries in South-East Asia.

By a joint letter, the Federal Republic of Germany and Thailand, on 11 May,⁽¹³⁾ transmitted a declaration of the seventh meeting of the European Community and ASEAN Foreign Ministers (Düsseldorf, 2 and 3 May), calling on Viet Nam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. A similar call was made by the Toronto Economic Summit (19-21 June), whose final documents were forwarded by Canada on 30 June.⁽¹⁴⁾

Thailand, on 5 July,⁽¹⁵⁾ conveyed a statement of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, expressing support for JIM (see above) and welcoming the willingness of Viet Nam and all the Kampuchean factions to participate in it.

Similarly, on 28 July,⁽¹⁶⁾ Greece forwarded a declaration by the 12 EC member States, welcoming JIM, which they hoped would be a starting-point for a peace process.

Brunei Darussalam, on 4 August,⁽¹⁷⁾ transmitted excerpts from the joint communiqué of the twenty-first ASEAN Ministerial Meeting (Bangkok, 4 and 5 July), calling for a durable and comprehensive political settlement and the achievement of national reconciliation in Kampuchea.

China, on 19 December,⁽¹⁸⁾ accused Taiwan of attempts to create what it called "two Chinas" or "one China, one Taiwan", and hoped that it would stop activities detrimental to China's reunification.

Incidents along the border between the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand were the subject of a number of communications from those States between January and March.⁽¹⁹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 November, by decision 43/407, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia and included it in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth (1989) session.

In other related action, the Assembly, in resolution 43/76 G of 7 December, welcomed the signing of an agreement and a memorandum of understanding between Nepal and the United Nations concerning the establishment of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia, with headquarters in Kathmandu.

China-Viet Nam dispute

Sovereignty over an archipelago in the South China Sea continued to be disputed by China and Viet Nam in 1988. The archipelago was called Nansha by China and Truong Sa by Viet Nam and was also known as Spratly. In 1979,⁽²⁰⁾ China and Viet Nam had each transmitted documents to the Secretary-General in support of its claim to the islands. Both States had continued to maintain their claims periodically since that time.

From February to May 1988,⁽²¹⁾ both forwarded further communications, each charging the other with naval incursions or armed provocations, together with documentation supporting their respective claims to sovereignty over the disputed territory.

Afghanistan situation

Following eight years of conflict and more than six years of negotiations and shuttle diplomacy by the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative, Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan⁽¹⁾ were signed at Geneva on 14 April 1988. In the four-part Agreements, Afghanistan and Pakistan committed themselves to principles of mutual relations, particularly to non-interference and non-intervention, and to the voluntary return of refugees. By a declaration on international guarantees, the United States and the USSR also undertook to refrain from any form of interference in Afghanistan's or Pakistan's internal affairs. All four States signed an instrument on interrelationships for the settlement of the situation, providing for a phased withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan.

To assist in monitoring implementation of the Agreements, the Secretary-General immediately dispatched 50 United Nations military observers to the region.

In October, the Secretary-General reported that Afghanistan and Pakistan had each charged the other with serious violations of the Agreements, and expressed his deep concern that fighting continued in Afghanistan and that the economic and social problems posed to neighbouring countries by the presence of millions of refugees had not ended.

In November, the General Assembly called on all parties to respect scrupulously and to implement faithfully the April peace settlement (resolution 43/20).

At the end of the year, the Secretary-General again expressed concern over the suffering of the Afghan people and at the slow pace of developments leading to a settlement.

Among the numerous communications addressed to the Secretary-General in 1988 concerning the situation were many from Afghanistan and Pakistan, alleging violations of airspace and territory in the form of reconnaissance flights, bombings, shellings and other acts of aggression and provocation by one against the other. Each continued to lodge protests with the other against such acts and demanded their cessation, while rejecting each other's allegations.⁽²⁾

Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan

Responding to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1988⁽⁴⁾ on the Afghanistan situation. He said that as part of intensive consultations, his Personal Representative, Diego Cordovez, had visited Washington, D.C., and Moscow in December 1987 for meetings with senior United States and USSR officials. In Moscow, Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze assured him of his Government's determination to conclude the negotiations and requested that a new round of talks be convened at Geneva at an early date. The Secretary-General felt that before this could be done further consultations were necessary, and he subsequently sent Mr. Cordovez to Islamabad and Kabul from 20 January to 9 February 1988.

At Islamabad, Mr. Cordovez met with the Pakistani President, the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister, and at Kabul with the President and Foreign Minister of Afghanistan. For technical reasons, he was unable to visit Teheran during that trip, but Iran was briefed on the contents of the discussions. Based on those discussions, it was agreed that a round of talks would be held. All Governments concerned had conveyed to the Secretary-General, through Mr. Cordovez, their determination to bring the negotiating process to an early conclusion. A statement by Mikhail Gorbachev that the withdrawal of Soviet troops would begin on 15 May if agreement was reached at Geneva by 15 March provided an important impetus.

Thus, talks in which the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan participated began at Geneva on 1 March. While there was progress on the question of the time-frame and modalities for the withdrawal of foreign troops, final agreement proved elusive because of a number of other issues to which each side gave varying degrees of relevance and significance, the Secretary-General said.

Following consultations held over a six-week period, it was announced on 8 April that the instruments comprising the settlement were finalized and open for signature. On 14 April, at a ceremony at Geneva presided over by the Secretary-General, the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan were signed. They consisted of: a bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the principles of mutual relations, in particular on non-interference and non-intervention; a declaration on international guarantees; a bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the voluntary return of refugees; and an agreement on the interrelationships for the settlement of the Afghanistan situation, including a memorandum of understanding on the monitoring arrangements to be provided by the United Nations. On behalf of their respective Governments, the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan signed the instruments as parties to the settlement. The USSR and United States counterparts signed as State guarantors.

The Agreements came into force on 15 May and, as part of the arrangements, Afghanistan and Pakistan requested the Secretary-General to appoint his Representative and provide assistance for investigating any possible violations of the instruments. Accordingly, he appointed Mr. Cordovez to that post. Major-General Rauli Helminen (Finland) was appointed as his deputy and Benon Sevan (Turkey) as Alternate Representative. Following consultations with the parties, troop-contributing countries and the force commanders of existing United Nations peace-keeping operations, 50 military officers were temporarily detached from those operations to constitute the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan (UNGOMAP).

The first review of the Mission's operations was conducted by Mr. Cordovez at Geneva from 24 to 26 May, followed by a broader review when he travelled to the area from 29 June to 10 July. On the latter occasion, he met at Islamabad with the President and the Foreign Minister and, at Kabul, he had meetings with the President, the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister. He held extensive consultations with the two Governments on compliance with the obligations of the Agreements, as well as with UNGOMAP. He also met with USSR military authorities in the Afghan capital who briefed him on the status of the troop withdrawal, and he visited Teheran, where he kept the Foreign Minister of Iran informed of developments.

According to the report, complaints of alleged violations were filed by both parties with UNGOMAP. Those from Afghanistan included allegations of border crossings of men and material from Pakistan, cross-border firings, the continued presence in Pakistan of training camps and arms depots for Afghan opposition groups, restrictions placed on refugees who wished to return, political activities hostile to Afghanistan and violations of its airspace by Pakistani aircraft. Those from Pakistan included allegations of violation of its airspace, bombing incidents, acts of sabotage and hostile political activities by Afghanistan. The complaints were investigated and the results were conveyed to both parties in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Agreements.

With a view to enhancing the capacity of the United Nations to meet the needs of humanitarian and economic assistance programmes and to ensure a co-ordinated approach in that regard, the Secretary-General appointed Sadruddin Aga Khan as Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan (for details, see PART THREE, Chapter III).

In the Secretary-General's view, the signing of the Geneva Agreements was a major step in the efforts to bring peace to Afghanistan. They laid the basis for the exercise by all Afghans of their right to self-determination and their implementation was essential to the achievement of those objectives. The Secretary-General regretted that the signatories were preoccupied with violations by the other side and considered it imperative that they abide fully by the Agreements' provisions. He also expressed concern that continued fighting in Afghanistan was resulting in heavy casualties and that the suffering of the Afghan people, as well as the economic and social problems of neighbouring countries related to the presence of refugees, had not been brought to an end. A full political settlement was, therefore, urgent.

Concluding, he stated that the United Nations remained committed to promoting conditions under which the Afghans could realize their goals of peace in their country and stability in the region, and urged all Governments to support those endeavours.

In a 14 April letter to the Security Council President,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of the conclusion of the Geneva Agreements and the appointments he had made as required under them. He informed Council members that he intended to detach up to 50 military officers from existing United Nations operations and deploy them as inspection teams in Afghanistan and Pakistan. He requested the President to bring the matter to the Council members' attention for their concurrence with those measures. On 25 April,⁽⁶⁾ the President conveyed the members' provisional agreement to the proposals pending formal consideration and a decision by the Council.

Iran, on 13 April,⁽⁷⁾ stated that the exclusion of the Mujahedin (freedom fighters), refugees and Muslim people of Afghanistan from a process of determination of the destiny of Afghanistan was unacceptable. It called for unconditional withdrawal of what it termed occupation troops from Afghanistan and the establishment of a truly representative Government.

The USSR, on 27 April,⁽⁸⁾ said that it considered compliance with the Geneva Agreements the most important condition for restoring peace in Afghanistan and its consolidation as an independent, non-aligned and neutral State. Afghanistan and the USSR transmitted on 15 May⁽⁹⁾ a joint statement that, in conformity with the Agreements, the withdrawal of the Soviet troops, which had begun that same day, would be carried out within nine months and that one half of the contingent would be withdrawn by 15 August. On 15 June,⁽¹⁰⁾ the USSR forwarded a letter from its Foreign Minister accusing Pakistan of violating its obligations under the Geneva Agreements. He cited what he called irrefutable facts, including the transfer of weapons from Pakistan to Afghanistan and military training of insurgents by foreign instructors who had entered Afghanistan from that country. He said if Pakistan's actions were not brought into line with its obligations under the Agreements, a situation could develop which might undermine efforts that had led to their conclusion.

Pakistan, on 23 June,⁽¹¹⁾ stated that investigations had revealed that the Soviet charges were unfounded. It accused Afghanistan of violations of its territory in contravention of the Agreements. On 1 July,⁽¹²⁾ the USSR stated that, in spite of Pakistan's assertions to the contrary, armaments and armed opposition groups continued to enter Afghanistan from that country. It charged Pakistan with encouraging Afghan opposition activities aimed at disrupting the return of the Afghan refugees to their homeland.

On 28 June,⁽¹³⁾ Afghanistan accused Pakistan of having increased the shipment of arms into Afghanistan and of equipping and inciting the extremists against the Afghan Government, in violation of the Geneva Agreements.

On 6 July,⁽¹⁴⁾ Afghanistan forwarded a statement from its Foreign Ministry criticizing what it called hostile pronouncements made by Pakistan's President at an international conference in Islamabad. It said that by making such assertions, he was further complicating the situation in Afghanistan. On the following day,⁽¹⁵⁾ it conveyed a 27 June statement to the Afghan Parliament by its Foreign Minister accusing Pakistan of continuing to violate the Geneva Agreements.

Refuting the allegations, Pakistan, on 14 July,⁽¹⁶⁾ stated that it was committed to abide by the provisions of the Agreements and that it rejected Afghanistan's efforts to implicate it in its internal affairs. Afghanistan, on 8 August,⁽¹⁷⁾ described Pakistan's response as an attempt to mislead the United Nations and world public opinion. On 21 July,⁽¹⁸⁾ Afghanistan drew attention to the activities of elements linked with the Peshawar-based alliance of seven (liberation movements), which, it said, had resulted in tragedies among the inhabitants of Kabul and other cities.

Afghanistan, on 14 November,⁽¹⁹⁾ accused Pakistan of interfering in its internal affairs and of hindering the repatriation of Afghan refugees. On 23 November,⁽²⁰⁾ Afghanistan proposed the convening of an international conference on its neutrality and demilitarization, under the aegis of the United Nations. It also forwarded a 29 October statement⁽²¹⁾ by its President to the Afghan Parliament, on comprehensive initiatives for peace.

Pakistan, on 18 November,⁽²²⁾ while reaffirming its commitment to the Agreements, called the Afghan allegations unfounded. Further, on 19 December⁽²³⁾ it opposed Afghanistan's proposal for an international conference. Support for the convening of such a conference was expressed by the USSR in a statement of 2 December.⁽²⁴⁾

Draft by President (A/43/L.20); agenda item 30.

In pursuance of the mandate given to him by the Assembly, the Secretary-General met in New York with Afghanistan's Prime Minister on 7 November and with the Chairman of the Alliance of Afghan Mujahedin on 10 November, assuring them of his determination to encourage and facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement as called for by the Assembly.

UN assistance programmes

Afghanistan, on 29 April,⁽²⁵⁾ requested the inclusion of an additional item on economic and social assistance to Afghanistan in the provisional agenda of the 1988 first regular session of the Economic and Social Council, and asked for an urgent discussion of the item by the Council. On 5 May,⁽²⁶⁾ Pakistan opposed that proposal, calling it premature, and said it complicated the negotiating process for an interim arrangement acceptable to all the Afghan parties. Afghanistan, on 11 May,⁽²⁷⁾ called Pakistan's objection politically motivated.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1988/52 of 26 July, urged Member States to contribute to the United Nations effort to assist the people of Afghanistan. Welcoming the Secretary-General's initiative in that regard, it supported the efforts of the Co-ordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan and requested all specialized agencies and United Nations bodies to participate actively.

Iran-Iraq armed conflict

On 20 August 1988, a cease-fire was secured by the United Nations in the eight-year Iran-Iraq war, followed five days later by a first round of direct negotiations between the two nations. Second and third rounds were held in October and November.

Earlier, on 17 July, Iran accepted Security Council resolution 598(1987)⁽²⁸⁾ by which the Council had outlined a peace plan for the region. On 9 August 1988, by resolution 619(1988), the Council established the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group to verify, confirm and supervise the cease-fire and troop withdrawal.

In October, the Secretary-General reported that, although the cease-fire was holding well, there was a pressing need for its consolidation and the earliest possible withdrawal of troops to internationally recognized boundaries.

The Security Council addressed various aspects of the conflict throughout 1988. In March, deploring the escalating hostilities, it urged the two sides to send special emissaries to New York for urgent consultations. In May and August, after considering a total of four expert reports on chemical weapons use in the conflict, the Council condemned their use and decided that any future use would prompt effective measures by the Council in accordance with the United Nations Charter (resolutions 612(1988) and 620(1988)).

Charges of psychological and other abuses of prisoners of war prompted the Secretary-General to send a specialist mission to Iran and Iraq in late July to evaluate the situation.

The General Assembly, at its resumed forty-second session on 19 September, by decision 42/466, included in the draft agenda of its forty-third (1988) session an item on the consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq, but did not discuss the matter. In suspending the forty-third session on 22 December, the Assembly decided to retain the item on its agenda for consideration when it resumed that session in 1989 (decision 43/459).

Communications received by the United Nations from the two sides in the first quarter of the year showed no reduction in hostilities. Attacks were reported along the battle fronts, on civilian population centres and on commercial shipping in the Persian Gulf.

Iran complained of violations of international law and its territorial sea and airspace by United States ships and aircraft in the Gulf. Similar charges were made against an Italian ship, while Kuwait protested that Iran had violated its territorial waters in an attack on its fishing boats.

On 18 March; the Secretary-General called on Iran and Iraq to exercise utmost restraint and to end incidents causing loss of innocent lives. He invited the Presidents of both countries to send special emissaries to New York for intensive consultations. On 22 March, he said he was appalled at the sharp escalation of the conflict.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 March, Security Council members held consultations on the intensified hostilities and the Council President made the following statement on their behalf:⁽²⁹⁾

Meeting number. SC 2798.

“The members of the Security Council express grave concern over the fact that the tragic conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq continues and has entered its eighth year.

“They strongly deplore the escalation of the hostilities between these two countries, particularly the attacks against civilian targets and cities that have taken a heavy toll in human lives and caused vast material destruction, in spite of the declared readiness of the belligerent parties to cease such attacks.

"The members of the Council insist that the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq immediately cease all such attacks and desist forthwith from all acts that lead to the escalation of the conflict and which thereby create further obstacles in the way of implementation of resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987 and undermine the efforts of the Security Council to put an early end to this conflict in accordance with the resolution.

"They are convinced that the recent escalation has demonstrated the need for full and rapid implementation of resolution 598(1987).

"Determined to bring the Conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq to an early end, the members of the Council reaffirm their strong commitment to the implementation of resolution 598(1987) as an integrated whole, which is the only basis for a comprehensive, just, honourable and lasting settlement of the conflict.

"They express grave concern that resolution 598(1987), which has a mandatory character, has not yet been implemented.

"The members of the Council take note of the statement made by the Secretary-General to them on 14 March 1988. They encourage him to continue his efforts as endorsed by the Council to secure implementation of resolution 598(1987) and, in this connection, support his intention to invite the Governments of the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq to send, at the earliest possible date, their foreign ministers, or another senior official, as a special emissary to New York to enter into urgent and intensive consultations with the Secretary-General. They request the Secretary-General to submit to the Security Council, within three weeks, the report on his consultations with the two sides.

"The members of the Council reaffirm their determination, in accordance with paragraph 10 of resolution 598(1987), to consider promptly, in the light of the Secretary-General's renewed efforts to secure implementation of that resolution, further effective steps to ensure compliance with it."

Communications received during April-August continued to contain allegations of attacks by Iran and Iraq against the other's civilian targets, including the use of chemical weapons (see below).

Iran also charged Kuwait with co-operation with Iraq by allowing its airspace to be used by the latter. The United States accused Iran of attacking its ships in international waters, while Iraq complained of United States attacks on its oil platforms and violations of its sea and air space. Iran also charged France, Italy and the United Kingdom with various violations of international law by their ships in the Gulf, while Iran was accused of attacking Kuwaiti fishermen.

Use of chemical weapons

From January to June, numerous communications continued to be received by the Secretary-General concerning allegations of chemical warfare in the Iran-Iraq conflict. Iran accused Iraq of using chemical weapons against its military, civilian and refugee populations, while Iraq charged that Iran had carried out chemical weapons attacks against its military personnel. In response to requests from both sides for an investigation into the situation,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General dispatched expert missions to the two countries in late March/early April and again in July and August. Following consideration of their reports, the Security Council vigorously condemned the continued use of chemical weapons.

Specialist's report (April). On 25 April, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report⁽³¹⁾ of a medical specialist who had investigated the allegations during visits to Iran from 28 to 31 March and Iraq from 7 to 11 April 1988. The investigation was a continuation of those conducted in 1984,⁽³²⁾ 1985,⁽³³⁾ 1986⁽³⁴⁾ and 1987.⁽³⁵⁾ The Secretary-General said the specialist had concluded that chemical weapons continued to be used in the conflict, adding urgency to the concern that such use could escalate and undermine the 1925 Geneva Protocol prohibiting the use of such weapons.

The report covered the mission's terms of reference, review of documentation, methodology, investigations, summary of findings, conclusions and appendices, and was subsequently augmented by an addendum on civilian and military patients examined at hospitals in Iran and Iraq.⁽³⁶⁾

The specialist reported that in Iran he found several casualties resulting from mustard-gas attacks and that, compared with previous years, there had been an increase in both the number of victims and the severity of the injuries sustained. There also appeared to be a higher proportion of civilians among those affected. He also stated that all the casualties of chemical attacks he found in Iraq were military personnel.

A total of 66 patients were examined at Teheran, while 39 were seen at the Al Rasheed Military Hospital at Baghdad. A cursory medical observation was also made of the injuries suffered by 72 additional patients in the same Iraqi hospital. The symptoms and signs indicating the use of mustard gas (yperite) included conjunctivitis, skin lesions, respiratory insufficiency, chemical tracheobronchitis and leukopenia.

The specialist concluded that the patients he had examined had been affected by chemical weapons whose main aggressive chemical was mustard gas. While in some cases in Iran an acetylcholine esterase-inhibiting substance had also been used, there was no conclusive evidence that it had been used in Iraq.

In a 27 April letter,⁽³⁷⁾ Iran expressed disappointment that the report failed to address the task for which the dispatch of the mission was requested. It said that despite repeated requests, the team did not visit Halabja where, it alleged, the most extensive use of chemical weapons against civilians had taken place.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

The Security Council met on 9 May pursuant to an agreement reached during prior consultations. It unanimously adopted resolution 612(1988).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of 25 April 1988 of the mission dispatched by the Secretary-General to investigate allegations of the use of chemical weapons in the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq,

Dismayed by the mission's conclusions that chemical weapons continue to be used in the conflict and that their use has been on an even more intensive scale than before,

1. Affirms the urgent necessity of strict observance of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925;

2. Condemns vigorously the continued use of chemical weapons in the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq contrary to the obligations under the Geneva Protocol;

3. Expects both sides to refrain from the future use of chemical weapons in accordance with their obligations under the Geneva Protocol;

4. Calls upon all States to continue to apply or to establish strict control of the export to the parties to the conflict of chemical products serving for the production of chemical weapons;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter and expresses its determination to review the implementation of the present resolution.

Security Council resolution 612(1988)

9 May 1988 Meeting 2812 Adopted unanimously

3-nation draft 18/19869).

On 16 May,⁽³⁸⁾ Iran expressed displeasure at the failure of the Council to acknowledge that Iraq was responsible for the use of chemical weapons, since such use had been documented in several United Nations expert reports and Council statements. Accusing the United Nations of delaying the specialist mission's dispatch, Iran claimed it was sent after the effects on the people and the environment had worn off and a large number of the wounded had by then died or been discharged from the hospitals.

From mid-May to early July, further charges of chemical warfare were made by both Iran and Iraq. While Iran again complained of attacks on its military and civilian populations, Iraq accused Iran of chemical attacks on its military forces.

On 28 June, the Secretary-General announced that he was sending, at the Security Council's request, another mission, composed of three members, to investigate further allegations of chemical weapons use against Iran. Iran had also made such requests on 19⁽³⁹⁾ and 25 May⁽⁴⁰⁾ and 27 June.⁽⁴¹⁾ After Iraq made a similar request on 3 July⁽⁴²⁾ for the mission to investigate Iran's use of chemical weapons against it, he requested the same mission to visit Iraq.

Specialists' reports (July and August). Two reports on the further use of chemical weapons were submitted to the Security Council in July. On 20 July,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a report by two specialists who had investigated further allegations from Iran during a mission to the country from 1 to 5 July. The specialists concluded that chemical weapons continued to be used against Iranian forces and that their use had been intensifying and had become more frequent.

The report covered the mission's terms of reference, review of documentation, methodology, investigations, summary of findings, conclusions and appendices, and was subsequently augmented by an addendum on the 44 patients examined by the specialists. Symptoms and signs indicating the use of mustard gas included lesions of erythema, darkening of the skin, blisters and respiratory lesions. In the Hamid area south-west of Ahvaz, chemical analysis of soil samples and weapon fragments had shown evidence of mustard gas. The experts also concluded that bombs similar to those used in 1984, 1986 and 1987 had again been directed against Iranian forces.

On 25 July,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a second report by the same two specialists who had investigated further allegations from Iraq during a mission to the country on 10 and 11 July. They concluded that chemical weapons were used against Iraqi forces.

The specialists were able to determine conclusively that the nine Iraqi soldiers they examined at the hospitals in As Sulaymaniyah and Baghdad were affected by mustard gas. Further, fragments of mortar grenades discovered after an alleged Iranian attack at As Sulaymaniyah were found to contain mustard gas. An examination of mortar ammunition claimed to have been captured from the Iranian forces confirmed that they were designed to be filled with solid or liquid material which could include chemical agents. On the basis of their current investigation, the specialists said that the number of casualties and the extent of their injuries seemed less extensive than previously found.

On 3 August,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Iran requested the Secretary-General to send another expert team to investigate an alleged chemical bombardment the preceding day on the Sheikh Othman District in Oshnaviyeh. On 5 August, the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the Council members considered that, in the light of resolution 612(1988), any new allegation ought to be investigated. Consequently, the Secretary-General dispatched three specialists who investigated the allegations during a mission to Iran from 12 to 14 August. Their report⁽⁴⁶⁾ was forwarded to the Council on 19 August. Based on the evidence obtained, the specialists concluded that mustard gas had been used in the air attack, affecting Iranian civilians. An analysis of air and soil samples from Oshnaviyeh had confirmed the presence of that gas.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

Pursuant to an agreement reached in prior consultations, the Security Council met on 26 August to consider the mission reports. It unanimously adopted resolution 620(1988).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 612(1988) of 9 May 1988,

Having considered the reports of 20 and 25 July and of 2 and 19 August 1988 of the missions dispatched by the Secretary-General to investigate allegations of the use of chemical weapons in the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq,

Deeply dismayed by the missions' conclusions that there had been continued use of chemical weapons in the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq and that such use against Iranians had become more intense and frequent,

Profoundly concerned by the danger of possible use of chemical weapons in the future,

Bearing in mind the current negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and on their destruction,

Determined to intensify its efforts to end all use of chemical weapons in violation of international obligations now and in the future,

1. Condemns resolutely the use of chemical weapons in the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, in violation of obligations under the Protocol for the prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and in defiance of its" resolution 612(1988);

2. Encourages the Secretary-General to carry out promptly investigations in response to allegations brought to his attention by any Member State concerning the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxic weapons that may constitute a violation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol or other relevant rules of customary international law, in order to ascertain the facts of the matter, and to report the results;

3. Calls upon all States to continue to apply, to establish or to strengthen strict control of the export of chemical products serving for the production of chemical weapons, in particular to parties to a conflict, when it is established or when there is substantial reason to believe that they have used chemical weapons in violation of international obligations;

4. Decides to consider immediately, taking into account the investigations of the Secretary-General, appropriate and effective measures in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, should there be any future use of chemical weapons in violation of international law, wherever and by whomever committed.

Treatment of prisoners of war

The treatment of prisoners of war (POWs) was taken up in a number of letters to the Secretary-General.

Iraq informed the Secretary-General on 10 March 1988⁽⁴⁷⁾ that, on 16 December 1987, the Iranian news agency had reported that Iran had released 450 Iraqi POWs who had sought political asylum in Iran. Iraq charged Iran with using mental and physical pressure, in violation of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (third Geneva Convention), to force the POWs to abandon their faith and fight against Iraq. On 28 March,⁽⁴⁸⁾ Iraq accused Iran of hindering ICRC from discharging its functions under the same Convention. Iraq said that tens of thousands of Iraqi POWs were in need of protection under that Convention and called on the Secretary-General to dispatch a mission to investigate the fate of Iraqi POWs.

On 2 July,⁽⁴⁹⁾ Iraq transmitted a note verbale from ICRC informing Iraq that during its visits to 15 Iranian camps and 6 hospitals in 1987, it was not given access to 7,327 previously registered POWs or to thousands of others whom it knew were being held in Iran. Such violations, Iraq said, required the Security Council's attention. Iraq also repeated its call for the dispatch of an investigative mission to examine the conditions of Iraqi POWs in Iran. On 7 July,⁽⁵⁰⁾ Iraq forwarded a film showing that the remains of a considerable number of its POWs had been found in the Mawat region, making it clear that Iran had killed, mutilated and burned them after tying up some of them.

Iran accused Iraq on 11 July⁽⁵¹⁾ of violating the third Geneva Convention in respect of Iranian civilians interned in Iraq as POWs and of Iranian POWs in that country. It listed 10 instances of their ill-treatment by Iraq and requested the United Nations to investigate.

On 17 October,⁽⁵²⁾ Iraq transmitted a memorandum to ICRC at Baghdad concerning the exchange of POWs. It informed ICRC of its agreement that the exchange of POWs should begin on condition that Iran reciprocated, adding that since the exchange was a humanitarian matter and in response to an ICRC request, Iraq's agreement was unrelated to the other issues referred to in resolution 598(1987).⁽²⁸⁾

Iran, on 21 October,⁽⁵³⁾ informed ICRC that it was prepared to repatriate POWs in accordance with resolution 598(1987) and the Secretary-General's implementation plan and to continue the repatriation of disabled, wounded and sick POWs on humanitarian grounds, should Iraq reciprocate.

On 8 November,⁽⁵⁴⁾ Iraq told ICRC that it was prepared to begin immediately repatriation of all sick and wounded POWs on humanitarian grounds and that it would begin to return POWs who were already registered. It emphasized the need to commence registration of non-registered POWs in accordance with the arrangements proposed by ICRC. On 24 November,⁽⁵⁵⁾ Iraq announced the conclusion of an agreement between Iran, Iraq and ICRC on the exchange of 1,158 Iraqi and 411 Iranian sick or wounded POWs.

Iran, on 29 November,⁽⁵⁶⁾ complained to ICRC that Iraq had violated the Memorandum of Understanding by refusing to repatriate 22 sick and wounded POWs on the first day of exchange and that it had not repatriated a total of 67 such POWs. Iran said it was ready to repatriate all sick and wounded Iraqi POWs.

On 28 November,⁽⁵⁷⁾ Iraq informed ICRC of a report by the Iranian news agency that Iran had suspended the transfer of sick and disabled Iraqi POWs the preceding day and that those transfers would not be resumed until after the release of Iranian POWs whom Iraq had not freed during the initial phase of the prisoner-exchange operation. Iraq said that its agreement with Iran stipulated that the transfer of POWs would be made daily on a reciprocal basis and that the operation would be completed within 10 days beginning on 22 November. Iraq accused Iran of delaying the start of the operation by two days and of trying to reduce the number of POWs agreed on for each transfer; it said Iran had suspended the exchange of POWs after what it called its fraudulent moves became apparent.

On 7 December,⁽⁵⁸⁾ Iraq transmitted a letter to ICRC in reply to Iran's allegation of Iraqi violation of the agreement, accusing Iran of duplicity and of misleading Iranian and world public opinion.

On 10 December,⁽⁵⁹⁾ Iran said while it had presented to ICRC a list of unregistered Iraqi sick and wounded POWs at the stipulated time, Iraq had not done so in respect of Iranian POWs and had thus violated the Memorandum of Understanding for the second time.

Report of the mission on POWs. On 24 August,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a report by three specialists who had enquired into the situation of POWs being held in the two countries. Both Iran⁽⁶¹⁾ and Iraq^{(49),(50)} had requested him to send such a mission.

The Secretary-General said he had dispatched the mission to those countries as an extraordinary measure and in accordance with his responsibility under the United Nations Charter. Its task was to ascertain the facts and inquire into concerns expressed by both countries regarding the condition of their POWs, with a view to ensuring the observance of international law. The Secretary-General pointed out, however, that important developments had taken place since the mission's dispatch, including a cease-fire (see below), and that the negotiations that would follow were expected to lead to lasting peace between the two countries. He said he was encouraged by the mission's conclusion that on the issue of repatriation the views of the parties were convergent and, in substance, consistent with the third Geneva Convention.

The specialists visited Iran from 24 to 30 July and Iraq from 31 July to 5 August. In Iran, they visited five POW camps and found the prisoners' material conditions, on the whole, acceptable, although on some points their further improvement was desirable. They were, however, concerned at the prisoners' psychological condition and said they had faced emotional stress which required further observation. An important factor affecting the POWs' state of mind was the general atmosphere in the camps, resulting from the religious and political influence of the Cultural Committee, and they recommended that the latter's role and activities be reconsidered.

Referring to Iraq's concerns about the 7,327 POWs who were registered by ICRC prior to 1984 but not seen by it since then, and the 20,000 to 30,000 missing who had not been registered by ICRC as POWs, the specialists said they had established that, apart from POWs who had died and could be accounted for, Iran knew the whereabouts and current status of those other prisoners and was able to make the information available. They believed that the existing state of affairs would change after the cease-fire, but said that further diplomatic efforts in that regard were needed.

In Iraq, the specialists found the material conditions of POWs they visited generally acceptable, although improvements were necessary in some instances. While psychological pressure on Iranian POWs was said to have increased, there was no evidence of systematic indoctrination. The specialists noted that the POW camps were visited regularly by ICRC whose recommendations were generally complied with, and said that the problem of non-registration of POWs was a legacy of the past which Iraq was now ready to solve. They credited Iraq for allowing ICRC to register every prisoner in its camps and were disappointed that considerations of reciprocity had again brought that process to a halt. The mission reported that the main problem with regard to the civilian internees resulted from the uncertainty of their future in Iraq, Iran or wherever they would be allowed to live. A number of them had not been interned in civilian camps but were being treated as POWs. Any reproach to Iraq for keeping them in captivity had met with the argument that they had been fighting against Iraq. As they were being treated like POWs, they were expected to be repatriated as such.

Both Iran and Iraq informed the mission that they agreed to a key role for ICRC; that repatriation would be carried out as quickly as possible; that no one should be forcibly repatriated; and that it would be necessary for some prisoners to find third countries of asylum.

Declaration of a cease-fire

By a 17 July letter from its President,⁽⁶²⁾ Iran conveyed its acceptance of Security Council resolution 598(1987),⁽²⁸⁾ which had outlined a peace plan for the region, including a cease-fire, an end to all military actions, withdrawal of forces to internationally recognized boundaries, United Nations observers to supervise those actions and an impartial body to inquire into the responsibility for the conflict. President Seyed Ali Khamenei stated that his country was accepting the 1987 resolution because of the importance Iran attached to saving human lives and to establishing justice and regional and international peace and security. Also, the war, which had been started by Iraq on 22 September 1980, had reached unprecedented dimensions, drawing other countries into it and engulfing innocent civilians—a manifestation of which was the shooting down of Iran Air flight 655 (see below).

Despite a 19 July call from the Secretary-General and the Security Council urging both sides to exercise maximum restraint and refrain from any act that might endanger the Secretary-General's effort, further incidents of fighting continued to be reported.

On 19 July,⁽⁶³⁾ Iran charged that on that day Iraq had bombarded its industrial installations at Bushehr, Mahshahr and Imam Khomeini, killing and wounding workers; it also accused Iraq of violating its airspace. The following day,⁽⁶⁴⁾ it reported that Iraq had carried out ground and air attacks against Iranian targets. On 21 July,⁽⁶⁵⁾ Iran complained that Iraq on 19 July had also attacked the Piranshahr and Mehran areas.

On 25 July,⁽⁶⁶⁾ Iran informed the Secretary-General of Iraqi artillery attacks against Sardasht on 23 July, killing five and wounding 15, and its bombardment of the Kazand-e-Gharb city on 24 July, killing seven and wounding 50. The following day,⁽⁶⁷⁾ it charged Iraq with initiating attacks in its north-western region at a time when the Iranian Foreign Minister was visiting New York to announce his country's willingness to co-operate with the Secretary-General to facilitate immediate implementation of resolution 598(1987). On 27 July 1988,⁽⁶⁸⁾ Iran complained of Iraqi aerial attacks during the preceding three days against civilian targets, wounding students and villagers and damaging crops and fields.

Iraq, on 18 July,⁽⁶⁹⁾ transmitted a statement issued by the General Command of the Iranian Armed Forces concerning resolution 598(1987). Through a statement of its Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, on 19 July 1988,⁽⁷⁰⁾ it pointed out that the General Command statement affirmed Iran's resolve to mobilize its military capabilities for the purpose of continuing its aggression against Iraq. It pointed out that while Iraq had accepted resolution 598(1987) upon its adoption, Iran had done so after rejecting it for a whole year. On 20 July,⁽⁷¹⁾ Iraq forwarded a letter from its Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister proposing practical steps for achieving a comprehensive and durable peace in the shortest possible time, in the light of developments following Iran's acceptance of the 1987 resolution.

On 6 August 1988,⁽⁷²⁾ Iraq transmitted a message from its President, declaring readiness for a cease-fire on the condition that Iran declared unequivocally and officially its agreement to enter into direct negotiations with Iraq, leading to the implementation of all the provisions of resolution 598(1987). If Iran refused to agree to such negotiations, it alone would be responsible for rejecting the path of peace.

On 7 August,⁽⁷³⁾ Iran conveyed its acceptance of direct talks to take place after the cease-fire and said that, having accepted resolution 598(1987) unconditionally, it considered any insistence on holding talks before the cease-fire as a pre-condition for the implementation of that resolution; the subsequent Iraqi position had signalled its reconsideration of that pre-condition.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council again took up the Iran-Iraq situation on 8 August, inviting both States to participate in the discussions without the right to vote.

Meeting number. SC 2823.

The Secretary-General informed the Council⁽⁷⁴⁾ that as a result of his diplomatic efforts towards achieving implementation of its 1987 resolution,⁽²⁸⁾ and in exercise of his mandate, he was calling on Iran and Iraq to observe a cease-fire and to discontinue all military action on land, at sea and in the air as of 0300 hours GMT on 20 August 1988. Both parties assured him that they would observe the cease-fire and agreed to the deployment of United Nations observers at that time. He was inviting Iran and Iraq to direct talks under his auspices at Geneva on 25 August.

Noting that military activity had decreased in the preceding few days, the Secretary-General appealed to all concerned to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from any hostile activity before the cease-fire came into effect.

On the same day, the Council President made the following statement:⁽⁷⁵⁾

"The Security Council welcomes the statement just made by the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of its resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987 on the Iran/Iraq conflict.

"The Council endorses the Secretary-General's announcement that the cease-fire demanded in the resolution shall come into effect at 0300 (GMT) on 20 August 1988, and that direct talks under his auspices between the two parties shall begin on 25 August.

"The Council further endorses the appeal of the Secretary-General to both parties to exercise the utmost restraint and expects them to refrain from all hostile activities in the period before the entry into effect of the cease-fire.

"The Council reiterates its determination that its resolution 598(1987) be fully implemented as an integral whole and reaffirms its full support for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to this end."

Iran, on 8 August,⁽⁷⁶⁾ stated that it was prepared to refrain from all military actions beginning that same day.

Appointment of a Personal Representative

On 1 September, the Secretary-General appointed Jan K. Eliasson (Sweden) as his Personal Representative on issues pertaining to the implementation of resolution 598(1987). From 1980 to 1986, Mr. Eliasson had accompanied Olof Palme (Sweden), who was during that period the Secretary-General's Special Representative dealing with the Iran-Iraq conflict, on missions to both countries.

UN Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

In August 1988, the Security Council established a team of unarmed United Nations observers to supervise the cease-fire between Iran and Iraq and the withdrawal of forces to internationally recognized boundaries, as called for in resolution 598(1987).

Report of the Secretary General (August). In a 7 August 1988 report,⁽⁷⁷⁾ the Secretary-General recommended that, as soon as the cease-fire date had been set, the Council establish an observer team, to be known as the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIMOG), which would also assist the parties as might be mutually agreed.

As set out in resolution 598(1987), UNIMOG's terms of reference would be: to establish with the parties agreed cease-fire lines; to monitor compliance with the cease-fire; to investigate alleged violations and restore the situation if a violation had taken place; to prevent, through negotiation, any other change in the status quo; to supervise, verify and confirm the withdrawal of all forces to the internationally recognized boundaries; and to obtain the agreement of the parties to other arrangements which, pending negotiation of a comprehensive settlement, could help reduce tension and build confidence between them, such as the establishment of areas of separation of forces, limitations on the number and calibre of weapons, and patrolling of certain sensitive areas in or near Shatt al-Arab.

The Secretary-General reported that on 20 July he had announced the sending of a technical team to Iran and Iraq to work out the modalities for the dispatch of United Nations observers. The team was led by Lieutenant-General Martin Vadset, Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), and included a senior political adviser, a civilian logistics expert and four military observers of UNTSO. It was assisted by small teams which had been stationed at Baghdad and Teheran since 1984. During its visit to both capitals, the team held detailed discussions relevant to the establishment and deployment of UNIMOG.

On the basis of General Vadset's report, the Secretary-General estimated that UNIMOG would need up to 350 military observers, in addition to military support staff and civilian administrative and logistics personnel. The Group would consist of a headquarters and two detachments, one in each country.

Outlining his plan of action for deploying UNIMOG, the Secretary-General said the duration of its deployment would depend on progress made in implementing other aspects of resolution 598(1987); subject to this, he suggested that UNIMOG be stationed initially in the area for six months. He estimated the cost of UNIMOG for that period at approximately $74 million, to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 9 August 1988, the Security Council met, in accordance with an understanding reached during prior consultations, to consider the Secretary-General's report. Iran and Iraq were invited to participate in the debate without the right to vote.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 619(1988).

The Security Council,
Recalling its resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General contained in document S/20093 on the implementation of paragraph 2 of resolution 598(1987) of the Security Council;

2. Decides to set up immediately, under its authority, a United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to this effect, in accordance with his above-mentioned report;

3. Also decides that the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group shall be established for a period of six months, unless the Council decides otherwise;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments.

Security Council resolution 619(1988)

9 August 1988 Meeting 2824 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20097).

Report of the Secretary-General (October). Responding to resolution 619(1988), the Secretary-General submitted on 25 October an interim report⁽⁷⁸⁾ on UNIMOG during its first two months of operation.

He reported that the cease-fire came into effect at 0300 hours GMT on 20 August. By that time, 307 United Nations military observers and the main elements of the Canadian signals unit were in Iran and Iraq and 51 patrols were deployed on the first day. Those patrols had the double task of verifying the forward-defended localities (FDLs) occupied by the two sides when the cease-fire came into effect and of defusing confrontations resulting from actual or alleged breaches of the cease-fire. Because of the length of the cease-fire line (some 1,400 kilometres) and the nature of the terrain, ranging from rugged mountains in the north to desert and marshy swamps in the south, it took UNIMOG some time to verify some limited areas along the whole length of the line. In some areas there was disagreement between the two sides about where the FDLs were on 20 August. However, in general, UNIMOG succeeded quickly in establishing the necessary data-base to carry out its task of monitoring compliance with the cease-fire.

Before the cease-fire came into effect, the Secretary-General had proposed to the two sides that a number of activities be considered as violations. As of 24 October, UNIMOG had received 1,072 complaints of alleged violations, only 235 of which had been confirmed as such.

The Secretary-General concluded that although there had been some serious breaches, the cease-fire was holding well and there had been no fighting for over two months. However, he conveyed to the Council his concern that the current state of affairs was inherently unstable. There were points on the cease-fire line where the two sides remained in dangerous proximity; as long as that situation continued, there was danger that fighting could resume. There was, therefore, a pressing need for the current cease-fire to be consolidated and for the earliest possible withdrawal to the internationally recognized boundaries.

From August to mid-December, both Iran and Iraq alleged violations of the cease-fire in numerous communications to the Secretary-General.

Composition

On 9 August,⁽⁷⁹⁾ the Secretary-General proposed to the Council that UNIMOG be composed of contingents from the following Member States: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Poland, Senegal, Sweden, Turkey, Yugoslavia, Zambia. On 10 August,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the President informed the Secretary-General of the Council's agreement.

Also, on 10 August,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention, with its consent, to appoint Major-General Slavco Jovic of Yugoslavia as Chief Military Observer (CMO) of UNIMOG. On 11 August,⁽⁸²⁾ the President conveyed the Council's agreement to that proposal.

On 23 August,⁽⁸³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council President of his intention to add Peru and Uruguay to the list of contingents included in UNIMOG. The President informed him on 26 August⁽⁸⁴⁾ that the Council agreed with his proposal.

As of 24 October, UNIMOG's military strength was 828, made up of contingents from 26 Member States. In addition, 37 military police provided by Ireland and 4 medical orderlies from Austria were to join before the end of October. One hundred and two civilian staff members had been assigned to UNIMOG.

UNIMOG headquarters were at Baghdad and Teheran, with the CMO and his senior staff spending alternate weeks at each capital.

Financing

On 10 August,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Secretary-General requested the General Assembly to include in the agenda of its resumed forty-second session an additional urgent item on the financing of UNIMOG. By decision 42/402 B of 16 August, the Assembly added the item to the list of those allocated to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

On 11 August,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report on the financing of UNIMOG. He estimated the costs for the six-month period from 9 August 1988 to 8 February 1989 at $75.6 million gross ($73.8 million net). In order to act immediately on the Security Council's decision establishing UNIMOG, he had sought the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to enter into commitments not to exceed $3.7 million until the Assembly decided on UNIIMOG financing at its resumed session.

On 16 August, the Chairman of ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation large enough to allow UNIIMOG to initiate and carry on its operations until ACABQ and the Assembly had completed an in-depth review of the Group's financing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 August, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 42/233.

Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

The General Assembly:

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, established pursuant to Security Council resolution 619(1988) of 9 August 1988 for the period from 9 August 1988 to 8 February 1989 inclusive, and the related statement of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Urging all concerned to implement strictly Security Council resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987 in all its parts,

1. Decides to appropriate an amount of $35.7 million, inclusive of the amount of $3.7 million authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, under the terms of General Assembly resolution 42/227 of 21 December 1987, for the operation of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for an initial period of approximately three months of the six-month period authorized by the Security Council beginning 9 August 1988 and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Group;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion;

(a) An amount of $20, 664, 945 for the above-mentioned initial period among the States permanent members of the Security Council in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

(b) An amount of $14, 105, 070 for the above-mentioned initial period among the economically developed Member States which are not permanent members of the Security Council in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

(c) An amount of $912, 492 for the above-mentioned initial period among the economically less developed Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

(d) An amount of $17, 493 for the above-mentioned initial period to the following of the economically less developed Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988: Afghanistan, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Ethiopia, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zimbabwe;

3. Decides that, for the purpose of the present resolution, the term "economically less developed Member States" in paragraph 2 (c) above shall mean all Member States except Australia, Austria, Belgium, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, Sweden, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Member States referred to in paragraphs 2 (a) and (d) above;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for 'in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $700,000 approved for the above-mentioned initial period;

5. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered in accordance with the procedure established under the terms of paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979;

6. Decides to include in the draft agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group";

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly by 1 October 1988, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, an updated report on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, including the status of voluntary contributions;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 42/233

17 August 1988 Meeting 115 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/42/963) without vote. 16 August (meeting 71); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/42/L.26), orally revised, and orally amended by Canada and by Japan; agenda item 145.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). In an October report,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted revised cost estimates for UNIIMOG financing. Based on experience gained since UNIIMOG's commencement, he estimated the cost for establishing the mission and for maintaining it from 9 August 1988 to 8 February 1989 at some $58.7 million gross ($58.1 million net). There were other possible costs of about $20 million relating to the military signals unit assigned to UNIIMOG during its initial phase, for which no agreement had been reached with the Member States concerned.

For the 12 months beyond 8 February 1989, the Secretary-General submitted an estimate of $99.7 million gross ($98.4 million net), on the basis of which the Assembly might authorize him to enter into commitments for UNIIMOG.

The Secretary-General also reported that, in response to the Assembly's invitation, voluntary contributions to UNIIMOG in cash and kind had been received from Iran, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Morocco, New Zealand, Switzerland and the USSR.

ACABQ, in November 1988,⁽⁸⁸⁾ recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into commitments for the 12-month period beginning 8 February 1989 at a monthly rate not to exceed $7,986,000 ($7,889,000 net). His authority would be subject to obtaining ACABQ's prior concurrence for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for each mandate period that might be approved subsequent to 8 February.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/230.

Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the statements of the representative of the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee thereon,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group,

Recalling its resolution 42/233 of 17 August 1988 on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group,

Recognizing that the costs of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Urging all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group in full and on time,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions in cash and in kind have been made to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group by certain Governments,

I

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 42/233 an amount of 18.3 million United States dollars gross, in addition to the 35.7 million dollars gross previously appropriated, for the operation of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for the six-month period as authorized by the Security Council, from 9 August 1988 to 8 February 1989, inclusive;

2. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of 18.3 million dollars among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 42/233; the scale of assessments for the year 1988 shall be applied against a portion thereof, that is 6,854,300 dollars being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1988, and the scale of assessments for the year 1989 shall be applied against the balance, that is 11,445,700 dollars, for the period thereafter;

3. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 200,000 dollars of the amount approved for the period from 9 August 1988 to 8 February 1989, inclusive;

4. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group at a rate not to exceed 7,986,000 dollars gross (7,889,000 dollars net) per month, with prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, for the twelve-month period from 9 February 1989, should the Security Council decide to continue the Military Observer Group beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 619(1988), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and the action to be taken in accordance with paragraph 5 below;

5. Decides that the voluntary contributions received in cash in the amount of 11 million dollars shall be credited as income to the Special Account for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group and that this amount shall be taken into account in calculating the total amount to be assessed on Member States for future mandate periods, including the next mandate period, on the basis of proposals by the Secretary-General and the related recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions consistent with the status of collection of assessed contributions and legal obligations of the Military Observer Group, and requests that a report thereon be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy, bearing in mind the flexibility suggested in paragraph 24 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

7. Emphasizes, in this regard, the important role the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions has to play within its terms of reference;

II

1. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, acceptable to the Secretary-General, in cash, in convertible or readily usable currencies, and in the form of supplies and services;

2. Decides that voluntary contributions in cash made as outright grants shall be considered income to be credited to the Special Account for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group and shall be taken into account in calculating the total amount to be assessed on Member States; to this end, the Secretary-General shall inform the General Assembly in each of his reports on the Military Observer Group of the amount of assessed contributions collected and of such voluntary contributions received; and the Secretary-General shall propose to the Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, when and to what extent the voluntary contributions in cash as outright grants can be deducted from the total amount to be assessed on Member States, taking into consideration the status of collection of assessed contributions and the legal obligations of the Military Observer Group, including reimbursement to troop contributors;

3. Decides also that contributions in cash made available to the Secretary-General on a voluntary basis as advances shall not be considered as income in determining the total amount to be assessed on Member States;

unless otherwise specified by the donor, such contributions shall be deposited in the Suspense Account for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group established under resolution 42/233;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, at the earliest possible stage a report containing technical guidelines relating to the treatment and valuation of voluntary contributions in the form of supplies and services to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group;

5. Agrees, pending the submission of the report called for in paragraph 4 above, that voluntary contributions in the form of supplies and services to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group may be accepted as outright grants; the cash value of such contributions in respect of budgeted requirements may eventually reduce the total amount to be assessed on Member States; in this regard, the Secretary-General should make adequate and timely information available as to what supplies and services will be required in order to facilitate offers of such contributions;

6. Decides that, on receipt of the report requested in paragraph 4 above, the General Assembly will consider appropriate procedures and guidelines for the treatment of voluntary contributions in the form of supplies and services other than as outright grants;

III

1. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake and submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the following studies, taking into account the related proposals of the Advisory Committee, as well as the views expressed by Member States at the forty-third session of the Assembly:

(a) A comprehensive study on how economies of scale could be achieved through administrative co-ordination of the various United Nations peace-keeping operations;

(b) A study proposing procedures and criteria by which Governments may offer the services of civilian personnel for peace-keeping operations, corresponding to those by which military personnel are made available;

(c) An analysis of the problems involved in starting up peace-keeping and related operations and of possible solutions, including the establishment of a fund and the use of the existing Working Capital Fund;

(d) A study on the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of creating a reserve stock of communications and other equipment;

(e) A review, in the context of the report on standard rates of reimbursement, of the background and development of reimbursement to Member States contributing troops to peace-keeping operations;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to make the studies called for in paragraph 1 above available to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations for its information and use;

3. Welcomes the assurances offered, on behalf of the Secretary-General, that careful consideration will be given to the present format and to the amount of information that should be included in future reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group and other peace-keeping operations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session with relevant information in order to enable it to identify any possible anomalies in the composition of the existing groups of Member States on the basis of the criteria set out in Assembly resolution 310I(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and taking into account the views expressed at its forty-second and forty-third sessions.

Shooting down of Iran Air flight 655

In July 1988, after an Iranian civil airliner was shot down by the United States navy in the Persian Gulf, the Security Council expressed deep distress over the tragic loss of life and stressed the need for full implementation of its resolution 598(1987)⁽²⁸⁾ as the only basis for a settlement of the conflict between Iran and Iraq.

On 3 July,⁽⁸⁹⁾ Iran stated that, earlier that day, United States naval forces in the Persian Gulf had shot down an Iranian passenger airliner on a scheduled flight from Bandar-e Abbas, Iran, to Dubai, United Arab Emirates, killing all 290 passengers on board, including 66 children and the crew. Calling the attack an act of aggression and a violation of international law, which threatened civil aviation in the region, Iran expected the United Nations to condemn what it called a massacre of innocent passengers and to prevent future such occurrences.

By a letter of 6 July,⁽⁹⁰⁾ the United States replied that its forces, which had operated in international waters of the Persian Gulf, had exercised their inherent right to self-defence under international law by responding to an attack by Iran. According to its version of the incident, the USS Vincennes, operating on 3 July in international waters, sent a helicopter on a patrol following indications that some dozen Iranian small boats were congregating to attack neutral merchant shipping. A group of Iranian patrol aircraft fired at the helicopter, which turned back to the ship without returning fire. Shortly afterwards, when the USS Vincennes and another United States vessel were approaching the Iranian boats, at least four of them turned towards them and began closing in on them. Both warships then opened fire on the boats, sinking two and damaging a third. In the course of exercising its right to self-defence, the USS Vincennes fired at what it believed to be hostile Iranian military aircraft, after sending repeated warnings to which the aircraft did not respond.

The United States said it regretted the loss of life and was conducting a full investigation. It would also co-operate with any International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) investigation into the incident. On 11 July,⁽⁹¹⁾ the United States announced that its President had decided to offer compensation, on an ex gratia basis, to the families of the victims of the airline incident. The offer, a humanitarian effort consistent with international practice, was made on a voluntary basis and not as a legal liability or obligation. The United States, however, held Iran responsible for the incident, as it had refused for almost a year to accept and implement Security Council resolution 598(1987) while it continued attacks on neutral shipping in the international waters of the Persian Gulf.

The USSR, on 5 July,⁽⁹²⁾ transmitted a statement from the TASS news agency holding the United States command responsible for the airline tragedy, which, it said, demonstrated that it was necessary for the United States naval fleet to leave the Persian Gulf, where peace and security could be ensured by a United Nations naval force. The incident was also deplored in communications from several other countries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Responding to a 5 July request from Iran,⁽⁹³⁾ the Security Council held four meetings between 14 and 20 July to consider the shooting down of the Iranian airliner. The Council invited the following, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Cuba, Gabon, India, Iran, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Romania, Syrian Arab Republic, United Arab Emirates.

At its meeting on 20 July, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 616(1988).

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter dated 5 July 1988 from the Acting Permanent Representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Ali Akbar Velayati and the statement of the representative of the United States of America, Vice-President George Bush,

Deeply distressed that a civil aircraft of Iran Air-scheduled international flight 655-was destroyed in flight over the Strait of Hormuz by a missile fired from the United States warship USS Vincennes,

Stressing the need for a full explanation of the facts of the incident based upon impartial investigation,

Gravely disturbed at the increasing exacerbation of tension in the Gulf region,

1. Expresses its deep distress at the downing of an Iranian civil aircraft by a missile fired from a United States warship and profound regret over the tragic loss of innocent lives;

2. Expresses its sincere condolences to the families of the victims of the tragic incident and to the peoples and Governments of their countries of origin;

3. Welcomes the decision of the International Civil Aviation Organization, in response to the request of the Islamic Republic of Iran, "to institute an immediate fact-finding investigation to determine all relevant facts and technical aspects of the chain of events relating to the flight and destruction of the aircraft" and welcomes the announcements by the United States of America and by the Islamic Republic of Iran of their decisions to co-operate with the International Civil Aviation Organization investigation;

4. Urges all parties to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, signed at Chicago in 1944, to observe to the fullest extent, in all circumstances, the international rules and practices concerning the safety of civil aviation, in particular those of the annexes to that Convention, in order to prevent the recurrence of incidents of the same nature;

5. Stresses the need for a full and rapid implementation of its resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987, as the only basis for a comprehensive, just, honourable and durable settlement of the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, and reaffirms its support to the efforts of the Secretary-General to implement that resolution, committing itself to work with him in the development of his implementation plan.

Security Council resolution 616(1988)

20 July 1988 Meeting 2821 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20038).

Meeting numbers. SC 2818-2821.

In a statement after the vote, the United States called the shooting down of the airliner a tragic accident. Having initiated its own investigation, the United States endorsed the actions by the ICAO Council to commence its own investigation and looked forward to co-operating with ICAO in that regard and in its efforts to improve civil aviation safety in the Persian Gulf in order to prevent a recurrence of similar incidents.

Chapter IV

Middle East

Throughout 1988, the United Nations continued its efforts for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East situation. The year was a decisive one for the Palestinian freedom struggle, as the popular uprising by Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip-known as intifadah-which began in December 1987 against Israeli occupation, gathered momentum.

The United Nations Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights) reported on the deteriorating conditions in the territories. The latter Committee continued to press for the implementation of its original (1976) recommendations -on the rights of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine-and for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices. Although by the end of the year sufficient agreement on the terms for a conference did not exist, there was growing international recognition that such a step was essential for a political solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Accordingly, the General Assembly called again for the convening of such a conference and the participation of all parties to the conflict on an equal footing, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) (resolution 43/176). Meanwhile, the Palestine National Council declared a State of Palestine, a move which the General Assembly acknowledged in December (43/177).

The epicentre of the Middle East crisis, the question of Palestine, continued to depend on solving such complex questions as the status of Jerusalem, the applicability of the 1949 Geneva Conventions to the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and the relationship between Israel and its Arab neighbours. The Assembly reaffirmed that the question of Palestine was the core of the Middle East conflict and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights-including the right to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty.

By two January resolutions, the Security Council demanded that Israel desist from deporting Palestinians from the occupied territories (resolutions 607(1988) and 608(1988)). Human rights conditions in the territories were addressed by the Commission on Human Rights.

The cycle of violence in Lebanon continued, with that country repeatedly requesting the convening of the Security Council in response to armed Israeli incursions into its territory. The Council was, however, unable to take effective action due to the repeated negative vote of a permanent member. The Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as well as the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, deployed since 1974 to secure the Israeli-Syrian border. In July, the Council condemned the abduction on 17 February in southern Lebanon of Lieutenant-Colonel William Higgins, a military observer of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, and demanded his immediate release (618(1988)).

The Council also convened in April after the assassination in Tunis of Khalil al-Wazir, a member of the PLO Executive Committee, and condemned the aggression against the sovereignty of Tunisia, urging Member States to prevent such acts (611(1988)).

In response to the emergency situation in the West Bank and Gaza, the United Nations increased its assistance to the Palestinians. The United Nations Development Programme earmarked an additional $4 million from its Special Programme Resources, and appeals for funds from the international donor community received substantial response. In consultation with PLO, the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) prepared urgent proposals for improving the infrastructure of the refugee camps and for seeking funds of approximately $65 million. UNRWA maintained its assistance to over 2.2 million refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

In February and March 1988, the Assembly considered a move by the United States to close the PLO Observer Mission to the United Nations in New York and urged it to desist from taking action inconsistent with its international legal obligations. In May, the Assembly called on the United States to submit the dispute to arbitration, thereby endorsing an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice.

