Operational activities

(d) The Council shall recommend to the General Assembly overall priorities and policy guidelines for operational activities for development undertaken by the United Nations system: for that purpose:

- (i) The Council, as part of its co-ordination functions, shall define, as and when necessary, overall priorities and specific activities for the organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, so that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system are carried out in a coherent and effective manner;
- (ii) The Council shall deal, each year, with a limited number of policy co-ordination issues, including those identified in General Assembly resolution 42/196 of 11 December 1987; the executive heads of the organizations concerned should be invited to participate actively in such discussions;
- (iii) Once every three years the Council shall conduct a comprehensive policy review of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, which shall be one of its major policy themes and shall be undertaken in connection with the triennial policy review of operational activities carried out by the General Assembly;
- (iv) The Council shall monitor the follow-up to its recommendations; organizations of the United Nations system should report to the Council on progress made in the implementation of those recommendations;

Co-ordination

(e) The Council shall carry out its functions of co-ordinating the activities of the United Nations system in the economic, social and related fields as an integral part of its work: to this effect:

- (i) Co-ordination instruments, such as cross-organizational reports, the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and reports of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and its subsidiary bodies, should be rationalized in order to enable the Council to carry out its co-ordination functions in an effective manner, based on the measures contained in the present resolution; the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should assist the Council in this regard and submit specific proposals thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1989;
- (ii) The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, through its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities), and the Joint Consultative Group on Policy should prepare suggestions to assist the Council in fulfilling its central co-ordinating role in the field of operational activities for development and should submit them to the Council at its second regular session of 1989;
- (iii) The Council shall consider the activities and programmes of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in order to ensure, through consultation with and recommendations to the agencies, that the activities and programmes of the United Nations and its agencies are compatible and mutually complementary, and shall recommend to the General Assembly relative priorities for the activities of the United Nations system in the economic and social fields; for that purpose, cross-organizational programme analyses shall be discontinued in their present form and be replaced by brief analyses on major issues in the medium-term plan, as referred to in subparagraph (a) (ii) above, to be considered directly by the Council; immediately after the General Assembly adopts the next medium-term plan, the Secretary-General should submit to the Council draft proposals on a multi-year programme for such analyses;

- (iv) In considering the question of regional co-operation, the Council shall concentrate on the policy review and co-ordination of activities, particularly with respect to issues of common interest to all regions and matters relating to interregional co-operation;

Working methods and organization of work

(f) In formulating its biennial programme of work, the Council shall, to the extent possible, consolidate similar or closely related issues under a single agenda item, in order to consider and take action on them in an integrated manner; the Council shall pay particular attention to bringing the economic and the social activities of the United Nations system closer together; to this effect:

- (i) In proposing future calendars of conferences, the Secretary-General should ensure that meetings of the subsidiary bodies of the Council will end at least eight weeks before the session of the Council at which their reports are to be considered; the Committee on Conferences should be requested to act accordingly;
- (ii) The Council shall further continue to consider the biennialization of the sessions of its subsidiary bodies and items on its own agenda and programme of work, taking into account the need for a balance between economic and social issues;
- (iii) The Secretariat shall prepare for the Council, on the basis of reports submitted by the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, issue-oriented consolidated reports on economic, social and related questions that the Council will consider under the consolidated agenda items;
- (iv) All reports submitted to the Council should be prefaced by an analytical executive summary that highlights the main issues addressed and the recommendations made in the report;
- (v) The six-week rule for the circulation of substantive reports of the Secretariat and the eight-week rule for the annotated agenda of the Council should be strictly observed;
- (vi) The Council shall report to the General Assembly on the outcome of its work in a manner that will enable the Assembly, in its Main Committees, to consider the recommendations made by the Council in an integrated manner;

(vii) The Council shall review all relevant documentation prepared for the consideration of questions in the economic, social and related fields;

(g) The Secretary-General, in the context of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213, should submit to the Council, at its second regular session of 1989, proposals on the structure and composition of a separate and identifiable secretariat support structure for the Council, which would undertake the substantive functions and technical servicing that will be required to implement subparagraphs (b) (i), (b) (ii), (e) (iii) and (f) (iii) above;

(h) To achieve better and more effective co-ordination of the economic, social and related activities of the United Nations system, including operational activities for development, the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation should be strengthened; in this context, the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 32/197 and 33/202, including those concerning improved policy planning, should be fully implemented;

(i) In the recruitment of staff for the United Nations Secretariat in the economic and social fields, due consideration should be given to the principle of equitable geographical representation;

(j) The Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Council shall henceforth focus on:

(i) Operational activities for development of the United Nations system and system-wide co-ordination of those activities;

(ii) Programme questions;

(iii) Co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations and the United Nations system;

(k) The Council shall elect its President and Bureau early in the calendar year, prior to the organizational session of the Council;

(l) Prior to the organizational session, the President, with the co-operation of the other members of the Bureau, should arrange for consultations with members of the Council on the draft programme of work and provisional agenda prepared by the Secretary-General and on the allocation of agenda items and make proposals thereon for consideration by the Council; the duration of the organizational session of the Council could consequently be shortened;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 on the feasibility and comparative costs of holding at the United Nations, with the present in-session arrangements, one consolidated or two regular sessions of the Council;

4. Decides to include an item entitled "Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council" in the provisional agenda for its second regular session of 1989 and to consider under that item a report of the Secretary-General on progress in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 on the progress made in the implementation of the relevant paragraphs of the present resolution and on proposals for incorporating in the biennial programme of work of the Council measures to implement the present resolution;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to enable the Council to continue discussions on how its work can be enhanced so as to make it more responsive to the challenge of development in the coming years, to submit to the Council at its second regular session of 1989 a note on:

(a) The functioning of the Council and its subsidiary bodies in relation to the relevant chapters of the medium-term plan, using the following categories: (i) policy formulation, co-ordination and monitoring, (ii) operations and implementation, (iii) technical support;

(b) The mandates of the bodies established to assist the Council in carrying out its functions, listed according to the same three categories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 43/432 of 20 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution on its revitalization.

A note by the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in October(9) reproduced the text of a draft resolution entitled "Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system". On 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 43/433, decided to consider the draft resolution at its forty-fifth (1990) session.

Other organizational matters

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met twice in 1988: in New York on 3 May(10) and at Geneva on 6 July.(11) At both meetings, it heard requests from NGOs with consultative status to address the Economic and Social Council or its committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. In May, the Committee recommended that five NGOs be heard by the Council or its committees, and in July, that three NGOs be heard.

In 1988, the number of NGOs in consultative status with the Council remained at 827.(12) They were divided into three groups: category I—organizations representative of major population segments in a large number of countries, involved with the economic and social life of the areas they represented; category II—international organizations having special competence in a few of the Council's areas of activity; and organizations on the Roster—considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the Council's work.

Intergovernmental organizations

During 1988, 31 intergovernmental organizations were designated by the Economic and Social Council under rule 79^a of the rules of procedure for participation in the Council's deliberations on questions within the scope of their activities. Of these, 24 were participating on a continuing basis and seven on an ad hoc basis.(13)

Work programme for 1988-1989

At its 1988 organizational session, held in New York from 2 to 5 February and on 3 March, the Economic and Social Council considered its draft basic programme of work for 1988 and 1989 as submitted by the Secretary-General.(14) On the basis of the draft, the Council on 5 February adopted decision 1988/101.

By section I of the decision, the Council approved the list of items for consideration in 1988—15 items at the first regular session and 20 at the second regular session—and allocated the items to be considered at the first session to its sessional committees and plenary meetings. It requested its Bureau, in organizing the programme of work of the first regular session, to take into account also the programme of work of the Council's Special Commission on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, and to submit proposals on the organization of work of its second regular session, including arrangements for consideration of the item on international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system. The Council further decided to give priority consideration at its second regular session to the question of multilateral responses to structural imbalances in the world economy and their impact on developing countries, and to undertake an in-depth review of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements.

With regard to the reports of the Council of the United Nations University, the World Food Council and the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, the Council decided to consider only specific recommendations requiring its action or relating to the co-ordination aspects of the work covered, and not to consider the part of the report of the UNDP Governing Council dealing with the United Nations Population Fund, except for recommendations requiring Council action.

Under the item on regional co-operation, the Council decided to consider the question of inter-regional co-operation in transport problems. It would also consider the report of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the second part of its thirty-fourth session, but authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the Board's report on the first part of its thirty-fifth session directly to the General Assembly. The Council decided to review its recurrent and other documentation to determine whether any document had become redundant, lost its usefulness, or could be issued at less frequent intervals. The Council reiterated the request to its subsidiary bodies to review their recurrent publications and to discontinue those no longer serving a useful purpose.

Acting on a note by the Secretary-General,(15) the Council deferred consideration of the report of the Secretary-General and the Director-General of UNESCO on the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997) until its 1989 second regular session and recommended that the Assembly do likewise. It transmitted to the Special Commission on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields a draft resolution entitled "Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system".

By section II of the decision, the Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in its 1989 work programme.

The Council held its first regular session in New York from 3 to 27 May, its second regular session at Geneva from 6 to 29 July, and its resumed second regular session in New York on 17 October, convened pursuant to decision 1988/183 of 29 July. The Council's Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights met during the organizational session. The First (Economic) and Second (Social) Committees met during the first session and the First and the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees met during the second session.

Agenda of 1988 sessions

On 2 February 1988, the Economic and Social Council adopted a five-item annotated agenda for its organizational session. (16) The agenda for the first regular session, as annotated,(17) was adopted on 3 May and listed the items approved by the Council in decision 1988/101, with the addition of a question on the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa under agenda item 1 (Adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters).

By decision 1988/151 of 27 May, the Council approved the draft provisional agenda and the draft programme of work for its second regular session,(18) as orally revised. It deferred until its second regular session consideration of the draft decision on international co-operation to integrate women in development,(19) allocating it under item

^aRule 79 of the Council's rules of procedure states: "Representatives of intergovernmental organizations accorded permanent observer status by the General Assembly and of other intergovernmental organizations designated on an ad hoc or a continuing basis by the Council on the recommendation of the Bureau, may participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of the activities of the organizations."

1 of the provisional agenda, on adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters. By the same decision, draft resolutions on a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women: equality, development and peace, and on system-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate women in development⁽²⁰⁾ were to be considered at the second session under item 17 of the provisional agenda, on international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system.

By decision 1988/152, the Council on 6 July adopted the agenda of its second session and approved the organization of work for the session.⁽²¹⁾ It decided to transmit the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the 1988 General Assembly session, and to consider in plenary meeting the question of the draft introduction to the next medium-term plan. In addition, the Council on 8 July decided to devote one plenary meeting to a discussion of the economic aspects of women in development within the context of its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments.

For the agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.

Calendar of meetings

By decision 1988/103 of 5 February 1988, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽²²⁾ invited the Committee on Conferences to review the Council's draft biennial calendar of conferences and meetings, beginning with the calendar for 1990-1991, and to submit its recommendations to the Council (see PART SIX, Chapter III).

Limitation of documentation

On 8 April 1988,⁽²³⁾ the Secretariat reported on the status of preparation of documentation for the first regular session of the Economic and Social Council, and on 22 June⁽²⁴⁾ for the second regular session. The reports were submitted pursuant to 1979 Council resolutions⁽²⁵⁾ on the limitation of documentation and its circulation in all working languages six weeks in advance of the sessions of the Council and its subsidiary bodies.

The reports noted that, to allow adequate time for policy and other clearances and editing, documentation for the first session should have been submitted by 16 February and circulated by 22 March, and, for the second session, submitted by 20 April and circulated by 25 May. A table on the status of documentation, annexed to each report, showed the documents that failed to make the circulation dates. Explanations for the delays were to be provided by the offices concerned.

Financial implications of resolutions and decisions

In September 1988,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly revised estimates resulting from resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1988. The estimates of requirements for items other than conference-servicing amounted to $3,518,100 for the 1988-1989 biennium, of which $562,000 was expected to be provided from extrabudgetary resources and $2,373,000 from resources appropriated by the Assembly in 1987. The remaining $583,100 had been revised downward and an amount of $550,800 was being requested on a non-recurrent basis under budget sections 1 (overall policy-making, direction and co-ordination), 6B (Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs), 9 (United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations) and 19 (United Nations Centre for Human Settlements).

On 9 November,⁽²⁷⁾ the Fifth Committee approved by recorded vote additional appropriations of $53,000 under section 6B, $185,900 under section 9 (revised downward from $271,600), and $121,500 under section 19 (down from $127,500) of the 1988-1989 programme budget. The Fifth Committee also approved an appropriation of $10,900 under section 31 (staff assessment), to be offset by an increase in the same amount under income section 1.

Earlier, on 7 October,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Council that conference-servicing requirements were estimated at $5,471,100 for 1988-1989. On 17 October, the Council revised the requirements upward to $5,507,300. Also, on 17 October, the Council, by decision 1988/186, took note of the Secretary-General's report,⁽²⁸⁾ as orally revised.

Report for 1988

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session and two regular sessions in 1988 was summarized in its annual report to the General Assembly.⁽¹³⁾ Parts of the report were considered by the Assembly and others by its Second and Fifth Committees.

On 20, 21 and 22 December, respectively, the Assembly, by decisions 43/430, 43/449 and 43/456, took note of the Council's report. On 20 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly also took note of a number of documents relating to the report (decision 43/435).

Co-ordination in the UN system

ACC activities

In 1988, ACC considered issues related to the preparation and elaboration of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, including suggestions concerning the objectives of such a strategy, its scope and targets, as well as related long-term plans established within the United Nations system. ACC requested its Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives to review the ongoing work in the system on trends and problems relating to the 1990s, to identify any additional studies that were needed, and to suggest ways in which those studies could be prepared through co-operative efforts. In addition, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation convened a meeting of senior officials of United Nations organizations on 7 October to carry out further work in the area. Reviewing the work of its Task Force and the discussions at the meeting of senior officials, ACC decided that the work on long-term issues should be reviewed in order to enhance its complementarity.

Other related questions considered by ACC included debt and development, structural adjustment, sustainable and environmentally sound development, and operational activities for development. ACC agreed that greater co-operation among the relevant agencies of the system was needed with regard to analytical work in the field of debt and development.

The results of a High-level Meeting on Employment and Structural Adjustment, convened by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in November 1987 and attended by representatives of 20 Governments, 10 employer and 10 worker organizations, United Nations organizations, and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), were considered by ACC in April 1988. ACC welcomed the outcome of the Meeting, which concluded that successful adjustment policies required action at all levels of the economy and in international economic relations.

Ways to mitigate the negative social effects of adjustment policies were discussed by ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)) in April. The achievement of a stronger social consensus was described as an important condition for effective adjustment programmes. ACC called for increased collaboration among United Nations organizations in achieving social and political consensus by promoting greater public awareness, developing social indicators and monitoring impacts on living standards. The question of structural adjustment was again discussed by ACC in October, on the basis of a paper prepared by the World Bank and supplemented by the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

ACC emphasized the need to correct financial imbalances among the industrialized countries, since they had a negative impact on the international economic environment through, among other things, the perpetuation of high interest rates, the paucity of finance for development and protectionist measures.

Problems of co-ordination, particularly at the country level, were taken up by ACC. Consideration was given to the role and function of resident co-ordinators; programming of the operational activities of the United Nations system; co-operation with the World Bank; integration of food aid and emergency assistance into other development aid; and the flexibility, simplification and harmonization of procedures.

In the area of programmes, an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women was convened to review the decisions of the Commission on the Status of Women, immediately after its thirty-second session in March 1988. ACC also monitored support activities for the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), the International Literacy Year (1990), the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, and the co-ordination of activities in the field of disarmament. In December, a sixth ad hoc inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons discussed a mid-Decade review of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. Other ad hoc inter-agency meetings during the year dealt with international drug abuse control activities; system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes in the field of aging; co-operation in the area of demographic estimates and projections; and the prevention of crime and treatment of offenders.

ACC continued to keep under review family-related activities. The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) reviewed the follow-up action to the 1987 Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes. The ACC Sub-Committee on Nutrition examined a wide range of questions, including priority issues of nutrition in times of disaster, the United Nations programme to combat vitamin-A deficiency, the behavioural consequences of iron deficiency, uses of anthropometric measures in nutrition, and primary health care and the identification of nutrition issues for the year 2000. The ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities surveyed the work plans of the system's organizations, publication and dissemination policy, processing and dissemination of trade statistics, and ongoing statistical programmes. Other areas considered by ACC were the harmonization at the country level of activities in science and technology for development, rural development and water resources.

With respect to management and institutional policy issues, ACC reviewed the conditions of service of staff of the Professional and higher categories, conditions of service in the field, and the functioning of the International Civil Service Commission.

ACC also considered issues related to action in response to Assembly resolutions on the policies of apartheid of South Africa, co-ordination of outer space activities, co-operation within the United Nations system in the field of archives, public information activities and the co-ordination of information systems.

At the direction of ACC, its Organizational Committee continued to review the functioning of ACC machinery, its interaction with intergovernmental bodies and its contribution to the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council, based on the recommendations of the Council's Special Commission (see below).

ACC described the foregoing activities in its annual overview report for 1988.⁽¹⁾ It met during the year in a first regular session (Geneva, 20 and 21 April) and a second regular session (New York, 25 and 26 October), at which it adopted 31 decisions⁽²⁾ relating to the topics mentioned above and to ACC machinery.

ACC's principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (New York, 23 and 24 February, 10-12 October; Geneva, 11-13 and 22 April, 29 and 30 June); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Personnel and General Administrative Questions—PER) (sixty-eighth session, Rome, Italy, 29 February-18 March; sixty-ninth session, New York, 5-22 July); CCAQ(Financial and Budgetary Questions—FB) (sixty-eighth session, Rome, 7-11 March; sixty-ninth session, New York, 12-16 September); joint CCAQ(LPER)/(FB) meeting (Rome, 9 March); CCSQ(OPS) (first regular session, Geneva, 6-8 April; second regular session, New York, 21-23 September); CCSQ(Programme Matters) (PROG) (New York, 3-5 October).

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Ad hoc inter-agency meeting on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control, Vienna, 13 February, Geneva, 1-2 September; Sub-Committee on Nutrition, fourteenth session, Geneva, 22-26 February; Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, ninth session, New York, 7-10 March; informal inter-agency working group on youth at the technical level, Vienna, 8 and 9 March; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes in the field of aging, Vienna, 10 and 11 March; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women and development, Vienna, 24 and 25, 28 and 29 March; Joint United Nations Information Committee, fifteenth session, Geneva, 29-31 March; Task Force on Rural Development, sixteenth meeting, New York, 11-13 May; eight Inter-agency Consultation on the Follow-up to the Substantial-New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, Geneva, 16 and 17 May; ad hoc inter-agency working group on demographic estimates and projections, Geneva, 16-18 May; Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, twenty-second session, Geneva, 6-10 June; inter-agency meeting on the follow-up to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Vienna, 1 and 2 September; Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, sixteenth session, New York, 13-16 September; World Bank meeting on the implementation of Bank-funded projects, Washington, D.C., 19 and 20 September; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on outer space activities, Geneva, 3-5 October; Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, ninth session, Geneva, 17-21 October; sixth ad hoc inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, Vienna, 5-7 December.

Report for 1987

The ACC annual overview report for 1987⁽³⁾ was considered on 27 May 1988 by CPC,⁽⁴⁾ which noted improvements in the report's presentation. The Committee agreed on the need for greater efforts in following up ACC's recommendations and recommended that ACC keep its subsidiary machinery under review. CPC further noted that future annual overview reports would focus on a new critical analysis of such issues as improvements in co-ordination and of the problems faced by the United Nations system in carrying out its functions.

By decision 1988/167 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the ACC report.

CPC activities

In 1988, CPC met in New York, for an organizational meeting on 28 March and for its twenty-eighth session, from 2 May to 3 June for the first part and from 6 to 19 September for the second part.⁽⁴⁾ At its organizational meeting, the Committee decided to begin the session on 2 May instead of 25 April.

During the first part of the session, CPC considered a report by the Secretary-General on programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1986-1987⁽⁵⁾ and examined revised estimates of the 1988-1989 programme budget, including the Secretary-General's plans for implementing recommendations of the Group of 18,⁽⁶⁾ as requested by the General Assembly in a 1987 resolution.⁽⁷⁾ It discussed in that connection the Secretary-General's note⁽⁸⁾ on the use and operation of the contingency fund set up in 1986(9) to accommodate additional expenditures within the overall budget. In addition, it examined reports on the location of the functions related to liaison with NGOs and on measures relating to the priority assigned by the Secretary-General to the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990. The Committee also examined the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 (extended to 1991), setting out its conclusions and recommendations on the chapters covered.

CPC considered a number of other reports by the Secretary-General. They included: a second progress report on implementation of the 1986 General Assembly resolution approving the recommendations of the Group of 18 to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning;(9) in-depth evaluations of the programme on development issues and policies and the human settlements programme; a report on the application of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives; and progress reports on CPC recommendations regarding the work of the Department of Public Information and the drug control programme. Consideration of a report on mailing lists and registers maintained by the United Nations was deferred until CPC's 1989 session.

CPC also took note of the report of the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) on policies for distributing material through United Nations information centres and discussed, in addition to a follow-up report, three reports and a note by the Secretary-General dealing with cross-organizational programme analyses (see below). It gave its assessment of the 1987 ACC annual overview report and the 1988 work programme of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), also incorporating the nucleus of the JIU work programme for 1989-1990. A JIU report on monitoring, evaluation and management review components in reporting on the performance and results of United Nations programmes was referred to the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly.

During the second part of the session, CPC focused on the programme aspects as set forth in the outline of the proposed 1990-1991 programme budget, in line with reform measures called for in the 1986 General Assembly resolution.(9) It considered a note(10) by the Secretary-General on the draft introduction to the medium-term plan for the period starting in 1992, transmitted to CPC by Economic and Social Council decision 1988/168 of 27 July. Also before the Committee was the calendar of consultations on the medium-term plan. CPC further examined revised estimates for the public information section of the 1988-1989 programme budget and an in-depth evaluation of the major programme on political and Security Council affairs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1988, acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1988/62.

Report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-eighth session,

Recalling the provisions of Chapters IX and X of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, the role of the Economic and Social Council in co-ordination in the economic and social fields within the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the importance of the programming and co-ordinating functions carried out by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination,

Noting the importance of the additional responsibilities in the budgetary process assigned to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Recognizing that the medium-term plan should continue to serve as the principal policy directive of the United Nations and, inter alia, as a tool for co-ordination in the economic and social fields,

Recognizing also that programme performance reports, programme evaluations and cross-organizational programme analyses are significant instruments for promoting efficiency and integrating the programming and co-ordination processes,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-eighth session, and endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Authorizes the Committee, subject to established procedure, to resume its twenty-eighth session from 6 to 19 September 1988 in order to consider those pending items of the agenda indicated in the Committee's report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the documentation necessary for the Committee to complete its work is provided in good time.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/62

27 July 1988 Meeting 39 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1988/114) without vote, 19 July (meeting 10); draft by Trinidad and Tobago (E/1988/C.3/L.7), orally revised: agenda items 17 & 18.

Financial implications. A/43/16/Add.1.

By decision 1988/184 of 17 October, the Council endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of CPC on the introduction to the medium-term plan for the period beginning in 1992 and the calendar of consultations on the medium-term plan, as contained in the CPC report on its resumed twenty-eighth session.⁽⁴⁾

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

The twenty-third series of Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC was held at Geneva on 4 and 5 July.⁽¹¹⁾ The topic for consideration was the response of the United Nations system to development problems, with special attention to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990. As a basis for discussion, the Committees had before them a background paper prepared by ACC. Matters considered at the Meetings included: development as an integrated process; the alleviation of poverty; the social impact of structural adjustment; the need to strengthen infrastructure in developing countries and ensure that they benefit from technological advances; the development of early warning and forecasting systems; co-ordination of activities, especially at the country level; economic recovery and the development of human resources; and the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.

The framework of future Joint Meetings was also discussed. The Secretary-General, as ACC Chairman, suggested that the Meetings consider adopting a multi-year programme of work so that the necessary preparations could be made by members of both Committees; rescheduling the Meetings for October in New York in conjunction with the second regular session of ACC; and ensuring effective follow-up to the conclusions and recommendations of the Meetings.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, acting on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1988/64.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/50 of 28 July 1982, 1986/50 of 22 July 1986 and 1987/82 of 8 July 1987, as well as Chapters IX and X of the Charter of the United Nations,

Stressing the importance of periodic meetings between Member States and the executive heads of organizations of the United Nations system in promoting better understanding and co-ordination of the activities of the system in the economic and social fields and of the role of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in that regard,

Reiterating the need for further improvement in the functioning of the Joint Meetings, relating in particular to the timing, participation, agenda and follow-up,

Having considered the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twenty-third series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees, including the suggestions made concerning the functioning of the Joint Meetings, particularly those made by the Secretary-General of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twenty-third series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees, in particular the comments made on the timing, venue and conduct of the Joint Meetings;

2. Decides that, in future, the Joint Meetings should be held in New York in conjunction with the autumn session of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in order to facilitate the participation of the members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at a high level as well as the participation of the executive heads of the specialized agencies and United Nations programmes, and that the duration of the Meetings should be sufficient to allow for an adequate exchange of views among participants;

3. Decides also that the Joint Meetings should take the following measures relating to their work:

(a) Members of the two Committees should identify well in advance the specific issues for discussion under each topic and hold a concrete exchange of views, focusing on practical measures to solve the co-ordination problems identified;

(b) The background papers prepared by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination should include appropriate action-oriented proposals, so as to assist the Joint Meetings in achieving concrete results;

(c) Steps should be taken to ensure effective follow-up at the intergovernmental and intersecretariat levels of the conclusions and recommendations of the Joint Meetings;

4. Decides that appropriate measures for effective intergovernmental and intersecretariat follow-up of the conclusions and recommendations of the Joint Meetings should be reported, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session in the following year;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council at its organizational session for 1989 on the measures taken to implement the present resolution;

6. Decides to review the implementation of the present resolution at its second regular session of 1991 in the context of the study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/64

27 July 1988 Meeting 39 Adopted without vote

Cross-organizational programme analyses

In March 1988,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council on measures taken to implement the recom-

mentations of CPC concerning the cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) on economic and social research, pursuant to a Council resolution of 1986.(13) The measures were intended to improve the flow of information on research findings; to improve the effectiveness of research and its responsiveness to the needs of intergovernmental bodies; and to strengthen relationships between the organizations of the United Nations system, the United Nations University and United Nations institutes.

ACC'S consultative subsidiary body, CCSQ(PROG), reviewed follow-up to the COPA of economic and social research and policy analysis, based on the recommendations of CPC regarding co-ordination of research activities and future research planning within the United Nations system. It surveyed progress made in the preparation of the COPA on the system's activities related to the advancement of women, and considered the proposed scope and approach of a COPA on industrial development for submission to CPC. It also examined the provisions of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/77 to replace COPAs in their current form by brief analyses on major priority themes identified in the medium-term plan.

CPC also considered three reports by the Secretary-General dealing with other COPAs. One concerned a proposed analysis of industrial development; another provided the scope and approach of the COPA on United Nations activities related to the advancement of women; and the third was an analysis of environmental activities. A note presented a follow-up to a COPA on economic and social research in the United Nations system; another, a synoptic table on the implementation of CPC's recommendations regarding the analysis of human settlements activities. The Committee stressed the need for clarity, consistency and an absence of ambiguity in the definition and presentation of data included in COPAs, and requested that future analyses be prepared in a way that would enable CPC to reach clear conclusions and make precise recommendations.

Medium-term plans

In 1988, in response to a 1987 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,(14) ACC prepared a report on the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995, to be submitted to the Council through the Commission on the Status of Women. It also approved the preparation schedule for the plan for 1996-2001, the formulation of which was to be considered in 1992. Relevant sections of the 1988 report of the Commission on the Status of Women were before CPC for consideration at its first regular session. It also had before it proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989 extended to 1991, and the draft introduction to the medium-term plan for the period beginning in 1992.

Work programmes of General Assembly's Second and Third Committees

Second Committee

In 1988, a draft biennial programme of work for 1989-1990 for the General Assembly's Second Committee was before that Committee for consideration and approval. It was submitted in a Secretariat note in keeping with an Assembly practice established in 1984 to improve complementarity between the work of the Assembly and that of the Economic and Social Council.

By decision 43/448 of 20 December 1988, the Assembly, on the recommendation of its President, deferred consideration of the Second Committee's biennial programme of work for 1989-1990 to its resumed forty-third session.

Third Committee

In November 1988, the Third Committee had before it a note from the Secretariat⁽³⁾ transmitting a draft decision concerning its programme of work. Submitted in 1986 by Côte d'Ivoire, Morocco and Zaire, the draft had been deferred for consideration until 1987 and again until 1988.⁽⁴⁾

By decision 43/426 of 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee,⁽⁵⁾ deferred consideration of the draft until 1989.

As originally submitted, the draft would have had the Assembly decide to consider the following items every two years, beginning at its 1986 session: the question of aging; implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons; elimination of all forms of religious intolerance; human rights and scientific and technological developments; and alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms (with the exception of the question related to the right of development).

International decades

In April 1988, the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council on the guidelines for international decades. Submitted in response to a 1987 General Assembly request, the report⁽⁷⁾ provided recommendations concerning the selection of subjects for, and the timing of, international decades, requirements and procedures for proclaiming them, and review and appraisal of implementation of the programme of action for the decade. Annexed to the report was a list of international decades proclaimed by the General Assembly since 1961.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1988/63.

Guidelines for international decades

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980, in which it adopted guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

Noting General Assembly resolution 42/171 of 11 December 1987, in which the Assembly requested the Council to submit recommendations on guidelines for the designation of future international decades,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on guidelines for international decades, Recommends that the General Assembly adopt the guidelines for international decades contained in the annex to the present resolution on the understanding that these guidelines are not intended to apply to United Nations development decades.

ANNEX

Guidelines for international decades

A. Selection of subjects for and timing of international decades

1. The subject proposed for a decade should be consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as stated in the Charter. It should be of priority concern in the political, economic, social, cultural, humanitarian or human rights field, and should require long-term action at the international or regional level and at the national level. Action on the subject should contribute to the development of international co-operation or the strengthening of universal peace.

2. In areas where effective programmes already exist, international decades should be proclaimed only if they can be expected to produce results that would not otherwise be achieved.

3. As a rule, overlapping of decades should be avoided. A new international decade should be initiated only if it is clear that the United Nations system has the substantive, administrative and financial capacity to play an effective role in the implementation of a programme for the decade.

4. Before a new decade is proposed, consideration should be given to the possibility of an observance for a shorter period of time.

B. Requirements for the proclamation of international decades

5. Proposals for international decades should include a draft programme of action with well-defined objectives and activities to be carried out at the international, regional and national levels. The activities should be designed to lead to clearly identifiable results. The draft programme of action should indicate the proposed organizational arrangements and modalities for financing, from both budgetary and extrabudgetary sources, as well as procedures for monitoring implementation. Provision should also be made for public information activities.

6. The draft programme of action should indicate a lead agency or agencies for the decade and the mechanisms to be used for co-ordinating the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system, as well as those of the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

7. At the national level, the programme of action should provide for the establishment of national committees or other mechanisms to mobilize public support and carry out activities connected with the decade.

C. Procedures for the proclamation of international decades

8. Proposals for international decades should be submitted to the Economic and Social Council so that it may review the purpose and timing, drawing on the views of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and other intergovernmental bodies concerned.

9. The General Assembly should proclaim an international decade after the proposal has been thoroughly reviewed by the intergovernmental bodies concerned and the views of all Member States and of the non-governmental organizations concerned have been taken into account. For this purpose there should be an interval of two years between the introduction of the proposal in the Economic and Social Council and the proclamation of the decade by the General Assembly.

10. There should be sufficient time between the proclamation of the decade by the General Assembly and the start of the decade to allow for preparatory work at the international, regional and national levels.

11. When a second decade on a particular subject is proposed, the following should be taken into consideration:

(a) There should be a two-year preparatory period between the end of the first decade and the start of the second for drafting the programme of action for the second decade;

(b) Steps should be taken to ensure that the expertise and experience acquired during the first decade are retained, in order to ensure the prompt implementation of activities once a second decade is launched;

(c) The mid-term and end-term reviews of the first decade should be used as a baseline for the programme of action for the second decade;

(d) A second decade should be proclaimed only if the objectives of the first decade have not been fully attained and if there are good prospects for attaining them, particularly in cases where projects or programmes of the first decade have reached an advanced stage of implementation.

D. Review and appraisal of the implementation of the programme of action of the decade

12. The implementation of the programme of action of the decade should normally be reviewed by an appropriate intergovernmental body at the mid-point and end of the decade. When a world conference on the subject of an international decade is convened within the period of the decade, such a conference should serve, inter alia, as an instrument for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the programme of action of the decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 43/434 of 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, referred the issue to the Council for further consideration in 1989, with a view to enabling the Assembly at its forty-fourth (1989) session to consider and take the appropriate action on guidelines for international decades.

PART FOUR

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

Questions relating to decolonization

The subject of decolonization continued to be actively pursued by the United Nations throughout 1988, in particular by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries). The Committee examined the status of the implementation of the Declaration by international organizations as well as action by foreign economic and military interests to impede it.

The Committee examined other general decolonization questions and made recommendations on the situations in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see next chapter); Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III); and other Non-Self-Governing Territories, such as East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), New Caledonia and Western Sahara, as well as a number of small island Territories, mostly under the administration of the United Kingdom or the United States. The question of Puerto Rico was also considered.

The General Assembly requested the Committee to continue seeking means to implement the Declaration on independence for colonial countries (resolution 43/45) and reaffirmed that the United Nations system ought to contribute to its implementation (43/30).

The Assembly called for wider dissemination of information on decolonization (43/46) and requested administering Powers to continue transmitting information on their Territories to the Secretary-General as prescribed in the Charter of the United Nations (43/28). Those Powers were also urged to safeguard the right of colonial peoples to the natural resources of their Territories (43/29).

The Assembly condemned military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories as detrimental to the rights and interests of colonial peoples and called for an end to such activities (decision 43/410). States were again invited to make offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories (43/32).

The Economic and Social Council reaffirmed the need for United Nations assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories and their national liberation movements, deplored the collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with South Africa and called on the Fund to cease such operations (resolution 1988/53).

As recommended by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Assembly declared the period 1990-2000 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (43/47). It requested the Secretary-General to submit an action plan aimed at ushering in the twenty-first century in a world free from colonialism.

1960 Declaration on colonial countries

During 1988, the United Nations continued to focus its efforts on decolonizing Territories in implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁽¹⁾ As the main body dealing with the issue, the Committee on colonial countries considered various aspects of its implementation.

The Committee held two sessions in 1988, in New York-the first on 2 February, at which it considered organizational questions, and the second from 1 to 16 August.⁽²⁾ Its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance held meetings between 8 March and 27 May, and the Sub-Committee on Small Territories met between 9 March and 2 June. On their recommendations, the Committee took action on the implementation of the Declaration by international organizations, on the dissemination of information on decolonization and on reports on the Territories supplied by the administering Powers and by visiting missions of the Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration

On 22 November 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/45 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration,

Red&g all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 42/71 of 4 December 1987, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolution S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 on the question of Namibia and taking into account the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, and the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the Conference,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of Africans, particularly in Namibia, by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory, and its intransigent attitude towards all efforts being made to bring about an internationally acceptable solution to the situation obtaining in the Territory,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly in respect of Namibia where desperate attempts by South Africa to perpetuate its illegal occupation have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the people,

Strongly condemning the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, have continued to collaborate with the Government of South Africa in its domination of the people of Namibia,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration, particularly in Namibia, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the illegal occupying régime therefrom,

Conscious that the success of national liberation struggles and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the related work of the Special Committee and noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration, keenly of Ware of the pressing need of the newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Mindful that the year 1990 will mark the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations-including racism, apartheid, those activities of foreign economic and other interests contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the violations of the right to self-determination and basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories and continuous policies and practices to suppress legitimate national liberation movements-is incompatible with the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering the work during 1988, including the programme of work envisaged for 1989;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system within their respective spheres of competence, to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

8. Strongly condemns all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon the States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

9. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa until the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, has been restored, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories, to refrain from establishing new ones and not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia and, in respect of the other Territories, requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of visiting missions to those Territories whenever the Special Committee deems it appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in decolonization, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerns the oppressed people of Namibia;

(f) To prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, preparatory to the commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration in 1990 and in order to further enhance the process of decolonization, recommendations on appropriate programmes of activities to be undertaken by the United Nations, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the course of the commemorative year;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants and urges, in particular, those administering Powers which do not participate in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1989 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide or continue to provide to the newly independent and emerging States all possible assistance in the economic, social and other fields;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration by UN organizations

In response to a 1987 request by the General Assembly,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General invited 25 specialized agencies and other international organizations to submit information on their activities aimed at implementing the 1960 Declaration. He submitted a report in May 1988, with three later addenda,⁽⁴⁾ which summarized the responses received from 18 of the organizations.

The issue of implementation by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations was the subject of consultations between the President of the Economic and Social Council and the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries. In a report describing the consultations,⁽⁵⁾ held in response to a 1987 request by the Council,⁽⁶⁾ the two officers noted that several international agencies and organizations had continued to extend assistance in varying degrees to the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). However, they remarked that the assistance had been far from adequate in terms of the critical needs of the peoples concerned, particularly those in southern Africa. They considered it imperative that the organizations should intensify their assistance to those peoples.

The Committee on colonial countries considered the issue and adopted a resolution⁽⁷⁾ which was the basis of a draft forwarded to the Assembly for consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted by roll-call vote resolution 1988/53, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Having heard the statements made by the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the Vice-Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, in particular General Assembly resolution 42/75 of 4 December 1987 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/78 of 8 July 1987,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 and 42/14 of 6 November 1987 on the question of Namibia and 42/23 of 20 November 1987 on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa,

Deeply concerned that the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples have not been fully achieved as regards the peoples under colonial and alien domination, particularly those struggling in Namibia and South Africa under the repressive rule of the racist régime of Pretoria,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to assist in the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Noting with deep concern that South Africa continues to present a serious threat to international peace and security owing to its practice of apartheid, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its acts of aggression and destabilization against the front-line and neighbouring States,

Strongly condemning the continuing breach by South Africa of the obligations assumed by it under the Charter of the United Nations and its persistent non-compliance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the denial of full political and civil rights to the majority of the population of South Africa is the result of the continuation of a colonial situation in that country,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from the illegal occupation of their country by the racist minority régime of South Africa,

Appreciating that progress has been maintained in the extension of assistance to refugees from southern Africa through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Deeply concerned that the action taken thus far by the organizations concerned in the provision of assistance to the people of Namibia is still far from adequate to meet their urgent and growing needs,

Gravely concerned at the continued financial and other links of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to Namibia and the national liberation movement concerned, and commending the initiative taken by that organization in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movement in the formulation of assistance programmes,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council, and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system that have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the World Bank, the International Finance Corporation and the International Monetary Fund, to contribute to the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render increased assistance to the people of Namibia, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Council for Namibia, in particular in connection with the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in view of the deteriorating situation in South Africa and the acts of aggression and destabilization by the apartheid régime against States in the region, to increase their assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States and to the liberation movements in South Africa;

6. Also requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to take, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa until that Government restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

7. Further requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as will totally isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid;

8. Condemns the persistent non-compliance of the Government of South Africa with United Nations resolutions and decisions, in particular Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 containing the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, and declares illegal and null and void the installation on 17 June 1985 of a so-called interim government at Windhoek;

9. Deeply deplores the financial and other links of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently calls upon the Fund to put an end to such links;

10. Recommends once again that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures for co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

11. Notes with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the membership of various organizations within the United Nations system, and urges those that have not yet granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

12. Notes with satisfaction also the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions that enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in proceedings relating to matters concerning their countries, and calls upon those international institutions that have not yet done so to make such arrangements without delay, including arrangements to defray the cost of the participation of those representatives;

13. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

14. Urges the governing bodies of those specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of their regular sessions a separate item on the progress made and action to be taken by their organization in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

15. Also urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions;

16. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid to the present resolution and to the discussion on the subject at the second regular session of 1988 of the Economic and Social Council;

17. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue consultations on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and to report thereon to the Council;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution, with particular attention to co-ordination and integration arrangements for maximizing the efficiency of the assistance activities undertaken by various organizations of the United Nations system aimed at enabling the Namibian people to achieve their independence speedily, and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1989;

19. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 43/30.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Having considered the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, and the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, and its resolution 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, as well as all other relevant General Assembly resolutions, including in particular resolution 42/75 of 4 December 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 and 42/14 A to E of 6 November 1987 on the question of Namibia,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, the Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Luanda from 18 to 22 May 1987, and the final communiqué adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its ministerial meeting held in New York on 2 October 1987,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and of the resolution on the question of Namibia adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,

Aware that the struggle of the people of Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its crucial stage and has sharply intensified as a consequence of the stepped-up aggression of the illegal colonialist régime of Pretoria against the people of the Territory and the increased support rendered to that régime by its allies, coupled with efforts to deprive the Namibian people of their hard-won victories in the liberation struggle, and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community decisively to intensify concerted action in support of the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization, for the attainment of their goal,

Concerned that the policy of "constructive engagement" with the apartheid régime of South Africa and the "linkage", as well as economic and military collaboration maintained by certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries with Pretoria, have only encouraged and strengthened the racist régime in its continued illegal occupation and massive militarization and exploitation of Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the continued imperialist and neo-colonialist support for South Africa's oppressive and aggressive policies in Namibia and with respect to independent States in southern Africa, in particular the front-line States, as exemplified by the discussions and resolutions of the Security Council,

Conscious of the worsening of the situation in southern Africa because of South Africa's racist policies of oppression, aggression and occupation, which constitute a clear threat to world peace and security, and condemning the continuing breach by South Africa of the obligations assumed by it under the Charter of the United Nations and its persistent non-compliance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and of the peoples of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence.

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the people of the Territory through their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, still remain inadequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of the Namibian people,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Expressing its firm belief that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, on the one hand, and the Organization of African Unity and the South West Africa People's Organization, on the other, will help these agencies and organizations to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Recalling its resolution 42/14 C of 6 November 1987 in which it requested all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to grant full membership to Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, so that the Council may participate as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia in the work of those agencies and organizations,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance it has extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connection with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments of the front-line States for the steadfast support extended to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in their just and legitimate struggle for the attainment of freedom and independence despite increased armed attacks by the forces of the racist régime of South Africa, and aware of the particular needs of those Governments for assistance in that connection,

Noting the support given by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977,

Deploping the continued co-operation with and assistance rendered to South Africa by certain specialized agencies in the financial, economic, technical and other fields in contravention of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, thus enhancing neo-colonialist practices in the system of international relations,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance which is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute, within their spheres of competence, to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Reiterates its conviction that the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the Territory of Namibia by the racist régime of South Africa;

7. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold from the racist régime of South Africa any form of co-operation and assistance in the financial, economic, technical and other fields and to discontinue all support to that régime until the people of Namibia have exercised fully their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia and until the inhuman system of apartheid has been totally eradicated;

8. Regrets that the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund continue to maintain links with the racist regime of Pretoria, expresses the view that all links should be discontinued and, pending that action, calls upon those organizations not to extend any support or loans to that régime;

9. Urges once again the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution with a view, inter alia, to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

10. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples struggling for liberation from colonial rule, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

11. Requests once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States so as to enable them to achieve genuine economic independence;

12. Reiterates its recommendation that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements directly or, where appropriate, through the Organization of African Unity, and review and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

13. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings between the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures of co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

14. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

15. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the Governments of the front-line States in order to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity by the armed forces of the racist régime of South Africa directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet groups in the service of Pretoria;

16. Welcomes the establishment by the non-aligned countries of the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund and invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Fund in the common objective of providing emergency assistance to the front-line States and national liberation movements in southern Africa in their struggle against the apartheid régime;

17. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and organizations that have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

18. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to assist in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of colonial Territories, particularly in the development of their economies;

19. Draws the particular attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to Security Council resolution 566(1985) of 19 June 1985, in which the Council condemned the racist régime of South Africa for its installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia and declared that action to be illegal and null and void;

20. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

21. Draws the attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/118, in particular to those provisions calling upon the agencies and organizations to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and to their national liberation movements;

22. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the provisions of paragraph 13 above, to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity where appropriate, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

24. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

25. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on their implementation of the present resolution;

26. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

In 1988, the Committee on colonial countries continued to consider the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, which it said were obstructing the political independence of indigenous populations. It reaffirmed its concern about those activities and adopted a resolution(8) which became the basis of a draft it recommended to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 43/29 by recorded vote.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa
The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Taking into consideration the relevant chapters of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, and 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity that impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories is in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the depletive exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular in Namibia, in association with the occupying régime of South Africa, constitute a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the forty-second session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 7 October 1987, and the relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 25 to 28 May 1988,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the documents adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa and the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, and of the Luanda Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Luanda from 18 to 22 May 1987, and the final communiqué adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its ministerial meeting held in New York on 2 October 1987,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions on the subject and that they have failed to implement, in particular, the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 42/74 of 4 December 1987, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those Governments that had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests that continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in the case of Namibia, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support that the racist minority régime of South Africa continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests that are collaborating with the régime in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of the international Territory of Namibia, in the further entrenchment of its illegal racist domination over the Territory and in the strengthening of its system of apartheid,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western and other countries with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that régime with nuclear equipment and technology, enable it to develop nuclear and military capabilities and to become a nuclear Power, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable and incontestable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources, particularly the uranium deposits, as a result of their plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the Charter, of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, are considered to be illegal, that they contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime and are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia,

Recalling its endorsement of the decision by the United Nations Council for Namibia that, in the exercise of the Council's rights under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the Council would proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia, the outer limit of which would be 200 miles, and recalling also its statement that any action regarding the implementation of the Council's decision should be taken in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people,

Expressing its support for the initiation by the United Nations Council for Namibia of legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States against corporations or individuals involved in the exploitation, transport, processing or purchase of Namibia's natural resources, as part of the efforts of the Council to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,

Concerned about any foreign economic, financial and other activities which continue to deprive the indigenous populations of colonial Territories, including certain Territories in the Caribbean and the Pacific Ocean regions, of their rights over the wealth of their countries, where the inhabitants of those Territories continue to suffer from a loss of land ownership as a result of the failure of the administering Powers concerned to restrict the sale of land to foreigners, despite the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in South Africa and Namibia, and emphasizing the importance of action by local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, academic institutions, mass media, solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, in applying pressure on transnational corporations to refrain from any investment or activity in South Africa and Namibia, in encouraging a policy of systematic divestment of any financial or other interest in corporations doing business with South Africa and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with the occupation régime in Namibia,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the perpetuation of colonial domination and racial discrimination in the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories, particularly in Namibia, constitute a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Condemns the policies of Governments that continue to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the Territories. in particular, illegally exploiting Namibia's mineral and sea resources, violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and thus obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of those Territories;

6. Strongly condemns the collaboration of the Governments of certain Western and other countries with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon those and all other Governments concerned to refrain from supplying that régime, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

7. Strongly condemns the collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa of certain Western and other countries as well as transnational corporations that continue to make new investments in South Africa and supply the régime with armaments, nuclear technology and all other materials that are likely to buttress it and thus aggravate the threat to world peace;

8. Calls upon all States, in particular certain Western and other States, to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with that régime in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity;

9. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

10. Calls upon all States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any investments in Namibia or loans to the racist minority régime of South Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with that régime;

11. Requests all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the racist minority régime of South Africa, which uses such assistance to repress the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement;

12. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia, leading to the rapid depletion of such resources, in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people, for the creation in the Territory of an economic structure dependent essentially upon its mineral resources and for its illegal extension of the territorial sea and its proclamation of an economic zone off the coast of Namibia;

13. Reiterates that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are considered to be illegal under international law and declares that consequently South Africa and all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future legitimate Government of an independent Namibia, and recalls that the General Assembly called upon the United Nations Council for Namibia, in pursuance of the relevant provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, to continue to take the necessary steps to compile statistical information on the wealth illegally extracted from Namibia, with a view to assessing the extent of compensation eventually due to an independent Namibia;

14. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist régime of South Africa;

15. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of Namibia South African and other foreign economic interests, including the activities of those transnational corporations that are engaged in the exploitation and export of the Territory's uranium ores and other resources, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, are considered to be illegal, that they contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime and are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia;

16. Condemns the plunder of Namibian uranium and calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose nationals and corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit and prevent State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in uranium-prospecting activities in Namibia;

17. Requests the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which operate the Urenco uranium enrichment plant, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulates the activities of Urenco;

18. Reiterates its request to all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures, individually or collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the most recent of which being resolutions 42/14 A to E of 6 November 1987, and encourages those Governments that have recently taken certain unilateral sanction measures against the South African régime to take further measures;

19. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade co-operation with the racist minority regime of South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into any relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, that may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

20. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

21. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over their future development and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

22. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign economic interests and, in respect of Namibia, the support they render to the racist minority regime of South Africa;

24. Appeals to mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts to mobilize international public opinion against the policy of the apartheid régime of South Africa and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against that régime and for encouraging a policy of systematic and genuine divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa;

25. Decides to continue to monitor closely the situation in the remaining colonial Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples, at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories and at speeding their accession to independence and, in that connection, requests the administering Powers concerned to ensure that the peoples of the Territories under their administration are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

26. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Military activities in colonial countries

Pursuant to a 1987 request by the General Assembly,(10) the Committee on colonial countries continued in 1988 to consider military activities and bases in colonial countries. On 8 August, it approved a decision on the subject,⁽¹¹⁾ which became the basis for a draft recommendation to the Assembly. On 11 August,⁽¹²⁾ the Committee Chairman transmitted the decision to the Security Council, drawing attention to a paragraph in which the Committee urged the Council to make the arms embargo against South Africa more effective and comprehensive.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the General Assembly adopted decision 43/410 by recorded vote.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 59th plenary meeting, on 22 November 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples' and recalling its decision 42/417 of 4 December 1987 on the question, deplores the fact that the colonial Powers concerned have taken no steps to implement the request that the Assembly has repeatedly addressed to them, most recently in paragraph 10 of its resolution 42/71 of 4 December 1987, to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

"2. In recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, the General Assembly reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the populations of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration. Furthermore, aware of the presence of military bases and installations of the administering Powers concerned and other countries in those Territories, the Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration that are detrimental to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate immediately and unconditionally such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly, in particular with paragraph 9 of the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to Assembly resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly notes with serious concern that, in southern Africa in general, and in and around Namibia in particular, a critical situation continues to prevail as a result of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory and its inhuman repression of the people of South Africa. The racist régime has resorted to desperate measures in order to suppress by force the legitimate aspirations of those peoples and, in its escalating war against them and their national liberation movements, struggling for freedom, justice and independence, the régime has repeatedly committed acts of armed aggression against the neighbouring independent African States, Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe, which have caused extensive loss of human lives and destruction of the economic infrastructure. The Assembly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its utilization of the illegally occupied international Territory of Namibia as a springboard for perpetrating armed invasions, subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States, in particular Angola; and declares that the policy of aggression and destabilization pursued by Pretoria not only undermines the peace and stability of the southern African region but also constitutes a threat to international peace and security, and demands the cessation forthwith of all such acts of aggression.