Middle East situation

The Palestinian uprising, or intifadah, against Israel's occupation of the West Bank, Gaza and East Jerusalem overshadowed the situation in the Middle East and underlined the urgency to find an effective negotiating process towards a solution. However, negotiations remained at a standstill and no consensus was found on the modalities of setting in motion an international peace conference under United Nations auspices.

In December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with the situation, again declaring that peace in the region must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution negotiated under United Nations auspices, and reaffirming its call for the convening of an international conference (resolution 43/54 A). It requested the Security Council to consider measures needed to convene a conference, including establishment of a preparatory committee, and asked the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned to facilitate its convening (43/176).

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1987 request by the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in November 1988 a report⁽²⁾ on developments in the Middle East situation, stating that the intifadah had been a dominating political factor in the region. It was the focus of the Arab Summit Conference at Algiers, Algeria, in June 1988⁽³⁾ and the inspiration behind the November session of the Palestine National Council (PNC) at Algiers.⁽⁴⁾ Born of the frustration and despair of a population that had lived under occupation for more than 20 years, the intifadah was a direct result of the stalemate in the search for a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, and was evidence of the Palestinian people's commitment to exercise their legitimate rights, including self-determination.

The intifadah had also generated an intense debate in Israel about the peace process and Israel's role in the occupied territories. Although sufficient agreement did not exist to convene an international peace conference (see below), the Secretary-General said he was encouraged that all members of the Security Council believed that it was desirable to convene such a conference. However, the loss of life and injuries on both sides during the intifadah compelled consideration of fundamental questions beyond procedural matters.

The time was right for the Council to commit itself to a thorough review of the situation in order to adopt a pragmatic approach, taking into account the concerns and security interests of all parties. The Secretary-General stressed that, with the full support of the Council and the co-operation of the major Powers, progress could be made towards a just and lasting peace. The protracted and explosive nature of the Arab-Israeli conflict made urgent concentrated efforts necessary. The growth of extremism and the alarming proliferation of weapons in the area constituted trends that had to be reversed if disaster was to be averted.

The Secretary-General believed that the recent session of PNC had generated a new momentum in the diplomatic process and offered fresh opportunities for progress. Every gesture towards peace should be nurtured to overcome the deep mistrust felt on all sides. Concluding, he reiterated the fundamental importance of devising a negotiating process that could secure the interests of both Israelis and Arabs and enable them to live in peace with each other.

In an October 1988 report with a later addendum,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted replies from nine Member States to his request for information on steps taken to implement three 1987 Assembly resolutions on the Middle East situation. By two of those resolutions,⁽⁶⁾ the Assembly had called on States to adopt a number of measures concerning relations with Israel and had called on States concerned to abide by the relevant Assembly resolutions. By the third,⁽⁷⁾ it had requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts for the convening of a peace conference and to apprise the Assembly of his consultations (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/54 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 F of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 38/180 A to D of 19 December 1983, 39/146 A to C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 A to C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 A to C of 4 December 1986 and 42/209 A to D of 11 December 1987,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 516(1982) of 1 August 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, 521(1982) of 19 September 1982 and 555(1984) of 12 October 1984 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 31 March 1988, 30 September 1988, 11 October 1988, and 28 November 1988,

Reaffirming the need for continued collective support for the decisions adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which were confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Arab Summit Conference held at Algiers from 7 to 9 June 1988, reiterating its previous resolutions on the question of Palestine and its support for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and considering that the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 C and other relevant resolutions related to the question of Palestine, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region,

Welcoming all efforts contributing towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly on the question of Palestine and on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming also all relevant United Nations resolutions which stipulate that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing Israeli policies involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Stressing once again the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve an early comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms further that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A to D of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A to D of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A to D of 2 December 1986 and 42/66 A to D of 2 December 1987;

4. Considers the Arab Peace Plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, and reiterated by the Extraordinary Summit Conference of the Arab States, held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 7 to 9 August 1985, as well as relevant efforts and action to implement the Fez plan, as an important contribution towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981; determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately; and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory and outside this territory including expropriation, establishment of settlements, annexation and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel, signed on 30 November 1981, and the continued supply of modern arms and matériel to Israel, augmented by substantial economic aid, including the Agreement on the Establishment of a Free Trade Area between the two Governments, have encouraged Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and have had adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and pose a threat to the security of the region;

11. Calls once more upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, financial and technological aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms its call for convening the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of the five permanent members of the Security Council and all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, on an equal footing, and that the Conference should be effective with full authority, in order to achieve a comprehensive and just solution based on the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people in accordance with United Nations resolutions relevant to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East;

14. Endorses the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Proposed peace conference under UN auspices

Throughout 1988, the evolving intifadah and its blood toll on both the Arab and the Israeli sides underscored the urgency of resolving the political impasse through the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1987 request by the Security Council,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in a January 1988 report⁽⁹⁾ to the Council on the situation in the occupied territories (see below, under "Territories occupied by Israel"), stated that the underlying problem in the Middle East could be resolved only through a political settlement responsive both to the Palestinian population's refusal to accept a future under Israeli occupation and to Israel's determination to ensure its security and the well-being of its people. Such a settlement should be based on Council resolutions of 1967⁽¹⁰⁾ and 1973⁽¹¹⁾ and should take fully into account the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination. It should be negotiated by means of an international conference under United Nations auspices, with the participation of all the parties concerned.

Each side must put aside resentment and understand better the legitimate interests of the other. The Secretary-General believed that an urgent effort was required by the international community, led by the Council, to promote an effective negotiating process, as required by the Charter of the United Nations.

In response to its 1987 request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General reported in March 1988⁽¹³⁾ to the Assembly on the outcome of his contacts with the Council President regarding the status of consultations on an international peace conference. The President stated that the Council members were deeply concerned at the lack of substantive progress in solving the Middle East crisis, one of the most serious sources of instability in the world. They were convinced that the latest developments, particularly in the occupied territories, called for urgent action, and all members agreed that it was desirable to convene an international conference. Almost all declared support for an early convening of a substantive conference under United Nations auspices, with the participation of all parties concerned and of the five permanent Council members. They expressed readiness to help overcome remaining obstacles, and most members reiterated support for the 1983 Assembly resolution outlining the basis for the conference,⁽¹⁴⁾ stressing that PLO should have the status of a full-fledged participant. One Council member, however, was of the opinion that no progress was possible on the basis of the 1983 resolution. A peace initiative currently under way would involve an international conference convened by the Secretary-General and would include permanent Council members, as well as Israel and interested Arab neighbours. Such a conference should bring about prompt and direct negotiations between those neighbours and Israel and should not have the right to veto the results of direct negotiations or to impose solutions.

In statements of concerned parties, submitted in response to a note verbale of the Secretary-General of 9 March and contained in the report, Egypt and Jordan supported the conference's convening, while Israel continued to object, favouring instead direct negotiations with its neighbours. Lebanon approved in principle but did not consider that the situation of its own case should be linked to the solution of the Middle East question; Israel's occupation should be dealt with from the angle of implementing the will of the international community, including Israel's withdrawal from Lebanese territory. The Syrian Arab Republic supported an international conference provided that Israel withdrew from all occupied Arab territories and that the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people were guaranteed. PLO reaffirmed its support of such a conference with its participation as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and with a view to realizing their national rights.

In accordance with another Assembly request of 1987,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1988,⁽¹⁵⁾ again reported on his contacts with the Council President regarding the proposed conference. The President indicated that, due to the situation in the occupied territories and a lack of true progress towards a solution, the Council members were more convinced than ever of the need for urgent action with a view to a comprehensive settlement of the Palestinian problem. Again, all members believed it was desirable to hold a conference and invited the Secretary-General to pursue efforts in that regard. Almost all favoured an early convening of a substantive conference under United Nations auspices, and most of them reaffirmed their support for conducting the conference based on the 1983 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ stressing PLO's full-fledged participation. In addition, pending a settlement based on those objectives, some members requested interim measures for the occupied territories, such as establishing a provisional United Nations administration. One member, in contrast, considered the 1983 resolution⁽¹⁴⁾ as one-sided, unbalanced and not conducive to a negotiated settlement.

Updating earlier stated positions of concerned parties, the Secretary-General said Israel continued to advocate direct negotiations with its neighbours rather than an international conference, adding that the parties directly involved in the Arab-Israeli dispute bore primary responsibility for structuring the negotiating forum and for determining its agenda and procedure. PLO maintained that it was incumbent on the United Nations to assume administrative responsibility for the occupied territories concurrently with cessation of Israeli occupation and withdrawal of its troops and, thereafter, for a transitional period pending establishment of a sovereign and independent Palestinian State. Such a step would contribute towards the convening of a conference and the achievement of peace.

In both his March⁽¹³⁾ and September⁽¹⁵⁾ reports, the Secretary-General concluded that the necessary agreement did not exist for the convening of an international conference. Though all Security Council members believed it desirable to do so and the replies of States indicated agreement on an international framework for the negotiation of a settlement, deep differences remained about the nature of the framework, its powers, the basis on which it would be convened and about who should participate.

According to the Secretary-General, the violence and suffering in the territories underlined the need for progress on the diplomatic front. The continuing occupation was not acceptable to the inhabitants and would not become so. It was necessary therefore to find a political solution that satisfied both the legitimate political rights of the Palestinian people and the right of Israel to live in peace within secure recognized boundaries. There was urgent need to establish a process acceptable to all for negotiating a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement.

In February 1988, the Secretary-General circulated in the Security Council⁽¹⁶⁾ relevant paragraphs of an Assembly resolution of 2 December 1987⁽¹⁷⁾ and another of 11 December 1987,⁽¹⁾ reaffirming the call for convening the conference and for setting up a preparatory committee, and requesting the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in that regard, in consultation with the Council.

Action by the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights stated its decision to exert all efforts to promote the early convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, while urging understanding and further co-operation of all concerned for the resolution of a problem fundamentally important to international peace and security. Citing the grave situation in the occupied territories, the Committee decided to give priority to ensuring the safety and protection of Palestinians under Israeli occupation, in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. It was strengthened in its resolve by the overwhelming consensus of the international community in favour of a negotiated settlement through a conference.

The Committee, however, noted with regret the Secretary-General's conclusion that sufficient agreement did not exist to permit convening the conference. It was of the view that the uprising in the occupied territories and the repressive policies and practices of Israel there, as well as its violations of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries in the area, had created a critical situation making it imperative to advance towards a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Palestinian question.

At the same time, events during the year had brought about greatly increased support for the proposed conference. The Committee accordingly stressed the need for members of the Security Council, and others who had not shown willingness to co-operate, to reconsider their positions.

UN Truce Supervision Organization

In November 1988,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General provided an overview of the activities of the three peace-keeping operations in the Middle East: two peace-keeping forces-the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) (see below, under "Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic") and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) (see below, under "Lebanon")-and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). Apart from assisting UNDOF and UNIFIL, UNTSO maintained observer groups of its own-the Observer Group in Beirut, which was established by the Security Council in August 1982 following the occupation of West Beirut by Israeli troops, with a reduced strength by 1988 of 14 observers following the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Beirut area in September 1983; and the Observer Group in Egypt, where with the Government's agreement some 50 observers had remained since 1979 when the second United Nations Emergency Force was withdrawn. In addition to liaison offices at Cairo and Ismailia, the Observer Group in Egypt maintained six observation posts in the Sinai. A major incident during 1988 was the abduction in February of Lieutenant-Colonel William Higgins, the Chief of the Observer Group Lebanon, an unarmed military group of UNTSO assigned to assist UNIFIL (see also below, under "Lebanon").

Palestine question

The question of Palestine remained at the core of an intensifying Arab-Israeli conflict which brought with it an escalating uprising of the Palestinian people against Israeli occupation in the West Bank, Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem. The uprising, which had begun on 9 December 1987⁽¹⁾ and was known in Arabic as intifadah, served tragically to focus international attention on the area and the underlying political context as a whole, while greatly increasing awareness of the need to resolve the Palestine question. The intifadah was supported by the Seventeenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its Session of Islamic Solidarity with the Uprising of the Palestinian People (Amman, Jordan, 21-25 March),⁽²⁾ and the Arab Summit Conference (Algiers, 7-9 June).⁽³⁾

A large number of States, human rights agencies and United Nations bodies, including the Committee on Palestinian rights,⁽⁴⁾ reported instances of Palestinian armed struggle and Israeli counteractions throughout 1988. Measures by Israel against Palestinians included military force-in addition to administrative and judicial policies authorizing the use of force against civilians-detentions and expulsions.

The nineteenth extraordinary session of PNC (Algiers, 12-15 November)(j) culminated in the proclamation of an independent State of Palestine in the land of Palestine, with Jerusalem as its capital. PNC decided to provide all means and possibilities for the intensification of the uprising, with a view to ensuring its continuation and escalation. It invited the United Nations to place the occupied Palestinian territories under international supervision to protect their population and terminate Israeli occupation. It affirmed the determination of PLO to reach a comprehensive political settlement of the question of Palestine within the framework of the Charter and the rules of international law. PNC insisted on: the need to convene an effective international conference that should guarantee the Palestinians' right to self-determination; Israel's withdrawal from all Palestinian and Arab territories; cancellation of all measures of attachment and annexation; and removal of Israeli settlements. It renewed its commitment to United Nations resolutions and once again rejected terrorism in all forms, including State terrorism.

Numerous States endorsed PNC's proclamation and recognized the new State in communications to the Secretary-General, which were transmitted to the Assembly.

Israel commented on 21 November⁽⁶⁾ that no unilateral step could substitute for a negotiated settlement. Hence, any recognition or legitimization of the PNC declaration would only reinforce an illusion that the outcome of desired negotiations could be prejudged by unilateral acts or declarations. PLO had not changed its basic character, policy or adherence to terrorism; peace between Israel and its neighbours would be reached solely by negotiation and those assisting PLO only helped prevent regional peace.

Although invited to participate in deliberations on the Palestine question when it came before the General Assembly on 1 December, PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat was denied an entry visa by the United States, the host country of United Nations Headquarters in New York. The Assembly, deploring the failure of the host country to approve the requested visa, urged the United States by resolution 43/48 to reverse that decision. In the light of the United States failure to respond favourably, the Assembly, by resolution 43/49, decided to consider the question of Palestine in plenary at Geneva, from 13 to 15 December (see PART FIVE, Chapter V).

The Assembly acknowledged the proclamation by PNC of the State of Palestine and decided that the designation "Palestine" would forthwith be used in place of "Palestine Liberation Organization" in the United Nations system (resolution 43/177). After considering the 1988 recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights,⁽⁴⁾ the Assembly again drew the Security Council's attention to the fact that action was still awaited on the Committee's original 1976 recommendations⁽⁷⁾ for resolving the Palestinian problem (43/175 A); requested resources and co-operation to enable the Division for Palestinian Rights of the Secretariat to perform its tasks (43/175 B); and asked that the Department of Public Information (DPI) continue its special information programme on Palestine (43/175 C). The Assembly again determined that Israel's 1980 decision⁽⁸⁾ to impose jurisdiction over Jerusalem was illegal (43/54 C).

Both the Economic and Social Council (1988/154) and the Assembly (43/178) regretted that the Organization's 1988-1990 programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people had not been developed as requested by the Assembly in 1987.⁽⁹⁾ Therefore, both organs requested that the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) be charged with future development of the programme, in co-operation with PLO, and decided to extend to occupied Palestine the same preferential treatment accorded to the least developed countries (LDCs), calling for the granting of trade concessions for Palestinian exports based on certificates of origin issued by Palestinian bodies designated by PLO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/177 by roll-call vote.

Question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Palestine",
Recalling its resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, in which, inter alia, it called for the establishment of an Arab State and a Jewish State in Palestine,

Mindful of the special responsibility of the United Nations to achieve a just solution to the question of Palestine,

Aware of the proclamation of the State of Palestine by the Palestine National Council in line with General Assembly resolution 181(II) and in exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people,

Affirming the urgent need to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement in the Middle East which, inter alia, provides for peaceful coexistence for all States in the region,

Recalling its resolution 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 on the observer status for the Palestine Liberation Organization and subsequent relevant resolutions,

1. Acknowledges the proclamation of the State of Palestine by the Palestine National Council on 15 November 1988;

2. Affirms the need to enable the Palestinian people to exercise their sovereignty over their territory occupied since 1967;

3. Decides that, effective as of 15 December 1988, the designation "Palestine" should be used in place of the designation "Palestine Liberation Organization" in the United Nations system, without prejudice to the observer status and functions of the Palestine Liberation Organization within the United Nations system, in conformity with relevant United Nations resolutions and practice;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its October 1988 report to the General Assembly,⁽⁴⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights established in 1975⁽¹⁰⁾ stressed that, since its first report in 1976,⁽⁷⁾ it had made a number of annual recommendations, which the Assembly had as a basis for the resolution of the Palestinian question. However, despite the increasing urgency of its appeals, the Security Council had not acted on or implemented those recommendations. The Committee remained convinced that positive Council action would advance prospects for attaining a comprehensive, just and lasting solution.

The Committee's efforts to promote such a solution acquired particular urgency in the light of the grave deterioration of the situation in the territories. Despite the international outcry over repeated violations of human rights there and the adoption of several Council resolutions requesting the occupying Power to abide by relevant international instruments and United Nations resolutions, Israel continued to resort to military force against the Palestinians resisting occupation, and to engage in armed attacks against the integrity and sovereignty of countries in the region. The Committee expressed greatest concern at the mounting casualties and suffering inflicted on Palestinian civilians and warned that Israel's intransigence would further exacerbate the situation, jeopardize international efforts towards a just and lasting settlement, and further endanger international peace and security. It reasserted that no solution could be achieved as long as the Palestinian people was denied its inalienable rights, including those to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty, to return to homes and property, and to establish an independent and sovereign State.

Accordingly, the Committee repeatedly appealed to the Security Council to take appropriate action to secure United Nations objectives, and again accorded priority to the convening of the proposed international peace conference on the Middle East in conformity with the 1983 Assembly resolution.⁽¹¹⁾ In that respect, it stressed the urgent need for additional concrete and constructive efforts by all Governments.

The Committee continued monitoring developments relating to Palestine and exerted efforts to promote implementation of its recommendations. On an ongoing basis, it gathered information from the media, Governments and reports of missions, individuals, experts and eyewitnesses, which indicated a serious deterioration of the situation.

Among its 1988 recommendations, the Committee reaffirmed the need for positive action by the Security Council on its original recommendations⁽⁷⁾ and those adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.⁽¹²⁾ It reasserted that Israeli evacuation of the territories occupied by force and in violation of the Charter and United Nations resolutions was a conditio sine qua non for the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights and the establishment of an independent Arab State in Palestine as envisaged in a 1947 resolution,⁽¹³⁾ which had been implemented only in part. The Committee was further convinced that the United Nations and the international community as a whole must urgently intensify their efforts to bring this about. It considered it imperative for the Security Council to act towards convening an international peace conference in accordance with 1983⁽¹¹⁾ and 1986⁽¹⁴⁾ resolutions, and appealed to the Secretary-General to ensure that active consultations were undertaken within the Council's framework for that purpose.

The Committee called on the international community, in particular on the parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), to do all in their power to ensure respect for the Convention by Israel. It called on the Security Council to appeal to those parties that had diplomatic relations with Israel to ensure respect for the instrument under all circumstances and to urge Israel to abide by its provisions.

Annexed to the Committee's report were the conclusions and recommendations of symposia and seminars held in 1988 on the question of Palestine, organized by the Division for Palestinian Rights: the nineteenth and twentieth United Nations seminars (European regional seminar, Berlin, 25-29 April; and North American regional seminar, New York, 27 and 28 June); followed by the United Nations North American regional NGO symposium (New York, 29 June-1 July), the United Nations European regional NGO symposium (Geneva, 29 and 30 August) and the international NGO meeting (Geneva, 31 August-2 September).

In related action, the Assembly, reaffirming the importance of implementing the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,⁽¹⁵⁾ urged States, the United Nations system and international organizations to support the Palestinian people through PLO in its struggle for self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter (resolution 43/106).

Public information activities

The Committee on Palestinian rights⁽⁴⁾ followed up on the implementation of a 1987 General Assembly request⁽¹⁶⁾ that DPI continue in 1988-1989 its special information programme on the question of Palestine, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America.

DPI accordingly disseminated press releases, publications and audio-visual material, in addition to organizing fact-finding missions and regional and national encounters for journalists. Its coverage of the Palestine question focused increasingly on news items and information concerning the situation in the occupied territories in relation to the uprising, and on efforts to convene an international peace conference under United Nations auspices. United Nations information centres (UNICs) throughout the world organized information activities and made available to the public United Nations information materials on the question of Palestine.

The UN Chronicle reported extensively on consideration given to the Palestine question by the Assembly and the Security Council, particularly since the beginning of the uprising. DPI continued to distribute in Arabic, English, French, German and Spanish a brochure on the Committee on Israeli practices as well as the booklet The United Nations and the Question of Palestine. The Arabic and Middle East Radio Unit provided broad coverage of the intifadah in its weekly programmes and telephone feeds to radio stations of the region. United Nations activities and events, including observance of 30 November 1988 as the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, received broad coverage. Two feature programmes in the Perspective series dealt with new initiatives to convene the proposed peace conference. A 22-minute film, Palestinian Portraits, was produced in English and widely screened and loaned out by 34 UNICs and film libraries of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). DPI prepared 241 television news packages for worldwide dissemination and provided delegations with video-cassette dubs and excerpts on subjects related to the question.

DPI once again organized activities to acquaint the media with facts and developments pertaining to the Palestine question. A team of 10 high-level journalists participated in a news mission to the Middle East, visiting Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia between 13 March and 2 April. It organized two regional encounters for journalists: the first (Nairobi, Kenya, 2-5 February) was attended by 18 journalists from Africa and the second (Vienna, 17-20 May) by 20 journalists from Europe. In addition, African national journalists encounters were held at Kinshasa (Zaire), Dar-es-Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania) and Addis Ababa (Ethiopia) between 29 January and 8 February. National encounters for Europe were held between 16 and 25 May at Madrid (Spain), Brussels (Belgium) and Stockholm (Sweden).

Jerusalem

The Secretary-General forwarded in October 1988⁽¹⁷⁾ replies received from nine States to his notes verbales of 17 February on the implementation of a General Assembly resolution of 1987⁽¹⁸⁾ concerning the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of a Security Council resolution of 1980.⁽¹⁹⁾ Since Israel's occupation in 1967 of Arab territories, including Jerusalem,⁽²⁰⁾ the Assembly had repeatedly determined that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and declare it the capital of Israel was null and void, as were its actions to alter the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status of the city, and demanded that those measures be rescinded.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/54 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986 and 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 28 November 1988,

1. Determines that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Assistance to Palestinians

Under their respective mandates, various organizations of the United Nations system continued to provide assistance in 1988 to the Palestinian people. They responded in particular to the emergency conditions in the occupied territories due to the intifadah and repressive Israeli reactions. Notable among them were the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, which maintained an extensive programme of education, health and relief services as well as humanitarian assistance to Palestine refugees (see below, under "Palestine refugees"), and UNDP, whose economic and social assistance programme was primarily for the non-refugee population.

As requested by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General, in June 1988,⁽²¹⁾ reported on progress in implementing the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in: research, analysis and organization of data; infrastructure; agriculture; industry; employment; education and vocational training; health; social welfare; and human settlements. He also gave an overview of the United Nations response to the intifadah-related emergency situation in the territories. In addition to UNDP and UNRWA, the following reported on their implementation and development of the programme: ESCWA, FAO, ILO, ITC, UNCHS, UNCTAD, UNESCO, UNFPA, UNICEF, UNU, UPU, WHO and WIPO.

The Secretary-General recalled that in a January 1988 report to the Security Council,⁽²²⁾ he had asked the UNRWA Commissioner-General to prepare urgently proposals for improving the infrastructure of the refugee camps and to seek the necessary funds. In the past, refugees had sometimes expressed reservations about improving the infrastructure for fear that it would make the camps more permanent; the recent disturbances, however, had attracted world attention to the squalid living conditions in many camps, especially in the Gaza Strip.

In February/March, UNRWA prepared a package of projects, which were estimated at $65 million. The package was presented to an informal meeting of major donors and host Governments, immediately followed by a meeting of the UNRWA Advisory Commission. Proposed activities included improvement of sewerage, shelters, road maintenance, upgrading of health and education facilities, a new hospital block and water supply in Gaza, and expansion of vocational training and university scholarship programmes, as well as strengthening income-generating and small development projects. By June, some $25 million was pledged in cash and kind.

UNRWA also expanded its educational, health and relief programmes to deal with the emergency situation. Additional budget provisions were made to meet hospitalization costs resulting from it. Emergency aid in the form of food, supplies and cash was provided to refugees and to a small number of non-refugees.

Many Palestinians expressed the hope that a concerted international effort would be undertaken to revive the territories' economy. In that context, the Secretary-General requested the UNDP Administrator to study the possibility of expanding the UNDP programme. Pursuant to that request, the Administrator in turn requested the UNDP Governing Council, at its special session in February, urgently to reinforce the programme through an additional allocation of $4 million from Special Programme Resources, over and above the $8 million previously allocated for 1987-1991.⁽²³⁾ The Council, on 19 February,⁽²⁴⁾ acceded to that request and appealed to Governments and inter-governmental institutions to respond immediately through further voluntary contributions.

At the special session, Japan announced a special contribution of $1 million, subject to parliamentary approval. Italy indicated that it intended to select certain projects for official consideration for co-funding. The Administrator informed the Council that those and other indications made it appear that substantially increased resources would be available. In consultation with PLO, UNDP sought to attract additional financial support.

In May, UNDP sent a five-day programming and operational review mission to the West Bank and Gaza to discuss the implementation of its programme. The mission concluded that the unrest and demonstrations that characterized the situation there had an inevitable effect on programme delivery. Nevertheless, the programme continued to operate at full strength under the supervision of the UNDP office at Jerusalem, and UNDP continued to plan its activities in consultation with all parties directly concerned, in particular the Palestinian inhabitants. The mission found renewed interest by donor Governments in assistance to the Palestinians, and agreement was reached on new projects proposed by UNDP.

In an April report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Administrator provided additional financial and programming information on UNDP's assistance to the Palestinians. He stated that, notwithstanding the recent tragic events in the territories, project planning and implementation continued at a satisfactory rate. A revised programme was designed in March to serve as a framework for full utilization of the $8 million approved for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), plus the $4 million approved in February 1988. Projects under the accrued $12 million programme were formulated with an eye to the growing possibilities of attracting funds from Governments and non-governmental institutions. A list of 23 projects planned for implementation during the remainder of 1987-1991 was annexed to the report. UNDP reinforced its invitation to other United Nations organizations to utilize the management facilities and programming capacity of its Jerusalem office for projects sponsored by them. WHO, ILO and UNFPA had already launched projects with UNDP assistance, while consultations on possible co-operation were under way with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

UNDP's new role would provide a much larger range of project activities, greater emphasis on basic development projects, a structure for easy incorporation of external inputs and greater reliance on local assessment of basic needs. In addition to infrastructure projects already under implementation, UNDP proposed four new projects: a water-purification project in the Gaza Strip ($400,000); a sewage system for the Nablus area ($300,000); construction of commercial centres to establish income-generating small businesses ($750,000); and assistance to municipalities ($1 million). In agriculture, three UNDP projects were completed by March 1988, covering training, development and a hydrology laboratory at the cost of some $619,000. FAO continued to provide two fellowships in agricultural economics and one in animal production, with a total budget of $68,500. It also assisted Al-Quds University at Jerusalem to develop its curriculum in agriculture. In education, UNDP-assisted projects dealing with pre-primary education and promotion of vocational training were completed by March at a cost of $1.8 million, to which UNDP contributed $632,700.

On 29 April, pursuant to a decision of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,⁽²⁶⁾ the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation convened a meeting of United Nations bodies to discuss assistance to the Palestinian people of the occupied territories. All participants expressed willingness to expand their activities there, provided additional funding was available.

UNCTAD, through its Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people), continued to prepare reports and technical publications on developments in the economic conditions of the occupied territories. ESCWA collaborated with UNCTAD in preparing a study on the Palestinian financial sector under Israeli occupation. An August report by the UNCTAD secretariat⁽²⁷⁾ updated major economic developments in the territories and analysed their external trade (see below, under "Economic and social conditions of Palestinians").

UNICEF worked on reducing water-related diseases in 25 villages in the West Bank, Gaza and the Jordan Valley for the benefit of 140,000 people, in addition to health education campaigns, with estimated expenditures amounting to $160,000 in 1988. A pilot project was initiated to introduce communities, on a self-help basis, to early childhood stimulation and development for, eventually, 10,000 children at a total cost of $230,000. UNICEF also provided an expanded immunization programme and diarrhoeal disease control. UNFPA approved $88,000 to support three WHO collaborating centres for primary health care research in the West Bank and Gaza.

UNCHS was preparing an in-depth study on future needs for infrastructure in the Palestinian territories. Pursuant to two 1987 resolutions of the Commission on Human Settlements,⁽²⁸⁾ UNCHS prepared reports on housing requirements of a future independent Palestinian State and on the reconstruction needed in Palestinian camps in Lebanon. By a resolution of 12 April 1988,⁽²⁹⁾ the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to assist Palestinians in rebuilding their houses destroyed by the occupying authorities and to report on progress made.

UNDP completed in March 1988 a project on training in industrial management and had two others—on industrial olive-oil development and on glass and ceramics—under way with a funding of $690,000, while UPU provided two training fellowships to the Arab Faculty of Posts (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic) for two Palestinian nationals.

In conclusion,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the programme of assistance had inevitably been affected by the uprising in the territories. Nevertheless, in spite of serious disruptions due to strikes, curfews and violent actions during recent months, measurable progress had been achieved by all United Nations agencies involved. Additional projects had become operational or had been identified, even though the pace of project delivery slowed down from time to time.

Developments in the territories had the effect of attracting far greater international attention, and additional funds for development assistance, as well as relief services, had been forthcoming. However, additional funding was urgently needed. As more resources became available, the Secretary-General would continue to implement and develop the programme further.

An amendment in the Council calling for the insertion of paragraph 15, requesting the Secretary-General to issue a corrigendum to his report,⁽²¹⁾ was adopted by a roll-call vote of 34 to 1, with 16 abstentions. The Sudan, introducing the amendment on behalf of its sponsors, said they had first acquiesced in the ruling by the President that the matter should be dealt with by the Secretariat, but had become convinced that the Secretariat found itself constrained. The language of the Secretary-General's report was not consistent with the corresponding 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽⁹⁾ as had been pointed out in the Third Committee on several occasions. By adopting the amendment, the Council could dispose of the issue.

General Assembly resolution 43/178

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 118-14-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/750/Add.2) by recorded vote (90-14-14), 4 November (meeting 32); 10-nation draft (A/C.2/43/L.13/Rev.2): agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Mauritania, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 2nd Committee 24, 32; plenary 83.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Abstaining: Austria, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Fiji, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Spain, Sweden.

Speaking before the vote in the Second Committee, Israel supported the idea of assistance to the Palestinians through UNDP, but said it would not receive the experts mentioned in paragraph 3 or any mission of inquiry. Channelling assistance to the territories through PLO was preposterous, and the suggestion of granting the occupied territories the preferential treatment accorded to LDCs had nothing to do with assistance in the conventional sense. The suggestion that Palestinian exports be granted trade concessions and preferential measures on the basis of certificates of origin issued by Palestinian bodies designated by PLO was indicative of the text's true intentions: producers or exporters not paying ransom to PLO would not get such concessions or preferential treatment. Instead of assistance, the text called for international approval of a PLO boycott, discrimination, economic warfare and extortion; it was an attempt to politicize the Second Committee's work and its real intention was to call for sanctions against Israel.

Incidents and disputes involving Arab countries and Israel

Israel and Iraq

At the close of its forty-second session on 19 September 1988, the General Assembly, by decision 42/463, included in the draft agenda of its forty-third session, beginning the following day, the item on armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations, which had been on its agenda since 1981⁽¹⁾ following the bombing that year by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad. However, the Assembly took no action on the item and, in suspending its forty-third session on 22 December, retained the item on the agenda of that session by decision 43/459.

Lebanon

Hostilities and violence continued to characterize the situation in Lebanon during 1988. Although the camps war in West Beirut between rival militias abated somewhat in July, new casualties continued to occur and hundreds of families were displaced by outbreaks of fighting. In central Lebanon, heavy shelling forced the closure of all schools in mid-March.

The fate of Alex Collett, a British journalist kidnapped in March 1985 while on assignment for UNWRA, remained unresolved, no word having been received from his kidnappers since 1986.

In February 1988, Lieutenant-Colonel William Higgins, a United States military observer of UNTSO serving with UNIFIL, was abducted in southern Lebanon, an action condemned by the Security Council (resolution 618(1988)).

Israel and Lebanon

The situation between Israel and Lebanon remained tense during 1988. Israel Defence Forces continued to occupy parts of southern Lebanon, which Israel had declared as its "security zone". Throughout the year, Lebanon addressed numerous communications to the Secretary-General and the Presidents of the Security Council and the General Assembly accusing Israel of ongoing military attacks against its territory, causing death and injury to many innocent civilians and widespread destruction and property damage. The Security Council convened throughout the year to consider aspects of the Middle East situation related to Lebanon. The Council met on three occasions (January, May and December) at Lebanon's request to consider specific charges of armed Israeli incursions, but was unable to take action due to the repeated negative vote of a permanent member (United States). By those resolutions, the Council would have called for urgent implementation of its previous resolutions demanding that Israel withdraw all its military forces from Lebanon. Israel maintained that it was forced to protect its territory and population from terrorist attacks launched from Lebanon.

In January and July, the Council unanimously extended UNIFIL's mandate for six months and, in July, demanded the immediate release of Lieutenant-Colonel William Higgins, who had been abducted while on duty on 17 February.

At the request of Lebanon for a Council meeting after bombing and rocket attacks by Israel, the Council convened on 15 and 18 January. Further hostile incidents were reported by Lebanon during March and April, as contained in the report of the Security Council for the period 16 June 1987 to 15 June 1988.⁽²⁾ The incidents ranged from destruction of property to unlawful deportations, detentions and deliberate bombings of houses, resulting in civilian deaths. On 3 May, Lebanon reported that Israel had again invaded its southern territory, and requested another Council meeting. The Council subsequently convened on 6, 9 and 10 May.

Lebanon continued to inform of deportations, air attacks, detentions, arrests and destruction by Israel, including deportations of Palestinians into Lebanon,⁽³⁾ the bombings of refugee camps and clinics,⁽⁴⁾ attacks on Lebanese villages with air-to-ground missiles⁽⁵⁾ and the arrest of Lebanese citizens on Lebanese territory, with subsequent sentencing by Israeli courts under Israeli law,⁽⁶⁾ in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. On 9 December, Lebanon reported a further massive attack against its territory by Israeli air, land and sea forces and again requested a Council meeting; the Council met on 14 December.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (January)

Following two incidents on 2 January—the bombing by Israel of blocks of flats near Sidon and rocket attacks against two villages 80 kilometres from the Israeli border,⁽⁷⁾ which resulted in 26 deaths, dozens of wounded and substantial material damage—Lebanon requested on 7 January⁽⁸⁾ an urgent meeting of the Security Council. Acceding to the request, the Council held one meeting on 15 January and two on 18 January.

Meeting numbers SC 2782-2784.

At their request, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Mauritania, Morocco, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited to participate without the right to vote. At the request of Algeria,⁽⁹⁾ the Acting Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States (LAS) was invited under rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Also at Algeria's request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Council decided, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, United Kingdom), that an invitation to participate also be accorded to the PLO Permanent Observer. The invitation, though not made pursuant to rules 37^b or 39, conferred on PLO the same rights as those conferred on a Member State when invited pursuant to rule 37.

Before the vote, the United States, which had requested it, said the only legal basis on which the Council might grant a hearing to persons speaking on behalf of non-governmental entities was rule 39. The United States opposed extending to PLO the same rights to participate as if it represented a Member State and did not agree with recent practice in the Council which appeared selectively to try to enhance the prestige of those who wished to speak through a departure from the Council's rules.

On 18 January, the Council voted on a draft resolution⁽¹¹⁾ submitted by Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia and Zambia. By that text, the Council would have strongly deplored Israel's repeated attacks against Lebanese territory and all other measures against the civilian population; strongly requested that Israel cease all acts of encroachment of land, construction of roads and setting up of fences that violated the border, and any attempts to occupy or change the status of Lebanese territory or impede the return of the effective authority of the Government of Lebanon in its sovereign territory; and reaffirmed its calls for strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity within its internationally recognized boundaries. It would also have reaffirmed Council resolutions of 1978⁽¹²⁾ and 1982,⁽¹³⁾ which demanded that Israel withdraw all its military forces unconditionally, and the Secretary-General would have been requested to continue consultations with Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with regard to implementing those resolutions.

The vote was 13 to 1, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: United Kingdom.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

Speaking before the vote, Lebanon charged Israel with violating its sovereignty. Any attempt by Israel to deny that violation and to justify it citing reasons of security was unacceptable. Israel's stepped-up inhuman policies and acts of oppression had claimed increasing numbers of civilian victims and caused widespread destruction of cities, villages and farmlands; the Council had a responsibility to impose security and peace in an extremely explosive area that might erupt at any moment.

Israel said that if Lebanon's sovereignty was in question, it was violated by Iran, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO, which were using Lebanon for terrorist attacks against Israel. Israel itself was taking ongoing self-defence measures that were restrained,

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

^bRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

temporary but necessary for its security in the absence of a Lebanese Government capable of assuming its responsibilities. Israel had no territorial claim against Lebanon but wanted restoration of Lebanese sovereignty by a strong central Government over all of Lebanon and security arrangements until such a Government emerged.

The PLO Observer averred that the exercise of State terrorism by Israel against Palestinian refugee camps and civilians in south Lebanon were acts of aggression and manifestations of genocide. Israel's total, unconditional and immediate withdrawal from Lebanon was a conditio sine qua non for achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace.

Speaking after the vote, the United States-stressing its support for Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity within its internationally recognized boundaries-said that continuing a review of the situation in southern Lebanon, without an attendant concern for the security of northern Israel, would have no consequence; peace and stability could not come to south Lebanon until the border between the two countries was secure.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (May)

By a letter of 3 May,⁽¹⁴⁾ Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that the day before large contingents of the Israeli army had again invaded southern Lebanon. An estimated 2,000 soldiers, supported by tanks, artillery and military helicopters, had crossed the southern Lebanese border, passed through the so-called security zone, an area Israel continued to occupy, and penetrated some 15 kilometres north to the town of Lebbaya. Lebanon charged Israel with heavy shelling of villages, raiding and destroying houses, ruining crops, terrorizing the population and arresting many. The invasion was accompanied by the deployment of Israeli navy vessels along the Lebanese coast between Sidon and Tyre, as well as overflights by the Israeli air force, which dropped flare canisters on those and other towns.

At the request of Lebanon,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Council met on 6, 9 and 10 May to consider the situation in southern Lebanon.

Meeting numbers. SC 2811, 2813, 2814.

At their request, Bahrain, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia were invited to participate without the right to vote. At Algeria's request,⁽¹⁶⁾ an invitation was also extended to the Permanent Observer of LAS under rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Algeria further requested⁽¹⁷⁾ that an invitation be extended to the Permanent Observer of PLO to participate in the debate, in accordance with the Council's past practice. The President stated that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37^b or 39 but that, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights of participation as those conferred on a Member State under rule 37.

The request was approved by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, United Kingdom). The United States, which had requested the vote, reiterated its previously stated position (see above).

On 10 May, the Council voted on a draft resolution⁽¹⁸⁾ sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia and Zambia, by which the Council would have condemned Israel's recent invasion of southern Lebanon; repeated the call for immediate Israeli withdrawal and for the cessation of all acts violating Lebanon's sovereignty and its population's security; reaffirmed its call for strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity within its internationally recognized boundaries; reaffirmed the urgent need to restore international peace and security by implementing Council resolutions of 1978⁽¹²⁾ and 1982;⁽¹³⁾ and requested the Secretary-General to continue consultations with Lebanon and other parties directly concerned.

The vote was 14 to 1, as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia, Zambia.
Against: United States.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

Repeating its charges before the Council, Lebanon called the invasion an unjustified flagrant violation of its sovereignty, territorial waters and national airspace, flouting the Charter, international law and Council resolutions. The Council was duty-bound to act to pre-empt Israel from continuously perpetrating a policy of violence and expansion.

Israel reiterated that it had no territorial claims to any Lebanese territory. The current arrangements on Israel's northern border resulted from security constraints and were designed solely to protect its northern population centres against repeated attacks emanating from Lebanese territory. Those security arrangements would be essential only as long as there was no central Lebanese authority capable of preventing such attacks. Israel wished to see Lebanese sovereignty restored in all areas of the country by a central Government that would effectively unify the State and be responsible for security within its territory and borders.

During its two-day operation in southern Lebanon, carried out to prevent terrorist groups from re-establishing an infrastructure from which they launched attacks on Israel, Israel had made every effort to avoid civilian casualties. It respected the universal principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity, but could not allow its own sovereignty and territorial integrity to be compromised. It believed that the only feasible solution to the problems on both sides of the border could be found in mutually agreed, adequate security arrangements, which were essential as long as there was no central Lebanese authority.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said the Council should not address the problems of southern Lebanon in resolutions that failed to recognize the attacks and reprisals originating on both sides of the Israeli-Lebanese border. The United States had called publicly and repeatedly for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon and the extension of central-government authority through the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (December)

On 9 December, Israeli air and naval forces heavily bombarded the Lebanese town of Na'imah and the surrounding hills, as well as the Shuwayfat-Sa'diyat-Bi'wirta triangle 20 kilometres south of Beirut. Helicopters then carried out an airborne landing of Israeli troops, which was followed by severe clashes. According to Lebanon,⁽¹⁹⁾ the attack and resistance to it resulted in large-scale human and material losses.

At Lebanon's request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Council met on 14 December to consider the situation. Israel and Lebanon were invited at their request to participate without the right to vote under rule 37^b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Meeting number. SC 2832.

The Council voted on a draft resolution by Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia and Zambia.⁽²¹⁾ By wording almost identical to the texts put forward in January and May, the Council would have strongly deplored the most recent attack, requested that Israel cease immediately all such attacks and reaffirmed the urgent need to implement the Council's resolutions on Lebanon.

The draft received 14 votes to 1, as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: United States.

The text was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

Lebanon stated that the attack was further proof that Israel considered as fair game Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity, its soil and territorial waters. The operation, timed to mark the first anniversary of the intifadah, was aimed at restoring the confidence of the Israeli army, which had failed to quell the Palestinian uprising. Lebanon appealed to the Council—which, it said, was responsible for protecting the sovereignty of Member States, as well as for maintaining international peace and security—to protect its sovereignty, redress the injustice inflicted on its people and stop the bloodshed, by deterring Israel through a firm and courageous stance.

Israel repeated its position that it had no territorial claims with regard to Lebanon; its mere desire was to ensure the security of its population from attacks emanating from there. On 9 December it had targeted in a limited operation the headquarters of the General Command of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine—a PLO faction led by Ahmed Jibril—and its terrorist training camps in the hills north of Dammur.

After the vote, the United States explained that it opposed the draft resolution because it criticized action by one party while ignoring attacks originating from the other side of the border. Requesting Israel to cease all attacks against Lebanese territory regardless of provocation would deny its right to self-defence.

UNIFIL

During 1988, at the request of Lebanon and on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, in January and July, each time for a six-month period. Established by the Council in 1978⁽²²⁾ following Israel's invasion of Lebanon in March of that year,⁽²³⁾ UNIFIL was entrusted with restoring international peace and security; confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory; and re-establishing the Lebanese Government's effective authority in the area.

After a second Israeli invasion in 1982,⁽²⁴⁾ the Council authorized⁽²⁵⁾ the Force additionally to provide protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population.

Composition

As of July 1988,⁽²⁶⁾ UNIFIL had a strength of 5,844 troops. It was composed of contingents from nine countries: Fiji, 701; Finland, 543; France, 502; Ghana, 901; Ireland, 744; Italy, 52; Nepal, 856; Norway, 906; Sweden, 639. The Force was assisted by 64 unarmed military observers of UNTSO organized as Observer Group Lebanon (OGL). The Lebanese army unit serving with UNIFIL maintained a strength of 128.

On 30 March,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that the current Commander of UNIFIL, Lieutenant-General Gustav Hagglund of Finland, in office since 1 June 1986, was being recalled by his Government to assume a new command. Therefore, the Secretary-General intended, subject to Council approval, to appoint Lieutenant-General

Lars-Eric Wahlgren of Sweden as the new Commander from 1 July 1988. The Council agreed to that appointment on 20 April.⁽²⁸⁾

Report of the Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on developments in the UNIFIL area of operation from 25 July 1987 to 22 January 1988.⁽²⁹⁾

During that period, seven members of the Force lost their lives, including two Nepalese soldiers killed by hostile firing and two French, one Irish, one Nepalese and one Swedish soldier who died from accidents or other causes. In addition, an Australian military observer from UNTSO assigned to OGL was killed by a mine and a Canadian observer was severely injured in the same incident; 11 soldiers were wounded by hostile action. Since the establishment of UNIFIL, 151 members of the Force had died, 60 of them as a result of firing and mine or bomb explosions, 63 in accidents and 28 from other causes. More than 200 had been wounded by firing and mine or bomb explosions.

The situation in UNIFIL's area of operation remained essentially unchanged. Israel continued to maintain in southern Lebanon its "security zone", manned by Israel Defence Forces (IDF) and the so-called South Lebanon Army (SLA). Within the UNIFIL area, IDF and SLA maintained 57 positions, 15 of which were located within the battalion sectors. Of these, 14 were manned permanently. During the reporting period, three IDF/SLA positions were closed in the Nepalese battalion sector and one was closed in the Finnish sector.

Armed resistance groups continued to launch frequent operations against IDF and SLA using small arms, rocket-propelled grenades, rockets and mortars, as well as mines and roadside bombs. UNIFIL recorded 60 such operations from August to December 1987, and nine in the first half of January 1988. In two cases, attacks were carried out by armed elements estimated to number up to 200 men.

Until the middle of October 1987, most of the resistance operations in the UNIFIL area were directed against two adjacent SLA positions on Tallet Huqban, overlooking the villages of Kafra and Yatar in the Nepalese battalion sector. In numerous instances, the personnel in those positions fired at civilian as well as UNIFIL targets within their range. During August 1987, 13 women and children were injured by unprovoked firing from those positions. In some instances, local armed elements retaliated, notably on 29 August when some 200 armed elements infiltrated the area and attacked the positions on Tallet Huqban with mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and machine-guns. On 14 October, IDF/SLA evacuated the two positions on Tallet Huqban and UNIFIL occupied one of them. The other position, heavily mined by IDF, was left vacant.

IDF/SLA continued firing frequently from their positions or when on patrol. When attacked, they generally responded with heavy artillery and tank and mortar shelling, also employing helicopter gunships. Such firing at or near UNIFIL positions increased, particularly in the Irish battalion sector. Frequently the firing was unprovoked and apparently deliberate, causing UNIFIL to protest some 300 such incidents to the Israeli military authorities.

While the Norwegian battalion sector had previously been relatively quiet, the situation changed in early August when IDF asserted its intention to operate in the area and SLA personnel increasingly objected to UNIFIL check-point controls. This resulted in harassment of and attacks on UNIFIL positions, including the shelling of a Norwegian patrol by an IDF tank and several instances of forced entry into UNIFIL positions by SLA personnel.

On 32 occasions, unidentified armed elements fired at or near UNIFIL positions, and, on 25 August 1987, a Nepalese soldier was killed and three others were wounded west of Kafra. On 12 January 1988, an Australian captain was killed and a Canadian major was seriously injured when their OGL patrol vehicle hit a land-mine west of the village of Shama in the "security zone".

The Force continued to co-operate with the Lebanese authorities and humanitarian assistance agencies in extending aid to the local population. Some 3,000 Lebanese civilians were treated at the UNIFIL hospital at Naqoura, including more than 250 in-patients.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General noted that UNIFIL had been prevented from making further progress to implement in full the objectives of Council resolution 425(1978).⁽²²⁾ Ten years later, the conditions still did not exist for UNIFIL to perform its functions fully or fulfil its mandate completely. Although the circumstances under which UNIFIL was established had changed, the objectives set by resolution 425(1978) remained valid. The Lebanese authorities maintained that Israel should withdraw completely and allow UNIFIL's deployment to the international border. Israel, however, with its own forces and those of SLA, continued to maintain a "security zone" in southern Lebanon, saying that it could not allow the deployment of UNIFIL to the border as there was no central Government in Beirut able to exercise authority throughout the area. In its view, UNIFIL as a peace-keeping force was not able, under its current terms of reference, to assume such responsibility.

The Secretary-General stressed that the Force could not implement its mandate successfully without the full co-operation of the Israeli authorities, whose position was an essential factor. He believed that the somewhat limited level of violence in southern Lebanon during the period under review was particularly due to the presence of UNIFIL, which maintained calm in the area after IDF/SLA's withdrawal from Tallet Huqban and the subsequent return of thousands of inhabitants to Yatar and Kafra.

On 20 January 1988,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General received a request from Lebanon for UNIFIL's extension for a further six-month period. He observed that, although the state of affairs in which the Force found itself after 10 years of deployment was contrary to the expectations of the Council, UNIFIL remained an important mechanism for conflict control in a very volatile situation which, without UNIFIL, could quickly escalate into a wider conflict.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 29 January to consider the Secretary-General's report and, without debate, unanimously adopted resolution 609(1988).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 22 January 1988, and taking note of observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 20 January 1988 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1988;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 609(1988)

29 January 1988 Meeting 2788 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/19461).

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In his report on UNIFIL covering the period from 23 January to 25 July 1988,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the situation in the UNIFIL area remained essentially unchanged, with Israel continuing to control the so-called security zone in southern Lebanon, through IDF/SLA. Within the UNIFIL area, IDF and SLA maintained a total of 54 positions, with IDF personnel being observed in SLA positions on many occasions, especially at night.

Resistance groups continued to launch frequent attacks against IDF and SLA, using small arms, rocket-propelled grenades, rockets and mortars, as well as mines and roadside bombs. From January to June, UNIFIL recorded an average of 19 such operations each month, with many more in the "security zone" where UNIFIL was not deployed. On 28 January, some 150 men attacked SLA positions at Rshaf and Brashit. IDF/SLA continued to respond with heavy artillery, tank and mortar shelling, at times employing Israeli helicopter gunships and shelling villages in retaliation.

During the period under review, two Force members, an Irish and a French soldier, lost their lives in accidents; 15 soldiers suffered injuries, 1 as a result of hostile fire and 5 from mine explosions. This brought to 153 the number of killed and 220 wounded members of the Force since its establishment.

In addition to co-operating in rendering humanitarian assistance in the area, UNIFIL provided its Naqoura hospital to treat some 5,000 Lebanese civilians, 250 of them as in-patients.

The Secretary-General regretted to inform the Council that no further progress was made towards attaining the objectives of Council resolution 425(1978),⁽³²⁾ namely the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory, restoration of international peace and security, and re-establishment of the Lebanese Government's authority in the area.

The Secretary-General reported that the Lebanese authorities viewed with increasing frustration and apprehension the apparent permanence of the Israeli military presence on Lebanese territory, rejecting it as a matter of principle. They were convinced that Israel's early withdrawal and the deployment of UNIFIL to the internationally recognized boundary would improve considerably the prospects for solving the very serious problems facing Lebanon. Israel restated its position regarding the Lebanese Government's inability to exercise effective authority in preventing its territory from being used to launch attacks against Israel. The Secretary-General averred that, however much Israel had a legitimate interest in protecting itself, that interest was not legitimately served by maintaining Israeli military forces in Lebanon and thus infringing on Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

He referred to a message received from the President of Lebanon on 11 July, urging a renewal of efforts aimed at exploring practical steps towards implementing the Council's requests, particularly resolution 425(1978), and asking the United Nations to start a new momentum. Concerning Lebanon's request of 13 July for a renewal of UNIFIL's mandate,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General restated that the Force played an important role in controlling the level of violence in a very volatile situation prone to even wider conflict. Furthermore, the Force provided humanitarian support to the inhabitants of the area, a role which would be enhanced through co-operation with his newly appointed Special Representative for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon (see PART THREE, Chapter III). In recommending renewal of the UNIFIL mandate, the Secretary-General urged again that efforts be made to bring about Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 29 July 1988, without debate, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 617(1988).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 25 July 1988, and taking note of observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 13 July 1988 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1989;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 617(1988)

29 July 1988 Meeting 2822 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20069).

Financing

The Secretary-General reported in November 1988⁽³²⁾ that, as at 30 September, contributions totalling $1,208.5 million had been received for the operation of UNIFIL out of $1,538.8 million apportioned among Member States since the inception of the Force on 19 March 1978. Of the unpaid balance of $330.3 million, only $105.1 million could be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $225.2 million, including $19.6 million due from China transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.⁽³³⁾ As a consequence, UNIFIL was unable to meet its obligations on a current basis, particularly to troop-contributing countries, which had never been paid on a current and full basis in accordance with established rates. The UNIFIL Suspense Account, set up in 1979⁽³⁴⁾ to facilitate reimbursement to them for equipment and supplies, had thus far not achieved that purpose. Troop-contributing countries had expressed serious concern about the heavy burden placed on their Governments.

As at 30 September 1988, voluntary contributions totalling $1.3 million had been received from Governments, in addition to $3 million to defray expenses for the prospective acquisition of logistic equipment and supplies. Use of the latter voluntary contribution was subject to consultation with the donor Government based on proposals from the Secretariat.

For the mandate periods from 1 February 1988 to 31 January 1989, $141,180,000 gross ($139,416,000 net) was authorized for UNIFIL.⁽³⁵⁾ The costs of UNIFIL for the 12-month period beginning 1 February 1989 were estimated at $143,340,000 gross ($141,072,000 net), based on an average Force strength of 5,850 troops. On a net basis, that was $1,656,000 (1.2 per cent) more than the estimate for the previous period. In the event that future decisions of the Security Council required additional commitments, authorization was to be sought from the General Assembly if in session at the time, or by recourse to the 1987 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1988-1989,⁽³⁶⁾ with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). In the latter case, if the amounts exceeded the financial limit stipulated in the resolution, a special Assembly session would have to be convened.

In December 1988,⁽³⁷⁾ ACABQ reported that the audited accounts for the UNIFIL Special Account indicated a "surplus" balance of $6,313,362 as at 31 December 1987 for the 1986-1987 biennium, representing an excess of income over expenditure due to interest and miscellaneous credits accrued to the account, "income" referring to assessed contributions irrespective of collectibility. However, due to the withholding of contributions by Member States, the surplus balance had been drawn upon to the full extent. ACABQ was of the view that savings could be achieved in the maintenance of transport equipment and supplies and services. It therefore recommended that the UNIFIL budget for the 12 months beginning 1 February 1989 not exceed $142,842,000 gross ($140,574,000 net) and that the Assembly approve accordingly commitment authority up to $11,903,500 gross ($11,714,500 net) per month.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/229 by recorded vote.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 617(1988) of 29 July 1988,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 42/223 of 21 December 1987,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 18 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 42/223,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon by certain Governments,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face increasing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States, resulting from the withholding of contributions by certain Member States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned further that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 an amount of 141,180,000 United States dollars authorized by the Assembly in paragraph 3 of its resolution 42/223 for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 1 February 1988 to 31 January 1989, inclusive;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of 141,180,000 dollars among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 33/14 of 3 November 1978 and the provisions of section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 34/9 B of 17 December 1979, section VI, paragraph 1, of resolution 35/115 A of 10 December 1980, section VI, paragraph 1, of resolution 36/138 A of 16 December 1981, section IX, paragraph 1, of resolution 37/127 A of 17 December 1982, and section VII, paragraphs 1 and 2, of resolution 39/71 A of 13 December 1984; the scale of assessments for the year 1988 shall be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 129,415,000 dollars being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 February to 31 December 1988 inclusive, and the scale of assessments for the year 1989 shall be applied against the balance, that is, 11,765,000 dollars for the period thereafter;

3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of 20,000 dollars other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 February 1988 to 31 January 1989, inclusive;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,744,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 February 1988 to 31 January 1989, inclusive;

5. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon at a rate not to exceed 11,903,500 dollars gross (11,714,500 dollars net) per month for the twelve-month period beginning 1 February 1989, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 617(1988), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and the scale of assessments for the years 1989 and 1990;

6. Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of 6,313,362 dollars, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Renews its invitation to Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, and also to make voluntary contributions in cash to the Suspense Account established in accordance with resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979.

Abduction of OGL Chief William Higgins

Special report of the Secretary-General (March). In March 1988, the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁸⁾ to the Security Council on developments relating to the kidnapping, on 17 February, of Lieutenant-Colonel William Richard Higgins, a United States officer serving since January as Chief of Observer Group Lebanon of UNTSO. According to the testimony of Lebanese eyewitnesses, Colonel Higgins was abducted from his car by armed men in the Tyre Pocket outside the UNIFIL area on his way to UNIFIL headquarters at Naqoura after having met with a local leader of the Amal movement. UNIFIL headquarters was alerted by radio and numerous additional checkpoints were established and patrols increased, but subsequent search measures were to no avail.

On 18 February, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, Marrack Goulding, met at Beirut with Lebanon's President Amin Gemayel and Acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss, who both pledged their full support for efforts to free the Colonel, as well as with the Minister of State for Southern Affairs, Nabih Berri, who promised that the Amal movement he headed would do what it could to find him.

On 19 February, the kidnappers sent to a news agency in Beirut copies of Colonel Higgins' identity card and on 23 February a video tape showing him reading their conditions for his release. Continuing searches by UNIFIL and the Amal movement were not successful; however, UNIFIL received a number of reports suggesting that he might be held north of the Litani River.

The Secretary-General affirmed that UNIFIL would maintain all possible efforts to locate the Colonel and secure his release.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In his July report on UNIFIL,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General expressed distress that, despite continuing efforts to obtain his release, Colonel Higgins remained in captivity. He underlined that at the time of his abduction the Colonel was serving the United Nations under the authority of the Security Council. The Secretary-General appealed to Member States having influence in the matter to do everything in their power to help secure the officer's release.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, after extending UNIFIL's mandate (see above), the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 618(1988).

The Security Council,

Taking note of paragraph 23 of the Secretary-General's report on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon concerning the abduction of Lieutenant-Colonel William Richard Higgins, a military observer of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization serving with the Force,

Recalling the Secretary-General's special report on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling also its resolution 579(1985) of 18 December 1985, which, inter alia, condemned unequivocally all acts of hostage-taking and abduction and called for the immediate release of all hostages and abducted persons wherever and by whomever they are being held,

1. Condemns the abduction of Lieutenant-Colonel Higgins;

2. Demands his immediate release;

3. Calls upon Member States to use their influence in any way possible to promote the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, established by the Security Council in 1974⁽³⁹⁾ and headquartered at Damascus, continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire in the Golan Heights, as called for by the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Its mandate was renewed by the Council, in May and November 1988, each time for six months. The General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights also dealt with the situation in the Golan Heights in the light of Israel's 1981 decision⁽⁴¹⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the area (see also PART THREE, Chapter X).