"6. The General Assembly strongly condemns South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, its persistent acts of aggression and subversion against neighbouring African States, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, its forced recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people and carry out its attacks against independent African States, in particular the front-line States, its illegal use of Namibian territory for acts of aggression against independent African States and its forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes. The Assembly calls upon all States to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment, training, financing and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. It condemns the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain countries, which constitutes a violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, and which poses a threat to international peace and security. The Assembly urges that the Security Council consider, as a matter of urgency, the report of the Committee established under its resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and that it adopt further measures to widen the scope of resolution 418(1977) in order to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Assembly also calls for the scrupulous observance of Security Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 enjoining all States to refrain from importing armaments from South Africa. The Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of a series of resolutions adopted by the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia, as well as the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and a number of intergovernmental and regional organizations.

"7. The General Assembly demands the urgent dismantling of all military bases in the international Territory of Namibia and calls for the immediate cessation of the war of oppression waged by the racist minority regime against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative. Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to achieve their freedom and independence, the Assembly appeals to all States to render sustained and increased moral and political support, as well as assistance in all fields, to the South West Africa People's Organization to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia.

"8. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its infamous record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission while also posing a threat to all mankind. The Assembly condemns the continuing support to the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields. In this context, the Assembly expresses its concern at the grave consequences for international peace and security of the collaboration between the racist régime of South Africa and certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries in the military and nuclear fields. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such collaboration and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increases its nuclear capability.

"9. The General Assembly, noting that the militarization of Namibia and the regimentation of its people have led to forced conscription, to a greatly increasing flow of refugees and to a tragic disorganization of the family life of the Namibian people, strongly condemns the forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes and the introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians and declares that all measures by the illegal occupation régime to enforce military conscription in Namibia are null and void. In this connection, the Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the apartheid régime's oppressive policies in Namibia and South Africa to flee into the neighbouring States.

"10. The General Assembly, in recalling its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981 and S-1411 of 20 September 1986, by which it strongly urged States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally, strongly condemns the continuing collaboration of certain countries with the racist régime in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields. The Assembly expresses its conviction that continuing military collaboration strengthens the aggressive military machinery of the Pretoria régime and thus constitutes a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States. Furthermore, such collaboration is in contravention of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977), undermines international solidarity against the apartheid régime and helps to perpetuate that régime's illegal occupation of Namibia. The Assembly thus calls for the termination forthwith of all such collaboration.

"11. The General Assembly deprecates the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories for military installations. The large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources for this purpose diverts resources that could be more beneficially utilized in promoting the economic development of the Territories concerned and is thus contrary to the interests of their populations.

"12. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, an intensified campaign of publicity with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"13. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session."

Information dissemination

The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of dissemination of information on decolonization in August 1988.⁽²⁾ Among its speakers were representatives of liberation movements, namely, the South West Africa People's Organization, the National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania. It considered reports of the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance on its consultations with the United Nations Secretariat,⁽¹³⁾ non-governmental organizations (NGOs)⁽¹⁴⁾ and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and national liberation movements.⁽¹⁵⁾ It endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein with the understanding that the reservations expressed by members would be reflected in the record of the meeting.

Among those recommendations, the Committee requested the relevant United Nations departments to intensify publicity efforts regarding decolonization, to disseminate more widely information on the remaining colonial Territories, to counteract the hostile campaign by South Africa and some Western countries depicting national liberation movements as terrorist organizations, and to strengthen co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies. The Committee urged all States to increase their support to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa and their liberation movements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/46 by recorded vote.

Dissemination of information on decolonization The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 42/72 of 4 December 1987,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration and mindful of the continuing pressing need to take all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories in achieving self-determination, freedom and independence,

Noting with deep concern the increased measures of censorship imposed by the racist regime of South Africa upon the local and international media with respect to all aspects of the policies and practices of apartheid and developments in Namibia,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the Special Committee in enlisting the support of those organizations in that regard,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it incumbent upon the United Nations to continue to play an active role in the process of self-determination and independence and to intensify its efforts for the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with a view to the further mobilization of international public opinion in support of complete decolonization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series, and to select from them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full co-operation of the administering Powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the activities of all United Nations information centres;

(d) To maintain a close working relationship with the Organization of African Unity by holding periodic consultations and by systematically exchanging relevant information with that organization;

(e) To enlist, with the close co-operation of United Nations information centres, the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To continue to provide full press release coverage for all meetings of the Special Committee and its subsidiary bodies;

(g) To ensure the availability of the necessary facilities and services to that end;

(h) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, in particular the administering Powers, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

In resolution 43/29, the Assembly requested the United Nations Secretariat to inform world public opinion about the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign economic interests. In decision 43/410, it requested the Secretariat to inform world public opinion about the military activities in colonial Territories which were impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

Week of solidarity with the peoples of Namibia and other colonial Territories

In May 1988, a series of public information activities was undertaken by the United Nations Secretariat, assisted by United Nations information centres throughout the world, in observance of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as Those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights.⁽²⁾ Events included photo exhibitions, film screenings and briefings for NGOs. In a statement issued on 20 May, the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries reviewed developments regarding decolonization, particularly in southern Africa, and appealed to Member States and the United Nations system, as well as NGOs, to mobilize support for dependent peoples.

Role of NGOs

The Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance held consultations with a number of NGOs, which provided information on their particular areas of concern. In its conclusions and recommendations,⁽¹⁴⁾ adopted by the Committee on colonial countries on 1 August, the Sub-Committee stated that NGOs played an important role in decolonization, particularly by disseminating information and by assisting colonial peoples and their liberation movements. It encouraged NGOs to intensify their efforts in this regard.

The General Assembly, in resolution 43/46, requested the Secretary-General to publicize the work of the United Nations on decolonization and to enlist the support of NGOs in such dissemination.

International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

The Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Nicosia, Cyprus, 7-10 September) adopted a political statement containing a proposal that the General Assembly should declare the 1990-2000 period as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism. @) According to the statement, the Ministers agreed to suggest to the Assembly that it adopt an action plan aimed at inaugurating the twenty-first century with a world free from colonialism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

1. Declares the period 1990-2000 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism; ration⁽¹⁾ and expressed the hope that the people of Puerto Rico might exercise that right without hindrance. The text of the resolution was transmitted to the United States.

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a report that would enable the Assembly to consider and adopt an action plan aimed at ushering in the twenty-first century, a world free from colonialism.

Other general questions concerning NSGTs

Scholarships

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs.⁽²⁾ The report, covering the period from 1 September 1987 to 31 August 1988, listed the following 37 Member States as having over the years offered scholarships: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malta, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia. Information about these offers was included in the twenty-fifth edition of the handbook Study Abroad, published by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The scholarships were for study and training of university standard as well as for post-primary, technical and vocational training of immediate practical value.

In the period under review, 160 students, most of them not inhabitants of NSGTs, requested information and application forms from the United Nations. Applications from NSGTs were transmitted to the offering States and, for information, to the respective administering Power. Applications from Namibian students were referred to the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, as well as to offering Governments.

A number of countries reported to the Secretary-General on current scholarships and study awards granted to inhabitants of NSGTs. Cyprus offered a two-year scholarship every other year, Czechoslovakia offered 20 in 1989/90, Egypt granted 50 in 1988/89 and the German Democratic Republic provided five each year. The Federal Republic of Germany reported that 75 Namibians were currently studying there and a further 185 had been granted on-the-spot scholarships enabling them to study outside the Federal Republic. Malta offered training to 15 Namibian students in trade schools, Pakistan had offered seven scholarships in 1987/88, out of which five had been utilized, the Sudan would grant one scholarship in 1988/89 and Turkey awarded two to Namibians. The USSR provided education for 177 students from NSGTs, as well as training for over 200 specialists, and the United Kingdom had awarded 442 scholarships to students from British dependent Territories from 1985 to 1987 and intended to offer 73 new ones to Namibians during 1988/89.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 43/32 without vote.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/77 of 4 December 1987,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Information to the United Nations

States responsible for the administration of Territories which had not attained full self-government continued to be required, under Article 73 e of the United Nations Charter, to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General information on the Territories' economic, social and educational conditions. In 1987, the General Assembly had requested the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments.⁽³⁾ In a September 1988 report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had received information from administering countries with respect to the following NSGTs:

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General noted that Spain had informed him in 1976⁽⁵⁾ that it had terminated its presence in Western Sahara and considered itself exempt from any international responsibility in connection with that Territory's administration. On 15 March 1988,⁽⁶⁾ Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it had nothing to add to the information it had provided in 1979⁽⁷⁾ when it had stated that conditions in East Timor had prevented it from assuming its responsibilities for the Territory's administration.

The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of information from NSGTs and, on 3 August, adopted a resolution,⁽⁸⁾ which became the basis for a draft recommended to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 43/28.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Special Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 42/73 of 4 December 1987, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Stressing the importance of timely transmission by the administering Powers of adequate information under Article 73 e of the Charter, in particular in relation to the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers on the Territories concerned,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in connection with the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers for the Special Committee on the Territories concerned, to continue to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Visiting missions

The Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, as requested by the Committee in 1987, continued consultations with the administering Powers of NSGTs on the question of permitting access of visiting missions to the Territories. In a July 1988 report,⁽⁹⁾ he stated that New Zealand and the United States had reiterated their readiness to continue to provide all relevant information, to participate in the work of the Committee and to receive visiting missions. While noting that in the past the United Kingdom had permitted visiting missions to Territories under its administration, the Chairman appealed to it to reconsider its decision not to take part in the work of the Committee.

On 3 August, the Committee adopted a resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ in which it stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to colonial Territories and called on administering Powers concerned to continue to co-operate with the United Nations in that regard. It urged the United Kingdom to permit the access of visiting missions to Territories under its administration and to reconsider its decision not to participate in the Committee's work. The appeal was transmitted to the United Kingdom.

In resolution 43/45, the General Assembly called on administering Powers to co-operate with the Committee and to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants. It urged, in particular, those administering Powers which did not participate in the Committee's work to do so in 1989.

The Assembly also dealt with the topic in resolutions on individual Territories (see below).

Closure of the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), at its 1988 regular session, considered a report of the UNDP Administrator on trust funds established by him in 1987⁽¹⁾ and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions thereon,⁽²⁾ as well as a note by the Administrator containing his recommendation that the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples be closed.⁽³⁾ The Administrator reported that the resources of the Fund had been almost fully utilized and that no further contributions to it were expected. On 1 July,⁽⁴⁾ the Council agreed with his recommendation that the Fund be closed and that its unspent balance be transferred to UNDP general resources. It requested him to submit that proposal to the General Assembly.

The Assembly acted on the proposal on 20 December by adopting decision 43/446, thereby taking note of the Council's decision to close the Fund and to transfer the remaining balance of $900 to UNDP general resources.

Colonial Territories

The peaceful settlement of the dispute over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the conflict in Western Sahara, the questions of New Caledonia and East Timor, and the situation in a number of other small colonial Territories continued to be considered in 1988 by the Committee on colonial countries. Other United Nations bodies considered the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see next chapter) and Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

In a press communiqué of 11 February 1988, transmitted to the Secretary-General the next day,⁽¹⁾ Argentina noted the planned military exercise of British forces in the area of the Malvinas

Islands between 7 and 31 March and said that they showed the arbitrary attitude of the United Kingdom, which was particularly striking at a time when initiatives were being undertaken, through friendly countries, to achieve a relaxation of tension in the area. Responding on 25 February,⁽²⁾ the United Kingdom said that it was a routine reinforcement exercise. The reinforcement capability had enabled the United Kingdom to reduce its garrison in the Falkland Islands, thereby lowering tension in the region, and it remained committed to restoring more normal relations with Argentina while standing by its commitments to the islanders. On 3 March,⁽³⁾ Argentina said that the exercises, in addition to violating the sovereign right of Argentina over the islands, ran counter to relevant United Nations resolutions. Argentina would maintain vigilance during any military activities and, where necessary, put defence plans into operation.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

By a letter of 11 March,⁽⁴⁾ Argentina requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation created in the South Atlantic by the decision of the United Kingdom to conduct military manoeuvres. The Council met twice on 17 March.

Meeting numbers. SC 2800, 2801.

Addressing the Council, Argentina said that since the restoration of democracy in 1983, it had displayed its determination to seek a negotiated solution to its dispute with the United Kingdom over the Malvinas; however, the United Kingdom, by its show of force in the area, at a time when indirect contacts had been under way to improve the situation, was posing a threat to international peace. The United Kingdom had consistently refused to consider the matter of sovereignty.

In response, the United Kingdom said it was determined to prevent another catastrophe such as the 1982 invasion of the islands by over 10,000 Argentine troops. It chose to meet its obligation to safeguard the security of the people of the islands by maintaining the smallest possible garrison there while establishing the means to reinforce it rapidly. Since 1982 the United Kingdom had made clear that occasional reinforcement exercises would be necessary; the current one involved a small number of aircraft and fewer than 1,000 troops, which could hardly be considered a threat. Its forces in the Falkland Islands were there to defend the islands from attack, and over the past two years the reinforcement capability had allowed the United Kingdom to halve the number of troops it kept there.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question was considered by the Committee on colonial countries at its August session,⁽⁵⁾ during which it heard statements by Argentina, Cuba, two representatives of the Falkland Islands Legislative Council and one other petitioner. The United Kingdom, the administering Power, in conformity with its 1986 decision,⁽⁶⁾ did not participate.

The Committee, in a resolution of 11 August,⁽⁷⁾ reiterated that the way to end the special and particular colonial situation was through a negotiated settlement. It regretted that the implementation of the Assembly resolutions on the question had not started, urged the parties to resume negotiations and reiterated its support for the renewed good offices mission of the Secretary-General.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, responding to a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁾ submitted in November 1988 a report⁽⁹⁾ stating that, during 1988, he discussed the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on a number of occasions with the two parties and concluded that the positions of the two Governments remained substantially unchanged. Conditions had not therefore sufficiently evolved for him to carry out the Assembly's mandate. The United Kingdom remained committed to seeking more normal relations with Argentina while standing by its commitments to the Falkland Islanders; it had proposed setting aside the sovereignty issue because of the fundamentally opposed positions, while making progress on practical and beneficial matters, such as fisheries. Argentina expressed readiness to comply with the 1987 Assembly resolution and to initiate negotiations to resolve the differences between the two sides, including all questions concerning the future of the islands. While both parties had exercised restraint, the Secretary-General regretted that they had not entered into dialogue consistent with the 1987 resolution. He was all the more disappointed in view of the length of time that had elapsed since the 1982 conflict and the current trend towards seeking peaceful solutions to international disputes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/25 by recorded vote.

Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and having received the report of the Secretary-General,

Aware of the interest of the international community in the peaceful and definitive settlement by the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of all their differences, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the interest repeatedly expressed by both parties in normalizing their relations,

Convinced that such purpose would be facilitated by a global negotiation between both Governments that will allow them to rebuild mutual confidence on a solid basis and to resolve the pending problems, including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas),

1. Reiterates its request to the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to initiate negotiations with a view to finding the means to resolve peacefully and definitively the problems pending between both countries, including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

Western Sahara

The decolonization of Western Sahara and the right of its people to self-determination remained a concern of the United Nations in 1988.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

The Commission on Human Rights, on 22 February,⁽¹¹⁾ reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization and again requested the parties to the conflict, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO Front), to negotiate a cease-fire and create the necessary conditions for a referendum for self-determination. The Commission welcomed the efforts of the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU to promote a solution and decided to consider the situation in 1989 as a high-priority matter.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of Western Sahara at its August session⁽⁵⁾ during which it heard a statement by the POLISARIO Front, among others. The Committee had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat on political and military developments in the Territory.⁽¹²⁾ In November 1987, the Secretary-General had dispatched a technical mission to Western Sahara, headed by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship. In May 1988, the Secretary-General expressed his satisfaction at the restoration of diplomatic relations between Algeria and Morocco and hoped that the move would help his mission of good offices, with a view to achieving a solution to the Western Sahara conflict. The paper mentioned two major attacks by the "Saharan People's Liberation Army" against Moroccan soldiers, one on 18 November 1987 and the other in January 1988, killing several hundred.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 September, the Security Council considered the question of Western Sahara and heard a statement by the Secretary-General, who said that Morocco and the POLISARIO Front had accepted the peace proposals submitted by him and the OAU Chairman, aimed at promoting a just and definitive solution. The proposals offered a framework for bringing about a cease-fire and creating the conditions necessary for holding a credible referendum organized and supervised by the United Nations in co-operation with OAU (see below).

On the basis of the Secretary-General's report, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 621(1988).

The Security Council,

Having heard a report by the Secretary-General of the United Nations on his mission of good offices, pursued jointly with the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 40/50 of 2 December 1985, with a view to settling the question of Western Sahara,

Taking note of the agreement in principle given by the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro on 30 August 1988 to the joint proposals of the Secretary-

General and the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity,

Anxious to support these efforts with a view to the holding of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, organized and supervised by the United Nations in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative for Western Sahara;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to it as soon as possible a report on the holding of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara and on ways and means to ensure the organization and supervision of such a referendum by the United Nations in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity.

Security Council resolution 621(1988)

20 September 1988 Meeting 2826 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20193).

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹³⁾ reported in October 1988⁽¹⁴⁾ on the results of meetings he and the OAU Chairman had held between April and September 1988 with Morocco and the POLISARIO Front. The Secretary-General and the OAU Chairman were satisfied with the progress achieved as the two parties had agreed to their proposals for restoring peace in the region. Under the proposals, during a transition period between the beginning of the cease-fire and the results of the referendum, the Secretary-General's Special Representative would be the sole authority, particularly with regard to all questions pertaining to the referendum. He would be assisted by a support group comprising a civilian unit, a military unit and a security unit. A contingent of United Nations observers would verify the cessation of hostilities, the implementation of the cease-fire, the exchange of prisoners, the determining of the positions of the parties at the time of the cease-fire and the consigning of their troops to sites to be determined by the Special Representative. The proposals provided for Morocco gradually to reduce its troops in Western Sahara, with the remainder stationed at sites designated by the Special Representative. Similarly, POLISARIO troops would be stationed at sites also determined by the Special Representative and under United Nations surveillance.

The Secretary-General said he was currently working with the OAU Chairman to finalize details of the peace plan, and it was necessary to preserve the momentum of the process. Consequently, he had requested the Security Council to authorize him to proceed to the appointment of a Special Representative. After finalization of the plan, he would seek the Council's approval of the required number of observers and civilian and military personnel.

The Secretary-General estimated the total cost of the initial phase of implementing the peace plan at $687,900.⁽¹⁵⁾

Pursuant to Security Council resolution 621(1988), in December 1988 the Secretary-General appointed Hector Gros Espiel of Uruguay as his Special Representative for Western Sahara.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In October, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee heard two petitioners at their request⁽¹⁶⁾ representatives of the POLISARIO Front and the American Association of Jurists.

On 22 November, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/33 by recorded vote.

New Caledonia

In 1986,⁽¹⁷⁾ the General Assembly had determined that New Caledonia, a group of islands in the south-west Pacific Ocean, was an NSGT within the meaning of the United Nations Charter and affirmed the right of the people to self-determination and independence in accordance with the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries;⁽¹⁸⁾ however, France, the administering Power, did not consider New Caledonia an NSGT. It had organized a referendum on 13 September 1987 in which, it maintained, the people of the Territory had had the opportunity to express their views.⁽¹⁹⁾

France reported that the referendum had resulted in a vote in favour of remaining with France. According to a Secretariat working paper of August 1988,⁽²⁰⁾ a Statute of Autonomy for the Territory, approved by the Council of Ministers of France, was to come into force after the holding of elections on 24 April 1988. Despite some incidents of violence and a boycott by the Front de libération nationale kanak et socialiste (FLNKS), elections were held and won by the Rassemblement pour la Calédonie dans la République (RPCR). In May, France dispatched a mission to the Territory charged with the responsibility of presenting proposals for its future. Discussions were held with representatives of political parties and other officials and, as a result, the two sides accepted a set of proposals known as the Matignon Agreement.

The Agreement covered a wide range of arrangements for the governing of the Territory, including the following: after a one-year period of direct French administration, New Caledonia would be divided into three provinces, each with its own elected Assembly and Executive Council; matters of common concern would be dealt with by a territorial Congress consisting of the three provincial Assemblies and headed by the High Commissioner, who would be responsible for the overall administration of the Territory; France would be responsible for foreign trade, defence, maintenance of law and order, justice and secondary and higher education; the territorial Government would be responsible for co-ordination between France and local institutions, budget matters, infrastructure and primary education; and another referendum on self-determination would be held in 1998. Both FLNKS and RPCR endorsed the proposals conditionally. Discussions continued to be held between France and the parties concerned with a view to implementing the Agreement.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of New Caledonia at two meetings in August 1988.⁽⁵⁾ It had before it the Secretariat working paper (see above) and background information relating to the Territory prepared by the Evangelical Church of New Caledonia.⁽²¹⁾

On 10 August,⁽²²⁾ the Committee noted with satisfaction the dialogue initiated under the auspices of the French authorities on the status of the Territory and urged all parties involved to continue their dialogue and refrain from acts of violence. The text of the resolution, which was transmitted to France, was the basis of a draft recommended to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/34, as recommended by the Fourth Committee.

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Noting with satisfaction the dialogue initiated under the auspices of the French authorities on the status of the Territory,

Noting also that the French authorities were taking positive measures to promote political, economic and social development in New Caledonia to provide a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory to self-determination,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia;

2. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia, to continue their dialogue and to refrain from acts of violence;

3. Invites all the parties involved to continue promoting a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory to self-determination;

4. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth

General Assembly resolution 43/34

22 November 1988 Meeting 59 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/43/797 & Corr.1) without objection, 25 October (meeting 14); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/43/23); agenda item 18.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 4th Committee 7-14; plenary 59.

East Timor

Although the General Assembly by decision 43/402 of 23 September deferred consideration of the question of East Timor until 1989, it was taken up by the Committee on colonial countries in 1988. The Secretary-General continued his substantive high-level talks with Portugal—considered by the United Nations to be the legal administering Power—and Indonesia, which maintained that decolonization in East Timor was complete and that its people had chosen independence through integration with Indonesia.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries considered the East Timor question at four meetings between 1 and 12 August.⁽⁵⁾ It heard statements by Indonesia, Guinea-Bissau (on behalf also of Angola, Cape Verde, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe) and Portugal (as the administering Power). Additionally, it heard statements by representatives of the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente and NGOs. The Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper on political developments, the human rights situation and economic and social conditions.⁽²³⁾ The paper mentioned reports of an increase in the Indonesian military presence in the Territory during July 1987, bringing the total to some 13,000 to 15,000 troops.

In letters to the Committee Chairman of 11 April, 29 July and 5 August,⁽²⁴⁾ Indonesia reiterated its opposition to the appearance of petitioners to discuss East Timor, stating that the decolonization process there had been carried out in conformity with the provisions of the United Nations Charter and Assembly resolutions on decolonization, and that, since East Timor had been formally integrated into Indonesia in 1976, the Committee's consideration of the question would constitute interference in a sovereign State's internal affairs.

Other communications. On 15 March,⁽²⁵⁾ Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it had nothing to add to the information it had provided in 1979,⁽²⁶⁾ as required by Article 73 e of the Charter.

Indonesia and Portugal, in letters to the Assembly President, again expressed their differing opinions on East Timor. On 8 June,⁽²⁷⁾ in response to a statement that day to the fifteenth special session of the Assembly by the Portuguese President, Indonesia refuted the Portuguese call for negotiations to find a solution that was internationally acceptable. Portugal responded on 23 June,⁽²⁸⁾ reiterating the position taken by its President, stating its commitment to safeguard the right to self-determination and expressing support for the Secretary-General's efforts to hold consultations on the issue.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September progress report,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that during the preceding year he had held substantive talks on several occasions with officials of Indonesia and Portugal with a view to giving effect to a 1987 proposal for a visit by a Portuguese parliamentary delegation to East Timor in order to obtain first-hand information on the situation. The two parties agreed in principle to such a visit, subject to the elaboration of mutually acceptable terms of reference. They agreed further that the Permanent Representatives of the two countries should resume their contacts under the Secretary-General's auspices with a view to reaching agreement on the terms, modalities and timing of the proposed visit. The Secretary-General reported that humanitarian programmes were being carried out for the benefit of the East Timorese people. Under a programme for the repatriation of former Portuguese civil servants and their dependants, carried out through the International Committee of the Red Cross with funding from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, approximately 405 persons had been repatriated to Portugal. Repatriation of the remaining few cases was expected to be completed within a few months.

Further communication. In a letter of 25 October to the Secretary-General,⁽³⁰⁾ Portugal said that the planned visit on 1 and 2 November of the President of Indonesia to East Timor would have serious implications at a time when talks were under way on the terms of reference for a possible visit by Portuguese parliamentarians to East Timor.

St. Helena

The Committee on colonial countries, which considered a working paper by the Secretariat on developments concerning St. Helena,⁽⁴⁶⁾ discussed the question of the Territory on 1 August.

In November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote decision 43/413.

Question of St. Helena

At its 59th plenary meeting, on 22 November 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The Assembly urged the administering Power, in consultation with the Legislative Council and other representatives of the people of St. Helena, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory and, in that connection, reaffirmed the importance of promoting an awareness among the people of St. Helena of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination. The Assembly expressed the view that the administering Power should continue to implement infrastructure and community development projects aimed at improving the general welfare of the community and to encourage local initiative and enterprise. The Assembly, in view of the serious developments in South Africa, noted with concern the trade and transportation dependency of the Territory on South Africa. The Assembly reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering Power, together with any assistance that the international community might be able to provide, constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the Territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly, in that connection, welcomed the assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme and invited other organizations of the United Nations system to assist in the development of the Territory. The Assembly noted with deep concern the continued presence of military facilities on the dependency of Ascension Island and, in that regard, recalled all the United Nations resolutions and decisions concerning military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Assembly urged the administering Power to take all the necessary measures not to involve the Territory in any offensive acts or interference against neighbouring States by the racist régime of South Africa. The Assembly considered that the possibility of dispatching a United Nations visiting mission to St. Helena at an appropriate time should be kept under review, and requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of St. Helena at its next session and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Chapter II

International Trusteeship System

In 1988, the Trusteeship Council, on behalf of the Security Council, continued to supervise the one Trust Territory remaining under the International Trusteeship System—the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a strategic territory administered by the United States.

The Trusteeship Council held its fifty-fifth regular session in New York from 10 May to 19 July. It considered the Administering Authority's annual report, heard 15 petitioners and examined 41 written petitions and 10 communications regarding the Territory. Of its five members (China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States), China did not participate.

In May, the Council recommended that the United States, the Administering Authority, in consultation with the constitutional Government of Palau, complete the process of approval of the Compact of Free Association for Palau at the earliest possible date. The Council noted with satisfaction the assurances given by the Administering Authority that it would continue fulfilling its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations and the Trusteeship Agreement.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

Constitutional developments

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, designated as a strategic area and administered by the United States in accordance with the Trusteeship Agreement approved by the Security Council in 1947,⁽¹⁾ comprises three archipelagos of more than 2,100 islands and atolls (about 100 of which are inhabited) scattered over some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The Territory, collectively known as Micronesia, had 168,431 inhabitants in 1986. The Territory had four constitutional Governments—the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands and Palau—each, as a result of referendums, with its own popularly elected legislature and executive head.

The United States had signed in 1986⁽²⁾ legislation enacting the Compact of Free Association with the Marshall Islands and with the Federated States of Micronesia, which had entered into force the same year. Also in 1986, the Commonwealth Covenant with the Northern Mariana Islands had entered into force, and plebiscites were held in Palau to vote on the Compact of Free Association, under the observation of the Trusteeship Council.

On 31 March 1988,⁽³⁾ a legal challenge to the constitutional amendment approved by the people of Palau on 4 August 1987 by a 72 per cent majority was filed in Palau's Supreme Court, thereby reinstituting a lawsuit that had been withdrawn in September 1987. On 22 April, the Supreme Court of Palau ruled that, because there was no inconsistency between the Compact of Free Association and the Constitution of Palau, the Government of Palau could not amend the Constitution through use of its article relating to inconsistencies. However, as the law authorizing the 4 August 1987 referendum suffered from procedural deficiencies, its results, i.e., the approval on 21 August 1987 of the Compact by a 73 per cent majority, were therefore null and void.

With regard to this Supreme Court decision, the Administering Authority assured the Council that it was up to Palau's Government to resolve the internal questions concerning political status and that the United States was prepared to respect whatever decision was rendered by the people and their Government.

In accordance with a 1986 Trusteeship Council resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the United States continued to pursue the constitutional steps necessary to bring into force the Compact with Palau. On 28 March 1988, the United States Senate unanimously adopted legislation authorizing the entry into force of the Compact as soon as Palau had completed constitutional procedures to approve it. Similar legislation was also before the United States House of Representatives.

The United States informed the Council that the Office of the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands had been abolished as of 10 July 1987 and the remaining functions transferred to the Office of Territorial and International Affairs, Department of the Interior, except for some federal transitional and capital improvement programmes which were being carried out by the recently created Office of Transition at Saipan. The United States stated that, while it would welcome free association with Palau, such association could only come about after Palau had ratified the Compact in accordance with its own constitutional procedures.

On 27 May 1988, the Council recommended that the process of approval of the Compact be completed at the earliest possible date. In response, the Administering Authority stated that the United States Congress had considered legislation to implement the Compact. It added that the Palau Supreme Court's decision pronouncing the 1987 referendum null and void had clarified how the people of Palau could approve the Compact under their Constitution.

Conditions in the Territory

In a working paper submitted to the Trusteeship Council in May 1988,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretariat described conditions in the Trust Territory, covering political, economic, social and educational developments. The information was updated by a similar report issued a year later.⁽⁶⁾ In addition to describing constitutional developments and progress towards self-government (see above), the paper summarized the structure of the four constitutional Governments, each of which had a legislature, executive, state or municipal government and a civil service. Following the abolition of the Office of the High Commissioner in 1987, a residual Office of Transition with a staff of 10 to 15 was located in the Northern Mariana Islands to complete property transfers and programmes. Under the new status arrangements, the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia were "sovereign and self-governing" and the Northern Mariana Islands was "self-governing".

Funding for government operations in the Trust Territory was derived mainly from an annual grant provided by the Department of the Interior. The second and third largest sources of income were federal grants and locally collected revenues from taxation. For fiscal year 1988, the grant from the Administering Authority totalled $33 million and annual expenditures in the Territory amounted to $41 million. Local revenues totalled $8.2 million. The tight financial situation that existed was expected to be worked out satisfactorily, pending the long-term solution of the political status situation.

As regards war claims, the United States had appropriated $12.5 million in fiscal year 1988 for the Title I claims (damages sustained by the indigenous inhabitants during the Second World War) still pending, which represented 50 per cent of the total due. Payments were scheduled to begin in July on the basis of judgements rendered by the Micronesian Claims Commission in 1976.

Considerable development was made in the private sector economy, particularly in the area of tourism and marine resources.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

The Trusteeship Council held its fifty-fifth session in New York from 10 May to 19 July 1988. It had before it the annual report of the Administering Authority for the year ending 30 September 1987⁽⁷⁾ and a working paper prepared by the Secretariat.⁽⁵⁾ By a note of 2 May,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the report to the Security Council.

On 19 July, the Trusteeship Council adopted its report to the Security Council covering the period 17 December 1987 to 19 July 1988.⁽³⁾ In proposing that the process of approval of the Compact of Free Association for Palau be completed at the earliest possible date, the Council noted that the people of the Trust Territory, in exercise of their right to self-government, had elected to assume full responsibility for administration in the economic, social and educational fields. The Council considered that any difficulties over the interpretation of the new status agreements should be resolved bilaterally by the parties concerned in accordance with the procedures mutually agreed and laid down in the relevant new status agreements. It noted with satisfaction the assurances given by the Administering Authority that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities under the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries)⁽⁹⁾ considered the question of the Trust Territory on 1 August 1988 and adopted the conclusions and recommendations made by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories.⁽¹⁰⁾ In considering the question, the Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper on developments in the Territory.⁽¹¹⁾

The Committee reaffirmed the right of the people of the Territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Charter and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁽¹²⁾ It reiterated that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration. Noting the Administering Authority's intention to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement, the Committee urged that it be done in strict conformity with the Charter. Recognizing that it was ultimately for the Micronesians to decide their political destiny, the Committee called on the Administering Authority not to fragment the Territory or take any action against the wishes of its people; to ensure that the existence of military bases and installations did not hinder the Territory's people from exercising their right to self-determination; and not to involve the Territory in any offensive acts or interference against other States. The Committee urged the Authority to accelerate the resolution of the problem of unpaid war claims.

In transmitting the conclusions and recommendations to the President of the Security Council on 22 August,⁽¹³⁾ the Committee's Acting Chairman observed that the Security Council was empowered, under Article 83 of the Charter, to exercise all United Nations functions relating to strategic areas. Also on 22 August,⁽¹⁴⁾ the conclusions and recommendations were transmitted to the President of the Trusteeship Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

On 25 October, the Chairman of the General Assembly's Fourth Committee, following consultations with the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and with concerned delegations, suggested that no action be taken on a draft resolution recommended by the latter Committee. That suggestion was adopted without objection.⁽¹⁵⁾

Hearings

On 11 and 12 May, the Trusteeship Council heard 15 petitioners on various issues concerning conditions in, and the future status of, the Trust Territory.⁽³⁾ The Committee on colonial countries heard one petitioner on 1 August, while its Subcommittee on Small Territories heard three petitioners on 13 May.⁽⁹⁾

On 12 October, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee heard two petitioners. The United States expressed reservations about granting the hearings since, according to Article 83 of the Charter, functions relating to strategic areas such as the Trust Territory should be exercised exclusively by the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council. Similarly, Finland, on behalf of the five Nordic countries, said that granting the hearings did not mean that the Nordic countries accepted the view that the Assembly was entitled to deal with the matter.

Petitions and communications

On 18 and 23 May, the Trusteeship Council considered 41 written petitions and 10 communications. It decided to take note of those communications and included them in an annex to its report to the Security Council.⁽³⁾

Other aspects of the International Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

Under a scholarship programme launched by the General Assembly in 1952,⁽¹⁾ 11 Member States had in past years made scholarships available for students from Trust Territories: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, USSR, Yugoslavia. In a report to the Trusteeship Council covering the period from 12 May 1987 to 17 May 1988, (2) the Secretary-General stated that he had requested up-to-date information concerning scholarships made available under the programme and had received information only from the USSR, which said that no inhabitant from the Trust Territory was studying in the USSR in 1987/88.

Information dissemination

A report of the Secretary-General covering the period from 1 May 1987 to 30 April 1988⁽³⁾ described the distribution by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) of United Nations documents, official records and information materials, including taped radio programmes, throughout the Trust Territory. Those activities, primarily carried out through the United Nations Information Centre (UNIC) at Tokyo, were aimed at keeping the people of the Territory aware of United Nations activities, particularly with respect to the Trusteeship System.

Information material provided by DPI consisted of press releases in English and French dealing with the Trusteeship Council, and photo coverage of the proceedings of the Council. DPI also prepared for the UN Chronicle reports on the Council's deliberations and on the visiting missions to observe the plebiscites on the Compact of Free Association for Palau.⁽⁴⁾

In January, the Director of the UNIC at Tokyo visited the Territory and reported that there was a significant demand for information on the United Nations, particularly in relation to disarmament, control of nuclear weapons, law of the sea, and economic and social development.

In the Trusteeship Council, the USSR suggested that a central file of material disseminated in the Territory be compiled in order to enable the Council to assess its contents and quality and, in that regard, copies of relevant United Nations basic instruments not mentioned in the list should be made available to the Territory. The USSR noted the absence in the Secretary-General's report of details on the nature of the co-operation between DPI and the Administering Authority as regards dissemination of information, as well as the absence of an evaluation of the visit to the Territory by the Director of the UNIC at Tokyo.

The DPI representative responded that the creation within DPI of a new division for dissemination would permit more accurate and up-to-date monitoring of all material distributed on a subject-by-subject basis. Regarding the evaluation of the Director's visit, the Director had reported on the availability of relevant material in the Territory. The representative indicated that additional copies of information material would be supplied whenever necessary.

Co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries

At its 1988 session, the Trusteeship Council again considered together the question of the attainment of self-government and independence by the Trust Territory and co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries.

During the discussion in the Council, the USSR noted that despite the repeated requests of the Committee, the Administering Authority had refused to participate in its work and to provide it with necessary information. Moreover, in its reports and statements to the Council, the Authority had provided no information within the context of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁽⁵⁾ In the view of the USSR, the refusal of the Authority and the majority of members of the Council to co-operate with the General Assembly and the Committee were in contradiction with the 1960 Declaration and other United Nations decisions.

On 26 May,⁽⁶⁾ the Trusteeship Council drew the Security Council's attention to the proceedings of the Trusteeship Council concerning the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and to the statement made by the USSR.

Co-operation with CERD and the Decade against racial discrimination

In 1988, the Trusteeship Council again considered together the question of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) and the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993).

During the debate, the USSR stressed the importance of studying how the Programme of Action for the Second Decade was being implemented in the Territory, expressing the hope that the Administering Authority would submit relevant information for consideration at the current session and include such information in its future annual report, as well as in its report to CERD.

The United States said that, for all practical purposes, racism was non-existent in the Trust Territory and that allegations of human rights violations were untenable. The United Kingdom stated that from petitions and all documents received over the past years, as well as reports and statements of the Administering Authority, there was no evidence that racial discrimination or racism existed in the Territory.

On 26 May,⁽⁶⁾ the Council took note of the statements made by its members.

Chapter III

Namibia

Throughout 1988, the United Nations continued to work for the independence of Namibia, occupied by South Africa and the largest Territory remaining under colonial rule.

During the year, significant progress was made towards national independence and self-determination for Namibia, as Angola, Cuba and South Africa reached agreement in July on the principles for a peaceful settlement of conflicts in south-western Africa. The South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), for its part, agreed to comply with the cessation of all hostile acts.

This resulted in the Protocol of Brazzaville, in which Angola, Cuba and South Africa agreed to recommend to the Secretary-General that 1 April 1989 be established as the date for implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978), the United Nations plan for a peaceful settlement, and to meet in December in New York for signature of the tripartite agreement and for signature by Angola and Cuba of a bilateral agreement.

The Security Council, noting Angola's and Cuba's decision to redeploy and withdraw Cuban troops from Angola, on 20 December established, under its authority, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission for a period of 31 months. The actual signing of the bilateral agreement to redeploy and withdraw troops from Angola took place on 22 December. Also on 22 December, Angola, Cuba and South Africa signed the tripartite agreement, in which they requested the Secretary-General to seek authority from the Security Council to commence implementation of resolution 435(1978) on 1 April 1989. This agreement provided for the departure of South African military forces from Namibia, as provided for in the 1978 resolution, and the co-operation of South Africa and Angola with the Secretary-General to ensure the independence of Namibia through free and fair elections. The agreement further stressed the territorial integrity and inviolability of Namibia's borders and the need for all parties to refrain from the threat or use of force.

At its 1988 session, the General Assembly continued to pursue the objective of independence for Namibia and adopted live resolutions on the question, similar to those of previous years. The Assembly condemned South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, reiterated that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations until independence, and reaffirmed that SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and that Security Council resolution 435(1978) was the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement. South Africa was condemned for its imposition of a so-called interim government and for its utilization of Namibian territory as a springboard for armed invasions against neighbouring States, and the Security Council was urged to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa (resolution 43/26 A).

The Assembly demanded that South Africa comply fully and unconditionally with resolutions of the Security Council relating to Namibia, and rejected attempts to establish a linkage between the independence of Namibia and any extraneous issues (43/26 B). The Assembly approved the work programme of the United Nations Council for Namibia (43/26 C) and requested the Council to increase the dissemination of information supporting the cause of Namibia (43/26 D). It appealed for increased contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia, urged United Nations organizations to expedite the execution of projects in favour of Namibians, and decided to allocate $1.5 million from the regular United Nations budget to the Fund (43/26 E).

Various United Nations programmes continued to provide assistance to Namibians outside their country, financed primarily by voluntary contributions and administered by the United Nations Fund for Namibia. In 1988, the Fund spent more than $12.8 million for assistance to Namibia, with 35 States contributing nearly $8 million.

Namibia question

Activities of the UN Council for Namibia. During 1988, the United Nations Council for Namibia continued to carry out its mandate as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, to work to bring an end to the occupation of Namibia by South Africa and to protect the rights and interests of Namibia and its people.⁽¹⁾ Its report to the Assembly on the situation in Namibia and on its activities covered the period from 1 September 1987 to 31 August 1988,⁽²⁾ with later 1988 activities being detailed in its 1989 report.⁽³⁾ The Council participated in Security Council meetings on Namibia and took part in the proceedings of other United Nations bodies, in particular the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) and the Special Committee against Apartheid, and similarly invited those bodies to its own meetings and events.

The activities of the Council extended to the promotion of Namibia's interests in specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies and conferences where it represented Namibia. The Council co-operated closely with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries by taking part in their meetings.

In the course of the year, the Council was also represented at various meetings and conferences sponsored by other international organizations and conferences, including the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid Conference (Lusaka, Zambia, and Harare, Zimbabwe, 23-30 March), the Fifth National Conference of the National Alliance of Third World Journalists (Atlanta, United States, 21-24 April), the World Council of Churches Hearings on Namibia (Washington, D.C., 2-4 May), the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and People under Apartheid (Bamako, Mali, 7-14 November), and the Seventh Congress of the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization (New Delhi, India, 24-28 November).

Two seminars were held by the Council in 1988. The Seminar on the International Responsibility for Namibia's Independence (Istanbul, Turkey, 21-25 March), in adopting the Istanbul Declaration and Call for Action⁽⁴⁾ recommended urgent measures to be taken by non-governmental organizations (NGOs), parliamentarians and legislators, the media and the Council in support of the immediate independence of Namibia. It requested the Secretary-General to pursue his diplomatic initiatives for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978)⁽⁵⁾ and called, in particular, for the severance of all links with South Africa, for increased pressure on Governments that co-operated with it, for the intensification of peoples' and workers' sanctions, and for further steps to enforce Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.⁽⁶⁾ The Seminar on Efforts to Implement the United Nations Plan for the Independence of Namibia (Toronto, Canada, 7-11 September), in its final document,⁽⁷⁾ urged the international community to provide increased political and moral support, as well as material assistance, in order to enable SWAPO to lead effectively the struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national independence.

On 25 May, the Council attended activities commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of OAU. The Council commemorated Namibia Day on 26 August⁽⁸⁾ and, in accordance with a 1976 Assembly resolution,⁽⁹⁾ commemorated on 27 October the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and their Liberation Movement, SWAPO. In observance of that Week, the Council held two meetings; messages of solidarity were received from a number of heads of State or Government, Governments and various organizations.⁽¹⁰⁾

In accordance with a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ the Council continued to consult with SWAPO in the formulation and implementation of its programme of work, and to channel assistance to Namibians through the United Nations Fund for Namibia. In addition, the Council reported on political, economic, military and social contacts between Member States and South Africa⁽¹²⁾ (see below) since the adoption of another 1987 Assembly resolution.⁽¹³⁾

Missions. Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ the Council sent missions of consultation in 1988 to Asia, Latin America, and Australia and New Zealand to co-ordinate efforts for the implementation of United Nations resolutions on Namibia and to exchange views on initiatives that could be taken towards implementation of those resolutions.

In India (30 and 31 May), the Council was briefed by senior officials on the state of the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid (AFRICA) Fund, which was currently assisting 46 Namibian refugees. The President of the Council and the Permanent Representative of SWAPO to India addressed a press conference organized by the New Delhi United Nations Information Centre. The mission to Thailand (2-6 June) was informed that Thailand had severed all government contacts with South Africa and all economic contacts in the private sector. Thailand announced pledges to the United Nations Fund for Namibia. While in Malaysia (7-10 June), the President of the Council participated in a discussion at the Institute of Strategic and International Studies on issues that threatened international peace, including the situation in southern Africa. In Indonesia (10-15 June), the Government offered training to Namibian students in agriculture, fisheries, shipping, telecommunications and remote sensing. The mission to Singapore (16-18 June) held consultations with officials, who stated that Singapore would continue to co-ordinate action on the Namibian question with the other members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations.

The Council visited four countries in South America from 7 to 20 July.⁽¹⁴⁾ In Chile (7 and 8

July), the Government announced an offer of scholarships for Namibians to study at the Chilean diplomatic academy, and to provide training in sea biology, oceanography, sea farming and other fields. In a joint communiqué,⁽¹⁴⁾ the mission and Chile strongly urged South Africa to put an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia in order to pave the way for implementation of resolution 435(1978). In Peru (10-12 July), the Government pointed out to the mission that its recognition of SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people had taken the form of establishing diplomatic relations with that organization. Further, Peru offered to provide fellowships to Namibians for study in its diplomatic academy. Venezuela, during the visit of the mission (13-15 July), rejected efforts to impose preconditions which were at variance with resolution 435(1978). Brazil, for its part, announced to the mission (17-20 July) its willingness to intensify co-operation with SWAPO through, inter alia holding plenary meetings of the Council, and expressed its readiness to receive a SWAPO delegation to discuss modalities of co-operation.

The mission to New Zealand (29 and 30 August) agreed with the Government that the imposition of sanctions was the only means of compelling South Africa to negotiate. In a meeting with the SWAPO representative, New Zealand agreed to sponsor a tour of New Zealand by the SWAPO Ndilimani Cultural Troupe. The mission to Australia (1-3 September) agreed with Government officials that the issue of concern was whether the momentum towards a solution of the Namibian question could be sustained.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in an October 1988 report,⁽¹⁵⁾ forwarded to the General Assembly replies he had received from 14 Governments on action taken towards the implementation of two 1987 Assembly resolutions: one on the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa,⁽¹³⁾ and the other relating to the implementation of resolution 435(1978).⁽¹⁶⁾

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries held five meetings in 1988 devoted to Namibia, with SWAPO and the Council for Namibia participating. By an 8 August consensus,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Committee reiterated that South Africa, by not complying with United Nations resolutions, was responsible for creating a situation that threatened international peace and security. Its intransigence made it more imperative than ever for the United Nations to reassert its direct responsibility over Namibia until independence. The Committee condemned South Africa for its imposition of the so-called interim government in Namibia and declared the administration and its laws and proclamations null and void. The Committee rejected attempts to link implementation of resolution 435(1978) and extraneous issues, particularly the presence of Cuban troops in Angola. It demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners and account for all "disappeared" Namibians.

The Committee condemned the activities of all foreign economic interests exploiting the natural resources of Namibia, especially its uranium and diamond deposits, and demanded that they comply with United Nations resolutions and withdraw from the Territory. South Africa was further condemned for its military buildup in Namibia and its utilization of the Territory as a springboard for armed aggression against neighbouring States, particularly Angola. The Committee recommended that the Security Council impose sanctions against South Africa.

The Committee noted the activities of NGOs to promote the severance of economic and other links with South Africa as well as other measures taken by Governments in compliance with United Nations resolutions, which helped to mobilize support for the Namibian cause.

On 9 August,⁽¹⁸⁾ the text of the consensus was transmitted to the President of the Security Council.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 23 February on the situation in southern Africa,⁽¹⁹⁾ reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence, and rejected the so-called constitutional initiative, including the recently announced "statutory council", which fell short of accepting the "one man, one vote" principle. The Commission declared that South Africa's occupation of Namibia was aggression against the Namibian people and a threat to international peace and security.