Composition

As of November 1988,⁽⁴²⁾ UNDOF had a strength of 1,350 troops, up from 1,339 in May. It had contingents from four countries-Austria, 536; Canada, 227; Finland, 419; and Poland, 161, including four officers deployed to the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan in accordance with Security Council resolution 622(1988) (see PART TWO, Chapter III)-and seven United Nations military observers assigned from UNTSO. In addition, UNTSO observers of the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission assisted UNDOF as needed.

On 23 June,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that Major-General Gustaf Welin (Sweden), the Commander of UNDOF since 1 July 1986, was being recalled by his Government to assume a new command. Therefore, the Secretary-General intended, subject to Council approval, to appoint Major-General Adolf Radauer (Austria) as the new Commander with effect from 10 September 1988. The Council agreed to the appointment on 29 June.⁽⁴⁴⁾

Activities

Reports of the Secretary-General. Before the expiration of the mandate of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1988, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities for two six-month periods, from 14 November 1987 to 20 May 1988⁽⁴⁵⁾ and from 21 May to 17 November 1988.⁽⁴²⁾

The functions and guidelines of UNDOF remained as mandated in 1974⁽³⁹⁾ and the Force continued to fulfil its tasks effectively with the co-operation of the parties, facilitated by close contact of the Force

Commander and his staff with the military liaison staff of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. Restrictions on freedom of movement still existed and the Secretary-General engaged in efforts to correct the problem. The cease-fire was maintained and no serious incidents occurred.

UNDOF supervised the area of separation by means of static positions and observation posts, manned 24 hours a day, and by foot and mobile patrols operating at irregular intervals on predetermined routes by day and night, in addition to temporary outposts and patrols. It also conducted fortnightly inspections of armament and forces in the area of limitation. The safety of Syrian shepherds grazing their flocks close to and west of the separation area continued to be of concern to UNDOF and intensified patrolling of new mine-cleared paths helped prevent incidents. Mines continued to pose a threat to the Force; during the two reporting periods, mine-clearing teams cleared 39,159 and 44,820 square metres, respectively, destroying a considerable number of mines and quantities of other military explosives, including ammunition. The Force also continued to assist the International Committee of the Red Cross in its humanitarian activities.

Despite the current quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the Secretary-General cautioned that the situation in the Middle East as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless a comprehensive settlement of all aspects of the problem was reached. Stating in each report that he considered UNDOF'S continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of the Syrian Arab Republic and Israel, recommended that its mandate be extended for a further six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and November)

On 31 May 1988, without debate, the Security Council adopted resolution 613(1988) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1988;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 613(1988)

31 May 1988 Meeting 2815 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/19911).

On 30 November, again without debate, the Council adopted resolution 624(1988) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1989;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 624(1988)

30 November 1988 Meeting 2831 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20300).

Following the adoption of each resolution, the President of the Council made the following statement:⁽⁴⁶⁾

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 24: 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Financing

The Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁷⁾ that, as at 30 September 1988, assessments totalling $843.4 million had been apportioned among Member States for UNDOF since its inception on 31 May 1974⁽³⁹⁾ to 30 November 1988 and for the second United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF-II), established in 1973⁽⁴⁸⁾ and liquidated in 1980.⁽⁴⁹⁾ Contributions received from 1973 to 1988 amounted to $768.4 million. Of the unpaid assessed balance due of $75 million, only $6.4 million was considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $68.6 million. That amount represented $32.6 million in payments withheld by Member States and $36 million transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.⁽³³⁾ Therefore, troop contributors had not been reimbursed in full or on time.

In 1987,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Assembly had appropriated $17,664,000 for UNDOF for the period from 1 December 1987 to 31 May 1988 and authorized the commitment of a rate not to exceed $2,944,000 gross ($2,893,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1988 should the Security Council decide to continue UNDOF beyond 31 May, which it did (see above). For the 12-month period starting 1 December 1988, the estimated costs were $3,019,000 gross ($2,963,000 net) per month. Those estimates assumed an average force strength of 1,327 troops, all ranks, as well as the continuance of existing responsibilities. On a net basis, that was $840,000 (2.4 per cent) more than the estimate for the previous period.

In December 1988,⁽³⁷⁾ ACABQ reported that the audited accounts of UNEF/UNDOF for the 1986-1987 biennium showed a "surplus" balance of $2,413,235 as at 31 December 1987, representing excess of income over expenditures due to interest and miscellaneous credits accrued to the account, with "income" referring to "assessed contributions" irrespective of collectibility. As a consequence of contributions withheld by Member States, the surplus had in effect been drawn upon in full. ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General's cost estimate for UNDOF in 1988/89 be approved and that its requirements for the 12-month period beginning 1 December 1988 not exceed $36,228,000 gross ($35,556,000 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 43/228 by recorded vote.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 624(1988) of 30 November 1988,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 42/70 A of 3 December 1987,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 6 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 33/13 E of 14 December 1978 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 42/70 B of 3 December 1987,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of 17,664,000 United States dollars gross (17,358,000 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 42/70 A for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1988, inclusive;

2. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 18,114,000 dollars for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1988 to 31 May 1989, inclusive;

3. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of 18,114,000 dollars among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and the provisions of section II, paragraph 2 (b) and (c), and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 33/13 D of 8 December 1978, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 34/7 C of 3 December 1979, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 35/45 A of 1 December 1980, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 36/66 A of 30 November 1981, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 37/38 A of 30 November 1982 and section V, paragraphs 1 and 2, of resolution 39/28 A of 30 November 1984; the scale of assessments for the year 1988 shall be applied against a portion thereof, that is,

3,019,000 dollars, being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1988, and the scale of assessments for the year 1989 shall be applied against the balance, that is, 15,095,000 dollars, for the period thereafter;

4. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the estimated income of 6,000 dollars other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1988 to 31 May 1989, inclusive;

5. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 330,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 December 1988 to 31 May 1989, inclusive;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed 3,019,000 dollars gross (2,963,000 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1989, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 624(1988), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

7. Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of 2,413,235 dollars, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered into the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

8. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

Assassination of PLO

Executive Committee member in Tunis

By a letter of 19 April 1988,⁽⁵¹⁾ Tunisia informed the President of the Security Council that, on 16 April, a terrorist commando unit had killed a Tunisian citizen and three Palestinians, one of whom was Khalil al-Wazir, also known as Abu Jihad, a member of the PLO Executive Committee and deputy commander-in-chief of its forces, in his residence in the northern suburbs of Tunis. The preliminary investigation indicated that the commando unit had sophisticated naval and aerial military support, the latter through an Israeli Boeing 707, which was in fact a military aircraft whose electronic equipment jammed the local telecommunications network. Statements by Israeli officials confirmed that direct responsibility for the action lay with the Israeli Government, which had financed and ordered Mr. al-Wazir's execution.

Tunisia requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider what it called a new deliberate attack on its territorial integrity and sovereignty, in violation of an October 1985 Council resolution,⁽⁵²⁾ adopted after an Israeli air raid on a Tunis suburb. It invited the Council to take appropriate steps to prevent the repetition of such acts.

In response to Tunisia's request, the Council held four meetings between 21 and 25 April. At their request, the following States were invited to participate without the right to vote: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Congo, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Greece, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

At Algeria's request,⁽⁵³⁾ an invitation under rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure was extended to the Permanent Observer of LAS. Also at Algeria's request,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Council decided, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, United Kingdom), that an invitation be accorded to the Observer of PLO. The invitation, though not made pursuant to rules 37^b or 39, conferred on PLO the same rights as those conferred on a Member State when invited under rule 37. The United States, which had requested the vote, reiterated its previously stated position, objecting to giving PLO the same rights as a Member State (see above, under "Israel and Lebanon").

Tunisia charged that the attack was premeditated, as evidenced clearly by the preliminary findings of a committee of inquiry set up by the Government, namely: at the very time when the assassination took place, an Israeli military aircraft, disguised as a civilian airliner, was flying not far from the Tunisian coast, providing logistic support to a group of terrorists, and the plane was equipped with ultra-sophisticated electronic equipment which was able to jam the telecommunications network in the area. The terrorists fled in rented vehicles, which were left on the beach 15 kilometres from the scene of the crime; footprints showed that they entered and left Tunisia by sea. Statements by Israeli leaders also established the Israeli Government's responsibility for the operation.

Recalling that this was not the first Israeli terrorist attack on its territory, Tunisia said the Council was duty-bound to condemn the political assassination and State terrorism practised by Israel, whose involvement in the assassination was a violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of an independent State, showing the terrorist nature of its practices and its defiance of international law.

Israel, which did not participate in the Council's proceedings, said in a 21 April statement that the request for Council action was based on unsubstantiated allegations and that it was saddening, in view of the need for action against international terrorism, that the Council was discussing the fate of a terrorist who had openly accepted responsibility for the murder of many innocent men, women and children.

Before the vote, the United States explained that it would abstain because the draft resolution disproportionately placed all blame for the latest round in the rising spiral of violence in the Middle East on one event, while failing to mention other actions that preceded it. It also included language that was suggestive of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Council adopted resolution 611(1988) on 25 April.

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter dated 19 April 1988, in which Tunisia made a complaint against Israel following the new act of aggression committed by the latter against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Tunisia,

Having heard the statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Tunisia,

Having noted with concern that the aggression perpetrated on 16 April 1988 in the locality of Sidi Bou Said has caused loss of human life, particularly the assassination of Mr. Khalil al-Wazir,

Recalling that in accordance with Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations, all Member States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or acting in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Considering that in its resolution 573(1985) of 4 October 1985, adopted following the act of aggression committed on 1 October 1985 by Israel against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Tunisia, it has condemned Israel and has demanded that Israel refrain from perpetrating such acts of aggression or from threatening to do so,

Gravely concerned by the act of aggression which constitutes a serious and renewed threat to peace, security and stability in the Mediterranean region,

1. Condemns vigorously the aggression, perpetrated on 16 April 1988 against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Tunisia in flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations, international law and norms of conduct;

2. Urges Member States of the United Nations to take measures to prevent such acts against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States;

3. Expresses its determination to take the appropriate steps to ensure the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Security Council any new elements available to him and relating to this aggression;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Territories occupied by Israel

The territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflicts in the Middle East comprised the Gaza Strip, the West Bank of the Jordan River, including East Jerusalem, and the Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic. The political and security situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip deteriorated progressively during 1988, following the beginning in late 1987 of the uprising, or intifadah, and with tensions remaining high in the Golan Heights. The Security Council and the General Assembly took action on various aspects of that situation.

The uprising also brought a noticeable increase in deportations of Palestinians from the occupied territories. The Security Council, by resolution 607(1988) in January, called on Israel to refrain from such deportations and requested it to abide by the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention). The Council called again in January on Israel to rescind the order to deport Palestinian civilians and to ensure their safe and immediate return, requesting that it desist from deporting any others (608(1988)).

In November, the Assembly, addressing the uprising, condemned Israel's persistent policies and practices violating the human rights of Palestinians in the occupied territories, in particular the opening of fire by the Israeli army and settlers that resulted in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinians; beatings and breaking of bones; deportation and detention of Palestinian civilians; restrictive economic measures; demolition of houses; collective punishment; and denial of access to the media. The Assembly reaffirmed that Israel's occupation in no way changed the territories' status and demanded that Israel abide by the fourth Geneva Convention (resolution 43/21).

In seven resolutions adopted in December, dealing with aspects of the situation considered by the Committee on Israeli practices, the Assembly reaffirmed that occupation itself was a grave violation of the human rights of the civilian population in those Arab territories, and condemned Israeli policies and practices affecting a variety of aspects of Palestinian life (43/58 A); condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories (43/58 B); demanded that Israel rescind the illegal measures of deporting Palestinians and facilitate their immediate return (43/58 E); called on Israel to release all Palestinians and other Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned (43/58 D) and to rescind all measures taken against Palestinian educational institutions (43/58 G); condemned Israel's persistence in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Golan Heights (43/58 F); and demanded that Israel desist from such action in all of the occupied territories (43/58 C).

The Economic and Social Council condemned the application of an iron-fist policy by Israel against Palestinian women and their families in the occupied territories (1988/25).

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. Repressive Israeli measures to quell the Palestinian uprising led to a grave deterioration of the situation, the Committee on Palestinian rights reported in October 1988.⁽¹⁾ Despite the international outcry over repeated violations of human rights in the occupied territories and requests by the Security Council to abide by the relevant international instruments and United Nations resolutions, Israel continued to resort to military force against the Palestinians resisting the occupation and to engage in armed attacks against the integrity and sovereignty of countries in the region.

The Committee expressed great concern at the mounting casualties and suffering inflicted on the Palestinians and warned that Israel's intransigence would further exacerbate the situation and jeopardize international efforts towards a just and lasting settlement. The urgency of taking measures to protect Palestinians under occupation, to guarantee the safety and security and the legal and human rights of Palestinian refugees in the territories and to alleviate their suffering were paramount concerns in the Committee's programme of work during the year under review.

The Committee estimated that, by 27 September, 248 Palestinians had been shot to death by Israeli armed forces since the beginning of the uprising; another 126 had died from beatings, tear-gas inhalation and other causes related to actions by those forces and Israeli settlers. Thousands of Palestinians had been wounded or had suffered crushed bones in random beatings by Israeli soldiers implementing a policy of might to suppress the uprising, announced by the Israeli Defence Minister in January.

A high proportion of the victims were youths and children, the Committee noted with alarm, adding that the casualty toll was probably higher than reported since many feared arrest if they sought hospital treatment. Furthermore, repeated sealing off of areas, measures restricting activities of the press, and detention and harassment of journalists and human rights workers made it difficult to collect systematic information. At the same time, the growing involvement of armed Israeli settlers in attacks against the Palestinians seemed to be endorsed through an announced policy by the authorities allowing settlers to shoot demonstrators carrying what appeared to be fire-bombs. Humanitarian assistance organizations reported that medical personnel were refused access to camps and villages closed by the military, that hospitals had been attacked, and that patients and medical personnel had been beaten and arrested. In view of the high number of casualties, the Committee noted that the health situation—particularly in Gaza—had reached catastrophic proportions and that hospitals were facing severe shortages because the authorities were restricting access to medical supplies.

Israeli authorities had resorted to a policy of mass arrests, administrative detention without charge or trial, and deportations, in attempts to eradicate the leadership of the uprising. Human rights organizations estimated that, by the end of September, about 5,500 Palestinians were in detention, of whom 2,500 were under administrative detention without charge or trial, and that 33 had been deported, with deportation orders on another 25, in defiance of Security Council resolutions and the fourth Geneva Convention (see below). Collective punishment against the entire Palestinian population also escalated, including the closing off of areas as military zones; prevention of the delivery of foodstuffs, fuel and medicines; disruption of electricity and telephone services; and mass destruction of trees, crops and homes. Some 236 homes were reported destroyed as at 23 September, displacing thousands of Palestinians, while hundreds more were reportedly scheduled for demolition.

Other measures to suppress the uprising included restrictions on freedom of movement or travel and the intensification of measures against Palestinian economic, social and cultural institutions. West Bank universities were repeatedly closed, as were most schools in the Gaza Strip. A large number of schools were sequestered by the Israeli army for its own use, and school property was destroyed. The Palestinian Press Service was closed for six months, and other publications were harassed through closings, disruption of distribution and arrest of journalists. Trade unions and community groups were also harassed, and stringent administrative and economic measures were directed at strengthening Israel's hold on the territories at the same time that it intensified its de facto annexation.

By May 1988, the area of land confiscated by Israel since 1967 was almost 2.8 million dunums (1 dunum = 1,000 square metres), which was more than half the land area of the occupied Palestinian territories. The number of settlements had reached 170 in the West Bank and 20 in the Gaza Strip, with plans for new settlements and expansion of existing ones. Concurrently, stringent restrictions continued to be imposed on water use, new construction, the granting of credit and other activities necessary to develop the territories.

The Committee considered that every effort should be made to ensure the safety and protection of Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its report covering the period from 4 September 1987 to 26 August 1988,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices reflected on the overall situation in the territories, the uprising and specific incidents as they occurred. It described changes instituted by the Israeli Government in the administration of justice as a consequence of the uprising and followed up on practices by Israeli settlers and underground activists. The report included examples of harassment and physical mistreatment, collective punishment, expulsions and deportations, economic and social maltreatment, and unduly harsh treatment of detainees.

While Israel had continued to withhold its co-operation, the Committee benefited from the co-operation of Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO. The report was based on oral and written evidence presented to the Committee by Governments, organizations and individuals, as well as media sources.

The accumulation of frustrations suffered by the civilian population over the years as a result of Israel's persistent policy of annexation and colonization in the territories occupied in June 1967, and the humiliation and suffering brought about by that policy, were bound to provoke a violent reaction, the Committee stated. The restrictions imposed in the framework of the "iron-fist policy" since 1985 and the increasing determination of the young generation of Palestinians to oppose the arbitrary rules set by the occupants had prepared the ground for such confrontation. Thus, the explosion of violence sparked off by an incident in the Gaza Strip in December 1987 had quickly spread to the entire occupied territories.

The uprising was marked by heavy casualties, with hundreds of civilians killed by security forces or settlers, or under other circumstances. The death toll included casualties caused by shooting, beating, gas inhalation or electrocution. While several thousands of civilians were physically injured, the entire Palestinian population suffered as a result of Israel's policy of "force, power and blows".

Day-to-day life in the territories since the start of the uprising was characterized by constant unrest and violent clashes, sparing almost no single village or locality. The pattern of disturbances included demonstrations, stone-throwing and commercial strikes on the one hand, and the use of tear-gas, clubs, rubber and live bullets, curfews and various economic sanctions by the occupation authorities on the other. Acts of aggression by Israeli settlers against Palestinians contributed to a further deterioration in the climate of tension and terror. Information and evidence collected by the Committee also revealed the arbitrary deportation of Palestinians; the illegal demolition of houses as a form of collective punishment; severe limitations on the freedom of expression, which tended in particular to limit or prevent adequate media coverage of events related to the uprising; and the general closure of all educational institutions for several months.

The new situation in the territories engendered a considerable amount of administrative and other forms of detention. Several thousand Palestinians, including minors, had been or continued to be detained in various prisons and detention centres, sometimes even inside Israel itself, illustrating that legal guarantees such as the right to fair trial were often denied to Palestinians. Furthermore, the unprecedented increase in the prison population aggravated already critical detention conditions and the plight of detainees.

The Committee stressed that a year earlier it had warned of an explosive situation that seemed bound to provoke yet more dramatic events. The tragic developments stemmed from the basic reality that occupation itself constituted a violation of human rights, a fact consistently denied by Israel, which asserted that the territories it had occupied in 1967 constituted part of the State of Israel and that therefore measures such as the establishment of colonies and the transfer of Israeli citizens thereto did not constitute annexation. That attitude, the Committee said, was a violation by Israel of its international obligations as a party to the fourth Geneva Convention.

In view of the grave developments, the Committee stressed the responsibility of the international community to prevent a further deterioration of the situation and to protect the civilian population, whose basic rights could be ensured in the long run only through negotiation of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. In the mean time, the Committee made specific recommendations to restore the basic rights of the civilians in the territories. It recommended full application by Israel of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention, that Israel give the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) access to detained persons, and that Israel and other Member States fully support the activities of ICRC and UNRWA.

The Palestinian uprising

Gravely concerned at the situation created by the widespread uprising of Palestinians in the occupied territories and the resulting massive Israeli repression, the Security Council had, in December 1987,⁽³⁾ deplored Israel's practices, particularly the Israeli army's firing at defenceless civilians, and called on Israel to abide immediately by the fourth Geneva Convention and to desist from such practices. The Secretary-General was requested to examine the situation by all available means and to recommend ways to ensure the safety of Palestinians under Israeli occupation.

During 1988, the uprising gained momentum, with its escalation exponentially increasing international attention to the inhuman conditions in the territories occupied by Israel. Avenues open to negotiation were blocked by deep mutual distrust on both the Arab and Israeli sides and by diametrically opposed political and legal positions. The Security Council did not adopt an operational resolution on the conflict due to the repeated negative vote of a permanent member.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 21 January 1988,⁽⁴⁾ in response to the December 1987 Security Council resolution,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the results of a visit to Israel and the occupied territories by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, Marrack Goulding, from 8 to 17 January, which was undertaken to examine the situation on the spot and make recommendations to the Council on ways to ensure the safety and protection of the Palestinian population. At meetings with Mr. Goulding, the Israeli Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Defence Minister and the Co-ordinator of Government Operations in the territories stated that, since Israel did not accept the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention, the Council had no role to play in the security of the territories, for which Israel itself was exclusively responsible.

The Ministers agreed that the situation was serious, with the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) being surprised by the extent of the disturbances. As a largely conscript army trained to defend against external attack, IDF lacked expertise in riot control and, although Israel regretted the civilian casualties, the current disorder in the refugee camps could not be tolerated and firm measures would, if necessary, be taken to suppress it. A political solution had to be found to the underlying problem, and Israel remained committed to the search for a negotiated settlement. Meanwhile, law and order had to be restored.

Throughout Mr. Goulding's visit, nearly all camps in the Gaza Strip were under curfew or had been declared closed military areas, as were many of the West Bank camps. However, during visits to Rafah (Gaza Strip), Dheisheh (Bethlehem) and Balata (Nablus) camps and in other meetings, about 200 Palestinian men and women indicated that they rejected Israeli occupation and insisted that the Palestinian problem was not one of refugees but a political problem requiring a political solution. They complained bitterly about Israeli practices, especially the behaviour of the security forces, and about the Israeli settlements and the obstruction of Palestinian economic development. It was widely maintained that the practices had to be made known to a world which, after 20 years of occupation, seemed to have forgotten the territories. There was criticism of the failure of Member States to secure implementation of the dozens of United Nations resolutions, both on the situation in the territories and on the wider political issue of a just and lasting settlement.

Overall, the atmosphere in the territories, especially in the refugee camps, was marked by tension and unrest, with commercial strikes in almost all towns and most educational institutions closed. More than 2,000 Palestinians, many under the age of 16 and some as young as 11 or 12, had been detained in the month since the beginning of the uprising, while deportations continued. Most acutely affected were residents of the refugee camps, particularly in the Gaza Strip, where normal life had been totally disrupted by curfews and the closing off of camps to non-residents, including relief workers. While at first the Israeli Ministers had believed the rebellion leading to such a situation had been orchestrated by PLO and fundamentalist Islamic groups, they had since concluded that the situation was a spontaneous outburst. It was a reaction supported by Palestinians of all ages and walks of life to 20 years of occupation and to a lack of hope for its early end.

The behaviour of the Israeli security forces was described by the Palestinians consulted, without exception, as not only harsh but random and capricious, in such incidents as the beating of bystanders, the deliberate humiliation of Palestinians who refused to co-operate with Israeli forces, the use of physical and psychological pressure at detention centres and during interrogations, and the prevention of medical assistance to the wounded and injured. Other complaints concerned the lack of outlets for political activity; the taking of land, especially for Israeli settlements; deportations and other human rights violations; interruption of education; shortcomings in the judicial system; and heavy taxation and economic discrimination.

The Co-ordinator of Government Operations said that the security forces had very strict orders against mistreatment of the civilian population; there were isolated cases in which those orders were not properly observed but such cases were severely dealt with by the Israeli authorities. He offered to investigate any individual case that was brought to his attention and to take up any specific case of alleged obstruction of UNRWA activities by the security forces. On the economic questions, he asserted that Israel spent more in the territories than it received in tax revenue and that health and education services there were better than the Palestinians would admit. Israel wanted foreign countries to contribute to the territories' development and would give them a free hand, subject only to security requirements and observance of Israeli procedures.

While the report emphasized that assistance and protection could not be a substitute for a political settlement, it considered forms of protection available to the international community to help the population in the territories. The Secretary-General noted that, unless there was a change in Israel's position, the deployment of United Nations forces in the territories was not currently practicable, but should not be lost sight of. Such forces could be a valuable ingredient in implementing a negotiated settlement or in transitional arrangements that might be agreed on. A measure of legal protection to the population was nevertheless provided by ICRC, whose activities the Secretary-General commended. He recommended a concerted international effort to induce Israel to comply with relevant United Nations resolutions and the fourth Geneva Convention, and the working towards a peaceful, just settlement through an international conference under United Nations auspices.

The negotiation of a settlement would be exceptionally difficult, requiring all concerned to move from positions to which they were strongly attached. The Secretary-General's fundamental recommendation focused on an urgent effort by the international community, led by the Security Council, to promote an effective negotiating process as required by the Charter, thereby unblocking the current impasse.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (January/February)

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report at live meetings held between 27 January and 1 February.

Meeting numbers. SC 2785-2787, 2789, 2790.

With the consent of the Council, the President invited Czechoslovakia, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Qatar, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. PLO's participation, requested by Algeria,⁽⁵⁾ was approved by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, United Kingdom). The United States, which had requested the vote, took the position that, under the Council's provisional rules of procedure, rule 39^a was the only legal basis on which the Council might grant a hearing to non-governmental entities. It had for decades supported a generous interpretation of that rule and would not object had the matter been raised under it. However, the United States opposed special ad hoc departures from orderly procedure and consequently opposed extending to PLO the same rights of participation as a Member State. It believed in listening to all points of view, but not if that required violating the rules; in particular, it did not agree with recent Council practice that appeared to try to enhance selectively the prestige of those wishing to speak through a departure from the rules of procedure.

At Algeria's request,⁽⁶⁾ LAS was invited to participate under rule 39, as was the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), at Kuwait's request.⁽⁷⁾

After discussing the Secretary-General's report and the issues raised in it, the Council voted on 1 February on a draft resolution⁽⁸⁾ submitted by Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia and Zambia. By the text, the Council would have called again on Israel to desist from its policies and practices violating the human rights of the Palestinian people and accept the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention; requested that it facilitate the tasks of ICRC and UNRWA and that all Member States give them their full support; and affirmed the urgent need to achieve a comprehensive settlement under United Nations auspices.

The vote was 14 to 1, as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia, Zambia.
Against: United States.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

Israel told the Council that it was not dealing with peaceful, non-violent demonstrations, but with violent disturbances deliberately geared to undermine normal life, employing means to kill and maim. Having failed in war, terrorism and all other violent means at their disposal, the Arab rejectionists now sought the strategy of anarchy. Israel maintained that it had decided to act de facto in accordance with the humanitarian provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention and to co-operate with ICRC, but not to accept its de jure applicability to the territories.

The PLO Observer stressed that the issue was not the restoration of law and order, but a confrontation by the occupying Power with the Palestinians and their rising up to demand the right to life in peace and freedom, untarnished by the presence of Israeli occupation, military or otherwise; all iron-fist measures would not bend that determination. Ending Israeli occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, would definitely contribute to the endeavours of a comprehensive settlement and to peace. Meanwhile, in addressing immediate ways to protect the civilian population in the territories, the mere presence of the United Nations there as a symbol of protection and admission of responsibility was important. The Council should respond to the tragic situation and address the root cause, in keeping with the remedy prescribed in the relevant Assembly resolutions.

Explaining its negative vote, the United States said the text could detract from ongoing diplomatic efforts with the parties directly concerned on ways to resolve the Palestinian conflict; agreement on a negotiating process and the appropriate auspices for negotiations could not be imposed on those parties even by implication, which the draft resolution attempted to do.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March and April)

At the request of Tunisia,⁽⁹⁾ as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, the Security Council held further meetings on the situation in the occupied territories, on 30 March and 14 and 15 April.

Meeting numbers. SC 2804-2806.

At their request, Bangladesh, India, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia were invited to participate without voting rights. The Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights was invited, at his own request, under rule 39^a of the provisional rules of procedure.

Algeria requested⁽¹⁰⁾ PLO's participation, which was approved by the same vote as in January, after the United States restated its negative position on such participation (see above). LAS was invited to participate at Algeria's request,⁽¹¹⁾ as was OIC, as requested by Jordan.⁽¹²⁾

On 15 April, the Council voted on a draft resolution⁽¹³⁾ put forward by the same six States that had proposed the February text (see above). By wording similar to that text, the Council would have condemned Israel for violating the Palestinians' human rights, particularly the killing and wounding of defenceless civilians; urged it to abide immediately and scrupulously by the fourth Geneva Convention, to rescind its deportation orders on Palestinian civilians and ensure the safe and immediate return of those already deported, and to desist from such deportations; and affirmed the need to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict under United Nations auspices.

The vote was 14 to 1 (United States), following the same voting pattern as on 1 February, and the draft was thus rejected owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

Although opposing the deportations, the United States felt the Council should desist from rhetoric and unproductive texts which would cut across the objective of finding a way to peace in the Middle East. The draft neither contributed to easing tension nor promoted the cause of peace.

Israel said that, during the disturbances, its soldiers had found themselves in extremely trying conditions but had exercised utmost restraint. It regretted any loss of life but, when confronted with unbridled mob violence, it had to quell it to restore order. Those who readily relied on the fourth Geneva Convention could not deny that that remained any administration's foremost responsibility. Also, political negotiations could not proceed under the threat of any violence.

The PLO Observer stressed that the Council was called upon to adopt all measures ensuring the effective protection of Palestinians and to require the occupying forces to cease immediately arbitrary measures violating human rights and international law. The Council must follow closely the situation through measures available to the United Nations, entrust the Secretary-General with the task of pursuing constructive efforts along those lines, and support the Secretary-General's endeavours to convene an international peace conference under United Nations auspices.

The Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights appealed to the Secretary-General to implement his recommendations⁽⁴⁾ calling for the provision of necessary humanitarian assistance to suffering Palestinians.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

After consultations, the President of the Security Council, on 26 August, issued a statement on behalf of its members:⁽¹⁴⁾

"The members of the Security Council are gravely concerned by the continued deterioration of the situation in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and especially by the current grave and serious situation resulting from the closing-off of areas, the imposition of curfews and the consequent increase in the numbers of injuries and deaths that have occurred.

"The members of the Council are profoundly concerned by the persistence of Israel, the occupying Power, in continuing its policy of deporting Palestinian civilians in contravention of Security Council resolutions and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as demonstrated on 17 August 1988 by its expulsion of four Palestinian civilians to Lebanon and its decision to expel 40 more. The members of the Council request Israel immediately to desist from deporting any Palestinian civilians and immediately to ensure the safe return of those already deported.

"The members of the Council consider that the current situation in the occupied territories, described in the first paragraph above, has grave consequences for endeavours to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

"They reaffirm that the above-mentioned Geneva Convention is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and request the high contracting parties to ensure respect for the Convention.

"Recalling Security Council resolutions, the members of the Council will keep the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, under review."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November)

On 3 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/21 by recorded vote.

The uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Aware of the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987 against Israeli occupation, which has received significant attention and sympathy from world public opinion,

Deeply concerned at the alarming situation in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, as well as in the other occupied Arab territories, as a result of the continued occupation by Israel, the occupying Power, and of its persistent policies and practices against the Palestinian people,

Reaffirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling its relevant resolutions as well as Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988 and 608(1988) of 14 January 1988,

Recognizing the need for increased support and aid for, and solidarity with, the Palestinian people under Israeli occupation,

Conscious of the urgent need to resolve the underlying problem through a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement, including a solution to the Palestinian problem in all its aspects,

1. Condemns Israel's persistent policies and practices violating the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, and, in particular, such acts as the opening of fire by the Israeli army and settlers that result in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians, the beating and breaking of bones, the deportation of Palestinian civilians, the imposition of restrictive economic measures, the demolition of houses, collective punishment and detentions, as well as denial of access to the media;

2. Strongly deplores the continuing disregard by Israel, the occupying Power, of the relevant decisions of the Security Council;

3. Reaffirms that the occupation by Israel of the Palestinian territories since 1967, including Jerusalem, in no way changes the legal status of those territories;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, abide immediately and scrupulously by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and desist forthwith from its policies and practices that are in violation of the provisions of the Convention;

5. Calls upon all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances, in conformity with their obligation under article 1 thereof;

6. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and the mass communications media to continue and enhance their support for the Palestinian people;

7. Urges the Security Council to consider the current situation in the occupied Palestinian territories, taking into account the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to examine the present situation in the occupied Palestinian territories by all means available to him and to submit periodic reports thereon, the first such report no later than 17 November 1988.

General Assembly resolution 43/21

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Belize, Canada, Costa Rica, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Grenada, Iceland, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, United Kingdom, Zaire.

In Israel's view, the text encouraged intransigence, incited hostility and promoted even more violence. It did not call on the residents of the territories to exercise restraint and ignored completely the violent nature of the activities directed against both Jews and Arabs, which had obliged Israel to take measures in order to restore calm. Furthermore, the text did not even allude to a political solution on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

Report of the Secretary-General (November). In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General noted in a follow-up report of 21 November⁽¹⁵⁾ that the Secretariat's Centre for Human Rights had on 10 November contacted Israel regarding the dispatch of a senior official to the occupied territories to examine the situation on the spot. On 14 November, Israel replied that the request was being considered by the Government, but, having received no further word, the Secretary-General requested an update of the information in the October report⁽²⁾ of the Committee on Israeli practices (see above).

The update, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, summarized Israeli press reports from 1 September to 1 November, as well as information from UNRWA and ICRC, concluding that the situation in the occupied territories had worsened, with civilian deaths and injuries continuing to be widespread, along with other serious violations of human rights. The Secretary-General was deeply distressed by the high number of casualties, stating that the Israeli counter-measures of deportations, administrative detentions and collective punishments such as the imposition of curfews, the blowing up of houses and the closure of schools could only aggravate the tension already prevailing in the area. He reaffirmed that under the fourth Geneva Convention, the civilian population of the territories was entitled to safety and protection. However, those measures, urgent as they were, would not resolve the conflict's underlying problem. The Secretary-General, therefore, remained fully committed to the search for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement.

Fourth Geneva Convention

In 1988, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X) again reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949 applied to the Israeli-occupied territories. Continuing disregard of the Convention-the main international instrument in humanitarian law that applied to the occupied territories-was reported throughout the year by the Committee on Israeli practices, which cited Israel's policy of annexation, settlements, deportations and ill-treatment of detainees in flagrant violation of the Convention.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its October 1988 report,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices stressed that Israel's general policy towards the occupied territories was based on the principle that they were part of the State of Israel and that therefore measures such as the establishment of colonies in the occupied territories and the transfer of Israeli citizens thereto did not constitute a process of annexation. That represented a flagrant violation of Israel's international obligations as a State party to the fourth Geneva Convention, which stipulated that military occupation was to be considered as a temporary, de facto situation, giving no right to the occupying Power over the territorial integrity of occupied territories. Israel's attitude was reflected in Prime Minister Shamir's statement (reported in Ha'aretz on 19 October 1987) that Jerusalem, Samaria, the Sharon, the Galilee and the Golan Heights were one entity and that it was a dangerous illusion to say that the people of Israel would ever cut itself from those areas.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his January report to the Security Council,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that Palestinians had requested the deployment of United Nations forces in the occupied territories, either to protect the inhabitants against Israeli security forces or to replace those forces in the populated areas. The Secretary-General stated that he had considered both possibilities, but, under the fourth Geneva Convention, the occupying Power was responsible for maintaining law and order and for protecting the civilian population. Since the prior consent of the parties to a conflict was a principle of United Nations peace-keeping operations, Israel's non-agreement was a serious deterrent.

With regard to the civilian population's entitlement to safety under the Convention, the Secretary-General reported that ICRC, the guardian of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, had frequently alluded to Israeli violations, which had also been the subject of numerous Security Council resolutions. Those violations included attempts to alter the status of Jerusalem, the establishment of Israeli settlements in the territories, deportations of Palestinian civilians, collective punishments such as curfews applied to whole districts, and the destruction of houses. There was also evidence that IDF used disproportionate force in dealing with demonstrations, leading to fatalities.

Pending a political settlement, the most effective way to ensure the safety and protection of the civilian population of the territories would be for Israel to apply in full the Convention's provisions. To that end, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council appeal to all the High Contracting Parties having diplomatic relations with Israel to use all means at their disposal to persuade Israel to change its position. Meanwhile, he urged Israel to introduce temporary measures, including: training IDF personnel in the rules of international humanitarian law (an obligation under the Convention); issuing orders for IDF personnel to assist, in all circumstances, in the provision of medical care to wounded persons; and ordering IDF not to obstruct delivery of essential food and medical supplies.

The Secretary-General, in November,⁽¹⁵⁾ again stressed that it was essential that the occupying Power scrupulously apply the Convention's provisions.

In September,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported, in accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ on the application of the fourth Geneva Convention, that, in a letter of 7 July 1988, Israel had maintained that, in view of the sui generis status of Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District, the de jure applicability of the Convention to those areas was doubtful. Israel preferred to leave aside the legal question of the status of those areas and had decided, since 1967, to act in de facto accordance with the Convention's humanitarian provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/58 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling also its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981, 37/88 A of 10 December 1982, 38/79 B of 15 December 1983, 39/95 B of 14 December 1984, 40/161 B of 16 December 1985, 41/63 B of 3 December 1986 and 42/160 B of 8 December 1987,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 September 1988 and 21 November 1988,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and the concerned Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to the Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns once the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel acknowledge and comply with the provisions of the Convention in the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urgent& culls upon all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 1 by a recorded vote of 150 to 1. The Special Political Committee had approved the same provision by a recorded vote of 122 to 1. The vote had been requested by Israel, which stated that it supported paragraph 1, but not the text as a whole, as it did nothing to resolve the problems it sought to address.

Deportation of Palestinians

According to the Committee on Israeli practices,⁽²⁾ the period since the beginning of the uprising was characterized by a noticeable increase in expulsions and deportations from the occupied territories, carried out in spite of international protest against such illegal practices.

On 5 January,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights reported that Israeli authorities had decided to expel nine Palestinians, five from the West Bank and four from the Gaza Strip, accusing them of being instigators of the intifadah. The nine had been on a protest hunger strike in their respective prisons, where they were to remain until a decision was taken on their appeal against the expulsion orders.

By a letter of 12 January,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Committee Chairman drew the urgent attention of the Security Council to the continuing deterioration of the situation in the territories owing to Israel's policies and practices, including use of live ammunition against demonstrators, mass arrests, detentions and deportations.

Reports of further expulsions continued to be received during 1988. On 12 April,⁽²⁰⁾ Lebanon protested that the previous day Israel had transported eight Palestinians by helicopter into the so-called security zone, then forcing them out of there, so that later that day they arrived at Rachaya in southern Lebanon. Lebanon condemned the deportations and Israel's exploitation of its territory for that purpose, in violation of Lebanese sovereignty. In reporting the same incident on 13 April,⁽²¹⁾ the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights added that Israel had decided to deport another 12 Palestinians, according to The New York Times. Seventeen citizens from the village of Chabaa inside the so-called "security zone" who had committed no crime were deported by Israeli forces on 24 May, according to a communication by Lebanon of the following day.⁽²²⁾

On 4 August, the Committee's Acting Chairman stated that on 1 August, as also communicated by Mauritania,⁽²³⁾ eight Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza were deported to southern Lebanon on charges of inciting the uprising, and Israel declared its intention to deport six more. An additional four Palestinians from Gaza were deported to southern Lebanon on 17 August, an action protested by Lebanon the following day.⁽²⁴⁾

The Committee on Palestinian rights, in October,⁽¹⁾ stated that a total of 33 Palestinians had been deported and there were deportation orders for another 25.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January and August)

At the request of Jordan on behalf of the Arab Group,⁽²⁵⁾ the Security Council convened on 5 January to consider the question of deportations of Palestinians from the occupied territories.

Israel, at its own request, was invited to participate without the right to vote under rule 37^b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. At Algeria's request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Council decided by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, United Kingdom), that PLO also be invited to participate. Though not made pursuant to rules 37 or 39,^a the invitation gave PLO the same rights as those of a Member State invited under rule 37.

In requesting the vote, the United States reiterated its position that PLO should not be given the same rights as a Member State; it believed in hearing all points of view but not if that required violating the Council's rules.

Speaking before the Council, Israel maintained that the recent violence was not spontaneous and that a network of subversive organizers had been apprehended. In a few hard-core cases, Israel had decided on deportation—a right it had under international law; it would not countenance attempts to interfere with its legitimate responsibility of maintaining orderly government in all areas under its control.

The United States found that harsh deportation measures were unnecessary to maintain order; they increased tension rather than creating a political atmosphere conducive to reconciliation.

On 5 January, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 607(1988).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, Expressing grave concern over the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Having been apprised of the decision of Israel, the occupying Power, to "continue the deportation" of Palestinian civilians in the occupied territories,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular articles 47 and 49 of same,

1. Reaffirms once again that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Calls upon Israel to refrain from deporting any Palestinian civilians from the occupied territories:

3. Strongly requests Israel, the occupying Power, to abide by its obligations arising from the Convention;

4. Decides to keep the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, under review.

Security Council resolution 607(1988)

5 January 1988 Meeting 2780 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/19403).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia, Zambia,

On 13 January, four Palestinians were deported to Lebanon, while five others received deportation notices which were under appeal.

The following day, the Council again took up the question of deportations, inviting Israel and Lebanon to participate without voting rights. As it had done in January, the Council also invited PLO to participate, at Algeria's request.⁽²⁷⁾ It did so after voting on the matter at the request of the United States. The pattern of the voting was identical to that at the previous meeting, with the United States maintaining its position on PLO's eligibility to participate (see above).

Lebanon said the four Palestinians were currently in the Israeli-occupied "security zone" of southern Lebanon, without shelter or home; ICRC should be allowed to meet those individuals and bring them to Palestinian territory. The Council had the responsibility to adopt prompt measures required by international humanitarian law.

Israel rejected as false the depiction of its actions to remove a handful of leading terrorists of the Habash and Fatah groups in words appropriate to mass expulsion and uprooting of entire populations. In its recent meetings and resolutions, the Council had condoned all Palestinian violence and condemned all Israeli countermeasures, thus pushing the peace process farther away.

PLO refuted Israel's argument that it had to deport the Palestinians in question because they rejected due process of justice, and reasserted that in any case under article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention the occupying Power was prohibited from deporting persons. The deportations also violated the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 9 of which stated that no one should be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.⁽²⁸⁾

On 14 January, the Council adopted resolution 608(1988).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 607(1988) of 5 January 1988,

Expressing its deep regret that Israel, the occupying Power, has, in defiance of that resolution, deported Palestinian civilians,

1. Calls upon Israel to rescind the order to deport Palestinian civilians and to ensure the safe and immediate return to the occupied Palestinian territories of those already deported;

2. Requests that Israel desist forthwith from deporting any other Palestinian civilians from the occupied territories;

3. Decides to keep the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, under review.

Security Council resolution 608(1988)

14 January 1988 Meeting 2781 14-0-1

6-nation draft (S/19429).

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

The United States said that, while not minimizing the seriousness of deportations and urging Israel to avoid further deportations, it did not believe that selective attention to that issue in the Council was justified or served a useful purpose. It also noted that the four deported individuals declined to appeal to the Israeli Supreme Court, thus not allowing the judicial process to run its course.

In a 26 August statement on behalf of the Council members⁽¹⁴⁾ (see above, under "The Palestinian uprising"), the Council President expressed profound concern over Israel's policy of deporting Palestinians, as demonstrated by the four expelled on 17 August and its decision to expel 40 more. He requested Israel to desist from those policies and to ensure immediately the safe return of those already deported.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). Israel's position on the deportation question, as reported by the Secretary-General in August 1988,⁽²⁹⁾ in response to a 1987 request of the General Assembly,⁽³⁰⁾ was that the continuing threat posed by terrorist activity to Israel's security accounted for its measures to ensure the maintenance of public order as contemplated by international law. Expulsion orders against individuals had been issued in the most extreme cases and were subject first to the review of an advisory committee and then to Israel's High Court of Justice. That Court had upheld the legality of such expulsion orders on appeal. An addendum to the report contained responses by the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR, condemning Israel's actions and supporting United Nations resolutions concerning protection of the population of the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/58 E by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Palestinian detainees

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its October 1988 report,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices cited extensive evidence of detainees being treated under harsh conditions in the occupied territories. The exceptional situation created by the uprising had resulted in an unprecedented increase in the number of detainees, which had led to the opening of new detention centres and to a worsening of already critical conditions. By mid-May, an estimated 1,900 Palestinians were held in administrative detention. In addition to existing prisons, army detention centres had increased in number, and Israeli military government buildings and police stations were often used temporarily for detention purposes. Detainees were also held in centres inside Israel itself, in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. Inmates were faced with overcrowding, physical and psychological ill-treatment, and lack of adequate health services, nutrition and clothing. Some of those detained were no older than 11 or 12 years. Testimonies also referred to the practice of repeatedly detaining the same persons, turning them into so-called special cases who spent most of their lives in prison, or to the arbitrary detention of several members of the same family.

Written information submitted to the Committee referred to incidents where individuals had died during interrogation, where prison staff were replaced by harsher military police, and where prisoners had been tortured, beaten and kept in wretched conditions without adequate sanitation, water, food and medical care. When brought to light through the Israeli judicial system, punishments for serious, routine ill-treatment of prisoners took the form of demotions in rank or imprisonment for several months.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council allegations of routine violence in detention centres, as well as in the whole system of administrative detention, with the purpose of interrogation being normally to extract a confession for use in proceedings in the military courts. Heavy physical and psychological pressure was used for that purpose by the General Security Services, which applied techniques such as hooding to prevent permanent physical disfigurement.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's 21 November 1988 report on the intifadah⁽¹⁵⁾ were summaries of events in the occupied territories reported in the Israeli press from 1 September to 1 November, including details on Arab detainees. ICRC delegates were visiting approximately 6,200 persons in eight military detention centres, more than 2,100 of whom were administrative detainees.

In August,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, in response to his 5 February note verbale to Israel regarding steps it had taken to implement the 1987 General Assembly resolution on arbitrary detentions,⁽³²⁾ Israel stated on 7 July that that resolution bore unconcealed bias; detention and imprisonment in Judaea, Samaria and Gaza were legal measures taken against terrorism and violence. Israel was responsible under international law for maintaining public order and security, a duty it carried out in conformity with the utmost regard to preserving the rule of law and protecting human rights. Due process was guaranteed by allowing detainees and prisoners to petition Israel's High Court of Justice, and ICRC delegates were allowed regular visits to prisons and detention centres.

Israeli settlements

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its October 1988 report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to the increasing demolition of houses by Israel in the occupied territories and the growing involvement of Israeli settlers in attacks against the Palestinian population, which seemed to be endorsed by the authorities' announced policy of allowing settlers to shoot demonstrators carrying what appeared to be fire-bombs. The number of settlements had reached 170 in the West Bank and 20 in Gaza, with new construction and expansion announced. On the other hand, stringent restrictions were imposed for Arabs on water use, new construction, credit-granting and other activities necessary to develop the territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. Similarly, the Committee on Israeli practices, also in October,⁽²⁾ reported that Israel continued to annex Palestinian territory and establish or plan settlements. In April, following a drastic drop in the sale of flats in the territories, owing to unrest, Israel decided on measures to boost construction there and, in June, it was announced that 10 provisional settlements were to be converted into permanent ones. According to the Jerusalem Post of 4 March, the Israeli Finance Minister had agreed to add $6.5 million to funds available for Jewish settlements in the territories.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in January⁽⁴⁾ to the Security Council on complaints by Palestinians that land was being taken for Israeli settlements and that those settlements were given privileged access to water supplies. Israeli Ministers rejected those and other complaints, describing them as politically motivated exaggerations or distortions.

In September,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, in response to his query of 5 February on the implementation of a 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁴⁾ demanding that Israel desist from changing the legal status or demographic composition of the territories, Israel had stated on 7 July that, in view of the sui generis status of Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District, the de jure applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to those areas was doubtful and it preferred to leave aside the legal question of status, having decided since 1967 to act in de facto accordance with the humanitarian provisions of that Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/58 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16 December 1981, 37/88 B of 10 December 1982, 38/79 C of 15 December 1983, 39/95 C of 14 December 1984, 40/161 C of 16 December 1985, 41/63 C of 3 December 1986 and 42/160 C of 8 December 1987,

Expressing Grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 September 1988 and 21 November 1988,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Golan Heights

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its October 1988 report,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices indicated that tension prevailed in the Syrian territory under Israeli occupation, with reported disturbances and arrests of residents of Majdal Shams in the northern Golan Heights. The Syrian Arab Republic reported to the Committee in May that Israeli human rights violations in the Golan Heights had intensified. Annexation, introduction of settlers, Judaization and expropriation of water continued, as confirmed by official Israeli statements. In addition, detention and imprisonment, oppression, house arrest and raids, imposition of curfews and repression of freedom of expression escalated.

Meanwhile, the economic position of the population was increasingly deteriorating as a result of Israeli policies, which treated the occupied areas as dependent on the Israeli economy and as a major consumer market for Israeli products. Israel had blocked the marketing of agricultural produce, the mainstay of the population there. Furthermore, the occupation authorities insisted on eliminating any national character from the population and cutting the people off from their national historic and cultural roots with the Syrian Arab Republic. The level of education and health care provided in the schools also deteriorated.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 resolution of the General Assembly⁽³⁵⁾ calling on Member States not to recognize Israel's imposition of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, the Secretary-General reported on 26 August 1988⁽³⁶⁾ that seven States had expressed support for the provisions of that resolution. Israel's position remained as first expressed in 1981,⁽³⁷⁾ namely, that it could not be expected to maintain indefinitely a military administration merely to accommodate the Syrian Arab Republic's interest in persistent conflict and that its legislation applied to the Golan Heights did not diminish the local population's rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/54 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 November 1988,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982, 38/180 A of 19 December 1983, 39/146 B of 14 December 1984, 40/168 B of 16 December 1985, 41/162 B of 4 December 1986 and 42/209 C of 11 December 1987,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting also that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General

Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1, 37/123 A, 38/180 A, 39/146 B, 40/168 B, 41/162 B and 42/209 C;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and of the other occupied Arab territories, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan since 1967 and its annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages it to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories: which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/I of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984, 40/161 F of 16 December 1985, 41/63 F of 3 December 1986, 42/160 F of 8 December 1987 and 43/21 of 3 November 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 26 August 1988,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter decised decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israeli measures against educational institutions

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights reported in October 1988⁽¹⁾ that universities and other educational institutions in the West Bank, which had suffered frequent closings and disruptions prior to the uprising, were closed from December 1987 to May 1988, and then again for varying periods. Most schools in the Gaza Strip were also repeatedly closed. A large number of schools were sequestered by the army for its own use and school property was destroyed. All teachers newly appointed for the 1987/88 academic year were dismissed.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The Committee on Israeli practices⁽²⁾ detailed information it had received regarding freedom of education for Palestinians in the territories during the current academic year. That included the killing and physical mistreatment of students, detention of some 1,000 students as well as teachers, and the fining of students. Israel was charged with trying to change the entire structure of universities by interfering in their internal affairs and by preventing the appointment of professors and the admission of students. It was also accused of imposing financial constraints and taxes on the educational institutions and of trying to modify their curriculum to suit its views.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council in January 1988⁽⁴⁾ that education in the territories had been interrupted through the closing of schools and universities, especially through the denial of laissez-passers for an adequate period to Palestinian students pursuing higher education in other countries. In November,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General summarized reports in the Israeli press from 1 September to 1 November on instances of Israeli military forces interfering with Palestinian educational facilities. In September, it was reported, several vocational training centres at Tulkarm were raided and 14 educational centres were shut down, on the grounds that they had violated an order closing down all educational institutions in the West Bank until 1 October.

The Secretary-General informed the General Assembly⁽³⁸⁾ that no reply had been received by 25 August from Israel to his February request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement a 1987 Assembly demand⁽³⁹⁾ that it rescind all actions and measures against universities and educational institutions, ensure their freedom and refrain from hindering their effective operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/58 G by recorded vote.

The General Assembly:

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued and intensified harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling Security Council resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/79 G of 15 December 1983, 39/95 G of 14 December 1984, 40/161 G of 16 December 1985, 41/63 G of 3 December 1986, 42/160 G of 8 December 1987 and 43/21 of 3 November 1988,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 25 August 1988 and 21 November 1988,

Taking note of the relevant decisions adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning the educational and cultural situation in the occupied territories,

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the opening of fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities, schools and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and education programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities, schools and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and social conditions of Palestinians

Report of the Secretary-General. In his January report to the Security Council on the situation in the occupied territories,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the recent disturbances had attracted world attention to the squalid living conditions in many of the refugee camps in the territories, especially in the Gaza Strip, resulting from the lack of such basic amenities as paved roads, sewerage, water, lighting and minimum-standard housing. The Commissioner-General of UNRWA had expressed an urgent need to rehabilitate many UNRWA installations, such as schools, health centres and food distribution centres. Therefore, the Secretary-General had asked the Commissioner-General to prepare urgently proposals for improving the camps' infrastructure.

The Secretary-General also stated that Palestinians felt it was a deliberate Israeli policy to obstruct the territories' economic development. Israeli authorities maintained that the accusation was unfounded and that they would welcome foreign assistance for the development of the territories, provided that each project complied with Israel's overriding security requirements and with Israeli procedures. Many Palestinians consulted said they hoped for a concerted international effort to revive the territories' economy, perhaps initially through an expansion of UNDP's programme. The Secretary-General asked the UNDP Administrator to study that possibility (see above, under "Assistance to Palestinians").

Heavy taxation was a frequent complaint, many of the proceeds benefiting Israel rather than the territories, for which the budget was not published. Economic discrimination was also frequently cited, with the purpose of hindering agricultural and industrial development and keeping the Palestinians as both a captive market and a source of cheap labour for Israel.

Israeli Ministers meeting with Under-Secretary-General Goulding said, to the contrary, that there had been great improvements in the economic and social situation since 1967, especially regarding consumption and social services. They drew a favourable comparison between Israel's record and that of Egypt and Jordan during 1948-1967. They agreed that more needed to be done to enhance the economic and social conditions, but were disappointed by the poor response of the international community to Israel's invitation to provide funds for developing the territories.

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its October report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights noted that the Israeli authorities had adopted a number of stringent administrative and economic measures directed at further strengthening their control over key aspects of life in the territories and at stifling Palestinian resistance. Back taxes were collected aggressively and the direct export of agricultural produce from the territories was prohibited. In addition, the amount of money Palestinians were permitted to bring into the territories was reduced to one fifth of the amount previously allowed, thus almost eliminating the possibility of indirect export and severely reducing remittances from Palestinians working abroad, on which many families depended. Shops of an essential nature, such as bakeries and pharmacies, were repeatedly closed by the authorities, while others were forcibly opened to break protest strikes.

Finance and trade

In response to a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June 1988 a note⁽⁴¹⁾ on a number of studies under way on finance and trade in the occupied territories. In addition to compiling information on Israeli financial practices in the occupied Golan Heights to complete an in-depth study on the financial sector in the territories, submitted in part in 1987,⁽⁴²⁾ a second study on recent economic developments in the territories with special reference to the external trade sector was being conducted by UNCTAD in co-operation with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia as part of its 1988/89 work programme.

That report⁽⁴³⁾ was before the Trade and Development Board when it met in September/October 1988. The report showed that most of the key economic indicators analysed by UNCTAD's Special Economic Unit (Palestinian people) reflected basic structural deficiencies owing to a lack of indigenous institutions to steer the economy and the predominance of Israeli economic interests.

The potential for sustained development of the Palestinian economy was constrained by a process of transformation in the traditional sector, unaccompanied by policies and measures to absorb and regulate the pressures of readjustment. Israeli occupation brought a host of pressures on the Palestinian economy, which aggravated its development performance and resulted in a steady decline in traditional branches without parallel encouragement of growth in modern sectors. The effects of occupation reduced agricultural employment opportunities; encouraged the flight of labour from the traditional sector into labour-intensive sectors of the Israeli economy; neglected the needs of Palestinian productive sectors or reoriented them to serving Israeli production and consumption interests; and imposed control over trade channels, ensuring Israeli domination of Palestinian trade. Those effects were profoundly felt by the small and unsophisticated Palestinian economy, confronted with the challenge of competing on unequal and unprotected terms with the articulated, highly capitalized and technologically advanced Israeli economy.

The mechanisms for better planning and supporting the Palestinian economy had been eroded through 21 years of occupation. While power over economic management had been assumed by the Israeli authorities, they failed to fulfil the concomitant responsibilities; moreover, the concentration of that power within the jurisdiction of the Israeli military authorities continued to inhibit economic performance and potential. In those circumstances, stable and rational development and concomitant policies and measures could not emerge spontaneously.

The problems plaguing the Palestinian economy had acquired fresh urgency and significance after the beginning of the intifadah, which had many economic implications and repercussions and posed new development challenges for both the Palestinians and the Israeli occupation authorities.

By July 1988, there were few indications that the Israeli authorities intended to rescind restrictions affecting Palestinian development, including those instituted since the beginning of the year. Their main concern regarding the economic effects of the uprising was the damage to the Israeli economy as a result of Palestinian labour absenteeism, particularly in agriculture, construction, services and industry, and the reduced market for certain Israeli exports such as textiles, foodstuffs and other consumer goods, which featured prominently in Palestinian markets. The economic costs to Israel during the first five months of unrest were estimated at $800 million and included increased security costs and declines of 15-20 per cent in tourism revenues, 20 per cent in construction activities and more than 3 per cent in agricultural and industrial output, as well as indirect costs caused by manpower shortages arising from extra duty in the Israeli armed forces.

Palestinian economic resistance measures included: proposals for a boycott of Israeli products and promotion of Palestinian self-sufficiency; calls for supporting indigenous Palestinian production facilities; a return to agriculture; creation of alternative employment opportunities for Palestinians who ceased to work as migrant labourers in Israel or resigned their posts in the Israeli civil administration; and a "tax revolt".

The trade sector was increasingly being linked to the economy of Israel, with a growing deficit in merchandise trade, resulting in unfavourable patterns and terms of trade for the territories. Whereas there was no trade with Israel until 1967, the growth of imports from Israel over the occupation period was more than nine-and-a-half-fold between 1970 and 1986, bringing Israel's share of Palestinian imports to 90 per cent. A number of recommendations contained in the report for policy action were aimed at relaxing the severe constraints on external trade and therefore on the growth and development of the Palestinian economy.

Despite numerous measures aimed at constraining Palestinian economic activities during the uprising, the Palestinian people had demonstrated initiatives aimed at promoting self-reliance, which deserved to be supported by international development assistance.

The Board, on 5 October,⁽⁴⁴⁾ took note of the report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/65 by roll-call vote.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied
Palestinian and other Arab territories

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly decision 40/432 of 17 December 1985, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/87 of 8 July 1987 and General Assembly decision 42/449 of 17 December 1987,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General concerning progress in the implementation of General Assembly decision 40/432 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/87;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to speed up the preparation of the required report on the trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian territories and on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to use the terminology decided upon in the relevant General Assembly resolutions.