In a resolution of 29 February on the situation of human rights in Namibia,⁽²⁰⁾ the Commission condemned South Africa for the militarization of Namibia, the use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibians, using Namibians for tribal armies, the forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes, torture of political prisoners, and the exploitation of Namibia's natural resources. It reiterated its demand that South Africa co-operate with the United Nations to implement resolution 435(1978), without raising extraneous issues, so that the people of Namibia could enjoy their human rights as well as exercise their right to self-determination. It deplored the establishment by South Africa of so-called Namibia information offices in Paris, Bonn, London and Washington, among other cities, aimed at legitimizing its puppet institutions in Namibia, in particular the so-called interim government. It condemned the collaboration of certain States and international institutions with South Africa as well as foreign economic interests operating in Namibia, and urged States to take action to ensure compliance with Decree No. 1. The Commission demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners and that captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status. In addition, it demanded that South Africa account for all disappeared Namibians.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1988/53, the Economic and Social Council requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to render increased support to the people of Namibia, to withhold any assistance from South Africa until it restored to the people of Namibia their right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the illegal occupation of Namibia. The Council condemned South Africa's persistent non-compliance with Security Council resolution 435(1978) and declared null and void its installation of a so-called interim government. In resolution 1988/56, on the activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) in South Africa and Namibia, the Council urged Governments of home countries of TNCs that had not done so to ensure that those corporations ceased to contribute to maintaining the apartheid policies of South Africa and its illegal occupation of Namibia.

Political aspects

The Council for Namibia, which continued in 1988 to monitor the political situation in and relating to Namibia, reported that progress was made towards a negotiated settlement for the Territory.⁽³⁾ Its Standing Committee II submitted in July a report on the subject.⁽²¹⁾

Throughout the year, South Africa maintained its illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of the United Nations, through its unilaterally installed interim administration. The Council reported that on 8 April, Pieter W. Botha, the President of South Africa, announced during a visit to Windhoek that he was strengthening the powers of the South African Administrator-General in Namibia. The latter was authorized to call ethnically based elections in the Territory and to block any attempt to diminish the powers of the "second-tier" ethnic authorities. He was also authorized to take steps against the local media which were allegedly promoting subversion and terrorism.

Despite South Africa's repressive measures, the Namibian people continued its struggle for self-determination. To this end, rallies and mass demonstrations were held in Namibia during 1988, many of which were broken up when the military and police attacked the participants. On 1 May, rallies were held in 10 towns under the auspices of the National Union of Namibian Workers (NUNW) to commemorate International Workers' Day. A crowd of 6,000 people gathered at Windhoek for the May Day celebration, at which NUNW launched its "Campaign for a Living Wage". On 4 May, some 5,000 schoolchildren marched at Katutura township in Windhoek to commemorate the massacre by South Africa at the Kassinga (Angola) refugee camp on 4 May 1978. The schoolchildren were attacked by police using tear-gas, rubber bullets and truncheons.

SWAPO continued to provide political leadership to the people of Namibia at home and abroad, working, with the support of the international community, to provide for the needs of Namibian refugees and create a basis for nation-building in preparation for an independent Namibia.

The year 1988 was marked, however, by important political and diplomatic progress towards Namibian independence, reflecting the new atmosphere of co-operation between the two super-Powers. Angola, Cuba and South Africa, with the United States as mediator and the USSR as an observer, began negotiations on a regional peace settlement including the implementation of the United Nations plan, Security Council resolution 435(1978).⁽⁵⁾ The first round of these negotiations, which came to be referred to as the tripartite talks, took place in London on 3 and 4 May. The London meetings were followed by bilateral talks between Angola and South Africa at Brazzaville, Congo, on 12 and 13 May, at which preliminary ideas and opening positions on the timetable of Cuban withdrawal from Angola were exchanged. Angola proposed a four-year timetable while South Africa put forward the view that all Cuban forces should leave Angola within one year of the commencement of the implementation of resolution 435(1978).

On 18 and 19 May, senior officials of the USSR and the United States met at Lisbon, Portugal, to discuss ways that they might facilitate a general settlement of the problems in south-western Africa. The discussions were continued during a summit meeting in Moscow between the Presidents of the USSR and the United States from 29 May to 1 June. The negotiations gained momentum with the holding of three further rounds of talks in Cairo (24 and 25 June), New York (11-13 July) and Geneva (2-5 August).

Following the general advance on 27 June of Angolan and Cuban troops to southern Angola in the aftermath of the battles for control of Cuito Cuanavale, a serious armed clash took place at Calueque, near the Angola-Namibia border, where several South African soldiers were killed. Once again, South Africa threatened to withdraw from the tripartite talks.

From 11 to 13 July, however, the tripartite talks resumed at the level of expert in New York. Agreement was reached on a set of principles for the establishment of peace in south-western Africa. On 20 July, following approval by the Governments involved, the text of the 14 principles was released.⁽²²⁾ The three Governments agreed to: fix a date for commencement of the implementation of resolution 435(1978); abstain from action that could prevent a settlement; arrange withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola with verification by the United Nations; respect the sovereignty of States and the inviolability of borders; abstain from the threat or use of force against States; accept responsibility not to allow their territory to be used for aggression; verify and monitor compliance with the obligations of a settlement; resolve differences through negotiations; recognize the role of the permanent members of the Security Council as guarantors for implementing their agreements; and recognize the mediating role of the United States. This agreement was followed by talks involving high-level military delegations from the three countries on 22 and 23 July at Sal Island, Cape Verde.

Further progress was made during a round of negotiations in Geneva from 2 to 5 August. In a joint statement issued on 8 August, known as the Geneva Protocol,⁽²³⁾ the parties agreed on a sequence of steps to achieve peace in south-western Africa. Angola, Cuba, South Africa and the United States also agreed to recommend to the Secretary-General 1 November 1988 as the date for commencement of the implementation of resolution 435(1978). Another significant feature of the statement was the declaration of a facto cessation of hostilities in Namibia and Angola with immediate effect. The parties also pledged to reach agreement by 1 September 1988 on a timetable for the staged and total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola.

On 12 August,⁽²⁴⁾ the President of SWAPO informed the Secretary-General that his organization had agreed to comply with the cessation of all hostile acts in accordance with the Geneva agreement, and was ready to abide by that agreement until the formal cease-fire under resolution 435(1978) took effect.

The first meetings of a joint military commission, composed of military officers from Angola, Cuba and South Africa, to supervise the cease-fire took place on 15 August at Ruacana on the Angola-Namibia border. On 22 August, the commission signed a formal cease-fire agreement. A Joint Military Monitoring Commission was established to supervise and determine the rules under which the cease-fire would operate, as well as to decide on action to be taken in case of violations.

The tripartite talks, which resumed at Brazzaville from 24 to 26 August, covered the timetable for Cuban troop withdrawal, and were adjourned until September. On 31 August, pursuant to the understandings reached at Geneva in early August, South African troops completed their withdrawal from southern Angola.

From 21 to 23 September, the Secretary-General visited South Africa to discuss preparations for the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and related matters. He visited Angola on 23 and 24 September to discuss with the Angolan President the situation in south-western Africa, and, while in Luanda, also met with the President of SWAPO and informed him of the outcome of his visit to Pretoria.

A series of meetings at Brazzaville during November and December produced on 13 December an agreement on the final elements for a tripartite agreement⁽²⁵⁾ relating to the implementation of resolution 435(1978), beginning on 1 April 1989, and the outlines of a related bilateral treaty between Angola and Cuba⁽²⁶⁾ specifying a schedule for the phased total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. The Protocol of Brazzaville⁽²⁵⁾ committed the parties to signing these treaties and established a joint commission in which the United States and the USSR were invited to participate as observers.

Eight months of continuous negotiation between Angola, Cuba and South Africa, with the United States as mediator, culminated in the signing on 22 December in New York of the tripartite⁽²⁷⁾ and bilateral agreements referred to above, as agreed in the Geneva and Brazzaville Protocols (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly's continuing concern over Namibia's independence struggle was expressed in five 1988 resolutions (43/26 A-E).

On 17 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/26 A by recorded vote.

Having examined also the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling other resolutions and decisions declaring the illegality of the continued occupation of Namibia by South Africa, in particular Security Council resolutions 284(1970) of 29 July 1970 and 301(1971) of 20 October 1971, and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971,

Recalling also its resolutions 3111(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973 and 31/146 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976, in which, inter alia it recognized the South West Africa People's Organization as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and granted observer status to it,

Recalling further its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981 and 36/121 B of 10 December 1981, by which it called upon States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally,

Recalling the debates held at its special session on the question of Namibia and its resolution S-14/1 of 20 September 1986, adopted at that session,

Taking note of debates held by the Security Council from 28 to 30 October 1987 on the question of Namibia, and of its resolution 601(1987) of 30 October 1987,

Welcoming the final documents and communiqués of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 25 to 28 May 1988, the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference, held at Kuwait from 26 to 29 January 1987, the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Nicosia from 7 to 10 September 1988, the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-seventh and forty-eighth ordinary sessions, held at Addis Ababa from 22 to 27 February 1988 and from 19 to 23 May 1988, respectively, the Seminar on the International Responsibility for Namibia's Independence, held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 21 to 25 March 1988, and the Seminar on Efforts to Implement the United Nations Plan for the Independence of Namibia, held at Toronto, Canada, from 7 to 11 September 1988,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and as recognized by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV) and 2145(XXI) and in subsequent resolutions of the Assembly relating to Namibia;

3. Strongly condemns the South African regime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

4. Declares that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people in terms of the Definition of Aggression contained in General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, and supports the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people by all means at their disposal, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, to repel South Africa's aggression and to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

5. Declares also that the liberation struggle in Namibia is a conflict of an international character in terms of article 1, paragraph 4, of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and demands that South Africa accord prisoner-of-war status to all captured freedom fighters as called for by the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and the Additional Protocol thereto;

6. Reiterates that, in accordance with its resolution 2145(XXI), Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved in the Territory and reaffirms the mandate of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence under its resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly;

7. Reaffirms its decision that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in pursuance of its mandate, should proceed to establish its administration in Namibia with a view to terminating racist South Africa's illegal occupation of the Territory;

8. Also reaffirms that the South West Africa People's Organization, the national liberation movement of Namibia, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and only with its direct and full participation can the genuine independence of Namibia be achieved;

9. Solemnly reaffirms that Namibia's independence must be with its territorial integrity intact, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands, and reiterates that, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, any attempt by South Africa to annex them is, therefore, illegal, null and void;

10. Calls upon the Security Council to declare categorically that Walvis Bay is an integral part of Namibia and that the question should not be left as a matter for negotiation between an independent Namibia and South Africa;

11. Reaffirms its solidarity with, and support for, the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and pays tribute to that Organization for the sacrifices that it has made in the field of battle and also for the spirit of statesmanship, co-operation and far-sightedness that it has displayed in the political and diplomatic arena despite the most extreme provocations on the part of the racist Pretoria regime;

12. Commends the South West Africa People's Organization for its continued intensification of the struggle on all fronts, including the armed struggle, and for its commitment to embrace all Namibian patriots in an effort further to strengthen national unity so as to ensure the territorial integrity and sovereignty of a united Namibia, and welcomes the consolidation of unity in action by the patriotic forces in Namibia, as clearly demonstrated by the combined actions of workers, youth, students, parents, churches and various professional organizations during this critical phase of their struggle for national and social liberation;

13. Reaffirms that the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, embodied in Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976 and 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, is the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question and demands its immediate implementation without precondition or modification;

14. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983, 566(1985) of 19 June 1985 and 601(1987), and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of these resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

15. Expresses its dismay at the failure to date of the Security Council to discharge effectively its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security in southern Africa, owing to the vetoes of two of its Western permanent members;

16. Urges the Security Council to act decisively in fulfilment of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and to take, without further delay, appropriate action to ensure that the United Nations plan, as embodied in Council resolution 435(1978), is not undermined or modified in any way and that it is fully respected and implemented;

17. Reiterates its conviction that racist South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations, its brutal repression of the Namibian people, its acts of destabilization and aggression against independent African States and its policies of apartheid constitute a threat to international peace and security;

18. Denounces all fraudulent constitutional and political schemes by which the illegal racist regime of South Africa attempts to perpetuate its colonial domination of Namibia, and, in particular, calls upon the international community to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any regime imposed by the illegal South African administration upon the Namibian people in violation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983), 566(1985) and 601(1987) and of other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Council;

19. Strongly condemns the Pretoria régime for the imposition of the so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985, declares this measure null and void and affirms that it constitutes a direct affront and a clear defiance of the resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978), and further affirms that this manoeuvre by South Africa of creating puppet institutions subservient to the interests of the racist regime is intended to consolidate Pretoria's colonial stranglehold over Namibia and to prolong the oppression of the Namibian people;

20. Reiterates that there are only two parties to the conflict in Namibia, namely, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and the racist régime of South Africa, which illegally occupies Namibia;

21. Strongly reject, and condemns the persistent attempts made by the Pretoria régime and its ally to establish a "linkage" between the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) and extraneous and irrelevant issues, particularly the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, which is a ploy intended to delay the independence of Namibia and to jeopardize the responsibility of the United Nations for this Territory and constitutes interference in the internal affairs of that independent and sovereign State;

22. Expresses its appreciation to the front-line States and the South West Africa People's Organization for their statesmanlike and constructive attitude in the efforts aimed at implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978);

23. Reject all attempts to distort the question of Namibia by portraying it as part of a global East-West confrontation rather than one of decolonization that must be resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

24. Firmly condemns and reject, the policy of "constructive engagement", which encourages the racist régime of South Africa to continue its defiance of the decisions of the international community on Namibia, and its policy of apartheid, which is a crime against humanity;

25. Strongly condemns the continuing collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other States in the political, economic, diplomatic, military, cultural and financial fields, and expresses its conviction that such collaboration helps to prolong South Africa's domination and control over the people and Territory of Namibia;

26. Deplores, in this context, the establishment and operation by racist South Africa of the so-called Namibia information offices in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, aimed at legitimizing its puppet institutions in Namibia, in particular the so-called interim government for which the racist regime has been condemned by the Security Council and the international community, and demands their immediate closure;

27. Strongly condemns also the sinister and slanderous campaign of disinformation by the racist regime of South Africa and its agents, including the so-called International Society for Human Rights, against the just struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national independence;

28. Notes with appreciation the measures taken by some States, international organizations, parliamentarians, institutions and non-governmental organizations to exert pressure on the racist régime of South Africa and calls upon them to redouble and intensify their efforts to force the racist régime to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Namibia and South Africa;

29. Calls once again upon all Governments, especially those that have close links with South Africa, to support, in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, the actions of the United Nations to defend the national rights of the Namibian people until independence and to isolate the racist régime of South Africa;

30. Urges Governments that have in the past used their veto or cast negative votes in the Security Council in regard to the question of the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa to support and respond positively to the international call to isolate racist South Africa;

31. Calls upon the members of the European Economic Community to strengthen and extend, as a matter of urgency, the economic sanctions that they have imposed on the Pretoria régime, so as to include their application to illegally occupied Namibia;

32. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, as a measure of its recognition of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the United Nations Council for Namibia as the sole legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence, to discontinue all programmes of development aid and assistance to illegally occupied Namibia, and urges all States to consult the United Nations Council for Namibia regarding any such assistance, in order to ensure that it will not prolong the illegal occupation of Namibia by the Pretoria régime and the colonial institutions in the Territory;

33. Strongly condemns South Africa for its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people and to carry out its military attacks against independent African States, and reiterates its call upon all States to take legislative and other appropriate measures to prohibit the recruitment, training, financing and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia;

34. Also strongly condemns South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, its imposition of military conscription of all Namibian males between seventeen and fifty-five years of age into the occupying colonial army, its forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes and its proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, and declares that all such measures taken by racist South Africa are illegal, null and void;

35. Demands once again that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained under the so-called internal security laws, martial law or any other arbitrary measures, whether such Namibians have been charged or tried or are being held without charge in Namibia or South Africa;

36. Demands that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and declares that South Africa shall be liable to compensate the victims, their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for the losses sustained;

37. Calls upon Member States to render sustained and increased support, as well as material, financial, military and other assistance, to the South West Africa People's Organization so as to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

38. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render sustained and increased material, financial and other assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization so as to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

39. Urges all Governments and the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of Namibian refugees who have been forced by the oppressive policies of the apartheid régime to flee Namibia, especially into the neighbouring front-line States;

40. Reaffirms its conviction that the solidarity and support of the front-line States for the Namibian cause continue to be factors of paramount importance in the efforts to bring genuine independence to the Territory;

41. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its utilization of the illegally occupied international Territory of Namibia as a springboard for perpetrating armed invasions, subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States, in particular Angola;

42. Denounces the acts of aggression by the racist régime against Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe, declares that the Pretoria régime's policy of aggression and destabilization not only undermines the peace and stability of the southern African region but also constitutes a threat to international peace and security, and calls upon South Africa to cease all acts of aggression against the neighbouring African States;

43. Strongly urges the international community to increase, as a matter of urgency, humanitarian assistance and financial, material, military and political support to the front-line States so as to enable them to resolve their own economic difficulties, which are largely a consequence of the Pretoria régime's policies of aggression and subversion, and to defend themselves better against South Africa's persistent attempts to destabilize them;

44. Requests Member States urgently to extend all necessary assistance to Angola and other front-line States in order to enable them to strengthen their defence capacities against acts of aggression by South Africa;

45. Expresses its grave concern at the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime of South Africa and declares that such acquisition constitutes a threat to peace and security in Africa while posing a danger to all mankind;

46. Condemns, and calls for an immediate end to, the continuing military collaboration on the part of certain Western countries with the racist régime of South Africa, and expresses its conviction that such collaboration, in addition to strengthening the aggressive military machinery of the Pretoria régime, thereby constituting a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States, is also in violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977;

47. Declares that such collaboration encourages the Pretoria régime in its defiance of the international community and obstructs efforts to eliminate apartheid and bring South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia to an end, and calls for the immediate cessation of such collaboration;

48. Calls upon the Security Council to adopt the necessary measures to tighten the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Council resolution 418(1977), to ensure its application to illegally occupied Namibia and to ensure strict compliance with the embargo by all States;

49. Also calls upon the Security Council to implement, as a matter of urgency, the recommendations contained in the report of the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of Council resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977;

50. Condemns all collaboration with the Pretoria régime in the nuclear field, and calls upon all States that do so to terminate such collaboration, including refraining from supplying the racist minority régime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium or other nuclear materials or reactors;

51. Endorses the decision taken by the United Nations Council for Namibia that it will, in the exercise of its rights under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia, the outer limit of which shall be 200 miles, and states that any action for the implementation of that decision should be taken in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the representative of the Namibian people;

52. Reaffirm that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people, and expresses its deep concern at the depletion of these resources, particularly its uranium deposits, as a result of their plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971;

53. Declares that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are illegal under international law and that all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future legitimate Government of an independent Namibia;

54. Calls upon the United Nations Council for Namibia, in pursuance of the relevant provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, to continue to take the necessary steps to compile statistical information on the wealth illegally extracted from Namibia with a view to assessing the extent of compensation eventually due to an independent Namibia;

55. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign economic interests operating in Namibia which are illegally exploiting the resources of the Territory, and demands that these interests comply with all the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations by immediately withdrawing from the Territory and by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration;

56. Declares that, by their incessant exploitation of the human and natural resources of the Territory and their continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits, the foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in Namibia constitute a major obstacle to its independence;

57. Once again requests all Member States, particularly those States whose corporations are engaged in the exploitation of Namibian resources, to take all appropriate measures, including legislative and enforcement action, to ensure the full application of, and compliance by all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

58. Calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in any uranium-prospecting activities in Namibia;

59. Reiterates its approval of the initiation by the United Nations Council for Namibia of legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States against corporations or individuals involved in the exploitation, transport, processing or purchase of Namibia's natural resources, as part of its efforts to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

60. Requests the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which operate the Urenco uranium-enrichment plant, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulates the activities of Urenco;

61. Urges the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its capacity as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, to consider the promulgation of additional legislation in order to project and promote the interests of the people of Namibia and to implement effectively all its legislation;

62. Calls upon all specialized agencies, in particular the International Monetary Fund, to ensure the termination of all collaboration with, and assistance to, the racist régime of South Africa, since such assistance serves to augment the military capability of the Pretoria régime, thus enabling it not only to continue the brutal repression in Namibia and South Africa itself, but also to commit acts of aggression against independent neighbouring States;

63. Requests all States that have not already done so, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures individually and collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 and 36/121 B, and its resolution 37/233 A of 20 December 1982;

64. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its implementation of paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution ES-8/2 and of the relevant provisions of Assembly resolutions 36/121 B and 37/233 A, to continue to monitor the boycott of South Africa and to submit to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session a comprehensive report on all contacts between Member States and South Africa containing an analysis of the information received from Member States and other sources on the continuing political, economic, financial and other relations of States and their economic and other interest groups with South Africa and of measures taken by States to terminate all dealings with the racist régime of South Africa;

65. Requests all States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia in the fulfilment of its task concerning the implementation of General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2, 36/121 B and 37/233 A and to report to the Secretary-General by the forty-fourth session of the Assembly on the measures taken by them in the implementation of those resolutions;

66. Strongly urge the Security Council, in view of the persistent refusal by the racist régime of South Africa to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 539(1983) and 566(1985), and, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that régime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter;

67. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his personal commitment to Namibia's independence and for his efforts aimed at the implementation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urges him to continue those efforts;

68. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

In related action, the General Assembly condemned the installation of an interim government and the linkage issue in resolution 43/26 B.

The Assembly, in resolution 43/30, reiterated its position that the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations should refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of South Africa's domination of Namibia. They were requested to withhold all forms of co-operation and assistance from South Africa until the Namibian people had exercised their right to self-determination, freedom and national independence.

By decision 43/408 of 14 November, the Assembly took note of the report on Namibia of its Fourth Committee.⁽²⁸⁾ The Committee, noting that the Assembly had decided to consider the question of Namibia directly in plenary meeting, stated that on 12 and 18 October it had heard, at their request,⁽²⁹⁾ petitioners of the following organizations: International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Lutheran World Federation, United States Out of Southern Africa Network, Namibia Support Committee, SWAPO Support Committee, United States World Journal.

Military aspects

The Council for Namibia also reviewed the military situation in and relating to Namibia in its 1988⁽²⁾ and 1989 reports;⁽³⁾ its Standing Committee II submitted a report on the matter in July 1988.⁽³⁰⁾ In a November report on contacts between Member States and South Africa,⁽¹²⁾ the Council reported that contacts in the military and nuclear fields remained unchanged.

According to the Council, South Africa continued to face opposition inside Namibia and within its own borders, as well as large-scale isolation as a result of measures adopted by the international community. Pretoria responded by increasing its defence budget by 40 per cent, and escalating its military aggression and policy of destabilizing neighbouring States. In 1988, its policies directly affected all States in the region and caused the death of civilians and economic and social disruption on an unprecedented scale.

The extent of South Africa's military involvement in southern Africa was believed to have been one of the factors that pushed it towards a political settlement in Namibia. In particular, the escalating cost of its military occupation and intervention, which was reported to have risen to $1 billion annually by 1988, was a deciding factor. Moreover, police and defence allocations in the Namibian budget were increased to 17 per cent of total expenditures for fiscal year 1987/88. The illegal occupation of Namibia was estimated to absorb nearly 10 per cent of all spending by the South African Government. These economic factors and the fact that South Africa sustained heavy losses in men and equipment during its incursions into Angola, as well as defections, mutinies and widespread indiscipline among its troops, forced the régime to increase white recruitment to replace black conscripts, resulting in high casualties among white soldiers and making the war increasingly unpopular among white segments of the population. Nevertheless, South Africa continued to strengthen its military presence in Namibia, particularly along the northern border where 50,000 South African troops were concentrated.

Even after SWAPO announced a unilateral ceasefire on 1 September, the northern part of the country remained a security zone, with reports of violence against civilians increasing. Wider effects of the war included the dislocation of entire communities and disruption of the traditional economy.

The Council reported that Israel was collaborating with South Africa in several areas of weapons development, aircraft production, training and direct military involvement. During 1988, South African companies were reported to have been actively trying to recruit engineers and skilled personnel made redundant by Israeli defence manufacturers. According to SWAPO, Israeli military personnel were involved with South African Defence Forces (SADF) in Angola, some engaged in actual fighting in the provinces of Cunene and Cuando Cubango, while some Israeli technicians were involved in jamming radar, enabling the South Africa air force to bomb Lubango in southern Angola in February.

In January 1988, SADF launched a massive attack on Cuito Cuanavale, a strategic garrison town and rail centre in south-eastern Angola, approximately 300 kilometres north of the Namibian border in Cuando Cubango province.

On 22 August, Angola, Cuba and South Africa signed a formal cease-fire at Ruacana (see above). Consequently, South Africa, on 30 August, announced its military withdrawal from Angola. Following its defeat at Cuito Cuanavale, the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola, the opposition group fighting in southern Angola, moved its troops north and was reported to be based largely in Zaire.

Angola, Cuba and South Africa signed an agreement on 22 December which, as provided for in resolution 435(1978), stipulated that South Africa would withdraw all its forces from Namibia.

The Committee on colonial countries also considered the military situation in Namibia. On 8 August(17) it reiterated its conviction that the armed liberation struggle of the Namibian people, led by SWAPO, continued to be an important and decisive factor in their efforts to achieve independence in a united Namibia. It strongly condemned South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia and for its utilization of Namibia as a springboard for attacks against neighbouring States. The Committee called on all States to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia, and on all specialized agencies, in particular the International Monetary Fund, to terminate all collaboration with and assistance to South Africa which could augment its military capability.

By decision 43/410, the General Assembly took similar action.

In resolution 43/26 A, the Assembly commended SWAPO for its continued intensification of the struggle on all fronts, including the armed struggle, and condemned South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia and its imposition of military conscription of Namibian males. South Africa was further condemned for its utilization of Namibian territory as a springboard for perpetrating armed invasions against neighbouring States and for its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people.

Implementation of resolution 435(1978)

Geneva and Brazzaville Protocols

After holding a series of negotiations in 1988, Angola, Cuba and South Africa reached agreement on the principles for a peaceful settlement of the conflict in south-western Africa. The three countries and the United States, having met from 2 to 5 August at Geneva, issued, on 8 August, a joint statement, known as the Geneva Protocol.⁽²³⁾ In the statement, they announced their agreement on a sequence of steps necessary to prepare the way for the independence of Namibia in accordance with Security Council resolution 435(1978) and to achieve peace in south-western Africa. In addition to the recommendation that resolution 435(1978) be implemented beginning 1 November 1988, the parties approved, ad referendum to their respective Governments, the text of a tripartite agreement that embodied the principles negotiated in New York and formally approved by the Governments on 20 July (see above). On their side, Angola and Cuba reiterated their decision to subscribe to a bilateral accord, which would include a timetable acceptable to all parties, for the staged and total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. The parties further approved steps that would enhance mutual confidence, reduce the risk of military confrontation and create the conditions in the region necessary to conclude the negotiations. With the approval of these measures, a de facto cessation of hostilities came into effect.

On 17 August,⁽²⁴⁾ Tunisia and Zambia transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter by Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, in which SWAPO agreed to comply with the cessation of all hostile acts, which had been put into effect as of 10 August in Angola. He expressed SWAPO's willingness to continue to abide by the agreement until the formal cease-fire under resolution 435(1978) was signed between SWAPO and South Africa. In SWAPO's view, South Africa should be called on to refrain from repressing SWAPO members and supporters inside Namibia during that period. SWAPO, in accepting 1 November 1988 as the date for the commencement of implementation of resolution 435(1978), urged the Secretary-General to avail himself, as part of his good offices, of this opportunity to initiate consultations with the parties concerned.

On 13 December, Angola, Cuba and South Africa signed the Protocol of Brazzaville, the text of which was conveyed to the Secretary-General the following day by the United States.⁽²⁵⁾ By the Protocol, the three signatories agreed to recommend to the Secretary-General that 1 April 1989 be established as the date for implementation of resolution 435(1978). They agreed to meet on 22 December 1988 in New York for the signing of the tripartite agreement and for the signing by Angola and Cuba of their bilateral agreement. By that date, Angola and Cuba expected to have reached agreement with the Secretary-General on verification arrangements to be approved by the Security Council. The parties further agreed to exchange prisoners of war and to establish a Joint Commission responsible for the resolution of any dispute regarding the interpretation or implementation of the tripartite agreement. The United States and the USSR were invited to participate as observers in the work of the Commission, and it was agreed that Namibia, once it became independent, would become a full member of the Commission. The Commission was to be constituted within 30 days of the signing of the tripartite agreement and was in no way to function as a substitute for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia or for the United Nations entity performing verification in Angola.

In a declaration issued at Athens, Greece, on 16 December,⁽³¹⁾ the 12 members of the European Community (EC) welcomed the signing of the Brazzaville Protocol, which, they said, brought the independence of Namibia on the basis of resolution 435(1978) closer than ever before. They reaffirmed their intention to promote economic and social development in Namibia by providing it with substantial economic assistance once it became independent, as well as their willingness to receive from an independent Namibia an application for accession to the Lomé Convention.

Tripartite agreement

A tripartite agreement signed by Angola, Cuba and South Africa on 22 December in New York was transmitted to the Secretary-General by the United States the same day.⁽²⁷⁾ The parties agreed to request immediately the Secretary-General to seek authority from the Security Council to commence implementation of resolution 435(1978) on 1 April 1989. All South African military forces were to depart Namibia in accordance with that resolution. South Africa and Angola were to co-operate with the Secretary-General to ensure the independence of Namibia through free and fair elections and to abstain from any action that could prevent the execution of the resolution. The parties also agreed to respect the territorial integrity and inviolability of the borders of Namibia and ensure that their territories were not used in connection with acts of war, aggression or violence against the territorial integrity or inviolability of Namibia's borders. Angola and Cuba were to implement the bilateral agreement providing for the redeployment towards the north and the eventual total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, and the on-site verification of that withdrawal through arrangements made with the Security Council. Consistent with their obligations under the United Nations Charter, the parties were to refrain from the threat or use of force and to respect the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of the States of south-western Africa.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 27 September,⁽³²⁾ Zambia requested that the Security Council be convened to consider the situation in Namibia. As a result of consultations among Council members on 29 September, the President made the following statement:⁽³³⁾

"Ten years ago, on 29 September 1978, the Security Council adopted resolution 435(1978) in order to ensure an early independence of Namibia, through free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations.

"The members of the Security Council express grave concern that such a long time after the adoption of resolution 435(1978) the Namibian people have not yet attained their self-determination and independence.

"Reaffirming the pertinent resolutions of the Security Council and the legal responsibility of the United Nations with regard to Namibia, the members of the Council once again call upon South Africa to comply at last with these resolutions and to cease its illegal occupation of Namibia. In this respect, they stress the Security Council's continuing commitment to discharge its particular responsibility for furthering the interests of the people of Namibia and their aspirations for peace, justice and independence through a full and definitive implementation of resolution 435(1978).

"They support the resolute action led by the Secretary-General with a view to the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and encourage him to continue his efforts to that end.

"The Council notes developments in recent weeks in efforts by a number of parties to find a peaceful solution to the conflict in south-western Africa that are reflected in the joint statement of 8 August 1988 by the Governments of Angola, Cuba, South Africa and the United States, which has been circulated as a Security Council document.

"The Council also notes the expressed readiness of the South West Africa People's Organization to sign and observe a cease-fire agreement with South Africa, as stated in document S/20129 of 17 August 1988, in order to pave the way for the implementation of resolution 435(1978). On this tenth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 435(1978), its early implementation is the common aspiration of the international community. The members of the Council urge the parties to display the necessary political will to translate the commitments they have made into reality in order to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question and peace and stability in the region.

"In particular, they strongly urge South Africa to comply forthwith with the Security Council's resolutions and decisions, particularly resolution 435(1978), and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in its immediate, full and definitive implementation. To this end, the Council urges States Members of the United Nations to render all necessary assistance to the Secretary-General and his staff in the administrative and other practical steps necessary for the emplacement of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group.”

Meeting number. SC 2827.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

Angola⁽³⁴⁾ and Cuba⁽³⁵⁾ informed the Secretary-General on 17 December that it was their intention to sign on 22 December a bilateral agreement providing for the redeployment to the north and withdrawal of the Cuban troops from Angola, in accordance with a timetable agreed upon by both countries, and for the verification of that withdrawal by the United Nations. The Secretary-General was requested to recommend to the Security Council that a United Nations military observer group be set up to carry out that mandate.

The Council, having noted the decision of Angola and Cuba to conclude the bilateral agreement, adopted on 20 December resolution 626(1988), by which it decided, among other things, to establish under its authority a United Nations Angola Verification Mission for a period of 31 months. The arrangements for the establishment of the Mission were to enter into force as soon as the tripartite agreement between Angola, Cuba and South Africa, on the one hand, and the bilateral agreement between Angola and Cuba, on the other, were signed. (See PART TWO, Chapter I.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/26 B by recorded vote.

Implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978)

The General Assembly,

Noting that the Secretary-General has reported that all the necessary conditions for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 have already been fulfilled,

Indignant that ten years after the adoption of Security Council resolution 435(1978) the Namibian people have not yet exercised their right to self-determination and attained independence,

Expressing grave concern at the lack of progress in implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978), as indicated in the further reports of the Secretary-General dated 29 December 1983, 6 June 1985, 6 September 1985, 26 November 1985, 31 March 1987 and 27 October 1987 concerning the implementation of Council resolution 435(1978) and resolution 439(1978) of 13 November 1978,

Recalling Security Council resolution 601(1987) of 30 October 1987 by which the Council, inter alia, decided to authorize the Secretary-General to proceed to arrange a cease-fire between South Africa and the South West Africa People's Organization in order to undertake the administrative and other practical steps necessary for the emplacement of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group,

1. Reiterates that Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976 and 435(1978), embody ing the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, constitute the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia and demands their immediate and unconditional implementation;

2. Strongly condemns racist South Africa for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983, 566(1985) of 19 June 1985 and 601(1987);

3. Demands that South Africa urgently comply fully and unconditionally with the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) and subsequent resolutions of the Council relating to Namibia;

4. Emphasizes once again that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa which illegally occupies the Territory;

5. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for the installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985, in defiance of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, and declares this measure null and void, and reiterates its call upon the international community to continue to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any régime imposed by the illegal South African administration upon the Namibian people;

6. Firmly rejects and condemns the persistent attempts to establish a “linkage” or “parallelism” between the independence of Namibia and any extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, and emphasizes unequivocally that all such attempts are designed to delay further the independence of Namibia in accordance with Security Council resolution 435(1978), and that they constitute a gross and unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

7. Urgently calls upon the international community to act resolutely against the intransigent stance of the Pretoria régime, and stresses the responsibility of the Security Council concerning the implementation of its resolutions on Namibia in view of the threat to regional and international peace and security created by the racist régime of South Africa;

8. Notes with satisfaction the statement by the Security Council on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 435(1978) in which the members of the Council, inter alia strongly urged South Africa to comply forthwith with the resolutions and decisions of the Security Council, particularly resolution 435(1978), and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in its immediate, full and definitive implementation;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his personal commitment to the independence of Namibia and for his efforts aimed at the implementation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urges him to continue those efforts;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Related action was taken by the Assembly in resolution 43/106, by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and national independence and condemned those Governments that did not recognize those rights. In resolution 43/29, the Assembly called again on all States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade co-operation with South Africa concerning Namibia that might lend support to its continued illegal occupation.

Information dissemination

The Council for Namibia, in co-operation with the Department of Public Information (DPI) and in consultation with SWAPO, continued in 1988 to disseminate information to Governments, leading opinion makers, the media, political and academic institutions, NGOs, cultural organizations and others to mobilize world public opinion in support of Namibia's independence.⁽²⁾ Much of its work in dissemination of information was carried out by its Standing Committee III.⁽³⁶⁾

The Council produced and disseminated folders and acquired and disseminated materials on diverse matters concerning Namibia's struggle for independence and self-determination. Among those materials was an updated compendium of major resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, resolutions adopted by OAU, excerpts from declarations and communiques adopted by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and reports of the Secretary-General on the question of Namibia. The Council gave special consideration to publicizing its two 1988 seminars (see above) and two journalists' encounters organized in advance of them.

Activities of the Council were publicized through press releases in English and French, and disseminated to the press, delegations and NGOs at United Nations Headquarters and to United Nations information centres (UNICS) throughout the world. Daily press coverage in English and French was provided for Security Council meetings and the General Assembly debate on Namibia, as well as for seminars and missions undertaken by the Council during the reporting period. Material on the question of Namibia was also provided regularly to the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies.

Information on the situation in Namibia and the work of the Council was disseminated through two periodical publications, the UN Chronicle and Objective: Justice, and was contained in Basic Facts about the United Nations and the Yearbook of the United Nations. Nearly 13,000 publications and 1,500 copies of wall sheets and posters were distributed by UNICS in 1987/88. The background booklet A Trust Betrayed: Namibia was revised for reprinting.

"Namibia's Independence, Ten Years after Security Council Resolution 435(1978)" was the title of a Perspective radio feature programme produced in May. United Nations Radio provided full coverage of the World Council of Churches hearings on Namibia held in May in Washington, D.C., and material from the hearings was used in news telephone feeds and news magazine programmes, including South African Review and the Namibia Up-date series. Coverage of the 6 May plenary meeting of the Council included a special programme entitled "The Council for Namibia to visit Windhoek?", which focused on discussions between the President of SWAPO and Council members. The special Namibia Up-date radio series was produced in the Spanish and Herero languages. A feature programme on the United Nations Institute for Namibia was produced in French, and two feature programmes on solidarity with Namibians were produced in Russian.

A total of 63 television news packages on Namibia were prepared for international syndicators. A UN In Action television programme entitled Namibia Exiles, produced in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Japanese, Russian and Spanish, dealt with the occupation and exploitation of Namibia by South Africa and described the Council's role in providing education and training programmes for the country. The film Free Namibia, available in Arabic, English, French, Portuguese and Spanish, was screened 69 times, while the film Namibia: A Trust Betrayed, in the same five languages, was screened 72 times.

As part of its programme of co-operation with NGOs, and under the terms of a 1987 Assembly resolution,⁽³⁷⁾ the Council, in consultation with SWAPO, made financial contributions to a number of NGOs to enable them to promote the cause of freedom of the Namibian people by producing information materials on the situation there.

The Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia continued to serve as an additional source of information on the situation in Namibia and the activities of the Council. In this regard, it prepared the Namibia Bulletin, a monthly review, and Namibia in the News, a weekly newsletter. The Commissioner's Office undertook the distribution of some 350,000 copies in English and 175,000 copies in other languages of various United Nations and other publications, including an information kit on Namibia.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 8 August,⁽¹⁷⁾ reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's policies concerning Namibia and, in particular, to increase world-wide information dissemination on the Namibian liberation struggle. The Committee emphasized the importance of action by local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, academic institutions, the mass media, solidarity movements and others in mobilizing Governments and public opinion in support of that struggle, in exerting pressure on TNCs to refrain from any investment or activity in Namibia and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with South Africa.

In resolution 43/213, the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General, in connection with the 1986 recommendation of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,⁽³⁸⁾ to proceed with the reclassification of the post of the Secretary of the Council from the D-1 to the D-2 level, as he had suggested in an October report on implementation of the recommendation.⁽³⁹⁾ The Group had recommended that the support activities of the Council and of the Office of the Commissioner for Namibia be consolidated.

UN Commissioner for Namibia

Activities of the Commissioner

The United Nations Commissioner for Namibia continued in 1988 to perform the administrative and executive tasks entrusted to him by the Council for Namibia. Acting through his offices at United Nations Headquarters (New York), Gaborone (Botswana), Luanda (Angola) and Lusaka (Zambia), he was involved in the protection of Namibian interests, including the travel documents programme and efforts to ensure implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.⁽⁶⁾ In this regard, the Commissioner continued to distribute publicity material on the plunder of Namibian resources in violation of the Decree. The Office of the Commissioner issued and renewed travel documents in Africa, North America and Western Europe. It collected and analysed information relating to Namibia and closely followed internal political, economic and legal developments in South Africa affecting Namibia.

The Office administered assistance programmes under the United Nations Fund for Namibia, which comprised three major components: the Nationhood Programme, the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and educational, social and relief activities. Under the third component, the Office carried out 16 projects.

The Office continued to undertake a number of studies, which included a revised version of a study on TNCs operating in Namibia, a summarized version of a demographic study of the Namibian population, and studies dealing with the socio-economic and legal situation prevailing in Namibia as well as the incomes and profits made by foreign economic interests operating illegally in the country.

The Luanda office served as a focal point for the co-ordination of assistance to Namibians and in this regard worked with agencies of the United Nations system represented in Angola to ensure a well-integrated inter-agency approach. The office organized inter-agency meetings on programme activities, missions to Angola and Namibian matters. Luanda being the provisional headquarters for SWAPO, the office was also a focal point for the appraisal of project ideas, formulation and evaluation. The major activities of the office therefore involved the management of ongoing projects under the Nationhood Programme (see below) and the implementation in Angola of seven newly approved projects. The office co-ordinated activities of bilateral and multilateral missions whose purpose was to select Namibians for training in various institutions, and participated in the field-attachment programme by securing the placement with the Angolan national airline, TAAG, of Namibian aircraft maintenance technicians. In close co-operation with SWAPO, the office assisted the Vocational Training Centre at Cuacra, Angola, as well as the Namibian Secondary Technical School at Loudima, Congo, which had become fully operational. The office also continued to co-ordinate assistance to SWAPO settlements and provided support for seminars on the establishment of the Namibian press agency, NAMPA, and on diplomacy for SWAPO cadres.

The Gaborone office continued to monitor political developments in Namibia and the region and to co-operate closely with SWAPO. It maintained close contacts with the Government of Botswana, diplomatic missions accredited to Botswana and other institutions on matters considered vital for the promotion of Namibian interests. From September 1987 to August 1988, the office issued 39 United Nations Council for Namibia travel and identity documents to Namibians, and extended the validity of 35 others. It also assisted in obtaining visas for Namibians wishing to transit through neighbouring countries.

The Lusaka office monitored and reported on the situation in southern Africa and worked closely with SWAPO. The management, monitoring, reappraisal and reporting on projects under the Nationhood Programme and the General Account of the Fund for Namibia continued to be its main task. Visits by various heads of State and Government, Foreign Ministers, heads of United Nations agencies and religious figures led to enhanced support for the office and contributions to the Nationhood Programme, as evidenced by the offers of financial assistance by EC to the Institute for Namibia and the field-attachment programme for Namibians. Similar contacts with the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid resulted in an offer of financial assistance for agricultural activities in SWAPO settlements. The office maintained close relations with regional organizations, such as the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of the Economic Commission for Africa, the preferential trade area, and the Eastern and Southern Africa Management Institute, as well as NGOs and private voluntary organizations. From June 1987 to August 1988, the office issued 907 new travel and identity documents and effected 1,857 renewals and 192 cancellations. Being an important operational centre for the field-attachment and individual scholarship programmes, the office succeeded in securing the agreement of a number of African Governments and parastatals to accept over 70 Namibian trainee graduates.

Extension of the Commissioner's appointment

On the Secretary-General's proposal,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the General Assembly, by decision 43/311 of 17 November 1988, extended the appointment of Bernt Carlsson as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a one-year term beginning on 1 January 1989. His initial appointment, for six months, had begun on 1 July 1987.

On 21 December 1988, Mr. Carlsson was killed in an aeroplane crash.

Economic and social conditions

Foreign investment and natural resources

The United Nations Council for Namibia, in its 1988 report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ and its Standing Committee II in a July report⁽²⁾ characterized the basic structure of the Namibian economy as typically colonial, almost exclusively tailored to the needs and demands of foreign capital, and highly skewed towards the production of primary export commodities. The three principal extractive industries-mining, farming and fishing-accounted for more than 40 per cent of the gross domestic product (GDP), generated more than 90 per cent of exports and engaged over 80 per cent of all paid employment. In terms of eco-conomic ties, Namibia had been kept totally dependent on South Africa, which treated the Territory virtually as its fifth province, as a repository of physical wealth and as a captive annexed market for its own economy.

The economic history of Namibia showed a consistent pattern of collusion and mutual support between South Africa and TNCs operating in the Territory. The apartheid régime maintained conditions under which foreign interests could reap large profits from exploitation of Namibia's economic resources. TNCs, in turn, assisted South Africa in its illegal occupation by paying taxes, providing fuel and other supplies for the occupation forces and collaborating with South Africa in its violation of international law.

Namibia was endowed with abundant natural wealth, including uranium, gem diamonds, copper, lead, zinc, manganese and other metals, as well as agricultural and fishery products. These resources, however, were exclusively controlled and illegally exploited by South African and other foreign economic interests.

Namibia's mineral wealth included a wide range of base metals and other precious metals of strategic importance, which made up 20 per cent of the total output of the mining sector in value. Almost all of the zinc, tin, lead, vanadium and tungsten extracted from the Territory went to South Africa and its Western allies.

Over 70 per cent of Namibia's base metal production came from the Tsumeb Corporation, Ltd., which produced blister copper, refined lead, zinc, gold, silver and other minerals. Gold Fields of South Africa (GFSa) owned 47 per cent of Tsumeb, the Newmont Mining Corporation of the United States owned 31 per cent and British Petroleum Minerals International owned 14 per cent, with the rest being owned mainly by South African firms. In April 1988, Newmont Mining Corporation reportedly sold its entire share to GFSa.

All of the uranium produced in Namibia was exported. Given the illegal nature of the distribution and processing of that uranium, most transport companies and processing plants sought to conceal their involvement. One of the major processing companies in Europe was Urenco, Ltd., a joint venture of Uranisotopenenttrennungsgesellschaft (URANIT) of the Federal Republic of Germany, Ultra-Centrifuge Nederland (UCN) of the Netherlands and British Nuclear Fuels.

In an effort to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia⁽³⁾ the Council had instituted in 1987⁽⁴⁾ legal proceedings in a district court of The Hague against Urenco Nederland V.O.F., UCN and the Government of the Netherlands, seeking to prevent Urenco from carrying out orders based on purchases of Namibian uranium. Following the defendants' submission of statements of defence on 3 May 1988, the court adjourned the case to allow the lawyers representing the Council to submit their reply.

The exploitation of Namibia's diamonds was monopolized by Consolidated Diamond Mines (CDM), one of the world's largest gem diamond producers and the oldest and largest of the mining companies operating in the Territory. CDM was a wholly owned subsidiary of De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd., of South Africa, which itself was 30 per cent owned by the Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, Ltd.

International banks had a long history of involvement in Namibia without necessarily maintaining commercial operations there. Many towns in Namibia had been transformed into army camps, and financial services were part of the infrastructure that had been developed to sustain the military occupation.

Namibia's commercial and manufacturing sectors produced 10 to 15 per cent of its GDP and, like the service sector, were dominated by South African and other foreign economic interests which exploited Namibia's raw materials, transferred them elsewhere for processing and used the Territory as a captive market for manufactured goods. Some 80 per cent of those manufactured goods were produced in South Africa, with the balance originating in third countries and imported into Namibia by South African-owned trading companies. The unrestricted entry of South African goods into Namibia inhibited the growth of local industry and perpetuated its dependence on South Africa.

Livestock farming accounted for 80 to 90 per cent of the overall value of commercial agriculture, but had been severely affected by the drought conditions over the previous 10 years. Most of the cattle produced in Namibia were taken to South Africa on the hoof or after being slaughtered at local abattoirs. The remainder were shipped to Western European markets in the form of frozen cuts and canned beef. The sole meat-processing concern in the country was Swavleis, which operated plants at Okahandja and Windhoek.

South African companies had virtually monopolized the Namibian fishing industry over the previous 25 years, holding 11 of the 12 pelagic licences as well as the entire lobster concession, and receiving 80 per cent of the fishing quotas. Fishing in the offshore waters of Namibia was regulated by the International Commission for South-East Atlantic Fisheries (ICSEAF) and the International Commission for the Conservation of Atlantic Tunas (ICCAT). In view of the early accession of the Council for Namibia to the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁽⁵⁾ the Council expected ICSEAF and ICCAT members to conduct their operations with due regard to that instrument and in the interests of the Namibian people.

As requested in 1987 by the Economic and Social Council,(6) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, in February 1988,(*) a report summarizing the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia (see PART TWO, Chapter I). Another report@) dealt with the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating in the region in violation of United Nations resolutions. A third reportc(9) listed TNCs with interests in companies in South Africa and Namibia which had disposed of or reduced their interests or were in the process of so doing.

The Committee on colonial countries, in a consensus of 8 August,(10) condemned the activities of all foreign economic interests operating in Namibia and demanded their immediate withdrawal, declaring that, by their exploitation of resources and accumulation of profits, they constituted a major obstacle to Namibia's independence. It demanded that those States whose TNCs continued to operate in Namibia comply with United Nations resolutions by ensuring the immediate withdrawal of all investments from Namibia and putting an end to co-operation of such corporations with the illegal South African administration. The Committee reaffirmed that the activities of foreign economic interests were considered to be illegal under international law and that they would be liable to pay damages to a future lawful Namibian Government. It further reaffirmed that Namibia's natural resources were the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people and expressed deep concern at their depletion in violation of United Nations resolutions and Decree No. 1. In addition, the Committee condemned the exploitation of Namibian uranium by State-owned or State-controlled corporations, and supported the initiation by the Council of legal proceedings.

The General Assembly, by resolution 43/29, reaffirmed that, by the exploitation of Namibia's natural resources and the repatriation of huge profits, foreign economic, financial and other interests constituted a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality in Namibia. The Assembly called on States to terminate investments in Namibia and loans to South Africa, reiterated that all foreign economic interests in Namibia were illegal, and declared that consequently South Africa and such interests would be liable to pay damages to the future legitimate Government of an independent Namibia. The Assembly condemned South Africa for its continued plundering of Namibia's natural resources, in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namib-ian people. It also condemned the plunder of Namibian uranium and called on all States, particularly those whose nationals and corporations were involved in mining and processing Namibian uranium, to comply with Decree No. 1.

In resolution 43/26 A, the Assembly demanded that all foreign economic interests in Namibia comply with relevant United Nations resolutions by immediately withdrawing from the Territory. It reaffirmed that the natural resources of Namibia were the inviolable heritage of its people, and expressed deep concern at their depletion, particularly the uranium deposits. All Member States were requested to comply with Decree No. 1.