Palestinian women

Following consideration of a report by the Secretary-General on the situation of Palestinian women living within and outside the occupied territories⁽⁴⁵⁾ (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1988/25 of 26 May 1988, condemned the application of an "iron-fist" policy by Israel against Palestinian women and their families and requested the Commission on the Status of Women to monitor the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women⁽⁴⁶⁾ concerning assistance to Palestinian women. The Council reaffirmed that Palestinian women could not participate in attaining the objectives of equality, development and peace without realizing their inalienable rights to return to their homes, to exercise self-determination and to establish an independent State. The Secretary-General was urgently requested to send an expert mission to investigate the situation of Palestinian women and children, in the light of the recent tragic developments in the territories.

Palestine refugees

More than 2 million refugees were registered with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East as at 30 June 1988⁽¹⁾ in live areas of the Middle East: in and outside camps in the Israeli-occupied West Bank (385,634) and Gaza Strip (459,074); Jordan (870,490); Lebanon (288,176); and the Syrian Arab Republic (265,221).

The General Assembly addressed the Palestinian refugee problem and UNRWA's relief activities in 10 resolutions adopted in December 1988. The resolutions dealt with: assistance to Palestine refugees (43/57 A) and to displaced persons (43/57 C); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (43/57 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (43/57 D); a proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (43/57 J); Palestine refugees in Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 (43/57 E); resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees (43/57 F); refugee protection (43/57 I); revenues from refugee properties (43/57 H); and the return of population and refugees displaced since 1967 (43/57 G).

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

As at 30 June 1988,⁽¹⁾ Palestine refugees registered with UNRWA in its five areas of operation numbered 2,268,595, to whom the Agency rendered educational, health and relief services, in addition to emergency measures in response to the Palestinian uprising. Emergency situations, such as the civil war in Lebanon ongoing since 1978,⁽²⁾ seriously challenged the Agency in carrying out its mandate, while the evolving intifadah required

UNRWA throughout 1988 to work under emergency measures in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The UNRWA Commissioner-General's reports on the Agency's work during the periods 1 July 1987-30 June 1988⁽¹⁾ and 1 July 1988-30 June 1989⁽³⁾ indicated that, since the beginning of the uprising, various developments had affected the Agency's operations and its ability to discharge its functions effectively. UNRWA repeatedly called on Israeli authorities to respect its privileges and immunities, as well as its premises. Nevertheless, camps were barricaded, access roads were blocked and the telephone connection between UNRWA's Vienna headquarters and its field office in the Gaza Strip was inoperative after 16 March 1988. The number of refugee shelters sealed or demolished for punitive reasons increased, as did the number of staff arrested and detained without charge or trial. Interference with the movement of staff increased due to obstructions in obtaining clearances and to frequent curfews. Many staff members also complained of maltreatment. With UNRWA becoming increasingly involved in emergency operations, a Programme Planning and Evaluation Office was established at headquarters to examine the longer-term implications of that trend.

UNRWA's education programme provided nine grades of general education, vocational and technical training, in-service teacher training and some higher education for Palestine refugees. The curricula followed those prescribed in the respective host countries. Despite adversarial circumstances, 349,321 Palestine refugee children served by 10,101 teachers enrolled in 1988 in 633 UNRWA elementary and preparatory schools. An additional 58,941 pupils attended government and private schools. Vocational, technical and pre-service teacher training was provided in eight training centres with a total enrolment of 4,668 teachers and 468 instructors. The UNRWA Institute of Education provided in-service training courses for 572 teachers and, at the university level, 297 scholars benefited from the Agency's scholarship programme. Some 27 new classrooms were completed or under construction during the year. Total 1988 expenditure on the education programme was $112.6 million.

The UNRWA health programme provided sanitation services and curative and preventive medical services through 100 health clinics and 35 subsidized hospitals, which counted 228,785 bed-days utilized by refugees during 1988. Some 35,500 school-children received full mid-day meals in 92 supplementary feeding centres six days a week. Fifteen new dental units were provided through the UNRWA budget or donations, with six of them including a mobile unit-in Jordan, five in the West Bank and two each in Gaza and Lebanon. Dental teams to service those units and new posts of dental hygienists were established to assist in the preventive oral health programme. Four new clinical laboratories were established, two in the West Bank and one each in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, while other health facilities were upgraded. Expenditures on the health programme amounted to $38.3 million during 1988.

Under the relief service programme, 32,560 families, representing 7.6 per cent of the registered refugee population, received, as special hardship cases, assistance consisting of food, clothing, blankets, cash aid, cash grants for income-generating projects, assistance in the repair or reconstruction of shelters and preferential access to vocational and teacher training. The general welfare programme comprised casework, women's activities, adult training courses, education and training of the disabled, self-support projects and assistance to refugees in emergency situations. The cost in 1988 of the relief services programme amounted to $19.7 million.

Lebanon. UNRWA operations were profoundly affected by the conditions of emergency prevailing throughout much of Lebanon due to recurrent waves of intense armed conflict, which also impeded compliance with a 1987 Assembly request that UNRWA headquarters be relocated to its former Beirut site.⁽⁴⁾

Nearly all schools stayed open most of the time; basic health services, bolstered by mobile medical teams in heavily damaged areas, continued to operate with only limited interruptions related to security conditions; and the relief programme was expanded to include four general distributions of emergency rations to all registered and non-registered Palestine refugees in Lebanon.

UNRWA again sought access to the three besieged refugee camps-Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh in the southern outskirts of Beirut and Rashidieh near Tyre-which had not been possible since 1985. Several hundred families from camps in southern Lebanon fled north seeking alternative shelter, with nearly 100 of them occupying UNRWA schools in the Saida region. The Agency made representations to government officials, leaders of militias and popular committees to stem the new flow of refugees and obtain assurances for their safe return to Rashidieh and other camps in the vicinity of Tyre. Despite continuing high tension in the region, those displaced eventually returned or found alternative accommodations.

In the wake of the wholesale damage inflicted on Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh, UNRWA continued emergency operations and began repairing roads, water supplies and piping, as well as removing heavy rubble. In September, UNRWA started payments to selected families to help them repair their shelters. In October, it began clearance and repair operations in both camps and, after infrastructural restoration, distributed cash grants to families whose shelters were destroyed or damaged.

Damage to UNRWA installations and refugee shelters was estimated to be 85 per cent in Shatila (1,530 shelters) and 60 per cent in Burj el-Barajneh (2,390 shelters), with repair costs of $3.2 million. A further $1.2 million was required to repair some 2,100 damaged shelters in three camps south of the Litani River: El-Buss, Burj el-Shemali and Rashidieh.

Following the abduction of two Agency staff—a Norwegian and a Swede—on 5 February, who were released unharmed on 1 March, UNRWA reduced the number of international staff in Lebanon to the minimum required to maintain essential services at levels permitted by the security conditions.

Renewed fighting in May and June between rival Palestinian factions in the Beirut camps resulted in an estimated 100 killed, 500 wounded and many newly displaced refugee families, and had an adverse effect on UNRWA programmes. By the end of June, heavy shelling by artillery, mortars, rockets and machine-guns had all but destroyed the Shatila camp, where only about 40 families remained.

West Bank and Gaza Strip. In the West Bank and Gaza, the intifadah and Israel's response affected virtually all Agency activities, stretching its health services to the limit due to the increased case-load. Individuals, including UNRWA personnel, were arrested or detained without charge or trial in substantial numbers. There were indiscriminate beatings and deliberate damage to property, including Agency premises, which were used as observation posts and interrogation or detention centres. Houses were demolished or sealed and entrances to refugee camps were blocked, while economic pressures by Israel multiplied.

The freedom of movement of staff was increasingly interfered with, particularly after the requirement of passes, in late 1988, following imposition of curfews. Few such passes were allotted to UNRWA staff, seriously affecting essential services, including delivery of emergency health care.

To aid the West Bank and Gaza, UNRWA, at an informal meeting (Vienna, 29 February and 1 March) with representatives of major donor and host Governments, presented a plan of action estimated at some $65 million and requiring three years (1988-1990) for implementation. It related to the expansion of relief activities, improvement of camp infrastructure and creation of new employment opportunities through economic development schemes. As at 30 June, some $32.2 million had been pledged or paid in cash and commodities, more than half of which was specified for food, medical supplies and equipment, hospitalization and related costs. More than $10 million was also pledged towards special projects to improve the living conditions of refugees in the occupied territories.

Health services, with emphasis on preventive rather than curative care, were provided through a network of 41 health centres, 6 maternal and child health sub-centres, 15 dental clinics, 8 maternity wards, 13 laboratories and 46 supplementary feeding centres. The Agency subsidized more than 400 beds in private hospitals for use by Palestine refugees, which was, however, insufficient for all cases requiring in-patient care.

Starting in September, 15 additional emergency medical teams were established to reinforce the available infrastructure of the 33 health centres or points throughout the West Bank. Duty hours were extended to provide afternoon shifts in the camps where confrontations between the inhabitants and Israeli security forces occurred most frequently. Six additional health buses were acquired to improve the transportation of injured persons, and equipment was procured to upgrade services and capacities in casualty care. Nutritional support was expanded and additional funds were earmarked to cover emergency medical supplies and extra hospital expenses. In February, after establishing eight additional medical teams to operate clinics in Gaza, UNRWA opened an emergency clinic in Beach camp and two night-duty clinics. In September, the first physiotherapy clinic was established in the Balata health centre near Nablus.

Education was seriously affected by a loss of instruction time in schools and training centres. As a result of the enforced closure of all educational institutions in the West Bank from 4 February until late May, pupils in elementary and preparatory schools missed approximately 40 per cent of scheduled class time. The authorities allowed elementary schools to reopen on 23 May and preparatory schools on 29 May but directed them to close on 21 July, despite an earlier declaration to extend the school year to 18 August. The 1987/88 school year in the Gaza Strip, which was seriously affected by curfews, strikes and violent incidents, was not completed until late October, following the implementation of a crash programme after the summer recess to make up for time lost during the first half of 1988.

In its medium-term plan for 1988-1990, UNRWA identified priority school-construction requirements, including the construction of additional classrooms, replacement of unsuitable premises and improvements to existing facilities. The impact on training centres was more devastating, with three of them in the West Bank closed, along with other educational institutions, by a February order of the Israeli Government, causing the loss of all but 44 days of the scheduled instruction time. The centre in Gaza had been closed since the beginning of January, completing only about 50 days. Thus, would-be 1988 graduates had to enrol for the 1988/89 academic year.

Addressing the need for small-scale income-generating enterprises, 51 projects were given loans in the West Bank for industrial workshops, food production and essential services under a joint programme established in January by UNRWA and other aid agencies.

Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Due to the weakening economies of Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, Palestine refugees faced difficulties there. The economy also slackened in the Persian Gulf States, which had traditionally absorbed an important share of the Palestinian skilled and semi-skilled labour force. UNRWA schools in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic operated satisfactorily throughout the year. The Amman and Wadi Seer training centres in Jordan provided 28 courses in vocational and technical fields for 1,170 students; the centre in Amman also provided 300 places for trainee teachers.

Under the Agency's health programme, two new health centres in the Jordanian Baqa'a and Marka refugee camps, funded by Canada, were completed in August 1987 and April 1988, respectively. A survey of the Qabr Essit camp near Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, found that the water used in refugee shelters was often contaminated and that 60 per cent of the children suffered from intestinal parasites. That led to the launching of a health education campaign and the subsequent upgrading of the water system and sewer lines with UNICEF funds.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in January to the Security Council⁽⁵⁾ that UNRWA played the leading role in providing registered refugees in the Gaza Strip with a wide variety of assistance and protection, as well as support for their day-to-day efforts to cope with life under occupation. ICRC assisted especially the families of detainees, and many Palestinian and international voluntary agencies played their part.

The Secretary-General concluded that in the case of registered refugees in the West Bank and Gaza, who numbered 818,983 (373,586 in the West Bank and 445,397 in Gaza) or about 55 per cent of the Palestinian population there, UNRWA was clearly best placed to provide general assistance. However, the number of UNRWA international staff had declined over the years, to nine in the West Bank (where there were 19 refugee camps) and six in Gaza (where there were eight camps) as at the uprising's initiation. The Secretary-General believed that international staff currently played an especially valuable role, as they could gain easier access to Israeli authorities in emergency situations. Their mere presence at points of confrontation had a significant impact on the way the civilian population was treated by the security forces. He therefore asked the UNRWA Commissioner-General to examine the addition of extra international staff in the territories to enhance general refugee assistance and urged Member States to respond generously to the appeal for their financing.

The Secretary-General deemed it essential that Israel honour UNRWA privileges and immunities in full, especially the right of its personnel to freedom of movement in all circumstances and the inviolability of its premises and installations. In view of the current disturbances, it also seemed desirable that the Commissioner-General be permitted to provide humanitarian assistance, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to non-refugees in serious need of assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/57 A by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/69 A of 2 December 1987 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1989;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

UNRWA financing

The Agency's income to its General Fund and ongoing activities amounted to $206.1 million in 1988.⁽⁵⁾ To maintain the regular programmes at their planned levels, UNRWA spent $204.3 million; the balance enabled it to replenish its much-depleted working capital reserve, which amounted to $29.3 million-considered inadequate when measured against UNRWA's size of operation and manner of funding. Thus, the Commissioner-General stressed that the financial position still needed strengthening to achieve a measure of fiscal security. Expenditure on capital and special projects was planned at $14.9 million for 1988, of which $6.8 million was funded by special donations and $2.3 million from the General Fund.

According to the financial report and audited financial statements of UNRWA for the year ended 31 December 1988,⁽⁶⁾ the 1988 budget of UNRWA amounted to $247 million, of which $190.2 million was for the General Fund. Project funds were $18.6 million for ongoing activities and $14.9 million for capital and special projects, giving $223.7 million for the regular budget.

Extraordinary emergency budgets included the Lebanon Emergency Fund of $8 million, representing the unspent balance of funds donated in 1987, and two new funds established during 1988 in response to the emergency situation created by the uprising in the occupied territories. The Extraordinary Measures in the Occupied Territories Fund had a budget of $15.1 million in response to increasing needs. It was intended for extra-regular activities in the territories to alleviate the hardship of the Palestine refugees owing to the civil unrest. A second fund-the Expanded Programme of Assistance-was established to improve the infrastructure in terms of better housing and new or expanded sewerage systems, and to provide UNRWA with better facilities to run its education, health and relief programmes in the territories. For 1988, $200,000 was budgeted under that programme, representing first allotments set up for the initial preparation and administration of funds received in response to the Commissioner-General's presentation to major donors in February 1988, the aim of which was to solicit about $65 million for various projects to improve the environmental conditions of the refugee population in the West Bank and Gaza.

The Agency ended 1988 with an excess of income over expenditure under the General Fund amounting to $3.5 million, largely owing to the unexpected depreciation of the Jordanian dinar during the second half of 1988. However, the large deficits of earlier years had left a much depleted working capital.

Reallocations from the General Fund to projects totalled $2.3 million for such urgent construction projects as class-rooms in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and Gaza to avoid triple shifts; a new field office in the Syrian Arab Republic; moving an education development centre at Amman; the Baqa'a school in Jordan; and warehouses in Gaza. In 1988, 70 UNRWA projects funded by special contributions were under implementation, and a loan scheme, running in its fourth year to assist housing and education projects, had outstanding loans of $3.8 million as at 31 December 1988, as compared with $5.8 million a year earlier.

The Commissioner-General noted that, in response to his February 1987 appeal⁽⁷⁾ for $20.6 million to cover UNRWA emergency operations in Lebanon, $15.5 million had been received or pledged, of which some $9.8 million was obligated or expended. Major items funded through 30 June 1988 included $4.9 million for food and other emergency supplies, $1.6 million for hospitalization and other health services, $1 million for additional staff and $650,000 for replacement of school supplies and furniture. The remaining $5.7 million was to be used for additional emergency relief expenditures, the repair of Agency installations and cash grants under the accommodation assistance programme to refugee families whose homes in the camps were damaged or destroyed. Although that programme was not under way in Lebanon as at 30 June, the balance of the $20.6 million requested would be needed once UNRWA was allowed to proceed with those activities.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 43/216, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNRWA for the year ended 31 December 1987,⁽⁸⁾ together with the report of the Board of Auditors, and requested the Commissioner-General to report in 1989 on steps taken to implement the Board's recommendations.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

In a report covering its meetings of 14 September and 11 October 1988,⁽⁹⁾ the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA expressed concern that income in 1988 might be insufficient to cover the cost of maintaining services. The Agency's financial situation promised to be less healthy than in 1987. Projections indicated that cash contributions to the General Fund would fall short by $2 million of the budgeted requirements of $176.6 million. Under the two special emergency programmes funded by special contributions, the $7 million balance remaining at the start of 1988 in the Lebanon Emergency Fund, earmarked to repair shelters, was expected to be exhausted by the end of the year, and the expanded programme in the occupied territories, operative since February 1988, had funding assured only to the end of the year.

The budget for 1989 was estimated to increase by $11 million (or 5 per cent), to about $218 million, which would meet growing requirements for UNRWA services brought about by increases in the school population, expanded use of Agency health services and unavoidable staff salary increases. A corresponding increase in contributions would have to be sought. Moreover, construction costs were expected to be about $15 million, a substantial increase over 1988, as many projects had been delayed due to insufficient contributions. Should the Lebanon Emergency Fund be continued, additional funds would have to be sought, and although funds specially pledged for projects in the occupied territories were available through 1989, only a limited amount of funding for the emergency measures would extend beyond 1988.

The Working Group took note that the Commissioner-General envisaged an annual growth of 5 per cent in expenditure over the next few years simply to maintain UNRWA's regular programmes at current levels. That would require a corresponding increase in contributions and continued strict control over expenditure if deficits and eventual cuts in services were to be avoided.

To circumvent the projected deficit, the Working Group urged that Governments start contributing or make more generous contributions, make additional contributions for construction projects and pay their contributions as early as possible in the calendar year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/57 B without vote.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2964(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3090(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3330(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 D (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 C of 23 November 1976, 32/90 D of 13 December 1977, 33/112 D of 18 December 1978, 34/52 D of 23 November 1979, 35/13 D of 3 November 1980, 36/146 E of 16 December 1981, 37/120 A of 16 December 1982, 38/83 B of 15 December 1983, 39/99 B of 14 December 1984, 40/165 B of 16 December 1985, 41/69 B of 3 December 1986 and 42/69 B of 2 December 1987,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988,

Deeply concerned at the critical financial situation of the Agency, which permits the provision of only minimum services to the Palestine refugees,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Legal matters

UNRWA staff and premises

During the 1987/88 reporting period, the number of UNRWA staff arrested and detained without charge continued to increase.⁽¹⁾ Israeli authorities also deported one staff member from the Gaza Strip. However, the number of staff kidnapped or detained in Lebanon decreased.

As UNRWA remained unable to obtain adequate, timely information on reasons for the arrests and detentions, it was unable to ascertain whether the staff members' official functions were involved or whether their rights and duties flowing from the Charter, the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations⁽¹⁰⁾ and UNRWA Staff Regulations and Rules were duly respected.

Staff movements in and out of the occupied territories continued to be restricted; sometimes entry permits were refused. From late 1988 on, the authorities insisted that local staff in the Gaza Strip could move during curfew only if they possessed permits; however, very few staff were issued curfew permits, which were often of limited duration, with time-consuming renewal procedures. Israeli authorities continuously summoned Agency staff for interrogation during official hours without adequate notice.

UNRWA also stated increasing concern over forcible entries of its premises by Israeli military personnel, sometimes accompanied by injuries to staff and damage to property. UNRWA protested such actions as a violation of its privileges and immunities.

Compensation claims

In 1988, UNRWA reported that no progress had been made with regard to its claims against the Governments of: Israel (for loss of and damage to UNRWA property during the 1967 hostilities, Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and its military action before then); Jordan (arising from the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances in 1970 and 1971); and the Syrian Arab Republic (relating mainly to the levy of certain taxes from which UNRWA believed it was exempt under existing agreements). Those claims had been reported in 1986.⁽¹¹⁾ The Secretary-General, in September 1988,⁽¹²⁾ also stated that there had been no progress with regard to UNRWA claims against Israel resulting from its 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

In resolution 43/57 I, the General Assembly called anew on Israel to compensate UNRWA for damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion.

In July, Israel informed UNRWA that, because of temporary budgetary constraints, it had to withhold payment of clearance, warehousing and transport charges payable to the Agency under the 1967 Comay-Michelmores provisional agreement concerning assistance to Palestine refugees. To prevent delayed clearance of goods and to minimize costs, UNRWA temporarily advanced the sums needed, on the understanding that the amount would be reimbursed, and requested Israel to revert as at 1 January 1989 to the status quo ante and the procedures envisaged under the agreement. As a result of Israel's failure to do so due to its alleged financial situation, the Agency had to spend an additional $800,000 to carry out its programmes in the occupied territories.

Other aspects

Humanitarian assistance to displaced and other persons

During 1988, in addition to providing relief in the form of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide a small measure of humanitarian assistance to persons who had been displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 43/57 C without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/69 C of 2 December 1987 and all its previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 42/69 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Repatriation of refugees

In September 1988,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General reported on compliance with the General Assembly's 1987 call⁽¹⁴⁾ on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants and to desist from measures obstructing their return. By a note verbale of 7 July, Israel had stated that its position had been fully set out in successive annual replies to the Secretary-General, most recently in 1987.⁽¹⁵⁾ It continued to make every effort to review individual cases of resettlement based on their merits and, as a result, the total number of persons returned to the administered territories was approximately 75,000.

The Commissioner-General pointed out to the Secretary-General that UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for the return of either refugees or displaced persons who were not registered with it. Its information was based on requests made by returning registered refugees who wanted a transfer of their benefit entitlements and a correction of their records; thus, it would not necessarily be aware of registered refugees not requesting services. As far as was known to UNRWA, 181 registered refugees had returned to the West Bank between 1 July 1987 and 30 June 1988, and 27 had returned to the Gaza Strip. The number of displaced registered refugees who were known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 was about 11,300. Those records, however, might be incomplete.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/57 G by recorded vote.

The return of population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 D of 23 November 1976, 32/90 E of 13 December 1977,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, and the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirm the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right to return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on, or condition for, the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

4. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-fourth session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 4 above.

Food aid

The Secretary-General reported in September 1988⁽¹⁶⁾ that UNRWA had continued distributing rations to the most needy sector of the refugee population, known as special hardship cases, who numbered 119,512 in December 1987. The Agency provided emergency food assistance in Lebanon, the West Bank and Gaza. Two distributions of food were made to all registered refugees in Lebanon and ad hoc distributions were made to camp inhabitants and others affected by the fighting. In the West Bank, food supplies had been distributed in camps and other areas of refugee concentration, as well as to some 87,000 schoolchildren in the Gaza Strip. However, due to continued financial constraints, a general ration distribution to all refugees, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽¹⁷⁾ was not possible.

The Commissioner-General noted⁽¹⁾ that, whenever possible, normal relief programmes were carried out and additional measures were adopted. In the Gaza Strip, dry food commodities sufficient for one person for one month, pre-packed in plastic bags, were distributed through schools, and ad hoc arrangements were made to reach families without school-age children. Approximately 2,750 tons of supplies, either purchased by or donated to UNRWA, were distributed to registered refugees in the Gaza Strip, with about 87,000 schoolchildren and 6,166 families benefiting monthly from the distributions. In the West Bank, some 1,840 tons of commodities were distributed to registered refugees and non-refugees, with an average of 62,770 refugees, 4,700 non-refugees and 14,500 schoolchildren benefiting monthly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/57 F by recorded vote.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983, 39/99 F of 14 December 1984, 40/165 F of 16 December 1985, 41/69 F of 3 December 1986, 42/69 F of 2 December 1987 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the Agency, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that its resolutions 37/120 F, 38/83 F, 39/99 F, 40/165 F, 41/69 F and 42/69 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls once again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Education and training services

Schools and teacher training

UNRWA's education programmes continued to provide nine grades of general education, vocational and technical training, pre-service teacher training and scholarships for higher education for Palestine refugees. The programme operated with technical assistance from UNESCO.

In 1988, expenditures on the education programme amounted to $112.4 million: $43.3 million in Jordan; $30.9 million in the Gaza Strip; $18.1 million in the West Bank; $11.7 million in the Syrian Arab Republic; $5.5 million in Lebanon; and $2.8 million at headquarters (Vienna).

As at 15 October, 351,136 pupils were enrolled in UNRWA schools, some 1,750 more than the previous year, as follows: 134,435 in Jordan; 91,222 in the Gaza Strip; 53,378 in the Syrian Arab Republic; 39,275 in the West Bank; and 32,826 in Lebanon. In addition, 110,339 refugee pupils attended government and private schools.

In the West Bank, 90 of 98 schools remained closed by the Israeli authorities for a large part of 1988. In the Gaza Strip, there was considerable disruption due to frequent curfews, strikes and widespread unrest. In Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, schools operated satisfactorily. In Lebanon, despite the generally disturbed situation, the majority of schools functioned with only local and short-lived interruptions.

During the 1987/88 academic year, UNRWA provided places for 3,904 vocational trainees and 850 teacher trainees in its eight training centres.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In keeping with a General Assembly request of 1987,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported in June 1988⁽¹⁹⁾ on the establishment of a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem. The proposed "Al-Quds" University, first considered by the Assembly in 1980,⁽²⁰⁾ had since been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General with regard to measures taken towards its establishment, including a functional feasibility study. To assist in the preparation of the study and at the Secretary-General's request, the United Nations University made available the services of an expert who was to visit the area and meet with Israeli officials. By a note verbale of 3 May, the Secretary-General requested Israel to facilitate the expert's visit at a mutually convenient date.

Israel replied on 24 May that its position remained unchanged;⁽²¹⁾ it had consistently voted against the resolution calling for the establishment of the University, whose sponsors sought to exploit higher education in order to politicize issues totally extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Therefore, Israel was unable to assist in taking the matter further.

In view of Israel's position, the feasibility study could not be completed as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/57 J by recorded vote.

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported in September 1988⁽²²⁾ on responses to the General Assembly's 1987 appeal⁽²³⁾ to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

The 1988 activities of responding States and institutions included the provision by Japan of 15 fellowships to UNRWA vocational training instructors. The Federal Republic of Germany offered 25 scholarships in 1988 to Palestine refugee graduates of UNRWA vocational training centres, to be awarded in 1989. UNESCO granted six fellowships in 1988 and WIPO and UPU also followed up in offering additional fellowships. WHO sponsored nine regional and international fellowships to Palestine refugee health staff in its post-graduate training programme aimed at developing the technical and managerial skills of UNRWA's department of health staff and at meeting future replacement needs. Three Palestinians continued their studies in agricultural economics and animal production through the FAO project on specialized training in agricultural development, which also provided expertise to the Al-Quds Open University.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1988,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported on responses to his request for information on steps taken to implement the General Assembly's 1987 resolution⁽²⁵⁾ on revenues derived from Palestinian refugee properties.

In its reply of 7 July 1988, Israel reiterated its position as set out in statements to the Special Political Committee, most recently in 1987,⁽²⁶⁾ that there was no legal basis for taking the steps proposed, as property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were subject exclusively to the domestic laws of that State. The right of States to regulate and dispose of property within their territory and the income derived from that property was a generally accepted principle. Significantly, the resolution's sponsors made no suggestion regarding confiscated property in Arab countries of some 800,000 Jewish refugees as a result of the 1948 war, estimated to be worth billions of dollars. Israel stressed that there could be no difference in law, justice or equity between the claims of Arab and Jewish property owners.

No reply had been received from any other Member State regarding implementation of the resolution.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its report covering the period from 1 September 1987 to 31 August 1988,⁽²⁷⁾ stated that events that had occurred in the area since the preceding reporting period had further complicated an already very complex situation. As far as the Commission was concerned, the circumstances that had limited its possibilities of action remained essentially unchanged. Nevertheless, it continued to hope that the situation would improve towards the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, thus enabling it to carry forward its work in accordance with its mandate as defined by the Assembly in 1948.⁽²⁸⁾

On 6 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/57 H by recorded vote.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982, 38/83 H of 15 December 1983, 39/99 H of 14 December 1984, 40/165 H of 16 December 1985, 41/69 H of 3 December 1986, 42/69 H of 2 December 1987 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, covering the period from 1 September 1987 to 31 August 1988,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon the Governments of all the other Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, which would assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Deplores Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the resolutions on the question;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Refugee protection

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his January 1988 report to the Security Council on the situation in the occupied territories,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-

General explored four possible ways of protecting the civilian population in the territories, some 55 per cent of which were refugees registered with UNRWA. One such way was physical protection by United Nations peace-keeping forces. Another was legal protection, meaning intervention with the security or judicial authorities on behalf of those threatened. Protection could also take the form of general assistance, with an outside agency intervening to help individuals or groups to resist violations of rights and cope with life under occupation. Finally, protection by publicity was afforded through the presence of the international media, ready to publish events.

On the basis of those definitions, the Secretary-General explored ways for the international community to help ensure the civilian population's protection. With regard to physical protection, he said the introduction of United Nations forces into the territories could detract from the occupying Power's responsibilities under the fourth Geneva Convention. Also, their deployment would require the consent of Israel, which had voiced its disagreement. The idea, however, should not be lost sight of, as Israel had accepted international forces in other contexts of the Arab-Israeli conflict and United Nations forces could again be a valuable ingredient in implementing a negotiated settlement or in transitional arrangements for the territories.

A measure of legal protection was provided by ICRC, and general assistance was provided by agencies, most prominently UNRWA. In order to improve general assistance, the Secretary-General had requested the UNRWA Commissioner-General to examine the possibility of extra international staff, stressing at the same time that Israel should honour UNRWA privileges and immunities in full. The Commissioner-General should be permitted to extend humanitarian assistance on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure to non-refugees in serious need because of the recent disturbances.

The need to publicize the situation in the territories was stressed by the Palestinians, as was the importance of unhindered access by the international media. It was argued that world attention had a potentially beneficial influence, both on Israel's practices in the territories and on its willingness to negotiate. It was suggested that the Secretary-General appoint a United Nations ombudsman to reside in the territories. The Secretary-General concluded that the practicability of all the aforementioned ideas depended on Israel's full consent and co-operation.

The Secretary-General reported in September 1988⁽¹²⁾ on implementation of a 1987 Assembly resolution⁽²⁹⁾ holding Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the occupied territories and calling on it to compensate UNRWA for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

The report reproduced Israel's reply of 7 July 1988 to the Secretary-General's request for information on steps taken or envisaged to comply with the resolution. Israel said it had fully set forth its position on the subject in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1987 report of the Secretary-General.⁽³⁰⁾ The adoption of the resolution was hypocritical, anachronistic and out of place. Despite its withdrawal from Lebanon in 1985, Israel was still being blamed for the "suffering" of Palestinians there and, not surprisingly, for Arab persecution of Palestinian refugees. In recent years, thousands of Palestinians had been killed and wounded in Lebanese refugee camps in vicious fighting totally unconnected with Israel; likewise, Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were the scenes of considerable human misery. The selective and distorted presentation of the Palestinian refugees' situation in Arab countries clearly illustrated the resolution's double standards and its disregard for the refugees' general welfare.

The Secretary-General cited the UNRWA Commissioner-General's report for the period 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988⁽¹⁾ to the effect that the Commissioner-General had continued his efforts to do everything feasible to contribute to the refugees' safety and security.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 January 1988, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolution 605(1987),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988,

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian civilian population under Israeli occupation,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907,

Deeply concerned at the marked deterioration in the security situation experienced by the Palestine refugees as stated by the Commissioner-General in his report,

Deeply distressed at the suffering of the Palestinian and Lebanese population which resulted from continuing Israeli acts of aggression against Lebanon and other hostile acts,

Deeply distressed at the tragic situation of the civilian population in and around the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon which resulted from the fighting,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Secretary-General and the support of the Commissioner-General for organizing a co-ordinated and comprehensive programme of assistance for Lebanon by the United Nations inter-agency group, as reflected in paragraph 17 of the Commissioner-General's report,

Reaffirming its support for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon, within its internationally recognized boundaries,

1. Holds Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and calls upon it to fulfil its obligations as the occupying Power in this regard, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

2. Calls upon all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances in conformity with their obligation under article I thereof;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider the current situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, taking into account the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to continue their efforts in support of the upholding of the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation in 1967 and thereafter;

5. Calls once again upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release forthwith all arbitrarily detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

6. Welcomes the provision by the Commissioner-General, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to provide housing to the Palestine refugees whose houses were demolished or razed;

7. Welcomes also the provision by the Commissioner-General, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to provide emergency housing repairs for the shelters and Agency installations that have been partly damaged or destroyed in the fighting;

8. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-fourth session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Removal and resettlement of refugees

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in September 1988⁽³¹⁾ that, in response to his request for information on steps taken to implement a 1987 General Assembly resolution⁽³²⁾ calling on Israel to refrain from resettling Palestine refugees in the West Bank and from destroying their camps, Israel replied on 7 July that its position had been fully set out in annual statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1987 report of the Secretary-General.⁽³³⁾

The Secretary-General noted that the UNRWA Commissioner-General would not object if refugees in the camps voluntarily sought better housing, whether by improving existing housing or by moving into new housing. He would, however, strongly object if any pressure or coercion were used to make refugees move or comply with any scheme. Refugees would not lose eligibility for UNRWA services on relocation outside the camps.

In another September report, the Secretary-General reproduced⁽³⁴⁾ Israel's response of 7 July to a 1987 Assembly resolution⁽³⁵⁾ demanding that it desist from removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from destroying their shelters. Israel said its position had been set out in successive annual replies to the Secretary-General, most recently in 1987.⁽³⁶⁾ It considered the resolution distorted, unbalanced and inaccurate, in that it intentionally ignored the improved living conditions in the Gaza District since 1967, the considerable increase of pupils attending school, the significant drop in illiteracy, the development of medical care, the improvement in environmental services such as water supply and sewage and waste disposal, and the community development projects initiated by Israel that had enabled 10,000 families to leave refugee camps and relocate to new residential areas. Notwithstanding the omission of those facts, Israel continued to undertake and encourage assistance and rehabilitation projects for refugees.

The Secretary-General stated that, according to UNRWA, house demolitions as punitive actions continued during 1988, as did the practice of requiring refugee families to demolish their shelters as a pre-condition for new housing. Also, refugee shelters were demolished on the grounds that they had been built without proper authority on State land outside camp boundaries. Families affected by demolitions from as far back as 1971, including those categorized as living in hardship conditions, continued to live in unsatisfactory circumstances despite Israel's assurances that they would be housed.

According to information available to the Commissioner-General, Israeli authorities had to date allocated 3,914 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. A total of 2,583 plots had been built on by 3,673 refugee families comprising 22,732 persons, buildings on 257 plots were under construction, 937 plots were vacant and 137 had been built on by non-refugees. In addition, 3,034 refugee families, consisting of 18,823 persons, had moved into 2,666 completed housing units, comprising 5,893 rooms. Refugee families were continuing to purchase plots of land at subsidized rates for construction of houses in projects developed by the Israeli authorities.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981, 37/120 E and I of 16 December 1982, 38/83 E and J of 15 December 1983, 39/99 E and J of 14 December 1984, 40/165 E and J of 16 December 1985, 41/69 E and J of 3 December 1986 and 42/69 E and J of 2 December 1987,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, and the two reports of the Secretary-General,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 away from their homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligation under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Reiterates strongly its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and from the destruction of their shelters;
2. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and accordingly to extend all the services of the Agency to those refugees;
3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General, to resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied Palestinian territory, irrespective of whether or not they are recipients of rations and services of the Agency;
4. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-fourth session, on the implementation of the present resolution and in particular on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

The five United Nations regional commissions continued their efforts to promote economic and social development in their respective regions during 1988.

Four of the commissions held their regular sessions in April—the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC). The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in a regular session but held a special session on 8 June.

Several resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly in 1988 concerning the commissions. The resolutions covered a special plan of economic co-operation for Central America (42/231); co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System (43/5); and the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (43/179). Among resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council pertaining to the commissions were: the co-ordination of drug control activities in Africa (1988/11); and the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa (1988/66). The question of Israel's membership in ECE was again deferred (decision 1988/172).

Regional co-operation

The executive secretaries of the five regional commissions, under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, met twice in 1988 (New York, 12 and 13 May, and Geneva, 14 July). At the May meeting, they reviewed the economic and social developments in each region, highlighting important issues that had emerged from the four commission sessions held in 1988. It was noted that a general picture of conciliation seemed to have emerged due to the improvement in East-West relations. Human resources development was emphasized at the sessions of ECA, ECE and ESCAP, while the debt problem was of central concern at the ECLAC session. The meeting also discussed preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000) (see also PART THREE, Chapter I), restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations, strengthening collaboration and co-operation between and among the regional commissions and official travel to and representation at conferences and meetings.

At the July meeting, the executive secretaries reviewed progress made in improving the interface between the commissions and the Economic and Social Council.

In a June 1988 report to the Council on regional co-operation,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General drew attention to issues and decisions of the commissions calling for Council action or attention, highlighted the work of the commissions, reported on progress achieved by the commissions in promoting inter-regional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, and reviewed their co-operative activities and problems in the transport field. He also gave an account of the May meeting of the executive secretaries.

In decision 1988/173 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on regional co-operation. In decision 1988/181 of 29 July, it took note of a number of reports considered by it in its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including summaries of: the economic survey of Europe in 1987-1988;⁽²⁾ the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1987;⁽³⁾ the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1987;⁽⁴⁾ the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1986-1987;⁽⁵⁾ and the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1987.⁽⁶⁾

In other action, the Council, in resolution 1988/15 of 25 May, requested the Secretary-General to convene annually meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies of States of the Asian and Pacific, African, and Latin American and Caribbean regions. The meetings would be held at the capitals of States in the regions that might wish to act as host or at the headquarters of the regional commission concerned.

Human rights

Following consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X), the General Assembly, in resolution 43/152 of 8 December, noted that contacts between regional bodies and commissions and the United Nations were continuing to be pursued and strengthened through advisory services and technical assistance, particularly those relating to organizing regional and subregional training courses in human rights, and asked the Secretary-General to encourage those developments. States in areas where regional arrangements in human rights did not exist were invited to consider concluding agreements to establish suitable regional machinery for promoting and protecting human rights.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa held its twenty-third session/fourteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers at Niamey, Niger, from 14 to 17 April 1988.⁽¹⁾ Among the issues discussed were the mid-term review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD) (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990 (APPER), and the food and agriculture situation in Africa. The Ministers also considered the report of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole,⁽²⁾ which met at Niamey from 6 to 13 April. Subjects covered in the report included natural resources and energy, industrial development, transport and communications, social development, trade and development, recommendations of ECA subsidiary organs and sectoral bodies, economic co-operation and integration, the proposed United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)-sponsored management facility, ECA and African development, statutory issues, and the report of the eighth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (LDCs).

The Conference of Ministers adopted 34 resolutions covering such issues as the campaign against locusts and grasshoppers, drought and desertification, women's integration in the development process, the brain drain from Africa, development of industry in North Africa, promotion of tourism, experiments in grass-roots development, and support to countries of the south-western Indian Ocean affected by tropical cyclones and natural disasters.

Five resolutions were submitted to the Economic and Social Council for action. They dealt with the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa; the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988); the biennial report of the Executive Secretary; proposals for extension of the 1984-1989 medium-term plan to 1990-1991; and updating the 1988-1989 programme budget.

Several subsidiary bodies of ECA met during the year. The Conference of Ministers Responsible for Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization (Khartoum, Sudan, 12 and 13 March) reviewed the status of human resources development in Africa and endorsed the Khartoum Declaration. It also discussed the brain drain from Africa and the United Nations Special Action Programme for Administration and Management. The Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (Kinshasa, Zaire, 23 and 24 March) reviewed progress made during the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa. The Ministers adopted seven resolutions, one of which was on the proclamation of a second transport and communications decade.

The Conference of Ministers of African LDCs (Niamey, 13 and 14 April) examined a report by the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts of African LDCs (Niamey, 1-4 April) on the economic and social conditions of those countries.

The Committee of Officials and the Council of Plenipotentiaries of the Tangier Multinational Programming and Operational Centre (MULPOC) met at Tangier, Morocco, from 14 to 16 and on 17 and 18 March, respectively. The two bodies discussed the MULPOC's activities, considered a progress report on the establishment of a Preferential Trade Area for North Africa and reviewed problems of drought and desertification. No other MULPOC met during the year.

Meetings of the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 21-28 March) and the Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development (Niamey, 3-5 April) also took place in 1988.

These and other developments were reflected in the biennial report of the Executive Secretary for 1988-1989.⁽³⁾

Economic and social trends

In its survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1987-1988,⁽⁴⁾ ECA reported that the African economy improved somewhat during 1988, but not enough to spur a growth in per capita income. Gross domestic product (GDP) grew by 2.3 per cent, 1.6 per cent higher than in 1987. However, with a population growth rate of about 3 per cent, per capita GDP growth was negative (-0.7 per cent), continuing the declining trend that began in the early 1980s.

At the subregional level, performance was mixed. North African output grew by 2.4 per cent compared to only 0.4 per cent in 1987. Overall GDP in West Africa rose by 2 per cent, with the Sahel countries doing particularly well due to improved agricultural production following above-average rains. In Central Africa, economic performance remained weak with GDP growing by less than 2 per cent; however, there was some improvement over 1987. East and southern Africa was the only subregion that turned in a lower growth rate in 1988 than 1987, with output rising by 2.5 per cent in 1988 against 3.8 per cent in 1987.

The impetus for GDP growth was attributable to agriculture, which benefited from a combination of above-average rains and policy reforms conceived along the lines advocated in UNPAAERD⁽⁵⁾ and APPER. According to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), agricultural output rose by 3.8 per cent in 1988 compared to a fall of 1.2 per cent in 1987. FAO reported a 20.7 per cent increase in cereal production during the year, reaching 78.8 million tons. Industrial crop production also rose in 1988. However, that generally coincided with lower commodity prices worldwide. In the non-food sector, including forestry, it was noted that rapid deforestation was occurring in wide areas of the Sahel and East Africa. The tropical forests of Africa were being depleted at an average rate of 1.3 million hectares per year.

Manufacturing value added rose by 5 per cent in 1988, adding to the 3.1 per cent rise in 1987. The gain largely reflected the improved supply of agricultural raw material and a higher level of capacity utilization. However, declining investments in the industrial sector resulted in lower capital stock and capacity. The regional employment growth rate in the manufacturing sector had slowed from 5.7 per cent in 1975-1980 to only 1.9 per cent in 1980-1986.

The mining sector as a whole recovered in 1988, its value added growth estimated at 4.7 per cent compared to a fall of 3.1 per cent in 1987. However, the inability of several countries to capitalize on increased global demand for metals and a rise in oil production that was only marginal led to an uneven performance in the mineral sector.

External constraints on Africa's recovery tightened in 1988, with external debt rising from $220.3 billion in 1987 to $230 billion in 1988. As a result, the scheduled debt ratio amounted to about 40 per cent of exports of goods and services. Also, total export commodity prices fell 12.9 per cent in 1988, while imports became more expensive. Domestic demand grew by only 1.5 per cent for the whole of Africa, with private consumption rising by 2 per cent, further evidence of a continuing deterioration in living standards.

Public spending was reduced in 1988, contributing to a drop in fiscal deficit as a proportion of GDP that began in 1986 (9.2 per cent of GDP) and 1987 (8.6 per cent) and continued into 1988 (6.7 per cent). That came at the expense of such important sectors as health, education, agriculture and development expenditure in general. The rise in total nominal expenditures grew mostly as a result of the debt-service burden, which rose to 36 per cent of current expenditure in 1988 as compared to 26.7 per cent in 1986.

Activities in 1988

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

In his biennial report for 1988-1989,⁽³⁾ the Executive Secretary said that, in the area of regional development strategies, ECA continued to review national development planning practices in Africa in the light of the objectives and priorities of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos,⁽⁶⁾ APPER and UNPAAERD. Those activities aimed to initiate actions at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to implement a process of sustained socio-economic growth and development in African countries.

Regarding economic co-operation and integration, ECA's research programme emphasized sectoral planning with a view to co-ordinating and harmonizing national development plans at the subregional level. The problems and potentials of co-ordinating national projects with subregional dimensions in agriculture, industry, trade and transport and communications were extensively analysed.

In policy formulation, ECA promoted the search for an alternative to existing policy frameworks, particularly those associated with conventional structural adjustment programmes, in order to make them more coherent and consistent with Africa's real development priorities and objectives as stipulated in regionally agreed development strategies.

By a 15 April resolution on multisectoral planning,⁽⁷⁾ the Conference of Ministers asked the ECA secretariat to organize a workshop on the integration of the informal sector in the development planning process and regional planning in Africa. Donors and United Nations agencies were invited to provide support and financial assistance for the workshop.

In another resolution of the same date,⁽⁸⁾ the Ministers appealed to member States to undertake national efforts to widen the scope of national income accounting data, training of manpower, acquisition of technical know-how and material, such as computing hardware and software, to strengthen or initiate modelling capability. The ECA secretariat was asked to continue to assist countries to initiate or strengthen model-building capabilities and to seek technical and financial assistance from donor countries and organizations to support its efforts and those of collaborating institutions in the area of modelling. It was also asked to organize a meeting of experts on global modelling to draw up a plan of action for Africa and the global modelling systems.

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

In a 15 April resolution on ECA's African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP) (Dakar, Senegal),⁽⁹⁾ the Conference of Ministers requested IDEP to continue and strengthen its training programmes and start its planned expanded research and new advisory/consultancy services. It urged member States to pay their annual contributions regularly and called on those with arrears to pay them at the rate of at least 10 per cent per year. The Ministers invited UNDP to continue its support to IDEP, while shifting emphasis to research and creation of capacity for IDEP's new advisory and consultancy services. They invited the African Development Bank also to assist IDEP in developing its advisory and consultancy services and to use IDEP as a consultant. The Executive Director was asked to support IDEP's implementation of its five-year plan, especially by funding posts, and to request the General Assembly for regular posts for IDEP in the context of the 1990-1991 programme budget.

Least developed countries

The ECA secretariat continued to focus on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs (see PART THREE, Chapter I). As the 1980s drew to a close, the primary objective of SNPA of introducing major structural changes in LDCs was far from being achieved, partly because of the neglect of transformational investment in favour of short-term stabilization measures to redress persistent balance-of-payments disequilibria. All indications were that the social and economic conditions in African LDCs had deteriorated sharply during the 1980s. In addition to structural limitations, there had been the impact of the protracted drought, deteriorating terms of trade, inadequate official development assistance and other resource flows and mounting external debt.

The eighth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs (Niamey, 13 and 14 April)⁽¹⁰⁾ decided to devote its 1989 meeting to preparing for the second (1990) United Nations conference on LDCs. It also discussed economic and social conditions in African LDCs in 1986-1987; progress made towards implementing SNPA; and the development and utilization of human resources in African LDCs. It also reviewed ECA activities with regard to African LDCs in 1986-1987 and the work programme for 1988-1989.

On 15 April,⁽¹¹⁾ the ECA Conference of Ministers approved the devotion of the 1989 meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs to preparations for the 1990 conference. It called on African LDCs to evaluate progress made in implementing SNPA and to participate actively in the preparatory meetings for the conference. African and international organizations, especially ECA, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), were asked to provide technical assistance to the African LDCs in evaluating progress made in implementing SNPA and in formulating the new strategy to be presented to the conference.

Food and agriculture

During 1988, ECA, in collaboration with FAO, continued to build up national capabilities in agricultural development policy, planning and programming, with field missions being undertaken to selected countries in the eastern, southern and West African subregions. Reports were submitted to member countries suggesting measures for harmonizing national food plans and policies. Problems highlighted in the reports included institutional inadequacies, limited participation in planning and policy-making at the grass-roots level, absence of realism in planning and policy objectives due to lack of data, and scarcity of funds. Recognizing the importance of agricultural data to development, ECA improved the agricultural data base for women and fielded a mission to conduct a survey of ongoing efforts in ECA countries. It also assisted member countries in developing systems for collection, synthesis, analysis, processing and storage of agricultural data.

ECA carried out activities to strengthen co-operation and trade in food and agricultural products, improve institutions and increase the food crop and livestock production. Several reports and publications were produced on topics such as the production of cereals and tubers with special emphasis on the role of women, non-conventional food sources, increased production of strategic food commodities, improving women's land rights, and multinational co-operation in fishery development. At the subregional level, ECA assisted member States of the Lusaka-based MULPOC to establish a maize research network. It also initiated a feasibility study on increased maize production and marketing for the Gisenyi-based MULPOC countries.

In the area of agricultural marketing, two advisory service missions were fielded to a number of countries. They focused on establishing agricultural marketing policies and institutions and improving the structure and management of agricultural co-operatives. A workshop was organized in September, in co-operation with FAO, on policy changes and their implications for grain-marketing agencies. At a seminar in Yaoundé, Cameroon, in June, the problems of food security and reducing food losses were discussed. Financed under a bilateral German project, it was attended by pest-control and storage specialists together with marketing officials. ECA continued to assist member countries in formulating policies for efficient organization and distribution of agricultural inputs to small farmers, and in harmonizing their pricing policies on staple food crops in order to stimulate interregional trade.

Population

Population policies and development planning, demographic analysis in the context of economic and social development planning, and regional training and research continued to be the focus of ECA's population programme in 1988. As in the past, the provision of advisory services to member States was emphasized.

ECA carried out several studies: one reviewed and analysed legislative instruments for formulating and implementing population policies in member States and suggested a framework for use in formulating legislation to achieve a specific population-policy objective; in another, social, cultural and legislative factors affecting family formation and fertility in selected African countries were examined; a third made a comparative analysis of mortality levels, patterns, trends and differentials and their life tables in middle Africa.

Under the Population Information Network in Africa (POPIN-Africa), a meeting was held for African press and media personnel on the dissemination of population information in the region (Dakar, Senegal, November). The meeting was organized jointly with the Pan-African News Agency and the Union of National Radio and Television Organizations in Africa. The POPIN-Africa Technical Working Group held its first meeting at Addis Ababa in December.

On 15 April,⁽¹²⁾ the Conference of Ministers expressed concern about the financial problems facing the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques (IFORD) and about the non-payment of contributions by the majority of member countries of the Regional Institute for Population Studies. The Ministers urged African Governments to pay their current arrears and to pay contributions regularly in the future. Member countries of IFORD were urged to respond urgently to the financial crisis facing that institution by paying their 1987 and 1988 contributions. The Ministers appealed to the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund to continue funding the institutes at current levels to ensure their service to member States.

Natural resources and energy

In 1988, ECA organized the third Regional Conference on the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa (Kampala, Uganda, 6-15 June). The Conference, in the Kampala Programme of Action, recommended the development of capital and technological capabilities; restructuring of existing national mineral policies to sustain co-operation among member States; the growth of small-scale mining of precious and semi-precious stones; an in-depth study of copper and aluminium processing facilities and prospects for intra-African trade in copper- and aluminium-based products; and the establishment of mechanisms to finance new mineral resources development projects.

During the year, ECA provided technical support to the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre (Brazzaville, Congo) and the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre (Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania). Advisory missions were undertaken to Chad and Guinea to survey the exploitation of soda ash and small-scale gold mining.

ECA continued to provide advisory assistance to member States and river basin organizations on a broad range of activities in the area of water resources development and management. The Organization for the Development of the Senegal River was aided in formulating a project involving a study of river basin development. To assist the Lake Chad Basin Commission in its efforts to save Lake Chad, which had shrunk to one tenth of its size due to drought conditions, ECA and UNDP helped prepare a water resources development project that was submitted for UNDP financing. In October, an inter-regional meeting on river and lake basin development was held at Addis Ababa.

In the energy sector, ECA emphasized the major issues of exploration, evaluation and development of resources; integrating energy policies into overall socio-economic planning; research, training and information; and institution-building. Missions were mounted to Burundi, the Niger, Rwanda, the Sudan, Uganda, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe and the main findings were presented in reports outlining measures to improve energy planning, policies and management in African States. A seminar and study tour in the USSR were organized by ECA on the planning of integrated energy resources development, which aimed to sensitize member States to the importance of energy planning. ECA also provided substantive servicing to a meeting of the Council of the African Regional Centre for Solar Energy (Bujumbura, Burundi, June).

On 15 April,⁽¹³⁾ the Conference of Ministers welcomed the establishment of the African Organization for Cartography and Remote Sensing after the merging of the African Association of Cartography and the African Remote Sensing Council and expressed appreciation to Algeria for providing headquarters facilities in Algiers. They appealed to the former members of those organizations in arrears with their contributions to pay them as quickly as possible and to the member States to pay their contributions to the budget of the new organization. The Executive Secretary was requested, in collaboration with the executive heads of the relevant United Nations bodies and the Secretary-General of OAU, to provide technical and financial assistance to cartography and remote sensing projects and to African member States for training in those fields.

Science and technology

Under its programme in science and technology, ECA developed policies, machinery, capabilities and manpower for science and technology, and promoted regional and interregional co-operation.

During the year, advisory services were provided to: Benin on developing local capacity for producing school science equipment; Mauritius on defining a technology policy and mechanisms for accelerated technological development; and the Ghana Technology Transfer Centre on elaborating modalities for executing aspects of a UNDP project and on selecting foreign consultants to lead local teams. An advisory mission was also undertaken to the African Regional Centre for Technology (Dakar) to assist in a tripartite review meeting for a UNDP project and in the recruitment of project staff.

Regarding the development of manpower for science and technology, ECA organized a sub-regional workshop on developing indigenous capacity for the local production of school science equipment in the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries (CEPGL) region. The workshop recommended that Burundi, Rwanda and Zaïre should co-operate in establishing common facilities to produce school science equipment and called on ECA and CEPGL to assist in mobilizing financing.

ECA collaborated with the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development and the German Development Foundation in organizing a regional meeting at Brazzaville in December to review the implementation of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development.⁽¹⁴⁾ The meeting noted the institutional, financial and other constraints inhibiting the implementation of the Programme of Action and urged the adoption of innovative approaches to incorporate science and technology in the development process and bring about closer understanding between the science and technology system and potential users in the production and service sectors.

By a 15 April resolution,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Conference of Ministers approved the recommendations of a 1987 meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development. Member States were called on to give active support to the ECA secretariat and its co-operating agencies in implementing those recommendations. The Ministers decided that each MULPOC should co-ordinate the activities of the respective working group of the Intergovernmental Committee. The MULPOCs were requested to keep their member States and economic groupings in the subregion fully informed of the tasks of the working groups, and the ECA Executive Secretary was asked to ensure the implementation of the resolution with the co-operation of the OAU secretariat.

On the same date,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Ministers recommended that the ECA secretariat, in collaboration with OAU and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), should work out modalities to ensure a complementary relationship between the activities of the Intergovernmental Committee and of the Standing Conference of Heads of National Science and Technology Policy-making Bodies of African member States of UNESCO.

Environment

ECA environmental activities focused on developing environmental capabilities, including the conservation of resources and pollution control. Combating drought and desertification control were priority areas and were among the key factors accounting for the social and economic crisis in Africa.

Advisory services on combating desertification and managing drought were undertaken in four countries. In Ethiopia, work focused on establishing a central authority to co-ordinate desertification control activities. In Zimbabwe, activities promoted public participation in environmental conservation, self-sufficiency in food production, establishment of wood-lots and afforestation. For Somalia, the mission recommended sand-dune fixation, management of range and salinized lands, and public participation in resource management to combat desertification. For Djibouti, the mission concentrated on the establishment of a ministry or department of environment rather than a forestry department to address the diverse environmental issues facing the country. In order to exchange experiences on drought and desertification control, two study tours for member States were conducted to China and the USSR in June and October 1988. The tours focused mainly on desert silviculture and methods of sand-dune stabilization.

On 15 April,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Conference of Ministers urged member States to establish appropriate national mechanisms for implementing the 1977 United Nations Plan of Action to Combat Desertification⁽¹⁸⁾ and the 1984 Regional Plan of Action to Combat the Impact of Drought in Africa.⁽¹⁹⁾ The ECA Executive Secretary was urged to explore the feasibility of starting a co-operation process between all African countries as envisaged in the Regional Plan. ECA was requested to support the established subregional organizations to combat more effectively the problems of drought and desertification. The Executive Secretary was asked to report in 1989 on implementation of the resolution.

In 1988, the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development (ACMAD) was established in Niamey. A joint venture between ECA and the World Meteorological Organization, the Centre would collect, process and analyse meteorological data and provide information to users for application to agricultural production, water resources management and other human activities that depended on the weather.

On 15 April,⁽²⁰⁾ the Conference of Ministers urged member States that had not done so to approve ACMAD's constitution and decided that they should contribute $1 million, representing a 50 per cent contribution annually to ACMAD's recurrent annual budget. A formula was adopted for the contribution by member States to the annual budget and annexed to the resolution. The Executive Secretary was asked to consult with donors with a view to obtaining contributions towards making the Centre operational and the Chairman of ACMAD's Board of Governors was asked to report in 1989 on progress made in implementing the resolution.

Transport, communications and tourism

During 1988, ECA continued to provide advisory services, undertake studies, issue technical publications and organize professional meetings on transport and tourism. In the field of general and multimodal transport, advisory services were rendered to Burundi, Rwanda and Zaïre to determine the extent to which they could containerize exports or imports through the ports of Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, and Mombasa, Kenya. Recommendations were made which could help in the opening up of land-locked countries.

Guidelines for the evaluation of international road-transport practices were prepared, including the facilitation of international road traffic. Also, attention was given to promoting an African industry to manufacture transport equipment and spare parts in order to reduce imports.

In the field of shipping, ECA activities included an assessment of Africa's capabilities to promote a shipbuilding and repair industry, identification of the main bottle-necks hampering the smooth flow of African maritime trade and proposed solutions, and an attempt to establish a ministerial conference on maritime transport for eastern and southern Africa. Several port-based activities were also undertaken. With regard to inland water transport, the main activities were identification of transport facilitation problems and ways to ease Africa's international traffic flow and a study of activities to ensure the safety of navigation on lakes Kivu and Tanganyika.

The main activity in air transport was the preparation of an African policy to meet changes in the air transport environment, i.e., deregulation in the United States, liberalization in Europe, noise restrictions and the introduction of a computerized reservation system. ECA organized a Special Conference of African Ministers of Civil Aviation to discuss those issues (Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, November).