The Assembly, in resolution 43/26 C, decided that the Council for Namibia should continue taking measures to ensure the implementation of Decree No. 1, including taking legal proceedings in domestic courts, and consider the illegal activities of foreign economic interests, particularly TNCs operating in Namibia.

Social conditions and exploitation of labour

The Council for Namibia(1) and its Standing Committee II(11) reviewed the social conditions in Namibia. They reported that during 1988, the conditions continued to deteriorate as a result of South Africa's occupation and its repressive policies and practices.

In 1964, South Africa had begun to impose its apartheid policy of fragmentation on Namibia, dividing it into several "homelands". That policy was expanded in 1980 when Namibians were divided into 11 mutually exclusive groups on the basis of racial, ethnic and tribal origins. The system of "Bantu education" was also designed to perpetuate white supremacy by training blacks for subservient jobs in the local economy. Basic education was compulsory for white but not for black children. The allocation for education of a white child was seven times greater than that for a black child. The disparity in the statistics of black and white students who completed high school was even more glaring, since almost all black Namibians were forced to forgo high school education in order to work and help support their families. A good number were expelled because of their opposition to South Africa's occupation and their support for SWAPO.

The health sector in Namibia was also linked to the apartheid system and was consequently characterized by gross inequalities. Health services for the black majority were rudimentary at best and in many areas virtually non-existent. South Africa's policies of racial fragmentation and mandatory inferior living conditions for the blacks were major underlying causes of the wide disparity in the health conditions between blacks and whites. With the exception of commercial farmers, whites lived in urban areas where housing was of high quality and they were assured clean water, sewage disposal facilities and all conveniences of modern living. Blacks, on the other hand, were forced to live in squalid, unhygienic conditions in the "homelands".

Malnutrition, abject poverty, overcrowded living conditions and an unsanitary environment contributed to the spread of diseases almost unknown among whites. The difference between the health facilities provided for whites and blacks was manifested in infant mortality and life expectancy rates: the infant mortality rate of blacks was more than eight times that of whites, and life expectancy for blacks ranged from 42 to 52 years, compared to 68 to 72 years for whites. Health services continued to deteriorate, clinics were closed and the number of medical personnel was reduced.

The general public continued to suffer from the repression and violation of human rights under the South African administration. The terrorization of the population through killings, systematic torture, abductions, detentions without trial and disappearances of civilians were carried out by paramilitary squads such as Koevoet, Takkies and Etango. Their atrocities were facilitated by the information black-out throughout Namibia.

An attempt was made to silence the newspaper The Namibian, which had been critical of South Africa's administration in Namibia. An arson attack on 10 October destroyed its offices in Windhoek.

At hearings convened in Washington, DC., from 2 to 4 May, the President of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States testified that Ignatius Nambodi, a Catholic mission worker detained by South African authorities on 2 February and found dead in his cell 20 days later, was never allowed a visit by a lawyer, a member of the clergy or even his family.

On 6 May, the President of SWAPO informed the Council that 16 schools had been destroyed recently in north-western and north-eastern Namibia. He said that occupation police and army were empowered to kill people and destroy property.

The Council reported several cases where the South African military and police committed atrocities against Namibians,⁽¹²⁾ including the rape of women and children, as well as beatings.

The fact that many Namibians had been dispossessed of their land and the continuing state of war and repression had resulted in large numbers of Namibians fleeing their native land to seek refuge in neighbouring countries, particularly Angola and Zambia. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) estimated that there were 70,000 to 80,000 Namibian refugees in Angola, Zambia and other neighbouring countries. Refugee camps in Angola were a principal target of attack by South African occupation forces based in Namibia.

The apartheid system in Namibia continued to ensure a cheap labour force, with the greater part of the black labour force made up of migrants on short-term contracts. Many employers continued to hire workers without guarantees of renewals, and to house them in large all-male dormitories known as compounds or hostels. These were usually isolated from local communities and in many cases controlled by armed guards.

The conditions under which Namibian labourers worked were extremely exploitative. They had no statutory rights to a pension, set pay, holiday pay or maternity leave. A worker could be dismissed without prior notice and such occurrences were frequent. Furthermore, they were not legally entitled to compensation for dismissal or to unemployment benefits. Working conditions were often dangerous and unhealthy, exposing them to racism, abuse and beatings in their workplaces. On farms, there had been numerous cases in which workers had been brutally assaulted or killed by employers for minor misdemeanours.

Black trade unions faced harassment and repression, and worker's protests had been violently suppressed by the police and army. It was also illegal for registered trade unions to assist or be affiliated with any political party.

In 1988, labour activities of the National Union of Namibian Workers centred around the "Campaign for a Living Wage". The membership of the Union rose to an estimated 40,000 in 1988. An agreement concerning wages and working conditions was signed by the Mineworkers Union of Namibia (MUN) and Consolidated Diamond Mines on 14 December. Rössing Uranium signed a recognition agreement with MUN endorsing collective bargaining, freedom of association and dispute procedures. Lalandil, a large employer in the seasonal crayfish industry in Lüderitz, reached agreement with the Namibian Food and Allied Workers Union (NAFAU) on wages and conditions of employment for seasonal fisheries and factory workers. Another Lüderitz firm, SWAFIL, signed a recognition agreement with NAFAU but did not resolve issues on transport, job security and pension.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1988 a report on developments in the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia⁽¹³⁾ (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1988/24 by recorded vote.

Women and children in Namibia

Recalling its resolution 1986/23 of 23 May 1986,

Recalling also the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 259, which calls for the speedy and effective implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 concerning the independence of Namibia,

Gravely concerned about the delay in the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) regarding the withdrawal of South Africa's illegal administration from Namibia and the holding of elections under the supervision of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the perpetual suffering of Namibian women under the illegal occupation of the racist South African régime, and further concerned about the use of Namibian territory as a springboard for attacking and destabilizing neighbouring States,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on new developments concerning the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and measures of assistance to women from South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as a result of the practice of apartheid,

1. Condemns, in no uncertain terms, the racist régime of South Africa for its installation of a so-called interim Government at Windhoek;

2. Denounces the forcible conscription of Namibian men and women between the ages of 17 and 55 years into the racist army, as well as the detention of children, practices which consolidate and facilitate widespread repression throughout the country;

3. Rejects South Africa's insistence on linking the independence of Namibia to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola;

4. Demands the release of all political prisoners, among whom are included women and children, and the lifting of the state of emergency imposed by South Africa for more than twelve years;

5. Demands that South Africa refrain from using Namibia as a base from which to infiltrate Angola and other independent neighbouring countries;

6. Calls upon all women of the world to support and assist all bodies struggling to put an end to colonialism in Namibia;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session a comprehensive report on monitoring the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women with regard to women and children in Namibia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 43/106, condemned South Africa for its increased brutal repression of the Namibian people, as manifested by arrest and detention without trial of SWAPO leaders, trade unionists and church leaders, the cold-blooded murder and torture of children, women and the elderly, and the bombing and destruction of social and educational institutions. In resolution 43/134, the Assembly expressed outrage at and condemned the detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in Namibia. Resolution 43/116 included the Assembly's call on the international community to increase assistance to the countries of southern Africa to enable them to provide facilities and services to refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

International assistance

Throughout 1988, the Council for Namibia and other United Nations bodies continued to provide and co-ordinate assistance to the Namibian freedom struggle. Most of the funding, mainly voluntary contributions, was provided through the United Nations Fund for Namibia, while additional funding was provided through the United Nations regular budget, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and specialized agencies. The Fund operated the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, financing training programmes and surveys of the economic and social sectors in preparation for independence, and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, involving research, training and planning activities. In addition, the Fund had a programme for educational, social and relief assistance dealing with the immediate needs of Namibians.

Appeals for increased assistance to deal with the growing needs of Namibia were made by several organs of the United Nations. On 8 August,(*) the Committee on colonial countries urged all Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to increase material assistance to the Namibian refugees who had been forced to flee Namibia, especially into the neighbouring front-line States.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1988/53, requested United Nations organizations, as a matter of urgency, to render increased assistance to the Namibian people, in consultation with OAU and the Council for Namibia, in particular in connection with the Nationhood Programme.

The General Assembly, in decision 43/410, appealed to all States to render sustained and increased moral and political support, as well as assistance in all fields, to SWAPO to enable it to intensify its struggle. In resolution 43/30, the Assembly expressed concern that the assistance extended thus far by certain United Nations organizations to the Namibian people and SWAPO was far from adequate in relation to actual needs. Those organizations were urged, as a matter of priority, to extend substantial material assistance to the front-line States to enable them to support more effectively the Namibian freedom struggle.

UN Fund for Namibia

Activities of the Fund

The United Nations Fund for Namibia, for which voluntary contributions were the major financial source, continued to serve in 1988 as the main instrument through which the Council for Namibia, acting as its trustee, channelled assistance to Namibians. The Fund had three main programmes with separate accounts: the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Institute for Namibia; and educational, social and relief assistance (General Account).

The United Nations Commissioner for Namibia submitted progress reports for the Nationhood Programme and activities under the General Account as at 30 June²⁾ and 31 December³⁾ 1988. While the Nationhood Programme and the Institute were set up with particular reference to the future attainment of independence, the establishment of State machinery and the assumption of administrative responsibilities, the General Account provided individual scholarships and catered to the immediate needs and the welfare of Namibians in their independence struggle. Fund expenditures for the three programmes totalled $12,832,050 in 1988 as follows: Nationhood Programme, $2,389,679; Institute, $6,355,902; and General Account, $4,086,469.

Nationhood Programme

The Nationhood Programme consisted of two major components: manpower training programmes, and surveys and analyses of Namibian economic and social sectors, including identification of development tasks and policy options. Through the Programme, hundreds of Namibians continued their training at various institutions, mostly in African countries. Fields of training included mining and marine engineering, pilot training, aircraft maintenance, nurses' training, remedial training in English, mathematics and physics, public administration, journalism, agriculture, railway operations and fisheries.

A total of 16 new projects and 26 project revisions were approved in 1988 by the Council for Namibia, for which a total of $3,674,118 was approved from the Nationhood Programme Account. More than 350 Namibians completed their training in 1988 with an equal number of new students having enrolled.

At the end of June 1988, more than 60 Namibians were undergoing attachment training in Ethiopia, Kenya, Nigeria, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Areas of training included civil aviation, telecommunications, postal services, railway operations, tropical disease control, law, fisheries, agriculture and meat packing.

The United Nations Vocational Training Centre at Cuacra, Angola, operated at full capacity with an enrolment of about 200 trainees in auto mechanics, machine shop and fitting, electrical installations, plumbing, carpentry, and building and construction. A group of 81 trainees graduated in December.

UN Institute for Namibia

The United Nations Institute for Namibia, at Lusaka, continued to train middle-level skilled manpower for an independent Namibia and carried out applied research in a variety of sectors of the Namibian economy. The research programme was intended to make available basic documentation for policy formulation by the future Government of an independent Namibia. In 1988, 157 new students were admitted to programmes of the Institute, which included management and development studies, teacher-training upgrading, and a secretarial programme. This brought the total student body to 562. The ninth graduating group, comprising 113 students, received diplomas in management and development studies, bringing the number of graduates in this field to 757. The Institute's diplomas were underwritten by the University of Zambia. In addition, 29 students were awarded teaching diplomas in basic education and 26 students received certificates in the secretarial training programmes, bringing the Institute's total number of graduates since its inception to 1,020. The Namibian Extension Unit, an autonomous body established in 1981, continued to expand its distance education programme for Namibians who had been denied education in Namibia. It was currently serving several thousand Namibian adults and youths in Zambia and Angola.

General Account

Educational, social and relief assistance, particularly in the form of scholarships, was the main activity financed by the Fund's General Account. It also financed vocational and technical training; provided assistance in health and medical care, nutrition and social welfare; acquired books and periodicals for Namibian refugee camps and SWAPO offices; and facilitated the attendance of Namibian representatives at international seminars, meetings and conferences.

Between 1 July 1987 and 30 June 1988, the demand for scholarships continued to increase and 87 new awards were approved. As at 30 June 1988, 266 Namibians were being sponsored under the scholarship programme in 17 countries, with the majority in the United States. Most educational assistance was granted at the post-secondary level, but a few students were sponsored at primary and secondary levels. Fields of study included education, agriculture, business administration, economics, accounting, journalism, engineering, public administration, animal husbandry, motor mechanics and tailoring.

All new training activities were constituted as projects. Since the beginning of 1988, nine new projects and nine project revisions had been approved by the Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia. Those projects provided for the education and training of Namibians at various levels, among them diploma and degree programmes in Barbados, Guyana, the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe. A group of trainees continued their course in video and cinematography, and radio broadcasters continued in-service training at various African radio stations. The Fund also became increasingly involved in the financing of the operational costs of the Namibian Technical Secondary School of Loudima, Congo, which in mid-1988 had 247 students.

Financing of the Fund

The major source of financing of the United Nations Fund for Namibia remained voluntary contributions. In 1988, 35 countries paid nearly $8 million to the Fund: $2,060,966 to the Nationhood Programme, $4,513,041 to the Institute, and $1,339,579 to the General Account. In addition, the Fund was financed from the United Nations regular budget. For 1988, the General Assembly allocated $1.5 million, as determined in a 1987 resolution.⁽⁴⁾ Funding was also provided by UNDP. On 1 July,⁽⁵⁾ the UNDP Governing Council increased the indicative planning figure for Namibia for the 1987-1991 programming cycle to $10.6 million.

On 8 August,⁽⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries urgently called on all States and the United Nations system to support the Fund for Namibia and all programmes of assistance organized by the Council to benefit the Namibian people and to prepare them for the responsibilities of independent nationhood.

Other UN assistance

UN Educational and Training Programme. In a report to the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see PART TWO, Chapter I), during the period 1 October 1987 to 31 August 1988, granted 201 new scholarships to Namibians and extended 278, in addition to those financed by the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

UNDP activities. According to a 1989 report⁽⁷⁾ of the UNDP Administrator, UNDP provided assistance to SWAPO in 1988 through eight projects totalling $1,928,000. The projects included assistance to SWAPO settlements in Zambia and Angola, the securing of a food supply to the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for Namibia at Cuacra, the training of SWAPO teachers, external aid management and administration, promotion of women's participation in development, health service, and maintenance and mechanical repair services.

Agency assistance. United Nations specialized agencies and other organizations continued to provide assistance to colonial countries, including Namibia. The Secretary-General reported on such assistance in 1988,⁽⁸⁾ with a follow-up report in 1989.⁽⁹⁾

Among those agencies reporting on their assistance to Namibians, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) stated that it undertook social sciences research, increased public awareness of the situation in Namibia and provided training in its fields of competence to Namibian cadres. UNESCO assistance was designed to combat South African propaganda, mobilize public opinion and provide a basis for planning a post-apartheid society. Two books were published in 1988 with UNESCO assistance: A History of Resistance in Namibia and De l'ethnisme comme moyen d'enfermement des populations sud-africaines, which had one chapter on Namibia.

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued to co-operate with the Council for Namibia, invited it to its relevant meetings and participated in the Nationhood Programme. ICAO advised the Commissioner for Namibia regarding placement of trained personnel in the civil aviation departments and airlines of other African countries to obtain practical experience.

UNHCR, within the terms of its humanitarian and non-political mandate, continued to deliver material assistance for the benefit of Namibian refugees. In Angola, where some 69,000 Namibians had sought refuge by mid-1988, the main emphasis of UNHCR assistance was placed on self-sufficiency and productivity. Areas of activity included agriculture, a textile workshop, mechanical and teacher training, as well as general education. Smaller numbers of Namibian refugees in Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe received similar support. Some 400 Namibian students were transferred in 1988 from Luanda to Lusaka. In Zambia, assistance was provided to Nyango Farm, for Namibian refugees under the care of SWAPO. UNHCR also maintained its annual contribution of $30,000 to the United Nations Institute for Namibia, which trained professional cadres in preparation for Namibian independence.

The International Labour Organisation (ILO), of which Namibia was a full member, maintained active collaboration with the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, especially as regards programmes of technical assistance within the framework of the Nationhood Programme. ILO activities covered vocational training, rehabilitation, employment planning and creation, rural development, labour administration, workers' education, small enterprise development, migrant workers and fellowship schemes. In the field of vocational training, courses in several trades were held at the Pilot Vocational Training Centre for Namibians at Cuacra. The Centre's second batch of students, of whom 60 per cent were women, graduated in December. Under a project on vocational rehabilitation of war victims and other disabled persons, 45 disabled Namibians completed both basic education and skills training in a number of Zambian institutions.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations carried out surveys and policy analyses on various aspects of Namibia's agriculture. Projects included preparation of agrarian reform and settlement programmes, formulation of plans for the protection of food supplies and nutrition, contingency plans for fisheries, formulation of programmes for agricultural education, and an assessment of land suitability for various types of agricultural activity.

The World Health Organization provided a substantial number of fellowships to Namibians for training as physicians, nurses, sanitary engineers and health administrators, among others. Funds were provided to enable Namibians to participate in international health-related courses. Transport and equipment were purchased for maternal and child care programmes and for epidemiological surveillance.

PART FIVE

Legal Questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1988, the International Court of Justice continued to consider four contentious cases and a fifth case was referred to it. The Court delivered one Judgment, one advisory opinion and a number of Orders.

Judicial work of the Court

In the contentious case concerning border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v Honduras), the Court in 1988 delivered a Judgment on its jurisdiction and the admissibility of the Application. In an advisory case concerning the applicability of the obligation to arbitrate under section 21 of the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations,⁽¹⁾ the Court made an Order and delivered an advisory opinion.

One new case, concerning maritime delimitation between Greenland and Jan Mayen Island (Denmark v. Norway), was referred to the Court.

The 1988 activities of the Court were described in two reports to the General Assembly, one covering the period from 1 August 1987 to 31 July 1988⁽²⁾ and the other from 1 August 1988 to 31 July 1989.⁽³⁾ By decision 43/405 of 17 October 1988, the Assembly took note of the 1987/88 report.

Military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua

The question of responsibility for military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua had been before the Court since 1984⁽⁴⁾ when Nicaragua instituted proceedings against the United States. In 1986,⁽⁵⁾ the Court delivered a Judgment by which it found that the United States was obliged to make reparation to Nicaragua for injury caused by breaches of obligations under international law. In 1987, Nicaragua requested the Court to pursue the case as no agreement had been reached between the parties as to the form and amount of reparation.

By a 1987 Order,⁽⁶⁾ the Court fixed time-limits for filing a Memorial (written pleading) by Nicaragua and a Counter-Memorial by the United States. Earlier, the United States had informed the Court of its view that the Court was without jurisdiction to entertain the dispute.

While the Memorial of Nicaragua was duly filed within the time-limit on 29 March 1988, that of the United States was not received by the fixed date, 29 July 1988.

The Secretary-General, in a report to the General Assembly of October 1988,⁽⁷⁾ stated that there had been no new developments in the situation since the Assembly's adoption in 1987⁽⁸⁾ of a resolution calling for compliance with the Judgment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/11 by recorded vote.

Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua: need for immediate compliance

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1989 and 562(1985) of 10 May 1985, and its resolutions 41/31 of 3 November 1986 and 42/18 of 12 November 1987,

Aware that, under the Charter of the United Nations, the International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations and that each Member undertakes to comply with the decision of the Court in any case to which it is a party,

Considering that Article 36, paragraph 6, of the Statute of the Court provides that "in the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court",

Taking note of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua",

Having considered the events that have taken place in and against Nicaragua since the Judgment was rendered, in particular the continued financing by the United States of America of military and other activities in and against Nicaragua,

Emphasizing the obligation of States, under customary international law, not to intervene in the internal affairs of other States,

1. Urgently calls for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua" in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua: need for immediate compliance”.

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras)

In 1986⁽⁹⁾ and 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Court had dealt with border and transborder armed actions between Nicaragua and Honduras, in proceedings instituted by Nicaragua. Nicaragua alleged that Honduras had given assistance to contras who were carrying out armed actions against Nicaragua.

On 21 March 1988, Nicaragua filed with the Court a request for the indication of interim measures of protection; however, it withdrew the request 10 days later. That day, 31 March, the President of the Court made an Order⁽¹¹⁾ recording the withdrawal.

With the agreement of both sides, 6 June 1988 was fixed for the opening of oral proceedings on the issues of jurisdiction and admissibility. At six public meetings thereafter, statements were made on behalf of both States.

On 20 December, the Court delivered a Judgment^(*) on its jurisdiction and the admissibility of the Application, whose operative provisions read as follows:

The Court,

(1) Unanimously,

Finds that it has jurisdiction under Article XXXI of the Pact of Bogota to entertain the Application filed by the Government of the Republic of Nicaragua on 28 July 1986;

(2) Unanimously,

Finds that the Application of Nicaragua is admissible.

Judge Lachs appended a declaration to the Judgment and Judges Oda, Schwebel and Shahabuddeen appended separate opinions.

Request for advisory opinion

In a dispute between the United Nations and its host country, the United States attempted to apply its domestic Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987 in such a manner as to force closure of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to the United Nations. On 2 March 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/229 B, requesting the Court to give an advisory opinion in the matter. The advisory opinion was to clarify the question whether the United States, in the light of facts reflected in 1988 reports of the Secretary-General concerning the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,^(1³) as a party to the 1947 United Nations Headquarters Agreement, was under an obligation to enter into arbitration in accordance with section 21 of that Agreement (see PART FIVE, Chapter V).

By an Order of 9 March 1988,^(1⁴) the Court fixed 25 March 1988 as the time-limit for the submission of written statements by the United Nations and the United States, as well as by any other State party to the Statute of the Court which wished to do so. By the same Order, the Court decided to hold hearings, opening on 11 April 1988, at which oral comments on written statements might be submitted by the United Nations, the United States or other States having presented written statements. Written statements were filed within the time-limit by the United Nations, the United States, the German Democratic Republic and the Syrian Arab Republic.

On 26 April, at a public sitting, the Court delivered its advisory opinion,^(1⁵) the operative part of which read as follows:

The Court,

Unanimously,

Is of the opinion that the United States of America, as a party to the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations of 26 June 1947, is under an obligation, in accordance with section 21 of that Agreement, to enter into arbitration for the settlement of the dispute between itself and the United Nations.

Judge Elias appended a declaration to the advisory opinion. Separate opinions were appended by Judges Oda, Schwebel and Shahabuddeen.

On 13 May, the General Assembly, by resolution 42/232, took note of and endorsed the Court's advisory opinion, urged the host country to abide by its obligations and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure the constitution of the arbitral tribunal provided for under section 21 of the Agreement.

Meanwhile, the United States had initiated legal proceedings in a domestic court in order to obtain judicial authorization to close the PLO Observer Mission as required by the Anti-Terrorism Act. On 29 June, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York rejected the authorization sought by the United States. In his report of 13 September 1988, the Secretary-General welcomed the decision by the United States not to appeal the case, thus bringing to an end the dispute between the United Nations and its host country.

Frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras

El Salvador and Honduras submitted to the Court in 1986 a land, island and maritime frontier dispute; the following year the Court acceded to their request for a special Chamber to deal with the case.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Court fixed 1 June 1988 as the time-limit for the filing of Memorials and both parties complied. The next step in the written proceedings was the filing of Counter-Memorials by 1 February 1989.

Case concerning Elettronica Sicula S.p.A. (United States v. Italy)

In 1987, the United States had instituted proceedings against Italy, arising from Italy's requisition of the plant and related assets of Elettronica Sicula S.p.A. (ELSI), an Italian company stated to be 100 per cent owned by two United States corporations.

By a 1987 Order,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Chamber had fixed 18 March 1988 as the time-limit for the filing of a Reply by the United States to a 1987 Italian Counter-Memorial, and 18 July 1988 for the filing of a Rejoinder by Italy to a 1987 United States Memorial. Both the Reply and the Rejoinder were filed within the prescribed time-limits. Oral proceedings were scheduled to begin in early 1989.

Composition of the Chamber

By an Order of 20 December 1988,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Court decided on the composition of the Chamber, originally constituted in 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ having elected Judge Ruda to fill the vacancy left by the death of Judge Nagendra Singh (see APPENDIX III). By the Rules of Court, Judge Ruda became President of the Chamber.

Maritime delimitation in the area between Greenland and Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway)

On 16 August 1988, Denmark filed in the Registry of the Court an Application instituting proceedings against Norway, stating that, despite negotiations conducted since 1980, a dispute had continued with regard to the delimitation of Denmark's and Norway's fishing zones and continental shelf areas in the waters between the east coast of Greenland and the Norwegian island of Jan Mayen. Denmark therefore requested the Court to decide, in accordance with international law, where a line of delimitation should be drawn in that area.

By an Order of 14 October 1988,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Court fixed 1 August 1989 as the time-limit for the Memorial of Denmark and 15 May 1990 for the Counter-Memorial of Norway.

Chapter II

Legal aspects of international political relations

As part of its continuing efforts to develop legal measures for promoting friendly relations among States, the General Assembly, in December 1988, approved the Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field, as drafted by the Special Committee on the topic (resolution 43/51).

Also in December, the Assembly urged States to observe the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes and stressed the need to settle such disputes through progressive development and codification of international law and through enhancing the role of the United Nations in this field (resolution 43/163). The Assembly decided that its Sixth (Legal) Committee should complete, in 1990, the identification of the elements of good-neighbourliness between States and begin elaborating an international document on strengthening that concept (resolution 43/171 A and B). In addition, the Assembly invited the International Law Commission (ILC) to continue its elaboration of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind (resolution 43/164) and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries to submit such a draft convention in 1989 (resolution 43/168). ILC also continued drafting articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

The Assembly considered that, because of its complexity, additional time should be given to Governments for thorough study of draft articles and for determining their respective positions on the procedure for future work on the international law on most-favoured-nation clauses (decision 43/429).

Maintenance of international peace and security

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, which met in New York from 22 February to 11 March 1988,⁽¹⁾ accorded priority to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, in accordance with a 1987 request of the General Assembly.⁽²⁾ The Committee thus completed in 1988 the draft Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and the Role of the United Nations in this Field and submitted the draft to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/51 without vote.

Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/141 of 19 December 1983, 39/88 of 13 December 1984, 40/78 of 11 December 1985, 41/83 of 3 December 1986 and 42/157 of 7 December 1987,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, which met in New York from 22 February to 11 March 1988 and completed a draft Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field,

Convinced that the adoption of the Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field will contribute towards strengthening the role and enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security,

Considering the need to ensure a wide dissemination of the text of the Declaration,

1. Approves the Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization for its important contribution to the elaboration of the text of the Declaration;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Governments of the States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies, and the Security Council, of the adoption of the Declaration;

4. Urges that every effort be made to ensure that the Declaration becomes generally known and fully implemented.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the important role that the United Nations and its organs can play in the prevention and removal of international disputes and situations which may lead to international friction or give rise to an international dispute, the continuance of which may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security (hereafter: "disputes" or "situations"), within their respective functions and powers under the Charter of the United Nations,

General Assembly resolution 43/51

5 December 1988 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/43/886) without vote, 4 November (meeting 30); 6-nation draft (A/C.6/43/L.6); agenda item 135.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

In 1988, the General Assembly again considered the peaceful settlement of disputes. In this regard, it had before it the Secretary-General's report on implementation of the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes.⁽³⁾ In December, the Assembly urged States to observe the provisions of the Declaration.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its February/March 1988 session,⁽⁴⁾ continued work on the peaceful settlement of disputes and considered proposals on rationalizing the existing procedures of the United Nations.

The question of peaceful settlement of disputes was considered by an open-ended Working Group of the Committee, which examined a working paper originally submitted in 1983 by Nigeria, the Philippines and Romania and revised in 1987 by Romania.⁽⁴⁾ The paper contained a proposal on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations for the peaceful settlement of international disputes, and the Committee issued an informal revised version of that proposal. The original proposal of creating a commission⁽⁵⁾ was considered by the Committee in each of the intervening years. In 1988, following the consideration of the informal proposal, Romania submitted a further revised version. The consensus of the Working Group was that progress on the topic had been achieved and that work on the proposal should continue at the Committee's next session with a view to reaching agreement on conclusions to be submitted to the General Assembly in 1989.

The Working Group also examined a progress report by the Secretary-General on the preparation of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,⁽⁷⁾ which had been initiated at the Assembly's request in 1983. A consultative group had reviewed the drafts prepared by the Secretariat on the portions dealing with inquiry, mediation and conciliation. The Secretary-General explained that the preparation of the handbook had so far been carried out exclusively by regular Secretariat staff. He recognized this was a long-term assignment requiring extensive research and that its implementation had been hampered by the current financial situation of the United Nations.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽⁹⁾ submitted in September 1988 a report with later addenda containing replies received from nine Member States and 10 international intergovernmental organizations on the implementation of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes and on ways and means of increasing its effectiveness. The replies, which included proposals and considerations for a broader implementation of the Declaration, were from Argentina, Botswana, the Federal Republic of Germany (on behalf of the 12 States members of the European Community (EC)), Mexico, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Romania and the USSR. Replies were also received from United Nations specialized agencies, EC and the Council of Europe.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/163 by recorded vote.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States",

Recalling its resolution 37/10 of 15 November 1982, by which it approved the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, annexed thereto,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/131 of 19 December 1983, 39/79 of 13 December 1984, 40/68 of 11 December 1985, 41/74 of 3 December 1986 and 42/150 of 7 December 1987,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of conflict situations and the emergence of new sources of disputes and tension in international life, and especially at the growing tendency to resort to force or the threat of the use of force and to intervention in internal affairs, and at the escalation of the arms race, which gravely endanger the independence and security of States as well as international peace and security,

Taking into account the need to exert the utmost effort in order to settle any situations and disputes between States on the basis of sovereign equality and exclusively by peaceful means, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, and to avoid any military actions and hostilities against other States, which can only make more difficult the solution of existing problems,

Considering that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes should represent one of the central concerns for States and for the United Nations and that efforts for strengthening the process of peaceful settlement of disputes should be continued,

Emphasizing the responsibility of every State to promote a policy of respect for the national independence and sovereignty of other States, non-interference in internal affairs and good understanding and co-operation, which is a basic requirement for reducing tension and for establishing a climate of peace and mutual confidence in the world,

Taking note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with resolution 42/150, which contains useful opinions, proposals and considerations for a broader implementation of the Manila Declaration,

1. Again urges all States to observe and promote in good faith the provisions of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes in the settlement of their international disputes;

2. Stresses the need to continue efforts to strengthen the process of the peaceful settlement of disputes through progressive development and codification of international law and through enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in this field;

3. Calls upon Member States to make full use, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, of the framework provided by the United Nations for the peaceful settlement of disputes and international problems;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a further report containing the replies of Member States, relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and interested international legal bodies on the implementation of the Manila Declaration and on ways and means of increasing the effectiveness of this instrument;

5. Decides that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States shall be considered at its forty-fourth session as a separate agenda item, in conjunction with the item of the provisional agenda entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Good-neighbourliness between States

In December 1988, the General Assembly decided to complete, in 1990, the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness between States and to begin elaborating a suitable international document on the development and strengthening of that concept.

Sub-Committee consideration. On 26 September 1988, the Assembly's Sixth Committee re-established its Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness, in response to a 1987 Assembly request⁽¹⁾ that it complete in 1988 the task of identifying and clarifying good-neighbourliness and begin the elaboration of a suitable international document on the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States. The Sub-Committee held eight meetings in October and November,⁽²⁾ at which it considered its 1987 report⁽³⁾ to the Sixth Committee, containing a list under the heading "Legal and other elements relating to the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness", and two conference room papers by the United Kingdom, containing a proposed amendment and a proposed addition to the list of elements. The list was divided into four major sections: legal and other elements; areas of co-operation; ways and means; and action of international organizations. It was understood that the list was not exhaustive and that the positioning of the points in the list was provisional. The Sub-Committee did not conclude its consideration of proposals regarding the list of elements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted two resolutions on the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States. Resolution 43/171 A was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly.

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as expressed in the Charter of the United Nations, to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, approved by its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature, as well as the scientific and technological advances that have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations, have given new dimensions to good-neighbourliness in the conduct of States and increased the need to develop and strengthen it,

1. Takes note of the report of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness, established by the Sixth Committee during the forty-third session of the General Assembly;

Décides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States".

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as expressed in the Charter of the United Nations, to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, approved by its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Recalling also its resolutions 1236(XII) of 14 December 1957, 1301(XIII) of 10 December 1958, 2129(XX) of 21 December 1965, 34/99 of 14 December 1979, 36/101 of 9 December 1981, 37/117 of 16 December 1982, 38/126 of 19 December 1983, 39/78 of 13 December 1984, 41/84 of 3 December 1986 and 42/158 of 7 December 1987, as well as its decision 40/419 of 11 December 1985,

Bearing in mind that, for various reasons, there are particularly favourable opportunities for co-operation and mutual advantage between neighbouring countries in many fields and various forms, and that the development of such co-operation may have a positive influence on international relations as a whole,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature, as well as the scientific and technological advances that have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations, have given new dimensions to good-neighbourliness in the conduct of States and increased the need to develop and strengthen it,

Taking into account the working papers concerning the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States, as well as the written replies sent by States and international organizations on the content of good-neighbourliness and on ways and means to enhance it, the views expressed by States on this subject and the reports of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness established by the Sixth Committee,

Recalling its opinion that it is necessary to continue to examine the question of good-neighbourliness in order to strengthen and develop its content, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness, and that the results of this examination could be included, at an appropriate time, in a suitable international document,

1. Reaffirms that good-neighbourliness fully conforms with the purposes of the United Nations and shall be founded upon the strict observance of the principles of the United Nations as embodied in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and so presupposes the rejection of any acts seeking to establish zones of influence or domination;

2. Calls once again upon States, in the interest of the maintenance of international peace and security, to develop good-neighbourly relations, acting on the basis of these principles;

3. Reaffirms that the generalization of the long practice of good-neighbourliness and of principles and rules pertaining to it is likely to strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter;

4. Takes note of the report of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness, which functioned within the Sixth Committee during the forty-third session of the General Assembly;

5. Decides to continue and to complete at its forty-fifth session, on the basis of the present resolution and the report of the Sub-Committee, the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness and to begin the elaboration of a suitable international document on the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States within the framework of a sub-committee on good-neighbourliness;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States".

Draft code of crimes against peace and security

In 1988, at its fortieth session,(14) the International Law Commission continued elaborating the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. In December, the General Assembly invited ILC to continue work on the topic, on which ILC had resumed work in 1982⁽¹⁵⁾ and whose title in English had been amended by the Assembly in 1987,⁽¹⁶⁾ replacing the word "offences" by "crimes" in order to achieve greater uniformity and equivalence between different language versions. The draft Code, originally prepared by ILC in 1954⁽¹⁷⁾ in response to a 1947 Assembly request,⁽¹⁸⁾ defined crimes under international law for which the responsible individual was to be punished.

ILC consideration. ILC considered in 1988 the sixth report by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Doudou Thiam (Senegal).⁽¹⁹⁾ The report comprised three parts, of which the first dealt with crimes against peace in the 1954 draft Code, in particular aggression, annexation, the sending of armed bands to the territory of another State, and intervention in the internal and external affairs of a State. The second part covered new characterizations of crimes against peace, in particular colonial domination and mercenarism, while the third part presented draft article 11 on "acts constituting crimes against peace". Following a discussion of the report, ILC decided to refer to the Drafting Committee the new version of draft article 11. After considering the report of the Drafting Committee, ILC provisionally adopted articles 4 (obligation to try or extradite), 7 (non bis in idem), 8 (non-retroactivity), 10 (responsibility of the superior), 11 (official position and criminal responsibility) and 12 (aggression).

The six articles provisionally adopted in 1988 were transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in August.⁽²⁰⁾

In resolution 43/169 on the work of ILC, the Assembly recommended that, taking into account the comments of Governments, ILC should continue its work on the topic.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in August 1988 a report with a later addendum,⁽²¹⁾ containing replies from 11 Governments in response to the Assembly's invitation for views on the 1987 conclusions of ILC.⁽¹⁶⁾

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/164 by recorded vote.

Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind

The General Assembly,

Mindful of Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolution 177(II) of 21 November 1947, by which it directed the International Law Commission to prepare a draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind,

Having considered the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind prepared by the Commission and submitted to the General Assembly in 1954,

Recalling its belief that the elaboration of a code of offences against the peace and security of mankind could contribute to strengthening international peace and security and thus to promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter,

Recalling also its resolution 36/106 of 10 December 1981, in which it invited the Commission to resume its work with a view to elaborating the draft Code and to examine it with the required priority in order to review it, taking into account the results achieved by the process of the progressive development of international law,

Bearing in mind that the Commission should fulfil its task on the basis of early elaboration of draft articles thereof,

Having considered chapter IV of the report of the Commission on the work of its fortieth session,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the subject,

Taking into account the views expressed during the debate on this item at its forty-third session,

Recognizing the importance and urgency of the subject,

1. Invites the International Law Commission to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind including the elaboration of a list of crimes, taking into account the progress made at its fortieth session, as well as the views expressed during the forty-third session of the General Assembly;

2. Notes the approach currently envisaged by the Commission in dealing with the judicial authority to be assigned for the implementation of the provisions of the draft Code, and encourages the Commission to explore further all possible alternatives on the question;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to seek the views of Member States regarding the conclusions contained in paragraph 69 (c) (i) of the Commission's report on the work of its thirty-fifth session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include the views received from Member States in accordance with paragraph 3 above in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind", to be considered in conjunction with the examination of the report of the Commission.

Draft convention against mercenaries

The General Assembly, in 1988, invited the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries to complete its work and to submit a draft convention, if possible in 1989. The question of the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination was also considered in a report by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights. The report examined the current state of international law in the field, noted the lack of rules of positive international law directly condemning mercenary practices and recommended the drafting of an international convention in this respect (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

Ad Hoc Committee consideration. The Ad Hoc Committee against mercenaries held its seventh session in New York from 25 January to 12 February 1988.(22) In addition to documents considered at previous sessions, the Committee had before it draft articles contained in its 1987 report(23) as a second revised consolidated negotiating basis of a convention against mercenaries. In 1988, the Committee established a working group and a drafting group, both of which met during the session. The Committee recognized the progress made in 1988 in preparing the third revised consolidated negotiating basis and recommended that the Assembly invite the Committee to continue work in 1989 with the goal of drafting, at the earliest possible date, an international convention.

The Committee's 1988 report(22) included the report of the working group, a statement by the drafting group's Chairman, a draft preamble proposed by the Committee's Chairman and the third revised consolidated negotiating basis of a convention against mercenaries. On 12 February, the report was approved by the Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/168 without vote.

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions, particularly resolutions 2395(XXIII) of 29 November 1968, 2465(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970 and 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, and its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as Security Council resolutions 405(1977) of 14 April 1977, 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, 496(1981) of 15 December 1981 and 507(1982) of 28 May 1982, in which the United Nations denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling in particular its resolution 42/155 of 7 December 1987, by which it decided to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries,

Bearing in mind the need for strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind also that every State has the duty to refrain from organizing or encouraging the organization of irregular forces or armed bands, including mercenaries, for incursion into another State,

Recognizing that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries by States is contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force, non-intervention in the internal affairs, territorial integrity or political independence of other States, and seriously impedes the process of self-determination of people struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Bearing in mind the pernicious impact that the activities of mercenaries have on international peace and security,

Considering that the progressive development and codification of the rules of international law on the activities of mercenaries would contribute immensely to the implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Welcoming the wide and effective participation of members of the Ad Hoc Committee in the work of the Committee and the participation of a large number of observers in that work,

Taking into account the work done so far by the Ad Hoc Committee,

Reaffirming the need for the conclusion, at the earliest possible date, of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

2. Decides to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee with a view to completing as soon as possible a draft international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in the fulfilment of its mandate, to use the draft articles contained in chapter III of its report, entitled "Third revised consolidated negotiating basis of a convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries" as a basis for future negotiation on the text of the proposed international convention;

4. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to take into account the suggestions and proposals of Member States submitted to the Secretary-General on the subject and the views and comments expressed at the fortieth, forty-first, forty-second and forty-third sessions of the General Assembly during the debate in the Sixth Committee devoted to the consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee;

5. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall hold its eighth session from 30 January to 17 February 1989;

6. Also decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including participation in the meetings of its drafting and working groups;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, on a priority basis, the Ad Hoc Committee with any assistance and facilities it may require to hold its eighth session;

8. Reaffirm the importance that pre-session consultations among the members of the Ad Hoc Committee and other interested States may have in facilitating the smooth conduct of its work towards the fulfilment of its task, inter alia, as regards the composition of the Bureau and the organization of work;

9. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to make every effort to submit its final report containing a draft international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries to the General Assembly if possible at its forty-fourth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries".

General Assembly resolution 43/168

The Sixth Committee approved the draft resolution as a whole after retaining the fifth preambular paragraph by 100 votes to 9, with 15 abstentions.

On 8 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/107 on the use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and impede the exercise of the right to self-determination.

Draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses

In 1988, ILC continued work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses,⁽¹⁴⁾ as recommended by the General Assembly in 1987.⁽²⁴⁾ It had before it the fourth report by its Special Rapporteur, Stephen C. McCaffrey (United States),⁽²⁵⁾ containing three chapters—status of work on the topic and plan for future work; exchange of data and information; and environmental protection, pollution and related matters. In chapter I, the Special Rapporteur provided a preliminary outline for the treatment of the topic as a whole: part I (introduction) consisted of articles 1 to 5; part II (general principles) contained articles 6 and 7; part III (new uses and changes in existing uses) contained articles 11 to 15; part IV consisted of a single article, dealing with the exchange of data and information; part V dealt with environmental protection, pollution and related matters; part VI with water-related hazards and dangers; and part VII with the relationship between non-navigational and navigational uses. Under the heading of other matters, the outline contained a list of subjects which would, in the view of the Rapporteur, be more appropriately dealt with in annexes to the draft.

On the recommendation of the Drafting Committee, ILC provisionally adopted 14 articles which it had discussed at previous sessions and which were transmitted in August 1988 to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General.⁽²⁰⁾

Most-favoured-nation clauses

In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁷⁾ containing comments received as at 15 August 1988—from one Member State (Kuwait) and one specialized agency (United Nations Industrial Development Organization)—on the draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses adopted by ILC in 1978,⁽²⁸⁾ on the procedure for completing work on the topic and on the forum for future discussion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, by decision 43/429, took note of the complexity of codification or progressive development of the international law on most-favoured-nation clauses, and considered that additional time should be given to Governments for thorough study of draft articles and for determining their respective positions on the most appropriate procedure for future work, including the forum for further discussion. It decided to take up the question again in 1991.

Chapter III

States and international law

The General Assembly, in December 1988, alarmed by repeated violent acts against diplomatic and consular representatives as well as against representatives to international inter-governmental organizations, urged States to ensure their safety and to prevent such acts (resolution 43/167).

The International Law Commission continued work on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, as well as on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law.

The Secretariat continued its depository functions for agreements deposited with the Secretary-General.

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1988, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: (1) 152 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, (2) with Albania ratifying it in 1988; 42 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality (3) and 52 were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes. (3)

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (4) had 120 parties, with Antigua and Barbuda succeeding and Guinea and Saudi Arabia acceding in 1988; 34 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality (5) and 41 were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes. (5)

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, (6) had 74 States parties, the Netherlands, Oman and the Syrian Arab Republic having acceded in 1988.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution, (7) the Secretary-General requested States to submit information on serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and to inform him of their views with respect to any measures needed to enhance such protection and safety. In August, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report, with later addenda, (8) containing such information and views from 24 States, as well as a list of States parties, as at 9 August 1988, to the relevant conventions (see above).

Australia reported that one person had been convicted for offences related to the November 1986 bombing of the Turkish Consulate at Melbourne, and one violation had occurred at Canberra involving a South African diplomat. Belgium reported that the official investigation into the October 1987 attack perpetrated on a diplomat of the Syrian Arab Republic in Brussels had not been completed.

The Federal Republic of Germany charged Chile with failing to fulfil its international obligation to observe the immunity from jurisdiction of two German diplomats, a Minister Counsellor and a Consul, by initiating judicial proceedings against them. By ignoring diplomatic and consular immunity, the judicial authorities of Chile were, according to the Federal Republic of Germany, violating important provisions of the Vienna Conventions on diplomatic and consular relations. Chile replied that the rulings of its courts in this case did not in any way affect the immunity and jurisdiction referred to in the Vienna Conventions. Chile confirmed its adherence to the principles of international law, and therefore to the provisions of those Conventions. Furthermore, Chile said it would always guarantee the immunity of diplomatic and consular agents accredited in its territory. Chile also reported several violations which took place in 1987 against its diplomatic missions or representatives: an attack in September on its Embassy in Argentina by a group of approximately 400 persons, causing damage to its premises and injuring some policemen; in August, a group of 20 persons forced entry into its Consulate in Amsterdam, Netherlands; in November, a similar attempt was made against its Consulate in Tacna, Peru; in August, the armed robbery of the residence of its naval attaché in Brazil; and in November, the theft of two automobiles belonging to its diplomats in El Salvador and Paraguay.

Mexico reported that a United States national had regularly demonstrated offensive and provocative behaviour against the Mexican Consulate and consular officials in Los Angeles; it added that the United States, in some cases, had not done enough to curb those activities. It further mentioned that the diplomatic missions in Mexico of France, Greece and Denmark had been occupied briefly by non-violent protesters who dispersed quickly once their demands had been heard.

Norway provided information on the September 1987 violent occupation of the Iranian Embassy in Oslo by 11 Iranian citizens and the subsequent sentencing and expelling of the perpetrators from Norway. Cyprus reported that in May 1988 an automobile had been blown up near the Israeli Embassy in Nicosia, killing 4 persons, including the driver, and injuring 16 others. A suspect was arrested the same day. Israel reported three 1988 bomb explosions near its embassies: one in February in Manila, Philippines; another in March in Tokyo, Japan; and the third in May in Nicosia.

Greece reported the killing of a United States naval attache in June 1988 in Athens. Lebanon listed two February 1988 incidents: the damaging of the residence of the Ambassador of Côte d'Ivoire by two hand-grenades, and the looting of the Chancellery of the Moroccan Mission.

In regard to the views on effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular representatives, the Republic of Korea suggested introducing into the existing system of domestic law provisions placing heavy punishment on offenders and increasing security around the premises of diplomatic and consular missions. The Byelorussian SSR felt that international legal guarantees for the entire area of inter-State relations should be improved through the addition of specific measures to strengthen existing international legal instruments, and that work should be continued on the codification and progressive development of diplomatic law. Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Mexico, Poland, the Republic of Korea, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR expressed support for the principles of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular representatives and missions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 43/167 without vote.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Conscious of the need to develop and strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Alarmed by the repeated acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which endanger or take innocent lives and seriously impede the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Concerned at the failure to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Also concerned at the abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, particularly if acts of violence are involved,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate measures as required by international law, including measures of a preventive nature, and to bring offenders to justice,

Welcoming measures already taken by States to this end in conformity with their international obligations,

Convinced that the role of the United Nations, which includes the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in later Assembly resolutions, is important in promoting efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Reaffirming its resolution 42/154 of 7 December 1987,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;

3. Urges States to observe, implement and enforce the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to ensure, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above officially present in territories under their jurisdiction, including practical measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials;

4. Also urges States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above, and to bring offenders to justice;

5. Recommends that States should co-operate closely through, inter alia contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State, with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;

6. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

7. Also calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of their international obligations concerning the protection of the missions or the security of the representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General, when he deems it appropriate, to offer his good offices to the States directly concerned;

8. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General in accordance with the provisions of resolution 42/54;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to issue a report on the item, in accordance with paragraph 12 of resolution 42/154, on an annual basis, as well as to proceed with his other tasks pursuant to the same resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives: report of the Secretary-General".

Status of diplomatic bags and couriers

The International Law Commission (ILC), at its 1988 session,⁽⁹⁾ considered the eighth report⁽¹⁰⁾ of the Special Rapporteur, Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria), on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ 28 Member States and Switzerland⁽¹²⁾ submitted to ILC their views on the set of 33 draft articles dealing with the issue, which had been provisionally adopted by ILC in 1986.⁽¹³⁾

In his report, the Special Rapporteur analysed the observations submitted by Governments and summarized the main trends and proposals for each of the draft articles. After considering the report, ILC referred the draft articles to its Drafting Committee for a second reading, together with the proposals made by the Special Rapporteur and those formulated in the plenary, on the understanding that he could make new proposals to the Committee if he deemed it appropriate.

State immunities, liability and responsibility

In response to the Assembly's 1987 recommendation,⁽¹⁾ ILC, in 1988,⁽²⁾ took up three aspects of international law concerning States: jurisdictional immunities of States and -their property, international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, and State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts.

In December, the Assembly recommended that, taking into account government comments, ILC should continue its work on those topics (resolution 43/169).

Draft articles on State immunities

At its 1988 session, ILC had before it the preliminary report⁽³⁾ of its Special Rapporteur, Motoo Ogiso (Japan), on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, which attempted to analyse the comments of 23 Member States and Switzerland⁽⁴⁾ on a set of 28 draft articles which the Commission had provisionally adopted in 1986.⁽⁵⁾ Comments by five other Member States were received later.⁽⁶⁾

Due to lack of time, ILC was unable to consider the topic, but allowed the Special Rapporteur to introduce his report to expedite its future work. The Rapporteur made comments of a general nature concerning the distinction between two kinds of acts of States, namely acta jure imperii and acta jure gestionis, noting that there were fundamental differences of views in both ILC and in the Assembly's Sixth Committee, as well as in Governments' comments on the conclusion that the jurisdictional immunity could be applied only to the acta jure imperii and not to the acta jure gestionis. The theoretical differences of view were between those countries that favoured the so-called restrictive theory of State immunity and those that supported the absolute theory.