In communications, activities included studies, the organization of seminars, technical assistance to member States, technical publications and participation in professional conferences. In July 1988, a regional seminar on satellite communications technology was held in Moscow in collaboration with UNDP and the International Telecommunication Union. Also, a seminar on planning of rural telecommunications for French- and Portuguese-speaking African countries was held at Yaoundé in October/November. Technical assistance missions were undertaken at the request of telecommunications organizations in Chad, Sao Tome and Principe, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

On 15 April,⁽²¹⁾ the Conference of Ministers reaffirmed that intra-African tourism was a component of the African policy on the economic, social, cultural and political integration of the continent and was a determining factor of development. The Executive Secretary was asked to intensify co-operation within international organizations to help African countries develop tourism programmes, conduct a study on tourism activities of subregional intergovernmental organizations in Africa, establish subregional programmes for joint promotion of inter-State tourism, establish an African association of tourism and draw up model management contracts for various types of hotel infrastructure to be submitted to member States for appraisal. He was further requested to establish subregional and regional tourism and hotel institutes, develop training programmes to upgrade tourism and hotel services at various levels, publish an African directory for educational and training facilities, and organize African tourism events alongside existing continental, subregional and national trade fairs.

Transport and Communications Decade

In response to a 1986 request of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning,⁽²²⁾ ECA, in January 1988, prepared an in-depth evaluation of the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988),⁽²³⁾ proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1977.⁽²⁴⁾ The report gave the context and background to the Decade's proclamation, analysed the concept of its programme and outlined the institutional mechanisms for its implementation. It also described the Decade programme, analysed its results and discussed its impact.

The report concluded that the Decade had enabled Africa to equip itself with a global strategy suited to its needs. However, the strategy had major shortcomings in its conceptual relevance.

With regard to quantitative results, in the programme's first phase (1980-1983), a total of $7 billion, or 47 per cent, was secured out of the $15 billion estimated cost. In terms of project implementation, 300 of 1,091 projects in the first phase, or 27 per cent, were reported completed by the end of 1983. Many projects from the first phase were transferred to the second (1984-1988). At the end of 1987, 164 of the 1,048 projects in phase II were completed. It was projected that the implementation rate of that phase would be about 45 per cent.

Three main objectives were well covered during the Decade's implementation: integration, opening up of land-locked regions and mobilization of resources. The least covered objectives were harmonization, restructuring and industrial promotion. Although it was difficult to show the full impact the Decade might have had on improving transport conditions and communications efficiency, the Decade did generate considerable momentum with regard to creating political awareness through the Conference of Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning. Also, it gave a major boost to the future development of transport and communications by equipping Africa with a strategy and policy as well as institutions and mechanisms for their implementation. The report recommended that a second transport and communications decade in Africa be declared, that the expertise and experience acquired during the first Decade be maintained by retaining and/or reappointing the statutory and executing agencies and that there should be a two-year preparatory period between the end of the first and the launching of the second decade. The report also recommended activities to be undertaken by ECA during the two-year preparatory period and stated that African States should devote more financial resources to the second decade than they had to the first.

In a March report on progress in implementing the Decade's second phase,⁽²⁵⁾ ECA stated that there was very little improvement reported in 1987 over 1986. With 236 projects, roads and road transport was the largest subsector in the programme. Information was obtained on 192 of those projects, of which 62 were reported completed and a further 70 in progress, for a 32 per cent completion rate. A further 20 projects would be completed by the end of 1988, implying that 82 (35 per cent) of the projects would be completed during phase II of the Decade. Of the 70 rail transport projects on which information was received, 14 were completed, which represented no change from the previous year, and 40 projects were under implementation compared with 31 the previous year. Thus, there was no significant improvement in project implementation. Of the 38 projects in the maritime transport subsector, 7 were reported completed and 2 in progress, compared with 2 reported completed the previous year. Information was available on 55 of the 70 projects in the ports subsector, 9 of which were reported completed and 30 were under implementation.

Of the 94 projects in air transport, information was obtained on 69, showing that 11 were completed and 31 were in progress, for a completion rate of 16 per cent; 33 had not been started and no information was given on 19 others. Thus, even if all 31 projects under implementation were to be completed during the year, only 42 (45 per cent) of the projects would be completed by the end of the Decade.

Of the 45 projects in the inland water transport sector, information was available for only 19. Of those, 2 were reported completed and 5 in progress. Even if all 5 projects under implementation were to be completed during the year, still only 7 (16 per cent) of the total would be completed during the Decade. In multimodal transport, information was available on 7 projects of the 11 in the subsector; 4 were completed and 3 were under implementation.

In the telecommunications subsector, 149 projects were monitored out of 215, representing a significant improvement in terms of monitoring. Projects reported as completed rose to 34, or 23 per cent of those monitored. A further 60 projects were under implementation.

In broadcasting, projects monitored increased from 64 to 100 in 1988, representing 83 per cent of the 120 projects in the subsector. Only 15 projects were completed and 33 were in progress. By the end of the Decade, less than one third of the projects would be completed. As to postal services, information was available on 115 of the 135 projects, with 6 projects reported completed and 30 under implementation.

The stagnation in implementation rate in 1987 had been matched by a lack of growth in assistance from major financing institutions. Although World Bank assistance in 1987 was 90 per cent higher than in 1986, it was 3.8 per cent less than in 1985. During 1985-1986, African Development Bank assistance declined 47.7 per cent.

The evaluation of the Decade was discussed by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (Kinshasa, 23 and 24 March),⁽²⁶⁾ which recommended that member States should adopt the principle of launching a second decade.

On 15 April,⁽²⁷⁾ the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the recommendation of the Conference that a second decade be declared for the period 1991-2000 and recommended to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, that it declare a second decade. The Ministers endorsed a number of other decisions of the Conference: to convene a meeting of African Ministers responsible for civil aviation to consider an African aeronautic policy; to convene a meeting of experts on facilitation of inland water transport in Africa; to establish, within the Tangier MULPOC, a committee for the development of transport, including harmonization of transport infrastructure and facilitation of administrative and customs procedures in the North African subregion; to promote the use of African intergovernmental organizations as executing agencies for transport and communications projects; to reactivate the Trans-African Highways Bureau in ECA and urge African countries to allocate resources to maintain and rehabilitate roads; to urge African member States to give high priority to completing Pan-African Telecommunications Network links and making greater use of existing links for intra-African communications traffic; and to establish ministerial conferences on maritime transport in African subregions. The Ministers reiterated their 1987 appeal⁽²⁸⁾ to UNDP to provide ECA with financial assistance to reactivate and operate the Trans-African Highways Bureau and appealed to other financial institutions and donor countries also to lend financial support.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/67 without vote.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 291(XIII) of 26 February 1977 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, Economic and Social Council resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977 and General Assembly resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977,

Noting the financial support provided by the General Assembly, the United Nations Development Programme and donor countries for the implementation of the programme of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Taking into account the report on the in-depth evaluation of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, which concluded that the Decade gave a major boost to the future development of transport and communications by equipping Africa with a policy and strategy, as well as institutions and mechanisms for their implementation,

Considering resolution 84/44 of the fourth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, in which the Conference recommended that Governments of States members of the Economic Commission for Africa decide, in principle, to approve the launching of a second United Nations transport and communications decade in Africa,

Noting the report on progress in the implementation of the second phase of the programme of the Decade and the report on the Sixth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning,

Conscious that air transport is one of the key factors in economic development and integration in Africa,

Noting the concern expressed by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning about the adverse consequences for African air transport of the new civil aeronautic policies emanating from outside the continent,

Bearing in mind resolution 86/55 of the fifth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, in which the Conference, inter alia, called upon the Economic Commission for Africa to provide support to the various African subregional organizations and to assist them in co-ordinating their transport and communications programmes,

Mindful of the heavy investments made by States members of the Economic Commission for Africa in the Pan-African Telecommunications Network and the substantial achievement made in establishing it,

Noting that the in-depth evaluation of the Decade has revealed great deficiencies in the inland water transport systems in Africa,

1. Takes note of resolution 88/73 of 24 March 1988 of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, in which the Conference recommended that:

(a) A second United Nations transport and communications decade in Africa should be declared for the period 1991-2000 in order to sustain the momentum of the activities begun during the first Decade;

(b) The expertise and experience acquired during the first Decade should be retained by continuing the institutional arrangements for the first Decade, namely, the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning as the permanent policy-making body, the Economic Commission for Africa as the lead agency responsible, in collaboration with other organizations of the United Nations system, for preparing the programme for the Decade and for harmonizing, co-ordinating and monitoring activities, and the Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Committee as the technical body accountable to the Conference of Ministers;

(c) There should be a two-year preparatory period between the end of the first Decade and the launching of the second;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly, in the light of the outcome of the preparations referred to in paragraph 1 (c) of the present resolution, consider declaring the period 1991-2000 the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the generous support of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and those members of the international community that were able to provide financial and technical assistance for carrying out the activities of the first Decade;

4. Appeals to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to continue to provide support for activities related to the two-year preparatory period, 1989-1990;

5. Requests donor countries and international financial institutions to intensify their support for the accelerated development of transport and communications in Africa.

Approved by First Committee (E/1988/117) without vote, 20 July (meeting 18); draft by ECA (E/1988/69), orally amended by Vice-Chairman following informal consultations; agenda item 7.

By decision 1988/173 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa.⁽²⁹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 43/179 without vote.

Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977,
Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977,

Emphasizing the need for full implementation of the goals and objectives of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, especially in the light of continuing inadequacies in the field of transport and communications in Africa,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/67 of 28 July 1988;

2. Declares the period 1991-2000 the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and existing African regional and subregional economic groups, as well as relevant United Nations agencies, to undertake the necessary preparatory arrangements for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, and to submit to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report at its forty-fourth session and a final report at its forty-fifth session.

General Assembly resolution 43/179

20 December 1988 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/750/Add.2) without vote, 23 November (meeting 44); draft by United Republic of Tanzania, for African Group (A/C.2/43/L.18) orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 2nd Committee 28, 44; plenary 83.

Trade and finance

During 1988, ECA carried out activities under subprogrammes for domestic, intra-African and non-African trade; international financial and monetary policies; and activities of transnational corporations.

As part of ECA assistance to the member countries of the North African MULPOC, a mission went to Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco and Tunisia to brief those countries on the technical issues involved in establishing the Preferential Trade Area for North Africa and to advise them on national action required to promote it.

ECA participated in the fifth All-Africa Trade Fair (Kinshasa, 16-31 July), organizing workshops and seminars on intra-African trade and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (the 1980s), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980.⁽³⁰⁾ The following were presented: a paper on the development and expansion of intra-African trade; a statistical analysis of intra-African trade; a compendium of decisions, recommendations and resolutions on intra-African trade; and issues of the African Trade Bulletin. ECA also participated in a workshop on the United Nations Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (EDIFACT) (Baghdad, Iraq, 14 and 15 December). Organized by ESCWA and ECA, it discussed the possibilities of developing interregional co-operation in the development and application of EDIFACT in trade transactions.

Regarding international monetary and financial relations, ECA participated in the fourteenth General Assembly of the Association of African Development Finance Institutions (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 25-29 May) and serviced an extraordinary meeting of Governors of African Central Banks on the establishment of an African Monetary Fund (Abidjan, 4 June).

A regional workshop on the integration of women in trade and commerce (Niamey, 31 March-2 April) had before it an ECA report on the role and contribution of African women in domestic trade. On 15 April,⁽³¹⁾ the Conference of Ministers called on African Governments and public and local authorities to recognize the important role played by women in trade and commerce and their significant contribution to the economic development process in Africa. They appealed to the authorities to improve conditions in African traditional markets in rural and urban areas and to African Governments to encourage the granting of loans to African women to improve their trade and commercial activities. The Ministers requested development financing institutions, especially UNDP, the African Development Bank Group, the World Bank Group, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, the Islamic Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to encourage greater participation of African women in trade and commerce. They also requested the ECA Executive Secretary, the OAU Secretary-General, the UNCTAD Secretary-General, the Executive Director of the International Trade Centre and the Director of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women to draw up a joint programme for training African business women and traders in rural and urban areas.

Public administration and finance

During 1988, ECA assisted member States in developing and implementing programmes in public administration, management and finance. In February, assistance was provided to the Ministry of Local Government in Uganda in assessing, evaluating and streamlining its newly reformed structures. In September, technical advisory services were rendered to Cameroon, in co-operation with the Ministry of Public Service and the State General Inspectorate for Administrative Reform, in formulating an administrative reform strategy and in proposing measures to enhance the efficiency of the public service. With the African Association for Public Administration and Management, ECA organized a subregional seminar on critical skills for public policy management (Serrekunda, Gambia, 30 May-3 June). In June, ECA assisted the Institute of Development Management (Gaborone, Botswana) to conduct a regional seminar on management training and development (Mbabane, Swaziland).

By a 15 April resolution⁽³²⁾ on support for the United Nations Special Action Programme in Public Administration and Management for Africa (SAPAM) (see below), the Conference of Ministers commended the initiative of the United Nations system, particularly ECA, UNDP and the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTC), with the support of African countries in formulating SAPAM. Donor countries and funding agencies, particularly UNDP, were urged to make contributions for SAPAM's timely implementation.

In response to a 1987 request,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on SAPAM⁽³⁴⁾ to the Economic and Social Council. SAPAM, established on the recommendation of the Seventh (1984) Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance,⁽³⁵⁾ was based on the concept that inadequate public administration and management in Africa had adversely contributed to the manner in which African Governments had responded to problems, and that an integrated approach, supported by the international community, would improve management capabilities and help to ameliorate the economic and social situation.

SAPAM's mandate was to: inject technical and managerial expertise within international technical assistance frameworks; carry out training programmes to fill vacancies in critical functional areas; organize programmes to revitalize key institutions responsible for national capacity-building, policy formulation and central guidance; design special programmes to improve the management performance of public enterprises; and identify mechanisms at the national level to spearhead sustained implementation of proposed measures.

The report outlined SAPAM's role in meeting the technical co-operation needs of African countries and described its implementation, which would imply the mobilization over a 10-year period of some $400 million. Contributions were envisaged from three main sources: UNDP; special grants from donor Governments and agencies; and the African Development Bank and the World Bank.

With regard to future action, SAPAM would be presented to a meeting of donor Governments and agencies for their consideration and support and would be reviewed by the Ninth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance in 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1988/7 without vote.

Public administration and finance for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, 36/194 of 17 December 1981 on the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, particularly paragraph 3 thereof, 34/137 of 14 December 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, and 35/80 of 5 December 1980, 39/219 of 18 December 1984 and 40/213 of 17 December 1985 on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries,

25 May 1988 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Social development

Human resources development

In 1988, ECA activities in the area of human resources development focused on problems such as the absence of institutional machineries and policies for human resources development; the inappropriateness of education and training to the needs for African socio-economic development activities; declining standards of instruction in education and training; and increasing underutilization and wastage of human resources.

In the area of manpower planning, advisory missions went to Uganda and Somalia where workshops were organized to propose measures on national manpower policy formulation and on improving the structure and functional delineation of manpower planning machineries in those countries. Other workshops were organized in Ethiopia, Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe on various topics, including the techniques of curriculum planning and development, improving technical capabilities through higher learning, and defining ways to create employment.

The International Conference on the Human Dimension of Africa's Economic Recovery and Development (Khartoum, 5-8 March) culminated in the adoption of the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa.

The Declaration gave an overall assessment of the human condition in Africa and discussed the human dimension of structural adjustment programmes. It also contained a series of recommendations for action at the national, regional, subregional and international levels on incorporating the human factor in the recovery and structural adjustment process, special measures for the social sector and vulnerable groups, manpower development and utilization for the long term, and the role of regional, international and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

In its conclusions, the Declaration affirmed that the human dimension was the sine qua non of economic recovery and stated that there could be no real structural adjustment or economic recovery in the absence of the human imperative. That imperative meant that the vulnerable and the impoverished, the uprooted and the ravaged, women, children, youth, disabled, aged, the rural and urban poor, every group and individual in society who was in some way disadvantaged had to be given paramount consideration in the socio-economic development process. In the service of that principle, health, education, welfare and all related sectors became indispensable components of national policies, programmes, plans and regional or subregional collaboration.

The centre-piece of UNPAAERD,⁽⁵⁾ of which the Declaration was an organic part of the follow-up, enshrined a shared partnership between Africa and the rest of the international community whereby Africa would act and the international community would respond through donor reforms and increased assistance. Noting that the international community had not fulfilled its part of the bargain and that African economic recovery continued to be threatened, the Declaration stated that, if adjustment with a human face did not succeed, then the failure would be laid at the feet of the international community.

The Conference recommended that the Declaration be endorsed by the third ECA Conference of African Ministers Responsible for Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization and hoped that the Ministers would transmit it to the ECA Conference of Ministers. The Declaration could then be transmitted to the General Assembly.

The third meeting of the Conference of African Ministers Responsible for Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization (Khartoum, 12 and 13 March)⁽³⁶⁾ endorsed the Khartoum Declaration.

On 15 April,⁽³⁷⁾ the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the Declaration and annexed it to its resolution. Member States were urged to implement its recommendations by making the human dimension an essential focus of their recovery and long-term development programmes. The Ministers urged international financial institutions, bilateral and multilateral donors, the United Nations system and NGOs to implement its recommendations, ensuring that its concerns were reflected in their assistance programmes to African countries. They asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Declaration to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole on the implementation of UNPAAERD (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and to institute actions to mobilize the support of the United Nations system and the international community in implementing the Declaration's recommendations. The United Nations Inter-Agency Task Force on the Follow-up of the Implementation of UNPAAERD was called on to intensify efforts to strengthen co-operation between United Nations agencies in search for solutions to Africa's problems of human development within the context of recovery and long-term development. The Ministers asked the ECA Executive Secretary to disseminate the Declaration and, with the Chairman of the Inter-Agency Task Force, to report in 1989 on its implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 June,⁽³⁸⁾ the Sudan transmitted the Khartoum Declaration to the Secretary-General. On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1988/66 without vote.

Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa
The Economic and Social Council,

Convinced of the need for urgent and concerted measures at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to improve the human condition and sustain human resources development and utilization through the period of recovery and beyond in Africa, economic Recovery and Development in Africa, adopted by the International Conference on the Human Dimension of Africa's Economic Recovery and Development in March 1988;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the Khartoum Declaration to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly on the Review and Appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to institute the action necessary to mobilize the United Nations system and the international community in support of the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Khartoum Declaration;

8. Calls upon the Inter-Agency Task Force to intensify its efforts to strengthen further the co-operation among the organizations of the United Nations system in the search for solutions to Africa's problems of human development within the context of recovery and long-term development.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/66

28 July 1988 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote
Approved by First Committee (E/1988/117) without vote, 19 July (meeting 17); draft by ECA (E/1988/69), orally amended by Vice-chairman following informal consultations: agenda item 7.

In resolution 43/27 of 18 November, the General Assembly adopted the conclusions of the mid-term review of UNPAAERD, which contained a number of recommendations on human resources.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

ECA participated in the preparations for the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. In that connection, it contributed to the International Meeting of Experts on the Development of United Nations Standards for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 28 and 29 February), the Interregional

Meeting on the Prevention of Delinquency, Juvenile Justice and the Protection of the Young: Policy Approaches and Direction (Vienna, 18-22 April), the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (Vienna, 22-31 August) and the Inter-Agency Meeting on Follow-up to the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Vienna, 1 and 2 September).

On 15 April,⁽³⁹⁾ the Conference of Ministers adopted the statute of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be headquartered at Kampala. For the first four years following adoption of the statute, the following member States, in addition to the host country, would serve on the Institute's Governing Board Rwanda and Zaire (representing the Gisenyi MULPOC subregion); Botswana and the United Republic of Tanzania (Lusaka MULPOC); Ghana and Guinea (Niamey MULPOC); Egypt and Morocco (Tangier MULPOC); and the Central African Republic and Equatorial Guinea (Yaoundé MULPOC). Half of that group would retire after two years, to be replaced by the same number of member States elected in accordance with the provisions in the statute. The Governing Board was requested to establish a work programme and budget for the Institute, the gross financial contribution from the host country, and a formula for annual contributions of member States. The Ministers urged member States to sign the statute as soon as possible, and invited governmental, non-governmental and international organizations, as well as the United Nations, to support the Institute technically and financially. The text of the statute was annexed to the resolution.

Drug abuse

In resolution 1988/11 of 25 May on the co-ordination of drug control activities in the African region, the Economic and Social Council expressed concern at the increasing incidence of drug abuse and illicit trafficking in the region. It requested that the Secretary-General establish within ECA a focal point to co-ordinate and promote measures to combat drug abuse and illicit traffic throughout Africa. States of the region were called on to accede to existing international conventions on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and urged to establish national agencies to combat drug abuse and illicit traffic.

Youth

Youth and social welfare activities focused primarily on issues of youth employment and juvenile delinquency. The ECA secretariat compiled a Directory of Youth Organisations in African Countries, which provided information on the various youth organizations and their structures, activities and achievements. A study on the impact of rural youth employment programmes on rural development was completed and circulated to planners, policy makers and practitioners in member States. It assessed the impact of youth programmes on the rural sector, such as increase in productivity and contribution to the overall transformation of rural life. A report on juvenile delinquency, crime and justice in the light of socio-economic conditions was prepared on the basis of case-studies. ECA participated in a seminar on street children, organized by Ethiopia (Addis Ababa, 29 November-2 December).

Women and development

Efforts to include women's issues in development planning were continued during the year. An ad hoc expert group meeting on guidelines for the incorporation of women's concerns in national development plans was held (Addis Ababa, 24-28 November). Training programmes were implemented to ensure that women's needs were adequately formulated and reflected in development programmes, with emphasis on women from Portuguese-speaking countries. A seminar on project formulation and implementation was held (Sao Tome and Principe, 16-27 May) for women from Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe.

Special attention was given to enhancing women's skills and employment opportunities by means of three major operational projects: improving the role of women in the informal sector; improving women's access to credit through training in management and credit techniques; and training in optimal nutritional use of food donated for relief and food-for-work activities. A subregional seminar on measures to improve women's management skills (Douala, Cameroon, 28 November-2 December) examined existing management training programmes and the economic, cultural and social environments in which women managers worked. Its purpose was also to promote exchanges between trainers and extension workers involved in women's activities. Case-studies were undertaken on the role of women in agro-industries in Botswana, Lesotho, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe and on women managers in the informal sector in Kenya, Mauritius, Swaziland and Zambia.

On 15 April,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Conference of Ministers appealed to the relevant bodies, especially the two UNDP bureaux for Africa and ECA, to ensure that the programme for the integration of women in development within the five MULPOCs was maintained. The ECA Executive Secretary was requested to take steps to reinstate the posts for the co-ordinators within the MULPOCs. The Ministers recommended that the United Nations take action to ensure that professional women at ECA and especially at the African Training and Research Centre for Women were given permanent posts and asked member Governments to encourage direct working relations between NGOs and national machineries for the integration of women in development.

PADIS

During 1988, the Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS) focused on establishing a network for the exchange of development information and improving the information infrastructure of ECA member States. A total of 1,300 new records were added to the PADIS bibliographic data base on socio-economic development literature. Two new data bases were opened: one on ongoing research projects in the eastern and southern African countries and the other on African development institutions. Eleven member States designated national participating centres, bringing the total number of countries participating in PADIS to 27.

Among advisory missions carried out during 1988 were two to assess the needs and capacities of national participating centres in Cape Verde and Swaziland. A mission to Ethiopia concluded a preliminary investigation for the establishment of an industrial and technological information network. The Association of African Universities benefited from an advisory mission to reorganize its documentation centre.

In April, the Information and Documentation Committee of the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers reviewed the implementation of PADIS during 1986-1988 and examined its work programme for 1988-1990. A meeting of the Standing Committee on the Harmonization and Standardization of Information Systems at ECA-sponsored Regional and Subregional Institutions was held at Addis Ababa in March. A major technical consultative seminar on national information and informatics policies was held at Addis Ababa from 28 November to 1 December.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

ECA work programme, financing and staffing

Activities carried out by ECA and its secretariat during 1988 were financed mainly from the regular budget of the United Nations and extra-budgetary funds. For substantive activities, resources came from direct regular budget allocation by the General Assembly, through other United Nations units and from specialized agencies. Resources for the implementation of substantive activities were increased greatly for the 1988-1989 biennium from the low level of 1986-1987 when the Organization, because of its financial crisis, took a series of measures to reduce expenditure. In resolution 43/218 A of 21 December on the programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989, the Assembly revised the budget for ECA from the $44.2 million appropriated in 1987⁽⁴¹⁾ to $51.2 million.

In a biennial report on staff and administrative questions,⁽²⁵⁾ the ECA Executive Secretary said that, as at 31 December 1988, Africans held 162 of 187 Professional posts subject to geographical distribution in the ECA secretariat, compared to 158 at the end of 1986. Efforts were being made to ensure that all member States were represented in the secretariat, and the number not represented dropped from 11 to 10 between 1986 and 1988. The proportion of women employed in ECA rose from 7.5 per cent in 1980 to 11.5 per cent. That, however, was still short of the 30 per cent established by the Assembly in 1985.⁽⁴²⁾

With regard to progress made in implementing the 1986 recommendations of Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,⁽⁴³⁾ posts in the ECA secretariat had been reduced by only 6.7 per cent against the 15 per cent recommended for the United Nations as a whole. The relatively low rate of reduction at ECA was due largely to the efforts of the Conference of Ministers and of the African Group in New York. With regard to the status of the construction of new conference facilities, a timetable for completion by 1993 had been established (see PART SIX, Chapter III).

In its audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1987,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Board of Auditors stated that budgetary control of the ECA MULPOCs was ineffective and that their operational activities vis-à-vis expenditures was very low. It cited several weaknesses in the financial and operational functions of PADIS, including non-identification of implementation costs in the 1986-1987 and 1988-1989 ECA programme budgets, and project goals that were very ambitious and unrealistic, with achievement falling far short of the goals. Also at ECA, the accounting for contributions to a trust fund had not followed the practice provided in the United Nations financial rules. In October,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) agreed with the views of the Board regarding the MULPOCs and PADIS.

In resolution 43/216 of 21 December, the General Assembly endorsed the concurring observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ, duly taking into account the divergent views expressed in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on the question of the MULPOCs and PADIS.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, at its forty-fourth session (Jakarta, Indonesia, 11-20 April 1988), adopted 11 resolutions on a variety of urgent economic and social issues.⁽¹⁾

With the region's population fast approaching 3 billion, the Commission adopted a Plan of Action to develop those vast human resources.⁽²⁾ Known as the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP Region, the Plan focused on employment and manpower development, science and technology and the quality of life. In two resolutions related to the Plan, the Commission called on the Executive Secretary to conduct a survey on the quality of life in the ESCAP region as a major initial activity of the Plan⁽³⁾ and a study on the implications of changes in demographic situations for the various aspects of human resources development.⁽⁴⁾

To achieve environmentally sound and sustainable development, the very basic needs of all people had to be met, the Commission stated.⁽⁵⁾ Despite some progress, the region still battled with such environmental problems as depletion of natural resources, desertification and environmental degradation. Recalling that the General Assembly had included "A long-term strategy for sustainable and environmentally sound development" in its 1988 agenda, the Commission invited ESCAP members to integrate environmental considerations into their development policies and programmes. The Commission also decided to convene a ministerial conference on the environment in 1990. (See also PART THREE, Chapter VIII.)

The continuing deterioration in the economic and social conditions in LDCs, in spite of national and international efforts, was a cause of deep concern, the Commission said.⁽⁶⁾ Recalling the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1981,⁽⁷⁾ it urged donor countries whose official development assistance (ODA) to LDCs had not reached 0.15 per cent of their gross national product (GNP), or which had not doubled their ODA, to attain those targets.

By another resolution, the Commission invited its members to participate actively in the formulation of a regional social development strategy to the year 2000 and beyond, with special reference to the social aspects of rural development.⁽⁸⁾

Concerned that millions in the region were living either completely without shelter or in shelter unfit for human habitation, the Commission⁽⁹⁾ urged all members to commit themselves to the objectives of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted by the Assembly in 1987.⁽¹⁰⁾

Recognizing the importance of technical and economic co-operation among developing countries, the Commission recommended that regional intergovernmental programming exercises to promote such co-operation continue to be held, and asked the ESCAP Executive Secretary to give them greater emphasis.⁽¹¹⁾

The Asia and Pacific Telecommunications Development Conference (New Delhi, India, February) recommended that ESCAP take action on recommendations made in a report known as "The missing link" that related to telecommunication sector priority. Following up, the Commission adopted a resolution in which it called on the Executive Secretary to consult with interested members on the matter.⁽¹²⁾

As the Pacific island countries, especially the small, remote and least developed ones, had not been fully represented at Commission sessions, ESCAP requested the Executive Secretary to increase and diversify Pacific subregional representation on the secretariat Professional staff.⁽¹³⁾

In 1987, the Assembly had proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year.⁽¹⁴⁾ In response, the Commission, inviting its members to participate in the preparation of the Year at both the national and regional levels, recommended that special attention be paid to implementing the Regional Programme for the Universalization and Renewal of Primary Education and the Eradication of Illiteracy in Asia and the Pacific.⁽¹⁵⁾

In his message to ESCAP at its forty-fourth session, the Secretary-General said the region had recently shown remarkable vitality, despite depressed commodity prices, rising debt burdens and protectionist measures worldwide. However, the least developed and Pacific island countries had been unable to achieve any significant economic growth and still needed special support. On an encouraging note, many developing countries in the region were giving special attention to modernizing their infrastructures and upgrading human resources.

The Executive Secretary reported that the developing Asian and Pacific countries had achieved a 6 per cent average growth in 1987 despite various difficulties, an improvement of almost 2 per cent over 1986 and nearly double the growth rate of the rest of the developing world. However, that was an average figure which would have been reduced to 3 per cent had it not been for the strong growth of China and the three newly industrializing economies of East Asia.

Among the region's unresolved problems, the inability of its social progress to keep pace with economic development was arguably at the forefront. Many overdue social changes, reforms and improvements were needed if the continued success of growth itself was not to be undermined. The outgrowth of that imbalance was mounting social tension and such urgent new concerns as unemployed youth, rising crime and drug abuse, as well as excessive rural-urban migration, inadequate welfare for the aged and a lack of academic and institutional readiness for the current technological revolution. Massive illiteracy also continued to be a widespread problem.

With the admission of American Samoa as an associate member of ESCAP, membership stood at 38 member States and 10 associate members in 1988 (see APPENDIX III).

Economic and social trends

The diverse economies of the developing ESCAP region turned in more vigorous and geographically balanced performances during 1988 than in the previous year, according to the annual Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1988,⁽¹⁶⁾ a summary of which was issued in April 1989.⁽¹⁷⁾ The continued robustness of economic activity in the industrial countries contributed strongly to that vigour.

The underlying strength of growth capacity in many countries was illustrated by the economies of Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore, which continued a strong recovery from the difficult situations they had encountered in 1985-1986. Malaysia was expected to post a growth rate of 7.4 per cent in 1988, compared with 5.2 per cent in 1987. The Philippines, which had experienced over 10 per cent contraction in 1984-1985, showed a marked recovery, with 5.9 per cent growth in 1987 and 6.7 per cent in 1988. Singapore's economic growth picked up from 1.8 per cent in 1986 to 8.8 per cent in 1987 and was expected to exceed 11 per cent in 1988. A similar rate of growth was estimated for Thailand in 1988, compared with 8.4 and 4.7 per cent in 1987 and 1986. The strong performance of those economies was supported both by export demand for their manufactures and their primary commodities and by strong domestic demand from consumer and investment spending. The latter was partly stimulated by an upsurge in foreign direct investment flows from Japan and the East Asian newly industrializing economies.

Indonesia continued to expect constrained economic growth of a projected 4 per cent for the year, due mainly to slackening oil prices. China and East Asia showed some signs of weakened growth in 1988, although their current rates remained high. China found itself threatened with inflation due to a high demand pressure that had come after rapid income growth, along with shortages of energy and raw material supplies. It was projected that the real growth rate of China's overall economy might moderate from 1987's level of 9.4 per cent, even though an 11 per cent nominal growth of GNP was estimated for 1988.

In Hong Kong, growth was expected to be just more than half of the 13.6 per cent achieved in 1987, while the rate for the Republic of Korea was projected to be slightly less than the 11.1 per cent recorded in 1987. Increasing constraints faced in export markets, rising domestic costs and inflation tended to put a brake on the growth performance of those economies.

With the exception of India, the performance of the major South Asian economies remained rather subdued during 1988. India, however, was expected to accelerate the pace of economic growth in 1988, overcoming the effects of the adverse weather situation in 1987, when the rate slumped to 2 per cent. The growth rates of Pakistan in 1987 and 1988, although lower than the two previous years, were still relatively high and more stable than other South Asian countries. In Sri Lanka, GDP growth rate, estimated at 3.4 per cent, was more than double the 1.4 per cent of 1987, when the country was drought-stricken. Growth rates of LDCs remained depressed during the year, with the exception of Bhutan, Maldives and Nepal. Bhutan's economic growth showed a sudden spurt, reaching 15 per cent in 1987. Bangladesh showed a 2-3 per cent loss of agricultural income in 1988 due to devastating floods and cyclones in 1987-1988. However, exports of light manufactures showed a possible growth of almost 30 per cent for Bangladesh, while Nepal's were forecast to reach a 45 per cent increase.

International trade provided a strong stimulus to the economic growth of the region in 1988. Markets generally were buoyant for both primary commodities and manufactures in most parts of the world. Strong economic growth rates in industrialized countries meant sustained demand for exports from the ESCAP region. Demand also remained high within the region itself. Of special significance for Asian exports since 1985 was the dynamic growth of the Japanese market, which benefited many economies, particularly those in East and South-East Asia.

Oil prices declined in 1988, affecting mostly the economies of Brunei Darussalam and Indonesia. Prices for some other commodities rose and recoveries were relatively strong in the cases of copper, copra and other coconut products, palm oil, rice, rubber, sugar and timber. Prices of cotton, coffee, cocoa, jute, tin and tea, however, remained stagnant.

The current balance of payments (on goods, services and private transfers) of economies in the region benefited in 1987-1988 from the generally strong upsurge in exports. The countries in East and South-East Asia, because of the stronger performance of their manufactures exports and favourable commodity prices, benefited more than the countries in South Asia, which, in general, made slower progress in their attempt to achieve long-term viability in the balance of payments.

Foreign direct investment flows to the developing ESCAP countries had grown in importance in recent years. Several favourable characteristics of developing economies of the region, as well as a record of high and stable economic growth, in contrast to that of other developing regions, had made the Asian and Pacific region a large potential destination of foreign investment flows. Within the region itself, the inward foreign direct investment stock and flows remained heavily concentrated in the East and South-East Asian economies. For example, those economies received above 90 per cent of the inflows averaging $4.82 billion in 1981-1985. But although the share of foreign direct investment stock in the developing countries of the region was relatively high, the region's share in the stock of foreign direct investment worldwide stood at only 8 per cent in 1985.

During the 1980s, with their currencies pegged to the United States dollar or to baskets of currencies in which the dollar had a major weight, the developing countries of the region had to adjust to the large realignments among the currencies of the main industrial countries. For most of the decade, the exchange rate issue centred on how to cope with the sharp appreciation of the dollar and then its similar depreciation against all other major international currencies.

In decision 1988/181 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific 1987.⁽¹⁸⁾

Least developed and island economies

Many of the region's least developed and island countries received severe set-backs in their socio-economic development efforts owing to natural calamities during 1987 and 1988, which ranged from severe floods, cyclones, tidal waves, earthquakes and heavy rains to drought in some countries. While generally failing to achieve either long-term structural diversification or the 7.2 per cent per annum growth target envisaged in SNPA,⁽¹⁹⁾ some countries showed signs of improvement in 1988.

Agriculture, the largest sector of most LDC's, remained vulnerable to the vagaries of nature; in many, growth rates of food-grains output remained below population growth rates, requiring continued dependence on food imports, thus draining scarce foreign exchange resources. Despite various efforts, growth in the industrial sector continued to be weak as compared with other developing countries in the region.

The trade opportunities of LDCs suffered from a lack of diversification in both commodity composition and market orientation. However, some countries marked a good growth rate in exports, led by light manufactures, especially garments.

Social development

Traditionally the formal education system had received great attention in developing economies throughout the region as a means of equalizing opportunities in the society. But although vocational and technical training had been stressed, along with emphasis on universal primary education (especially in countries with growing industrial sectors), in several economies facilities had not expanded fast enough to satisfy demands.

There was concern that educational expansion in developing economies had resulted in unemployment of the educated, because there was evidence that unemployment in urban areas was concentrated among workers in their teens and early twenties. While the system had increased the supply of workers with educational credentials in the labour force, suitable job opportunities to match the earnings expectation of those workers could not keep pace.

Women

The role of women in the development process had received increasing attention in recent years. It appeared (though no statistical data were available) that throughout the region women's participation in productive activity remained generally lower than that of men. Women's jobs also tended to be concentrated in agriculture, especially at the relatively low stage of economic development of countries, and in the services at a higher stage. In all sectors, women tended to hold jobs requiring relatively low levels of skill and responsibility.

Although education of women was of crucial significance in terms of a number of family-oriented development and welfare activities, such as family planning and health, child care and welfare, women in the region had generally tended to lag behind men in educational achievements. Over the years, women's access to and position in the educational system had improved only slightly in most countries. Regarding secondary and tertiary schooling, however, the disparity between men and women tended to be less in some countries, judging from enrolment ratios. This was probably due to the fact that secondary education remained limited to the elite and upper classes in most developing countries.

Activities in 1988

During the year, ESCAP continued to monitor closely the socio-economic situations and issues at the national, regional and international levels that might have impact on the region's development prospects. Activities were undertaken in a wide variety of areas, including population, food and agriculture, international trade, energy and natural resources.

Agriculture and rural development

The sector covering food, agriculture and rural development continued to be beset with many problems in 1988 that hindered national progress. They included limited technical knowledge among farmers, lack of required inputs, absence of integrated rural planning, unfavorable prices of primary commodities, declining soil fertility and heavy dependence on weather. Included in the activities was a planning workshop on socio-economic constraints on the use of new and renewable sources of energy (Bangkok, Thailand, September), a regional symposium on farm broadcasting (Bangkok, November/December) and a planning workshop on country studies to assess the impact of low agricultural export prices at the farm level (Bangkok, December).

The Commission endorsed the technical recommendations of the ESCAP and World Bank/UNDP Resource Recovery (Waste Recycling) International Seminar on Waste-water Reclamation and Reuse for Aquaculture (Calcutta, India, December) and suggested that public health aspects of sewage-fed aquaculture be further studied. It expressed support of the ESCAP/FAO/UNIDO Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific in its continued work to promote the balanced and judicious use of fertilizer through the development of human resources by means of training, workshops, seminars and study tours; advisory services and research; and dissemination of timely and reliable fertilizer-related information.

The first phase of an inter-agency project on the action plan for multiplication of participatory rural development experience on a socially significant scale was implemented at the Regional Review Meeting on Participatory Rural Development (Dhaka, Bangladesh, July). Also, eight grass-roots cadres participated in training programmes in Bangladesh, India and Nepal during November and December.

Concerning the environment, progress was made on the Regional Network of Research and Training Centres on Desertification Control in Asia and the Pacific, including the production of a film on the extent of the problem within the region. Several meetings were held in Bangkok, including an expert group meeting on environmental impact assessment of development projects (August), a consultative meeting on integrated environmental impact assessment for the eastern seaboard development programme (November) and roving seminars on promotion of environmental awareness in accordance with findings and recommendations of the World Commission on Environment and Development (December) (the last also in Dhaka and Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia).

Human settlements

Progress was made towards implementing the Commission's April 1988 resolution⁽⁹⁾ in which it urged members to commit themselves to the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.⁽¹⁰⁾ With France's support, two projects were under implementation: developing building-component industries through the application of updated modular co-ordination rules, and guidelines for innovative community-based housing finance and credit systems for low-income households. Among meetings held was a national training seminar for trainers in community participation in human settlements programmes (Manila, Philippines, September) and a seminar-cum-study tour on urban transport (Yokohama/Osaka, Japan, October/November).

International trade

In 1988, the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII) had revealed that, while progress had been achieved in some sectors, much was required in others. The Commission decided to continue to provide appropriate technical and advisory support to developing countries in the region and to conduct relevant studies and seminars so as to equip them to participate effectively in the negotiations and adopt appropriate trade policy measures. In secretariat activities covering raw materials and commodities, particular attention was paid to the usefulness of co-operative commodity arrangements among producing countries of jute, silk and tropical timber.

Activities were also undertaken regarding trade facilitation, organizing the next Asia-Pacific International Trade Fair to be held in 1990-1991 and conducting studies on foreign investment incentive schemes relating to Bangladesh, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Sri Lanka.

The Committee on Trade held its twenty-sixth session at Bangkok from 28 November to 2 December 1988. Also, a workshop for the development and strengthening of trade information services in the South Pacific was organized at Suva, Fiji (October) and an expert group meeting on sericulture took place at Khon Kaen, Thailand (December).

Least developed countries

The wide disparity between the rapid economic progress and development in several of the region's developing countries and the continued unfavourable economic situation in LDCs became a cause for concern during 1988. Some progress had been made in implementing SNPA⁽¹⁹⁾ during the year, with most LDCs launching extensive development programmes. However, lack of resources hindered them from achieving their goals, and it was urgent that an appropriate action programme for the 1990s be formulated. ESCAP had taken action, pursuant to its April resolution,⁽⁶⁾ in helping to prepare for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs in 1990.

Support for LDCs was reiterated by UNDP and DTCD, with the former rendering special support to countries with special needs. In particular, it was committed to participating in a rehabilitation programme for countries stricken by war and had extended emergency assistance to two LDCs hit by natural disasters in 1988. UNDP co-ordinated assistance to five LDCs of the region.

Technology for development

During 1988, the region witnessed a heightened awareness among policy planners and decision makers of development based on science and technology. That was attributable in part to the efforts of the ESCAP secretariat, which took action pursuant to the Tokyo Programme on Technology for Development in Asia and the Pacific. ESCAP initiated co-operative projects in five areas: research, development and demonstration projects in selected areas of technology; identification of technological needs, capabilities and levels of technological development; finding practical ways of sharing information; promotion of regional co-operative activities; and initiating measures for the technological development of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.

The Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (with the financial support of UNDP) contributed to implementing the Tokyo Programme, especially in the areas of science and technology information-sharing and management and the promotion of technology utilization.

Transnational corporations

In 1988, the Commission noted that transnational corporations (TNCs) accounted for a significant part of total investment in only a few developing countries, with such investments tending to be concentrated in the higher-income, larger and better-endowed developing countries. Therefore, the Commission agreed that it might be desirable for developing countries to improve their investment climate to maintain their share of foreign investment.

In China, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Singapore, advisory services were undertaken during 1988 to assist them with projects relating to TNCs. Research activities were undertaken in data collection under a project on TNCs in the international trade of primary commodities and studies were made under the second phase of a project on TNCs and the environment. Several publications were completed, including the Asian-Pacific TNC Review 1988, The Socio-economic Impact of Transnational Corporations in the Food Industry, Transnational Corporations and Environment Management in Selected Asian and Pacific Developing Countries and Transnational Corporations from Developing Asian Economies: Host Country Perspectives.

In June, the ESCAP/United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations Joint Unit on TNCs held a seminar at Bangkok on the role of foreign direct investment and trade in services and development. The Joint Unit also continued to collect, analyse and disseminate information relating to TNC activities in the region, including information and research publications on: laws, regulations and general policies pertaining to them; foreign direct investment flows and non-equity arrangements; and data sources, research activities and information services pertaining to or carried out in the region. Activities to further the development of national information systems on TNCs and the establishment of a regional information network continued with the formulation of a pilot project proposal for the Association of South-East Asian Nations.

Shipping, transport and communications

The Committee on Shipping, Transport and Communications, at its twelfth session (Bangkok, 12-16 December 1988), noted that in recent years multimodal transport had become increasingly important, owing to demand for fast, efficient shipment of goods and rapid changes in technology. There was also a tremendous need in the developing countries for assistance in the introduction of multimodalism.

In the area of road transport, UNDP financed a project to develop rural road infrastructure, which was designed to strengthen the training as well as research and development capacities of several regional institutions in order to organize training courses for ESCAP member countries.

In railway transport, the secretariat carried out activities relating to modernization, transfer of technology, development of railways, computerized railway operation and electrification, and organized seminars, study tours, symposia and workshops. Regarding air transport, a project was carried out on air cargo management systems applicable to developing countries of the region. In telecommunications and postal services, a programme was being undertaken by the secretariat relating to the development of postal services in rural areas.

Advisory services were provided to Bangladesh, Nepal and the Philippines on information and data collection for ESCAP railway statistics; to India for a site survey of rail/wheel wear and derailment and in connection with the implementation of the UNDP project on developing rural road infrastructure; and to China and Indonesia in connection with the implementation of the same UNDP project.

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

At its 1988 session, the Commission endorsed a proposal to convene a senior-level meeting of ESCAP to consider the findings of an intercountry mission which was to take place within the framework of the 1989 mid-term review of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994). The Commission felt that long-term projects such as the Asian Highway, the Trans-Asian Railway, the Asian Railway master plan and rail-cum-sea transport development under the programme for the Decade should be continued during the Decade's second half. It also felt that human resources development, technology transfer, strengthening of interregional and intra-regional transport and communication linkages, promotion of regional co-operation and integrated transport planning should be accorded priority and be included in the Decade's regional programme of action.

Council,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed the In an April report to the Economic and Social Implementation of the Decade's programmes, which the Commission in 1987 had recommended be accorded priority.⁽²¹⁾ He reported that of 54 projects under the regional programme of action, 15 had been completed, 15 were under implementation, 9 had been submitted to UNDP for funding and 15 were to be submitted for financial assistance from donor countries.

The Secretary-General stated that an effective way of raising the public's awareness of the Decade would be for each member and associate member of ESCAP to issue a set of commemorative stamps. The ESCAP secretariat had received a positive response from some countries to its suggestion in that regard.

By decision 1988/173 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Population

The Committee on Population and Social Development held its first session in 1988 (Bangkok, 21-25 November). A regional study on emerging issues of population aging was organized to develop policies and programmes concerning the elderly. Training programmes were organized on the use of microcomputers for analysis of mortality data. A study on the implications of demographic changes for the development of human resources was initiated. Technical assistance activities involved strengthening the formulation of population policies and programmes through the provision of advisory services on population and development. Also, efforts were made to improve the Commission's dissemination and exchange of population information and to develop population information centres and networks in countries of the region.

The final meeting of the Study Directors on Emerging Issues of the Aging of Population was held in Bangkok in May. A regional seminar on frameworks for population and development planning was also held (Bangkok, June), as was an ad hoc expert group meeting on integration of population and development policies (Bangkok, August/September). The Asia-Pacific population information consultative workshop was conducted (Bangkok, October/November). In addition, 18 candidates from the region were awarded 1988-1989 fellowships for training at the International Institute for Population Sciences in Bombay, India.

Women in development

Legal literacy among women was regarded by the Commission as having particular importance and it noted the secretariat's efforts towards that end during 1988. Such literacy was especially pertinent in the developing countries, where the majority of women were, in many cases, not aware of their legal rights. National workshops to promote legal literacy among women were held (Colombo, Sri Lanka, June; Manila, July; Jakarta, Indonesia, September; Dhaka, Bangladesh, December).

The secretariat also continued to implement the multi-year project on the development of the Women's Information Network for Asia and the Pacific, with a workshop on management of women's information centres being held (Bangkok, December). Advisory services were provided to Australia, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, China, Fiji, Indonesia, Japan, the Republic of Korea, Samoa, Thailand and Tonga to assist the strengthening of national structures and mechanisms, including national policies and programmes, for the integration of women in development.

Statistics

The Commission noted with concern that demands for data were placing a strain on national statistical offices, whose resources were static or declining. It felt that it was particularly important to develop existing statistical methodology, especially in the quality control of data, so as to enhance the accuracy and reliability of the information supplied. In 1988, many countries had benefited greatly from the regional advisory services provided by the secretariat in such areas as population censuses and surveys, data processing and household surveys.

Several meetings covering statistics issues were held in 1988: an expert group meeting on computerized information systems for Governments (Bangkok, June); an advanced course on statistics related to poverty, inequality and basic needs (Bangkok, July); and an advanced course on planning, implementing and evaluating agricultural census (Bangkok, July/August). A number of advisory services were also rendered in 1988. A technical review of the National Household Survey Capability Programme was conducted in Bangladesh, while another appraised household survey activities in two provinces of China. Advisory services assisted in the review and improvement of national accounts in Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam and Thailand; others assisted in the planning, organization, conducting of pre-tests, processing and analysis of population and housing censuses and demographic surveys in Bangladesh, Hong Kong, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Sri Lanka, Tonga, Vanuatu and Viet Nam.

Organizational questions

Admission of American Samoa

In 1987, the United States, as the ESCAP member responsible for the international relations of American Samoa, had presented the Territory's application for admission as an associate member of ESCAP.⁽²²⁾ The application was considered and unanimously endorsed by the Commission at its April 1988 session. On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by adopting decision 1988/170, amended the Commission's terms of reference to include American Samoa as an associate member.

Europe

The forty-third session of the Economic Commission for Europe (Geneva, 12-21 April 1988)⁽¹⁾ took place in an improved political climate in East-West relations, which had opened up new prospects for enhanced co-operation. Such co-operation included the 1987 signing of the Treaty between the United States and the USSR on the elimination of intermediate-range and shorter-range nuclear missiles (see PART ONE, Chapter II), the resumed negotiations on disarmament issues and many other peaceful initiatives. Particular reference was made to the entry into force in 1987 of the Single European Act and the European Community's objective to establish a common internal market in 1992. Several delegations, however, focused on the deceleration in output growth and the unfavourable short-term prospects for a number of countries of the region. They also highlighted the need for more growth-oriented national economic policies and for international co-operation.

At its April session, the Commission adopted a resolution on its work as a whole and its future activities, in which it again called on member Governments to take full advantage of its potential for dialogue and for strengthening economic relations and multilateral co-operation in the region.⁽²⁾ Sixteen decisions were also adopted on various aspects of the Commission's work. The Commission approved an Overall Economic Perspective to the Year 2000,⁽³⁾ and adopted a Regional Strategy for Environmental Protection and Rational Use of Natural Resources in ECE Member Countries Covering the Period up to the Year 2000 and Beyond, and a Declaration on Conservation of Flora, Fauna and Their Habitats.⁽⁴⁾ Other decisions related to the work of the World Commission on Environment and Development;⁽⁵⁾ ECE's contribution to the follow-up of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women;⁽⁶⁾ agriculture;⁽⁷⁾ a new international codification system for medium- and high-rank coals;⁽⁸⁾ rail and combined transport;⁽⁹⁾ the possible introduction of summertime throughout all European ECE countries;⁽¹⁰⁾ policy implications of a study on European timber trends and prospects to the year 2000 and beyond;⁽¹¹⁾ the adoption of rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport and related data elements, segments and messages (EDIFACT);⁽¹²⁾ the work programme of the Committee on the Development of Trade;⁽¹³⁾ co-operation in the development of transport;⁽¹⁴⁾ building regulations;⁽¹⁵⁾ economic co-operation in the Mediterranean;⁽¹⁶⁾ standardization and related activities;^(*) and engineering industries and automation.

During the first eight months of 1988, some 120 East-West joint venture contracts were signed compared with only a handful during the early 1980s. Noting that those joint ventures were being established at an accelerating pace as an innovative form for developing trade and industrial co-operation between Eastern and Western partners, ECE issued a guide on the legal aspects of such ventures.⁽¹⁹⁾

In February, six Balkan countries agreed to mutual co-operation in a wide range of economic activities. Noting ECE's previous help in fostering co-operation among those countries, some delegations indicated that the Commission's future assistance in that area would be welcomed. Delegations emphasized, however, that care had to be taken that internal integration processes among groupings of countries did not produce external disintegration among other countries in the region.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe, 1988-1989,⁽²⁰⁾ the region experienced growth in 1988. This occurred despite forecasts to the contrary, as a slow-down had been expected in the market economies following turbulent activity in world-wide financial markets in 1987. Instead, outputs in those economies rose by just over 4 per cent, which was attributed to a number of factors, including the impact of lower inflation, reductions in fiscal imbalances, major improvements in corporate profitability and, in general, widespread progress in raising supply-side efficiency.

GDP of the market economies of Western Europe rose from 2.5 to 3.6 per cent in 1988—the largest increase since 1976. Consequently, employment in Western Europe rose by some 1 per cent and unemployment fell from a 1987 average of 9.3 per cent to 8.8 per cent.

Although the centrally planned economies of Europe shared in the general acceleration of world-wide output growth in 1988, goals for the year were not reached. Imbalances in domestic markets increased in most countries. Declining import demand in the USSR and low competitiveness in Western markets affected growth in Eastern Europe.

The volume of Soviet exports to the West increased by some 13 per cent in the first three quarters of the year, with higher oil exports playing an important part. Soviet imports grew by 11 per cent in volume after falling sharply in the previous two years. But despite this, 1988 was another difficult year for Soviet trade with the West. Export prices of fuels fell by 15 per cent, while import prices rose rapidly, led by higher prices for cereals. This caused the annual trade balance with the West to swing from a surplus of $1 billion to a deficit of $2.5 billion. Adjusted for valuation effects, Soviet net indebtedness was estimated to have increased by over $1 billion.

After several years of stagnation, the volume of Eastern European exports to the West increased by 7 per cent in the first three quarters of 1988. But although Eastern Europe's trade surplus in convertible currencies increased, the increase of the invisibles deficit led to a small decline in the current account surplus to about $1 billion. The area's net indebtedness declined from almost $76 billion in 1987 to $73 billion at the end of 1988.

Among the centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe and the USSR, individual performances varied. In Hungary, adjustments in the external sector, combined with far-reaching economic reforms, had had priority over the pace of economic expansion and GDP stagnated. Romania had continued to give priority to external adjustment: in 1988 that affected not only the standard of living but also investment and output growth. The German Democratic Republic had tried to combine external adjustment with economic growth, but in 1988 output decelerated for the third consecutive year and fell below the Eastern European average.

There had been signs in recent years of increasing imbalances in the domestic markets of centrally planned economies. In the USSR, the inadequate supplies of consumer goods became the principal economic problem in 1988. Open inflation in Hungary and Poland, which had been reported for several years, reached 17 and 60 per cent, respectively, in 1988. Inflationary pressures seemed to be increasing in other countries, although it manifested in other ways. Domestic imbalances had also worsened in Poland and Romania, where extensive rationing had been in force for some years.

Activities in 1988

Regional economic co-operation

When the Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (twenty-fourth session, Geneva, 15-19 February) met in 1988,⁽²¹⁾ they were joined by representatives of UNCTAD, the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA), the European Economic Community and the European Free Trade Association (EFTA). Discussions covered the situations in countries of both market and centrally planned economies. The Advisers finalized the full version of the Overall Economic Perspective to the Year 2000,⁽²²⁾ which was intended as an aid to policy makers who sought solutions through co-operation among ECE member countries. The document showed that a continuation of past trends was untenable owing to imbalances and that new approaches to solving economic and social problems were needed, namely in the form of enhanced international co-operation. The Perspective was divided into two parts. Part one contained chapters covering the overall economic perspective and scenarios exploring long-term economic growth conditions. Part two's chapters dealt with human resources development; energy prospects; environment problems and economic development; and science and technology in long-term economic development. In April, ECE approved the Perspective.⁽²³⁾

During the year, the Senior Economic Advisory held an ad hoc meeting on personal and collective services sectors development (Geneva, 24 and 25 October) and a symposium on the national and international aspects of long-term prospects in ECE countries (Budapest, Hungary, 4-7 October).

International trade

The Committee on the Development of Trade (thirty-seventh session, Geneva, 5-9 December)⁽²³⁾ considered recent and prospective trends in intra-regional and interregional trade; matters arising from the April session of ECE; compensation trade in the region; practical measures to examine obstacles to intraregional trade and to promote and diversify trade; promoting trade through industrial co-operation; improved business contacts; trade problems of the economically developing member States; and improvement of international trade procedures and international contract practices in industry.

The Committee adopted its work programme for 1988-1993, which included a number of continuing activities, such as an analysis of recent and prospective trade trends, policies and problems; promotion and diversification of East-West trade; and consideration of means for creating favourable conditions for industrial co-operation.

A number of meetings were held by various bodies of the Committee during 1988: the Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures met from 13 to 16 September; a meeting of experts on data elements and automatic data interchange was held on 14 and 15 September; and the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry held its thirty-second (27-29 June) and thirty-third (28-30 November) sessions.

In April,⁽¹²⁾ ECE noted that the Working Party on the Facilitation of International Trade Procedures had adopted the rules for EDIFACT and recommended that they be named the United Nations Rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport.

Transport

At its forty-ninth session (Geneva, 1-5 February),⁽²⁴⁾ the Inland Transport Committee discussed the application of international transport agreements of interest to ECE Governments, an analysis of the transport situation in member countries and emerging development trends, and specific issues related to road, rail and inland water transport.

Working parties or expert groups of the Committee also convened during 1988. They conducted meetings on the transport of dangerous goods, road traffic safety, construction of vehicles, noise, combined transport, customs questions affecting transport, transport trends and economics, transport statistics, transport of perishable foodstuffs, road transport, lighting and light-signalling, pollution and energy, brakes and running gear, general safety provisions, passive safety, rail transport, developing a European railway network, inland water transport, standardizing technical requirements for vessels and ships' papers, and standardizing rules of the road and signs and signals in inland navigation.

In April, ECE requested the Inland Transport Committee to analyse the conditions for closer international co-operation between national railways, appropriate commercial autonomy for international traffic management, and international railway services according to prevailing market conditions.⁽⁹⁾

The Commission again asked the Committee to co-operate with the Mediterranean transport centres and recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it grant United Nations status to the Transport Study Centre for the Eastern Mediterranean (Volos, Greece), the Transport Study Centre for the Western Mediterranean (Barcelona, Spain) and the Transport Training Centre (Istanbul, Turkey), on the understanding that there would be no financial implications for the regular United Nations budget.⁽¹⁶⁾ On 28 July, the Council agreed to ECE's recommendation when it adopted decision 1988/169, adding that such status would take effect after agreements had been concluded between the United Nations and the respective Governments concerning the conditions of such status.

Industry

The Chemical Industry Committee (twenty-first session, Geneva, 5-7 October)⁽²⁵⁾ discussed major issues confronting the industry, such as restructuring of the industry changes in fiscal policy, enterprises, technology policies, manpower problems, the problem of the image of the industry, environmental considerations and safety. The Committee reviewed chemical market data on aromatic hydrocarbons and olefins, and agreed that a new group of rapporteurs, on chlor-alkaline products, should be created. It also endorsed a report on the use and disposal of wastes from phosphoric acid and titanium dioxide production and reviewed the report of the first ad hoc meeting for the study on membrane technology in the chemical industry. The second such meeting was held at Geneva in December. The Group of Experts on the Periodic Survey of the Chemical Industry held its fourteenth session (3 and 4 October). A seminar on the use of electronic energy in the chemical industry was held at Lyons, France (7-10 November), and preparations for a seminar on the role of the chemical industry in environmental protection took place on 26 and 27 May.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (eighth session, Geneva, 22-24 February)⁽²⁶⁾ examined the medium- and long-term assessment of engineering industries within national, regional and global economies and took note of the Commission's decision to delete from its work programme the project on the medium- and long-term impact of automation on the economy and its individual sectors. It also discussed the 1985 and 1986 annual reviews of engineering industries and automation and the preparation of the 1987 review. Several current and proposed studies were discussed, including the preparation of a feasibility study on ECE work on robotics and flexible manufacturing systems and trends towards computer-integrated manufacturing, and a study on food-processing machinery, including packaging techniques. A project on a consulting system for industrial technologies was also proposed. Other topics brought under discussion included environmental and resource-saving problems, statistics of engineering industries and automation, and activities of United Nations and other international bodies.

Meetings held included one on questions of statistics concerning engineering industries and automation (17-19 October), an ad hoc meeting for the study on food-processing machinery and a seminar entitled "Shipbuilding 2000 Maritime Conference-BALTEXPO '88" (Gdansk, Poland, 5-9 September).

In April, the Commission approved the 1988-1992 work programme and the calendar of meetings of the Working Party.⁽¹⁸⁾

The Steel Committee (fifty-sixth session, Geneva, 26-28 October)⁽²⁷⁾ reviewed short- and medium-term trends in the steel market and recent statistics on the industry. It examined projects in progress, including one on the importance of the iron and steel industry in the economic activity of ECE members and another on the recuperation and economic utilization of by-products of the iron and steel industry.

During the year, activities included an expert meeting on the steel market, a seminar on new applications for steel in view of the challenge from substitute materials and a preparatory meeting for a seminar on the economic and technical aspects of the modernization of the steel industry.

Energy resources

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy (sixth session, Geneva, 24-27 May),⁽²⁸⁾ pursuant to a 1987 Commission decision,⁽²⁹⁾ reviewed, among other things, ECE activities regarding general energy and the energy situation in the region, as well as the general energy work programme for 1988-1992.

The Coal Committee (eighty-fourth session, Geneva, 26-29 September)⁽³⁰⁾ focused on general energy problems in the region, with particular attention paid to the compilation of energy balances of ECE countries for past and future years. Current developments, international trade and medium- and long-term perspectives of the coal industry were discussed, as was scientific and technical co-operation in preparation and utilization of coal. The Committee also adopted its 1988-1992 work programme. Meetings held in 1988 included an ad hoc meeting on the elaboration of a new international scientific classification of medium- and high-rank coals (13 and 14 June). Expert meetings were held on productivity and management problems in the coal industry (20-22 June), on the utilization and preparation of solid fuels (14-16 June) and on opencast mines (Karlovy Vary, Czechoslovakia, 16-20 May). The Working Party on Coal Trade and Coal Statistics held its second session (Donetsk, Ukrainian SSR, 30 May-2 June).

The Committee on Electric Power (forty-sixth session, Geneva 25-28 January)⁽³¹⁾ examined, among other things, selected technical and economic problems, including the rational use and distribution of electricity outside major urban areas; electric power stations; new developments in geothermal energy; the interconnection of electric power transmission systems of the Balkan countries; and the relationship between electricity and the environment. Expert groups met on problems of planning and operating large power systems (8-10 June); electric power stations (12-14 December); and the relationship between electricity and the environment (14-16 December). A seminar was held on the impact of atmospheric protection measures on thermal power stations (Essen, Federal Republic of Germany, 19-21 September).

The Committee on Gas (thirty-fourth session, Geneva, 18-21 January)⁽³²⁾ examined several issues, including general energy problems in the region. Medium- and long-term prospects and current developments were discussed, with topics covering natural gas and liquefied petroleum gas markets in 1986 and future prospects; the transport and storage of gas; natural gas resources; investments in the gas industry; and development of international co-operation. Two expert groups on gas met during the year: one on its use and distribution (12-14 September) and the other on its transport and storage (14-16 September).

In April,⁽⁸⁾ ECE endorsed the Coal Committee's 1987 decision to approve a new International Codification System for Medium- and High-rank Coals and recommended that the Economic and Social Council consider appropriate measures for the System's world-wide application.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1988/68 without vote.

International trade and co-operation in the field of coal

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the need to facilitate international trade and co-operation in the field of coal,

Recalling the adoption by the Economic Commission for Europe in 1956 of the International Classification of Hard Coals by Type,

1. welcomes the adoption by the Economic Commission for Europe of the International Codification System for Medium- and High-rank Coals, which was elaborated in close collaboration with States not members of the Commission and with international organizations;

2. Invites States Members of the United Nations, international organizations and the regional commissions to consider the possibility of taking appropriate measures for ensuring the world-wide application of the International Codification System.

Water

In April, ECE adopted a decision on co-operation in the field of environmental protection and water resources,⁽⁴⁾ which also included the adoption of the Regional Strategy for Environmental Protection and Rational Use of Natural Resources in ECE Member Countries Covering the Period up to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see below, under "Environment"). It also endorsed the recommendations of the 1987 seminar on protection of soil and aquifers against non-point source pollution as well as ECE recommendations on waste-water treatment.⁽³³⁾

The Regional Strategy and the Declaration had been drafted by the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems (first session, Geneva, 29 February-4 March).⁽³⁴⁾ The Advisers also formulated recommendations on waste-water treatment, liability in case of accidental pollution and an ecosystems approach to water management. They analysed the existing situation and future prospect with regard to the utilization of water resources and pollution control in the region and reviewed a draft charter on ground-water management. The Advisers' work programme was approved, taking into consideration, among other things, preparations for a symposium on rational use of water through on-farm operations of irrigation, scheduled for 1989. Meetings included the Working Party on Water Problems (8-11 November) and a seminar on dam safety (Rovaniemi, Finland, 29 August-3 September).

Agriculture and timber

The Committee on Agricultural Problems (thirty-ninth session, Geneva, 7-10 March)⁽³⁵⁾ reviewed reports on trade and commodities; activities of other international organizations; European trade in agricultural products; the report on the twenty-fourth (1987) Conference of FAO⁽³⁶⁾ and its activities in Europe; and the market situation of selected commodities, such as grains, livestock and meat, and milk and dairy products. It also adopted its 1988-1992 work programme. Groups of experts on standardization met during the year to discuss poultry meat, eggs and egg products, fruit juices, and fresh fruit and vegetables.

Working parties also met on the standardization of perishable produce (7-11 November) and on agrarian structure and farm rationalization (26-30 September). A joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Mechanization of Agriculture also met (24-27 October) and an ad hoc meeting to consider the standardization of porcine and bovine meat was held (1 and 2 June). Symposia were held on agriculture and fish farming (Warsaw, Poland, 10-13 May) and on development of biotechnology in food and feed production (Budapest, 13-17 June).

The ECE Timber Committee (forty-sixth session, Geneva, 11-14 October)⁽³⁷⁾ discussed activities carried out by other ECE bodies, international organizations and FAO. The Committee considered a report of meetings held by the Joint FAO/ECE/ILO Committee on Forest Working Techniques and Training of Forest Workers (29-31 August), which included a proposal that its name be changed to the Joint FAO/ECE/ILO Committee on Forestry Technology, Management and Training to reflect better the scope of its activities. The Timber Committee postponed its decision until the FAO European Forestry Commission had considered the proposal at its June 1989 session. It also considered a report by the Joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics (24-26 February) and examined a draft study on the trade in and markets for tropical hardwoods.

A team of specialists on wood and energy met in February and several seminars were held during the year covering: reforestation methods after harvesting, in particular artificial regeneration (Eberswalde-Finow, German Democratic Republic, 9-13 May); products from the Mediterranean forest (Florence, Italy, 20-24 September); and employment of contractors in forest work (Loubières, France, 26-30 September).

In April,⁽¹¹⁾ ECE welcomed the Declaration on the policy implications of a study on European timber trends and prospects to the year 2000 and beyond, which had been unanimously adopted by the 1987 joint session of the Timber Committee and the European Forestry Commission⁽³³⁾ and recommended that ECE member Governments take the Declaration into account when reviewing their forestry policies.

Science and technology

Meeting in 1988, the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (sixteenth session, Geneva, 19-23 September)⁽³⁸⁾ discussed safety aspects of biotechnology, current developments in science and technology policies, transfer of technology and social and economic development in biotechnology.

It was stressed that since neither in vitro DNA-modified nor -unmodified organisms, released deliberately or accidentally, would respect national boundaries, an international safety approach was needed for biotechnology. It was suggested that those possible adverse effects should be made known to the public at large through the mass media, Governments, scientists and industry. However, the positive effects of the technology should also be made clear via similar means.

The ways and means of facilitating technology transfer needed to be considered in areas relating to environmental protection; elaboration of measures aimed at drawing up legal, administrative and organizational arrangements; analysis of relevant national legislation; and the development on a co-operative basis of new technologies.

During the year, a seminar was held on the prediction of earthquakes (Lisbon, Portugal, 14-18 November).

Environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems⁽³⁴⁾ (see above, under "Water") considered two draft instruments: the Declaration on Conservation of Flora, Fauna and Their Habitats, which had been finalized in 1987;⁽³³⁾ and the Regional Strategy for Environmental Protection and Rational Use of Natural Resources in ECE Member Countries Covering the Period up to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which was first proposed in 1986.⁽³⁹⁾ After further revising the draft Regional Strategy, the Advisers decided that both instruments would be submitted to the Commission for consideration. Low-waste technology and waste management were also discussed, as was work done by a task force on the relationship between economic activities and protection of flora, fauna and their habitats. Other subjects considered included water management (see above, under "Water") and air pollution problems.

At an ad hoc meeting of experts on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (Geneva, 10-12 October), it was stressed that sustainable development was to be used as the guiding principle in the interrelated objectives of economic growth, environmental protection and sound development within the ECE region. It was agreed that progress towards sustainable development implied changes and adequate measures in economic policies in three directions: acceptance of higher costs, not as set against more goods and services but against less degradation of the environment; important financial requirements; and an increased effort in basic research to solve environment-related problems. Activities in the area of sustainable development could include: optimal use of chemicals in European agriculture; international standards for environmental protection; and long-term prospects for energy-efficiency in the region.

Other 1988 meetings of the Senior Advisers included an ad hoc meeting on hazardous waste management (5-7 September).

In April,⁽⁴⁾ ECE adopted the Declaration and the Regional Strategy.

Transboundary air pollution

The Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution (sixth session, Sofia, Bulgaria, 31 October-4 November) adopted a protocol to the Convention concerning the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Other topics discussed were strategies and policies of parties and signatories to the 1979 Convention⁽⁴¹⁾ for the abatement of air pollution; critical loads for forests, crops and materials, and for sulphur and nitrogen; and volatile organic compounds. Progress reports were considered on the effects of major air pollutants on human health and the environment, and on the technologies for and economic aspects of emission control.

Meetings of other groups held during the year included the Group of Economic Experts on Air Pollution (13-15 June), the Working Group on Effects (29-31 August) and the Steering Body to the Co-operative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe (31 August-2 September). Also, an ad hoc meeting to elaborate a draft framework agreement on environmental impact assessment in a transboundary context was held (18-21 October).

Human settlements

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (forty-ninth session, Geneva, 13-16 September)⁽⁴²⁾ discussed current trends and policies in the human settlements situation and reviewed its work. In the areas of urban renewal and modernization policies, it was reported that public participation had become standard practice and that techniques to incorporate public opinions and views had been further developed with positive results. Regarding housing, it was noted that rent levels and housing expenditure, in general, were increasing in most market-economy countries. Declines in new construction and scarcity of land for housing were significant reasons causing tight vacancy rates in some market-economy countries. The Committee also studied human settlements problems in southern Europe, urban and regional planning, housing policies, building and settlements statistics. Recommendations that had emerged from a seminar on policies for energy conservation in buildings (Espoo, Finland, 6-10 June) were reviewed and its report endorsed.

Also held were a seminar on the evaluation of housing quality (Copenhagen, Denmark, 3-7 October) and the Sixth Conference on Urban and Regional Research (Leipzig, German Democratic Republic, 17-21 October).

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (thirty-sixth plenary session, Geneva, 13-17 June)⁽⁴³⁾ discussed annual and multi-annual statistical programmes throughout the region and the marketing of services. In reviewing its work on environment statistics, the Conference acknowledged the need to co-ordinate international efforts. Requests for environment statistics were growing noticeably in a large number of countries, particularly among the general public. As to the direction of future work, the Conference noted that, along with its own conclusions, ECE had requested it to place environment statistics among its four priority areas. The Conference also discussed the organization and operation of statistical services, including the use of computers and the development of statistical information systems, and methodologies in collecting, processing, disseminating, and analysing statistical data.

Meetings that dealt with statistics in 1988 included: Working Parties on National Accounts and Balances (2-5 May) and on Transport Statistics (5-8 December); a seminar on integrated statistical information systems and related matters (Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, 16-20 May); and a meeting on statistics concerning engineering industries and automation (17-19 October).

Standardization

The Tenth Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies (Geneva, 30 May-3 June)⁽⁴⁴⁾ noted that developments in standardization had been very rapid both within and between the European Communities, EFTA and CMEA, and that the GATT Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade was under renegotiation as part of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. Standardization took on even more importance in the perspective of the planned establishment of the so-called single European market in 1992. ECE provided the only forum in which information about standardization developments could be exchanged and policies co-ordinated between all parties concerned.

At the international level, considerable progress was reported by the International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) in a number of areas, such as that of increasing the speed at which international standards were produced, and that of increasing the co-operation between IEC and the International Organization for Standardization.

In April,⁽¹⁷⁾ ECE endorsed a recommendation made by the Group of Experts on Standardization Policies that a one-day seminar on metrology be held during the Tenth Meeting and authorized the Meeting to convene a three-day meeting of experts in the first half of 1989 to prepare for the Eleventh Meeting.

Also in April,⁽¹⁰⁾ ECE reiterated its invitation to all European ECE members to introduce summertime and invited Governments to consider making provisions to ensure that a medium-term period of summertime would be applied for the same years in all European ECE countries.

Other activities

ECE/UNDP joint projects

Several meetings were held in 1988 regarding ECE/UNDP operational projects. The Steering Committee of the Trans-European North-South Motorway Project met at Istanbul (8-10 June). The Executive Technical Experts Committee also met (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 12 October), as did the Steering Committee of the Statistical Computing Project, Phase 2 (Geneva, 9-11 November).

An ad hoc meeting on the inter-country project on international co-operative research on low-calorie solid fuel technology also took place (Belgrade, 10-12 October).

Women

In April,⁽⁶⁾ ECE requested the Executive Secretary to continue assessing developments with respect to the economic role of women in the region, in conjunction with the work of the principal subsidiary bodies and with other research activities of the secretariat.

Programme questions

In April,⁽²⁾ ECE approved its 1988-1989 work programme and endorsed, in principle, a work programme for 1988-1992.

Membership

In 1987,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Economic and Social Council, after considering the Executive Secretary's report on his consultations with member States on the question of admitting Israel to the Commission, had decided to defer consideration of a draft decision on the matter to its July 1988 session. On 28 July 1988, the Council, by decision 1988/172, deferred consideration of the draft decision to its second regular session of 1989.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Celebrating its fortieth anniversary in 1988, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, which held its twenty-second session at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 27 April,⁽¹⁾ focused on open trade, structural adjustment and economic growth as three of the region's top priorities.

The Commission adopted 11 resolutions at its 1988 session. In connection with preparations for a new international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (the 1990s), ECLAC was requested to prepare a report for analysis by the Committee of High-level Government Experts in 1989.⁽²⁾ The Commission also resolved that the Committee would analyse ways of intensifying economic co-operation among developing countries of the region⁽³⁾ and urged ECLAC member countries to intensify their support for ECLAC activities aimed at strengthening technical co-operation among developing countries.⁽⁴⁾

After considering a report by the World Commission on Environment and Development, ECLAC ordered a review of its programmes aimed at contributing to sustainable development.⁽⁵⁾ It emphasized the need for alternative solutions for strengthening the region's role in the international economic system and resuming the process of sustained development that had been affected by the economic crisis and external debt.⁽⁶⁾

The Commission expressed support for the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) on its twenty-fifth anniversary⁽⁷⁾ and called for adequate financing for the Latin American Demographic Centre.⁽⁸⁾ It further adopted the calendar of conferences for 1988-1990⁽⁹⁾ and the 1990-1991 work programme,⁽¹⁰⁾ and admitted Aruba as an associate member of the Commission.⁽¹¹⁾

It also recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the twenty-third session of ECLAC be held at Caracas, Venezuela, in 1990,⁽¹²⁾ the recommendation was approved by the Council on 28 July (decision 1988/171).

The Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee held its eleventh session in St. Croix, United States Virgin Islands (18-22 November).⁽¹³⁾ It adopted resolutions regarding support for Haiti and the Dominican Republic, policies on harmful wastes in the environment, a programme of assistance to small island developing countries and its own role. The Committee also admitted Aruba as an associate member.

Taking up the question of co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to promote a 1989 meeting between the respective secretariats to identify areas for broader co-operation (resolution 43/5).

After reviewing the Secretary-General's Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, the Assembly urged the international community to support the Plan (42/231) and recommended a meeting early in 1989 between the Central American Governments, the co-operating community, the United Nations system, international financial institutions and intergovernmental organizations to review support for the Plan's goals and objectives (43/210).

Economic trends

During 1988, the economic crisis in Latin America and the Caribbean reached dramatic proportions, according to a summary of the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1988.⁽¹⁴⁾ Per capita output fell for the first time since the recession of 1981-1983, to an amount barely equal to that obtained in 1978. Inflation more than doubled, averaging an unprecedented 530 per cent and real wages and salaries decreased in most countries.

The region's economy had performed badly for eight consecutive years and gave evidence that imbalances associated with debt servicing, the fiscal crisis and the scarcity of foreign exchange had acquired a momentum of their own, reflected in growing inflationary pressures, weakening investment and reduced leeway for implementing economic policy.

Export earnings grew during 1988 due to a rise in the prices of non-energy commodities. However, in most countries the rise did not boost economic growth, as earnings were not used to increase imports but to finance the increased outward transfer of resources, which rose by nearly 75 per cent to $28.9 billion—one of the highest levels since the debt crisis began in 1982.

During the year, the region's GDP rose by only 0.7 per cent, which was lower than that of 1987 and also lower than the growth rate of the population. Consequently, per capita product fell by 1.5 per cent to a level 6.5 per cent lower than in 1980.

The poor economic growth rate of the region was particularly influenced by conditions in three countries that accounted for nearly three quarters of the regional product: the Brazilian economy remained virtually stagnant, while very slight growth was recorded in Argentina and Mexico. It was also affected by sharp drops in economic activity in Panama (-20 per cent), Nicaragua (-9 per cent) and Peru (-8.5 per cent), as well as slower growth in most other economies of the region.

The most notable rise in inflation took place for the third consecutive year in Nicaragua where, between September 1987 and September 1988, consumer prices rose by close to 7,800 per cent. Inflation in Peru rose from 115 per cent in 1987 to 1,720 per cent in 1988, while Brazil recorded a 930 per cent rise. Argentina's inflation rose from 175 to nearly 390 per cent, Ecuador's by 86 per cent and the Dominican Republic's by 57 per cent. Inflation intensified in Bolivia, Colombia and Costa Rica but remained under 30 per cent. In Uruguay, inflation flared up again after slackening for the two preceding years. Venezuela showed a rate of 35 per cent and Chile 13 per cent. Barbados, Jamaica, Haiti, Honduras, Panama and Trinidad and Tobago recorded rises in inflation of under 10 per cent. Mexico's rate dropped from 160 per cent in 1987 to 52 per cent in 1988.

The growth in foreign trade during 1988 made it possible to finance nearly 80 per cent of the net payments of interest and profits. This growth, combined with the greater trade surplus, resulted in only a slight rise in the deficit on current account from $9.8 billion in 1987 to nearly $10 billion. However, external financing shrank considerably, so that overall balance of payments moved from a surplus of $4.1 billion in 1987 to a deficit of $5.1 billion in 1988.

The net transfer of resources abroad rose dramatically. Those transfers, which in the preceding two years had followed a downward pattern, rose from $16.6 billion in 1987 to $28.7 billion in 1988—equal to nearly a quarter of the value of the region's exports of goods and services and about 4 per cent of GDP.

Because of the low influx of new loans and the rise in debt conversion transactions in a number of countries, the external debt of Latin America and the Caribbean fell in 1988 for the first time in absolute terms. Estimates showed that the amount fell from $410 billion to $401 billion, mostly due to reductions of some 7 per cent in the debts of Bolivia and Chile and of close to 5.5 per cent in those of Brazil and Mexico.

The year marked the prolongation of the ongoing economic crisis of the region in the 1980s. However, 1988 differed from previous years in one important aspect: the rise in the international prices of many of the region's primary exports, excluding petroleum. Although that increase in the purchasing power of exports should have facilitated greater rates of economic expansion, that scenario did not occur, partly because higher interest rates spurred the transfer of resources abroad and, especially, because of the extremely limited access to new financing. Also, the weight of the accumulated effect of the crisis worked against whatever adjustment policies were in place to handle it.

The management of economic policy had become increasingly difficult since the beginning of the decade. Public finances had been affected by downward trends in income and upward pressures on spending. Also, the drop in real wages associated with rising inflation not only had aggravated domestic problems but had also caused considerable social and political tension. It had become increasingly difficult to overcome long-standing structural obstacles to development, such as antiquated educational systems, inefficient agrarian structures, the scanty application of technical progress to production and out-of-date financial and tax systems. The recession had also served to accentuate the acutely unequal distribution of wealth, long present in many Latin American societies.

For their part, the Governments of the main highly indebted Latin American countries had tried various ways to reduce their debts. In December, the Ministers of Finance of seven countries of the region met in Rio de Janeiro to examine available options. Three points were recognized as crucial to resolving the crisis. First, a consensus was emerging that some multilateral organizations should be established to collaborate with the countries in their efforts to repurchase part of their old debt or to convert it into new, long-term securities. Secondly, although creditors had continuously insisted that any solution be kept within the rules of the market and be voluntary, that principle should be kept within certain limits; at very least it should be accepted that maximum interest rates might be fixed on the accumulated debt. Thirdly, a larger amount of new financing was required from multinational organizations such as the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

In decision 1988/181 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1987.⁽¹⁵⁾

Activities in 1988

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

In 1988, ECLAC's Economic Development Division continued to examine the short-term economic evolution of all the countries of the region and considered and recommended economic policies and strategies to promote strong, sustained, equitable and autonomous development. Activities in the area of information and documentation for economic and social development were carried out by the Latin America Centre for Economic and Social Documentation.

Operational activities for technical co-operation in fiscal review and policy were also undertaken. Seven technical reports were published on such topics as an accounting framework for evaluating fiscal policy in Latin America, fiscal policy in the 1980s, the measurement and breakdown of the public deficit in Latin America and the results of four national case-studies. National seminars were held to discuss the results of the case-studies, and a regional meeting on methodologies for measuring the public deficit and evaluating fiscal policy also took place.

With regard to stabilization, adjustment and the external debt, progress was made at the ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico in modernizing the recording of debt in the Central American countries. Computerized data-processing systems were installed, and the recording systems used by agencies in some countries were converted to centralized systems covering the entire national debt.

ECLAC provided technical assistance to the ministers responsible for following up the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (see below). In co-ordination with the secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration, the Central American Research Institute for Industry and UNDP, work continued on drafting a document on the assessment of industrial reconversion needs in Central America.

The Commission continued in 1988 to monitor international economic trends, especially changes in the economies of the industrialized countries, in order to ascertain their effects on the region's development. A number of studies by international and national bodies were analysed, including some conducted by countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). To help establish tentative guidelines for a medium- and long-term industrialization strategy for the countries of the region, a study was also made of changes in production patterns. Activities in the area of economic projections were ongoing, providing the quantitative framework for prospective studies.

In 1988, ECLAC participated in meetings, seminars and conferences under its programme on development issues and policies. These included: courses/seminars on the Planning Information System for Latin America and the Caribbean (INFOPLAN) (Caracas, 4-8 April; Managua, Nicaragua, 18-22 April; La Paz, Bolivia, 25-29 April); a subregional course on strategic planning in information (San José, Costa Rica, 5-9 April); the twenty-fourth session of the Committee for Development Planning (New York, 12-14 April); an INFOPLAN course on management of information systems (San José, 25-29 April); a meeting on the progress of debt negotiations in Mexico, organized by the World Institute for Development Economics Research of the United Nations University (Mexico City, 2 May); a seminar on underutilization of manpower-situation and policies, organized by the International Labour Organisation (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 7 June); a working group on economic issues (Washington, D.C., 9 September); a seminar on debt and structural adjustment (Managua, 18-22 September); a seminar on industrial policy in developing countries, organized by the Economic System Reform Institute of China and the Friedrich Ebert Foundation (Beijing, 20 September-4 October); an international colloquium on strategies of development in Latin American countries, organized by Fundación Raúl Prebisch, El Colegio de México and Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México (Mexico City, 17-22 October); a seminar on international energy prospects: case-study of Latin America (Rio de Janeiro, 24-27 October); a seminar on economic reporting, organized by the International Press Service (Buenos Aires, 3-5 November); and a meeting of officials of integration bodies responsible for the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (Guatemala City, 7-8 November), to make arrangements for the preparatory meeting of the Support Committee of the Central American Development Co-operation Group (New York, 28 and 29 November).

Industrial, scientific and technological development

In the area of industrial development, the main activities of ECLAC focused in 1988 on industrial restructuring at the international level and in Latin America, support for small- and medium-scale industry and the capital goods industry. Closer contacts were systematically sought with the Latin American entrepreneurial sector, academic circles and international bodies working in related fields, including the World Bank, OECD and IDB.

Training courses were given on industrial and technological policies and problems within the framework of ILPES. The year also marked the inception of a multidivisional project on changes in production patterns and international competitiveness, in which the following divisions, in addition to the Industry and Technology Division, participated: the Joint ECLAC/FAO Agriculture Division, the Transport and Communications Division, the Natural Resources and Energy Division and the International Trade and Development Division.

In addition, a regional preparatory assistance project financed by UNDP on technological innovation and international competitiveness was formulated, and several publications on research project results were published.

Regarding science and technology, ECLAC activities focused on technological development and the region's challenges as related to the current worldwide revolution in the field. Also, case-studies were carried out on technological innovation and international competitiveness in a number of countries, including Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica and Mexico. A methodological approach was also developed for studying the links between international trade and the transfer of technology.

In 1988, a seminar on industrial restructuring and international competitiveness was organized (Santiago, Chile, 5-7 December). ECLAC participated in a United States social scientists working group on Latin America (New Orleans, 17-19 March); a meeting on the regional co-operation programme in the field of pharmaceuticals, organized by the Latin American Economic System (SELA) (Caracas, 11-13 May); a seminar on joint investment in co-operation with developing countries, organized by the Government of Italy (Bergamo and Modena, 12-16 June); a World Bank seminar on technological change (Washington, D.C., 6 and 7 July); a seminar on trends in Brazil at the beginning of the twenty-first century (São Paulo, 1-5 August); a meeting on evaluation of UNDP regional programmes on technology exchange, organized by OECD (Paris, 14 and 15 September); and a forum on the capital goods industry as a tool in the development of Peru (Lima, 24-27 November).

International trade and development finance

The International Trade and Development Division focused on three main areas in 1988: Latin America and the proposed new international economic order; economic relations between Latin America and other regions; and economic integration and co-operation.

Under the first topic, in a follow-up of the current multilateral trade negotiations within GATT, known as the Uruguay Round, reports which sought to identify the strategic interest pursued by the Latin American countries were prepared and analysed in collaboration with UNCTAD.

Concerning commodities, three main lines of activity were developed. The first dealt with the growing role of commodity exchanges, especially futures markets, in the pricing of commodities. This was done on the basis of special studies made of the London Metal Exchange, the Chicago grain market and the New York tropical commodities market. The second dealt with the impact of the latest forms of technological progress on market prospects for some commodities. The third line involved a global examination of the current status of Latin America's export commodities and the various factors that affected market prospects.

Various activities were carried out with respect to services, with a report being published on Latin American co-operation and work being carried out on producer services on the one hand and on service-sector statistics on the other.

In 1988, the Division organized a seminar on main issues and prospects for the participation of the Latin American and Caribbean countries in the Uruguay Round (Santiago, 26-28 October); the first subregional seminar on informatics (Lima, 21 and 22 November); a Latin American seminar on the improvement of statistics on services (Lima, 23 and 24 November); a regional seminar on producer services (Lima, 25 and 26 November); and a seminar on co-operation in science and technology (Montevideo, Uruguay, 5-7 December).

The Division also participated in a number of meetings and seminars during the year, including a meeting of ministers responsible for Central American integration (Guatemala City, 7 and 8

January); a meeting of Central American vice-presidents (Guatemala City, 21-23 January); a seminar on direct foreign investment and trade in services (Lima, 29 January-5 February); a meeting on development strategies and alternatives in times of crisis (Quito, Ecuador, 29 February-2 March); a national seminar on services (Havana, Cuba, 29 February-4 March); a second meeting of agencies responsible for services (Caracas, 12 March); a second meeting of regional economic bodies, convened by SELA (Caracas, 22 March); a seminar on external debt, macro-economic policies and growth (Mendoza, Argentina, 29-31 March); a seminar of European parliamentarians on peace and development in Central America (Oxford, England, 7-11 April); a meeting on the 1988-1990 work programme of the Association of Latin American and Caribbean Economists (Havana, 16-29 April); a round table on trade policies and food security (Santiago, 7-10 May); the eighteenth general meeting of the Latin American Association of Development Financing Institutions (Buenos Aires, 16-19 May); a meeting on trade strategy and negotiations in Latin America (Caracas, 6 and 7 June); a meeting of experts to analyse the relations between debt and trade (Caracas, 16 and 17 June); a meeting of ministers responsible for economic integration (Guatemala City, 17 and 18 June); the eighth meeting of Latin American and Caribbean agencies responsible for economic integration and co-operation (Lima, 21 and 22 July); a meeting of vice-ministers responsible for economic integration (Guatemala City, 26-30 July); a seminar on trade negotiations and the Uruguay Round (San José, 27-30 July); a colloquium on the international economy (La Paz, 10-12 August); a seminar on the impact of United States policies on Central America (San José, 10-13 August); the first meeting of the programme on co-operation with respect to regional integration (San José, 12-16 October); a seminar on industrial prospects in Nicaragua (Managua, 16-20 October); a seminar on the Andean Group and the Uruguay Round (Santa Cruz, Bolivia, 29 October-2 November); the forty-fourth session of the Contracting Parties to GATT (Geneva, 7-9 November); a seminar on adjustment programmes and the external debt, organized jointly by the Centre for Latin American Monetary Studies and the Central Bank of Costa Rica (San José, 25 and 26 November); a regional seminar on producer services (Lima, 25 and 26 November); and a seminar on co-operation and regional integration of Central America and Europe (Maastricht, Netherlands, 4-16 December).

Natural resources and energy

Promotion and support of co-operation between countries of the region in the management of water resources, development and conservation of high-altitude river basins, co-operation in the exploitation of minerals and assistance in the elaboration of national policies concerning the oceans all came under the focus of the Natural Resources and Energy Division during 1988. The Division also carried out its mandates to follow up on the implementation of the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan⁽¹⁶⁾ and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980,⁽¹⁷⁾ and undertook studies on natural disasters, the quality of water in the region and water supply and sanitation for the most disadvantaged sectors of society.

In the area of maritime resources, support continued to be provided for the activities of Governments under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,⁽¹⁸⁾ and particularly activities arising from the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. Concerning mineral resources, support continued to be provided for the work programme of the Latin American Mining Organization (OLAMI), particularly in setting up the second phase of the Latin American Regional Mining Information and Documentation System. A technical ad hoc working group was set up to assist the mining/metallurgical sector of the region in promoting intraregional trade in products, inputs and mining-related capital goods. The group was set up in conjunction with a number of groups and institutions throughout the region, including OLAMI and LATINEQUIP, a consortium comprising the Banco de la Provincia de Buenos Aires, the Banco del Estado de São Paulo and the Nacional Financiera S.A. of Mexico.

The Division organized two events in 1988: a consultative meeting of the project on training in the management of water resource projects and systems (Mendoza, 21-23 March) and a meeting of the group of experts advising the Latin American Group in the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea (Santiago, 9-11 November).

In the specific area of energy, the Division concentrated on the themes of energy forecasting, energy prices and their impact on world energy markets and the updating of ECLAC's energy data bank. A study was undertaken on short-term energy forecasting using time-series techniques, with particular emphasis on the use of the Auto-regressive Integrated Moving Average method. Work also progressed on the study of the use of vector auto-regression as an energy forecast method.

Studies on energy pricing were also undertaken, including one to examine the patterns of change in retail prices of refined oil products in selected

Latin American countries during the 1970s and 1980s, and another to examine the dependence of various oil-deficit Latin American countries since the 1960s. At ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico, studies were carried out on the development of new and renewable sources of energy in Central America.

Technical assistance was provided to the six national electricity corporations in connection with the initiation of work on the draft programme of regional activities in the electricity subsector of Central America and the updating, jointly with the World Bank, of the catalogue of priority projects in the electricity subsector.

In 1988, ECLAC participated in meetings, seminars and conferences under its programmes on energy and natural resources. These included: a round-table meeting on international participation in the forestry development of Honduras (Tegucigalpa, 24-27 January); the eleventh meeting of the Central American Regional Electrical Interconnection Group (San Salvador, El Salvador, 25 and 26 February); a seminar on the operation of interconnected systems (Managua, 17-24 March); the fourth session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and the seventh session of the Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (New York, 28 March-8 April); a regional seminar on schemes for low-frequency load shedding (Mexico City, 20-22 April); a seminar on water and electricity tariffs (Washington, D.C., 6-8 June); a meeting on the development of new and renewable sources of energy in Central America and Panama (Mexico City, 25-27 July); the second international course on the development and management of river basins (Trento, Italy, 29 August-21 October); a seminar on the management of ecosystems (Turrialba, Costa Rica, 19-30 September); a regional seminar on water supply and sanitation (Recife, Brazil, 29 September-5 October); a seminar on water supply and sanitation for low-income populations in rural and periurban areas (Olinda, Pernambuco, Brazil, 29 September-5 October); a meeting on a systematic approach to rural development (Lima, 2-4 November); an international workshop on the management of the Panama Canal basin (Panama, 9-16 November); a seminar on energy saving (Culiacán, Mexico, 23-28 November); the first meeting of the Support Committee of the Central American Development Co-operation Group (New York, 27-30 November); and a meeting on intraregional trade in products, inputs, machinery and mining equipment (Montevideo, 5-9 December).

Transport

Some of the most important activities of the transport programme were carried out under the project on interior cargo terminals, funded by the Netherlands. The programme also collaborated with the Meeting of Ministers for Public Works and Transport of the Southern Cone Countries in formulating an annex on international transport by railroads to the Agreement on International Land Transport among the Southern Cone Countries. Support was provided to the Latin American Maritime Transport Commission of SELA in building a regional consensus in preparation for the October/November Review Conference on the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences (see PART THREE, Chapter IV). Also, ECE and UNCTAD were aided in establishing standards for the electronic transfer of administrative, trade and transport data.

National seminars on structural changes in the international transport chain and their impact on the policies of Latin American countries were held during 1988 in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay. The programme organized a meeting on international rail transport (Buenos Aires, 6-8 April), a seminar on the future of container transport on the west coast of South America (Santiago, 19-22 April) and a national seminar on the uniform system of maritime transport statistics (Buenos Aires, 21 October).

The Commission participated in international, regional and national meetings, seminars and conferences under its transport programme. These included: a meeting of the ad hoc transport group of the Government on strengthening Mexico's transport relations with other Latin American countries (Mexico City, 25 and 26 January); a symposium on aeronautical development in the twenty-first century (Santiago, 15 and 16 March); the first meeting of the Permanent Tripartite Commission on the Los Libertadores-Buenos Aires-La Paz-Matarani Inter-oceanic Corridor (Jujuy, Argentina, 28 and 29 March); a meeting of Ministers for Public Works and Transport and the Physical Integration Council of the Board of the Cartagena Agreement (Quito, 16-20 May); a semi-annual meeting of the Caribbean Shipping Association (Basseterre, Saint Kitts and Nevis, 30 and 31 May); a national seminar on multimodal transport and the Hamburg Rules (Mexico City, 8 and 9 June); a meeting of experts on public works and transport of the Southern Cone countries (La Paz, 17-19 August); the sixth meeting of national customs directors of the Latin American Integration Association (Mar del Plata, Argentina, 17 and 18 October); the ninth meeting of national customs directors of Latin America, Spain and Portugal (Mar del Plata, 19-21 October); the third Latin American Congress on Public Transport/third Latin American meeting on urban transport (Lima, 7-10 November); a workshop on road maintenance planning (Santiago, 7-25 November); and the third Latin American and Caribbean seminar on experiences in road maintenance (Piriápolis, Uruguay, 28 November-2 December).

Social development

The Social Development Division carried out a wide range of activities in 1988 relating to the social aspects of the current economic crisis. Studies were conducted on changes in various social actors, such as the trade union movement, urban dwellers and youth. A study was prepared on occupational changes and social mobility up until the period just prior to the outbreak of the crisis. Consideration was also given to the question of how to adapt broad social policies, through a study on the role of the State in development and on the different proposals to achieve greater economic equity. Studies were also undertaken on the challenges posed by the crisis to planning in the areas of health, education and housing, as well as on proposals aimed at securing the full incorporation of the poorest sectors, both rural and urban, into development.

Of particular importance was a seminar on social development options in the 1990s (San José, 15-18 November), where the national experiences of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Mexico and Peru in economic and social development and social policies were presented. The main subjects discussed were related to diagnostic study of the social and economic situation of the region and of the countries under review, the challenges of the near future and the necessary interconnection between economic policy and social policy in the perspective of development aimed at achieving greater equity and democracy.

Also during the year, ECLAC participated in: an interregional preparatory meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Vienna, 14-18 March); a conference on social security, organized by the Mexican Social Security Institute and the Inter-American Center for Social Security Studies (Mexico, 17-19 March); a training workshop in planning (Madrid, Spain, 11-22 April); a seminar on youth, expectations and the future (Santiago, 8-10 June); a meeting on changes in the social structure of Latin America, organized by the Latin American Council for the Social Sciences (Porto Alegre, Brazil, 22-25 August); the tenth session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (Vienna, 23-31 August); the XIV World Congress of the International Political Science Association (Washington, D.C., 28-31 August); the Conference on Social Conflict in Latin America (Cartagena, Colombia, 29 August-1 September); an inter-agency meeting on crime prevention and criminal justice (Vienna, 1 and 2 September); the annual meeting of the American Political Science Association (Washington, D.C., 1-4 September); the XVII Latin American Congress on Sociology (Montevideo, 2-6 December); and a conference on the prospects for social development in Latin America, organized by the Italy/FAO Training Programme in the Planning of Agricultural Development Policies and Projects (Buenos Aires, 8-14 December).

Population

The work of the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) was aimed at furthering the economic and social development of the countries in the region through a programme of work addressing problems relating specifically to population and development. The Centre established close ties with national institutions concerned with economic and social development in the region, paying particular attention to sectoral policy needs and to the needs of the less privileged groups in the population. Those groups were the subject of studies on such topics as the incorporation of women into development and the socio-economic situation of the aged.

Within the framework of the 1987 agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II Summit,⁽¹⁹⁾ a project was formulated with the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration with the aim of helping to solve the problems of displaced populations in Central America. Consultations were held with international institutions associated with this problem, including, in particular, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. A feasibility study was carried out on the installation of national systems for the provision of information on displaced populations, and a draft request for assistance from the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) was prepared.

CELADE began helping countries to utilize systems for obtaining disaggregated data on population and housing, for making projections of small areas by microcomputer and for facilitating the inclusion of population variables in development planning. Such systems included REDATAM (retrieval of data for small areas by microcomputer) and PANDEM (package for demographic analysis by microcomputer). Work was also begun on the creation of a Latin American and Caribbean population information network (POPIN), as part of a strategy designed to increase the use of research findings and of numerical data by the public and private sectors.

In 1988, CELADE inaugurated an annual post-graduate course at its headquarters in Santiago. The 10-month course covered population dynamics and development programmes and policies in an action-oriented structure, the aim being to increase the number of professionals in the individual countries who were capable of helping to incorporate demographic factors in development programmes. The teaching programme also included short-term training activities such as regional and national courses, seminars and workshops.

The population programme organized the Latin American seminar on collection and processing of demographic data (Santiago, 23-27 May) and a workshop on the incorporation of women in development projects (Buenos Aires, 24 July-6 August).

It also participated in an UNFPA inter-agency consultative meeting (New York, 28 and 29 January); a meeting on fertility and family planning organized by the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population (Bangkok, 22 March-2 April); the UNFPA Global Conference (New York, 7 and 8 April); an expert group meeting on international transmission of population-policy experiences (New York, 27-30 June); a POPIN working group meeting on microcomputer and other training strategy for 1988-1991 (New York, 5-8 July); a workshop on the demographic consequences of economic development: implications for agrarian and rural development, organized by the Cuban Centre for Demographic Studies and the University of Havana (Havana, 5-15 July); the fourth meeting of the health sector of Central America and Panama and the eighth Latin American meeting of the Econometric Society (San José, August); the first meeting of the Regional Census Coordinating Committee, organized by the secretariat of the Caribbean Community (Georgetown, Guyana, 4-6 October); a conference on dissemination and use of census data, sponsored by UNFPA, the United States Agency for International Development, the International Statistical Programmes Centre and the Egyptian Central Agency for Public Mobilization and Statistics (Cairo, 9-13 October); a seminar on evaluation of information networks in Latin America, organized by the Cuban Centre for Demographic Studies (Havana, 20-22 October); a consultative workshop of the United Nations Asia-Pacific POPIN (Bangkok, 26 October-3 November); a seminar on household, employment and unemployment surveys, organized by the Ministry of the Economy, Industry and Commerce and the Department of Statistics and Censuses (San José, November); a scientific workshop on population aging, organized by the Cuban Centre for Demographic Studies (Havana, November); a workshop on population in the Dominican Republic in the year 2000, organized by UNDP to collect background data for the formulation of a global population programme (Santo Domingo, November); the sixth regional conference of officials responsible for employment planning in Latin America and the Caribbean (Guatemala City, December); a subregional seminar on municipal information for Central America, Mexico and the Caribbean (San José, December); and a Central American subregional workshop for producers and users of statistics and indicators relating to women in development, organized by the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the United Nations Statistical Office and the National Centre for Women and the Family of Costa Rica (San José, December).

Integration of women

The fourth Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean was held in 1988 (Guatemala City, 27-30 September). Its purpose was to evaluate what had been done to meet the requirements of the Regional Plan of Action for the Integration of Women into Latin American Economic and Social Development, in the light of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,⁽²⁰⁾ and taking into consideration the impact of the economic crisis on the situation of women. The Conference made a number of recommendations for action at the national level, as well as at the international and regional levels. It also concluded that, in 1988, there was a consensus that the advancement of women was a matter not only for women but for the entire society.

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean held their eighth meeting in 1988 (Guatemala City, 26 September).

Meetings and seminars participated in by ECLAC included: the thirty-second session of the Commission on the Status of Women (Vienna, 14-23 March); a seminar on policies on young women in Latin America (Montevideo, 22-24 March); an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women (Vienna, 24 and 25 March); a training workshop on the evaluation of income-generating projects of peasant women (Santiago, 12-15 April); an inter-regional consultative meeting on women in co-operatives: implications for development (Bulgaria, 20-24 June); a seminar on the world of women, continuity and change (Santiago, 26 July); a United Nations interregional seminar on women and the economic crisis: impact, policies and prospects (Vienna, 3-7 October); an expert group meeting on social support measures for advancement of women (Vienna, 14-18 November); a regional seminar on women in human settlements and development management (Lima, 21-25 November); and the first national encounter of the Centre for the Prevention of Domestic Violence and Assistance to Battered Women (Chapadmalal, Argentina, 24-26 November).

Environment

The activities of the environment programme, carried out by the Joint ECLA/UNEP Development and Environment Unit, were aimed first at strengthening the incorporation of the environmental dimension into the work performed by the ECLAC system and then at promoting action in the countries of the region regarding strategies and policies for bringing about environmentally sustainable development.

ECLAC/UNEP began work on the second phase of a project on technical co-operation for the integration of environmental considerations into development planning in Latin America and the Caribbean. Under the project, preparation began for studies for Argentina, Ecuador, Honduras and Peru concerning relations between the environment and macro-economic variables within the context of those countries' recent development pattern. Work also began on preliminary technical reports for use in considering methods for evaluating environmental impact, and studies were reviewed concerning the relationship between external debt and the processes of environmental deterioration in the region. Another project was begun on natural and cultural environments within national accounts and inventories.

The first seminar on the rehabilitation of terraces and other traditional technologies was organized by ECLAC in 1988 (Lima, 4-6 May). It also participated in a meeting on environmental management (Caracas, 25-28 April); a conference on structural adjustment in the third world (Burlington, United States, 28-30 April); and a meeting to establish the Latin American headquarters of the International Institute for Environment and Development (Buenos Aires, 6 and 7 May); an international conference on the regulation theory (Barcelona, Spain, 15-19 June); a conference on prospects for the future, including environmental sustainability (Campinhas, Brazil, 3-8 July); a conference on environmental management of development and national heritage accounts (San Juan, Argentina, 16 August); the first and second series of Ibero-American technical meetings, on environmental engineering and development and on mining (Bogotá, Colombia, 9-13 October and 20-26 November); and a seminar/workshop on economic policy, organized by the International Press Service (Buenos Aires, 3-5 November).

Human settlements

The human settlements programme, carried out through a joint unit of ECLAC and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), strengthened its research and development activities, especially in relation to the functioning of metropolitan centres, the strengthening of local government capacity to manage human settlements and the formulation of housing policies in the context of national development strategies. The unit also did preliminary work on the role of non-governmental and community organizations in managing the habitat.

Concerning training, an agreement was reached on the establishment of a regional training system of policy-making and financial administration for urban development projects in Latin America. Also, the joint unit increased significantly its technical support activities and exchanges of experience with countries in the region, as part of a policy aimed at establishing closer contact with national agencies operating in the housing and human settlements sector. The unit contributed to the Commission's efforts to assess the economic and social effects of natural disasters.

The unit participated in several meetings during 1988: a seminar on rural local governments and social participation, organized jointly with Chilean Agrarian Research Group (Santiago, 28 and 29 July); a meeting of experts on formulating an international plan for low-cost housing in the third world, organized by ECLAC, the International Union of Architects and UNCHS (Santiago, 22-26 August); a regional seminar on natural disasters and the planning of human settlements, organized by Ecuador, ECLAC, UNCHS and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (Quito, 3-8 October); a meeting of experts on the establishment of a regional training programme in municipal administration and finance, organized by ECLAC, the World Bank, IDB, the International Union of Local Authorities and UNCHS; an international seminar on technologies for human settlements, organized by the Instituto Eduardo Torroja, Spain (Madrid, 1-9 May); a seminar on the quality of life, organized by the Municipality of Lanús, Argentina (Buenos Aires, 15-20 May); a meeting on Latin American experiences in urban renewal and participation, organized by the Dominican Centre for Legal Advisory Assistance and Research of the Dominican Republic (Santo Domingo, 21-27 September); a seminar on metropolitan alternatives (Mexico City, 19-21 October); the second meeting on the programme for a regional training system in urban management and planning (Quito, 21-23 November); the second Latin American Congress on Metropolitan Areas, organized by the National Commission for the Buenos Aires Metropolitan Area (Buenos Aires, 21-25 November); and an international seminar on financing the development of large cities, organized by the Union of Ibero-American Capitals (Buenos Aires, 13-16 December).

Food and agriculture

As a result of work completed in 1987, significant collaboration was made possible with FAO in preparing a study on potentials for agricultural and rural development in Latin America and the Caribbean. FAO subsequently submitted the study to its October 1988 Regional Conference at Recife, Brazil.

Further analysis was undertaken both of the dynamic links between agriculture and industry and of the resulting transformations in agriculture. The main objective of the research-which included several case-studies-was to generate clear perceptions of the determinants of technological change in agriculture. The study of the region's agricultural entrepreneurs focused on the conditions under which that class developed, the position it adopted vis-à-vis government policies and its links to other productive agents, such as the industrial sector.

Progress was made in improving the criteria and methods of agricultural planning. A review was undertaken of the quantitative instruments used in the various phases of the sectoral planning process, in order to determine the effects on agriculture of the economic crisis and the resulting adjustment policies. ECLAC also collaborated in the training activities in policies and plans for agricultural development organized by ILPES and FAO.

Organized by the food and agriculture programme were a meeting on the role of agricultural entrepreneurs in Latin America (Santiago, 26-29 July) and a later workshop on the same subject (Santiago, 12-15 December); and an expert meeting on the production of citrus products in Central America (Mexico City, 24 and 25 November).

Meetings, seminars and conferences participated in by ECLAC included a seminar on biotechnology and food security (Mexico City, 24-30 March); the first seminar/workshop on rural development (Valdivia, Chile, 29-31 July); an international conference of agrarian economists (Buenos Aires, 24-31 August); a seminar on development and promotion of associations of agricultural producers (Rio de Janeiro, 17 September-6 October); a seminar on the role of the peasant economy in the agricultural recovery and development strategy (San José, 26-28 September); a meeting of the Inter-institutional Group for the Agricultural Sector (GISA) (Tegucigalpa, 27 September-1 October); an inter-American course on agricultural censuses (Santiago, 28 November-16 December); a seminar on the evolution of the peasant class in Chile and the need for integrated rural development (Los Angeles, Chile, 1 and 2 December); a meeting in support of the evaluation programme groups of the Institute of Nutrition of Central America and Panama (San José, 7-11 December); and the third meeting of GISA, convened by the permanent secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration (Panama, 13-17 December).

Statistics and economic projections

The development of the ECLAC statistics programme focused in 1988 on three major activities: expansion of data banks; technical co-operation; and dissemination of information, technological innovations and international standards.

In the context of enlarging data banks, priority was given to organizing data bases to be incorporated into on-line data banks, while at the same time expanding the coverage of subject-matter and countries included and providing a more timely distribution of information. The fastest-growing data banks were those of national accounts, foreign trade, balance of payments and statistics on social development. Work was also carried out towards the creation of an on-line data bank for analysing foreign trade data for the countries of the region, obtained via trade data from the developed countries and other non-customs sources, thereby offering the possibility of obtaining provisional but more up-to-date information.

Seminars organized by the programme were on: co-ordination of national statistics (Buenos Aires, 28 June-1 July); census administration and strategy (Lima, 24-28 October); national accounts (Buenos Aires, 14-18 November); telematics, statistics and producer services (Lima, 21-27 November); and census cartography (San José, 28 November-1 December). A round table on household surveys focusing on advances and prospects was also held (Tegucigalpa, 16-19 November).

ECLAC also participated in the sixth meeting of the Permanent Executive Committee of the Inter-American Statistical Conference (Aguascalientes, Mexico, 21-24 February); a co-ordination meeting on the inter-agency project on critical poverty in Latin America (Bogota, 6-12 March); a technical seminar on measuring poverty in Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay (Montevideo, 10-15 April); the twenty-fourth session of the Committee for Development Planning (New York, 12-15 April); technical meetings on defining methodologies for national accounts in Brazil (Brasilia, 1-6 May); a tripartite meeting on the project on information systems for public management in Guatemala (Guatemala City, 6-14 May); a meeting of the Committee on Programming and Co-ordination of the Household Surveys Programme in Honduras (Tegucigalpa, 8-14 May); a tripartite meeting of the project on change of the base year of Venezuela's national accounts (Caracas, 22-28 May); an interregional workshop on statistical data processing and data bases in developing countries (Geneva, 24 May-3 June); the twenty-second session of the Sub-Committee on Statistical

Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (Geneva, 6-10 June); a seminar on widely used techniques for statistical data processing (Santiago, 20 June-1 July); a regional seminar on co-ordination of national statistics (Buenos Aires, 26 June-2 July); a tripartite meeting on the project on support for the development of the National Statistical System of Guatemala (Guatemala City, 27 September-1 October); a seminar on producer services (Lima, 25 and 26 November); and a round table on household survey advances and prospects under the Honduras/ECLAC/IDB project (San José, 27 November-2 December).

Transnational corporations

The joint ECLAC/Centre on Transnational Corporations unit continued work towards implementing the resolutions and mandates of the member States of both ECLAC and the Commission on Transnational Corporations. The unit focused on two areas: identifying the contribution and impact of TNCs on development in the region and its studies of particular issues in individual countries and sectors. Particular emphasis was placed on the manufacturing industry and services in research on the role of TNCs in international competitiveness.

The question of the transformation of the productive structures became a focus of the activities of the joint unit in 1988, and was linked to other research programmes such as that related to experiences and alternative policies on direct foreign investment in the countries of the region. Within that same area, emphasis was placed on the elaboration of a regional directory of foreign investment. The overall aim was to increase the data available on the activities of TNCs operating in the region and the impact of such activities, and systematically to elaborate homogeneous and comparable statistical series that would reinforce the position of the countries of the region in their negotiations with TNCs.

In 1988, the joint unit participated in the April session of the Commission on TNCs and in a workshop on debt-equity swaps (Caracas, 27-29 April).

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

Since the establishment of the Latin American Economic System in 1975, the ECLAC secretariat had frequently supplied its Permanent Secretariat with direct support and collaboration, the Secretary-General stated in a June 1988 report to the General Assembly.⁽²¹⁾ The report was submitted pursuant to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽²²⁾ in which the Assembly had emphasized the need to reinforce collaboration between the United Nations and SELA.

Co-operation between ECLAC and SELA had been highly varied and fruitful over the years, involving frequent participation in meetings convened by SELA and the preparation of numerous specialized documents. Notably, an important document on regional economic security was published in 1982, while work on a document outlining Latin America's response to the international economic crisis became the starting-point for the 1984 Quito Declaration and Plan of Action,⁽²³⁾ adopted by the Latin American Economic Conference.

Several ongoing working links existed between ECLAC and SELA, including a project jointly implemented with UNDP and UNCTAD involving services, commodities and multilateral international negotiations, for which a number of meetings were held at government level. In 1987, ECLAC was the venue of the annual meeting of integration and co-operation organizations convened by SELA. In addition, in recent months the ECLAC secretariat had participated in SELA meetings, held to prepare a regional co-operation strategy to establish the Latin American and Caribbean Trade Information and External Sector Support Programme and to analyse a proposal for creating a Latin American reserve fund. Additional areas in which ECLAC and other United Nations bodies worked together with SELA included projects on science and technology, industrial development and technology, transportation and TNCs.

In January 1988, a meeting promoted by SELA was held at Caracas with bodies that had close links to it. Areas of co-ordinated activities between SELA and ECLAC were identified, including those relating to the industrialization of Latin America and the use to which its purchasing power was put. The two bodies agreed to intensify co-operation.

ECLAC had always attached great importance to the co-ordination of its activities with the Organization of American States and SELA.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/5 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/12 of 28 October 1987 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Taking into account decision 282 of 20 September 1988 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, adopted at the fourteenth regular session of the Latin American Council, in which the conviction was expressed that General Assembly resolution 42/12 represents an important step towards further development of co-operation between the Latin American Economic System and the United Nations system,

Considering that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has developed close ties of co-operation with the Latin American Economic System and that, in the course of the last year, efforts have been successfully made at co-ordinating and mutually strengthening their activities,

Considering also that since 1976 the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System has carried out various programmes with the support of the United Nations Development Programme in areas that are considered of priority for the economic development of the region,

Considering further that the Latin American Economic System is developing joint activities with specialized agencies and other bodies and programmes of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Expresses its gratitude for the constant efforts made by the Latin American Economic System in promoting co-operation among the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean, and consultation and co-ordination of their positions on subjects of vital importance to the region, as well as in enhancing their economic and social development;

4. Welcomes with satisfaction the dialogue which the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Latin American and Caribbean countries are holding on the occasion of the ordinary sessions of the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System;

5. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to broaden and deepen its co-ordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System, as well as its participation in common efforts to harmonize action among the various regional and subregional entities in the economic field;

6. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen and broaden its support to the programme that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System is carrying out within the framework of the 1989-1991 work programme approved by the Latin American Council;

7. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to intensify their co-operation with the activities of the Latin American Economic System;

8. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote, in close collaboration with the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System, the holding of a meeting in 1989 between their respective secretariats, with the aim of identifying those areas in which it will be possible to broaden co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen and intensify co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System, and to inform the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session of the implementation of the present resolution.

Special plan of economic co-operation for Central America

A proposed special plan of economic co-operation for Central America was submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly in April 1988,⁽²⁴⁾ pursuant to a 1987 resolution.⁽²⁵⁾ The Secretary-General requested funding of $4,370,690 for the special programme.

The proposal gave a brief history of the economies of Central America and the main characteristics of the current crisis. The countries involved had witnessed a deterioration in their levels of economic activity, and the international recession had gradually helped to exacerbate the most conspicuous areas of strangulation in both everyday life and the financial sphere. Significant manifestations of the crisis had emerged in the form of contraction of the subregional common market; capital flight and brain drain from the region; shrinking investment; political and military conflicts; displaced persons and refugees; and increased dependence on and vulnerability to the influence of foreign countries.

The plan was designed to concentrate on those economic and social aspects that were directly linked to the preservation and consolidation of peace, and to coincide with the priorities of the Governments of the region and supplement their national development efforts. Specifically, the Secretary-General pointed to problems requiring immediate action under the plan, caused by the damaging effects of war on the population and infrastructure and by the 1987 drought.

Strategies for emergency assistance were outlined in several areas under the plan, including assistance to refugees and repatriated persons; food aid; and urgent needs for fuel and thermal, hydro-electric and electrical energy.

In order to help reactivate the economy, financial constraints on the region needed to be eased. Several measures were proposed to help reduce the heavy burden of foreign debt carried by the Central American countries, including debt outstanding to private agents, bilateral public debt and multilateral debt. The Secretary-General proposed a method of financing to reactivate the Central American Common Market and reduce temporary imbalances in countries' balance of payments. That suggestion included a proposal for facilitating liquidity in the region's payments system and for strengthening the Central American Monetary Stabilization Fund.

In the area of economic revitalization, programmes were proposed for industrial rehabilitation; agricultural development; trade concessions; reconstruction of the infrastructure; and investments in the energy sector. Social development programmes included investments in the social, health, education and housing sectors; strengthening the productive capacity of marginal groups; food security; reinforcement of co-operatives; and strengthening the Central American Bank for Economic Integration. The report also outlined the role of the United Nations system in the special plan, internal and international responsibilities, and institutional mechanisms for implementing the plan.

In his October report on the situation in Central America,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stressed that the root of the Central American crisis was to be found in the unjust economic and social structures that had traditionally characterized the region, and which were exacerbated by the current economic recession.

UNDP action. On 1 July, the UNDP Governing Council allocated $20 million for the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America.