Draft articles on State liability

In 1988, ILC⁽²⁾ continued consideration of draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law. It had before it the fourth report⁽⁷⁾ of the Special Rapporteur on the topic, Julio Barboza (Argentina), containing 10 draft articles. Chapter I (general provisions) contained articles 1 to 5 and chapter II (principles) contained articles 6 to 10. The draft articles dealt with: scope of the articles; use of terms; attribution; relationship between the articles and other international agreements; absence of effect on other rules of international law; freedom of action and the limits thereto; co-operation; participation; prevention; and reparation.

After discussing the articles, ILC referred the articles to its Drafting Committee, together with the comments made by ILC members on specific aspects. It stated that it would welcome the views of Governments on the topic, particularly on the role which risk and harm should play.

Draft articles on State responsibility

In 1988, ILC(2) had before it the preliminary report(8) of its Special Rapporteur, Gaetano Arangio-Ruiz (Italy), on State responsibility, as well as observations on the topic received from one Government,(9) in response to a 1980 General Assembly request.(10)

ILC was unable to consider the topic in 1988 due to lack of time, but allowed the Special Rapporteur to introduce his report to expedite its future work. The report dealt with the remaining Part Two (content, forms and degrees of State responsibility) and Part Three (peaceful settlement of disputes arising from an alleged internationally wrongful act). It also re-examined articles 6 (cessation of an internationally wrongful act of a continuing character) and 7 (restitution in kind) of Part Two.

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

The landmark 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea continued to fulfil its role of establishing a legal order for the seas and oceans. The number of ratifications increased to 37 in 1988 and some 106 States were claiming a territorial sea of 12 nautical miles.

The Secretary-General emphasized that without international law respected by all States, there could be no stable framework for multilateral co-operation in a highly complex world of sovereign nations and conflicting interests. It was natural therefore that States should continue to urge early ratification of, or accession to, the Convention, emphasizing its importance not only for ocean uses and resources, but also for the maintenance of peace and security and the strengthening of international co-operation in many areas.

In November, the General Assembly, by resolution 43/18, noted the progress being made by the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and expressed its satisfaction with the historic 1987 decisions of the Preparatory Commission to register the four pioneer investors sponsored respectively by India, France, Japan and the USSR, and to designate reserved areas for the Authority.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

During 1988, the number of ratifications of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea increased to 37,⁽¹⁾ with the addition of Brazil and Cyprus. The Convention was to enter into force 12 months after receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

The Convention, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982,⁽²⁾ closed for signature in 1984, having received a total of 159 signatures.⁽³⁾

Developments relating to the Convention

In response to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1988⁽⁵⁾ on developments pertaining to the Convention and on the implementation of that resolution. The two-part report gave an overview of developments relating to the law of the sea and outlined the activities of the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea.

The report reflected the increasing concern of the international community with the protection of the global environment and expressed the growing need for enhanced international co-operation to protect the seas and oceans, particularly in relation to international security, economic development and environmental balance. The focus and scope of international co-operation involving ocean issues had also been influenced by the emergence of the new concept of environmentally sound and sustainable development, as well as by new concerns over global climate and ecological balance.

The report stated that the year had seen considerable legislative activity in various intergovernmental forums, particularly on unlawful acts at sea and on environmental protection questions, including those concerning responsibility and liability. In all such cases, the Convention had been instrumental in helping to promote the development of law and policy, and in helping to ensure compatibility in the various related fields of international law.

The Convention continued to receive broad national and international support. States continued to use the Convention not only as a model for enacting their maritime laws and regulations, but as an instrument for providing norms for assessing the validity of maritime claims by other States. In this sense, the Convention fulfilled its role of establishing a legal order for the seas and oceans. At the international level, the Fourth Special Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting on Antarctic Mineral Resources stated that the geographic extent of the continental shelf as referred to in the 1988 Convention on the Regulation of the Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities would be determined by reference to the relevant paragraphs of article 76 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. The Convention had also influenced a number of forums in their work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

The general acceptance of a 12-mile territorial sea, as provided for in the Convention, was acknowledged to be a major contribution to international law, as the move towards establishing or recognizing the 12-mile limit became more widespread. Some 106 States had extended their territorial sea to 12 nautical miles, with Belgium, Ireland and the United Kingdom⁽⁵⁾ being the most recent to have done so.

According to the report, it was established law that, in the exclusive economic zone, a coastal State had sovereign rights for the purposes of exploring and exploiting, conserving and managing the natural resources, whether living or non-living, of the waters superjacent to the sea-bed and of the sea-bed and its subsoil. In addition, the coastal States had jurisdiction in the zone over artificial islands, installations and structures, marine scientific research and the protection and preservation of the marine environment. All other States enjoyed certain basic freedoms of the high seas, including freedom of navigation and overflight, the freedom to lay submarine cables and pipelines, and other internationally lawful uses of the sea related to those freedoms.

In 1988, 90 coastal States had enacted legislation claiming jurisdiction over marine research activities and 24 had promulgated detailed regulations and procedures for those activities within the terms of article 246 of the Convention.⁽⁶⁾

As States continued to implement the norms contained in the Convention, the need to delimit their maritime boundaries became increasingly important. The delimitation of maritime boundaries by the agreement of the coastal States concerned was one of the prescribed modes of settling such disputes and several agreements were concluded in 1988. Among them were agreements between Sweden and the USSR on principles for delimiting sea areas in the Baltic Sea (13 January); between Solomon Islands and Australia establishing certain sea and sea-bed boundaries (11 September); between France and the United Kingdom relating to delimiting the territorial sea in the Strait of Dover (2 November); and between the United Kingdom and Ireland concerning the delimitation of areas of the continental shelf between them (7 November).

However, the International Court of Justice remained seized of the 1986 dispute between El Salvador and Honduras concerning their land, island and maritime frontier.⁽⁷⁾ Likewise, the dispute between Guinea-Bissau and Senegal as to their maritime frontier was still before an arbitral tribunal. Since August 1988, the Court had also been seized of the dispute concerning the delimitation of Denmark's and Norway's fishing zones and continental shelf areas between the east coast of Greenland and the Norwegian island of Jan Mayen.

Other developments relating to the law of the sea reviewed in the report included peaceful uses of the seas, maritime law, world shipping, protection and preservation of the marine environment, marine science and technology, and fisheries management and development.

With respect to peaceful uses of the seas, there was considerable support for the development of a multilateral agreement for the prevention of incidents at sea beyond the territorial sea. Such an agreement would be in addition to those bilateral agreements already existing, including the new 1988 agreement between the Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR concerning the prevention of incidents at sea beyond the territorial sea.

On 20 December 1988, the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances was adopted and article 17 dealt explicitly with illicit traffic by sea.

A draft Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, as well as a draft Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf, were considered at a diplomatic conference convened by the International Maritime Organization (IMO) in Rome in March 1988. On 10 March, the Conference adopted both instruments, which filled an important gap in international law, inasmuch as they dealt with unlawful acts (terrorism) on the high seas that fell outside the crime of piracy, as defined in article 101 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. By June 1988, 23 countries had signed the Convention and 21 had signed the Protocol.

One hundred countries had ratified the 1974 International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS)⁽⁸⁾ and the 1972 Convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.⁽⁹⁾ The Collision Regulations currently applied to 94 per cent of the world's merchant tonnage and SOLAS to 95 per cent. SOLAS had recently been amended to deal directly with roll-on/roll-off ferries, in response to the disaster of the Herald of Free Enterprise in Belgium. One of the most important innovations in the Collision Regulations had been the recognition given to traffic separation schemes. Amendments due to enter into force on 19 November 1989 concerned changes in these schemes, procedures for crossing traffic lanes and the use of in-shore traffic lanes. Other rules concerned the operation of vessels in narrow channels, the conduct of vessels manoeuvre in restricted visibility and provisions concerning vessels constrained by their draught.

Several international 1988 conferences⁽¹⁰⁾ adopted protocols, amending both SOLAS and the 1978 SOLAS Protocol and the 1966 Load Lines Convention⁽¹¹⁾ in order to introduce a Global Maritime Distress and Safety System (GMDSS), and a new harmonized system of survey and certifications for ships. These protocols were expected to enter into force on 1 February 1992. GMDSS had been developed over the course of many years and after a great deal of discussion involving IMO, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) and the International Maritime Satellite Organization (INMARSAT). The basic concept of the system was that search and rescue authorities ashore, as well as shipping in the immediate vicinity of the ship in distress, would be rapidly alerted to a distress incident so that they could assist in a co-ordinated search and rescue operation with the minimum delay. The search itself would also be conducted according to procedures laid down by the 1979 International Convention on Maritime Search and Rescue,⁽¹²⁾ as amplified in the IMO Manual on Search and Rescue. GMDSS, for its part, would provide the means of communication regardless of the area in which the ship was located. The system would also provide emergency and safety communications and maritime safety information, including navigational and meteorological warnings. Although satellites would play an important role through INMARSAT, they would not completely replace existing maritime radio communications.

As at 26 July 1988, 62 Governments had ratified or acceded to the London Dumping Convention (LDC). The current work of the contracting parties was focused on substantial strengthening of the global régime for dumping and incineration at sea, with implications also for the regional dumping protocols. The work done within the LDC framework had broad significance, considering that LDC parties constituted the only specialized global forum for environmental law, outside of IMO meetings on the 1978 Protocol (MARPOL 73/78)⁽¹³⁾ to the 1973 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships,⁽¹⁴⁾ and that dumping issues were in large part a reflection of growing problems with waste management in general. An important feature also of the LDC forum was the role played by its scientific group in developing the scientific aspects of environmental regulatory systems.

Regarding incineration at sea, the 1988 consultative meeting of States parties to LDC agreed that States that had not used this method of disposal should consider alternative land-based options with a view to developing safer and more environmentally acceptable solutions. The meeting also called for an immediate halt to exports of liquid wastes by parties for burning in the waters of non-contracting States. The parties further agreed to take all possible steps to minimize or reduce substantially the marine incineration of noxious liquid wastes by 1 January 1991 and to re-evaluate the situation in 1992, with a view to ending the practice by 31 December 1994. It was further agreed that there were no fundamental inconsistencies between the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and LDC that would suggest the need for amendment. LDC should therefore be interpreted in the light of developments of international law since its adoption in 1972, including those established in part XII of the Convention.

As for fisheries management and development, the 1987 Treaty between the United States and members of the South Pacific Forum Fisheries Agency, covering fishing both inside and outside areas of coastal State jurisdiction, was currently in force by virtue of the United States ratification of 15 June 1988. Similar regional agreements were being sought with other distant water fleets operating in the region. The Committee for Eastern Central Atlantic Fisheries, at its 1988 session, adopted two important management recommendations which froze the harvesting of several stocks (cephalopods, mackerels and horse mackerels) in the northern area and regulated the mesh opening of beach seines in the Gulf of Guinea.

Preparatory Commission

In 1988, the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its sixth session at Kingston, Jamaica, from 14 March to 8 April, and met in New York from 15 August to 2 September.⁽⁵⁾ The major issues considered were the implementation of the obligations of pioneer investors and certifying States under resolution II⁽¹⁵⁾ on the registration of pioneer investors in deep sea-bed mining, adopted in 1982 by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, and the preparation of the rules, regulations and procedures relating to the organs of the Authority.⁽¹⁶⁾

During the period under review, the Preparatory Commission focused its attention on the obligations, flowing from registration, of the pioneer investors and the certifying States. An informal consultation group was established to deal with the implementation of those obligations. It held live meetings and, at the Commission's summer meeting, the issues involved were also discussed in informal consultations between the Commission's Chairman and the various interest groups. The issues related to the training of personnel designated by the Commission (paragraph 12 (a) of resolution II); the implementation of paragraph 12 (a) of resolution II and paragraph 14 of another document⁽¹⁷⁾ related to the exploration of minerals for the Enterprise; and the payment by pioneer investors of an annual fixed fee of $1 million (paragraph 7 (b) of resolution II).⁽¹⁸⁾

The Commission completed consideration of the draft rules of procedure of the Legal and Technical Commission and of the Economic Planning Commission and provisionally approved all, with the exception of those relating to elections, decision-making on questions of substance and observers, and matters which constituted some of the "hard-core issues" before the informal plenary. Draft rules of procedure of the Assembly and of the Council that did not fall under the category of "hard-core issues" were also examined and several were provisionally adopted. The Commission also reviewed draft rules of the Legal and Technical Commission that dealt with special procedures relating to the approval of plans of work. Due note was taken of the relevant provisions in the draft regulations on prospecting, exploration and exploitation of polymetallic nodules in the area,(19) but further consideration of this matter was postponed pending informal consultations to be undertaken by the Chairman.

A February paper(20) prepared by the Secretariat discussed the current status of deep sea-bed exploration and mining technology. Topics examined in the paper included exploration technology, mining technology, technology acquisition and future directions. A comparison of hydraulic mining subsystems and their complexity was contained in the annex.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea to the Commission submitted in March(21) a report on administrative action by the Secretary-General regarding the registration of pioneer investors under resolution II.

Special Commissions

The Preparatory Commission's four Special Commissions continued to work in accordance with their respective mandates.

Developing land-based producer States

The mandate of Special Commission 1 was to study the problems that would be encountered by the developing land-based producer States likely to be most seriously affected by sea-bed mineral production. In April,(22) the Special Commission's Chairman reported on its current work on the following issues: establishment of a compensation fund and/or system; the subsidization of sea-bed mining; the projection of demand, supply and prices for key metals; the categorizing of serious adverse effects of sea-bed production; isolation of the effects of sea-bed production; and the use of quantifiable yardsticks to identify the developing land-based producer States likely to be most seriously affected by sea-bed production. The Special Commission requested the Secretariat to prepare working papers on each of the topics and submit recommendations to the Authority, through the Preparatory Commission.

In his September statement on the progress of the Commission's(23) work, the Special Commission Chairman noted, among other things, that discussion on these topics had identified gaps which needed to be covered in order to fulfil the overall work programme of the Commission. These pertained to: the recycling of copper, nickel, cobalt and manganese, with emphasis on the latter three metals; the substitution of these metals by other metals or materials and vice versa; the projection of future supply, demand and prices for these metals, along with a continuous updating of data on the mineral situation; bilateral trade in these metals, including barter trade; and commodity agreements with relevance for these metals. The statement also took note of the Third Regional Conference on the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa (Kampala, Uganda, June), which addressed the growing difficulties faced by the African mining sector and solutions that might be found through strengthened regional co-operation.

The Enterprise

Special Commission 2, dealing with the establishment of the Enterprise-the Authority's operational arm-allocated much time to its Ad Hoc Working Group on Training, in accordance with the special priority established for the work of this Group, following the registration of the first group of pioneer investors. The Working Group, established in 1987, had succeeded in formulating a set of draft principles and policies that should govern a Preparatory Commission training programme.(24) Other meetings of the Commission were devoted to the item on structure and organization of the Enterprise, for which the Secretariat had prepared a working paper.(25) In April,(26) the Chairman reported on its progress of work, covering three subjects: assumptions; training; and structure and organization of the Enterprise. As for the latter, the Commission again affirmed that the Enterprise, at whatever phase of its development, must be a model organization as regards the competency of its staff, the efficiency of its management, and its ability to respond quickly and effectively to developments in the future sea-bed mining industry. It was again emphasized that its operations and final organizational configuration must await decisions that could only be made by the Enterprise itself.

A further Chairman's September progress report(27) dealt with exploration questions, assumptions about the behaviour of the metals market and training. The experts dwelt at some length on the special environmental problems they envisaged with sea-bed mining. It was pointed out that pollution problems with land-based mining tended to be localized, whereas sea-bed mining had the potential for wide-scale environmental disturbance. In addition, very little was known about the ecology of the deep sea and about the recovery rates of living organisms, which were assumed to be very slow. There was also the problem of pollution from sediment brought to the surface.

Sea-bed mining code

Special Commission 3, which was to prepare the rules, regulations and procedures for the exploration and exploitation of the deep sea-bed, continued its consideration of amendments⁽²⁸⁾ to a document⁽²⁹⁾ on financial terms of contract. The Commission held a first detailed reading⁽³⁰⁾ of the draft regulations on the transfer of technology prepared by the Secretariat,⁽³¹⁾ together with amendments submitted by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.⁽³²⁾ Particular attention was given to the scope of the regulations, the use of terms, undertakings in contracts on the transfer of technology which the contractor was legally entitled to transfer, as well as those technologies that the contractor was not legally entitled to transfer, and the procedure for obtaining technology. In September,⁽³³⁾ the Commission's Chairman stated that the co-sponsors of the amendments agreed that the obligation of the contractor was a last-resort obligation; that the obligation ceased after the tenth year of commercial production by the Enterprise; and that if the obligation was invoked the resulting sale of technology by the contractor was to be at a fair and reasonable price.

A Seminar on the Current Status of Developments in Deep Sea-Bed Mining Technology (18-22 August) was also reviewed, with experts from various countries participating. The Seminar dealt with various aspects of deep-sea mining technology and was held, in part, to assist Special Commission 3 in its consideration of complex technology transfer issues, in particular the availability of deep sea-bed mining technology on the open market.

International Tribunal

Special Commission 4, which was mandated to prepare recommendations for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, completed in 1988⁽³⁴⁾ its article-by-article examination of the draft Headquarters Agreement between the International Tribunal and the host country, the Federal Republic of Germany,⁽³⁵⁾ a revised draft of which was prepared by the Secretariat in August.⁽³⁶⁾ Revised draft Rules of the Tribunal were submitted to the plenary by the Chairman of Commission 4 in February.⁽³⁷⁾ In addition, Commission 4 began examining the draft

Convention/Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the Tribunal.⁽³⁸⁾ It also substantially concluded consideration of procedures to be adopted for the prompt release of vessels and crews. In March,⁽³⁹⁾ the Chairman reported on the August 1987 visit by the Bureau of Special Commission 4 and Secretariat officials to the host country.

The Federal Republic of Germany communicated to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea its intention to hold an international architectural competition for the design and construction of the building to house the Tribunal in Hamburg-Nienstedten. The Government proposed to invite about 20 national and international architects to submit designs. Estimates and assumptions as to the required space and facilities for the building had been made by government authorities in consultation with the United Nations. An international jury was to be established and to make its award in 1989.

The Chairman held informal consultations with interested delegations from all regional groups on matters relating to the seat of the Tribunal, in the event that the Federal Republic of Germany did not accede to the Convention before its entry into force.

Functions of the Secretary-General

Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

Following the consolidation in 1987 of marine affairs activities in the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea (OALOS),⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Office was responsible for implementing major programme 25 of the medium-term plan (1984-1989), comprising programme 1 (Law of the sea), and programme 2 (Economic and technical aspects of marine affairs). In addition, it had been entrusted with certain activities formerly carried out by the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs.⁽⁵⁾

The Office continued to provide integrated services to the Preparatory Commission, a substantial part of which involved the continuous preparation of studies and draft legal texts and the provision of information, data and analysis on matters dealt with by the different bodies of the Commission. Among important developments with regard to the Office's assistance programme was an increasing number of requests from Member States on planning and programming for maritime areas under national jurisdiction. They included requests from Mauritania, Senegal and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Given the comprehensive nature and complexity of the Convention, the Office endeavoured to strengthen its co-operation within the United Nations system. To this end it convened, in July, the first Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Consultation on Ocean Affairs at which 14 organizations and bodies were represented. The consultation was convened on a recommendation of ICSPRO (the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission with UNESCO, IMO, FAO, WMO and OALOS). Because of its limited membership and mandate, ICSPRO felt that a wider forum was needed for consultations encompassing the broad spectrum of marine activities, including a review of global and regional developments. The discussions demonstrated that it was extremely important for the United Nations system to consult regularly on matters of common interest.

The Office was also represented at, and in most cases prepared papers for, numerous meetings of governmental and non-governmental organizations.

The third Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea established by the General Assembly in 1981(41) in honour of the first President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea and financed by voluntary contributions was awarded to Maria Luisa Carvallo, of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Chile.(42) The fellowship, valued at about $20,000, provided six months of post-graduate university study or research and a three-month internship with OALOS.

A new mineral data base (MINDAT) was added to the computerized Law of the Sea Information System, and would also be used for the work of the Preparatory Commission. MINDAT, currently containing 25 categories of information on copper, nickel, manganese and cobalt, by country and with global totals, also detailed the production, consumption and import and export of the minerals in various forms for the period 1971-1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/18 by recorded vote.

Law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Chapter V

Other legal questions

In 1988, the United Nations continued to address various aspects of international law and international economic law.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to give priority to the question of maintaining international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the United Nations role and to continue its work on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States (resolution 43/170).

The Assembly resumed its forty-second (1987) session in 1988 to consider the situation arising from the announced closing by the United States of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) Observer Mission to the United Nations under its 1987 Anti-Terrorism Act. In March, the Assembly considered that a dispute existed between the United Nations and the host country concerning the interpretation or application of the 1947 Headquarters Agreement between the United Nations and the United States. It reaffirmed that the PLO mission was covered by the provisions of that Agreement and called on the host country to abide by it (42/229 A). It also decided to request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice (ICJ) as to whether the United States was obliged to enter into arbitration under the Agreement (42/229 B).

In November, the United States refused an entry visa for PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat to enable him to participate in the forty-third (1988) session of the Assembly. In December, the Assembly deplored the failure of the host country to respond favourably to its request to reverse the decision (43/48) and decided to consider the question of Palestine at the United Nations Office at Geneva from 13 to 15 December (43/49).

The Assembly recommended that the International Law Commission-responsible for the progressive development and codification of international law-continue working on all topics in its current programme (43/169).

The Assembly also called on States concerned to accord to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or the League of Arab States the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for their functioning and decided that PLO and the South West Africa People's Organization were entitled to have their communications relating to the General Assembly issued and circulated without intermediary, as official Assembly documents (43/160 B).

Legal aspects of international economic law and the new international economic order continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the Sixth (Legal) Committee of the General Assembly. In December, the Assembly adopted and opened for signature or accession the United Nations Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, thereby putting the seal on more than 16 years of work by UNCITRAL (43/165). The Assembly recommended that UNCITRAL continue working on the topics in its work programme (43/166) and that the Sixth Committee make a final decision at the forty-fourth (1989) session of the Assembly on the appropriate forum to complete the codification and progressive development of the legal principles and norms relating to the new international economic order (43/162).

International organizations and international law

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

The Secretary-General, in his annual report on the work of the Organization, noted that on matters of international peace and security, the principal organs of the United Nations increasingly functioned as envisaged in the Charter. The working relationship of the Security Council and the Secretary-General had rarely if ever been closer. He stated that a number of international problems -Afghanistan, Cambodia, Cyprus, Iran-Iraq, Namibia and Western Sahara-in their different contexts, had moved towards solutions in consonance with the principles of the Charter. He observed that during the first four decades of its existence, the United Nations had been unable to put in place the reliable system of collective security that its Charter envisaged because developments during the early years of the Organization went contrary to expectations. However, if the United Nations was often brought to an impasse in maintaining international peace and security by the inability of permanent members of the Security Council to develop a common approach, the Organization had not allowed this to block its endeavours. With ingenuity and realism, it had found other ways of at least defusing conflicts. If, in one aspect, the United Nations had fallen short of the Charter's objectives, it had kept pace with, and often served as a catalyst to, rapid and peaceful change in other respects. Even when politically disabled by differences among permanent Council members, it had displayed a capacity for innovation, and had played a role that on no reckoning could be considered peripheral.

The Secretary-General said that while the great Powers, like other nations, normally resolved or reduced their differences through negotiations outside the United Nations, they needed the Organization to come to grips with issues that concerned other nations and that, in one way or another, impinged on their own relationships as well. All this argued for greater, not less, support for the United Nations. He stressed the need to adjust political attitudes on all sides to the double requirement of making United Nations resolutions more purposeful and of respecting them as genuine expressions or reminders of widely shared concerns.

Noting that there had been a reassuring and unanimous interest in restoring the Security Council's peacemaking capacity, the Secretary-General emphasized that the Council's effectiveness required that all Member States give it their full support, not only by accepting an agreed determination, but also by providing full diplomatic backing for it.

The Secretary-General said that while United Nations peace-keeping had proved to be a necessity in many conflicts, success depended not only on the consent of the parties, but also on: consistent support for the Council; a clear and practical mandate; the readiness of Member States to volunteer troops; and adequate financial arrangements. A cohesive approach in the spirit of the Charter, regardless of differences of perception, interest or ideology, was indispensable for resolving conflicts. Peace-keeping, however, could only be a palliative if it did not serve as a prelude to, or accompany negotiations towards, a comprehensive settlement.

The Secretary-General said that the Charter obligation of settling international disputes by peaceful means in conformity with the principles of justice and international law would imply that these disputes be kept under constant review by the Security Council.

The principle that treaties must be complied with in good faith was basic to the Charter, he said. Respect for international agreements was not only a fundamental principle of international law, it was the foundation of the organized international community. If this principle were abandoned, the superstructure of contemporary international law and organization, including the functioning of the United Nations, the effectiveness of its decisions and resort to international arbitration or judicial settlement of disputes, would collapse. It was thus in the equal interest of all States to work towards a world where nations would operate within a complete, coherent and viable system of law. The Secretary-General appealed to Governments to refer justiciable cases to the International Court of Justice (ICJ).

The Secretary-General welcomed the resolution by the Economic and Social Council on its revitalization which, when implemented, could greatly enhance its ability to give policy guidelines as well as to monitor and co-ordinate the economic and social activities of the United Nations system.

He stressed that the financial health of the Organization needed to be immediately restored. The impact of the Organization's financial crisis was heightened by increasing responsibilities for peace-making and peace-keeping. He asked that the General Assembly urgently consider both the cash and reserves aspects of the crisis, including new ways of raising money.

Activities of the Special Committee. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization⁽¹⁾ convened in accordance with a resolution by the General Assembly of 1987⁽²⁾ (New York, 22 February-11 March) to consider proposals on the maintenance of international peace and security, and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States. It also had before it a progress report on a draft handbook on peaceful dispute settlement (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

The Special Committee's Working Group considered a draft document on the prevention and removal of threats to 'peace and of situations that might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute. Its deliberations were based on paragraphs which were provisionally adopted at its 1987 session.⁽³⁾ The Committee subsequently submitted the draft Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and the Role of the United Nations in this Field to the Assembly, which considered and adopted it as resolution 43/51 (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

The Working Group also had before it a further revised 1987 working paper on the rationalization of existing United Nations procedures, first submitted in 1985⁽⁴⁾ by France and the United Kingdom. In presenting the paper, one of the co-sponsors indicated that, if annexed to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, it would contribute to the efficiency of the Assembly's work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 43/170 without vote.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its relevant resolutions adopted at subsequent sessions,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization on the work of its session held in 1988,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Special Committee for the progress achieved during its 1988 session, which led to the completion of the draft Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field, and for submitting it to the General Assembly at its forty-third session for adoption,

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to render all assistance to the Special Committee;

9. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Publication of Repertories of Practice

Pursuant to a request by the General Assembly of 1981(5) that the Secretary-General give priority to updating the supplements to the Repertory Of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council, a March 1988 note by the Secretariat(6) to the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization—updating a corresponding note of 1987(7)—gave the current status of work on the above publications.

According to the note, Supplement No. 5 of the Repertory (covering 1970-1978) was completed, with three volumes having been published in English and the two remaining volumes being scheduled for publication in English in 1989. Regarding Supplement No. 6 (covering 1979-1984), the preliminary draft of one volume was completed and the drafting of another volume was near completion. The Supplement for 1975-1980 of the Repertoire was published in English in 1987 and its French version was scheduled for publication in 1989. The manuscripts for the Supplement for 1981-1984 were close to completion. It was noted that publication of the Repertoire, as with the Repertory, depended on the continued availability of financial and human resources. Reductions in both had already affected the preparatory work.

Host country relations

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of 1987,(8) the Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to devote attention to relations between the United Nations diplomatic community and the United States, its host country. At five meetings between 5 May and 23 November,(9) the Committee considered: the security of missions and the safety of their personnel; the question of privileges and immunities; and matters relating to transportation. In connection with the implementation of the 1947 Headquarters Agreement between the United Nations and the United States,(10) the Committee discussed: host country legislation concerning the use of the premises of foreign missions; travel regulations; entry visas; the acceleration of immigration and customs procedures; the possibility of establishing a commissary at United Nations Headquarters to assist diplomatic personnel and staff; and the advisory opinion of ICJ of 26 April 1988 (see below, under "Relations between the host country and PLO"; for the ICJ advisory opinion, see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

On 5 May, Bulgaria and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya drew the Committee's attention to travel restrictions imposed by the host country on members and dependants of their respective missions. B letters of 9 June,(11) 25 July(12) and 7 November,(13) Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland brought to the attention of the Secretary-General the fact that, in a note verbale of 18 May, the United States had advised those missions, in addition to the mission of Albania, that, with immediate effect, their personnel and dependants were required to submit, in writing, requests for travel beyond a 25-mile radius outside New York City. Although the Permanent Representatives and their families were exempt from such notification, they were required to use the Foreign Missions Service for booking public transportation and accommodation. In their joint letters, they called for the Secretary-General's active assistance and intervention with the relevant United States authorities to have those measures revoked. By notes verbales dated 22 August and 20 September, the United States advised Hungary and Romania that similar travel regulations would apply to the personnel of their missions, effective 29 August and 20 September, respectively.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya complained in May about delays in the issuance of visas for members of its delegation to attend official United Nations meetings. The United States replied that a long-standing government policy required 10 to 15 working days for the processing of single-entry visas. The Committee considered a letter of 22 September by Nicaragua(14) denouncing the refusal by the United States to grant entry visas to a significant number of members of its delegation to the forty-third (1988) session of the General Assembly, to be headed by President Ortega. It stated that, in the light of that action, President Ortega had been obliged to cancel his visit to the Assembly. In response, the United States denied attempting to influence the composition of the Nicaraguan delegation. The representative of the United States said that 67 individuals had requested visas and 30 visas had been authorized and delivered before President Ortega announced he would not participate in the session. There was no question that President Ortega had the right to speak before the Assembly.

Among its recommendations and conclusions, the Committee urged the host country to take all necessary measures to prevent criminal acts, including harassment and activities that violated the security of missions and the safety of their personnel or their property, and to apprehend, bring to justice and punish all those responsible for criminal acts against missions accredited to the United Nations. Regarding travel regulations, the Committee urged the United States to continue honouring its obligations to facilitate the functioning of the United Nations and its missions. It suggested that the Secretariat and others work together to solve outstanding difficulties concerning unpaid bills by certain missions, and appealed to the host country to review the measures relating to diplomatic vehicles with a view to responding to the needs of the diplomatic community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/172 without vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations,

Recalling also that the problems related to the privileges and immunities of all missions accredited to the United Nations, the security of the missions and the safety of their personnel are of great importance and concern to Member States, as well as the primary responsibility of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Conscious of the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 81 of its report;

2. Reaffirms its condemnation of any criminal acts violating the security of missions accredited to the United Nations and the safety of their personnel;

3. Urges the host country to take all necessary measures to continue to prevent criminal acts, including harassment and violations of the security of missions and the safety of their personnel or infringements of the inviolability of their property, in order to ensure the existence and functioning of all missions, including practicable measures to prohibit illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts and activities against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

4. Reiterates its request to the parties concerned to follow consultations with a view to reaching solutions to the issues raised by certain Member States concerning the size of their missions, in accordance with the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and in the spirit of co-operation;

5. Urges the host country, in the light of the consideration by the Committee of travel regulations issued by the host country, to continue to honour its obligations to facilitate the functioning of the United Nations and the missions accredited to it;

6. Stresses the importance of a positive perception of the work of the United Nations, expresses concern about a negative public image and, therefore, urges that efforts be continued to build up public awareness by explaining, through all available means, the importance of the role played by the United Nations and the missions accredited to it in the strengthening of international peace and security;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country and to continue to stress the importance of effective measures to avoid acts of terrorism, violence and harassment against the missions and their personnel, as well as the need for any pertinent legislation adopted by the host country to be in accord with the Agreement and its other relevant obligations;

8. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

Relations between the host country and PLO

Responding to requests by Bahrain for the Arab Group (19 February),(15) Zimbabwe for the Non-

Aligned Countries (22 February),(16) Kuwait on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (22 February)(17) and the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (24 February),(18) the Assembly reconvened in 1988 its forty-second (1987) session (29 February to 13 May) to complete consideration of relations with the host country.

Apprised of action being considered in the United States that might impede maintenance of the PLO Observer Mission to the United Nations, the General Assembly had, by a resolution of 1987,(19) reiterated that the PLO Mission was covered by the 1947 Headquarters Agreement between the United Nations and the United States(10) and requested the host country to abide by its obligations under the Agreement. Pursuant to that resolution, which also requested the Secretary-General to take effective measures to ensure full respect for the Agreement, the Secretary-General reported on the matter on 10 February 1988.(20)

The report stated that, on 5 January, the United States confirmed that the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989, Title X, the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987, which inter alia prohibited PLO from maintaining offices within the United States, signed on 22 December 1987 by President Reagan, would take effect 90 days thereafter. On 14 January, the Secretary-General pointed out to the United States that, as the assurance he had sought since December 1987 regarding existing arrangements for the PLO Observer Mission had not been forthcoming, it had to be concluded that a dispute existed between the United Nations and the United States concerning interpretation and application of the Headquarters Agreement. Accordingly, he invoked the Agreement's dispute settlement procedure and proposed that the negotiations phase commence on 20 January, while a series of legal consultations between the United Nations and the United States which had begun on 7 January should continue.

In the course of those consultations, the United Nations Legal Counsel was informed that the United States was unwilling to enter formally into the dispute settlement procedure and had not yet concluded that a dispute existed between it and the United Nations. Its Executive Branch was examining the possibility of interpreting the law in conformity with its obligations under the Agreement, or alternatively providing assurances that would set aside the 90-day period for the legislation's entry into force. The position presented by the United Nations Legal Counsel was that the question was one of compliance with international law. The Headquarters Agreement, he said, was a binding international instrument which was being violated by the United States legislation in question. The Secretary-General stated on 2 February that the procedure laid out in section 21 of the Agreement was the only legal remedy available to the United Nations in the matter.

In a follow-up report of 25 February,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that, on 11 February, the Legal Counsel had communicated to the United States the United Nations choice of Eduardo Jiménez de Aréchaga, the former President of ICJ, as arbitrator. No communication was thus far received from the United States regarding its choice of an arbitrator.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

The General Assembly, on 2 March 1988, adopted resolution 42/229 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 10 and 25 February 1988,

Recalling its resolution 42/210 B of 17 December 1987,

Reaffirming the applicability to the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York of the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, dated 26 June 1947,

Having been apprised of the provisions of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989, which was signed on 22 December 1987, Title X of which establishes certain prohibitions regarding the Palestine Liberation Organization, inter alia, a prohibition "to establish or maintain an office, headquarters, premises, or other facilities or establishments within the jurisdiction of the United States at the behest or direction of, or with funds provided by the Palestine Liberation Organization or any of its constituent groups, any successor to any of those, or any agents thereof",

Bearing in mind that that provision takes effect on 21 March 1988,

Taking note of the position of the Secretary-General in which he concluded that a dispute existed between the United Nations and the United States of America concerning the interpretation or application of the Agreement,

Noting that the Secretary-General invoked the dispute settlement procedure set out in section 21 of the Agreement and proposed that the negotiations phase of the procedure commence on 20 January 1988,

Noting also from the report of the Secretary-General of 10 February 1988 that the United States was not in a position and was not willing to enter formally into the dispute settlement procedure under section 21 of the Agreement, that the United States was still evaluating the situation, and that the Secretary-General had sought assurances that the present arrangements for the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization would not be curtailed or otherwise affected,

Affirming that the United States of America, the host country, is under a legal obligation to enable the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to establish and maintain premises and adequate functional facilities and to enable the personnel of the Mission to enter and remain in the United States to carry out their official functions,

1. Supports the efforts of the Secretary-General and expresses its great appreciation for his reports;

2. Reaffirms that the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York is covered by the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and that it should be enabled to establish and maintain premises and adequate functional facilities and that the personnel of the Mission should be enabled to enter and remain in the United States of America to carry out their official functions;

3. Considers that the application of Title X of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989, in a manner inconsistent with paragraph 2 above would be contrary to the international legal obligations of the host country under the Agreement;

4. Considers that a dispute exists between the United Nations and the United States of America, the host country, concerning the interpretation or application of the Agreement, and that the dispute settlement procedure set out in section 21 of the Agreement should be set in operation;

5. Calls upon the host country to abide by its treaty obligations under the Agreement and to provide assurance that no action will be taken that would infringe on the current arrangements for the official functions of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue in his efforts in pursuance of the provisions of the Agreement, in particular section 21 thereof, and to report without delay to the Assembly;

7. Decides to keep the matter under active review.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 42/229 B, also by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/210 B of 17 December 1987 and bearing in mind its resolution 42/229 A above,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 10 and 25 February 1988,

Affirming the position of the Secretary-General that a dispute exists between the United Nations and the host country concerning the interpretation or application of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, dated 26 June 1947, and noting his conclusions that attempts at amicable settlement were deadlocked and that he had invoked the arbitration procedure provided for in section 21 of the Agreement by nominating an arbitrator and requesting the host country to nominate its own arbitrator,

Bearing in mind the constraints of time that require the immediate implementation of the dispute settlement procedure in accordance with section 21 of the Agreement,

Noting from the report of the Secretary-General of 10 February 1988 that the United States of America was not in a position and was not willing to enter formally into the dispute settlement procedure under section 21 of the Agreement and that the United States was still evaluating the situation,

Taking into account the provisions of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, in particular Articles 41 and 68 thereof,

Decides, in accordance with Article 96 of the Charter of the United Nations, to request the International Court of Justice, in pursuance of Article 65 of the Statute of the Court, for an advisory opinion on the following question, taking into account the time constraint:

In the light of facts reflected in the reports of the Secretary-General, is the United States of America, as a party to the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, under an obligation to enter into arbitration in accordance with section 21 of the Agreement?

Also on 2 March, the Assembly, by decision 42/461, decided to keep the matter under active review, to permit expeditious consideration should developments so require, upon receipt of the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 6 of resolution 42/229 A.

The Secretary-General reported on 11 March(22) that the United States Attorney General had informed him in a letter of the same date that he was required by the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987 to close the office of the Permanent Observer Mission of PLO to the United Nations irrespective of any obligations the United States might have under the Headquarters Agreement. Under the circumstances, the United States believed that submission of the matter to arbitration would not serve a useful purpose. The Secretary-General protested to the United States on 16 March⁽²³⁾ that the United States decision constituted a clear violation of the Headquarters Agreement, raising serious implications given the responsibilities of the United States as the host country. He could not accept that the United States might act irrespective of its obligations under the Agreement.

The Secretary-General further noted that on 11 March the Permanent Observer of PLO was notified by the United States Attorney General that, as at 21 March, maintenance of the PLO Mission would be unlawful and, should PLO fail to comply with the requirements of the 1987 Anti-Terrorism Act, the Department of Justice would take action in Federal Court to ensure compliance. With regard to the request for an advisory opinion of ICJ contained in resolution 42/229 B, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that on the same date he and the Legal Counsel transmitted to the Court certified texts of that resolution and the request for an advisory opinion. The Registrar of ICJ transmitted on 9 March to the Secretary-General a Court order, inviting him to supply relevant documents at the earliest possible date and fixing the time-limit for the submission of written statements by the United Nations, the United States and other parties to the ICJ Statute at 25 March.

On 18 March,⁽²⁴⁾ Tunisia requested the Secretary-General to have circulated, as an official document of the Assembly, the text of the Headquarters Agreement. On 22 March,⁽²⁵⁾ it transmitted the text of a letter to the Secretary-General by which the Permanent Observer of PLO had informed the United States on 14 March that PLO maintained its Mission in pursuance of resolutions by the Assembly of 1974,⁽²⁷⁾ 1987⁽²⁷⁾ and 1988 (resolution 42/229 A, see above), and was in no sense accredited to the United States but present in the United States solely as invitees of the United Nations within the meaning of the Headquarters Agreement. Also annexed to Tunisia's communication was a letter of 14 March by the United States Attorney General, notifying the Permanent Observer of PLO that the United States Congress had chosen, irrespective of international law, to ban the presence of all PLO offices in the country. In discharging his obligation to enforce the law, the only responsible course was to respect and follow that decision.

ICJ advisory opinion

On 29 April,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General forwarded to the Assembly the advisory opinion of 26 April of the International Court of Justice on the applicability of the obligation to arbitrate under section 21 of the United Nations Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947, as requested by the Assembly in its resolution 42/229 B (see above). The advisory opinion unanimously determined that the United States was under an obligation to enter into arbitration for settling the dispute between itself and the United Nations (see PAR? FIVE, Chapter I). In May, the Assembly endorsed the Court's advisory opinion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 23 March 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/230 by recorded vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 11 and 16 March 1988.

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, the provisions of Chapter XVI,

Recalling its resolutions 42/210 B of 17 December 1987 and 42/229 A and B of 2 March 1988,

Recalling that the United Nations was created with the aim, inter alia, as defined in the Charter, "to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained",

Recalling that the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, dated 26 June 1947, was drawn up in accordance with the Charter, in particular Articles 28 and 105 thereof,

Concerned that the application to and enforcement against the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York of Title X of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989, would impede the realization of the aims of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation to the International Court of Justice for having unanimously adopted an order on 9

March 1988 accelerating its procedure on the request submitted by the General Assembly for its advisory opinion on "the applicability of the obligation to arbitrate under section 21 of the United Nations Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947",

Expressing grave concern about the attitude of the Government of the host country as expressed in the letter dated 11 March 1988 from the Acting Permanent Representative of the United States of America to the Secretary-General, which states, inter alia, that "the Attorney General of the United States has determined that he is required by the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987 to close the office of the Palestine Liberation Organization Observer Mission to the United Nations in New York, irrespective of any obligations the United States may have under the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations",

Expressing serious alarm at the warning contained in that letter that "if the PLO does not comply with the Act, the Attorney General will initiate legal action to close the PLO Observer Mission on or about March 21 1988",

1. Strongly supports the position taken by the Secretary-General and expresses its great appreciation for his reports;
2. Reaffirms that the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York is covered by the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and that the Palestine Liberation Organization has the right to establish and maintain premises and adequate functional facilities and that the personnel of the Mission should be enabled to enter and remain in the United States to carry out their official functions;
3. Affirms the crucial importance of the Agreement and consequently the arrangements mentioned in paragraph 2 above concerning the functioning of the organs of the United Nations, including the General Assembly, at Headquarters in New York;
4. Determines that the application to and enforcement against the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York of Title X of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989, is inconsistent with paragraph 2 above and is contrary to the international legal obligations of the host country under the Agreement;
5. Reaffirms that a dispute exists between the United Nations and the United States of America, the host country, concerning the interpretation or application of the Agreement, and that the dispute settlement procedure provided for under section 21 of the Agreement, which constitutes the only legal remedy to solve the dispute, should be set in operation, and requests the host country to name its arbitrator to the arbitral tribunal;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure the proper constitution of the arbitral tribunal provided for under section 21 of the Agreement;
7. Deplores the failure of the host country to comply with its obligations under the Agreement;
8. Urges the host country to abide by its international legal obligations and to desist from taking any action inconsistent with paragraph 2 above;
9. Notes the fact that, within the text of its order, the International Court of Justice on 9 March 1988 took note of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 42/229 A;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take adequate measures on a preliminary basis, if necessary, in order to ensure the discharge of the official functions of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the United Nations in New York;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly without delay on developments in this matter;

12. Decides to keep the matter under active review.

On the same date, the Assembly decided that consultations would continue on reconvening the Assembly before 11 April to resume consideration of the relations with the host country (decision 42/462).

Responding to the request contained in resolution 42/230, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on 11 May (29) that he had, on 24 March, authorized the Legal Counsel to present written and oral statements on his behalf to ICJ on its advisory opinion of 26 April concerning the applicability of the obligation to arbitrate under the Headquarters Agreement. Subsequently, the Legal Counsel made an oral statement to the Court on 11 April and answered questions at a public sitting on 12 April.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (May)

On 13 May 1988, the General Assembly adopted resolution 42/232 by recorded vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having requested, in its resolution 42/229 B of 2 March 1988, an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice regarding the applicability of the obligation to arbitrate under section 21 of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, dated 26 June 1947,

Having noted that, in its advisory opinion of 26 April 1988, the Court was unanimously of the opinion that "the United States of America, as a party to the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations of 26 June 1947, is under an obligation, in accordance with section 21 of that Agreement, to enter into arbitration for the settlement of the dispute between itself and the United Nations",

Having noted also that the Court pointed out that "the purpose of the arbitration procedure envisaged by that Agreement is precisely the settlement of such disputes as may arise between the Organization and the host country without any prior recourse to municipal courts, and it would be against both the letter and the spirit of the Agreement for the implementation of that procedure to be subjected to such prior recourse",

Having noted also that the Court recalled "the fundamental principle of international law that international law prevails over domestic law",

1. Expresses its appreciation to the International Court of Justice for having "found that an early answer to the request" submitted by the General Assembly on 2 March 1988 "for advisory opinion would be desirable", and for having accelerated its procedure on the said request;

2. Takes note of and endorses the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 26 April 1988, concerning the applicability of the obligation to arbitrate under section 21 of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, dated 26 June 1947;

3. Urges the host country to abide by its international legal obligations and to act consistently with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 26 April 1988, and accordingly to name its arbitrator to the arbitral tribunal provided for under section 21 of the Agreement;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure the constitution of the arbitral tribunal provided for under section 21 of the Agreement;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly without delay on developments in this matter;

6. Decides to keep the matter under active review.

Legal proceedings

As requested by resolution 42/232, the Secretary-General communicated to the Assembly in September(30) that, at the time of the adoption of that resolution, the United States had already initiated legal proceedings in domestic court against PLO(29) to obtain judicial authorization to close its Observer Mission as required under the 1987 Anti-Terrorism Act. On 8 June, the United States District Court heard arguments of counsel in the case United States of America v. The Palestine Liberation Organization, et al. At that hearing the United Nations was formally admitted as amicus curiae in the case.

On 29 June, the District Court rejected the authorization sought by the United States. The Court noted that United States statutes and treaties were both supreme law of the land and that its Constitution set forth no order of precedence to differentiate between them. In the present case, the Court found that the Headquarters Agreement obligated the United States to allow PLO transit, entry and access to the United Nations, in addition to the use of offices. The 1987 Anti-Terrorism Act did not alter the United States obligations under the Agreement for it failed to disclose the clear legislative intent necessary for the Court to act in its contravention. The Court further rejected the argument that it should defer to the advisory opinion of ICJ regarding the United States obligation to arbitrate.

After the United States announced on 29 August that it had decided not to appeal the Court's decision, the Secretary-General concluded that the dispute between the United Nations and its host country concerning the PLO Observer Mission had thus come to an end.

Visa application of PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat

On 23 November, the attention of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country³¹⁾ was drawn by the PLO Permanent Observer to the fact that, on 8 December, the General Assembly would begin its debate on Palestine and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, intending to participate in that debate, would submit the appropriate forms for an entry visa into the United States. On 28 November, the Committee discussed the denial by the United States of the visa to Yasser Arafat, to permit the PLO Chairman to attend the forty-third (1988) session of the Assembly.

The United States explained in the Committee that there was evidence that PLO was engaged in terrorism against the United States after it had forsworn terrorism in 1985. Having evidence that Yasser Arafat knew of and condoned terrorism against the United States, the Government had denied him a visa. This was consistent with the Headquarters Agreement. The United Nations Legal Counsel noted⁽³²⁾ a difference of opinion between the United Nations and the United States on the legal character and validity in international law of the so-called security reservation contained in United States public law. Yasser Arafat's visa application was solely to allow him to visit the United Nations Headquarters district and fell within the scope of sections 11, 12 and 13 of the Headquarters Agreement, which provided that invitees of the United Nations should not be impeded in their access to the Headquarters district irrespective of the state of bilateral relations with the host country. The United States Department of State did not make the point that the presence of the PLO Chairman in the United States would per se in any way threaten the country's security. He expressed the opinion that the host country was under obligation to grant the visa request of the Chairman of PLO.

In summing up the debate, the Committee Chairman concluded that the majority of speakers had expressed the opinion that denial of the application violated the Headquarters Agreement and the host country should be asked to urgently review and reverse its decision to enable Yasser Arafat to participate in the Assembly debate as scheduled.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November)

On 30 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/48 by roll-call vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 2 December, the General Assembly, in adopting resolution 43/49 by recorded vote, decided to meet in plenary at the United Nations Office at Geneva to consider the question of Palestine, during which PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat addressed the Assembly.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/48 of 30 November 1988, in which, inter alia, it urged the host country to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, dated 26 June 1947, and to reconsider and reverse its decision to deny the visa requested for Mr. Yasser Arafat, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization,

Observer status of national liberation movements

In accordance with a resolution by the General Assembly of 1986,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General issued, in October 1988, a report with later addenda⁽³⁵⁾ containing replies from Czechoslovakia, the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia on the implementation of the resolution concerning the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States. By the 1986 resolution, the Assembly had urged all States to accede to the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character,⁽³⁶⁾ and requested those States hosting international organizations or conferences to accord the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions to delegations of national liberation movements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted two resolutions on the matter. Resolution 43/160 A was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/167 of 15 December 1980, 37/104 of 16 December 1982, 39/76 of 13 December 1984 and 41/71 of 3 December 1986,

Desirous of enhancing the effective role played by these national liberation movements,

1. Decides that the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization are entitled to have their communications relating to the sessions and work of the General Assembly issued and circulated directly, and without intermediary, as official documents of the Assembly;

2. Decides also that the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization are entitled to have their communications relating to the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under the auspices of the General Assembly of the United Nations issued and circulated directly, and without intermediary, as official documents of these conferences;

3. Authorizes the Secretariat to issue and circulate as official documents of the United Nations, under the appropriate symbol of other organs or conferences of the United Nations, communications submitted directly, without intermediary, by the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization, on matters relative to the work of these organs and conferences;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps for the implementation of the present resolution.

Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of 1986,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in October 1988, a report⁽³⁸⁾ on co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC), an organization which the Assembly, had invited in 1980⁽³⁹⁾ to participate in its sessions and work in the capacity of a permanent observer.

The report reviewed the activities of the Committee in the context of a 1987 programme of co-operation in the following areas: co-operative framework; representation at meetings and conferences; strengthening the role of the United Nations through rationalization of functional modalities; measures designed to further the work of the Assembly's Sixth Committee; facilitation of the work of ILC and the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL); law of the sea; international economic co-operation for development; refugee questions; zones of peace and international co-operation; and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs. The Committee also dealt with criteria for the distinction between terrorism and people's struggle for liberation, and the deportation of Palestinians as a violation of international law, particularly the 1949 Geneva Conventions.

International Law Commission

ILC, at its fortieth session (Geneva, 9 May-29 July 1988),⁽¹⁾ continued its work on the progressive development and codification of international law. In accordance with its 1987⁽²⁾ General Assembly mandate, the Commission provisionally adopted in 1988 six articles of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, on which the Assembly subsequently invited ILC to continue to work (resolution 43/164). The Commission also considered non-navigational uses of international watercourses and provisionally adopted 14 draft articles on the subject. In August,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the articles adopted by ILC in 1988 on both topics (see PART FIVE, Chapter II). ILC also examined the jurisdictional immunities of States and their property; international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law; and the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier. It was unable to consider State responsibility due to lack of time (see PART FIVE, Chapter III), and did not consider relations between States and international organizations, noting the intent of the Special Rapporteur to submit a report at the Commission's next session.

The Commission held 54 public meetings. Its Drafting Committee held 41 meetings; the Enlarged Bureau, 3; and the Planning Group of the Enlarged Bureau, 5. ILC continued in 1988 to co-operate with AALCC, the European Committee on Legal Co-operation, and the Inter-American Juridical Committee.

The Secretariat prepared for the Commission's attention in 1989 a topical summary of the Sixth Committee's discussion in 1988⁽⁴⁾ of the 1988 ILC report.

ILC work programme and working methods

As requested by the Assembly in 1987,⁽²⁾ the Commission discussed, in 1988, matters relating to its programme, procedures, working methods and documentation in the framework of the Bureau's Planning Group and the Enlarged Bureau itself.

In July, it observed-based on recommendations of the Enlarged Bureau resulting from discussions in the Planning Group-that the two topics on which it could achieve maximum progress in the next three years were the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier; and jurisdictional immunities of States and their property. The Commission decided to concentrate in 1989 and 1990 on these topics without excluding others. It was convinced that the streamlining of its agenda would be conducive to higher productivity. It also intended to establish a small Working Group to identify and propose possible topics for inclusion in a long-term programme of work.

ILC recalled that it consistently aimed to produce texts that were sufficiently precise to form the basis of a convention or other legal instrument while leaving the Assembly freedom to decide the form which the end product of the Commission's work would eventually take. ILC was aware that commentaries on draft articles were of crucial importance for the analysis and interpretation of their corresponding texts, and that they should reflect the collective understanding of members. To help achieve this, it encouraged Special Rapporteurs to hold consultations in the framework of the Drafting Committee before draft commentaries were submitted in plenary. It believed it would also be worthwhile to further examine the possibility of giving the Drafting Committee computerized assistance.

Other issues addressed included: the desire to maintain the normal arrangements for a 12-week session; the need for ILC to receive in a timely manner United Nations communications relevant to topics on its work programme; the ability of the Sixth Committee to submit to the Special Rapporteurs in a timely manner the necessary documentation; and the production of reports and the ILC Yearbook in all official United Nations languages.⁽¹⁾

In considering ways to make it easier for delegations to the Sixth Committee to acquaint themselves with the content of its report, ILC decided that its general work description at the start of the report should be expanded to include an indication of concrete results and footnoted references to the meetings at which each topic was considered. Finally, the Commission considered the possibility of enabling Special Rapporteurs to attend the Sixth Committee debate on the report so they could have a comprehensive view of existing positions, take note of observations made and prepare their reports earlier.

In response to the same Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Sixth Committee decided in 1988⁽⁵⁾ to establish an open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group to consider improvements in the way the ILC report was considered in the Sixth Committee. The Ad Hoc Working Group held six meetings between 3 and 14 November and its Chairman gave an oral report on its work on 11 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1988, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/169 without vote.

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fortieth session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fortieth session,

Emphasizing the need for the progressive development of international law and its codification in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to give increased importance to its role in relations among States,

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contributions to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Considering that experience has demonstrated the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention on each of the main topics dealt with in the report, and that this process is facilitated when the Commission indicates specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments are of particular interest for the continuation of its work,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fortieth session;

2. Express its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at that session;

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme, listed as items 2 to 8 in paragraph 7 of its report;

4. Expresses its satisfaction with the efforts of the International Law Commission to improve its procedures and methods of work and to formulate proposals on its future programme of work;

5. Requests the International Law Commission:

(a) To keep under review the planning of its activities for the term of office of its members, bearing in mind the desirability of achieving as much progress as possible in the preparation of draft articles on specific topics;

(b) To consider further its methods of work in all their aspects, bearing in mind that the staggering of the consideration of some topics might contribute, inter alia, to a more effective consideration of its report in the Sixth Committee;

(c) To indicate in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest for the continuation of its work;

6. Recommends the continuation of efforts to improve the ways in which the report of the International Law Commission is considered in the Sixth Committee, with a view to providing effective guidance for the Commission in its work;

7. Expresses its satisfaction at the useful informal discussions held in the framework of the Ad Hoc Working Group provided for under paragraph 6 of General Assembly resolution 42/156 of 7 December 1987, which dealt with questions of improving the ways in which the report of the International Law Commission is considered in the Sixth Committee, with a view to providing effective guidance for the Commission in its work, and takes note of the oral report of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group;

8. Decides that the Sixth Committee, in structuring its debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly, should bear in mind the possibility of reserving time for informal exchanges of views on matters relating to the Commission;

9. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of the duration of its session, as presented in paragraph 569 of its report, and expresses the view that the requirements of the work for the progressive development of international law and its codification and the magnitude and complexity of the subjects on the agenda of the Commission make it desirable that the usual duration of its sessions be maintained;

10. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

11. Urges Governments and, as appropriate, international organizations to respond in writing as fully and expeditiously as possible to the requests of the International Law Commission for comments, observations and replies to questionnaires and for materials on topics in its programme of work;

12. Reaffirms its wish that the International Law Commission continue to enhance its co-operation with inter-governmental legal bodies whose work is of interest for the progressive development of international law and its codification;

13. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and expresses the hope that every effort will be made by the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to provide the seminars with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the forty-third session of the General Assembly and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate.

UN Programme for the teaching and study of international law

The twenty-fourth session of the International Law Seminar-for post-graduate students and young professors or government officials dealing with international law-was held during the ILC session (Geneva, 6-24 June), with four United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) fellows and 18 other participants, mostly from developing countries. The participants attended ILC meetings and lectures specifically organized for them. Argentina, Austria, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland and Sweden had made voluntary financial contributions, thus making it possible to award nine fellowships. Since the first seminar in 1964, fellowships had been awarded to 264 of the 536 participants, representing 122 nationalities.

Other activities

Additional training courses were offered as part of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law.⁽⁶⁾ Under the annual joint United Nations-UNITAR fellowship programme, 20 middle-grade governmental legal officers and young teachers of international law attended courses for six weeks at the Hague Academy of International Law (Netherlands), as well as seminars organized by UNITAR. Some fellows also participated in the International Law Seminar in Geneva (see above), while others received three months practical training at legal offices of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other bodies. Topics of the special seminars were: the new international economic order; the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; legal aspects of international trade; dispute settlement in international commercial transactions; legal aspects of development financing; international humanitarian law; international régime for refugee protection; human rights protection; the codification process of international law at the United Nations; negotiations and drafting of treaties and other international legal instruments; and the settlement of international conflicts.

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1987,⁽⁷⁾ UNITAR organized a two-week regional training and refresher course in international law for the Latin America and Caribbean region (Brasilia, Brazil, 21 November-1 December) with 28 participants from 21 countries. Within the framework of its Major Programme XIII (Peace, international understanding, human rights and the law of nations), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) organized a regional post-graduate training course (Bujumbura, Burundi, 7-13 January). The seminar was attended by some 60 participants from Burundi, Cameroon, Gabon and Zaire, including six teachers, public officials, ministerial advisers, judges and legal advisers and about 30 final-year law students. The first 1988 issue of the UNESCO liaison bulletin International Law was published (Bangkok, June), with news and information from Asia and the Pacific region.

In 1988, the third award of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea was bestowed on the legal adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Chile (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV).

In response to a request by the Assembly of 1987,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General recommended that sessions of the Geneva International Law Seminar (see above) should be scheduled to make it financially possible for United Nations-UNITAR fellows to participate in the programmed sessions. He recommended that 1990-1991 activities should continue along the same lines as in the past, leaving room for new initiatives. If extra funds became available, the matters should be looked at afresh.

As to the UNITAR fellowship programme, he recommended that it be continued during the 1990-1991 biennium with a minimum of 15 fellowships each year to be awarded under the United Nations regular budget. Given the Organization's ongoing financial crisis, maximum use should be made of existing human and material resources of the United Nations so as to achieve the best results within a policy of maximum financial restraint, he said. To the extent possible, teaching experts for special seminars should be recruited from among staff, thereby reducing consultants' fees and travel expenses to a minimum.

International economic law

In 1988, legal aspects of international economic law and the new international economic order (NIEO) continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly.

International trade law

Report of UNCITRAL

The twenty-first session of UNCITRAL (New York, 11-22 April 1988)(1) considered under international payments: electronic fund transfers; the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory notes; and stand-by letters of credit and guarantees. The Commission also examined the liability of operators of transport terminals; international counter-trade; and its future programme and co-ordination of work. It also considered the status of conventions and the promotion of texts of the Commission, and the promotion of the Legal Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works. Its Working Group on NIEO (Vienna, 17-28 October) discussed procurement (see below, under "Legal aspects of the new international economic order").

As in previous years, UNCITRAL's annual report was forwarded to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for comments.

Unification of trade law

International payments

In considering the preparation of Model Rules on electronic funds transfers, the Commission had before it in 1988 the report of its Working Group on International Payments on the work of its sixteenth (1987) session.(2) The Working Group considered a list of legal issues for possible inclusion in the Model Rules contained in a report by the UNCITRAL secretariat. The Commission agreed that the Model Rules should concentrate on problems arising in international fund transfers while considering both domestic and international aspects of such transactions.

The Commission took note of a resolution by the Assembly of 1987(3) concerning the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes. The Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to ask all States to submit their observations and proposals on the draft before 30 April 1988, with the intention of adopting the Convention at its forty-third (1988) session. A working group was established within the framework of the Sixth Committee on 23 September and, in the course of eight meetings between 26 and 30 September,(4) it considered the observations and proposals of States, as contained in a June report by the Secretary-General.(5) The working group recommended the adoption of the draft Convention, with modifications, in the form in which it had been adopted by UNCITRAL during its twentieth (1987) session.(6)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted without vote and opened for signature or accession the United Nations Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes as resolution 43/165, thereby putting the seal on more than 16 years of work by UNCITRAL.

United Nations Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Aware that the free circulation of bills of exchange and promissory notes facilitates international trade and finance,

Convinced that the adoption of a convention on international bills of exchange and international promissory notes will facilitate the use of such instruments,

Taking note with satisfaction of the decision of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law at its twentieth session to transmit the text of the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes to the General Assembly for its consideration,

Recalling its resolution 42/153 of 7 December 1987, in which it requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of all States to the draft Convention, to ask them to submit the observations and proposals they wished to make on the draft Convention and to circulate those observations and proposals to all Member States,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it decided to consider, at its forty-third session, the draft Convention, with a view to its adoption at that session, and to create to that end a working group, in the framework of the Sixth Committee, to consider the observations and proposals made by States,

Satisfied with the modifications in the draft Convention proposed by the open-ended Working Group on the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, and expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Working Group,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for preparing the text of the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes;

2. Adopts and opens for signature or accession the United Nations Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Culls upon all Governments to consider becoming party to the Convention.

Chapter II. Interpretation

Section 1. General provisions

Article 4

Article 6

For the purposes of this Convention, a person is considered to have knowledge of a fact if he has actual knowledge of that fact or could not have been unaware of its existence.

Section 2. Interpretation of formal requirements

Article 7

The sum payable by an instrument is deemed to be a definite sum although the instrument states that it is to be paid:

- (a) With interest;
- (b) By instalments at successive dates;
- (c) By instalments at successive dates with a stipulation in the instrument that upon default in payment of any instalment the unpaid balance becomes due;
- (d) According to a rate of exchange indicated in the instrument or to be determined as directed by the instrument; or
- (e) In a currency other than the currency in which the sum is expressed in the instrument.

Article 8

1. If there is a discrepancy between the sum expressed in words and the sum expressed in figures, the sum payable by the instrument is the sum expressed in words.

2. If the sum is expressed more than once in words, and there is a discrepancy, the sum payable is the smaller sum. The same rule applies if the sum is expressed more than once in figures only, and there is a discrepancy.

3. If the sum is expressed in a currency having the same description as that of at least one other State than the State where payment is to be made, as indicated in the instrument, and the specified currency is not identified as the currency of any particular State, the currency is to be considered as the currency of the State where payment is to be made.

4. If an instrument states that the sum is to be paid with interest, without specifying the date from which interest is to run, interest runs from the date of the instrument.

5. A stipulation stating that the sum is to be paid with interest is deemed not to have been written on the instrument unless it indicates the rate at which interest is to be paid.

6. A rate at which interest is to be paid may be expressed either as a definite rate or as a variable rate. For a variable rate to qualify for this purpose, it must vary in relation to one or more reference rates of interest in accordance with provisions stipulated in the instrument and each such reference rate must be published or otherwise available to the public and not be subject, directly or indirectly, to unilateral determination by a person who is named in the instrument at the time the bill is drawn or the note is made, unless the person is named only in the reference rate provisions.

7. If the rate at which interest is to be paid is expressed as a variable rate, it may be stipulated expressly in the instrument that such rate shall not be less than or exceed a specified rate of interest, or that the variations are otherwise limited.

8. If a variable rate does not qualify under paragraph 6 of this article or for any reason it is not possible to determine the numerical value of the variable rate for any period, interest shall be payable for the relevant period at the rate calculated in accordance with paragraph 2 of article 70.

Article 9

1. An instrument is deemed to be payable on demand:

(a) If it states that it is payable at sight or on demand or on presentment or if it contains words of similar import; or

(b) If no time of payment is expressed.

2. An instrument payable at a definite time which is accepted or endorsed or guaranteed after maturity is an instrument payable on demand as regards the acceptor, the endorser or the guarantor.

3. An instrument is deemed to be payable at a definite time if it states that it is payable:

(a) On a stated date or at a fixed period after a stated date or at a fixed period after the date of the instrument;

(b) At a fixed period after sight;

(c) By instalments at successive dates; or

(d) By instalments at successive dates with the stipulation in the instrument that upon default in payment of any instalment the unpaid balance becomes due.

4. The time of payment of an instrument payable at a fixed period after date is determined by reference to the date of the instrument.

5. The time of payment of a bill payable at a fixed period after sight is determined by the date of acceptance or, if the bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance, by the date of protest or, if protest is dispensed with, by the date of dishonour.

6. The time of payment of an instrument payable on demand is the date on which the instrument is presented for payment.

7. The time of payment of a note payable at a fixed period after sight is determined by the date of the visa signed by the maker on the note or, if his visa is refused, by the date of presentment.

8. If an instrument is drawn, or made, payable one or more months after a stated date or after the date of the instrument or after sight, the instrument is payable on the corresponding date of the month when payment must be made. If there is no corresponding date, the instrument is payable on the last day of that month.

Article 10

1. A bill may be drawn:

(a) By two or more drawers;

(b) Payable to two or more payees.

2. A note may be made:

(a) By two or more makers;

(b) Payable to two or more payees.

3. If an instrument is payable to two or more payees in the alternative, it is payable to any one of them and any one of them in possession of the instrument may exercise the rights of a holder. In any other case the instrument is payable to all of them and the rights of a holder may be exercised only by all of them.

Article 11

A bill may be drawn by the drawer:

- (a) On himself;
- (b) Payable to his order.

Section 3. Completion of an incomplete instrument

Article 12

1. An incomplete instrument which satisfies the requirements set out in paragraph 1 of article 1 and bears the signature of the drawer or the acceptance of the drawee, or which satisfies the requirements set out in paragraph 2 of article 1 and paragraph 2 (d) of article 3, but which lacks other elements pertaining to one or more of the requirements set out in articles 2 and 3, may be completed, and the instrument so completed is effective as a bill or a note.

2. If such an instrument is completed without authority or otherwise than in accordance with the authority given:

- (a) A party who signed the instrument before the completion may invoke such lack of authority as a defence against a holder who had knowledge of such lack of authority when he became a holder;
- (b) A party who signed the instrument after the completion is liable according to the terms of the instrument so completed.

Chapter III. Transfer

Article 13

An instrument is transferred:

- (a) By endorsement and delivery of the instrument by the endorser to the endorsee; or
- (b) By mere delivery of the instrument if the last endorsement is in blank.

Article 14

1. An endorsement must be written on the instrument or on a slip affixed thereto ("allonge"). It must be signed.

2. An endorsement may be:

- (a) In blank, that is, by a signature alone or by a signature accompanied by a statement to the effect that the instrument is payable to a person in possession of it;
- (b) Special, that is, by a signature accompanied by an indication of the person to whom the instrument is payable.

3. A signature alone other than that of the drawee, is an endorsement only if placed on the back of the instrument.

Article 15

1. A person is a holder if he is:

- (a) The payee in possession of the instrument; or
- (b) In possession of an instrument which has been endorsed to him, or on which the last endorsement is in blank, and on which there appears an uninterrupted series of endorsements, even if any endorsement was forged or was signed by an agent without authority.

2. If an endorsement in blank is followed by another endorsement, the person who signed this last endorsement is deemed to be an endorsee by the endorsement in blank.

3. A person is not prevented from being a holder by the fact that the instrument was obtained by him or any previous holder under circumstances, including incapacity or fraud, duress or mistake of any kind, that would give rise to a claim to, or a defence against liability on, the instrument.

Article 16

The holder of an instrument on which the last endorsement is in blank may:

- (a) Further endorse it either by an endorsement in blank or by a special endorsement;
- (b) Convert the blank endorsement into a special endorsement by indicating in the endorsement that the instrument is payable to himself or to some other specified person; or
- (c) Transfer the instrument in accordance with subparagraph (b) of article 13.

Article 17

1. If the drawer or the maker has inserted in the instrument such words as "not negotiable", "not transferable", "not to order", "pay (X) only", or words of similar import, the instrument may not be transferred except for purposes of collection, and any endorsement, even if it does not contain words authorizing the endorsee to collect the instrument, is deemed to be an endorsement for collection.

2. If an endorsement contains the words "not negotiable", "not transferable", "not to order", "pay (X) only", or words of similar import, the instrument may not be transferred further except for purposes of collection, and any subsequent endorsement, even if it does not contain words authorizing the endorsee to collect the instrument, is deemed to be an endorsement for collection.

Article 18

1. An endorsement must be unconditional.

2. A conditional endorsement transfers the instrument whether or not the condition is fulfilled. The condition is ineffective as to those parties and transferees who are subsequent to the endorsee.

Article 19

An endorsement in respect of a part of the sum due under the instrument is ineffective as an endorsement.

Article 20

If there are two or more endorsements, it is presumed, unless the contrary is proved, that each endorsement was made in the order in which it appears on the instrument.

Article 21

1. If an endorsement contains the words "for collection", "for deposit", "value in collection", "by procuration", "pay any bank", or words of similar import authorizing the endorsee to collect the instrument, the endorsee is a holder who:

- (a) May exercise all rights arising out of the instrument;
- (b) May endorse the instrument only for purposes of collection;
- (c) Is subject only to the claims and defences which may be set up against the endorser.

2. The endorser for collection is not liable on the instrument to any subsequent holder.

Article 22

1. If an endorsement contains the words “value in security”, “value in pledge”, or any other words indicating a pledge, the endorsee is a holder who:

- (a) May exercise all rights arising out of the instrument;
- (b) May endorse the instrument only for purposes of collection;
- (c) Is subject only to the claims and defences specified in article 28 or article 30.

2. If such an endorsee endorses for collection, he is not liable on the instrument to any subsequent holder,

Article 23

The holder of an instrument may transfer it to a prior party or to the drawee in accordance with article 13; however, if the transferee has previously been a holder of the instrument, no endorsement is required, and any endorsement which would prevent him from qualifying as a holder may be struck out.

Article 24

An instrument may be transferred in accordance with article 13 after maturity, except by the drawee, the acceptor or the maker.

Article 25

1. If an endorsement is forged, the person whose endorsement is forged, or a party who signed the instrument before the forgery, has the right to recover compensation for any damage that he may have suffered because of the forgery against:

- (a) The forger;
- (b) The person to whom the instrument was directly transferred by the forger;
- (c) A party or the drawee who paid the instrument to the forger directly or through one or more endorsees for collection.

2. However, an endorsee for collection is not liable under paragraph 1 of this article if he is without knowledge of the forgery:

- (a) At the time he pays the principal or advises him of the receipt of payment; or
- (b) At the time he receives payment, if this is later, unless his lack of knowledge is due to his failure to act in good faith or to exercise reasonable care.

3. Furthermore, a party or the drawee who pays an instrument is not liable under paragraph 1 of this article if, at the time he pays the instrument, he is without knowledge of the forgery, unless his lack of knowledge is due to his failure to act in good faith or to exercise reasonable care.

4. Except as against the forger, the damages recoverable under paragraph 1 of this article may not exceed the amount referred to in article 70 or article 71.

Article 26

1. If an endorsement is made by an agent without authority or power to bind his principal in the matter, the principal, or a party who signed the instrument before such endorsement, has the right to recover compensation for any damage that he may have suffered because of such endorsement against:

- (a) The agent;
- (b) The person to whom the instrument was directly transferred by the agent;
- (c) A party or the drawee who paid the instrument to the agent directly or through one or more endorsees for collection.

2. However, an endorsee for collection is not liable under paragraph 1 of this article if he is without knowledge that the endorsement does not bind the principal:

- (a) At the time he pays the principal or advises him of the receipt of payment; or
- (b) At the time he receives payment, if this is later, unless his lack of knowledge is due to his failure to act in good faith or to exercise reasonable care.

3. Furthermore, a party or the drawee who pays an instrument is not liable under paragraph 1 of this article if, at the time he pays the instrument, he is without knowledge that the endorsement does not bind the principal, unless his lack of knowledge is due to his failure to act in good faith or to exercise reasonable care.

4. Except as against the agent, the damages recoverable under paragraph 1 of this article may not exceed the amount referred to in article 70 or article 71.

Chapter IV. Rights and liabilities

Section 1. The rights of a holder and of a protected holder

Article 27

1. The holder of an instrument has all the rights conferred on him by this Convention against the parties to the instrument.

2. The holder may transfer the instrument in accordance with article 13.

Article 28

1. A party may set up against a holder who is not a protected holder:

- (a) Any defence that may be set up against a protected holder in accordance with paragraph 1 of article 30;
- (b) Any defence based on the underlying transaction between himself and the drawer or between himself and his transferee, but only if the holder took the instrument with knowledge of such defence or if he obtained the instrument by fraud or theft or participated at any time in a fraud or theft concerning it;
- (c) Any defence arising from the circumstances as a result of which he became a party, but only if the holder took the instrument with knowledge of such defence or if he obtained the instrument by fraud or theft or participated at any time in a fraud or theft concerning it;
- (d) Any defence which may be raised against an action in contract between himself and the holder;
- (e) Any other defence available under this Convention.

2. The rights to an instrument of a holder who is not a protected holder are subject to any valid claim to the instrument on the part of any person, but only if he took the instrument with knowledge of such claim or if he obtained the instrument by fraud or theft or participated at any time in a fraud or theft concerning it.

3. A holder who takes an instrument after the expiration of the time-limit for presentment for payment is subject to any claim to, or defence against liability on, the instrument to which his transferor is subject.

4. A party may not raise as a defence against a holder who is not a protected holder the fact that a third person has a claim to the instrument unless:

- (a) The third person asserted a valid claim to the instrument; or
- (b) The holder acquired the instrument by theft or forged the signature of the payee or an endorsee, or participated in the theft or the forgery.

Article 29

"Protected holder" means the holder of an instrument which was complete when he took it or which was incomplete within the meaning of paragraph 1 of article 12 and was completed in accordance with authority given, provided that when he became a holder:

- (a) He was without knowledge of a defence against liability on the instrument referred to in paragraphs 1 (a), (b), (c) and (e) of article 28;
- (b) He was without knowledge of a valid claim to the instrument of any person;
- (c) He was without knowledge of the fact that it had been dishonoured by non-acceptance or by non-payment;
- (d) The time-limit provided by article 55 for presentment of that instrument for payment had not expired;
- (e) He did not obtain the instrument by fraud or theft or participate in a fraud or theft concerning it.

Article 30

1. A party may not set up against a protected holder any defence except:

- (a) Defences under paragraph 1 of article 33, article 34, paragraph 1 of article 35, paragraph 3 of article 36, paragraph 1 of article 53, paragraph 1 of article 57, paragraph 1 of article 63 and article 84 of this Convention;
 - (b) Defences based on the underlying transaction between himself and such holder or arising from any fraudulent act on the part of such holder in obtaining the signature on the instrument of that party;
 - (c) Defences based on his incapacity to incur liability on the instrument or on the fact that he signed without knowledge that his signature made him a party to the instrument, provided that his lack of knowledge was not due to his negligence and provided that he was fraudulently induced so to sign.
2. The rights to an instrument of a protected holder are not subject to any claim to the instrument on the part of any person, except a valid claim arising from the underlying transaction between himself and the person by whom the claim is raised.

Article 31

1. The transfer of an instrument by a protected holder vests in any subsequent holder the rights to and on the instrument which the protected holder had.

2. Those rights are not vested in a subsequent holder if:

- (a) He participated in a transaction which gives rise to a claim to, or a defence against liability on, the instrument;
- (b) He has previously been a holder, but not a protected holder.

Article 32

Every holder is presumed to be a protected holder unless the contrary is proved.

Section 2. Liabilities of the parties

A. General provisions

Article 33

- 1. Subject to the provisions of articles 34 and 36, a person is not liable on an instrument unless he signs it.
- 2. A person who signs an instrument in a name which is not his own is liable as if he had signed it in his own name.

Article 34

A forged signature on an instrument does not impose any liability on the person whose signature was forged. However, if he consents to be bound by the forged signature or represents that it is his own, he is liable as if he had signed the instrument himself.

Article 35

1. If an instrument is materially altered:

- (a) A party who signs it after the material alteration is liable according to the terms of the altered text;
 - (b) A party who signs it before the material alteration is liable according to the terms of the original text. However, if a party makes, authorizes or assents to a material alteration, he is liable according to the terms of the altered text.
2. A signature is presumed to have been placed on the instrument after the material alteration unless the contrary is proved.
3. Any alteration is material which modifies the written undertaking on the instrument of any party in any respect.

Article 36

- 1. An instrument may be signed by an agent.
- 2. The signature of an agent placed by him on an instrument with the authority of his principal and showing on the instrument that he is signing in a representative capacity for that named principal, or the signature of a principal placed on the instrument by an agent with his authority, imposes liability on the principal and not on the agent.
- 3. A signature placed on an instrument by a person as agent but who lacks authority to sign or exceeds his authority, or by an agent who has authority to sign but who does not show on the instrument that he is signing in a representative capacity for a named person, or who shows on the instrument that he is signing in a representative capacity but does not name the person whom he represents, imposes liability on the person signing and not on the person whom he purports to represent.
- 4. The question whether a signature was placed on the instrument in a representative capacity may be determined only by reference to what appears on the instrument.
- 5. A person who is liable pursuant to paragraph 3 of this article and who pays the instrument has the same rights as the person for whom he purported to act would have had if that person had paid the instrument.

Article 37

The order to pay contained in a bill does not of itself operate as an assignment to the payee of funds made available for payment by the drawer with the drawee.

B. The drawer

Article 38

- 1. The drawer engages that upon dishonour of the bill by non-acceptance or by non-payment, and upon any necessary protest, he will pay the bill to the holder, or to any endorser or any endorser's guarantor who takes up and pays the bill.
- 2. The drawer may exclude or limit his own liability for acceptance or for payment by an express stipulation in the bill. Such a stipulation is effective only with respect to the drawer. A stipulation excluding or limiting liability for payment is effective only if another party is or becomes liable on the bill.

C. The maker

Article 39

- 1. The maker engages that he will pay the note in accordance with its terms to the holder, or to any party who takes up and pays the note.

2. The maker may not exclude or limit his own liability by a stipulation in the note. Any such stipulation is ineffective.

D. The drawee and the acceptor

Article 40

1. The drawee is not liable on a bill until he accepts it.

2. The acceptor engages that he will pay the bill in accordance with the terms of his acceptance to the holder, or to any party who takes up and pays the bill.

Article 41

1. An acceptance must be written on the bill and may be effected:

- (a) By the signature of the drawee accompanied by the word "accepted" or by words of similar import; or
- (b) By the signature alone of the drawee.

2. An acceptance may be written on the front or on the back of the bill.

Article 42

1. An incomplete bill which satisfies the requirements set out in paragraph 1 of article 1 may be accepted by the drawee before it has been signed by the drawer, or while otherwise incomplete.

2. A bill may be accepted before, at or after maturity, or after it has been dishonoured by non-acceptance or by non-payment.

3. If a bill drawn payable at a fixed period after sight, or a bill which must be presented for acceptance before a specified date, is accepted, the acceptor must indicate the date of his acceptance; failing such indication by the acceptor, the drawer or the holder may insert the date of acceptance.

4. If a bill drawn payable at a fixed period after sight is dishonoured by non-acceptance and the drawee subsequently accepts it, the holder is entitled to have the acceptance dated as of the date on which the bill was dishonoured.

Article 43

1. An acceptance must be unqualified. An acceptance is qualified if it is conditional or varies the terms of the bill.

2. If the drawee stipulates in the bill that his acceptance is subject to qualification:

- (a) He is nevertheless bound according to the terms of his qualified acceptance;
- (b) The bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance.

3. An acceptance relating to only a part of the sum payable is a qualified acceptance. If the holder takes such an acceptance, the bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance only as to the remaining part.

4. An acceptance indicating that payment will be made at a particular address or by a particular agent is not a qualified acceptance, provided that:

- (a) The place in which payment is to be made is not changed;
- (b) The bill is not drawn payable by another agent.

E. The endorser

Article 44

1. The endorser engages that upon dishonour of the instrument by non-acceptance or by non-payment, and upon any necessary protest, he will pay the instrument to the holder, or to any subsequent endorser or any endorser's guarantor who takes up and pays the instrument.

2. An endorser may exclude or limit his own liability by an express stipulation in the instrument. Such a stipulation is effective only with respect to that endorser.

F. The transferor by endorsement or by mere delivery

Article 45

1. Unless otherwise agreed, a person who transfers an instrument, by endorsement and delivery or by mere delivery, represents to the holder to whom he transfers the instrument that:

- (a) The instrument does not bear any forged or unauthorized signature;
- (b) The instrument has not been materially altered;

(c) At the time of transfer, he has no knowledge of any fact which would impair the right of the transferee to payment of the instrument against the acceptor of a bill or, in the case of an unaccepted bill, the drawer, or against the maker of a note.

2. Liability of the transferor under paragraph 1 of this article is incurred only if the transferee took the instrument without knowledge of the matter giving rise to such liability.

3. If the transferor is liable under paragraph 1 of this article, the transferee may recover, even before maturity, the amount paid by him to the transferor, with interest calculated in accordance with article 70, against return of the instrument.

G. The guarantor

Article 46

1. Payment of an instrument, whether or not it has been accepted, may be guaranteed, as to the whole or part of its amount, for the account of a party or the drawee. A guarantee may be given by any person, who may or may not already be a party.

2. A guarantee must be written on the instrument or on a slip affixed thereto ("allonge").

3. A guarantee is expressed by the words "guaranteed", "aval", "good as ad" or words of similar import, accompanied by the signature of the guarantor. For the purposes of this Convention, the words "prior endorsements guaranteed" or words of similar import do not constitute a guarantee.

4. A guarantee may be effected by a signature alone on the front of the instrument. A signature alone on the front of the instrument, other than that of the maker, the drawer or the drawee, is a guarantee.

5. A guarantor may specify the person for whom he has become guarantor. In the absence of such specification, the person for whom he has become guarantor is the acceptor or the drawee in the case of a bill, and the maker in the case of a note.

6. A guarantor may not raise as a defence to his liability the fact that he signed the instrument before it was signed by the person for whom he is a guarantor, or while the instrument was incomplete.

Article 47

1. The liability of a guarantor on the instrument is of the same nature as that of the party for whom he has become guarantor.

2. If the person for whom he has become guarantor is the drawee, the guarantor engages:

(a) To pay the bill at maturity to the holder, or to any party who takes up and pays the bill;

(b) If the bill is payable at a definite time, upon dishonour by non-acceptance and upon any necessary protest, to pay it to the holder, or to any party who takes up and pays the bill.

3. In respect of defences that are personal to himself, a guarantor may set up:

a) Against a holder who is not a protected holder only those defences which he may set up under paragraphs 1, 3 and 4 of article 28;

(b) Against a protected holder only those defences which he may set up under paragraph 1 of article 30.

4. In respect of defences that may be raised by the person for whom he has become a guarantor:

(a) A guarantor may set up against a holder who is not a protected holder only those defences which the person for whom he has become a guarantor may set up against such holder under paragraphs 1, 3 and 4 of article 28;

(b) A guarantor who expresses his guarantee by the words "guaranteed", "payment guaranteed" or "collection guaranteed", or words of similar import, may set up against a protected holder only those defences which the person for whom he has become a guarantor may set up against a protected holder under paragraph 1 of article 30;

(c) A guarantor who expresses his guarantee by the words "aval" or "good as aval" may set up against a protected holder only:

(i) The defence, under paragraph 1 (b) of article 30, that the protected holder obtained the signature on the instrument of the person for whom he has become a guarantor by a fraudulent act;

(ii) The defence, under article 53 or article 57, that the instrument was not presented for acceptance or for payment;

(iii) The defence, under article 63, that the instrument was not duly protested for non-acceptance or for non-payment;

(iv) The defence, under article 84, that a right of action may no longer be exercised against the person for whom he has become guarantor;

(d) A guarantor who is not a bank or other financial institution and who expresses his guarantee by a signature alone may set up against a protected holder only the defences referred to in subparagraph (b) of this paragraph;

(e) A guarantor which is a bank or other financial institution and which expresses its guarantee by a signature alone may set up against a protected holder only the defences referred to in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph.

Article 48

1. Payment of an instrument by the guarantor in accordance with article 72 discharges the party for whom he became guarantor of his liability on the instrument to the extent of the amount paid.

2. The guarantor who pays the instrument may recover from the party for whom he has become guarantor and from the parties who are liable on it to that party the amount paid and any interest.

Chapter V. Presentment, dishonour by non-acceptance or non-payment, and recourse

Section 1. Presentment for acceptance and dishonour by non-acceptance

Article 49

1. A bill may be presented for acceptance.

2. A bill must be presented for acceptance:

(a) If the drawer has stipulated in the bill that it must be presented for acceptance;

(b) If the bill is payable at a fixed period after sight; or

(c) If the bill is payable elsewhere than at the residence or place of business of the drawee, unless it is payable on demand.

Article 50

1. The drawer may stipulate in the bill that it must not be presented for acceptance before a specified date or before the occurrence of a specified event. Except where a bill must be presented for acceptance under paragraph 2 (b) or (c) of article 49, the drawer may stipulate that it must not be presented for acceptance.

2. If a bill is presented for acceptance notwithstanding a stipulation permitted under paragraph 1 of this article and acceptance is refused, the bill is not thereby dishonoured.

3. If the drawee accepts a bill notwithstanding a stipulation that it must not be presented for acceptance, the acceptance is effective.

Article 51

A bill is duly presented for acceptance if it is presented in accordance with the following rules:

(a) The holder must present the bill to the drawee on a business day at a reasonable hour;

(b) Presentment for acceptance may be made to a person or authority other than the drawee if that person or authority is entitled under the applicable law to accept the bill;

(c) If a bill is payable on a fixed date, presentment for acceptance must be made before or on that date;

(d) A bill payable on demand or at a fixed period after sight must be presented for acceptance within one year of its date;

(e) A bill in which the drawer has stated a date or time-limit for presentment for acceptance must be presented on the stated date or within the stated time-limit.

Article 52

1. A necessary or optional presentment for acceptance is dispensed with if:

(a) The drawee is dead, or no longer has the power freely to deal with his assets by reason of his insolvency, or is a fictitious person, or is a person not having capacity to incur liability on the instrument as an acceptor; or

(b) The drawee is a corporation, partnership, association or other legal entity which has ceased to exist.

2. A necessary presentment for acceptance is dispensed with if:

(a) A bill is payable on a fixed date, and presentment for acceptance cannot be effected before or on that date due to circumstances which are beyond the control of the holder and which he could neither avoid nor overcome; or

(b) A bill is payable at a fixed period after sight, and presentment for acceptance cannot be effected within one ear of its date due to circumstances which are beyond the control of the holder and which he could neither avoid nor overcome.

3. Subject to paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article, delay in a necessary presentment for acceptance is excused, but presentment for acceptance is not dispensed with, if the bill is drawn with a stipulation that it must be presented for acceptance within a stated time-limit, and the delay in presentment for acceptance is caused by circumstances which are beyond the control of the holder and which he could neither avoid nor overcome. When the cause of the delay ceases to operate, presentment must be made with reasonable diligence.

Article 53

1. If a bill which must be presented for acceptance is not so presented, the drawer, the endorsers and their guarantors are not liable on the bill.

2. Failure to present a bill for acceptance does not discharge the guarantor of the drawee of liability on the bill.

Article 54

1. A bill is considered to be dishonoured by non-acceptance:

(a) If the drawee, upon due presentment, expressly refuses to accept the bill or acceptance cannot be obtained with reasonable diligence or if the holder cannot obtain the acceptance to which he is entitled under this Convention;

(b) If presentment for acceptance is dispensed with pursuant to article 52, unless the bill is in fact accepted.

2. (a) If a bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance in accordance with paragraph 1 (a) of this article, the holder may exercise an immediate right of recourse against the drawer, the endorsers and their guarantors, subject to the provisions of article 59.

(b) If a bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance in accordance with paragraph 1 (b) of this article, the holder may exercise an immediate right of recourse against the drawer, the endorsers and their guarantors.

(c) If a bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article, the holder may claim payment from the guarantor of the drawee upon any necessary protest.

3. If a bill payable on demand is presented for acceptance, but acceptance is refused, it is not considered to be dishonoured by non-acceptance.

Section 2. Presentment for payment and dishonour by non-payment

Article 55

An instrument is duly presented for payment if it is presented in accordance with the following rules:

(a) The holder must present the instrument to the drawee or to the acceptor or to the maker on a business day at a reasonable hour;

(b) A note signed by two or more makers may be presented to any one of them, unless the note clearly indicates otherwise;

(c) If the drawee or the acceptor or the maker is dead, presentment must be made to the persons who under the applicable law are his heirs or the persons entitled to administer his estate;

(d) Presentment for payment may be made to a person or authority other than the drawee, the acceptor or the maker if that person or authority is entitled under the applicable law to pay the instrument;

(e) An instrument which is not payable on demand must be presented for payment on the date of maturity or on one of the two business days which follow;

(f) An instrument which is payable on demand must be presented for payment within one year of its date;

(g) An instrument must be presented for payment:

(i) At the place of payment specified on the instrument;

(ii) If no place of payment is specified, at the address of the drawee or the acceptor or the maker indicated in the instrument; or

(iii) If no place of payment is specified and the address of the drawee or the acceptor or the maker is not indicated, at the principal place of business or habitual residence of the drawee or the acceptor or the maker;

(h) An instrument which is presented at a clearing-house is duly presented for payment if the law of the place where the clearing-house is located or the rules or customs of that clearing-house so provide.

Article 56

1. Delay in making presentment for payment is excused if the delay is caused by circumstances which are beyond the control of the holder and which he could neither avoid nor overcome. When the cause of the delay ceases to operate, presentment must be made with reasonable diligence.

2. Presentment for payment is dispensed with:

(a) If the drawer, an endorser or a guarantor has expressly waived presentment; such waiver:

(i) If made on the instrument by the drawer, binds any subsequent party and benefits any holder;

(ii) If made on the instrument by a party other than the drawer, binds only that party but benefits any holder;

(iii) If made outside the instrument, binds only the party making it and benefits only a holder in whose favour it was made;

(b) If an instrument is not payable on demand, and the cause of delay in making presentment referred to in paragraph 1 of this article continues to operate beyond thirty days after maturity;

(c) If an instrument is payable on demand, and the cause of delay in making presentment referred to in paragraph 1 of this article continues to operate beyond thirty days after the expiration of the time-limit for presentment for payment;

(d) If the drawee, the maker or the acceptor has no longer the power freely to deal with his assets by reason of his insolvency, or is a fictitious person or a person not having capacity to make payment, or if the drawee, the maker or the acceptor is a corporation, partnership, association or other legal entity which has ceased to exist;

(e) If there is no place at which the instrument must be presented in accordance with subparagraph(g) of article 55.

3. Presentment for payment is also dispensed with as regards a bill, if the bill has been protested for dishonour by non-acceptance.

Article 57

1. If an instrument is not duly presented for payment, the drawer, the endorsers and their guarantors are not liable on it.

2. Failure to present an instrument for payment does not discharge the acceptor, the maker and their guarantors or the guarantor of the drawee of liability on it.

Article 58

1. An instrument is considered to be dishonoured by non-payment:

(a) If payment is refused upon due presentment or if the holder cannot obtain the payment to which he is entitled under this Convention;

(b) If presentment for payment is dispensed with pursuant to paragraph 2 of article 56 and the instrument is unpaid at maturity.

2. If a bill is dishonoured by non-payment, the holder may, subject to the provisions of article 59, exercise a right of recourse against the drawer, the endorsers and their guarantors.

3. If a note is dishonoured by non-payment, the holder may, subject to the provisions of article 59, exercise a right of recourse against the endorsers and their guarantors.

Section 3. Recourse

Article 59

If an instrument is dishonoured by non-acceptance or by non-payment, the holder may exercise a right of recourse only after the instrument has been duly protested for dishonour in accordance with the provisions of articles 60 to 62.

A. Protest

Article 60

1. A protest is a statement of dishonour drawn up at the place where the instrument has been dishonoured and signed and dated by a person authorized in that respect by the law of that place. The statement must specify:

(a) The person at whose request the instrument is protested;

(b) The place of protest;

(c) The demand made and the answer given, if any, or the fact that the drawee or the acceptor or the maker could not be found.

2. A protest may be made:

(a) On the instrument or on a slip affixed thereto ("allonge"); or

(b) As a separate document, in which case it must clearly identify the instrument that has been dishonoured.

3. Unless the instrument stipulates that protest must be made, a protest may be replaced by a declaration written on the instrument and signed and dated by the drawee or the acceptor or the maker, or, in the case of an instrument domiciled with a named person for payment, by that named person; the declaration must be to the effect that acceptance or payment is refused.

4. A declaration made in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article is a protest for the purpose of this Convention.

Article 61

Protest for dishonour of an instrument by non-acceptance or by non-payment must be made on the day on which the instrument is dishonoured or on one of the four business days which follow.

Article 62

1. Delay in protesting an instrument for dishonour is excused if the delay is caused by circumstances which are beyond the control of the holder and which he could neither avoid nor overcome. When the cause of the delay ceases to operate, protest must be made with reasonable diligence.

2. Protest for dishonour by non-acceptance or by non-payment is dispensed with:

(a) If the drawer, an endorser or a guarantor has expressly waived protest; such waiver:

(i) If made on the instrument by the drawer, binds any subsequent party and benefits any holder;

(ii) If made on the instrument by a party other than the drawer, binds only that party but benefits any holder;

(iii) If made outside the instrument, binds only the party making it and benefits only a holder in whose favour it was made;

(b) If the cause of the delay in making protest referred to in paragraph 1 of this article continues to operate beyond thirty days after the date of dishonour;

(c) As regards the drawer of a bill, if the drawer and the drawee or the acceptor are the same person;

(d) If presentment for acceptance or for payment is dispensed with in accordance with article 52 or paragraph 2 of article 56.

Article 63

1. If an instrument which must be protested for non-acceptance or for non-payment is not duly protested, the drawer, the endorsers and their guarantors are not liable on it.

2. Failure to protest an instrument does not discharge the acceptor, the maker and their guarantors or the guarantor of the drawee of liability on it.

B. Notice of dishonour

Article 64

1. The holder, upon dishonour of an instrument by non-acceptance or by non-payment, must give notice of such dishonour:

(a) To the drawer and the last endorser;

(b) To all other endorsers and guarantors whose addresses the holder can ascertain on the basis of information contained in the instrument.

2. An endorser or a guarantor who receives notice must give notice of dishonour to the last party preceding him and liable on the instrument.

3. Notice of dishonour operates for the benefit of any party who has a right of recourse on the instrument against the party notified.

Article 65

1. Notice of dishonour may be given in any form whatever and in any terms which identify the instrument and state that it has been dishonoured. The return of the dishonoured instrument is sufficient notice, provided it is accompanied by a statement indicating that it has been dishonoured.

2. Notice of dishonour is duly given if it is communicated or sent to the party to be notified by means appropriate in the circumstances, whether or not it is received by that party.

3. The burden of proving that notice has been duly given rests upon the person who is required to give such notice.

Article 66

Notice of dishonour must be given within the two business days which follow:

(a) The day of protest or, if protest is dispensed with, the day of dishonour; or

(b) The day of receipt of notice of dishonour.

Article 67

1. Delay in giving notice of dishonour is excused if the delay is caused by circumstances which are beyond the control of the person required to give notice, and which he could neither avoid nor overcome. When the cause of the delay ceases to operate, notice must be given with reasonable diligence.

2. Notice of dishonour is dispensed with:

- (a) If, after the exercise of reasonable diligence, notice cannot be given;
- (b) If the drawer, an endorser or a guarantor has expressly waived notice of dishonour; such waiver:
 - (i) If made on the instrument by the drawer, binds any subsequent party and benefits any holder;
 - (ii) If made on the instrument by a party other than the drawer, binds only that party but benefits any holder;
 - (iii) If made outside the instrument, binds only the party making it and benefits only a holder in whose favour it was made;
- (c) As regards the drawer of the bill, if the drawer and the drawee or the acceptor are the same person.

Article 68

If a person who is required to give notice of dishonour fails to give it to a party who is entitled to receive it, he is liable for any damages which that party may suffer from such failure, provided that such damages do not exceed the amount referred to in article 70 or article 71.

Section 4. Amount payable

Article 69

1. The holder may exercise his rights on the instrument against any one party, or several or all parties, liable on it and is not obliged to observe the order in which the parties have become bound. Any party who takes up and pays the instrument may exercise his rights in the same manner against parties liable to him.

2. Proceedings against a party do not preclude proceedings against any other party, whether or not subsequent to the party originally proceeded against.

Article 70

- 1. The holder may recover from any party liable:
 - (a) At maturity: the amount of the instrument with interest, if interest has been stipulated for;
 - (b) After maturity:
 - (i) The amount of the instrument with interest, if interest has been stipulated for, to the date of maturity;
 - (ii) If interest has been stipulated to be paid after maturity, interest at the rate stipulated, or, in the absence of such stipulation, interest at the rate specified in paragraph 2 of this article, calculated from the date of presentment on the sum specified in subparagraph (b) (i) of this paragraph;
 - (iii) Any expenses of protest and of the notices given by him;
 - (c) Before maturity:
 - (i) The amount of the instrument with interest, if interest has been stipulated for, to the date of payment; or, if no interest has been stipulated for, subject to a discount from the date of payment to the date of maturity, calculated in accordance with paragraph 4 of this article;
 - (ii) Any expenses of protest and of the notices given by him.
- 2. The rate of interest shall be the rate that would be recoverable in legal proceedings taken in the jurisdiction where the instrument is payable.

3. Nothing in paragraph 2 of this article prevents a court from awarding damages or compensation for additional loss caused to the holder by reason of delay in payment.

4. The discount shall be at the official rate (discount rate) or other similar appropriate rate effective on the date when recourse is exercised at the place where the holder has his principal place of business, or, if he does not have a place of business, his habitual residence, or, if there is no such rate, then at such rate as is reasonable in the circumstances.

Article 71

A party who pays an instrument and is thereby discharged in whole or in part of his liability on the instrument may recover from the parties liable to him:

- (a) The entire sum which he has paid;
- (b) Interest on that sum at the rate specified in paragraph 2 of article 70, from the date on which he made payment;
- (c) Any expenses of the notices given by him.

Chapter VI. Discharge

Section 1. Discharge by payment

Article 72

1. A party is discharged of liability on the instrument when he pays the holder, or a party subsequent to himself who has paid the instrument and is in possession of it, the amount due pursuant to article 70 or article 71:

- (a) At or after maturity; or
- (b) Before maturity upon dishonour by non-acceptance.
- 2. Payment before maturity other than under paragraph 1 (b) of this article does not discharge the party making the payment of his liability on the instrument except in respect of the person to whom payment was made.
- 3. A party is not discharged of liability if he pays a holder who is not a protected holder, or a party who has taken up and paid the instrument, and knows at the time of payment that the holder or that party acquired the instrument by theft or forged the signature of the payee or an endorsee, or participated in the theft or the forgery.
- 4. (a) A person receiving payment of an instrument must, unless agreed otherwise, deliver:
 - (i) To the drawee making such payment, the instrument;
 - (ii) To any other person making such payment, the instrument, a receipted account, and any protest.
- (b) In the case of an instrument payable by instalments at successive dates, the drawee or a party making a payment, other than payment of the last instalment, may require that mention of such payment be made on the instrument or on a slip affixed thereto ("allonge") and that a receipt therefor be given to him.
- (c) If an instrument payable by instalments at successive dates is dishonoured by non-acceptance or by non-payment as to any of its instalments and a party, upon dishonour, pays the instalment, the holder who receives such payment must give the party a certified copy of the instrument and any necessary authenticated protest in order to enable such party to exercise a right on the instrument.
- (d) The person from whom payment is demanded may withhold payment if the person demanding payment does not deliver the instrument to him. Withholding payment in these circumstances does not constitute dishonour by non-payment under article 58.

(e) If payment is made but the person paying, other than the drawee, fails to obtain the instrument, such person is discharged but the discharge cannot be set up as a defence against a protected holder to whom the instrument has been subsequently transferred.

Article 73

1. The holder is not obliged to take partial payment.
2. If the holder who is offered partial payment does not take it, the instrument is dishonoured by non-payment.
3. If the holder takes partial payment from the drawee, the guarantor of the drawee, or the acceptor or the maker:
 - (a) The guarantor of the drawee, or the acceptor or the maker is discharged of his liability on the instrument to the extent of the amount paid;
 - (b) The instrument is to be considered as dishonoured by non-payment as to the amount unpaid.
4. If the holder takes partial payment from a party to the instrument other than the acceptor, the maker or the guarantor of the drawee:
 - (a) The party making payment is discharged of his liability on the instrument to the extent of the amount paid;
 - (b) The holder must give such party a certified copy of the instrument and any necessary authenticated protest in order to enable such party to exercise a right on the instrument.
5. The drawee or a party making partial payment may require that mention of such payment be made on the instrument and that a receipt therefor be given to him.
6. If the balance is paid, the person who receives it and who is in possession of the instrument must deliver to the payor the receipted instrument and any authenticated protest.

Article 74

1. The holder may refuse to take payment at a place other than the place where the instrument was presented for payment in accordance with article 55.
2. In such case if payment is not made at the place where the instrument was presented for payment in accordance with article 55, the instrument is considered to be dishonoured by non-payment.

Article 75

1. An instrument must be paid in the currency in which the sum payable is expressed.
2. If the sum payable is expressed in a monetary unit of account within the meaning of subparagraph (1) of article 5 and the monetary unit of account is transferable between the person making payment and the person receiving it, then, unless the instrument specifies a currency of payment, payment shall be made by transfer of monetary units of account. If the monetary unit of account is not transferable between those persons, payment shall be made in the currency specified in the instrument or, if no such currency is specified, in the currency of the place of payment.
3. The drawer or the maker may indicate in the instrument that it must be paid in a specified currency other than the currency in which the sum payable is expressed. In that case:
 - (a) The instrument must be paid in the currency so specified;

(b) The amount payable is to be calculated according to the rate of exchange indicated in the instrument. Failing such indication, the amount payable is to be calculated according to the rate of exchange for sight drafts (or, if there is no such rate, according to the appropriate established rate of exchange) on the date of maturity:

- (i) Ruling at the place where the instrument must be presented for payment in accordance with subparagraph (g) of article 55, if the specified currency is that of that place (local currency); or
- (ii) If the specified currency is not that of that place, according to the usages of the place where the instrument must be presented for payment in accordance with subparagraph (g) of article 55;
- (c) If such an instrument is dishonoured by non-acceptance, the amount payable is to be calculated:
 - (i) If the rate of exchange is indicated in the instrument, according to that rate;
 - (ii) If no rate of exchange is indicated in the instrument, at the option of the holder, according to the rate of exchange ruling on the date of dishonour or on the date of actual payment;
- (d) If such an instrument is dishonoured by non-payment, the amount payable is to be calculated:
 - (i) If the rate of exchange is indicated in the instrument, according to that rate;
 - (ii) If no rate of exchange is indicated in the instrument, at the option of the holder, according to the rate of exchange ruling on the date of maturity or on the date of actual payment.
4. Nothing in this article prevents a court from awarding damages for loss caused to the holder by reason of fluctuations in rates of exchange if such loss is caused by dishonour for non-acceptance or by non-payment.
5. The rate of exchange ruling at a certain date is the rate of exchange ruling, at the option of the holder, at the place where the instrument must be presented for payment in accordance with subparagraph (g) of article 55 or at the place of actual payment.

Article 76

1. Nothing in this Convention prevents a Contracting State from enforcing exchange control regulations applicable in its territory and its provisions relating to the protection of its currency, including regulations which it is bound to apply by virtue of international agreements to which it is a party.
2. (a) If, by virtue of the application of paragraph 1 of this article, an instrument drawn in a currency which is not that of the place of payment must be paid in local currency, the amount payable is to be calculated according to the rate of exchange for sight drafts (or, if there is no such rate, according to the appropriate established rate of exchange) on the date of presentment ruling at the place where the instrument must be presented for payment in accordance with subparagraph (g) of article 55.
- (b) (i) If such an instrument is dishonoured by non-acceptance, the amount payable is to be calculated, at the option of the holder, at the rate of exchange ruling on the date of dishonour or on the date of actual payment.
- (ii) If such an instrument is dishonoured by non-payment, the amount is to be calculated

- lated, at the option of the holder, according to the rate of exchange ruling on the date of presentment or on the date of actual payment.
- (iii) Paragraphs 4 and 5 of article 75 are applicable where appropriate.

Section 2. Discharge of other parties

Article 77

1. If a party is discharged in whole or in part of his liability on the instrument, any party who has a right on the instrument against him is discharged to the same extent.
2. Payment by the drawee of the whole or a part of the amount of a bill to the holder, or to any party who takes up and pays the bill, discharges all parties of their liability to the same extent, except where the drawee pays a holder who is not a protected holder, or a party who has taken up and paid the bill, and knows at the time of payment that the holder or that party acquired the bill by theft or forged the signature of the payee or an endorsee, or participated in the theft or the forgery.

Chapter VII. Lost instruments

Article 78

1. If an instrument is lost, whether by destruction, theft or otherwise, the person who lost the instrument has, subject to the provisions of paragraph 2 of this article, the same right to payment which he would have had if he had been in possession of the instrument. The party from whom payment is claimed cannot set up as a defence against liability on the instrument the fact that the person claiming payment is not in possession of the instrument.
2. (a) The person claiming payment of a lost instrument must state in writing to the party from whom he claims payment:
 - (i) The elements of the lost instrument pertaining to the requirements set forth in paragraph 1 or paragraph 2 of articles 1, 2 and 3; for this purpose the person claiming payment of the lost instrument may present to that party a copy of that instrument;
 - (ii) The facts showing that, if he had been in possession of the instrument, he would have had a right to payment from the party from whom payment is claimed;
 - (iii) The facts which prevent production of the instrument.
- (b) The party from whom payment of a lost instrument is claimed may require the person claiming payment to give security in order to indemnify him for any loss which he may suffer by reason of the subsequent payment of the lost instrument.
- (c) The nature of the security and its terms are to be determined by agreement between the person claiming payment and the party from whom payment is claimed. Failing such an agreement, the court may determine whether security is called for and, if so, the nature of the security and its terms.
- (d) If the security cannot be given, the court may order the party from whom payment is claimed to deposit the sum of the lost instrument, and any interest and expenses which may be claimed under article 70 or article 71, with the court or any other competent authority or institution, and may determine the duration of such deposit. Such deposit is to be considered as payment to the person claiming payment.

1. A party who has paid a lost instrument and to whom the instrument is subsequently presented for payment by another person must give notice of such presentment to the person whom he paid.
2. Such notice must be given on the day the instrument is presented or on one of the two business days which follow and must state the name of the person presenting the instrument and the date and place of presentment.
3. Failure to give notice renders the party who has paid the lost instrument liable for any damages which the person whom he paid may suffer from such failure, provided that the damages do not exceed the amount referred to in article 70 or article 71.
4. Delay in giving notice is excused when the delay is caused by circumstances which are beyond the control of the person who has paid the lost instrument and which he could neither avoid nor overcome. When the cause of the delay ceases to operate, notice must be given with reasonable diligence.
5. Notice is dispensed with when the cause of delay in giving notice continues to operate beyond thirty days after the last day on which it should have been given.

Article 80

1. A party who has paid a lost instrument in accordance with the provisions of article 78 and who is subsequently required to, and does, pay the instrument, or who, by reason of the loss of the instrument, then loses his right to recover from any party liable to him, has the right:
 - (a) If security was given, to realize the security; or
 - (b) If an amount was deposited with the court or other competent authority or institution, to reclaim the amount so deposited.
2. The person who has given security in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 2(b) of article 78 is entitled to obtain release of the security when the party for whose benefit the security was given is no longer at risk to suffer loss because of the fact that the instrument is lost.

Article 81

For the purpose of making protest for dishonour by non-payment, a person claiming payment of a lost instrument may use a written statement that satisfies the requirements of paragraph 2(a) of article 78.

Article 82

A person receiving payment of a lost instrument in accordance with article 78 must deliver to the party paying the written statement required under paragraph 2(a) of article 78, received by him, and any protest and a receipted account.

Article 83

1. A party who pays a lost instrument in accordance with article 78 has the same rights which he would have had if he had been in possession of the instrument.
2. Such party may exercise his rights only if he is in possession of the receipted written statement referred to in article 82.

Chapter VIII. Limitation (prescription)

Article 84

1. A right of action arising on an instrument may no longer be exercised after four years have elapsed:
 - (a) Against the maker, or his guarantor, of a note payable on demand, from the date of the note;

(b) Against the acceptor or the maker or their guarantor of an instrument payable at a definite time, from the date of maturity;

(c) Against the guarantor of the drawee of a bill payable at a definite time, from the date of maturity or, if the bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance, from the date of protest for dishonour or, where protest is dispensed with, from the date of dishonour;

(d) Against the acceptor of a bill payable on demand or his guarantor, from the date on which it was accepted or, if no such date is shown, from the date of the bill;

(e) Against the guarantor of the drawee of a bill payable on demand, from the date on which he signed the bill or, if no such date is shown, from the date of the bill;

(f) Against the drawer or an endorser or their guarantor, from the date of protest for dishonour by non-acceptance or by non-payment or, where protest is dispensed with, from the date of dishonour.

2. A party who pays the instrument in accordance with article 70 or article 71 may exercise his right of action against a party liable to him within one year from the date on which he paid the instrument.

General Assembly resolution 43/165

9 December 1988 Meeting 76 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/43/820) without vote, 7 October (meeting 10); draft by Mexico (A/C.6/43/L.3); agenda item 131.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 6th Committee 4-6, 10; plenary 76.

Stand-by letters of credit and guarantees

UNCITRAL had before it the March report of the Secretary-General on stand-by letters of credit and guarantees⁽⁷⁾ and considered in particular its conclusions and suggestions as to the possible future work of the Commission in this field. The report described the functions and characteristics of the stand-by letter of credit and independent guarantees, provided an overview of the legal framework comprising statutory provisions of law, case law and uniform rules, and legal issues that may arise. The report concluded that there was considerable disparity and uncertainty in respect of the legal rules governing the two instruments.

The Commission agreed to envisage future work in two stages: the first relating to contractual rules of model terms and the second pertaining to statutory law. It welcomed the work of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) in preparing draft Uniform Rules on Guarantees. It concluded that the Commission, at its twenty-second (1989) session, would take a final decision on whether a uniform law should be prepared and, if so, what its scope and contents should be.

Liability of operators of transport terminals

The Commission, having before it the report of the Working Group on International Contract Practices on the work of its eleventh session,(8) noted that the Working Group had completed a draft text of uniform rules on the liability of operators of transport terminals and had recommended their adoption in the form of a convention. UNCITRAL decided to consider at its twenty-second (1989) session, with a view to its adoption, the draft Convention prepared by the Working Group. It requested the Secretary-General to transmit the draft to all States and interested international organizations for comments, and requested the Secretariat to prepare and distribute a compilation of those comments as early as possible. It was suggested that a diplomatic conference for the conclusion of a Convention on the Liability of Operators of Transport Terminals in International Trade might present a good opportunity to consider a possible revision of the limits of liability and provisions pertaining to the 1978 United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea (Hamburg Rules).

International counter trade

In 1988, UNCITRAL had before it a preliminary study of legal issues in international counter trade.(9) It contained a description of contractual approaches to counter trade and an enumeration of the important legal issues involved. The Commission decided that it would be desirable to prepare a legal guide for drafting counter trade contracts. The Secretariat was requested to prepare a draft outline of the guide for the Commission's next session so that it could decide what future action might be taken.

Co-ordination of work

In considering its co-ordination of work, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing a register of international organizations active in the field of international trade law.(10) The report concentrated on those organizations that were forming agencies, but included some organizations of particular importance to the development of international trade law in other ways. UNCITRAL observed that co-ordination among international organizations depended in large measure on co-ordination at the national level among the various government ministries and branches active in different international organizations. Statements before the Commission were made by the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law (UNIDROIT); the Secretary-General of the Hague Conference on Private International Law; AALCC; the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development/General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (UNCTAD/GATT) International Trade Centre (ITC); and the Latin American Federation of Banks (FELABAN).

Status and promotion of texts of the Commission

Having adopted in 1987(11) the UNCITRAL Legal Guide on Drawing up International Contracts for the Construction of Industrial Works, the Commission had requested the Secretary-General to take effective measures for the Guide's widespread distribution and promotion. In a 1988 note (12) to the Commission, the Secretariat indicated that the English version of the Legal Guide was published in February 1988 and the five other official United Nations language versions would soon appear.

Training and assistance

In accordance with a 1987(13) Assembly resolution, the UNCITRAL secretariat organized a seminar on international trade law (Maseru, Lesotho, 25-30 July) for 34 participants from 14 countries of the southern African region. UNCITRAL also co-sponsored with the Cairo Regional Arbitration Centre a seminar on international commercial arbitration (Cairo, Egypt, 28-31 March). A two-week workshop on international trade law and practice for enterprise personnel was held (Qingdao, China, 11-22 July) in co-operation with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP). A note by the Secretariat(14) stated that in order for UNCITRAL to carry on a viable programme of training and assistance, adequate funds had to be available. UNCITRAL noted difficulties planning a seminar or symposium when funds were not available far enough in advance to make the necessary commitments and when the level of contribution was inadequate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 43/166 without vote.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-first session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development, including developing countries, in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-first session,

Recognising the success of the seminar on international trade law held at Maseru from 25 to 30 July 1988 in co-operation with the Preferential Trade Area of Eastern and Southern African States,

Recognizing the need for the Commission to have adequate sources of funding for its programme of training and assistance in international trade law,

Noting that the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods, of 14 June 1974, came into force on 1 August 1988,

Aware that the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, of 31 March 1978, was prepared at the request of developing countries and is likely to come into force in the near future,

Convinced that widespread adherence to the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission would benefit the peoples of all States,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-first session;

2. Commends the Commission for the progress made in its work and for having reached decisions by consensus;

3. Calls upon the Commission to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions concerning the new international economic order, as adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions;

4. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to co-ordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, and, in this connection, recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, should continue to maintain close co-operation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

5. Reaffirms also the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and assistance in the field of international trade law and the desirability for it to sponsor seminars and symposia, in particular those organized on a regional basis, to promote such training and assistance, and, in this connection:

PART SIX

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations financing and programming

Throughout 1988, the United Nations continued to grapple with a financial crisis that resulted from the withholding of assessed contributions by a number of Member States to both the Organization's regular budget and to that for peace-keeping operations. The crisis coincided with an expansion of the Organization's responsibilities for peace-keeping, thus placing new strains on its already precarious financial stability. An analysis of the financial situation presented in November by the Secretary-General projected a net short-term deficit of $319.4 million. One Member State owed a total of $337.3 million, including nearly $122.4 million in arrears from previous years. Of the $1,111 million in contributions to the United Nations regular budget payable by 1 January 1988, $716.5 million had been collected at the end of 1988, leaving some $395 million outstanding.

To avoid defaulting on its day-to-day financial commitments, the Organization exhausted both its Working Capital Fund and its Special Account during 1988, and resorted to temporary borrowing from peace-keeping funds.

Appropriations for the 1988-1989 biennium were raised by $19 million to $1,789 million by the General Assembly in December (resolution 43/218 A). Income estimates for 1988-1989 were revised upward by about $7.1 million to $344.4 million over 1987 estimates (43/218 B). To finance appropriations for 1989, Member States were assessed $747 million net of staff assessment (43/218 C).

The Assembly decided that the Secretary-General should prepare his proposed programme budget for 1990-1991 on the basis of a total preliminary estimate of $1,767,060,000 at 1988 rates. The contingency fund, used to accommodate additional expenditures, was consequently set at 0.75 per cent of the 1990-1991 budget estimates (43/214).

The Assembly approved the scale of assessments for 1989-1991 (43/223 A) and requested the Committee on Contributions to improve the methodology used in the scale's preparation and to seek more comprehensive data on the external debt of Member States (43/223 B). The Assembly also approved a method for collecting assessments from non-member States (43/223 C).

The accounts and financial statements for either the year or biennium ending 31 December 1987, for the United Nations and 80 voluntarily financed programmes, were accepted by the Assembly together with the opinions of the United Nations Board of Auditors (43/216).

Further action was taken during 1988 to improve United Nations programme planning, budgeting and evaluation. By resolution 43/219, the Assembly adopted revisions to the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, extended to 1991. It decided that the next plan would cover 1992-1997, and endorsed a number of recommendations by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination concerning the monitoring and evaluation of United Nations programmes. The Assembly also considered various aspects of the work of JIU (43/221).

United Nations financing

Financial situation

Reports of the Secretary-General. In November 1988, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly an analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations.⁽¹⁾ He characterized the Organization's financial position as grave and said that the primary means of resolving the problem, and the one that would result in the lowest cost to Member States, remained that of prompt payment by every Member State, early in the year, of all assessed contributions. Unless that were done, the Organization would continue to face the very real risk of defaulting on its daily financial commitments.

According to the Secretary-General, the United Nations combined short-term deficit was estimated at $319.7 million by the end of 1988, compared with $356 million for 1987. The 1988 deficit included amounts to be repaid or credited to Member States from surplus accounts for contributions to the first United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF I) (1956) and the United Nations Operations in the Congo (ONUC). The deficit was composed of amounts outstanding as a result of withholdings by some Member States of their shares of assessed contributions in respect of certain items in the regular budget; unpaid assessments for peace-keeping operations, which were transferred to a special account pursuant to Assembly resolutions of 1972(2) and 1981(3) withholdings of assessments in respect of UNEF II (1973), the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) by certain Member States; net obligations incurred in excess of available funds in respect of UNEF I and ONUC; and the repayment due to Member States for credits in surplus accounts for UNEF I and ONUC. The short-term deficit, therefore, included any unpaid assessments pertaining to the regular budget and to peace-keeping operations which had not been characterized by Member States as withholdings.

The projected decrease of $36.3 million between 1987 and 1988 resulted from full and partial payments to be made by several Member States and partial payments of funds previously withheld from their assessed contributions to the regular budget, and the partial payment to peace-keeping operations by live Member States of money previously withheld. An increase in the level of the Special Account was also expected due to an additional contribution from one Member State and interest earned on the balance.

In addition to the short-term deficit, the financial difficulties of the Organization were compounded by delays in payment or non-payment by a number of States of assessed contributions to the regular budget and to peace-keeping operations. The level of outstanding contributions had increased dramatically over the previous four years.

According to the Secretary-General, unpaid debts to Member States that had participated in peace-keeping operations under agreements that included reimbursement for services rendered, mainly the provision of troops, would amount to $310.6 million as at 31 December 1988. Currently, the Organization's peace-keeping activities were able to continue only because the troop-contributing Member States continued to bear the full burden of the deficit.

The shortfall in payments to the regular budget created an immediate day-to-day cash shortage to cover the Organization's payroll and payments to vendors. Because the shortfall in regular budget payments was so large, other sources of funding were often required to meet daily cash needs. To meet its obligations, the Organization had used the $100 million Working Capital Fund plus funds in the Special Account (estimated at $109.8 million by year-end 1988) and, occasionally, had resorted to temporary borrowing from peace-keeping funds. Amounts realized from the suspension by the General Assembly in 1987 of three financial regulations related to surpluses in the regular budget had also been utilized, when available, to meet some of the cash requirements for the regular budget.

The Secretary-General had sent out letters of assessment to all Member States before the end of December 1987. These were followed up with additional letters in early March 1988, meetings with all regional groups, and subsequent letters to Foreign Ministers in June. Positive responses were received from many Member States, and data showed that a number of them had made efforts to pay earlier in the year.

Member States withheld payments towards certain items in the regular budget in the amount of a projected $63.8 million, and held back a total of $237.3 million towards peace-keeping operations. One Member State made a $5 million voluntary contribution in 1988 to the United Nations Special Account, which was used to supplement the Working Capital Fund to meet the Organization's daily expenses.

In his December report on the financial crisis,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General said that the expanding responsibilities of the Organization for peace-making and peace-keeping had placed new strains on the already precarious financial situation. More than ever, it was essential that the Organization's financial stability be assured. He requested the Assembly to give urgent attention to both the cash and the reserves aspects of the crisis and find ways to ensure that a workable long-term solution was achieved. Throughout 1988, the United Nations had confronted the possibility of imminent bankruptcy and had narrowly managed to avoid it.

As at 30 November 1988, $269.2 million, or 35.5 per cent of the year's total regular budget assessments of $758 million, remained unpaid. Together with arrears of $180.9 million for prior years, total assessed contributions outstanding amounted to $450.1 million, of which $337.3 million, including nearly $122.4 million in arrears from prior years, was owed by one Member State. Cash reserves to meet the shortfall in payment of contributions, defined as the Working Capital Fund and the Special Account, totalling $209.8 million, were replenished only once, in the first quarter of 1988, and had been drawn down since to meet current operating expenses.

By the end of November, only 79 Member States had paid their assessed contributions in full. Of the 80 countries in arrears, 40 owed more than their 1988 assessments, 11 owed an amount equal to them and 29 owed less than their 1988 assessments. During the first 11 months of 1988, 14 Member States made no payments at all.

The Secretary-General reported that, notwithstanding the projected 1989 regular budget cash flow, the Organization's financial situation would remain fragile so long as its reserves were not fully funded. He said that the financial situation could deteriorate rapidly if additional demands for existing or new peace-keeping operations were made on those depleted reserves or if there were acute currency fluctuations or inflation. Unless and until the basic legal obligation of full and timely payment of assessed contributions was honoured by all Member States without exception, the United Nations would continue to confront financial uncertainty.

In an oral report before the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 12 December, the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) said that the forecasted amounts and timing of contributions for 1989 were based on the experience of 1988, but also assumed that the major contributor would pay an amount approximately equal to its total 1989 regular budget assessment. The 1989 disbursement forecast was also based on the experience of 1988 and the Organization would manage to avoid insolvency if those assumptions held true, but only by once again utilizing its reserves to meet cash requirements at many points during the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 September, by decision 42/464, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its forty-third (1988) session the item on the current financial crisis of the United Nations.

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/215.

Current financial crisis of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, Article 17,

Recalling also its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/211 and 42/212 of 21 December 1987,

Deeply concerned about the current financial crisis, caused by the non-fulfilment by some Member States of their obligations under the Charter, which threatens the financial solvency, stability and work of the Organization,

Noting the renewed efforts by some Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full or to reduce the level of their outstanding contributions,

Reaffirming the need for a durable, reliable and lasting financial foundation for the Organization, in accordance with the Charter,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the current financial crisis of the United Nations,

Taking note also of the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee on the current financial crisis of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the obligation of all Member States, under the Charter of the United Nations, to finance the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly, and calls upon them to pay all their assessed contributions in full and in a timely manner;

2. Urges all Member States that have not done so to fulfil their financial obligations under the Charter;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the financial situation of the United Nations and to keep the President of the General Assembly and the chairmen of the regional groups informed so as to facilitate consideration by Member States if the situation so requires;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to communicate to all Member States the latest information on the magnitude of the current financial crisis facing the Organization and to report thereon in a timely and comprehensive manner to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

General Assembly resolution 43/215

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/952) without vote, 19 December (meeting 51); draft by Fiji (A/C.5/43/L.22) following informal consultations; agenda item 50.

Meeting numbers GA 43rd session: 5th Committee 45-47, 49, 51; plenary 84.

On the same date, also on the Fifth Committee's recommendation and without vote, the Assembly adopted resolution 43/220.

Financial emergency of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3049 A (XXVII) of 19 December 1972, 3538(XXX) of 17 December 1975, 32/104 of 14 December 1977, 35/113 of 10 December 1980, 36/116 B of 10 December 1981, 37/13 of 16 November 1982, 38/228 B of 20 December 1983, 39/239 B of 18 December 1984, 40/241 A and B of 18 December 1985, 41/204 A of 11 December 1986 and 42/216 A of 21 December 1987,

Mindful of the report of the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations and of the views expressed by Member States thereon in the Fifth Committee at the thirty-second session of the General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations, and the comments thereon made by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in his introductory statement,

Noting with concern that the short-term deficit of the Organization, though marginally reduced during the year, is expected to reach approximately 320 million United States dollars as at 31 December 1988,

Noting also with concern that delays in and partial payment of assessed contributions continue to create serious cash-flow problems for the Organization,

Concerned also at the increasingly precarious financial situation of peace-keeping operations, and noting that peace-keeping activities remain in operation to a large extent because the current and former troop-contributing Member States, particularly the developing-country troop contributors, continue to bear most of the burden of the deficit,

Reiterating earlier appeals to Member States, without prejudice to their position of principle, to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account referred to in annex VI to the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Noting recent developments concerning the financial situation of the Organization, in particular the progress being made towards liquidating the long-standing arrears in peace-keeping operations and the offers of voluntary contributions by some Member States in response to the Secretary-General's appeals,

Considering the possibility that for many Member States a calendar difference between the national fiscal year and that of the Organization may be among contributory factors in the delay in the payment of assessed contributions,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee during the forty-third session,

1. Reaffirms its commitment to seek a comprehensive and generally acceptable solution to the financial problems of the United Nations, based on the principle of the collective financial responsibility of Member States and in strict compliance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Urges all Member States to meet their financial obligations under the Charter;

3. Renews its appeal to all Member States to make their best efforts to overcome constraints to the prompt payment of all assessed contributions and advances to the Working Capital Fund;

4. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that pay their assessed contributions in full within thirty days of the receipt of the Secretary-General's communication, in accordance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in addition to sending his official communications to the permanent representatives of Member States, to approach, as and when appropriate, the Governments of Member States for the purpose of encouraging expeditious payment in full of all assessed contributions, in compliance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

6. Invites Member States to provide information regarding their expected pattern of payments, in order to facilitate the financial planning by the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations to keep the financial situation of the Organization under review and to report, as and when appropriate, to the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the financial situation of the United Nations, including updated information on the practices of other organizations of the United Nations system for achieving prompt and full payment of assessed contributions.

General Assembly resolution 43/220

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations

In April 1988,(5) the Secretary-General submitted his second progress report on implementation of a 1986 General Assembly resolution(6) adopted on the basis of a report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18). The Secretary-General's report reflected action taken and progress made during the first 15 months of the three-year period envisaged by the Assembly for implementation of the recommendations of the Group in the following areas: political affairs, economic and social matters, co-ordination in the United Nations system, information, conference services, administration and finance, and personnel.

The Secretary-General stated that extensive restructuring was complete in the political and administrative areas and was well under way in the Department of Public Information (DPI). Final restructuring in the economic and social fields had to await the results of reviews undertaken by the intergovernmental bodies. Many recommendations aimed at streamlining the Secretariat and ensuring greater efficiency in its activities, whether in substantive or servicing functions, had already been fully implemented or were to be put into effect during the remainder of the reform period. The Secretary-General acknowledged the outstanding co-operation of the staff in that regard.

Delivering mandated programmes in the most efficient and cost-effective manner remained the most important task of the Secretariat, the Secretary-General said. By the same token, it was essential that Member States supported the endeavour to strengthen the Organization and the services it rendered to the international community.

ACABQ'S comments on the Secretary-General's report were contained in an October report.(7)

In the context of its consideration of programme questions, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), at its 1988 session,(8) also discussed matters pertaining to the implementation of recommendations of the Group of 18.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/213 without vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213: progress report and revised estimates for the biennium 1988-1989

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and its resolution 42/211 of 21 December 1987 on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213:

Reaffirming that measures to improve the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process should aim at and contribute to strengthening the effectiveness of the Organization in dealing with political, economic and social issues in order better to achieve the purposes of and respect for the principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting from the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization that the emerging world situation is bound to impose additional responsibilities on the United Nations,

Reaffirming also that all Member States must honour, promptly and in full, their financial obligations as set out in the Charter,

Re-emphasizing that the financial stability of the Organization will facilitate the orderly, balanced and well co-ordinated implementation of resolution 41/213 in all its parts,

Having considered the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Having considered also the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-eighth session and of the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the consideration of this item at its forty-third session.

1. Renews its appeal to Member States to demonstrate their commitment to the United Nations by, inter alia, meeting their financial obligations on time and in full, in accordance with the Charter and the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

2. Stresses that, in order to carry out successfully the process of reform and restructuring, it is essential that the present financial uncertainties be dispelled;

3. Welcomes the determination of the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to implement fully the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations which fall within his purview, as adopted in resolution 41/213 and in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 42/211;

4. Reiterates its support for the Secretary-General in the fulfilment of his responsibilities as chief administrative officer of the Organization;

5. Stresses that the implementation of its resolution 41/213 must not have a negative impact on mandated programmes and activities;

6. Emphasizes in this respect that, in accordance with the existing regulations and rules, while output revisions in programme budgets may be 'proposed' in order to comply more efficiently with the objectives of those programmes and activities, outputs specifically requested in mandates should be fully delivered;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit his proposed revisions referred to in paragraph 6 above to the General Assembly in the context of proposed programme budgets;

8. Reiterates that further implementation of its resolution 41/213 should be carried out in a balanced way and with flexibility so as to improve the structure and composition of the Secretariat;

9. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of recommendation 15 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts, as adjusted by a 10 per cent reduction in the staffing of conference services in New York and Geneva entailing an overall post reduction of 12.1 per cent by the end of the biennium 1988-1989; and further endorses the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the adjustment under section 29 of the programme budget should entail the restoration of 100 posts on the understanding that this restoration would not require additional appropriations for the biennium 1988-1989;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, in the context of his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991, concrete recommendations for absorbing the costs of the posts referred to above including, to the maximum extent possible, through the elimination of additional posts, under the criteria set out in paragraphs 5, 8, and 9 above and paragraphs 11 to 13 below;

11. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions pertaining to small offices, regional commissions and other units referred to therein, and also requests the Secretary-General to keep in mind the concerns expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee on proposed reductions of staff in small units such as the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat);

12. Concurs with the comments and observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 33 of its report regarding the organization, functions and staffing of the administrative and common services unit at Nairobi;

13. Requests the Secretary-General in further implementing recommendation 15 to continue to take into account the following guidelines:

(a) This recommendation should be implemented flexibly taking due account of work-load analyses, where applicable;

(b) Its implementation should have no negative impact on programmes;

(c) Its implementation should have no adverse effect on the structure and composition of the Secretariat bearing in mind the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity of staff with due regard to equitable geographical distribution;

(d) It should be implemented in a balanced manner, taking into account recommendations 41, 46, 47 and 54;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of recommendations 41, 46, 47 and 54 and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session in the context of the report referred to in paragraph 18 below;

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/951) without vote, 16 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/43/L.19); agenda item 49. Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 5th Committee 7, 10-12, 14, 16, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, 46-48, 50; plenary 64.

UN budget

Budget for 1988-1989

Appropriations

The General Assembly in December 1988 approved an increase of $19,160,000 in the United Nations programme budget for 1988-1989, raising appropriations for the biennium to $1,788,746,300 and authorizing a number of expenditures over the initial amount approved in 1987.(8) In approving the increase, the Assembly followed recommendations by the Fifth Committee on the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his first performance report on the 1988-1989 budget, as well as on the programme budget implications adopted by the Assembly under items considered by other Main Committees or in respect of items dealt with in plenary meetings.

The largest overall increases were approved for the following activities: political and Security Council affairs: peace-keeping activities, $18.8 million; the Economic Commission for Africa, $7 million; overall policy making, direction and co-ordination, $5.3 million; the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, $4.2 million; the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, $2.4 million; the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, $2 million; the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, $2 million; political affairs, trusteeship and decolonization, $1.6 million; public information, $1.3 million; and the International Trade Centre, $1.2 million.

Notable decreases in appropriations were approved in the area of common support services, with deductions of $8.8 million from conference and library services and $6 million from administration and management. Appropriations for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and for staff assessment were adjusted downward by $3.5 million and $3.4 million, respectively.

ACABQ in its report on the revised estimates,(9) recommended a series of compensatory measures, in view of which, it noted, there should be no need to request additional appropriations in the second programme budget performance report for 1988-1989.

ACABQ, in December 1988,(12) recommended approval of the revisions to the appropriations and estimates of income as contained in the Secretary-General's report.

In its comments on the 1988-1989 budget performance report,(13) ACABQ noted that more than half of the additional expenditure appropriation requested by the Secretary-General was earmarked for adjustments in average realized salary levels within grades, while the remainder was requested for changes in the percentage rate of common staff. The Advisory Committee questioned why, in view of the need to control recruitment to reach the target levels of the staffing table, the Secretary-General had not anticipated continuation of the salary-level trend in 1988 and therefore included the necessary resources when the 1988-1989 programme budget was recosted. It urged him to re-examine his methodology with a view to refining and improving his methods for forecasting and budgeting for such increases.

was raised by approximately $2.1 million. Reasons for the increases were mainly due to higher revenues gained from the rental of United Nations premises, and also as a result of favourable exchange-rate movements.

Loan to UNIDO

The General Assembly decided, by resolution 43/217, section V, of 21 December 1988, to continue with the special arrangements made in 1987(15) regarding repayment of a loan by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). It accepted UNIDO's proposal to commence repayment in 1990 at an annual minimum rate of $1 million. The loan, granted by the Assembly in 1985,(16) was originally to be for $24 million to finance the initial operations of the agency until it received sufficient contributions from its members. That amount was adjusted downward in 1986 to $16 million to reflect UNIDO's actual requirements.(17) The conditions of the loan called for repayment of $8 million in 1986 and the remaining $8 million by 1987.

However, due to financial difficulties, UNIDO had been unable to make any payments on the loan in 1986 or 1987. In October 1988,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported that he had been informed by UNIDO that outstanding assessed contributions to it as at 31 December 1987 amounted to $26 million and that estimates for collection of the 1988-1989 assessments did not indicate that the level of outstanding contributions would decrease. It would appear that UNIDO would be unable to make any repayments of the loan during 1988-1989. In June 1988, the Industrial Development Board adopted a proposal by the Director-General, giving him the authority to renegotiate the terms of the loan. Under the proposed terms, a payment of $1 million would be made annually, starting in 1990. Additional payments accelerating that schedule could be negotiated pending the condition of UNIDO's Working Capital Fund.

That proposal, the Secretary-General concluded, would unilaterally convert what was originally a two-year, short-term bridging facility to a long-term loan that could take up to 19 years to repay, which was not what Member States had intended when the appropriations for the original financing were approved. In his view, the maximum time such a loan should continue to be borne by Member States was live more years. Repayment should be at the rate of either $3.2 million annually, beginning in 1989, or $4 million a year, starting 1990. Also, in view of the changed nature of the loan, a reasonable interest rate should be charged. In the absence of an agreement on a firm modality for repayment in the current biennium and in view of the current financial situation of the United Nations, the Secretary-General proposed that the special arrangement made in 1987 regarding assessments on Member States⁽¹⁹⁾ be continued for 1989. Under the 1987 resolution, a waiver had been set on financial regulation 5.2 (b) (stipulating an $8 million reduction in the assessments on Member States in 1988 and a further $8 million in 1989). The loan was to be considered separately in the annual financing resolutions for the budget. Further, 1988 assessments would not be reduced by any part of the loan and those for 1989 would be reduced only by the amount actually repaid.

ACABQ observed in November 1988⁽²⁰⁾ that the Secretary-General's proposals for repayment of the loan within live years and his suggestion for including interest payments did not take full account of UNIDO's current and projected financial difficulties. The Advisory Committee recommended that both organizations continue to negotiate modalities for repayment-in particular, procedures for accelerated payments-and that the Assembly accept UNIDO's proposal to commence repaying the loan in 1990 at the minimum rate of $1 million per year.

Report of ACABQ

During 1988, ACABQ met in New York (12 April-27 May), The Hague, Netherlands (30 and 31 May), Geneva (1-10 June) and Rome, Italy (13-17 June). It considered reports of the Secretary-General on the programme budget for 1988-1989 and other budget-related matters. By resolution 43/217, section III, the General Assembly, on 21 December 1988, took note with appreciation of ACABQ's first report.⁽²¹⁾

Proposed programme budget for 1990-1991

As called for by the Assembly in 1986,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1988 a report on the proposed programme budget outline for 1990-1991,⁽²³⁾ with preliminary estimates of resources to which a contingency fund for additional expenditures would be added.

Indicative estimates of recurrent resources for 1990-1991 at 1988 rates, excluding adjustments for currency fluctuations and inflation, were $1,705.5 million, or 9.6 per cent lower than the revalued resource base of $1,886.6 million for 1988-1989. Non-recurrent resources for 1990-1991 were estimated at $58.1 million, or 158 per cent higher than the similar provision in 1988-1989. The estimate represented a 9.6 per cent decline in the relative growth rate.

The Secretary-General proposed that the contingency fund be set at a level of 0.75 per cent of the 1990-1991 budget, excluding expenditures arising from the impact of extraordinary expenses as well as fluctuations in rates of exchange and inflation. He also suggested that the Assembly continue to keep the appropriateness and adequacy of that level under review.

ACABQ countering the Secretary-General's proposal, recommended that the 1990-1991 programme budget be estimated at $1,982,523,700. This estimate was based on a preliminary estimate of $1,763,700,000, recosted first at 1989 and then at 1990-1991 currency fluctuation and inflation rates. The Advisory Committee also took into account its own recommendation to increase the vacancy rate for Professional and higher-level posts to 5 per cent, and the net addition of 50 posts as called for in the ACABQ report on the revised estimates for 1988-1989 (see PART SIX, Chapter II).

ACABQ did not object to the level of the contingency fund being set at 0.75 per cent, or about $15 million, of the preliminary estimates for the 1990-1991 budget. It recommended that appropriations for the fund should not be made in advance, but that limited amounts should be appropriated as needed. The fund should remain at the level set in the budget outline, with the understanding that the approved amount need not be reached but could not be exceeded.

At its 1988 session,(8) CPC compiled four lists of priorities related to political, economic, social and legal matters for the proposed 1990-1991 programme budget, in accordance with a 1986 Assembly resolution.(6) CPC noted that future budget outlines would benefit from full implementation of the provisions concerning priorities for the medium-term plan starting in 1992. It requested that the Secretary-General report in 1989 on the approach for identifying priorities that reflected broad sectoral trends.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/214 without vote.

Proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1990-1991 and use and operation of the contingency fund

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, by which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General to submit in off-budget years an outline of the programme budget for the following biennium and to include in the programme budget a contingency fund and recognized the necessity of finding a comprehensive solution to the problem of all additional expenditures, including those deriving from inflation and currency fluctuation,

Recalling also its resolution 42/211 of 21 December 1987 in which it decided to consider at its forty-third session the question of a comprehensive solution to the problem of all additional expenditures, including those deriving from inflation and currency fluctuation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the consideration of this item at its forty-second and forty-third sessions,

1. Emphasizes that sound programme budgeting, including a greater level of predictability of resources required, is not fully achievable until the current financial crisis is fully brought to an end by the full and prompt payment of assessments by Member States;

2. Recognizes that the outline of the proposed programme budget is part of the process of improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the Organization;

3. Affirms that the outline, being a part of the new budget process defined in its resolution 41/213, is in a developmental period, that its methodology requires further improvement and that the whole exercise should be applied with flexibility, in accordance with resolutions 41/213 and 42/211;

4. Recognises also that the outline should provide a greater level of predictability of resources required for the following biennium, while ensuring that such resources are adequate for the fulfilment of the objectives, programmes and activities of the Organization, as mandated by the relevant legislative bodies of the United Nations, thereby facilitating the widest possible agreement on the programme budget;

5. Decides that the Secretary-General should prepare his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 on the basis of the total preliminary estimate of 1,767,060,000 United States dollars at 1988 rates (equivalent to 1,982,523,700 dollars at 1990-1991 rates) as shown in paragraph 16 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides also that the contingency fund of the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 shall be established at a level of 0.75 per cent of the preliminary estimate at 1990-1991 rates referred to above, i.e., 15 million dollars, shall be appropriated as needed and shall be used according to the purpose and procedures set out in the annexes to its resolutions 41/213 and 42/211 and relevant regulations and rules;

7. Decides further to keep under review, during the implementation of the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 and in the light of the evolving situation, the appropriateness and adequacy of the level of the contingency fund, as well as its mode of operation;

8. Reaffirms the need for a comprehensive and satisfactory solution to the problem of controlling the effects of inflation and currency fluctuation on the budget of the United Nations;

9. Notes with appreciation the work undertaken on this issue by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and its observations on the establishment of a reserve that would cover additional requirements due to currency fluctuation, non-staff costs inflation and statutory cost increases for staff;

10. Agrees to the concept of a reserve as described in paragraph 9 above, requests the Secretary-General to formulate a set of procedures for the operation of the reserve to be submitted through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, and agrees to address further at that time the question of setting up such a reserve for the biennium 1990-1991;

11. Stresses the importance of indicating in the outline of the proposed programme budget priorities reflecting general trends of a broad sectoral nature, endorses the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in this regard, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on all aspects of priority-setting in future outlines to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to present his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 in accordance with the present resolution and paragraph 10 of resolution 43/213 of 21 December 1988.

Contributions

The forty-eighth session of the Committee on Contributions was held in New York from 6 June to 1 July 1988.(1) Responding to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,(2) the Committee prepared a scale of assessments for 1989-1991, reviewed limits in the scheme to avoid excessive variations of individual assessment rates between successive scales and continued its work on improving the methodology for drafting future scales. In addition, the Committee proposed interim arrangements for the collection of assessed contributions from non-member States.

Scale of assessments

In its 1988 report,(1) the Committee on Contributions presented its recommendations for the scale of assessment for the apportionment of United Nations expenses for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991. The report showed the unadjusted and adjusted machine scales used by the Committee in establishing those recommendations and the results of the mitigation process. Reservations by two Committee members regarding the proposed scale were also included in the report.

Under the new scale, 79 Member States were assessed at 0.01 per cent, 9 at 0.02 and 6 at 0.03. A total of 94 Member States, i.e., 59 per cent of the membership, were thus assessed at or below 0.03 per cent. Assessment rates for the Group of 77 developing countries as a whole increased from 9.67 to 10.01 per cent.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/223 A without vote.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the obligation of Member States, under Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly,

Bearing in mind rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

1. Resolves that the scale of assessments for the contributions of Member States to the regular budget of the United Nations for 1989 and 1990, and also 1991 unless a new scale is approved earlier by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Committee on Contributions in response to resolution B below, shall be as follows:

3. Resolves further that:

(a) In accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the scale of assessments given in paragraph 1 above shall be reviewed by the Committee on Contributions in 1991, or earlier as specified in paragraph 1 above, when a report shall be submitted to the Assembly for consideration at its forty-sixth session;

General Assembly resolution 43/223 A

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/981) without vote, 19 December (meeting 51); draft by Canada (A/C.5/43/L. 17. part A1 following informal consultations; agenda item 120.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 5th Committee 9-12, 14-16, 21, 51; plenary 84.

Scale preparation

In its 1988 report,(1) the Committee on Contributions noted that the fundamental criteria of the current methodology for scale preparation was the capacity to pay. Continuing the practice of using a 10-year statistical base period, capacity was measured in terms of the average national income of Member States from 1977-1986. Average national incomes were modified by a low per capita income allowance based on the same parameters used for the current scale, i.e., an upper per capita income limit of $2,200 and a relief gradient of 85 per cent. Ceiling and floor rates were limited to 25 per cent and 0.01 per cent, respectively, and there was a provision that prevented an increased assessment on the least developed countries, as called for by the General Assembly in 1981.(3)

After considering data presented by the Secretariat on total and public external debt restricted to developing countries, the Committee determined the eligibility for debt relief for all developing and centrally-planned economy countries for which data on total debt, both public and private, were available. As a result, 118 countries were identified as eligible, compared with 37 in 1985. Deductions for those 118 countries were based on the repayment of principle only, as interest payments were already reflected in national income estimates. However, as reliable data on debt service were not available, the Committee decided to approximate debt by using a working hypothesis on the ratio of debt service due to total external debt accumulation, resulting in a rate of 12 per cent. The ratio was determined in consultation with the International Monetary Fund (IMF), which suggested that the methodology be refined in the future based on a study of the length of repayment periods.

The Statistical Office of the Secretariat also presented a document on price-adjusted rates of exchange (PARE) to give the Committee an alternative for the ad hoc method applied in 1985.⁽³⁾ The document focused on the effects of price-exchange-rate distortions on per capita income expressed in United States dollars.

The Committee tested PARE adjustments for a selected group of 32 countries based on the ratio between the actual exchange rate and the PARE-adjusted rate. As that test showed that the adjustments would result in a considerable transfer of points between countries, the Committee reduced the effect of PARE uniformly for the selected countries by weighting it with the actual exchange rate. However, due to several anomalies that arose from the PARE methodology, the Committee then decided to adjust national income only for debt relief. Countries with significant exchange-rate distortions, identified by the PARE analysis, were borne in mind when drawing up the final scale of assessments.

Suggestions on how to adjust the national income concept for factors that were not taken into account in the current national income definition were also discussed by the Committee. Among other things, questions were raised about the treatment of large-scale transfers of capital which were included in the national income of the host country. A further question arose as to whether the national income concept used by the Committee was the most appropriate means of measuring capacity to pay. The Committee stated its intention to return to this matter in 1989.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly without vote adopted resolution 43/223 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the scale of assessments, in particular resolutions 39/247 B of 12 April 1985 and 42/208 of 11 December 1987,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions and noting with appreciation the efforts of the Committee, Bearing in mind the evolution of the world economic situation and its impact on the capacity to pay of Member States.

Taking into account the views expressed in the Fifth Committee during the forty-third session, in particular on the need for a substantial improvement of the existing methodology and criteria for the determination of the scale of assessments, and the need for information on the steps taken in the preparation of the scale of assessments,

Also taking into account the views expressed in the Fifth Committee during the forty-third session on the ceiling and floor levels,

1. Reconfirms that the capacity to pay of Member States is the fundamental criterion for determining the scale of assessments;

2. Requests the Committee on Contributions, in order to ensure fairness and equity in the scale and to make the methodology transparent, easily understandable, stable over time and as simple as possible, to undertake a comprehensive review of all aspects of the existing methodology, and to this end:

(a) To continue to monitor the improvements in the area of the availability and comparability of national income data, and to continue its work on the price-adjusted rates of exchange methodology;

(b) To seek more comprehensive and systematic information on external debt with a view to ensuring that this factor is adequately taken into account in the calculations for determining the capacity to pay;

(c) To undertake a comprehensive review of the upper limit of the low per capita income allowance formula and the application of the formula;

(d) To review, in the light of the proposals made in the Fifth Committee:

(i) The statistical base period and its application;

(ii) The scheme to avoid excessive variations of individual rates between successive scales;

(iii) The possibility of excluding allocation of any additional points as a result of the application of the scheme of limits to those Member States with a very low per capita income; and to include in its report the implications of the various options considered;

(e) To limit the use of ad hoc adjustments in the preparation of the scale to the minimum possible, keeping in mind that in case such ad hoc adjustments are necessary, they should be made on the basis of objective, rational and transparent considerations, applied uniformly, and to include in its reports on the preparation of future scales of assessments explicit information on the basis of which such ad hoc adjustments were made;

3. Requests the Committee on Contributions to examine, as a means of improving the current methodology, the possible use of other factors, including the situation of those countries:

(a) Whose economies depend on one or a few products or income sources;

(b) Which suffered a real loss of income as a result of deteriorating terms of trade;

(c) Which experience serious balance-of-payments (trade) problems or a negative net flow of resources;

(d) Which have limited capacity to acquire convertible currencies

4. Also requests the Committee on Contributions to continue its study on the concept of national income, as indicated in paragraph 47 of its report;

5. Further requests the Committee on Contributions, in conducting the studies and reviews indicated in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, to examine also the interrelationship of each of the elements as part of the overall methodology, bearing in mind the need to avoid duplication and negative impact of each individual element on the others in order to reflect capacity to pay;

6. Requests the Committee on Contributions to submit a report on the above-mentioned reviews and their implications for future scales of assessments, with illustrative examples, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Contributions with the facilities it requires to carry out its work, including supplementary assistance if necessary.

General Assembly resolution 43/223 B

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/981) without vote, 19 December (meeting 51); draft by Canada (A/C. 5/43/L. 17. part B) following informal consultations; agenda item 120.