Western Asia

The many sources of tension in the region covered by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia had far-reaching and disruptive repercussions on the Commission's activities and, in particular, on the individual countries of the region, the ESCWA Executive Secretary stated in an April 1988 report.⁽¹⁾ The Iraq-Iran war, which ended in mid-1988, resulted in widespread negative consequences that were devastating for the region's development. The destruction resulting from the civil war in Lebanon had led that country to making reconstruction, rather than development, its priority. Also, an outbreak of protest by Palestinians in the territories occupied by Israel in December 1987 escalated during 1988 into the intifadah, or uprising, and was cause for further social and economic disruption (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

Pursuant to its 1987 decision that future sessions of ESCWA would be held biennially,⁽²⁾ no regular session of the Commission was held in 1988. However, in June, ESCWA held its third special session⁽³⁾ to consider a proposal by the Secretary-General for the temporary relocation outside Iraq of ESCWA's staff and its secretariat. The Commission decided not to agree to the Secretary-General's proposal⁽⁴⁾ (see "Programme, organizational and administrative questions", below).

Economic and social trends

During the 1980s, the performance of the region's economy was hampered by a number of unfavourable developments,⁽⁵⁾ according to a summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region during the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s). Those developments included a sharp deterioration in the terms of trade of primary commodities and oil, coupled with wars, military conflicts and political instability.

In contrast to the growth target of 7 per cent average annual gross domestic product (GDP) for the developing countries set by the International Development Strategy for the Decade,⁽⁶⁾ an average annual GDP growth rate of -1.4 per cent was experienced during the 1980-1987 period. Hence, the region recorded an average annual per capita GDP growth rate of -4.7 per cent. The average annual growth rates in the manufacturing and agricultural sectors from 1980 to 1986 were 5.9 and 2.9 per cent, respectively. The region witnessed a negative 13.5 per cent average annual growth rate in exports and a negative 2.6 per cent rate with respect to imports during the period. The share of gross investment in total GDP in the ESCWA region rose marginally from 23 per cent in 1980 to 24 per cent in 1987.

GDP growth rates varied considerably among the various subgroups in the region, and from one country to another. The average annual GDP growth rate for Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC) countries (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates) generated the greatest share of total GDP for the region as a whole, amounting to 82.2 and 70 per cent in 1980 and 1987, respectively. The average annual GDP growth rate for those countries was negative (-3.7 per cent). Countries with diversified economies (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic) achieved a 6.1 per cent growth over the period, while the two least developed countries in the region-Democratic Yemen and Yemen-showed a 4.8 per cent growth rate.

On 29 July, by decision 1988/181, the Economic and Social Council took note of, among other documents, a summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1987.⁽⁷⁾

As the end of the Development Decade approached, the region's oil-exporting countries witnessed a decline in oil revenues to less than 30 per cent of their level at the start of the Decade in nominal terms, and below 20 per cent in real terms. The sharp decrease strongly impacted the region's economy, as oil exports accounted for 60 per cent or more of total exports in 10 of the 14 ESCWA countries. For most GCC members, oil still accounted for over 90 per cent of total exports, over 35 per cent of GDP and about two thirds of government revenues. Hence declining oil revenues during the Decade had severe ramifications on the balance of payments, national budgets and economic activities in most countries in Western Asia.

The countries of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), which earlier had led the international oil market, had to readjust and respond to the continued "glut" in the market as non-OPEC oil producers more than compensated for the cutbacks made by OPEC countries, while world demand for oil decreased. The world economic recession of 1980-1982 was a leading factor in this, prompting OPEC members to reduce the official price of benchmark crude in March 1983 by about 15 per cent-from $34 to $29 per barrel-and to cut the cartel's production quota to 17.5 million barrels per day.

But world oil demand grew in 1988 by an unexpected 3 per cent, mainly due to higher consumption in the United States (up 9 per cent) and Japan (up 4.9 per cent). Much of United States imports came from three ESCWA countries: Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Total United States imports from those countries rose almost 70 per cent. This increase in ESCWA sales to the United States could be attributed in part to formula pricing which reduced the cost disadvantage of transportation.

The downturn in oil revenues, met by contractional government fiscal policies, led to recessions in those countries during most of the Decade. Also, employment opportunities for workers from other countries in the region and many other developing countries outside the region were reduced. This particularly affected the ESCWA labour-sending countries of Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Yemen, which had become increasingly dependent on partially financing their external trade deficits from the transfer of remittances by their nationals working in the GCC countries.

In the light of current and projected trends, readjustment policies pursued in most countries of the region since 1986 were expected to continue. Rises in taxes and import tariffs were likely, as Governments sought to increase revenues. New sources of income and employment opportunities also needed to be established and/or developed.

The balance of payments of the ESCWA region came under increasing pressure as the Development Decade progressed. Factors in evidence included virtual erosion of the substantial trade surplus existing at the outset of the period, sharp reduction in net imports of services, inability of aid-giving countries to maintain their disbursements (thereby adversely affecting developing countries) and steep depreciation or devaluation of the currencies of several countries (notably Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic). Such unfavourable developments resulted in a $3 billion draw on reserves in the period 1982-1987. The highly unfavourable situation prevailing in the international oil market throughout most of the period under review, the rising tide of protectionism in world trade, and the prevailing political situation in the region all contributed to the decline. Cessation of hostilities between Iraq and Iran in August 1988 and establishment of the Arab Co-operation Council greatly improved prospects.

Agricultural development and growth in the region as a whole were below expectations during the Decade. Production grew at an annual rate of 2.9 per cent, 1.1 per cent short of the 4 per cent target set by the Decade Strategy to meet minimum nutritional and industrial needs.

Towards the end of the 1980s, the Governments of many ESCWA countries had taken measures conducive to higher agricultural output, with pricing policies expected to contribute to higher production and slower growth in demand.

The region overall saw its manufacturing value added (MVA) grow 5.9 per cent per year during the 1980-1986 period, well below the 9 per cent United Nations target. The top performance of 13.4 per cent was achieved by the least developed countries-Democratic Yemen and Yemen-due mainly to the low level of industrial development in the base year. By 1987 and 1988, most countries in the region showed significant improvement in manufacturing, particularly Bahrain, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Although impeded by declining oil revenues, manufacturing activities during the 1980-1988 period were given higher priority and directed generally towards the promotion of large-scale, capital-intensive heavy industries such as petrochemicals, oil refining, fertilizers, cement, steel rods and bars and aluminium.

Social conditions in Western Asia varied widely among countries during the Decade. Whereas GCC countries had a relatively high level of social welfare, States with lower per capita incomes provided very little in social welfare to the deprived. Nevertheless, in the region as a whole, social programmes expanded. Concrete progress was made in implementing the Strategy of the Decade towards education.

The region's illiteracy rate was estimated to have fallen to about 50 per cent. The gross enrolment ratio in primary education rose above 85 per cent, and was nearly 100 per cent in 10 of the 14 ESCWA countries. Health conditions also continued to improve. In several countries, particularly those of gcc, inhabitants enjoyed free health services. However, the rural population, well over half the region's population, was generally left outside the mainstream development and there was a wide and growing gap between rural and urban per capita income in most countries.

Approximately 20 per cent of the region's total population were between the ages of 15 and 24. While they benefited from greater education and health services, this generation faced rapidly rising living costs and new forms of crime and delinquency. Youth programmes were neither numerous nor adequate. Meanwhile, the problem of aging received slightly more attention. The increasing prominence of the nuclear family, along with greater mobility for the young, would mean that more assistance to that group would be needed in the future.

The plight of disabled persons, numbering as many as 10 million, posed a serious socio-economic problem to the region in the wake of war, compounded by social and environmental factors and cultural and health-related factors.

During the Decade, progress was made in building the basic science and technology infrastructure and producing qualified manpower and skilled workers in the region, but there remained a marked imbalance between the demand and supply of qualified manpower in most countries.

Imports of technical services included notably: telecommunications; medical equipment and services; petrochemical industries; commercial airline support systems; water supply and sewage treatment plants; and nuclear power plants. About 80 per cent of non-military technology in the region was supplied by France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Most ESCWA countries experienced two sets of environmental problems during the Decade: air, water and soil pollution of large urban and rural centres, and rapid population growth, with depletion of resources and deficiencies in basic services. Few controls were exercised over industrial development to eliminate the hazards of dangerous emissions and the disposal of untreated solid and liquid wastes from factories. Despite expressed concern, many environmental problems such as desertification, soil degradation and depletion, urbanization of cultivated and grazing lands, water and air pollution worsened in Western Asia. The desired ecological balance would be difficult to achieve without an integrated approach to development at the national and regional levels.

Activities in 1988

Despite a high vacancy rate of approximately 34 per cent, the ESCWA secretariat in 1988 implemented a substantial amount of the 1988-1989 work programme(s) completing 29 of 68 outputs planned for 1988—an implementation rate of 43 per cent (not including 55 outputs which were at various stages of progress at the end of the year).

Transport and communications

The ESCWA transport and communications programme in 1988 succeeded in initiating work on an ESCWA manual for transport project appraisal; keeping ESCWA member countries abreast of the latest developments in multimodal transport; formulating regional maritime development policies; surveying and recommending appropriate road construction techniques to the authorities concerned in ESCWA countries; studying container traffic; and promoting regional co-operation in transportation.

Another major aim of the programme was to implement in Western Asia the objectives of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994).⁽⁹⁾ To carry out the mandates of the General Assembly,⁽¹⁰⁾ Economic and Social Council⁽¹¹⁾ and ESCWA⁽¹²⁾ resolutions, the programme fully implemented the preparatory assistance project for the Decade, whose final report was discussed in an intergovernmental/inter-agency meeting (Baghdad, 13-15 December).

Energy

Under the ESCWA energy programme, several reports and surveys were published in 1988. Two technical publications of energy data were prepared and distributed to all bodies concerned as a step towards establishing an energy data bank. Further, two surveys of energy-related activities and developments undertaken in the ESCWA region in 1987 and 1988 were completed. They covered recent developments in the energy sector in petroleum exploration and prospecting, production, processing, transportation, distribution, local consumption and exportation, as well as a comprehensive review of progress made in the electricity sector towards expanding and improving national grids and regional co-operation for the interconnection of electricity grids.

A report to the Commission was prepared on progress towards regional and international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Also, as the whole region still depended heavily on oil, whether as the major source of energy or of material wealth, a technical publication was undertaken on the impact of changing conditions in the oil market on energy policies. Projects for promoting renewable and non-conventional sources of energy in the region, such as solar, wind and biomass, were formulated as well.

Oil

Oil was the major focus of a report on 1988 energy-related activities in ESCWA countries by the Natural Resources, Science and Technology Committee.⁽¹³⁾ Oil prices fell globally during most of 1988, as members of OPEC, including those in the ESCWA region, substantially increased production levels, in many cases beyond their own quotas, while the cessation of hostilities between Iraq and Iran also brought more oil to the international market.

Restructuring in the international oil market continued the trend of recent years towards vertical concentration, with major sales of oil and gas reserves as well as downstream operations in 1988. In the United States, more refineries were sold in 1988 than any year since 1982, while in Europe ownership of 3.5 per cent of the refinery capacity of the European Economic Community had passed to oil-exporting countries, including Kuwait. Kuwait also owned over 4,500 outlets worldwide, through which it sold oil products directly to consumers in major oil-consuming countries. Kuwait intended to purchase more retail facilities, and was exploring possibilities in the Far East, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States. Saudi Arabia also made a major investment in 1988 in downstream facilities, purchasing a half interest in refineries and retail outlets in the United States. The United Arab Emirates took steps in that direction, acquiring a 10 per cent interest in a Spanish refining group and increasing its interest in Total-CFP (France).

The region also benefited from the fact that relatively new or recently updated refineries built in the region for export purposes enjoyed a technological advantage over older installations and generally performed better than refineries in other parts of the world.

Plans were under way throughout the region to increase pipeline capacities. Iraq's programme to expand its pipeline system in the region would result in a pipeline-system export capacity surpassing that of Saudi Arabia by 1990. Iraq relied increasingly on overland transport during the earlier 1980s when hostilities made shipping difficult, but planned to make less use of trucks as its pipelines became operational. Oman and Yemen were expanding their existing oil pipelines and were expected to increase their export capacities by 70,000 and 200,000 barrels per day, respectively.

Shipping, historically the most important oil export route, benefited from the cessation of hostilities between Iraq and Iran in the latter part of 1988, such that the tanker industry performed better than at any time since the early 1970s. Plans were laid to widen shipping lanes and the Suez Canal.

Gas

The ESCWA region participated to some extent in the international gas market through sales of liquefied natural gas (LNG) and liquefied petroleum gas (LPG), mainly to Japan. However, its share of international gas reserves—18 per cent—were much smaller than its share of oil reserves. The largest reserves were found in Iraq, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. The international trade of gas was rising, along with gas consumption in general. One forecast predicted that natural gas consumption would reach 22 per cent of total world energy consumption by the year 2000. Gas reserves in the ESCWA region grew by 15.6 per cent during 1988, following the discovery of new fields and the positive reassessment of existing reserves.

Most gas was consumed within the producing country and transport networks were geared towards local markets. In fact, the high cost of transporting gas was a major factor inhibiting the rate of growth of exports. The system relied heavily on pipelines and, as gas use rose, pipeline construction was expected to increase.

Exploration activities in the field of oil and gas suffered worldwide during 1988 owing to fluctuating oil prices and the high costs involved, but did continue in countries such as Democratic Yemen, Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen where there was some geological evidence of the possibility of increasing oil reserves.

Electricity

Rural electrification was a priority in many ESCWA countries, and progress was made during 1988. The region continued to interconnect national electricity grids. The co-operative efforts of the 1980s were rewarded: a project was under way to connect the Jordanian and Egyptian electricity grids, Jordan and Iraq were studying the feasibility of interconnecting their grids, and a completed interconnection between Iraq and Turkey allowed Iraq to export electricity to Turkey in 1988. Work began on interconnecting the electricity grids of several other countries, the first phase involving Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar and Saudi Arabia. Plans to interconnect Democratic Yemen and Yemen were also discussed in 1988 and financing was secured.

Iraq's post-war reconstruction placed an important emphasis on electricity, and hydroelectrical power in particular. Several major projects were expected to be completed by 1993 both to meet increasing local demand and to provide additional surpluses for export. Other countries' projects included: Bahrain's plans for a $770 million power and desalination plant; an agreement between Egypt and the USSR to construct three power stations; three new substations in Jordan's industrial area and a dam for both irrigation and export of power; two new gas turbines and reassessment of plans in Qatar, where power demands were growing 10 per cent per year; Kuwait's Subiya power station, which would include a water desalination facility; and Saudi Arabia's combined power and water desalination plant at Shuqaiq, completed in 1988.

Renewable energy sources

New and renewable sources of energy were promoted by Governments and organizations in the ESCWA region. While the private sector had invested in such projects in some countries, its involvement had probably been held back by the low price of conventional energy that continued into 1988, but some activity was under way. Projects included plans for a factory in Saudi Arabia to produce solar lighting systems, medical refrigerators and pumping systems, telecommunications and warning lights. A Jordanian firm issued a licence to a firm in Gibraltar to produce solar heating equipment for sale in Gibraltar, Spain and the United States. Solar water heaters were also used in Jordan, totalling 100,000 units by the end of 1987. Several energy-generating projects began operating in Egypt in 1988, and were making ice, desalinating water and pumping water. One wind farm generating 400 kilowatts contributed to the local power grid. A wind farm in Jordan also began operating in 1988.

Food and agriculture

A main achievement concerning food and agriculture in 1988 was the ESCWA secretariat's publication of the recurrent Agriculture and Development in Western Asia, which presented an assessment of the year's agricultural development, analysed some emerging trends and tackled critical national and regional agricultural problems. A plan of action was formulated to combat desertification in Iraq, and a desertification-control project was also set up for Democratic Yemen. Many training workshops were held on varied subjects, from resource conservation to credit management to computerized planning. Evaluations of rural development projects and programmes were carried out for two countries, and an assessment of agricultural policies at farm level in two countries of the region was published.

Population

ESCWA's population programme in 1988 produced substantial demographic and related socio-economic data necessary for development planning and policy-making. Work on the upcoming publication of Demographic and Related Socio- economic Data Sheets of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (issue no. 6) went forward. A study of patterns and trends of infant mortality in Bahrain, Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates was published, along with another on socio-economic differentials of child mortality in Jordan. The Population Bulletin of ESCWA and the Trilingual Demographic Dictionary were published. An advanced training workshop for member States on organizing and administering population and housing censuses was organized, and a fully computerized labour data base established (to be updated continuously). Four technical studies relating to working women in Western Asia and to international migration were launched. Attention was given to manpower planning and to agricultural, technical and vocational education.

Development issues

The ESCWA region's two least developed countries, Democratic Yemen and Yemen, were the object of special measures in their favour. The programme's main contribution was to assess the economic and social conditions prevailing there and analyse obstacles impeding their efforts to promote development and economic transformation. A more comprehensive review and analysis of the region's national, regional and subregional performance was published, entitled Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region.

Social development

A Conference on the Capabilities and Needs of Disabled Persons in the ESCWA region, to take place in November 1989 at Amman, Jordan, was prepared starting in 1988. Social aspects of rural development, including the role of the co-operative movement, were studied. Other areas receiving attention were the aged and social security. The Commission drew a regional profile on aging as input for the second review and appraisal of the International Plan of Action on Aging endorsed by the General Assembly in 1982⁽¹⁴⁾ (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV). A review of social security systems in the region was also made.

Under a subprogramme on women and development, work progressed on a technical publication on the employment of women in the informal sector and on the recurrent publication of a directory of Arab professional women active in technical co-operation among developing countries. Reports to the Commission dealt with improving women's participation in both rural and urban economies through skills training, and with identification of women's needs through case-studies or project assessments such as women trainers for maintenance skills of electrical appliances and participation of women in food and textile industries. Other activities provided information to women, Governments, non-governmental organizations and other bodies dealing with women's issues.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

At its headquarters in Baghdad, Iraq,⁽³⁾ on 8 June, ESCWA held a third special session to consider a request by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to relocate the staff of its secretariat temporarily outside Iraq.

ESCWA's Executive Secretary summarized the Secretary-General's reasons for his proposal under three main headings. First: the safety and security of the staff. The Executive Secretary recalled how, after ESCWA's establishment in 1973, it had been decided in 1976 to relocate temporarily from Beirut, Lebanon, to Amman, Jordan, because of civil strife and conflict in Lebanon. It had re-established its headquarters in Beirut in 1977, but by 1979 had moved on to Baghdad.

Second: repeated relocation and instability had meant that ESCWA had been unable to perform its functions or had encountered difficulty in carrying them out in an optimum manner in keeping with its capacities and its mission. Because of the

Iran-Iraq war, the Commission had found difficulty in pursuing its activities, since the host country had been obliged to impose restrictions on external contacts in contravention of the ESCWA Headquarters Agreement.

Third: the Commission had continued to suffer from its inability to attract qualified staff to work in the secretariat, which had affected its capacity to implement programmes. Despite the excellent facilities provided by Iraq, security reasons had forced ESCWA to evacuate staff members' dependants from Baghdad.

The Commission decided by consensus not to agree to relocate temporarily its staff from its current headquarters to a site outside Iraq and reaffirmed its determination to maintain its permanent headquarters at Baghdad.⁽⁴⁾

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

Continuing instability in the world economy, particularly in exchange and interest rates, following the sudden decline in equity prices in October 1987 was a major subject of discussion in several United Nations bodies during 1988. An overall slow-down in growth of the global economy was predicted at the beginning of the year; modest prosperity was achieved instead, but it was highly uneven and major imbalances persisted, which most affected the debt-distressed developing countries where long-term improvements had already been interrupted by the severity of their economic problems.

In December, the General Assembly established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000), with a view to finalizing the strategy for adoption in 1990 (resolution 43/182). Various organizations of the United Nations system were asked to contribute to the preparatory process. Having considered the Secretary-General's report on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, the Assembly requested him to update the report so as to enhance its utility as a background document for the strategy's preparation (43/194).

Also in December, the Assembly urged the international community to create, as a priority, a supportive international economic environment for growth and development that would reinforce the efforts of developing countries to revitalize their development process and eradicate poverty (43/195). It also reaffirmed the validity of the official development assistance target, established at 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries, and appealed to donor countries to achieve the target (43/197).

The World Economic Survey 1988 reviewed main international economic developments and included a comprehensive analysis of the global effects of the indebtedness and fiscal imbalances of developed countries, particularly as they affected the development of developing countries. The process of economic reform in the centrally planned economies and China was also analysed. The Trade and Development Report, 1988 also discussed debt, payment imbalances and economic growth and addressed the role of services in the world economy.

In April, the Committee for Development Planning found that prospects for the world economy were clouded by market volatility and the uncertainty surrounding unsustainable trends. There were also uncertainties about how to reduce fiscal imbalances among developed market-economy countries, whether international trade would become more or less protectionist and what would be the future of net capital flows to developing countries.

The special development problems of both the least developed countries (LDCs) and island developing countries were highlighted as preparations began for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs, to be held in 1990. Technical co-operation and public administration issues also received attention, with human resources development being increasingly linked to economic growth.

International economic relations

Development and economic co-operation

During 1988, several United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, discussed various aspects of development and economic co-operation. During its general discussion of international economic and social policy in July, the Council focused on economic trends and the need to achieve more widespread and sustained development.

CDP activities. At its April 1988 session,⁽¹⁾ the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) stated that, in the face of major structural imbalances in the world economy, inadequacies of both national policies and international co-operation threatened the sustainability of growth in many countries and regions. The international system needed strengthening; as a new régime was established, development strategies would come to the fore. Prompt action to reduce the international debts of debt-distressed developing countries was an essential prerequisite of any successful strategy to deal with the long-term issues of the 1990s. In CDP's view, such action would include moratoriums for African countries on payments on public and publicly guaranteed debts, with concessional interest rates on rescheduled amounts for low-income severely debt-distressed countries and reduced interest rates on Paris Club reschedulings for others. As to private debt, particularly that of the middle-income countries in Latin America and elsewhere, action was needed to facilitate debt reduction by commercial banks.

During the 1980s, debt-distressed countries had cut investment, reduced public expenditure and imposed deflationary contraction on their economies. In low-income countries, the share of public expenditure on education and health fell, while that on defence and general public administration rose. For reasons of both efficiency and equity, Governments should adjust to short-term economic and fiscal constraints by making the objectives of policy the safeguarding of human development programmes through restructuring to reduce inefficiency and improve delivery and targeting by such means as low-cost technologies and emphasis on basic services. The ultimate objective of economic development should be human development, whereby growth occurred as a consequence of local resource mobilization.

Economic and Social Council general discussion. During its general discussion of international economic and social policy in July 1988,⁽²⁾ the Economic and Social Council focused on economic trends, particularly the considerable regional disparities in economic performance during the second half of the 1980s and the economic measures required to achieve more widespread and sustained development during the rest of the decade and the 1990s. In addition, the Council discussed the global and regional economic outlook and efforts to increase stability in the world economy. It also addressed the questions of resource transfers, international trade and primary commodities, human resources development, the participation of women in the economy, the environment and sustainable development, global policies, domestic measures, the international development strategy for the 1990s and the role of the Council itself.

The Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1988,⁽³⁾ prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA). The Survey examined the world economy in the late 1980s, the main features of and prospects for world economic development, trends in international trade, international finance, debt and instability, and the international oil market. It also discussed economic reforms in the centrally planned economies and China, the causes and effects of the external fiscal imbalances of developed countries, and growth and adjustment in small and medium-sized developing countries during the 1980s.

Also before the Council was a report of the Secretary-General containing the first biennial summary of the main research findings on major global economic and social trends, policies and emerging issues.⁽⁴⁾ Prepared in response to a 1986 Council request,⁽⁵⁾ the report was based on information supplied by organizations of the United Nations system and/or recent reports and studies published by them. It included information on major trends in the world economy in the areas of global output, agricultural production, industrial production and structural change, world trade and balance of payments, commodity prices, capital flows, population, employment and education. The report also addressed salient policy issues (structural adjustment and trade policy), sectoral issues (science and technology, energy, transnational corporations (TNCs) and food supplies, food aid and food security) and emerging issues (the impact of economic growth on the environment, urbanization and human settlements, women in development, poverty, hunger and malnutrition, and the development of human resources).

The report stated that the broadest conclusion to which the research findings of the system pointed was that of growing interdependence and interlinkages in the world system. That had always been an important theme in studies of international economy, and it had been powerfully underlined by research on issues that had emerged in recent decades. TNCs had profoundly affected international economic integration, and environmental issues had vast implications for international co-operation that derived from the physical unity of the planet. The research of the international organizations thus had a strong policy orientation; it sought to furnish information on the nature and magnitude of major problems, documented policy experience and proposed national and co-operative approaches.

On 29 July, by decision 1988/181, the Council took note of the The World Economic Survey 1988 and the Secretary-General's report on the main research findings of the system on major global economic and social trends, policies and emerging issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee devoted a major portion of its work during the General Assembly's 1988 session to development and economic co-operation, making recommendations on a number of topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 82). A list of pertinent documents was included in part I of the Committee's report on that item,⁽⁶⁾ which the Assembly took note of on 20 December 1988 by decision 43/436. In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 43/162, called on the Secretary-General to continue to seek Member States' proposals on procedures to be adopted with regard to the codification and progressive development of principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order, and recommended that the Sixth (Legal Committee consider making a final decision at the Assembly's 1989 session on an appropriate forum in which to complete the elaboration of the codification and development process. In resolution 43/196, the Assembly decided to consider in 1989 the question of convening a United Nations conference on environment and development no later than 1992.

The Assembly deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development and, on 22 December 1988, by decision 43/457, decided to include it in the provisional agenda of its 1989 session.

Preparations for a strategy for the fourth UN development decade

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June 1988 a report⁽⁸⁾ on preparation of a new international development strategy for the 1990s. The report, based on consultations held with senior officials of the United Nations system, noted that although the Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), adopted by the Assembly in 1980,⁽⁹⁾ was quickly outdated by the unanticipated worsening of the international economic situation, it was generally recognized that the short-term adjustment problems of the world economy should not obscure the importance of longer-term perspectives. The report concluded that in spite of some hesitation, a new strategy was an opportunity to study the prospects ahead and their implications, to strengthen commitments for international economic co-operation in general and international development in particular, and to examine major issues in the international economic system. To rally international support, a new strategy would have to focus on a limited set of essential, realistic objectives and the policies needed to meet them. Indicators of strategic developments in the world economy should be monitored to trigger action when there were deviations from the predicted track.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was a decision⁽¹⁰⁾ of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (Geneva, 20 and 21 April), by which it agreed that adoption of a new strategy was desirable in view of increasing interdependence and the changing circumstances and priorities of the 1990s. The new strategy should deal with development problems in an integrated manner and not exclusively in economic terms, be global in scope, flexible to allow for changing conditions, and give due attention to the development of infrastructure, particularly transport and communications. The ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives should be asked to review ongoing work in various parts of the system on trends and problems relating to the 1990s and to identify any additional studies that were needed.

The Task Force (sixteenth session, Geneva, 13-16 September)⁽¹¹⁾ considered the ongoing work in the United Nations system on trends and issues relating to the 1990s, as well as the need for additional studies in the light of concerns likely to be relevant to the new strategy. It also discussed the identification of suitable indicators to be agreed on in the new strategy and the need to arrange for research co-operation at the working level in the system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/76 without vote.

report on the preparation of a new international development strategy.

Fulfilment of the ODA target

On 20 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/197 by recorded vote.

Fulfilment of the target for official development assistance

The General Assembly,

Noting that the problem of increasing poverty in developing countries can only be solved effectively through policies aimed at sustained economic growth and development and that transfers of financial resources to developing countries are important for achieving those objectives,

Stressing, in this context, that official development assistance plays an important role for developing countries, particularly for the poorest among them,

Referring to the target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries for official development assistance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and reaffirmed in its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 on the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Concerned that total official development assistance, as a percentage of the gross national product of developed countries, has stagnated at a level significantly below the target of 0.7 per cent,

Stressing the need to continue to improve the quality of official development assistance,

Recalling the increased demands on multilateral development institutions to play a major role in addressing the development problems of developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries for official development assistance contained in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, as adopted;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those donor countries that have already achieved the target of 0.7 per cent, or have increased their official development assistance with a view to achieving that target, and urges them to continue their efforts;

3. Appeals to donor countries that have not yet reached the target of 0.7 per cent to make their best efforts to reach it as quickly as possible by pursuing specific measures that will make their efforts more effective, taking into account the necessity of improving the quality of official development assistance;

4. Stresses the importance of achieving the target of 0.15 per cent of the gross national product of donor countries for official development assistance for the least developed countries, or doubling official development assistance to those countries, in compliance with the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and the conclusions of the mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

5. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include information on compliance with the present resolution in his report for the triennial policy review of operational activities for development.

Entrepreneurship

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on indigenous entrepreneurs in economic development.⁽¹³⁾

The report introduced the issues by defining the terms entrepreneur and entrepreneurship and noting that entrepreneurship was an essential dimension of economic and social development. With regard to indigenous entrepreneurs, the report stated that developing countries in which indigenous entrepreneurship was weak tended to become dependent on transnational companies and foreign entrepreneurs. Thus, Governments attached high priority to promoting high-level indigenous entrepreneurship and management, capable of holding its own in international competition.

Commenting on general national policies relevant to the emergence of indigenous entrepreneurs, the report specifically drew attention to the need for a legal and regulatory framework which should not be overly complex, the question of widening and protecting markets, the need to improve credit and capital markets and the importance of education. The report also discussed recent national and international efforts to train and support entrepreneurs. It noted that most models of programmes to promote entrepreneurship included four components: access to finance, technical assistance, training and social promotion of the poorest social groups. Experience suggested that imported models of entrepreneurship were adaptable to local conditions and could be useful complements to national programmes. Non-governmental organizations, with the support of official aid programmes, were often best suited to assist entrepreneurs in the informal sector.

The Assembly, by decision 43/435 of 20 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/74 without vote.

National entrepreneurship in economic development
The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 41/182 of 8 December 1986 on indigenous entrepreneurs in economic development,

Recognizing the responsibility of the international community, in particular that of the developed countries, to promote and endeavour to provide an equitable international economic environment supportive of the development of developing countries,

Bearing in mind that the promotion and development of national entrepreneurship require a dynamic process of capital formation in developing countries, which is related to the availability to those countries of financial and technical resources and broader market opportunities for them,

Convinced that entrepreneurship is an important dimension of economic and social development and that entrepreneurs in the public and private sectors can play an important role in mobilizing resources and promoting economic growth and socio-economic development,

Aware that many countries are actively seeking to encourage, strengthen and improve the effectiveness of national entrepreneurs in expanding and modernizing productive capacities, particularly by increasing productivity and technological capabilities, and in contributing generally to the development process,

Bearing in mind that the development of national entrepreneurship and its positive contribution to the development process should be pursued within the framework of the overall economic and social development strategy of each country in accordance with its economic and social system and specific objectives, needs and conditions,

Recognizing the important role that national entrepreneurs in all countries can play in economic development and technological progress, in the creation of new sources of employment, in the more efficient utilization of human resources and in the acquisition of new technologies,

Recognizing also the important role of Governments in promoting the development of national entrepreneurial activity,

Recognizing further that organs and organizations of the United Nations system are currently undertaking work in this field,

Noting the work of non-governmental organizations that are active in fostering positive entrepreneurial activity in interested developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake a study of measures to promote the contribution of national entrepreneurs to the economic development of developing countries, taking into account the need for a positive international economic environment and focusing on the following:

(a) The experience of developed and developing countries in establishing legal, technical and financial frameworks conducive to the positive contribution of national entrepreneurs to development;

(b) Programmes to help entrepreneurs achieve increased access to domestic and international finance, in order to enhance capital formation in developing countries;

(c) Technical assistance and financial support provided by interested donor countries for activities to promote entrepreneurial skills in interested developing countries;

(d) The acquisition, diffusion, creation and development of technologies, including new technologies, in national entrepreneurial activities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the report requested in paragraph 4 of the present resolution a section on international factors affecting the growth and competitiveness of enterprises of developing countries, including the need for broader market opportunities;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, avoiding duplication and within existing resources, to prepare a report on the issues dealt with in the present resolution and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Eradication of poverty

Following the adoption of resolution 1988/47 on extreme poverty by the Economic and Social Council on 27 May 1988 (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), the General Assembly's Second Committee considered the question of international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 43/195 by recorded vote.

International co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/47 of 27 May 1988 on extreme poverty,

Aware that the adverse economic situation of developing countries, exacerbated by large structural imbalances in the world economy, has hindered the development process in those countries and their capacity to undertake social and economic programmes for, inter alia, the eradication of poverty,

Deeply concerned that a significant percentage of the world's population lives in conditions of absolute poverty and that, in developing countries, poverty can be a threat to social and political stability,

Stressing that the eradication of poverty is one of the most important development objectives requiring action by the international community at all levels,

Noting the importance of achieving effective international co-operation designed to support national efforts aimed at the eradication of poverty,

Aware that the eradication of poverty is made more difficult by a range of factors in the international economic environment that impede growth and development in the developing countries, such as the worsening in the terms of trade, intensified protectionism, high real interest rates, depressed commodity prices and the heavy burden of external debt,

Deeply concerned that negative effects of structural adjustment programmes in developing countries have exacerbated poverty, particularly among vulnerable groups in those countries, and have limited the ability of those countries to attain their socio-economic objectives,

Emphasizing the need for new and imaginative approaches to the eradication of poverty in developing countries as an integral part of the promotion of growth and development in those countries,

1. Urges the international community to create, as a priority, a supportive international economic environment for growth and development that will reinforce the efforts of developing countries to revitalize their development process and eradicate poverty;

2. Requests the regional commissions, in accordance with their mandates, to contribute more effectively to the strengthening of regional and subregional co-operation and to study options, including new approaches oriented towards the revitalization of growth and development in developing countries, in order to enable those countries to address effectively the eradication of poverty;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report analysing the impact of the economic crisis in developing countries on the intensity of poverty in those countries and containing recommendations for effective international policy measures for the urgent and permanent eradication of poverty in accordance with the present resolution.

Long-term trends in economic and social development

In accordance with a 1985 request of the General Assembly,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1988 a report⁽¹⁵⁾ on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000. A summary of the report⁽¹⁶⁾ was considered by the Economic and Social Council in July.

The report, prepared by DIESA with contributions from various parts of the United Nations system, attempted to place the economic events of the 1980s in historical perspective by reviewing a number of trends. A baseline scenario to the year 2000, prepared on the assumption of essentially unchanged policies, was presented. It was noted, however, that past attempts to forecast and project long-term trends had not been very successful—the expectations at the beginning of the 1970s were overthrown by the turbulence of the world economy, and those for the 1980s proved even more mistaken—and that the projections for the 1990s should be seen in that light.

Following a brief overview of world economic performance and policy in the 1980s, the report presented the baseline and alternative scenarios. It then considered: demographic and labour force trends and issues (population trends and structure, urbanization, international migration); trends and problems in the physical state of the world (energy, environment, human settlements); human resource development and social policy (education, health, social policy); and structural and technological change (structural trends in world production and trade, new and emerging technologies, the diffusion process of new technologies, structural changes in world manufacturing, world trade in non-fuel primary commodities). The report concluded that the outlook for the 1990s depended on progress made in national policy-making and in international co-operation. It was impossible to look forward to the 1990s without the impression that the forces seeking an internationalization of the world economy and those seeking to retain a measure of national and local autonomy would have to find new solutions and compromises. At one extreme of the perspective was the spectre of stagnation and environmental disaster; at the other there were opportunities to relieve poverty, improve the quality of life, safeguard the environment for future generations, stabilize the world economy and move towards a global community. The world's actual course would be decided by how Governments met the challenges facing them.

In October,⁽¹⁷⁾ ACC decided that a small group of high-level officials should be convened to review the work of the United Nations system on long-term issues and to relate it to the preparation and future monitoring of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.

On 29 July, by decision 1988/179, the Economic and Social Council took note of the summary of the Secretary-General's report and invited the Assembly, when considering the full report, to examine the feasibility of continuing the assessment of long-term trends in economic and social development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/194 without vote.

Examination of long-term trends in economic and social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3508(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 32/57 of 8 December 1977, 34/57 of 29 November 1979, 37/249 of 21 December 1982 and 40/207 of 17 December 1985,

Recognizing that restoration of the economic and social development process of the developing countries is indispensable for the sustained growth of the international economy and world-wide well-being,

Considering that an examination of long-term social and economic trends, and their forecasted interaction, would be useful in the elaboration of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, called for in its resolution 42/193 of 11 December 1987,

Conscious of the expediency of continuing to identify potential problem areas and critical issues in the world economy in order further to strengthen the capability for anticipating and responding to them by means of mutually supportive, co-ordinated policies,

Aware of the role that the United Nations is mandated to play and capable of playing in the formulation of future-oriented common approaches to key international economic and social issues,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to update, as appropriate, the report on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, in co-operation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, taking into account the debate in the General Assembly at its forty-third session and the earlier discussion in the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988 as well as the views expressed by the Committee for Development Planning, so as to enhance its utility as one of the background documents for the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report, in time for the middle of the decade, on the basis of the updated overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, and to consider the preparation of a subsequent report towards the end of the decade, selecting for topic-oriented studies the areas of common concern which warrant the special attention of the international community.

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/915/Add.6) without vote, 6 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.73), based on informal consultations on draft by Poland (A/C.2/43/L.51); agenda item 82 (f).

Reactivation of economic growth and development

On 29 July 1988, by decision 1988/178, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit a draft decision⁽¹⁸⁾ on reactivation of economic growth and development in developing countries to the General Assembly's 1988 session for consideration and action. By that text, the Council would have decided to reaffirm the urgency of reactivating economic growth and development in developing countries and to recommend that the Assembly convene a special session in 1990 to be devoted to ways of achieving sustained growth in the world economy. On 10 October,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted the draft decision to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, by decision 43/443, the General Assembly decided to convene a resumed forty-third session, not later than the end of February 1989, for the Second Committee to consider further and take a final decision on convening a special session of the Assembly in 1990 devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development in the developing countries. It also decided to transmit to the resumed session a draft decision⁽²⁰⁾ by which the Assembly would decide to convene such a special session and to initiate the preparatory process for it in January 1989.

Confidence-building

On 29 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/180, decided to defer to its July 1989 session consideration of a draft resolution submitted by Poland on confidence-building in international economic relations.⁽²¹⁾ By that text, the Council would have called on Member States to pursue policies to strengthen confidence and partnership in international economic relations, address jointly issues facing the world economy, promote new ideas and develop a common sense of purpose, particularly regarding development issues. It would also have invited all States and United Nations bodies, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, to exchange views on confidence-building and on ways to enhance it through concrete, co-operative measures. The Secretary-General would have been asked to keep the matter under review, take action to identify and promote confidence-building measures, establish a repertory of such measures and submit it to the General Assembly in 1990, through the Council.

In November 1988, the General Assembly's Second Committee had before it a draft resolution on international co-operation for development: towards confidence and common approaches,⁽²²⁾ submitted by Poland. By that text, which was subsequently withdrawn, the Assembly would have invited all States and bodies of the United Nations system to undertake measures to contribute to fostering confidence, predictability and reliability in international economic relations, and to promote common approaches to international economic issues, especially those confronting the developing countries. It would have asked the Secretary-General to keep the matter under review and assemble information on the relevant ongoing and planned activities of the system, and to report thereon in 1990, through the Economic and Social Council. It would have appealed to Governments to continue to use the potential of the United Nations to promote constructive, concerted and mutually supportive economic policies of Member States.

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1988⁽¹⁾ stated that the growth of gross world product in 1987 was slightly above 3 per cent, somewhat higher than in 1986. Short-term trends indicated that the world economy would continue to expand during 1988 and 1989, but at a lower rate.

The Survey reviewed the main international economic developments, analysed their implications and presented short- and medium-term forecasts for the different regions of the world. The first global stock exchange crisis in October 1987 gave evidence of the internationalization of financial relations, and fears of similar turbulence to come contributed to the instability of key parameters in the international economy - exchange rates and interest rates.

Per capita incomes in virtually all industrial countries grew steadily during the 1980s. Moderate increases in gross domestic product (GDP), some improvement in the terms of trade-particularly for oil importers-and slow population growth raised per capita incomes at an annual rate of 1 to 3 per cent in most countries since 1982, a trend likely to continue in the medium term.

Most countries in South and East Asia, including the most populous, achieved consistent increases in per capita income during the decade. Underlying economic trends and current policy stances indicated a consolidation of those gains in the short to medium term. In West Asia, armed conflicts and a large drop in oil prices at mid-decade adversely affected incomes and output. While the drop in per capita incomes halted in 1987 and incomes were still above those of most developing countries, prospects for a decisive improvement in the short term were uncertain.

In most countries of Africa, per capita incomes fell without respite during the 1980s. A legacy of policy failures in agriculture, ineffective industrialization strategies and extremely low primary commodity prices largely explained the disappointing performance in sub-Saharan Africa. Since 1986, output growth had also slowed markedly in the economies of North Africa. In the short term, prospects for the continent remained highly uncertain; room for manoeuvre on the domestic front appeared limited, structural policies would take time to bear fruit, and export earnings and prices of primary commodities would probably remain weak.

For the majority of countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, per capita incomes had fallen since 1981; for almost half of them, they fell again in 1987. Inflation accelerated considerably in 1987, reaching three digits in the large countries by early 1988. The need to confront domestic disequilibria and a heavy debt burden made it unlikely that investment ratios would soon recover. Unprecedented adjustment took place in the trade balance of the region, which shifted from deficit into surplus to the tune of $30 billion. Largely as a result of that shift, which absorbed savings and cut-into investments, sustainable growth was not expected in the foreseeable future if present policies continued.

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1988⁽²⁾ noted that the world economy was characterized by considerable diversity. The output of developing countries in Africa, Latin America and West Asia was advancing only weakly following declines in the rhythm of activity in 1987. The debt crisis, bad harvests in some countries and the behaviour of export prices and volumes all contributed to that outcome.

In Western Europe also, growth appeared to be lagging somewhat behind the already slow pace recorded in 1987, so that no significant improvement in unemployment levels was to be expected in most countries. For the developing countries of East Asia, the extraordinarily rapid expansion of exports experienced in 1987 continued to be the primary engine of growth. In China, a rapid expansion of domestic demand continued to drive the economy forward, and government policy aimed at moderating the expansion. In Japan, a buoyant rise in domestic demand was offsetting the relatively modest rise in net imports triggered by the appreciation of the yen; and for the United States, increased domestic demand and a revival of export growth, following the depreciation of the dollar, continued to provide a stimulus.

For the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries of South Asia, growth in 1987 fell far short of earlier years, largely because of poor harvests. In South Asia, that was primarily the result of drought, and the decline in agricultural output was expected to be rapidly reversed. In Eastern Europe, weather was also a factor, but certain managerial and organizational deficiencies were also evident. The process of economic reform accelerated markedly in the region, particularly in the USSR.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/75 without vote.

Early identification of world economic developments

The Economic and Social Council,

Emphasizing the common interest in a more balanced and sustained growth and development of the world economy,

Recognising the importance of short-term and medium-term analysis of the most acute problems in the world economy,

Convinced that the United Nations provides an appropriate framework for the early identification and analysis of emerging problems in the world economy and international economic relations,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, by which the United Nations Secretariat was requested to concentrate, inter alia, on identifying and bringing to the attention of Governments emerging economic and social issues of international concern,

1. Acknowledges that the economic research and analysis activities of the United Nations should continue to be carried out within existing resources and on a co-ordinated basis and should include:

(a) The continuous gathering, updating and analysis of the necessary data from a wide range of sources, including national and international sources;

the Provision of timely and reliable information to Governments;

(c) Applied research;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a survey of the mechanisms and means currently available within the United Nations system for the early identification, analysis and monitoring of world economic developments and to include it in the World Economic Survey 1989 as an annex.

Development planning and public administration

In 1988, the human resources element of development was discussed by CDP. The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) continued its programme of technical co-operation in public administration and finance with a budget of $24.9 million.

Development planning

The Committee for Development Planning held its twenty-fourth session in New York from 12 to 15 April 1988.⁽¹⁾ It discussed aspects of the world economy, including policy issues for the 1990s (see above). It also considered human resources development (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), identification of the least developed among the developing countries (see below) and arrangements for its future work.

In the face of major structural imbalances in the world economy, inadequacies of both national policies and international co-operation threatened the sustainability of growth in many countries and regions. Technological change, shifting comparative advantage, and population and environmental changes complicated the formulation of effective national policies and increased the need for international co-operation. In addition to reducing absolute poverty, diversifying exports and integrating environmental concerns into economic decision-making, other domestic issues varied from country to country. As policy makers digested the results of differing experiences of other countries, they had started to pursue greater autonomy and market discipline for State enterprises, encourage entrepreneurship in the private sector and reform pricing policies and fiscal systems.

A critical social issue in all countries was unemployment and marginalization. In developing countries, underemployment, or disguised unemployment, was more important than open unemployment; a very large informal sector absorbed workers who would otherwise be unemployed.

The mobilization of resources for development was a central task in developing countries. In all countries there was scope for improving financial intermediation and the functioning of domestic capital markets to utilize private savings better. There was also need for fiscal reform to increase revenues and for reducing military expenditures and subsidies to urban consumers and inefficient State enterprises.

Developing countries needed counter-cyclical policies to face external and domestic economic shocks. They could include guaranteed commodity prices for domestic producers, sinking funds to retire debt accumulated during slack export demand or to sustain income levels during a drought or other disturbance to domestic supply, and special measures to protect vulnerable groups. Other approaches to facilitate a more flexible response to shocks included decentralized decision-making in the State enterprise sector. CDP noted that a number of countries were experimenting with performance contracts to strengthen manager incentives and minimize costs. In some cases, privatization could offer possibilities for increasing efficiency.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1988/181 of 29 July 1988, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of CDP on its 1988 session. On 17 October, by decision 1988/185, the Council decided that the 1989 session of CDP should be held from 9 to 12 May.

Technical co-operation

During 1988,⁽²⁾ DTCD executed 153 projects in development issues and policies with delivery of $33.2 million against budgets of $42.2 million. Of total project expenditures, 41.8 per cent was for Africa, 25.2 per cent for Asia and the Pacific, 23.6 per cent for the Mediterranean, Middle East, Europe and interregional programme, and 9.4 per cent for the Americas.

During the year, requests for technical assistance in development planning were strongly influenced by international economic instability and onerous foreign debt and balance-of-payments problems. DTCD's assistance therefore focused on activities related to national economic structural adjustment and recovery programmes, particularly in the case of Africa. A main thrust was on applied, immediately useful assistance in such areas as short-term and operational planning, project planning and monitoring and the co-ordination of external assistance; the development of innovative methodologies and modalities to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of technical co-operation was intensified. Training and other means of developing national technical capacities in development were stressed.

Public administration

On 25 May 1988, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/115, requested the Secretary-General to convene the Ninth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance in early 1989 to review the United Nations regular programme of work in public administration and finance as well as the progress made in the Special Action Programme in Public Administration and Management for Africa and United Nations technical co-operation activities, giving particular attention to identifying new ways to strengthen technical co-operation among developing countries. The Council also decided that the Meeting should accord special attention to enhancing the role of public administration in developing countries in the promotion and management of development alternatives so as to facilitate a balanced and accelerated process of development.

Technical co-operation

In 1988,⁽²⁾ DTCD implemented 120 projects in public administration and finance with delivery of $18.6 million against budgets of $24.9 million. Both budgets and delivery increased more than 30 per cent over 1987. Of 1988 expenditures, 52.7 per cent was in Africa, 27.7 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 11.8 per cent in the Mediterranean, Middle East, Europe and interregional programme, 7.8 per cent in the Americas. Interregional advisers undertook 22 missions (compared to 37 in 1987) in the areas of tax administration and resource mobilization, management development and training, government budgeting and financial management, including accounting and auditing, public enterprise and administrative reform.

While a number of projects had multi-sectoral dimensions, most fell broadly into the fields of organization and management improvement, training and management development, personnel administration and labour power planning, public administration policy analysis and development, information management and data processing, and regional and local administration. Improved productivity and performance in public services was a priority objective of programmes, as was human resource development.

In public financial management, tax policies and administration were strengthened in a number of countries as a means of improving resource mobilization. The focus in public financial management projects varied from streamlining budgetary systems to improving legislative accountability. The establishment of financial information systems to strengthen public financial management was also used in a number of projects. Concern continued in many developing countries about the financial difficulties of public enterprises, especially with regard to large deficits and subsidies.

Three public administration and finance meetings were organized: an interregional seminar on management training for scientific and technical personnel (Manila, Philippines); an interregional seminar on the application of audit standards in the public sector (Vienna); and an interregional training programme on improving government accounting and financial reporting (Malawi).

Rural development

The ACC Task Force on Rural Development (sixteenth meeting, New York, 11-13 May 1988)⁽¹⁾ reviewed work accomplished since its 1987 meeting(*) in three areas: joint action at the country and regional levels, people's participation in rural development, and monitoring and evaluation. It also discussed the definition of rural development projects oriented towards alleviating rural poverty, an issue currently under discussion by the World Bank, and progress attained regarding implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women⁽³⁾ as pertaining to rural women. Reports of panels on people's participation in rural development and on monitoring and evaluation were annexed to the Task Force's report.

In response to a 1981 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the second review and analysis of agrarian reform and rural development,⁽⁵⁾ prepared by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in collaboration with other concerned United Nations organizations and bodies, as a follow-up to the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (WCARRD)⁽⁶⁾ The first such report had been submitted in 1984.⁽⁷⁾

The report delineated the dimensions and trends of rural poverty, described international developments and policies during the period 1983-1986 and discussed the policies and progress of national Governments in various fields in ameliorating rural poverty and improving the conditions of rural people.

Concluding, the report stated that there had been little advance in rural poverty alleviation during 1983-1986, except in Asia. The major causes behind the seemingly incongruous simultaneous increase in food availability and hunger could be laid to policy choices by both developed and developing countries, population dynamics and the general economic environment. With regard to population increase, an important aspect was the problem facing rural youth. A review of agrarian reforms indicated the absence of new programmes by countries. While many countries continued their land settlement programmes, none had succeeded in keeping pace with even the annual increase in agricultural population. Inequalities in land holdings continued to be large in all regions, especially in Latin America and the Near East. Population pressure had resulted in an increase in landlessness and near-landlessness in many Asian countries.

A bright spot was the continuing progress towards people's participation in development. Also, the critical role of women in rural development was beginning to be reflected in almost all programmes and projects, though more work needed to be done in that regard. A determined political commitment followed by energetic action was imperative from countries on the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of WCARRD.

Special economic areas

The development problems of the least developed and island developing countries were considered by various United Nations bodies during 1988.

Preparations began for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, planned for September 1990. In December, on the recommendation of CDP and the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly added Mozambique to the list of LDCs.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated LDCs were considered in several United Nations forums during 1988. With the inclusion of Mozambique in the United Nations list of LDCs, the number rose to 42. The others were Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen.

Identification of LDCs

By decision 1988/105 of 5 February 1988, the Economic and Social Council requested CDP to consider including Mozambique in the list of LDCs and to submit its recommendation to the Council in July.

In April,⁽¹⁾ CDP considered the eligibility of Mozambique and Zambia for inclusion in the list, examining data pertaining to three formal criteria-per capita GDP, share of manufacturing output in GDP, and adult literacy rate. CDP concluded that Mozambique met the existing criteria for inclusion in the list.

With regard to the case of Zambia, which had been carried over from its 1987 session,⁽²⁾ while concerned about the deteriorating state of Zambia's economy, CDP concluded that the existing criteria and the procedures for their application did not warrant its inclusion in the list.

CDP reiterated its reluctance to apply the existing criteria, which it had deemed inadequate for some time. In view of its concern, it included an item on the criteria in the programme of work for its 1989 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/153, endorsed the CDP conclusion and recommended that the General Assembly approve Mozambique's inclusion in the list of LDCs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 43/431 of 20 December, the General Assembly decided to include Mozambique in the list of LDCs.

Programme of Action for the 1980s

ACC held the eighth interagency consultation on the follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs at Geneva on 16 and 17 May 1988.⁽⁵⁾ SNPA had been adopted in 1981 by a United Nations Conference⁽⁴⁾ and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.⁽⁵⁾ The consultation discussed support to adjustment programmes in LDCs and co-ordination arrangements. It also considered preparatory arrangements for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs.

Preparations for the Second UN Conference on LDCs

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1988 on the state of preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs.⁽⁷⁾ The Secretary-General noted that preparatory meetings were planned for 1989 and 1990 and that it was proposed to hold the Conference in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990.

Within the United Nations system, preparations for the Conference had been discussed at the eighth inter-agency consultation on the follow-up of SNPA; preparations had also been initiated at the regional level.

The Secretary-General of UNCTAD, in collaboration with the Netherlands, convened a meeting of eminent persons at The Hague on 15 and 16 September, bringing together 24 high-level experts on development problems. The meeting focused on identifying constraints and bottle-necks that had hindered the development efforts of LDCs during the 1980s and on national and international measures required to accelerate their development process in the 1990s. UNCTAD planned further high-level meetings in 1989.

The eighth inter-agency consultation on the follow-up of SNPA (see above) reviewed the preparatory process and noted the need for co-ordination between the different programmes of relevance to LDCs, particularly the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.⁽⁸⁾ The consultation conducted an exchange of views on issues related to the development of LDCs and discussed contributions of United Nations organizations and agencies to the 1990 Conference.

UNDP action. On 1 July,⁽⁹⁾ the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) requested the Administrator to assist LDCs to ensure their full participation in the preparations for the 1990 Conference and in the Conference itself, deciding that such assistance should be funded from the Special Measures Fund for LDCs. He was also asked to report to the Council's February 1989 special session on UNDP participation in Conference preparations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/186 without vote.

Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/177 of 11 December 1987, in which it decided to convene the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in Paris in September 1990.

Recalling also its decision to convene one session of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries early in 1989 followed by one session of the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, as Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, early in 1990 in order to prepare for the Conference,

Reiterating its request to the Secretary-General to obtain, as has been the past practice, extrabudgetary resources to ensure the effective participation of the representatives of the least developed countries through provision of the resources necessary to finance the travel expenses of at least two representatives from each least developed country to attend the two preparatory meetings.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, Expressing deep concern at the continuing deterioration in the overall socio-economic situation of the least developed countries,

1. Emphasizes the crucial importance of adequate preparation for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, taking into account the priorities to be put forward by the least developed countries themselves;

2. Call upon all Governments, intergovernmental and multilateral institutions and others concerned to take appropriate steps to ensure that adequate preparations are made for the Conference and to participate effectively in the two above-mentioned preparatory meetings, as well as in the Conference itself;

3. Requests all concerned organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to submit, before the first preparatory meeting, reports containing a review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries within their fields of competence and proposals for further action as input to the preparations for the Conference;

4. Notes the steps being taken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the assistance of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and urges them to ensure full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the preparations for the Conference;

5. Takes note with appreciation of decision 88/30 on the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on 1 July 1988, in which the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme was requested, in close consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to assist the least developed countries to ensure that they are able to participate fully in the preparations, including preparatory meetings, for the Conference and in the Conference itself;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the state of preparations for the Conference.

Technical co-operation

In March 1988,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on technical co-operation between organizations of the United Nations system and LDCs. The report outlined financing, programming, implementation and co-ordination aspects of the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system. Conclusions and recommendations focused on improving the effectiveness of technical co-operation through co-ordination of agencies, along with closer analysis of efforts to assess effectiveness from the viewpoint of the beneficiary countries.

In May,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted ACC's comments on the JIU report. ACC members agreed that there was a need to streamline and strengthen modalities, mechanisms and co-ordination for technical co-operation with LDCs. It noted, however, that fuller discussion of existing specific inter-secretariat mechanisms needed to occur before certain recommendations, such as one to eliminate some planning meetings, could be implemented.

Island developing countries

In accordance with a 1986 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1988 a report⁽¹³⁾ on the specific problems and special needs of island developing countries. Taking into account the views of United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as the findings of a Group of Experts on Island Developing Countries (Malta, 24 and 25 May 1988), the report stated that many problems of those countries were those of development in general, but were more pronounced in their impact on island developing countries, particularly the small ones.

The report discussed the problems and prospects of island developing countries, giving special attention to those that were small in terms of population, land area and gross national product. With regard to domestic resources, the report considered natural and geographical factors (lack of natural resources, depletion of non-renewable resources, environmental problems, fresh water supplies, vulnerability to natural disasters, transport and communications), economic activities (diseconomies of scale, agriculture, trade policy issues, the role of tourism and services, marine and submarine resources) and human and institutional problems (shortages and gaps in manpower, other institutional constraints, migration, cultural problems). As to the transfer of external resources, the report considered aid, external debt and remittances.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the report outlined possible measures at the national level (development strategies, institution building, human resource development, entrepreneurship and foreign investment, technological development, food and agriculture, fisheries, services, infrastructural development, environment, disaster preparedness, participation in international forums), regional co-operation and international support measures (external financial and technical assistance, trade, migration).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/189 without vote.

Specific measures in favour of island developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Reiterating the call for specific action in favour of island developing countries contained in its resolution 41/163 of 5 December 1986, and in resolutions 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 111(V) of 3 June 1979 and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as well as decision 86/33 of 27 June 1986 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development

Programme on the special needs of island developing countries

Recognizing that, in addition to the general problems facing developing countries, island developing countries also suffer handicaps arising from the interplay of such factors as their smallness, remoteness, geographical dispersion, vulnerability to natural disasters, the fragility of their ecosystems, constraints in transport and communications, great distances from market centres, a highly limited internal market, lack of natural resources, weak indigenous technological capacity, the acute problem of obtaining fresh water supplies, heavy dependence on imports and a small number of commodities, depletion of non-renewable resources, migration, particularly of personnel with high-level skills, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Recognizing also that many of the above factors occur concurrently in island developing countries, resulting in economic and social vulnerability and dependence, particularly in those countries which are small and/or geographically dispersed,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 41/163 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and calls for their immediate and effective implementation;

2. Expresses its appreciation to States and to organizations and bodies within and outside the United Nations system that have responded to the special needs of island developing countries;

3. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in convening a meeting of the Group of Experts on Island Developing Countries at Valletta on 24 and 25 May 1988, and expresses its appreciation to the Government of Malta for acting as host to the meeting;

4. Takes note of the report of the Valletta meeting and of the report of the Secretary-General on specific problems and special needs of island developing countries;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by island developing countries to adopt policies that address their specific problems, including efforts at regional co-operation and integration, and calls upon those countries to continue to pursue, in accordance with their national objectives, policies and priorities, further measures to render their economies less vulnerable to the adverse consequences of their specific situations;

6. Appeals to the international community:

(a) To maintain and, if possible, increase the level of concessional financial and technical assistance provided to island developing countries;

(b) To maximize access of island developing countries to concessional financial and technical assistance by taking into account the specific development needs and problems facing those countries;

(c) To consider reviewing the mechanisms of existing procedures used in providing concessional resources to island developing countries;

(d) To ensure that assistance conforms to the national and, as appropriate, regional priorities of island developing countries;

(e) To provide support to island developing countries over a mutually agreed and, where appropriate, longer time-frame to enable them to achieve economic growth and development;

(f) To consider improving existing arrangements for the compensation of island developing countries for adverse effects on their export earnings and to consider wider adoption of such arrangements;

(g) To continue to ensure that a concerted effort is made to assist island developing countries, at their request, in improving their administrative capacities and in satisfying their overall needs with regard to the development of human resources;

7. Calls upon the international community to consider improving measures, within existing trade arrangements, in favour of island developing countries according to their special circumstances, taking into account particularly the special needs and problems of small island developing countries;

8. Urges once again relevant organizations of the United Nations system to take adequate measures to respond positively to the particular needs of island developing countries and to report on such measures, as appropriate;

9. Urges the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to strengthen its role as the focal point for specific action at the global level in favour of island developing countries and to act as a catalyst in this regard, inter alia, by organizing and facilitating the cross-regional interchange of information and experience in full co-operation with regional and subregional organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, as appropriate;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General, taking into account work already done on this issue, including that envisaged in paragraph 9 above, to identify within the appropriate inter-agency framework the problems of island developing countries, in particular those of small island developing countries, in order to elaborate specific measures that the international community might take to address those problems;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of governmental experts of island developing countries and donor countries and organizations to review the problems of island developing countries and propose appropriate concrete action with respect to those countries;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1988, some $7 billion in concessional loans and grants was made available to developing countries through the United Nations system, representing 14 per cent of total official development assistance to those countries from all sources during the year. Following its consideration of the annual report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on United Nations operational activities, the General Assembly, in December, invited members of the organs and organizations of the system to address operational activities for development in their governing bodies, with a view to arriving at a co-ordinated and system-wide approach to the issue.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) registered a record year in 1988 with total income of $1.2 billion. Expenditures during the year from UNDP central resources totalled $1.1 billion, of which $832 million was spent on field programme activities. Following a mid-term review of resources for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), the UNDP Governing Council made additional programme allocations of $490 million to country and intercountry indicative planning figures and $110 million to Special Programme Resources.

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO) had 953 projects under execution in 1988 with total delivery of $149.4 million. In line with its emphasis on human resources development, there was a significant rise in expenditures for training and more stress on management development and technical training. A considerable increase in the United Nations Population Fund's share of DTCO's programme enabled DTCO to resume active involvement in statistics and population-related activities.

The United Nations Volunteers programme expanded in 1988 with an estimated 1,534 volunteers in service at the end of the year, supported by the Special Voluntary Fund.

In 1988, project expenditures by the United Nations Capital Development Fund totalled $34 million, and $74.9 million was approved in new commitments.

General aspects

In his report providing statistical data on United Nations operational activities for development covering 1988,⁽¹⁾ the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) stated that preliminary figures indicated that some $7 billion in concessional resources (grants and loans) was made available to developing countries through the United Nations system, an increase of 11 per cent over 1987. That amount represented 14 per cent of the total official development assistance (ODA) to developing countries in 1988 ($51 billion). Although the system's concessional resources increased by $0.8 billion over 1987, their overall proportion in total ODA remained the same.

Total expenditures on operational activities overall by the system, including humanitarian assistance, amounted to $7.8 billion in 1988 as against $6.9 billion in 1987. That total comprised: development grants, $3.3 billion; concessional loans, $3.7 billion; and grant-financed refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, $0.8 billion.

Grant assistance through UNDP and UNDP-administered funds totalled $917.5 million in 1988; through the World Food Programme (WFP), $878 million; through the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), $399.5 million; and through the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), $129.9 million. Grant assistance through specialized agencies during the year totalled $825.9 million.

Net transfers from the International Development Association (IDA) grew by 7 per cent to $3.5 billion in 1988, representing a less vigorous increase than the 16 per cent recorded in 1987. As for net transfers of non-concessional (not ODA) loans from the World Bank, they went from an already sizeable negative balance of $2.2 billion in 1987 to some $4.6 billion in 1988.

Policy review. In response to a series of requests by the General Assembly in a 1987 resolution,⁽²⁾ the DIEC Director-General, in his annual report to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly in 1988,⁽³⁾ addressed selected policy and management issues. The issues mainly corresponded to those identified in the course of a review of case-studies on the functioning of operational activities of the system undertaken in 1987.⁽⁴⁾

In addition to mobilization of financial resources, the report discussed issues that would need to be addressed by various entities of the system, noting that implementation of the 1987 Assembly resolution on operational activities for development⁽²⁾ would require a major effort by all the organizations of the United Nations development system. With respect to specific items, the report reviewed the work of the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), described the nature and scope of the activities of the Joint Consultative Group on Policy (JCGP) (UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)) and discussed integrating women in development programmes, rationalization of field office structures and procurement of equipment.

The Director-General concluded that two actions were particularly important: the scope for linkages between global objectives and targets set for the 1990s and the potential contribution of the operational activities of the United Nations to their achievement in some fields could be explored more systematically; and a forward-looking approach should be taken to adapt the activities and structures of United Nations organizations to match a rapidly changing and increasingly complex and diversified environment.

The Director-General said it was his intention to launch a broader study of emerging trends in operational activities. Such a study would provide a basis for developing responses to the problems that the United Nations system would be expected to address in the 1990s and would involve far-reaching modifications in the content and organization of development co-operation. It was his opinion that issues related to the role and functions of the resident co-ordinator and the rationalization of field office structures would also benefit from examination in the course of such a long-term review.

The Director-General also submitted consolidated information on responses from governing bodies of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system on the findings of the case-studies on the functioning of operational activities of the system undertaken in 1987.⁽⁴⁾ Information on programming, simplification, decentralization and harmonization of rules and procedures, the role of UNDP as a central funding agency, country-level co-ordination, structure and technical advice and other issues was received from the governing bodies of UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), as well as from WFP, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, UPU and IFAD.

The Director-General noted that the extent and depth of responses by governing bodies varied considerably and suggested that they might wish to review the consolidated responses to identify both common positions and differences in emphasis or approach. While the case-studies covered only a small sample of the issues relating to operational activities in selected developing countries, the most important findings related to problems frequently cited in other studies and evaluations and confirmed the statements of the General Assembly on the need for improvements. The responses of governing bodies revealed some difficulties likely to be encountered in formulating long- and medium-term goals and improved policies and procedures, as well as in adjusting the country-level structures of the system.

Member States would find in the responses further evidence of the need for greater coherence and co-ordination of their policies on operational activities. While the intentions of Member States to ensure optimum service and support to the developing countries had been clearly expressed in the Assembly, differences in interpretation or emphasis underlined the complexity of the process of achieving reforms and improvement of operational activities to which the system was firmly committed.

UNDP Council action. In response to the General Assembly's 1987 request⁽²⁾ for governing bodies of the United Nations development system to discuss the 1987 report on case-studies on the functioning of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted a report to the Governing Council on UNDP's response to that report.⁽⁵⁾

The Administrator grouped the recommendations of the report on case-studies under the following headings and commented on them: the importance of the United Nations system of technical co-operation; programming and co-ordination; the functions of the resident co-ordinator; concentration of UNDP assistance in more needy countries; reinforcing the role of UNDP; decentralization of UNDP; closer co-operation between multilateral financial assistance sources and United Nations agencies; substantive support to Governments in meeting their development planning needs; non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and field representation and common premises.

On 1 July,⁽⁶⁾ the Governing Council decided to submit a series of conclusions on the subject to the Economic and Social Council. It concurred with the views expressed in the 1987 report regarding the importance of assistance from the United Nations system for technical co-operation and acknowledged the important role of UNDP as the central funding and co-ordinating mechanism.

The Council also concurred with a number of the report's recommendations, including those regarding the need for coherent co-ordination at the country level; the importance of the relationship between recipient Governments and resident coordinators; the need for decentralization of the management of operational activities and the pursuit of increased harmonization of procedures; self-reliance in programming approaches; the need for operational activities to respond to the varied and changing requirements of developing countries; the need for more attention to be paid to reinforcing the central funding role of UNDP; increasing the flow of development information to the field; the provision by the United Nations system of maximum assistance to recipient Governments to strengthen their capacity to co-ordinate external assistance; and the important role of NGOs in some areas of operational activities.

The Council welcomed the Administrator's decision⁽⁵⁾ to raise the project approval limit of resident representatives to $700,000 and encouraged steps towards further decentralization. It recognized that UNDP was not serving the wider role envisaged by the Assembly in 1977⁽⁷⁾ and 1986⁽⁸⁾ and expressed interest in a study being carried out by the DIEC Director-General to assess constraints on the use of the UNDP country programme as a frame of reference of operational activities and in further reflections on the concept of joint programming. It was particularly interested in which organizations of the system and which resources could be covered by such processes.

The Council considered that collaboration with the international financial institutions should take into account the special character, mandates and policies of the institutions involved and respect their differences. It also considered that the system's capacity for analytical work at the country level could be enhanced by ensuring that representatives of specialized agencies had technical functions and capacities in their sectoral areas, and by strengthening resident co-ordinators' capacity to draw on that expertise in support of government programmes.

ACC consideration. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ CCSQ(OPS) (Geneva, 6-8 April 1988)⁽⁹⁾ reviewed its work. It considered its current arrangements to be working satisfactorily, particularly considering the limited budgetary provisions for its substantive secretariat.

At its first regular session of 1988 (Geneva, 20 and 21 April), ACC decided⁽¹⁰⁾ to approve the extension of the budget estimates for continuing operation of the substantive secretariat of CCSQ(OPS) at its current level of expenditure, for a further period of one year ending on 30 April 1989.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/199 without vote.

for generating baseline information and measuring results,

1. Takes note of the report of the Economic and Social Council;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on the operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

3. Notes the encouraging result of the 1988 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities and stresses the continuing need for a real and significant increase in resources for operational activities for development on a continuous, predictable and assured basis;

4. Urges all countries to increase their voluntary contributions for operational activities for development, in particular those countries whose overall involvement is not commensurate with their capacity;

5. Requests the Director-General, in the triennial policy review of operational activities for development, to report fully on the implementation thus far of Assembly resolutions 41/171 and 42/196, and to prepare his reports in a comprehensive manner, setting out the interrelationship among problems and factors where appropriate, identifying options available and putting forward his specific recommendations, including possible scenarios for their implementation;

6. Reaffirm the primary responsibility of recipient Governments for co-ordinating development assistance at the country level, stresses the need for improved functioning of co-ordination of the United Nations system at the country level, and requests the Director-General:

proposals on those subjects in his report, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 42/196; reiterates the view that decentralization of the operational activities of the United Nations system to the field level should, within established principles of accountability, foster appropriate flexibility and responsiveness to the needs of developing countries; and renews its request for information on measures taken by organizations of the system in this regard;

8. Requests the Director-General to submit his recommendations on innovative, practical and effective measures to increase substantially procurement from developing countries for consideration during the triennial policy review to be undertaken in 1989, taking into account the need for the full implementation of the preferential arrangements for developing countries and making maximum use of national institutions and firms of those countries, as well as giving due regard to regional comparative advantage consistent with the principle of international competitive bidding and bearing in mind the need to take concrete measures to achieve equitable geographical distribution of procurement through the increased utilization of supply sources from developing and underutilized donor countries;

9. Stresses that technical co-operation among developing countries should become a widely used modality for development co-operation within the United Nations development system and in this connection draws the attention of the Director-General to the need for formulating specific proposals for consideration during the triennial review;

13. Welcomes Governing Council decision 88/50 of 1 July 1988, adopted in response to paragraph 34 of Assembly resolution 42/196, to initiate consideration by a group of experts of the successor arrangements for support costs from the standpoint of the best ways of meeting the requirements of developing countries;

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures

In his report on 1988 operational activities,⁽¹⁾ the DIEC Director-General stated that net transfers made available to developing countries through the United Nations system amounted to $7 billion, an increase of 11 per cent over 1987. Total expenditures on operational activities overall, including humanitarian assistance by the United Nations system, totalled $7.8 billion in 1988. Of that amount, development grants accounted for $3.3 billion compared with $2.8 billion in 1987, concessional loans for $3.7 billion, an increase of $0.2 billion over 1987, and grants for refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, $0.8 billion ($0.6 billion in 1987).

Expenditures on United Nations operational activities, including technical assistance expenditures on training and consultants included in World Bank loans and IDA credits, but excluding WFP budgetary and extrabudgetary expenditures, totalled $3.4 billion in 1988 compared with $3.2 billion in 1987.

Total expenditure of the member organizations of JCGP in 1988 was $2.78 billion compared to $1.98 billion in 1987.

Contributions

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities for development of the United Nations system increased by some 12 per cent in dollar terms, from $7.1 billion in 1987 to $8.3 billion in 1988. The increase was affected by exchange rate movements, particularly those of the United States dollar against other major donor currencies.

Contributions to UNDP, UNDP-administered funds and trust funds, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and other United Nations funds and programmes totalled $3 billion compared with $2.7 billion in 1987. Continued increases in contributions to core funds of UNICEF, UNDP and UNFPA were reported; increases for UNICEF in dollar terms were 24 and 15 per cent for 1987 and 1988, respectively, for UNDP, 12 and 7 per cent, respectively, and for UNFPA, 12 per cent for each year. Contributions to the specialized agencies for operational activities also rose in 1988, reaching $3.8 billion compared with the 1987 total of $3.4 billion.

Contributions to IDA and IFAD and capital subscription payments to the World Bank and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) rose to $4.4 billion from $3.6 billion in 1987.

Contributions to United Nations bodies for refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities totalled $614.9 million in 1988 compared with $611.2 million the previous year.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1988 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 1 and 2 November to receive government pledges for 1989 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

As at 30 June 1989, pledges from 138 countries for 22 participating funds and programmes amounted to over $1,442 million, with $862.2 million designated for UNDP.

Inter-agency co-operation

Inter-agency co-operation on matters concerning operational activities for development was discussed at two meetings of ACC's CCSQ(OPS) in 1988. The first session was held at Geneva (6-8 April)⁽⁹⁾ (see above) and the second in New York (21-23 September).⁽¹²⁾

Technical co-operation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1988,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that UNDP had another record year for income received, with total income of $1,209 million. The value and volume of new projects approved during the year, however, decreased compared to the 1987 levels. Pledges to UNDP for 1989 were a record $1.2 billion, an increase of 7 per cent in real terms over pledges for 1988.

Five major donors (Finland, France, Italy, Spain, Switzerland) raised their contributions by 8 per cent or more in United States dollar terms. Among recipient contributors, nine countries (Brazil, China, Colombia, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Thailand) each pledged more than $1 million.

Expenditures from UNDP central resources in 1988 totalled $1,109.4 million, of which $832 million was spent on field programme activities, $99.8 million on agency support costs, $172.3 million on UNDP administrative and programme support costs, and $5.6 million on sectoral support and other field-level costs. Of the $832 million in field programme expenditure, $676.5 million was delivered under indicative planning figure (IPF) resources.

Project expenditures rose from $702.1 million in 1987 to an estimated $832.5 million in 1988. Expenditures for international experts and fellowships increased by 18.6 per cent and 22.1 per cent, respectively, while for sub-contracts and equipment they increased by 10.9 per cent and 22.8 per cent, respectively.

The value of new projects approved in 1988 was $708.5 million compared to $714.6 million in 1987, while the number decreased from 1,977 in 1987 to 1,794. During the year, the three leading sectors by their numerical share were: a general category including trade and finance, health, employment, culture and science and technology; development strategies, policies and planning; and agriculture.

The majority of UNDP programmes continued to emphasize more efficient economic management while addressing issues of critical poverty. Other programmes were directed to promoting productivity increases in agriculture and industry, public sector efficiency, economic reactivation through the diversification of industry and exports, greater incentives for the private sector and the application of technology in development. UNDP also continued to emphasize the incorporation of women in development, co-operation with NGOs as partners in development, and the increased use of United Nations Volunteers, Transfer of Knowledge through Expatriate Nationals and short-term advisory services as means of providing highly skilled, low-cost services to development efforts world-wide.

In Africa, overall economic performance remained unsatisfactory in 1988, as the debt burden, unfavourable terms of trade and a net outflow of resources severely restricted growth. Country and intercountry programmes in the fourth cycle (1987-1991) supported the African countries in their implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAERD), adopted by the General Assembly in 1986.⁽²⁾ Programmes also reflected UNDP efforts to help African Governments to implement structural adjustment measures and address social issues emanating from economic reform.

Economic growth in the developing Asian-Pacific countries was a robust 8 per cent in 1988. Major factors in the region's performance were the agricultural recovery in South and South-East Asia after adverse weather in 1987, strong industrial and export growth combined with increased consumer spending, and fast growing investments. The composition of UNDP-supported projects in the region reflected a changing pattern of development. Industry and science and technology expanded, while agriculture, forestry and fisheries, although declining modestly, remained the largest sector, with 21 per cent of allocated funds in 1988. Within many projects, training grew in importance relative to equipment.

The economies of Latin America and the Caribbean continued to evolve unfavourably in 1988 with a low growth rate, capital flight and an external debt of some $400 billion at year's end. The UNDP programme in the region emphasized economic management, agriculture, transport, natural resources and environmental management.

While economic conditions in the Arab States benefited from a relatively high average per capita income of $2,000, a number of factors underscored the development challenge faced by the region in 1988. Population growth rates averaged 3.1 per cent in the first half of the 1980s. The region produced only about 75 per cent of its food needs during the same period. While some countries and some groups enjoyed high standards of living, the basic needs of many remained unmet. In 1988, UNDP emphasized the role of women in development, the private sector as a facilitator for development, NGOs and the environment.

Social and political changes in Europe led to an increase in projects that addressed debt-restructuring, the environment and development of the private sector. During 1988, several missions were carried out by Arab countries in biotechnology, computer software, water resources management and agricultural technologies in European countries in order to establish co-operative links.

UNDP administered six funds during 1988: the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see below), the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII), the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE) (see PART THREE, Chapter VI), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) (see PART THREE, Chapter VII) and the United Nations Volunteers programme (UNV) (see below).

In the area of emergency and disaster relief, UNDP collaborated with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other international agencies. It approved 43 relief projects in 1988 while providing follow-up assistance to countries struck by disasters in previous years. Disasters to which UNDP responded included desert locust infestations in the Sudan, a hurricane in Jamaica, a typhoon in the Philippines and flooding in Bangladesh (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

On 1 July,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report for 1987⁽⁴⁾ and encouraged him to pursue the measures that had led to an increase and improvement in the implementation of programmes and to an improvement of the quality of UNDP-supported projects. It reaffirmed the continued applicability of the basic principles governing UNDP activities and stressed that UNDP should be enabled to fulfil its mandate as the central funding and co-ordinating agent for technical co-operation provided by the United Nations system. It welcomed the information provided by the Administrator on the increasing involvement and role of UNDP in diverse areas of development co-operation and the evolving co-operation between UNDP and the World Bank, which was based on the full recognition of the respective mandates and policies of both institutions. It called on UNDP and the executing agencies to collaborate more closely in order to respond effectively and efficiently to the priority needs of developing countries and took note of UNDP's support to the private sector at the express request of Governments. The Council decided to devote the high-level segment of its 1989 session to the role of UNDP in the 1990s and requested the Administrator to submit a comprehensive report to it at that time.

UNDP Governing Council

In 1988 in New York, the UNDP Governing Council held organizational meetings on 16 and 19 February and a special session to consider pending issues from 17 to 19 February; it held its thirty-fifth regular session at Geneva from 6 June to 1 July.⁽⁵⁾ At the organizational meetings, the Council adopted decisions on its schedule of meetings in 1988 and other organizational matters,⁽⁶⁾ and on the election of the members of the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole.⁽⁷⁾

At its special session, the Council adopted eleven decisions on: country, intercountry, interregional and global programmes and projects (see below); the report of the Chairman of the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole;⁽⁸⁾ co-operation with WHO and other agencies against AIDS (see PART THREE, Chapter XI); UNIFEM (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII); the mid-term review of resources for the fourth programming cycle (see below); IPFs for the fourth programming cycle (see below); UNDP response to emergency, medium-term and long-term development requirements in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III); the role of UNDP in the West Bank and the GAZA Strip (see PART TWO, Chapter IV); change of name of the Office for Projects Execution (see below); delegation of authority for project approval (see below); and financing of technical co-operation among developing countries (see below).

The Budgetary and Finance Committee met between 6 June and 1 July to consider financial, budgetary and administrative matters, the Committee of the Whole met between 7 June and 1 July to consider evaluation matters, country and intercountry programmes and projects, UNFPA country and intercountry programmes and projects, and the report of the Chairman of the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole, and the drafting group met between 13 and 30 June to consider proposals for draft decisions.

Forty-seven decisions were adopted at the June/July session; those not covered in this chapter dealt with: women in development and UNIFEM (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII); human resources development (see PART THREE, Chapter XII); assistance to national liberation movements recognized in its area by the Organization of African Unity (see PART TWO, Chapter I); the role of UNDP in implementing UNPAAERD (see PART THREE, Chapter III); UNFPA (see PART THREE, Chapter IX); UNRFRNRE (see PART THREE, Chapter VI); UNFSTD and the Energy Account (see PART THREE, Chapters VI and VII); activities in the field of drug abuse control (see PART THREE, Chapter XVI); the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I); the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III); the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development and the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); and the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and assistance to other drought-stricken countries in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapters III and VIII).

On 1 July,⁽⁹⁾ the Council approved the agenda and organization of work at its thirty-fifth session. Decisions were taken on future Council sessions⁽¹⁰⁾ and the provisional agenda for 1989.⁽¹¹⁾ The Council also took note of several reports and other documents.⁽¹²⁾

By decision 43/445 of 20 December, the General Assembly decided to refer a paragraph on operational activities for development to the Economic and Social Council for consideration and action in 1989. By that paragraph, the value of the Governing Council's Committee of the Whole and its Working Group would be recognized or the Council would be called on to terminate the Working Group.

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

In a report to the Governing Council's 1988 special session,⁽¹³⁾ the Administrator analysed eight country programmes, which he submitted for approval. Three of the programmes were in Africa, three in the Arab States and two in Europe. The small number of country programmes reflected the approach of the end of programming for the fourth IPF cycle.

The largest IPF in the programmes submitted was $27.8 million (from previous and current programmes) for Yemen, which also topped the list of total resources programmed, with $42.2 million, including large sums of non-IPF resources. The smallest IPF in the programmes submitted was $2 million for the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, although the programme was much larger ($14 million) due to the inclusion of substantial resources from other donors. The report included information on the timing, preparations, financing, major development objectives and orientation of the submitted programmes, distribution of resources by sector and attention to global priorities.

On 17 February,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Council approved the eight new programmes.

On 1 July,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Council approved a further 13 country programmes for the duration of their programme period and within the limits of their IPFs for the period 1987-1991. Of those programmes, nine were from Africa, two were from the Arab States, one was from Asia and one from Latin America and the Caribbean. The Council also took note of the extension of a country programme for Iran and of the proposed regional programme for the Arab States, and approved emergency assistance to meet short and intermediate needs for desert locust control.

By the same decision, the Council took note of a report by the Administrator on the analysis of country programme trends during the third (1982-1986) and fourth (1987-1991) IPF cycles.⁽¹⁶⁾ The Administrator analysed 131 country programmes which were common to both cycles in order to investigate what longer-term trends could be observed.

In a section of his annual report for 1988⁽¹⁾ on project results of global and interregional programmes, the Administrator stated that UNDP supported international co-operation in basic and applied research and its dissemination, particularly in the areas of food crops and health. The global programme in agriculture emphasized improving varieties of food crops such as maize, rice, sorghum and millet by combining higher yields with resistance to insects, disease and environmental stress. It had created successful networks in several developing countries to test and adapt new varieties of those crops. Nearly 800 rice scientists from developing countries were linked to the International Rice Testing Programme at the International Rice Research Institute (IRRI) in the Philippines. In 1988, 1,215 sets of 25 types of rice strains were distributed to 46 countries, where 33 improved varieties performed well under varying conditions. A total of 130 trainees from 17 countries were trained at IRRI. Co-operation continued with the International Fertilizer Development Centre in Mussel Shoals, Alabama, United States, to increase crop output through efficient use of fertilizers. Over 400 people from 63 countries participated in training courses. The $11 million UNDP contribution to agricultural research centres was combined with nearly $250 million provided by other donors.

With regard to clean water and adequate sanitation, UNDP and partner United Nations agencies applied innovative strategies to provide such facilities to the developing world through the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) (see also PART THREE, Chapter VI). Five new intercountry projects for low-income communities were allocated $10.8 million in 1988, bringing total UNDP support for the sector to $370 million since the Decade was launched.

Almost 700 communities in 13 countries had participated in the UNDP programme on the promotion of the role of women in water and environmental sanitation services. Preparations were being made to extend the programme to seven more countries and an office was opened in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, to encourage closer co-operation with other African organizations. Additional funding for the programme in 1988 was granted by the Canadian International Development Agency.

In the health sector, UNDP and WHO in March 1988 formed an "Alliance to Combat AIDS", under which UNDP resident representatives were charged with seeing that assistance for AIDS from all United Nations organizations was co-ordinated within the framework of national AIDS plans. UNDP also helped to mobilize external funds. UNDP and WHO also played leading roles in the launching of the "Global Blood Safety Initiative", which was designed to ensure safe blood supplies throughout the world in order to stem the spread of AIDS and other diseases.

Development programmes involving fisheries, energy, trade, environment, education and urban management were also supported by UNDP in 1988.

Country programmes by region

Africa

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in the Africa region during 1988,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Administrator stated that the remaining 11 of the 45 fourth cycle (1987-1991) programmes of UNDP assistance in the 42 countries of the region were approved in 1988 (see above).

At the start of the fourth cycle, $1.4 billion of programmable resources were estimated as being available to the region through UNDP core resources and associated funds. At the end of the second year of the cycle, the estimates were revised to $1.8 billion, some $368 million of that increase resulting from supplementary allocations to the 1987-1991 IPFs made by the Governing Council in 1988 (see below).

The rate of delivery of IPF resources, which sank to a low point in the middle of the third cycle (1982-1986), rebounded sharply to the full level of available resources; in 1988, it was estimated to be almost double the total for 1984. Although the strong showing in 1988 was predictable for the second year of a cycle, intensive financial management and monitoring practices and the increased ceiling for project approvals by resident representatives (from $400,000 to $700,000) were also contributing factors. Government cost-sharing increased rapidly, from $9.3 million in 1982 to $28 million in 1988, as did the proportion of government-executed projects.

In 1988, a total of 1,968 projects had current budgets funded from UNDP core resources. As in previous years, most of the available resources (69.1 per cent) were allocated to large-scale projects. A comparison of the four UNDP budget components (personnel plus sub-contracts, training, equipment and miscellaneous) showed a declining trend in expenditure on project personnel and an upward one in expenditure on training, especially in the fourth cycle. The decline in project personnel and sub-contractor expenditure, despite the rising costs of expertise, was attributable to a tendency towards shorter assignments and more use of national experts and consultants.

The distribution of resources by sector for the region for 1987-1991 was as follows: agriculture, forestry and fisheries, 28.9 per cent; general development, policy and planning, 23.5 per cent; natural resources, 10.7 per cent; transport and communications, 11.1 per cent; industry, 8.4 per cent; employment, 7.2 per cent; education, 5.5 per cent; science and technology, 3.9 per cent; and other sectors, 0.8 per cent.

The report assessed 23 country programmes of the region. Reviews of a number of them—Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mali, Nigeria, Togo, Zaire—were carried out during the year.

At the regional level, human resources development programmes for the building of regional and subregional centres of excellence in technical, scientific, administration and management training accounted for the majority of the $90 million of projects approved in 1988. A $5.7 million programme with 16 training centres for strengthening management institutions in Africa became fully operational in 1988; the focus was on management organization, curriculum development and consultancy capabilities.

The African Project Development Facility, sponsored by UNDP, IFC, the African Development Bank and 14 donor countries, became fully operational. Field operations conducted from regional offices in Abidjan and Nairobi reviewed nearly 1,000 proposals for funding, UNDP budgets for which ranged from $300,000 to $4.8 million, with an average of $1.4 million per project.

A substantial number of projects in the area of food production, which ranked as one of the foremost priorities of the regional programme, were approved during 1988. Significant efforts were initiated in marine and inland fisheries, the livestock sector and crop protection. Also, in support of NGO activities, a $2.4 million project was approved to provide organizational and management support to indigenous NGO associations and to identify and develop opportunities for grass-roots participation in UNDP country programmes. Within the women in development programme, three projects were started, three others were formulated and one continued to receive preparatory assistance. The three being implemented were on raising the agricultural productivity of women in Africa, improving the role of African women in informal-sector production and management, and African women water users.

Infrastructure development centred on the transport and communications sectors with a $4.8 million programme being approved in 1988, including $1.3 million in cost-sharing.

Arab States and Europe

In his report on the implementation of selected country programmes in the Arab States and Europe during 1988,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Administrator said that by the end of the year, all country programmes for the fourth cycle had been approved with the exception of Lebanon. In view of the slightly improved operational conditions in certain areas of Lebanon, UNDP decided in mid-1988 to proceed with a revitalization of the country programme, albeit at a measured pace, beginning with the appointment of the Resident Representative in July 1988.

In terms of the overall level of approvals of IPFs, there was a 90 per cent increase in 1988 with $240.7 million approved, compared with $126.9 million in 1987. The sectoral distribution of the ongoing projects was as follows: agriculture, forestry and fisheries, 19 per cent; development planning, 15 per cent; industry, 15 per cent; transport and communications, 13 per cent; natural resources, 12 per cent; science and technology, 7 per cent; education, 5 per cent; employment, 5 per cent; health, 3 per cent; trade, 2 per cent; and other areas, 4 per cent.

The report reviewed the country programmes for Bahrain, Jordan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan and Yemen. With regard to the fourth regional programme for the Arab States, 1988-1992, approved by the Governing Council in July⁽¹⁵⁾ in the amount of $46.4 million, the report stated that it was based on assessment of the previous regional programme (1983-1988). The report outlined important lessons which were applied in preparing the new programme: the need to concentrate efforts on a few priority areas; the need to incorporate considerations of human resources development into every project, with the role of women emerging as specially important; the need to recognize the critical importance of networking arrangements to improve the efficiency of technical co-operation; the need to identify projects according to the priorities of the various subregional groups; and the need to increase Arab/European co-operation particularly throughout the Mediterranean basin.

Under the new programme, two main priority themes, increased food security through the expansion of food production and the acquisition of technology, were to receive almost half of IPF resources. Underscoring both those themes was a strong emphasis on human resources development, which would also be an important component in water development, environment, energy, trade and transport and communications.

The regional programme for Europe, approved by the Council in 1987,⁽¹⁹⁾ was in full implementation in 1988, with 37 ongoing projects. Of particular note was the promotion of the linkage between participating Arab and European countries, particularly in terms of developing an outreach programme that would share with the Arab countries the successful experience of Europe's regional programme in such areas as energy planning. A mid-term review was scheduled for the end of the first quarter of 1989.

The report reviewed two country projects—remote-sensing application to agriculture in Egypt and improvement of the quality of drinking-water in Morocco—and one regional project on Bayoud (a date-palm disease) control. It also noted that UNDP emphasized a number of special themes in its technical co-operation programme (the role of women in development, the private sector in development, environment and support to NGOs) and described the incorporation of those themes into the country and regional programmes.

The report also discussed co-ordination of assistance with regard to Lebanon, Somalia and the Sudan and in connection with the locust invasion of countries in North and West Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). It was also noted that, at the headquarters level, contacts were made with specialized executing agencies with a view to improving the rate and quality of assistance delivered.

Asia and the Pacific

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in Asia and the Pacific during 1988,⁽²⁰⁾ the Administrator stated that, with the Governing Council's approval of the country programme for Maldives in July,⁽¹⁵⁾ only the country programme for Iran remained to be approved.

Total IPF resources available to the region for the fourth cycle were $1.5 billion, which included carry-over from the previous cycle and reflected the significant increase in IPF levels approved by the Council in July (see below). Eighty-five per cent of the resources for the region were allocated for country-specific projects and 15 per cent for intercountry projects. For 1988, it was estimated that cost-sharing contributions by the recipient and third parties amounted to almost 8 per cent of total funds disbursed.

In 1988, country and regional projects delivered assistance from IPF resources valued at an estimated $240 million, representing a marginal increase over the 1987 level of $234 million. Sectoral allocation of IPF resources confirmed past trends, with an increased share going to industry and science and technology. The three largest sectors were: agriculture, forestry and fisheries (21 per cent); industry (19 per cent); and natural resources (12 per cent).

During the year, mid-term reviews of country programmes were held for China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Nepal. The review of China's programme included sectoral reviews covering industry, agriculture, forestry, energy and economic planning. It concluded that the country programme remained valid and effective in meeting China's technical assistance requirements.

Nepal's review was introduced through a series of sectoral meetings in August 1988, covering agriculture, forestry, energy, industry, finance and economic planning. Emphasis was placed on identifying issues of a cross-sectoral nature and particular attention was paid to private sector development, NGO involvement and participation of women in development. The Lao People's Democratic Republic's review focused on implementing the country programme and the evolving role of UNDP in the context of bilateral and other multilateral agency activities.

The second year of the fourth intercountry programming cycle was marked by an increase in UNDP assistance disbursed to over $35 million. The total amount of new IPF resources allocated to the programme was $211 million. However, those figures did not give the complete delivery picture, as the intercountry programme continued to generate an ever-growing amount of cost-sharing and co-financing from participating and donor countries, with each UNDP dollar helping to mobilize the equivalent of $1.60 in additional spending. In terms of ongoing projects, transport and communications continued to receive the largest allocation, with 24 per cent of all programmed resources, followed by natural resources (19 per cent) and agriculture, forestry and fisheries (16 per cent).

At the subregional level, total programmed resources for the South Pacific amounted to approximately $35 million and would actually exceed the allocations from IPFs to those countries. The members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations would receive nearly $11 million and the nine least developed countries (LDCs) of the region a similar amount.

The Administrator's report also discussed special themes that were assuming importance in the region—management of the environment, women in development, NGOs, private sector development and technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC)—and aid co-ordination.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean during 1988,⁽²¹⁾ the Administrator stated that, in addition to the actual expenditure of $59 million in 1987 and the estimated delivery of $67 million in 1988, the region had committed an IPF of $100 million by December 1988, leaving a balance of $85 million to be committed for the remaining years of the fourth cycle (1987-1991). The overall UNDP programme in the region was considerably larger than was suggested by IPF resources because cost-sharing, management services agreements and Special Programme Resources (SPRS) made it possible to carry out additional activities for a total of $552 million. IPF resources during the fourth cycle amounted to 37.6 per cent ($333 million) of total resources available.

By sector, general development issues received the largest percentage (30.6) of resources, followed by agriculture (14.3 per cent), transport (12.7 per cent) and natural resources (9.2 per cent). Those sectors were closely associated with the aim of improving the capacity to import since they were related to exports of primary goods.

An important characteristic of the programme in 1988 was the increased importance of government execution, which was by far the preferred method of project execution in the region. Execution by Governments accounted for 27 per cent of total delivery, followed by DTCD, which accounted for 12.1 per cent of executions.

The report provided information on reviews which took place during 1988 on the country programmes for Chile, Ecuador and Panama; a review of the programme for Haiti was also carried out but would be reported on separately. Also reviewed were a number of individual projects under implementation in 1988 in the areas of economic management, equity and growth, and science and technology.

Special themes receiving attention in 1988 were improving the environment for private sector development and regional co-operation and mobilization of resources for environmental action. A meeting was held in New York in June, attended by nine NGOs and consortia, where recommendations were made to strengthen co-operation among those organizations and UNDP, as well as to improve the treatment of gender issues and the role of women in development. The report also contained information on the co-ordination of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

Indicative planning figures

In a report to the special session of the Governing Council,⁽²²⁾ the Administrator provided details on the revision of certain country IPFs resulting from changes in the basic data used to calculate them (per capita gross national product (GNP)) and from action taken by the General Assembly with respect to the list of LDCs.⁽²³⁾ Under the revised data, 21 countries would receive an IPF increase, including Burma as a new LDC. No reductions were calculated for countries whose revised per capita GNP had increased. The Administrator also proposed a new methodology for effecting changes in IPFs when basic data were modified.

Also, in response to a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽²⁴⁾ the Administrator had initiated consultations with recipient Governments on the net contributor provisions established by the Council in 1985.⁽²⁵⁾ He reported that the position of several Governments with respect to achieving net contributor status had not formally been communicated, but it seemed likely that some countries would not achieve it. Given the Council's 1987 confirmation of the net contributor provision,⁽²⁴⁾ he stated that he intended to reduce programme activity to a level commensurate with anticipated voluntary contributions in those instances where net contributor status would clearly not be achieved.

On 19 February,⁽²⁶⁾ the Council confirmed its agreement that, in instances where the official revision of basic data of GNP used in calculating IPFs was detrimental to country IPFs, no downward revision should be made to IPFs of the current programming cycle (1987-1991). Also, where revision would change the status of the country to that of a net contributor, no action would be taken during the current cycle. The Council approved the recalculation of country IPFs for the fourth cycle and confirmed the proposed methodology by which future revision to IPFs resulting from changes in per capita GNP would be considered. It took note of the likely outcome of the Administrator's intention to reduce programme activity to a level commensurate with anticipated voluntary contributions in instances where it was clear that net contributor status would not be achieved and noted a statement by the Associate Administrator that proposals on the basis of the round of consultations with Governments expected to achieve net contributor status would be submitted to the Council at its 1988 regular session.

On 1 July,⁽²⁷⁾ the Council decided that net contributor obligations would be waived for any year in respect of which the per capita GNP of net contributor countries fell below the thresholds established in 1985, and to defer consideration of the issue of net contributor status to 1989 on the understanding that the Administrator could postpone taking action until March of that year.

In May,⁽²⁸⁾ the Administrator recommended, based on an increase in voluntary contributions in non-United States dollar currencies, and due to the decline in the United States dollar, that the Council base a. revised resource allocation decision on additional resources of $676 million available at the end of the fourth cycle. From that amount, $76 million would have to be set aside for agency support costs.

On 1 July,⁽²⁹⁾ the Council decided that $490 million would be distributed between country and intercountry IPFs in accordance with the criteria established in 1985,⁽²⁵⁾ and agreed that distribution of country IPFs should take into consideration the loss of purchasing power of IPFs due to exchange rate fluctuations. It decided that the additional country IPFs would be calculated as follows: 50 per cent would be distributed proportionally to the existing IPFs for the fourth cycle and 50 per cent in accordance with the Council's 1985 decision; and the resultant IPFs were to constitute floors and ceilings in substitution for those established in 1985. The Council further decided that the national liberation movement IPF, the Namibia IPF and the multi-island IPFs should be increased by a percentage equal to the average increase for countries belonging to the group with a per capita GNP between $750 and $1,500; it also increased the multi-island IPF by $2.5 million for the cycle.

Programme planning and management

In accordance with a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽³⁰⁾ the Administrator submitted a review of programme and project activities.⁽³¹⁾ With regard to improving programme and project quality, the Administrator described the procedural framework established for mid-term reviews of country and intercountry programmes, noting that for all programmes over $10 million, at least one review was required, ideally taking place at the mid-point in the programme. As to programme management information, revised procedures for monitoring, reporting and evaluation included formats for project performance evaluation reports for project managers and the resident representative to report on project tripartite reviews. A computerized system would be introduced to link planned management actions with receipt of reports to enable headquarters to monitor compliance with project reporting requirements. In the context of the Country Programme Management Plan mechanism, a computerized system was being developed to capture information/data on fourth cycle programmes to facilitate monitoring of programme implementation.

A new Programme and Projects Manual was issued in February 1988 containing revised guidelines on project formulation, which emphasized the importance of undertaking basic preliminary investigations before embarking on project formulation and included a clearer and more logical project document format.

On 1 July,⁽³²⁾ the Governing Council commended the Administrator for making available the new Programme and Projects Manual and welcomed the formulation and issuance of more rigorous and comprehensive guidelines on project formulation and management, including a new project document format. The Council asked the Administrator to carry out jointly with the recipient Government a mid-term review for each country programme approved for the fourth programming cycle and took note of the format envisaged for the mid-term review reports to be prepared at the field level. The Administrator was invited to undertake an evaluation of the country programme mid-term review process and to include in his report both aggregated data on all mid-term reviews and an analysis of the main findings and results of different reviews. He was also invited to report to the Council in 1989 on the timetable envisaged for the different mid-term reviews and measures taken to carry out reviews of regional, interregional and global programmes, as well as on how and when he intended to report to the Council on those reviews.

Standard modalities of technical co-operation

In response to a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽³⁰⁾ the Administrator included in his review of programme and project activities⁽³¹⁾ proposals for standard modalities of technical co-operation. He noted that he was in the process of gathering information from all major donors on the terms, procedures and modalities under which technical co-operation was provided by them. That information would be used to draft an inventory of practices and undertake a comparative analysis. Although the response to requests for information had been disappointing, analyses were being undertaken on material already published on technical co-operation procedures. In a second phase, detailed consultations would take place with donor and recipient Governments to identify areas of common concern and interest, with a view to overcoming the main difficulties that recipient Governments faced in co-ordinating and programming technical co-operation inputs from different sources.

On 1 July,⁽³²⁾ the Council noted the Administrator's request to major donor countries for information. It asked him to make use of existing sources of information and invited the major donors to provide any other supplementary information specified by the Administrator for the purpose of harmonizing both bilateral and multilateral technical co-operation. The Administrator was urged to intensify efforts towards harmonization in carrying out technical co-operation in the United Nations system through harmonization of programming cycles, document formats and procedures.

Project Development Facility

In his review of programme and project activities,⁽³¹⁾ the Administrator included a progress report on the operations of the Project Development Facility, which had been established on an experimental basis until the end of the third programming cycle (1982-1986) and subsequently extended. The Facility was financed from Special Programme Resources (SPR) and was reimbursed for the costs of missions when they led to a project financed from the IPF. If a project did not result from the use of the Facility, then the costs remained chargeable against SPR. The Administrator stated that the Facility had been widely used by many countries in all regions. It had been used intensively to identify and appraise complex projects, particularly in Asia, where some countries had used the mechanism for a relatively large number of missions. The Administrator noted that the Facility needed no further replenishment, as its experimental operation until the end of the cycle could be expected to continue on the basis of reimbursements, permitting the fielding of some 15 missions per quarter.

On 1 July,⁽³²⁾ the Governing Council asked the Administrator to include in the next review of the operations of the Facility detailed data on the selection and recruitment of consultants for field missions and statistics related to consultants.

Government execution

In response to a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽³³⁾ the Administrator submitted in March 1988 a report⁽³⁴⁾ summarizing the principal observations and findings of an evaluation report on government execution, which assessed the impact and cost-effectiveness of government-executed projects. With regard to programming responsibilities, the evaluation report recommended that UNDP should ensure that when programmes were formulated and reviewed, the usefulness of the modalities to be used to execute the programme were assessed; UNDP endorsed that recommendation. As to operational issues, greater focus was needed on the contribution of the modality to effectiveness and more evaluations and attention to the reasons for project success would promote that; UNDP concurred. In connection with accounting procedures, it was recommended that: UNDP payments by the field office that were not advanced to Governments should be recorded as expenditures on a component and/or budget line-item basis from monthly inter-office vouchers; direct payments by headquarters should be recorded as expenditures instead of as an advance; co-operating agency payments should be recorded as expenditures from their semi-annual reports; executing Governments should report only on funds actually advanced to them; and add-on funds should be credited to government-executed projects based on recorded expenditures and programmed accordingly. UNDP fully accepted those recommendations. The report also made recommendations regarding auditing of government-executed projects, which would require administration of the audit process by UNDP staff; the Administrator concurred.

On 1 July,⁽³⁵⁾ the Council encouraged Governments to continue to expand government execution and urged the Administrator to renew his efforts to involve the executing agencies in the use of that modality. It took note of the recommendations on programming responsibilities and operational issues and approved those on accounting, auditing and reporting procedures. The Administrator was asked to implement those procedures so that Governments could assume entire responsibility for the custody, use and reporting of financial outcomes of government-executed projects. He was also asked to ensure greater commitment to the allocation of add-on funds, including for accounting, reporting and auditing.

The Council invited the Administrator to present in 1990 specific proposals and recommendations for the implementation of a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁶⁾ which called for further support and flexibility to facilitate government execution, and to report on the impact of the revised accounting, reporting and auditing procedures both on UNDP's work-load and on Governments' commitment and capacity to assume responsibility for those procedures or to contribute to costs incurred by UNDP for that purpose, out of the add-on funds. The Council authorized the Administrator to continue, in 1989 and 1990, to charge additional staff resources approved in 1987⁽³³⁾ at the level of up to $400,000 per year to the support-costs line of UNDP, and to establish a small unit with two Professional staff plus supporting services, to administer and monitor audit requirements at a cost not exceeding $300,000 per year to the support-costs line in 1988, 1989 and 1990. The Administrator was asked to examine the use of add-on funds.

Agency accountability

In response to a 1987 Governing Council request,⁽³⁰⁾ the Administrator submitted in April 1988 a report on agency accountability,⁽³⁷⁾ which described management measures being undertaken by UNDP to improve project performance and accountability, reviewed the legal position regarding the application of penalty schemes and discussed options to be explored to ensure effective implementation of projects.

On 1 July,⁽³⁸⁾ the Council stated that it looked forward to receiving in 1989 a further report from the Administrator on his efforts and urged UNDP and its executing agencies to participate fully and collaborate in the exploration of the options put forward in his April report. It asked the Administrator to include in his 1989 report an explanation of his efforts to reach agreement on a standard basic agreement between UNDP and those executing agencies which had yet to sign one. The Council stressed the importance of the role of executing agencies in providing sectoral and subsectoral expertise as well as their role in project formulation and execution. It also stressed the importance of that expertise to the resident coordinator as a support to his function of ensuring coherence of the United Nations system's operational activities for development at the field level.

Evaluation

In March 1988,⁽³⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator described steps taken by him to improve evaluation policies and procedures introduced by UNDP. He reviewed evaluation activities undertaken in 1987 and proposed a work programme for 1988-1989. He also discussed integration of evaluation results into UNDP activities, system strengthening, strengthening Government evaluation capacity and external relations.

On 1 July,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Governing Council stressed that particular attention should be paid to enhancing the evaluation capacity of developing countries and asked the Administrator to review the staffing arrangements of the Central Evaluation Office and make proposals in 1989 within the framework of the 1990-1991 budget.

Procurement

In response to two 1987 Governing Council decisions,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on procurement of equipment and services from developing countries.⁽⁴²⁾ The first part of the report dealt with procurement statistics and steps to increase procurement from developing and underutilized major donor countries, while the second part dealt with the mandate, work programme, staffing and budget of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit (IAPSU) and its place in the structure of UNDP and the United Nations. The Administrator said that the future role of IAPSU should continue to be to serve as a focal point and co-ordinating centre for procurement matters, providing advice and direct support to United Nations agencies, lending institutions and, as appropriate, NGOs and bilateral aid organizations.

On 1 July,⁽⁴³⁾ the Council noted with concern the continuing difficulty experienced in obtaining adequate statistical information on procurement activities within the United Nations development system. It called on agencies to continue to provide to IAPSU full statistical information on their procurement activities and to co-operate fully with IAPSU with a view to enhancing the utility of that information. It reaffirmed that the overall objective and overriding concern of IAPSU should be the procurement of equipment at the lowest possible cost consistent with the maintenance of adequate standards. It also reaffirmed the need to achieve equitable geographical distribution of procurement through the increased use of supply sources from developing and underutilized donor countries. The Administrator was requested to urge the participating and executing agencies to observe and implement the preferential arrangements for developing countries. He was invited, in association with IAPSU, DTCD and other executing agencies of the United Nations system, to consider means by which information on procurement opportunities could be made more readily available to the headquarters of agencies, UNDP headquarters in New York and IAPSU at Geneva. The Administrator was also requested to report to the Council in 1989 on developments in the area of procurement by the United Nations development system, with particular emphasis on the need for greater access to information and transparency of activity.

Also on 1 July,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Council noted the increase in 1987 of procurement of goods and equipment from developing countries and recognized the efforts of IAPSU to promote such procurement, including the production of country-specific binders providing information on goods and equipment available to the United Nations development system. It called on IAPSU to continue to intensify assistance to developing countries wishing to increase their involvement in United Nations procurement activities and recognized that increased procurement from developing countries depended on action by all parties, including UNDP, United Nations funding and executing agencies and Governments. The Council authorized continuation of two temporary posts in IAPSU and decided to review the Unit's staffing in 1989 in the context of the 1990-1991 budget. It invited the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group to respond positively to invitations from developing countries when determining the venue of its annual meeting, thereby ensuring that those countries benefited from contact with agency procurement personnel.

Pre-investment activities

As requested by the Governing Council in 1982,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Administrator submitted his third biennial report on pre-investment activities.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The report described progress achieved by the Administrator in strengthening the pre-investment role of UNDP, with emphasis on the 1986-1987 biennium. During UNDP's third programming cycle (1982-1986), reported investment commitments from all sources of finance-domestic, multilateral, bilateral, whether public or private-resulting from UNDP-assisted pre-investment projects and investment-oriented projects increased from $6.6 billion in 1982 to $9.4 billion in 1986. Developing countries continued to lead the way as the major source of finance, with multilateral organizations coming second, followed by various bilateral sources. The principal source of reported investment commitments continued to be the public sector, but the share of private sources, from both developed and developing countries, was rising and grew from $350 million in 1982 to about $1.4 billion in 1986. Also during the third cycle, the number of development finance institutions with which UNDP had established special interest or co-operative arrangements rose from 7 to 10. The total of those investment commitments increased from $2.4 billion in 1982 to some $3.8 billion in 1986, with the World Bank consistently being the largest single source of follow-up finance, followed by the regional development banks.

The report described measures taken to stimulate UNDP's pre-investment function, special relationships with development finance institutions, co-operative arrangements with agencies, reimbursable aid arrangements, project development facilities and training in investment development. It concluded that to accomplish its goals of increasing pre-investment and improving linkages between UNDP-assisted pre-investment activities and follow-up investment from sources of finance, UNDP would have to focus on a more intensive application of its co-operative arrangements with development finance institutions and agencies of the United Nations system. UNDP would intensify its efforts to finance pre-investment studies, from both IPFs and resources available through the various facilities established for that purpose, and to link those studies with sources of finance. Emphasis would be placed on continuing UNDP training programmes in investment development, particularly those seminars held in collaboration with development finance institutions.

On 1 July,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Council noted its appreciation of the increase in the number of development finance institutions with which UNDP had established arrangements and the rise in investment commitment made by most of them. It encouraged the Administrator to seek an improvement in investment commitment from those institutions where there had been a decline. The Council commended the Administrator for initiating reimbursable aid mechanisms to finance pre-investment activities and for strengthening UNDP's links with the Caribbean and African Project Development Facilities. It encouraged him to continue to collaborate with international development and finance institutions in providing training in pre-investment studies and investment development techniques to the staff of UNDP and Governments of developing countries. The Administrator was asked to report whenever necessary on UNDP activities in the area.

NGO collaboration and grass-roots activities

In a March report,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Administrator described UNDP action in 1987 to involve grass-roots organizations and NGOs in UNDP-supported activities and its efforts to strengthen co-operation with NGOs through small-scale development activities.

On 1 July,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Council noted the initiative taken in establishing the Partners in Development Programme as part of plans to strengthen co-operation through support to small-scale grass-roots development activities undertaken by indigenous NGOs in recipient countries, and to strengthen the technical and managerial capabilities of those organizations, and requested the Administrator to report on the work of the Programme in 1989. It endorsed activities under way leading to the establishment of an Africa 2000 Network of African NGOs working to support communities in natural resources management, community forestry, food production and environmental protection activities; it also endorsed the setting up of a UNDP-administered trust fund for that purpose, to which Governments and organizations were invited to contribute. The Administrator was asked to take steps to strengthen the capacity of recipient Governments to work with NGOs by helping with data collection, facilitating dialogue, providing appropriate institutional support and involving NGOs in programme and project design. He was also asked to examine ways of simplifying procedures and practices to facilitate collaboration with grass-roots groups and NGOs. The Council urged the Administrator to continue measures, including training, to strengthen UNDP staff capabilities to support co-operation with NGOs and grass-roots organizations. It requested him to report in 1989 on measures taken.

Financing

In his review of the financial situation in 1988,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Administrator stated that, as a result of the surplus of main programme income over expenditure, the balance of UNDP general resources increased from $532.2 million at 31 December 1987 to $581.6 million at 31 December 1988. Income from voluntary contributions totalled $936.1 million. After applying the accounting linkage for local office costs, income amounted to $931 million ($18 million lower than forecast). That resulted primarily from one Government not paying its pledge in 1988. Most Member States paid in full, with over 97 per cent of pledges for 1988 paid during the year. Fluctuations in exchange rates in 1988 impacted on UNDP resources in two ways: the value of pledges made in national currencies, in dollar terms, decreased by $23.5 million between 31 December 1987 and the date paid; and the value of assets held by UNDP in various currencies, including transactional gains or losses on exchange, decreased, in dollar terms, by $10.5 million. The Administrator reported that, for the third year in a row, there was a substantial increase in the dollar value of pledges made to UNDP. Even with the reduced level of pledges in 1988 resulting from exchange rate fluctuations, pledges for 1988 were 9.8 per cent higher than for 1987.

Field programme expenditures in 1988 totalled $832.5 million, of which $678 million represented expenditures against IPFs (including $1 million in respect of add-on funds), $109.2 million against cost-sharing and $45.3 million against supplementary programmes in the UNDP account. IPF expenditure of $678 million represented an increase of almost 15 per cent over 1987.

In his annual report,⁽¹⁾ the Administrator noted that 1988 was another record year for income received, with total income of $1,209 million. The amount comprised contributions to UNDP's main programme, all cost-sharing arrangements and UNDP-administered funds.

Total expenditures from UNDP central resources amounted to $1,109.4 million, of which $832.5 million was spent on field programme activities, $99.8 million on agency support costs, $172.3 million on UNDP administrative and programme support costs and $5.6 million on sectoral support and other field-level costs.

Through its 112 field offices serving in 152 countries and territories, UNDP offered Governments and their other development partners numerous services extending beyond its central responsibilities. Field offices continued to play a central role in catalysing linkages to obtain parallel financing; figures reported by 42 UNDP field offices indicated that at least $249 million in parallel financing could be attributed directly to UNDP-assisted activities during 1988. Field offices also continued to support non-UNDP-financed projects through UNDP's field infrastructure. In 1988, 80 offices reported assistance in implementing 1,364 non-UNDP-financed projects with total expenditures of $364 million. UNDP also assisted recipients of World Bank loans by placing at their disposal its field-based delivery system to support implementation of Bank-financed technical co-operation projects. Those management services were also available to recipients of bilateral assistance. The value of management services agreements signed in 1988, excluding IFAD, amounted to $45.6 million.

Investment commitments related to UNDP-assisted projects amounted to an estimated $9.2 billion in 1988, a decline of 12 per cent from 1987. The World Bank Group provided $3.8 billion or 41 per cent of those investment commitments in 1988 compared with 23 per cent in 1987. Developing countries provided $2.9 billion, a substantial drop from the $5.2 billion reported in 1987. Investment commitments from bilateral sources totalled $1.7 billion, a 30 per cent increase over 1987. As in previous years, the public sector was the principal source of reported investment commitments in 1988, with $8 billion contributed—87 per cent of those funds. The private sector commitment was $1.2 billion, $1 billion greater than in 1987.

In 1988, project expenditures by the Office for Project Services (OPS) reached over $200 million, a 29 per cent increase over 1987. Levels of expenditures increased for all sources of funds, with the largest amount, $79.5 million, disbursed under projects financed from UNDP core funds, an increase of 25 per cent over 1987. Management services constituted 31 per cent of the OPS projects budget, with disbursements of $67.5 million in 1988, a 32 per cent increase over the previous year.

The audited financial statements of UNDP for 1988⁽⁵¹⁾ showed that the total of unexpended UNDP resources increased from $723 million in 1987 to $776.7 million as at 31 December 1988.

Contributions. The audited financial statements for 1988⁽⁵²⁾ showed that total income from contributions to the UNDP account was $1,070.8 million. That included contributions from Governments and other sources as follows: voluntary contributions, $931 million ($936.1 million, less transfers to government local office costs of $5.1 million); voluntary contributions to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDC), $15.9 million; cost-sharing contributions, $115.1 million; and cash counterpart contributions for projects, $12.7 million. Exchange adjustments on the collection of contributions of $3.8 million were deducted to derive the total.

As at 31 December 1988, pledges made in 1988 to the UNDP account for use in 1989 amounted to $578.5 million; pledges for 1989 for SMF/LDC amounted to $6.7 million. The financial statements gave a breakdown of contributions by Governments in 1988 and of pledges for 1989.

In his annual report,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that during 1988 five major donor countries raised their contributions by 8 per cent or more in United States dollar terms. Among recipient donors, nine countries (Brazil, China, Colombia, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Thailand) each pledged more than $1 million. Pledges made by the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway and the United States maintained their positions among the top donors.

On 1 July,⁽²⁹⁾ the Governing Council reaffirmed its 1985 decision⁽²⁵⁾ whereby it had decided that for the purposes of forward planning an assumed average annual growth of total voluntary contributions of at least 8 per cent on a basis of the target of $700 million anticipated for 1986 should apply, and appealed to all contributors to increase their contributions in order to achieve that goal.

Mid-term review of resources

In accordance with a 1985 decision,⁽²⁵⁾ which provided for a mid-term review of resources for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), the Governing Council decided on 19 February 1988⁽³²⁾ to consider resources available and the outlook for the remainder of the cycle at its regular session later in the year. The Administrator was asked to report on programme delivery, implementation rates for the various parts of the programme and utilization of resources. He was also asked to provide an estimate of the resource outlook for the remainder of the cycle and make recommendations for using resources available, taking into account views expressed by Council members.

In a May report,⁽²⁸⁾ the Administrator gave an overview of the existing UNDP resource situation and an analysis of the variances with the resource scenario underlying fourth cycle programme allocations established in 1985.⁽²⁵⁾ The net effect of those variances (an increase in voluntary contributions and depreciation of the United States dollar versus many other currencies) was that UNDP was likely to hold at the end of 1988 resources available for programming of $549 million, assuming the value of the dollar vis-à-vis other currencies remained more or less constant. That projected balance compared with an originally foreseen amount of some $10 million for the end of 1988. The amount available at the end of 1987 was some $455 million.

The Administrator presented a revised resource scenario for the fourth programming cycle as a whole, which indicated that $600 million would be available for new programme allocations. He proposed that part of the additional resources be set aside for an increase of SPR (see below) and that the remainder, and major part, be used for an increase in IPFs (see above). The Administrator recommended that an increase in the operational reserve should be deferred.