Budget contributions in 1988

Of the $1,111.5 million in contributions to the United Nations regular budget payable as at 1 January 1988, $716.5 million had been collected by 31 December, leaving almost $395 million outstanding. Of the total amount payable, $758 million was assessed for 1988 alone, while the remaining $353 million was outstanding from previous years. Budget assessments were in accordance with scales for 1986-1988 approved by the General Assembly in 1985.(6)

At the resumption of the General Assembly's 1987 session, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly President on 29 February 1988(7) that 12 Member States—Benin, Central African Republic, Congo, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Nicaragua, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, South Africa—were more than two years in arrears in the payment of their budget contributions.

On 1 and 18 March, 16 August and 19 September,(8) the Secretary-General reported that Benin, the Central African Republic, the Congo, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Nicaragua, Romania, and Sao Tome and Principe had made the necessary payments to reduce their arrears below the two-year limit to maintain voting privileges, as specified in Article 19 of the United Nations Charter. On 20 September 1988,(9) he stated that South Africa remained $33,940,541 in arrears.

Contributions from non-member States

In 1988,(1) the Committee on Contributions decided that the Secretariat should examine the question of contributions by non-member States and prepare a note for consideration at its 1989 session. In the mean time, it proposed that non-member States pay at the beginning of each calendar year an amount equivalent to their average annual contribution during the previous 10 years, with a later adjustment for their actual level of participation during that year.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 43/223 C, took note of the Committee's proposal concerning the procedures for the collection of contributions from non-member States.

Accounts and auditing

The accounts and financial statements for the year or biennium ended 31 December 1987 for the United Nations and eight voluntarily financed programmes were accepted by the General Assembly together with the audit opinions of the United Nations Board of Auditors. The Assembly also endorsed the observations of the Board and of

A C A B Q .

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Board on 31 March 1988 his financial reports on the accounts for the United Nations, including the International Trade Centre (ITC) (jointly sponsored by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)) and the United Nations University, for the 1986-1987 biennium.

The programmes for which financial reports and audited financial statements were submitted were: the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP),(2) the United Nations Children's Fund,(3) the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA),(4) the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR),(5) the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR),(6) the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP),(7) the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA)(8) and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation.(9)

Recommendations and observations were made by the Board on various aspects of those programmes. Among the topics considered were cash management, budgetary control, payroll and personnel systems, procurement practices, computer operations, project management, peace-keeping operations, trust funds, revenue-producing activities, accounting procedures and financial reporting systems.

The Board of Auditors gave qualified audit opinions on the financial statements of the United Nations, UNDP and UNFPA.

In the case of the United Nations, the Board noted that most of the unpaid assessed contributions from Member States, including $353.2 million owed to the United Nations alone as of December 1987, had been outstanding for several years. The Board's opinion on the financial statements, therefore, was subject to the ultimate realization of those assets.

Regarding UNDP's financial statement, the Board found that the delineation between programme, programme support and operating costs was not adequately reflected. It also recommended that, at least for UNDP core activities, administrative expenditures be recorded on a gross rather than a net basis, as was the current practice, without off-setting administrative costs, regardless of funding source.

Concerning UNFPA, the Board stated that, other than expenditures executed by UNFPA itself, there was inadequate documentation to support programme expenditures made by executing agencies.

The Board also issued qualified audit opinions on compliance with the financial regulations and legislative authority of the Organization by UNWRA and ITC. This was due to procedural errors in the implementation of previous audit recommendations and to certain practices which needed review.

A summary of the Board's principal findings and conclusions for remedial action were transmitted to the Assembly in July 1988.(10) Comments on the Board's reports for the financial period ending 31 December 1987 were made by ACABQ in October.(11)

In addition, ACABQ examined the Board's report on its expanded audit of the financial report and accounts of UNICEF for the year ended 31 December 1986,(12) which was submitted pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request.(13) As a result of the expanded audit, the Board rendered a clean opinion of the UNICEF accounts for 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/216 without vote.

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial reports and audited financial statements for the period ended 31 December

1987 of the United Nations, including the International Trade Centre and the United Nations University, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, the reports and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors, the concise summary of the principal findings and conclusions of common interest contained in the reports of the Board of Auditors, and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having also considered the report of the Board of Auditors on its expanded audit of the financial report and accounts of the United Nations Children's Fund for the year ended 31 December 1986,

Recognizing the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 42/206 of 11 December 1987,

Noting with concern that the Board of Auditors, for the reasons stated in its reports, issued qualified audit opinions on the financial statements of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund, and also issued qualified audit opinions on compliance with the Financial Regulations and legislative authority in the transactions of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the International Trade Centre,

Noting also with concern the delay in the issuance of the reports of the Board of Auditors for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-third session,

Taking into consideration the views expressed by delegations, by the Board of Auditors, by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and by representatives of the United Nations organizations and programmes during the debate in the Fifth Committee on this item, and the widely expressed support for measures to improve the efficiency, management, financial accountability and budgetary control of the United Nations organizations and programmes concerned,

Recognizing that the qualifications on the certification of programme expenditures in the audit opinions on the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund accounts are technical in nature and require co-ordinated action by the administrations and governing bodies of the Programme and the Fund and the executing agencies concerned,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors regarding the aforementioned organizations;

2. Requests the governing bodies of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the International Trade Centre to require the executive heads concerned to take immediate steps within their competence to correct the situations or conditions that gave rise to the qualification of audit opinions of the Board of Auditors;

3. Urges the panel of external auditors, administrations, governing bodies of the executing agencies and other parties concerned to solve the problem with regard to the certification of programme expenditures executed and reported by United Nations executing agencies in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme as well as with the United Nations Population Fund;

Endorses the concurring observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as contained in their respective reports, duly taking into account the divergent views expressed in the Fifth Committee on the question of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres and the Pan-African Documentation and Information System;

5. Requests the competent governing bodies to ensure that the executive heads concerned take necessary steps on a priority basis to implement the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as contained in their respective reports, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes concerned to take without delay appropriate measures within their competence in the light of the comments, observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, including those relating to financial reporting, budgetary controls, unliquidated obligations, cash management, trust funds, and hiring of consultants, experts and temporary assistance, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the governing bodies of these organizations and programmes;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes concerned to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, specific measures taken to implement previous recommendations of the Board, and requests the Board and the Advisory Committee to evaluate the efficacy of those measures;

8. Recommends that all future reports of the Board of Auditors continue to include separate sections that summarize recommendations for corrective action to be taken by the organizations and programmes concerned, with an indication of relative urgency;

9. Also recommends that the Board of Auditors continue to submit to the General Assembly a concise document summarizing its principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of common interest, classified by audit area and, where appropriate, identifying the audited organization;

10. Requests the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to continue to cover in their reviews of the organizations and programmes, including peace-keeping operations, the areas relating to the efficiency and effectiveness of the financial procedures and controls, the accounting system and related administrative and management areas, in accordance with regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, and to recommend measures, as appropriate, to strengthen financial and management controls;

13. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes and other relevant entities, in consultation with the Board of Auditors, to explore the possibility of standardizing the presentation and format of financial statements and accounting policies of all audited organizations and programmes, taking into account previous relevant studies, and to report with proposals thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

14. Invites the administrations of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund to review their accounting policy with respect to unliquidated obligations taking into account generally accepted accounting principles;

United Nations programmes

Efforts to improve programme planning and performance, together with programme evaluation, continued throughout 1988.

Programme planning and performance

Programme performance 1986-1987

Report of the Secretary-General. A report on the programme performance of the United Nations for 1986-1987 was submitted by the Secretary-General in April 1988.(1) The report stated that following CPC's 1986 consideration of the 1984-1985 programme performance,(2) action had been taken to facilitate regular performance reporting by departments and offices. CPC's observations were taken into account, particularly as they related to questions of reporting methodology.

Regarding methodology, the Secretary-General noted that there were basically three categories of activities that, by virtue of their distinct nature, required different reporting formats: substantive activities (including reports, publications and public information); servicing bodies; and other activities for which programmatic descriptions were not sufficiently detailed to permit reporting by either of the other two formats. Tables in the report gave summaries of programmed output by category of activity, comparisons of programmed outputs for 1986-1987 with those for 1984-1985, and outputs postponed from 1984-1985.

Concerning all the programmes covered, the overall implementation rate in 1986-1987 lagged behind that of the previous biennium by 6.6 per cent, the most likely cause being the appreciably higher vacancy rate in a number of departments due to the Organization's freeze on recruitment imposed in reaction to the current financial crisis. Vacancies in the Professional category during 1986-1987 averaged 13 per cent and reached 15 per cent by the end of 1987.

In a July addendum,(3) the Secretary-General gave a breakdown of the programme performance of all 29 sections of the 1986-1987 programme budget.

CPC consideration. CPC considered the Secretary-General's report at its 1988 session(4) and noted the adjustments in methodology and presentation. It expressed concern that the overall programme delivery rate had decreased by about 7 per cent compared with the previous biennium. Noting that all outputs, regardless of type, were treated similarly, CPC recommended that the methodology be refined to present a qualitative and quantitative classification. It expressed concern over the high rates of postponed and terminated outputs, recommending that future reports give the reasons and authority for these actions and also indicate the future status of those outputs postponed. CPC also recommended that the Secretary-General further review the definition for termination of outputs and that the General Assembly give due consideration to the addendum to the report, which, because of its late issuance, CPC was unable to take into account.

In resolution 1988/62, the Economic and Social Council endorsed CPC's conclusions and recommendations.

JIU consideration. In January 1988, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) reported on the performance and results of United Nations programmes, which included monitoring, evaluation and management review.(5)

JIU recommended, among other things, that the Secretary-General replace the current programme performance report with one that analysed progress and results against the established objectives for each United Nations subprogramme.

It also recommended (recommendation 2) that the Secretary-General assess the staffing of the Central Evaluation Unit to ensure it had the necessary resources; add at least one more Professional staff member to the Central Monitoring Unit in the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Finance; and strengthen the evaluation capacity of the United Nations in general. It was further recommended that ACABQ, the Fifth Committee and the Committee on Conferences consider requesting an annual in-depth Secretariat report on management improvement actions (recommendation 3). JIU stated that high priority should be given by the Secretary-General to establishing a computerized management information system which integrated both performance and financial information (recommendation 4).

In May,(6) the Secretary-General said the JIU recommendation to replace the current programme performance report would be considered, but he pointed out that a summary in a revised format would be at variance with the rules governing programme planning, and would create a voluminous report of some 500 pages for the Assembly and CPC to examine since there were some 470 subprogrammes. The Secretary-General said that the matter of staffing had been taken into account in the recent restructuring of the office in question.

Regarding the annual review report on management improvement actions, the Secretary-General stated that once the question of an integrated management information system for the entire Secretariat had been dealt with by the General Assembly and was operational, such reporting would be one of its outputs. He added that, in developing that system, consideration would be given to computerization.

Medium-term plan revisions and extension

The medium-term plan for 1984-1989, covering the entire range of United Nations activities, was first adopted by the General Assembly in 1982(7) and revised in 1984(8) and 1986(9). In 1987 (10) the Assembly had endorsed the recommendations of the Secretary-General and CPC(11) to extend the medium-term plan to cover 1990 and 1991.

In April 1988,(12) the Secretary-General submitted revisions to extend the medium-term plan to cover 1990-1991; to incorporate new developments or mandates; and to provide a framework for the proposed 1990-1991 programme budget. He proposed revisions to 27 of the 31 major budget programmes.

Three types of revisions were suggested: completely new subprogrammes, substantive revisions of existing programmes or subprogrammes, and small textual revisions. One hundred and fifty-two programmes were identified under the 31 major programmes, with the Secretary-General proposing the creation of one additional programme on research and the collection of information. Of the 485 subprogrammes (averaging eight per programme), he proposed that 105 be revised and 19 be deleted. He also proposed that 12 new subprogrammes be added to the current plan.

The 19 subprogrammes suggested for deletion, with their work reassigned to other programmes, were under the following programmes: Division of Narcotic Drugs; public information; human settlements; Economic Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA); international trade; development finance; Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC); statistics; programme planning, budgeting and financial services; human resources management; communications; technical support services; and programme planning and co-ordination.

The 12 new subprogrammes would be created under research and the collection of information; Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP); Economic Commission for Africa (ECA); social development and humanitarian affairs; programme planning, budgeting and financial services; and technical support services.

On 16 November 1988,(13) the Chairman of the Fifth Committee forwarded to the Assembly the comments of the Chairmen of the Assembly's six other Main Committees on the proposed revisions. Each Chairman set out the views of his Committee on those chapters which concerned it and indicated comments by individual Member States or groups of States. Annexed were the views of six States expressed in the First Committee on the questions of disarmament and nuclear weapons as they related to the medium-term plan.

In its recommendations on the Secretary-General's proposed revisions to the medium-term plan,(4) CPC called for a new and more practical type of presentation of the plan and its revisions. It felt the report lacked clarity, due in part to a selective inclusion of legislative mandates and to technical deficiencies. The Committee gave detailed suggestions by chapter for textual changes to the proposed revised plan.

According to ACABQ,(14) it was difficult to assess the effects of all the latest proposed revisions. The Committee recalled that the current medium-term plan had been substantially revised since first being issued, a situation which impaired the plan's utility, gave rise to serious confusion and was to be avoided in future. Revisions and addenda should be issued when additions, subtractions, substitutions or modifications were required. ACABQ strongly believed that the mere reorganization, merger or deletion of organizational units that did not materially affect the programme of work or related priorities should not lead to the publication of revisions. The Secretariat should submit to CPC and ACABQ proposals on the best way of handling revisions to future medium-term plans.

Preparation of the 1992-1997 medium-term plan

In 1988, the Secretary-General continued to put forward his proposals for the medium-term plan beginning in 1992. Following up on his 1987 note,(15) he submitted in May 1988, at the Assembly's 1987 request,(16) a draft introduction to the plan.(17)

He suggested that the plan be simplified and that the current division into four "parts"—political, legal and humanitarian, public information, and economic and social—lacked practical significance and unnecessarily complicated the structure. Restructuring did not imply any overall reduction of the Organization's role, he said. On the contrary, it should help clarify the Organization's aims and enhance its performance.

The basic priorities of the Organization as laid down in the Charter had not changed, the Secretary-General said. The plan would comprise four major programmes: peace, security, disarmament (especially nuclear disarmament) and self-determination of peoples; international law, human rights and fundamental freedoms; economic and social advancement of all peoples; and information and common services. Among priorities for the 1990s were the reinforcement of the abilities of the Security Council, a comprehensive just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, ending apartheid and restoring freedom and independence in southern Africa, resolving the critical economic situation in Africa, and reducing poverty worldwide.

A suggested calendar of consultations on the 1993-1997 medium-term plan was put forward by the Secretary-General in September 1988.⁽¹⁸⁾ The consultations were to take place during 1989 with the intergovernmental bodies concerned. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly authorize him to issue instructions for the preparation of the plan, and to request the sectoral, functional and regional bodies to recommend priorities among subprogrammes in their field of competence. CPC recommended approval of the calendar.⁽⁴⁾

ACABQ stated, also in September,⁽¹⁴⁾ that the Secretary-General should attempt to streamline the calendar of consultations further, particularly when preparing future medium-term plans. It felt that the Secretariat otherwise might become so involved in the cycle of preparations for the plan that it would lose sight of other imperatives, such as monitoring its implementation. ACABQ suggested the adoption of the calendar as submitted by the Secretary-General.

Programme evaluation

In his ongoing efforts to improve the evaluation of United Nations programmes, the Secretary-General in March 1988 (19) submitted to the General Assembly through CPC a report on the application of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives. The report, the first of its kind on a biennial basis, was conducted in accordance with the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, which called for self-evaluation and in-depth studies. In 1987, the Assembly had endorsed CPC's recommendation that evaluation methodology continue to be refined.(16)

The Secretary-General noted that in-depth studies were conducted at the major programme level by an external unit, and that in-depth evaluations by the Central Evaluation Unit, at the request of CPC, covered programmes at Headquarters, the regional commissions and sectoral bodies.

He noted also that the self-evaluation system established in 1986(20) required all programme managers to ensure its systematic integration in each stage of programme planning. The system also highlighted the importance of managerial accountability. The Secretary-General concluded that the machinery for evaluation was in place and its integration into the whole programme planning, budgeting and monitoring cycle was proceeding gradually. Its slow but steady introduction would require further attention to enable it to function effectively, and constant efforts would be needed to ensure that it was viewed as a tool for assisting programme managers and not for detecting failures or reducing funding. The Secretary-General suggested that CPC might wish to recommend that he strengthen the programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation components for integrated management and policy-making.

CPC considered the Secretary-General's report in May 1988.(4) It recommended further strengthening of evaluation and agreed to endorse the Secretary-General's recommendations. It also agreed that evaluation should be fully integrated into the programme planning, budgeting and monitoring process.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 43/219, endorsed CPC's recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to present a timetable for implementing his recommendations on self-evaluation as well as for completing initial evaluation training and providing central evaluation services.

Joint Inspection Unit

Throughout 1988, the Joint Inspection Unit continued to issue reports addressing various aspects of the inspection, review or evaluation of selected programmes of the United Nations system. In its January report on the performance and results of United Nations programmes: monitoring evaluation and management review components,(21) JIU stated that the method currently used to review programmes was still incomplete, as there was no systematic reporting on performance and results. The biennial programme performance reports conducted by the Secretariat were neither timely nor analytical and were scarcely used.

In late 1986, the report said, the Secretariat had introduced a new system of built-in self-evaluation. Unfortunately, CPC had received only a brief biennial report summarizing general conclusions about evaluation and programme design. JIU felt it was critical that the new framework be used to produce reports that would firmly integrate evaluation into programme decision-making; provide timely information on programme progress; establish accountability for performance; and help Member States ensure the most cost-effective use of scarce programme funds.

The report suggested that the Secretary-General replace the current output-counting programme performance report with one that analysed progress made and results achieved against the established objectives for each United Nations subprogramme. Even though the Secretariat-wide evaluation system called for by the Assembly in 1981(22) would most likely never be established, certain actions should be taken to strengthen the existing system. Those measures included adequate staffing of central units and strengthened evaluation and performance reporting in major units.

Noting that although administration, management and conference services support functions consumed almost half the United Nations regular budget, JIU pointed out that they provided almost no reporting to intergovernmental bodies on actual gains achieved in efficiency, service quality or productivity. JIU suggested that the relevant intergovernmental bodies consider requesting an in-depth review report annually in a selected administrative support or conference services area.

In September 1988,(23) JIU submitted to the General Assembly its report on the representation of organizations of the United Nations system at conferences and meetings. It highlighted what it felt were inefficiencies in the conference invitation procedure and the need to streamline the process, particularly in view of the Organization's financial crisis. It suggested also that significant savings in travel expenses could be made by increasing the use of field and liaison offices as meeting places.

In 1987,(24) the Assembly had invited JIU to introduce several suggestions for self-improvement that it had made in its report on its July 1986-June 1987 activities.⁽²⁵⁾ The implementation of those improvements was followed up in JIU's report on its work from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988.⁽²⁶⁾ JIU stated that its 1988 work programme had been reviewed by CPC in 1988 and, in June, it had a fruitful discussion with ACABQ on a number of studies in the work programme. The achievement of a more collective approach to JIU business had been discussed thoroughly and its current report had been significantly broadened in response to the Assembly's 1987 request⁽²⁴⁾ that the Unit include a section on JIU's findings regarding implementation of its recommendations.

In response to another Assembly request, the report included the guidelines JIU followed for selecting, conducting and reporting on its inspections. Under those guidelines, it prepared reports, notes and confidential letters on the work of its participating organizations only, i.e., those that had accepted its statute. JIU's work programme, formally approved by the JIU Inspectors each January, included at least one item of interest to each participating organization. A reasonable number of studies were to be addressed to the major intergovernmental bodies with inter-agency responsibilities, such as the Economic and Social Council, CPC and the Governing Council of UNDP, as well as to the Fifth Committee.

The guidelines also called for some items to be chosen from each of the following subject areas: substantive programmes, technical co-operation, personnel questions, administration, conference services, and programme planning and budgeting. Studies should have a direct bearing on the efficiency of services, substantively as well as administratively, and should aim to improve management methods, attain common or comparable standards and achieve greater co-ordination among organizations.

The 1988 JIU work programme was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly in February,⁽²⁷⁾ together with the nucleus of the Unit's work programme for 1989-1990.

The Secretary-General reported on the implementation of the 1987 recommendations of JIU in September 1988.⁽²⁸⁾ In June, (29) he commented on JIU's 1987 report on autonomous research institutes of the United Nations.⁽³⁰⁾

Regarding membership of JIU, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), in April 1988,⁽³¹⁾ requested its Organizational Committee to examine the consultation procedure with regard to reviewing candidates for appointment. The Committee was to use the proposals made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) as the basis of its review, and submit recommendations for enhancing the participation of ACC in those procedures to the Committee in 1988. In October,⁽³²⁾ ACC requested the Secretary-General, as ACC Chairman, to bring its concerns regarding the current procedures of the appointment of JIU members to the attention of the President of the General Assembly and invite him to consult with the regional groups on those concerns.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/221 without vote.

Joint Inspection Unit

The General Assembly,

Invites the Joint Inspection Unit, taking into account its other responsibilities, to include in its proposed work programme the provision of advice to participating organizations on their methods of internal evaluation and the undertaking of more ad hoc evaluations of programmes and activities, with due regard to programmatic aspects identified by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and taking fully into account the mandates of the organizations concerned;
8. Also invites the Joint Inspection Unit, in this respect, to give greater attention to management, budgetary and administrative issues, including those identified by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its reports on the administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency and by the Board of Auditors in its audit opinions and reports, as well as those areas of the United Nations system undergoing reform;

13. Underlines the importance of applying the highest standards in selecting candidates for appointment as inspectors, as stipulated in chapter 2 of the statute of the Joint Inspection Unit, and of giving special emphasis to experience in national or international administrative and financial matters, including management questions and, where possible, knowledge of the United Nations or other international organizations;

14. Also underlines, in this respect, the importance of the consultation process for reviewing the qualifications of the proposed candidates in accordance with article 3, paragraph 2, of the statute of the Joint Inspection Unit;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the executive heads of the participating organizations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

16. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to take into account the guidelines outlined above in finalizing its work programme for 1989-1990 and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the UN system

The administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) was the subject of a report submitted to the General Assembly on 31 October 1988 by ACABQ.⁽¹⁾ In accordance with its terms of reference, ACABQ met with executive heads of 13 organizations whose agreements with the United Nations provided for transmittal of their budgets for review by the General Assembly.

Those organizations were ILO, FAO, UNESCO, ICAO, UPU, WHO, ITU, WMO, IMO, WIPO, IFAD, UNIDO and IAEA.

The impact of currency fluctuations and inflation was the special topic taken up by the Advisory Committee during its deliberations with the organizations in question. Also contained in the report were data on the following: total amounts of the approved budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1980-1989; total net contributions of Member States actually payable under approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1980-1989; established posts, 1987-1989; regular budget contributions to technical co-operation activities, 1987-1989; extrabudgetary funds administered by the United Nations system of organizations, both contributions and expenditures, 1986-1987; working capital funds for 1989; scales of assessment applicable in 1989; and collection of contributions, 1987-1988.

The regular budgets of the Organization, the specialized agencies (excluding IFAD) and IAEA for 1989 amounted to $2,121,970,975, of which $2,008,756,760 was to be covered by assessed contributions, the report said. Also, depending on decisions made by the Assembly and the Security Council, further assessed contributions for the United Nations were likely to arise in 1989 for peace-keeping operations. For the 12-month period through October 1988, the total amount assessed for peace-keeping operations was $205.4 million.

As at 30 September 1988, the total of all outstanding budget contributions was $1,156,713,200, or 58.01 per cent of total net contributions of Member States actually payable in respect of that year, as compared with $1,078,557,800, or 65.3 per cent as at the same date in 1987.

According to the report, cash payments received by the United Nations system of organizations from voluntary contributions, which are labelled extra-budgetary funds, totalled $2,974,955,500 for 1987, and $2,562,238,100 in 1986. Of that, Member States contributed $2,796,237,700 in 1987 and $2,408,531,200 in 1986. Some $84,414,200 came from non-member States in 1987, while $71,888,000 was forthcoming from them in 1986. Expenditure of extrabudgetary funds administered by the United Nations system of organizations totalled $3,647,415,500 in 1987, compared with $3,527,801,000 in 1986.

The total number of established posts authorized or requested under the regular budgets of the specialized agencies (excluding IFAD) and IAEA for 1989 was 13,605, which was 36 more than the 1988 total of 13,569. The number of established posts authorized or requested under the regular budget of the United Nations for 1989 was 11,169, unchanged from 1988. Therefore, a grand total of 24,774 established posts for 1989 had been authorized or requested under the regular budgets of the United Nations, the specialized agencies (excluding IFAD) and IAEA.

In extensive comments on the budgets of each of the specialized agencies and of IAEA, the Advisory Committee discussed, among other things: appropriations for 1986-1987; actual expenditure; actual income collected and cash deficit; appropriations for 1988-1989; the working capital funds; measures taken by each to deal with the savings or loss due to currency fluctuations; and posts under the regular budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 43/451 of 21 December 1988, the General Assembly took note with appreciation of ACABQ's report and requested the Secretary-General to refer it to the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations system, through ACC. Also, it decided to transmit the report to the Board of Auditors, CPC, the International Civil Service Commission and JIU.

Chapter II

United Nations officials

In 1988, the Secretary-General presented a detailed plan to reduce the number of posts in the United Nations. The reductions would affect the work of the Organization and the volume of its programmed activities would have to be reduced.

The Organization continued to operate under a recruitment freeze, introduced in 1986 as part of the response to the United Nations financial crisis. However, in February, the Secretary-General introduced limited recruitment where qualified internal candidates could not be found and in departments and offices with high vacancy rates.

The Secretary-General also reported a disturbing overall increase in the number of officials of the United Nations system who had been arrested and detained, or who had disappeared.

The presence and position of women in the Secretariat improved during 1988, despite the limited recruitment policy. The Secretary-General appointed a senior-level woman as a focal point for the action programme to improve the status of women in the Secretariat, and the Economic and Social Council requested each organization in the United Nations system to designate a similar high-level co-ordinator.

The International Civil Service Commission made several recommendations affecting United Nations personnel and submitted a preliminary report on conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories. The General Assembly set out guidelines to be used by the Commission to complete the report (resolution 43/226).

The Secretary-General reported that marked progress in streamlining the Headquarters Joint Appeals Board had resulted in the virtual elimination of the case backlog. The Assembly requested that a fully revised internal justice system be established by the end of 1989 (43/224 B).

Personnel management

In early 1988, the Secretary-General, in view of the General Assembly's 1987 decision⁽¹⁾ that he review the freeze on recruitment of external candidates introduced in 1986,⁽²⁾ and the recommendation of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18)⁽³⁾ concerning the reduction of posts in the Secretariat, decided to introduce limited recruitment for vacant posts for which qualified internal candidates could not be identified through the vacancy management system. He also decided that flexibility in recruitment would continue for departments and offices with high vacancy rates, in particular the secretariats of regional commissions (see below).

Efforts were made to increase the mobility of Professional staff through the vacancy management and staff redeployment programme and this resulted in a significant number of staff movements between duty stations. The Secretary-General approved measures to facilitate this mobility, including enhanced entitlements for staff assigned or transferred to duty stations with high vacancy rates.

He also discussed the realignment of the periodic competitive examinations and reported that, during the period from 30 July 1987 to 1 June 1988, one internal competitive examination resulted in the selection of 21 candidates for promotion to the Professional level. An external exam was held in 1987 in four Member States-Greece, Japan, Mexico and the USSR-and 25 candidates were selected. Offers of appointment had been made to 23 (11 women and 12 men) so far.

Many components of the career development system, including counselling and succession planning, were deferred due to the Organization's financial crisis. However, special efforts were made to design some components of the career development plan for staff in the General Service and related categories. An emphasis on training was also incorporated in the staff reorganization to build a more efficient and effective Secretariat.

The Secretary-General submitted for consideration by the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee the views of the staff unions and associations of the United Nations Secretariat⁽⁴⁾ on a number of personnel matters, including the functioning of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), the re-establishment of a climate of confidence through direct negotiations, and a comprehensive review of the conditions of service of the Professional and higher categories.

Staff composition

In October 1988, the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly his annual report on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat -by nationality, sex and type of appointment -for the period covering 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988.⁽⁵⁾ The total number of staff of the United Nations Secretariat as at 30 June was 13,534, of whom 10,203 were paid from the regular budget and 3,331 from extrabudgetary sources.

Staff in the Professional category and above numbered 3,750; staff in the General Service and related categories were 8,777, and project personnel numbered 1,007.

During the reporting period, 66 appointments were made to Professional posts subject to geographical distribution.

On 30 June 1988, there were 10 unrepresented Member States, a number unchanged since 1 July 1987. There were 27 underrepresented Member States compared with 25 the previous year. Changes in representation stemmed not only from staff appointments and separations from service, but also from changes in the status of some staff members; reduced recruitment activities; and the introduction of new desirable ranges which incorporated the population factor in the ranges of individual Member States.

During the reporting period, 19 women were appointed to posts subject to geographical distribution, representing 28.8 per cent of the appointments made. This compared with a 28.6 per cent share of the appointments during the previous period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/224 A.

Composition of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,
Recalling Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolutions 33/143 of 20 December 1978, 35/210 of 17 December 1980, 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/220 A of 21 December 1987,

Emphasizing the independent international status of the staff of the Secretariat of the United Nations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat,

Noting that nationals of some Member States who served primarily on fixed-term contracts now accept long-term and permanent contracts for service with the Secretariat,

Concerned about a further deterioration in equitable geographical distribution of posts in the Secretariat, particularly at the higher echelons,

Bearing in mind the views on personnel questions expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee during the forty-third session,

1. Reiterates its full support for the Secretary-General as chief administrative officer of the Organization and his prerogatives and responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen his role and emphasize the authority of the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat in accordance with recommendation 41 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to preserve the principles of equitable geographical distribution and of rotation in the upper echelons of the Secretariat, to ensure that equal opportunity is given to candidates of all Member States when making appointments to all posts in the upper echelons, and not to extend, as a rule, the services of under-secretaries-general or assistant secretaries-general for a period exceeding ten years;

4. Urges the Secretary-General, whenever making appointments to posts subject to geographical distribution, to make every effort to recruit nationals of unrepresented and underrepresented Member States and candidates successful in the national competitive examinations, taking into consideration also paragraph 4 of resolution 41/206 A of 11 December 1986, in order to ensure that all such countries come closer to the mid-point of their desirable ranges;

5. Reaffirms the principle of equal opportunity, in accordance with the Charter, and the principle that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States, and requests the Secretary-General to apply these principles faithfully, with due regard to the principle of equitable geographical distribution, which applies to all Member States;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to take additional measures to ensure that the nationals of developing countries are duly represented at the senior levels in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

7. Also urges the Secretary-General, in addition to the action taken under paragraph 6 above to ensure that the nationals of other countries are also duly represented at the senior levels, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor closely the effects of the reduction of posts on geographical distribution, particularly at the higher levels, and to take appropriate measures to redress any imbalances;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to give special attention to the filling of posts in organizational units with high vacancy rates, particularly the regional commissions;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts aimed at the improvement of the composition of the Secretariat by ensuring a wide geographical distribution of staff at the Professional and higher levels in all main departments and offices;

11. Urge the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts towards the development of a comprehensive career development plan, based, inter alia on competitive selection, for all staff, including General Service staff, in accordance with section III of the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/210, Assembly resolution 37/126 of 17 December 1982 and section I, paragraph 4, of resolution 42/220 A and the relevant Staff Regulations and Rules;

12. Also urges the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts towards increasing the mobility of staff and strengthening the training and retraining capabilities of the Secretariat;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to complete the full realignment of internal and external examinations and to study their effect on geographical distribution and to submit proposals to the General Assembly as appropriate;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the progress achieved on personnel matters to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/954) without vote, 15 December (meeting 48); draft by Sweden (A/C5/43/L.12) following informal consultations; agenda item 121 (a).

Post reductions

In April 1988,(6) the Secretary-General announced his plans to reduce the number of posts in the United Nations, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987(7) on the recommendation of the Group of 18.(3)

The Secretary-General proposed a target of 1,465 regularly funded posts for abolition by year-end 1989: 486 in the Professional category and above, and 979 at the General Service and other levels. This represented 13.02 per cent of 11,255 posts approved under the regular budget for 1988-1989. Besides a 25 per cent reduction of posts at the level of Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General, proportionately greater cuts were proposed for the levels P-5 (Professional-5) to D-2 (Director-2). The only increase would be at the P-3 and P-2/P-1 levels. General Service and other level posts would decrease from 62.2 per cent to 61.6 per cent of the total number of posts.

The reductions ranged from 14.8 per cent (669 posts) in common services to 4.6 per cent (13 posts) in overall policy-making, direction and co-ordination.

For the Department of Conference Services at the two main conference centres-New York and Geneva-the Secretary-General proposed a target of 14.1 per cent, which would require a substantial reduction in the number of conferences and meetings planned for 1990-1991. Alternatively, he suggested that an overall 10 per cent post reduction could be achieved in the staffing of Conference Services in New York and Geneva without an excessive reduction in the conference-servicing capacity of the Organization.

The proposed post reductions were to be implemented through a combination of attrition, redeployment and controlled recruitment.

The Secretary-General said that programmes for 1990-1991 would have to be prepared in relation to a smaller Secretariat; however, there was not an automatic link, in all cases, between a smaller Secretariat and a reduced role for the Organization. Efficiency could be further improved through technological innovations and upgrades in management procedures, as well as through the consolidation of programmes and units.

In its report on the 1988-1989 programme budget,(8) the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered that to achieve the most realistic staff reductions in the Department of Conference Services, the target set by the Secretary-General should be adjusted downward, with "restoration" of 100 of the total 357 posts originally proposed for elimination. The restoration would bring the target for reductions under that budget section from 14.1 per cent to about 10.1 per cent. Full biennial costs of the 100 posts would amount to $12,893,900 net of staff assessment. ACABQ further recommended that the restoration be partially offset by a reduction of 50 posts in other areas, thereby bringing the total reduction for the Secretariat to 12.57 per cent instead of 13.02 per cent. The financing of the remaining 50 restored posts would not require additional appropriations.

The General Assembly, by resolution 43/213 of 21 December, endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ.

High vacancy rates

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(9) the Secretary-General also reported on measures taken to improve the situation in the regional commissions and in those units of the Secretariat with the highest vacancy rates. In 1987, ACABQ had concluded that the average vacancy rates to be achieved over 1988-1989 to facilitate post reductions were likely to be significantly higher than those represented by the adjustment proposal of the Secretary-General. The Advisory Committee(2) recommended a greater turnover deduction of 2.5 per cent for all categories of staff. The vacancy rate for the Secretariat as at 29 February 1988 was 16 per cent.

The most seriously affected units were: the World Food Council with 31.3 per cent; the units located at Nairobi (the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)) with 28.3 per cent; the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean with 28.1 per cent; the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia with 26.8 per cent; and the Economic Commission for Africa with 22.1 per cent.

The Secretary-General noted that posts vacated at the regional commissions remained unencumbered for longer periods than in the rest of the Secretariat due to their specialized or technical nature, and the mobility of staff among stations had been difficult to achieve. Twenty-five vacancies had been filled under the vacancy management and staff redeployment programme. Exceptions to the suspension of external recruitment to those units with high vacancy rates had been granted on a limited basis, accounting for 23 of the 84 authorized exceptions to the freeze. According to the Secretary-General's report, there were currently 127 vacancies in Secretariat units with high vacancy rates. The Secretary-General stated that he had authorized the regional commissions to recruit staff for short-term assignments of up to 11 months.

ACABQ requested that updated information be provided to the Assembly at its current session, including specific data on recruitment at the P-1/P-2 levels.

Temporary recurrent posts

The Secretary-General proposed⁽¹⁰⁾ that the 253 temporary recurrent posts financed under the regular budget be converted to established posts. The change, he said, would not affect the level of appropriation for the 1988-1989 biennium nor the targeted reductions of posts. The Secretary-General explained that most original mandates that had called for temporary posts had become permanent mandates and part of the regular work programme. In addition, the incumbents of temporary posts had not necessarily been assigned exclusively to the duties initially identified when their posts were created and the rationale for retaining the distinction between established and temporary posts had become rather tenuous.

ACABQ noted that 24 of the temporary recurrent posts had been proposed for abolition, thereby reducing the number of temporary recurrent posts being prepared for conversion to 229. It stated that it could not recommend a "blanket" conversion. Instead, it recommended that the proposal be re-submitted in the context of the programme budget for 1990-1991 so that each conversion proposal could be reviewed to determine if the functions were permanent enough to warrant establishing a permanent post.

Status of women in the Secretariat

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1985 resolution⁽¹¹⁾ by which the General Assembly had approved an action programme to address obstacles to the improvement of women's status in the United Nations Secretariat, submitted to the Fifth Committee in October 1988 a progress report.⁽¹²⁾ The Group of 18⁽³⁾ had recommended in 1986 that additional measures be taken to increase the proportion of women in the Professional categories, particularly at the higher levels.

According to the report, some progress had been achieved. As at 30 June 1988, the percentage of women occupying posts subject to geographical distribution in the United Nations Secretariat rose to 26.3 per cent, compared with 25.7 per cent in the previous period. An upward trend in the representation of women at the D-1 level and above also continued, but the distribution of women across various United Nations organizational units remained uneven, particularly in the regional commissions and in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

The institutional arrangements for continuation of the action programme were reviewed, as called for by the Assembly in 1987.⁽¹³⁾ The Co-ordinator for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat of the United Nations identified obstacles to the advancement of women and proposed policy changes. The review also monitored operational activities and the integration of new approaches and measures.

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1988/124, requested the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of the Office of the Co-ordinator until the end of the 1988-1989 biennium, to review the situation at the end of that period, and to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure implementation of the action programme. In response to that request, the Secretary-General established a focal point within the immediate office of the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management to ensure co-ordination of the programme's implementation and to provide secretariat services to the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the United Nations.

A further review of the action programme by the Steering Committee noted some improvement in the status of women and priorities for further action, including: the recruitment, assignment and promotion of women at senior levels; establishment of a career development system; and strengthening of training programmes and human resource planning systems.

The Secretary-General reported that several elements of the 1988-1989 work programme, based on the Steering Committee's recommendations, were being implemented, but there had been problems in establishing a career development system for the General Service staff in New York and at duty stations away from Headquarters.

In 1988,⁽¹⁴⁾ ICSC continued to review progress with special measures for the recruitment of women.

United Nations organizations reported little progress in carrying out the 1985 ICSC recommendations.⁽¹⁵⁾ While most made commitments to the principle of improving women's status, that was not always translated into action. The highest success rates had occurred in organizations that had set specific targets and established monitoring programmes.

The Commission requested its Chairman to invite governing bodies-particularly those that had shown little progress-to take-up the matter at their next meetings and report to the Commission in 1989. ICSC also recommended that the organizations: stress the importance of commitment at the highest level to employ and promote more women, especially at the decision-making and policy level, and establish specific goals if they had not already done so; broaden and strengthen contacts with national recruitment services; amend personal history forms so that they could be shared with other agencies; and amend staff rules to allow the recruitment of spouses for established posts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1988/17 without vote.

Improvement of the status of women in the secretariats of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the Charter of the United Nations provides that no restrictions shall be placed on the eligibility of women and men to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in the work of the principal and subsidiary organs of the United Nations,

Noting the importance attached to the appointment of women at senior decision-making and managerial levels in paragraphs 306, 315, 356 and 358 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Mindful of recommendation 46 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,

Referring to the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations Secretariat,

Sharing the concern of the Secretary-General expressed in that report that the interests of women in the Secretariat should not suffer disproportionately from the impact of the restructuring and retrenchment measures being applied in the Secretariat,

1. Requests each organization of the United Nations system to designate, within existing resource allocations for personnel services, a high-level co-ordinator for the improvement of the status of women within that organization;

2. Recommends that each organization adopt specific action programmes and work plans outlining the measures to be taken to improve the status of women in its secretariat;

3. Also recommends that the Secretary-General take the necessary measures to ensure that current financial restraints and retrenchment measures do not have disproportionately negative consequences for women;

4. Further recommends that all organizations of the United Nations system take measures to ensure a greater proportion of women in the Professional category and above, especially at higher levels, in accordance with paragraph 358 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, General Assembly resolution 40/258 B of 18 December 1985 and paragraph 8 of Assembly resolution 41/111 of 4 December 1986;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to report biennially in even-numbered years, within existing resources, to the Commission on the Status of Women on progress made by the organizations of the United Nations system in improving the level of recruitment, conditions of service, career development and promotion opportunities of women;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly on the situation of women in the United Nations Secretariat and to transmit to the Commission on the Status of Women on a regular basis:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations Secretariat;

(b) Relevant sections of the annual report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat;

(c) Relevant sections of background reports to the International Civil Service Commission;

(d) Relevant resolutions, decisions, reports and employment guidelines of the organizations of the United Nations common system, including information on the distribution of female staff members by nationality and by level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/103.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Taking into consideration the decision of the Secretary-General, in order to implement the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat by 1990 and the commitments to further action referred to in General Assembly resolution 42/62 of 30 November 1987, to deploy on a full-time basis a senior-level position with appropriate support, within existing resources, to the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management,

1. Invites the Secretary-General, as a matter of high priority, to implement fully the above-mentioned decision;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to consider, in accordance with the priorities contained in the fourth report of the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat, the appointment of a senior-level woman to the position designated as a focal point to ensure the implementation of the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat and that such information be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session for comment.

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/224 C.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,
Recalling Articles 8, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also all relevant resolutions on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraphs 315, 356 and 358,

Reaffirming the goal of increasing the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution to 30 per cent of the total by 1990,

Noting with satisfaction that the question of the improvement of the status of women in the secretariats of the United Nations system continues to be a standing item on the agenda of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of his decision to deploy, on a full-time basis, a senior-level position, within existing resources, as focal point within the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat, to monitor and facilitate the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and to consider the introduction of additional measures, if necessary, in order to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution with a view to achieving, to the extent possible, an overall participation rate of 30 per cent of the total by 1990, without prejudice to the principle of equitable geographical distribution of posts, as was requested in paragraph 3 of resolution 40/258 B of 18 December 1985;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to increase his efforts to ensure an equitable representation of women from developing countries in posts subject to geographical distribution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to increase the percentage of women in posts at the senior and policy-formulating levels, in particular the number of women from developing countries in these posts;

5. Reiterates its request to all Member States to continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the proportion of women in the Professional category and above by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates and encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and to participate in national competitive examinations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a complete report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the continued implementation of the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, in particular on the respective roles of the focal point and the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat, and on progress achieved in the implementation of the recommendations of the Steering Committee as contained in its fourth report, and to ensure that that information is presented to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-third session.

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/954) without vote, 15 December (meeting 48); draft by Sweden (A/C.5/43/L.12) following informal consultations: agenda item 121.

Staff language training

In 1988, the General Assembly again took up the question of working languages of the Secretariat and language training. In a 1984 report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General had noted that the financial and other incentives offered to encourage the broader use of official languages had not fully met their objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/224 D without vote.

Working languages of the Secretariat and language training

The General Assembly,

Aware of the importance of the linguistic capability of the Secretariat for the efficient and effective functioning of the Organization,

Recalling its resolutions 2(I) of 1 February 1946, 2241 B (XXI) of 20 December 1966, 2359 B (XXII) of 19 December 1967 and 2480 B (XXIII) of 21 December 1968 on the use of working languages in the Secretariat,

Recalling also section III of its resolution 38/232 of 20 December 1983, and the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the linguistic skills of the United Nations staff, submitted pursuant to that resolution,

Desirous that the rules governing the use of the working languages of the Secretariat be fully applied in practice,

1. Encourages the Secretary-General, in the context of his efforts to ensure a better use of the working languages of the Secretariat, to take the measures available so as to enable staff to use the appropriate working languages in their written and oral communications, bearing in mind the particular situation at the regional commissions where other working languages are also used;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage staff members, particularly those occupying posts subject to geographical distribution, to make full use of existing language training facilities, with a view to broadening their knowledge of all the languages of the Organization, and to continue to implement the provisions of section XVII of General Assembly resolution 36/235 of 18 December 1981;

3. Invites Member States to continue to make voluntary contributions, in line with existing procedures, to the existing language training facilities of the United Nations;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 43/224 D

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/954) without vote, 15 December (meeting 48); draft by Sweden (A/C.5/43/L.12, part D) following informal consultations: agenda item 121.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 5th Committee 14, 16, 18, 20, 22-26, 28, 30, 35, 48; plenary 84.

Staff rules

In September 1988,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his annual report to the General Assembly containing the texts of provisional amendments made to the staff rules of the United Nations since his previous report in 1987.⁽¹⁸⁾ The changes-applicable to all staff except technical co-operation project personnel, staff members specifically engaged for conferences and other short-term service, and special interns-concerned education grants; assignment allowances; standards of accommodation for travel; terminal expenses; and scales for salary, pensionable remuneration and computation of separation payments.

The General Assembly, by decision 43/454 of 21 December 1988, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) held its twenty-seventh session at Rome, Italy (7 January-24 March), and its twenty-eighth session in New York (11-29 July). The Commission examined issues derived from General Assembly decisions as well as from its own statute. A summary of its deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its fourteenth annual report to the Assembly.⁽¹⁴⁾ Total financial implications of ICSC's 1988 decisions and recommendations for the United Nations common system were approximately $14.1 million. Of that, $7.4 million related to programmes financed through regular budgets, while the remaining $6.7 million related to programmes paid for by voluntary contributions.

Functioning of ICSC

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ ICSC considered its functioning and relations between it and staff representatives.⁽¹⁴⁾ It examined various points raised in the Fifth Committee and decided to shorten its annual report and improve the format, and to consider at a future session other issues raised by that Committee. The Commission also reviewed its working methods, noting that a number of problems interfered with its effective functioning, including insufficient information about complex issues prior to sessions and crowded agendas which limited discussion on important matters. It also noted criticism by staff organizations that the current arrangements did not allow for their views to be adequately taken into account. ICSC agreed to arrange its work programme so as to take up during the first week priority items on which decisions and recommendations to the General Assembly were required. It also agreed on a number of organizational procedures to streamline its work.

The Commission was informed by the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) and by the Co-ordinating Committee for Independent Staff Unions and Associations of their decision to suspend participation in all activities of the Commission. ICSC deemed it important that staff representatives participate in its work and expressed regret over their absence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1988, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/226 without vote.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission
The General Assembly,

Having considered the fourteenth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission and other related reports,

I

Comprehensive review of the conditions of service of the staff in the Professional and higher categories

Recalling that, in section III of its resolution 42/221 of 21 December 1987, it requested the International Civil Service Commission to undertake a comprehensive review of the conditions of service of the staff in the Professional and higher categories in order to provide a sound and stable methodological basis for their remuneration,

Reaffirming the guidelines provided in section III, paragraph 1, of resolution 42/221,

Recalling also that, in section III, paragraph 2, of resolution 42/221, the Commission was requested to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a preliminary report on the comprehensive review containing an analysis of the subject, together with an outline of one or more possible alternatives,

Noting that the preliminary report on the comprehensive review contained in chapter III, section C, of the report of the Commission, does not contain the analysis requested,

Bearing in mind that the Commission should allocate the highest priority to the comprehensive review in its programme of work for 1989,

Recognizing that the scope of the review should not necessarily be limited to the four areas identified by the Commission in its preliminary report,

Mindful of the interrelationship between these four areas and of the need for conditions of service whose component parts are appropriately balanced,

Emphasizing, in the light of the long-term consequences of this review, the desirability in the review process for close co-operation between the Commission, the organizations of the United Nations common system and the staff representatives,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, as a priority, to pursue the comprehensive review and, if necessary, to adjust its programme of work and schedule of meetings for 1989, in order to provide conditions for substantive discussion and finalization of the comprehensive review at its second session of 1989;

2. Invites the Commission to make arrangements to allow for the fullest participation of organizations and staff representatives in all aspects and at all stages of the comprehensive review;

3. Also requests the Commission to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session together with a preliminary assessment of the impact of the relevant recommendations therein on pensionable remuneration;

4. Further requests the Commission in its review to be guided by the following:

(a) The Commission should examine all elements of the present conditions of service, and after identifying problems related to staff recruitment, retention and mobility should propose solutions to these problems;

(b) The proposed solutions should be accompanied by an indication of their financial implications, together with an estimate of the overall costs;

(c) The overall costs should, as far as possible, be comparable to the costs of the current remuneration system;

(1) Comparator

(a) The Noblemaire principle should continue to serve as the basis of comparison between United Nations emoluments and those of the highest-paying civil service—currently the United States federal civil service—which, by its size and structure, lends itself to such comparison;

(b) The Commission should review how best the application of the Noblemaire principle can ensure the competitiveness of United Nations remuneration without resorting to comparison with the private sector;

(c) In this connection the Commission should undertake a comparative study of the concept of the margin including the way in which it is intended to compensate for expatriation;

(2) Remuneration system

(a) A single world-wide salary scale should be a fundamental goal of the remuneration system. Within this framework, a review should be made of how best special recruitment needs can be accommodated. The Commission should look into the present multiplicity of salary scales with a view to their correlation and possible amalgamation;

(b) In the context of equalizing purchasing power, the Commission should consider among other alternatives:

(i) The division of the pay package into its major component parts, one of which would be housing, reflecting the spending patterns of staff;

(ii) Major simplification of the post adjustment system, including eliminating negative post adjustment, separating out the housing component, streamlining the cost-of-living survey and computation process;

(c) The Commission should also review the rationale and magnitude of all elements of remuneration;

(3) Motivation and productivity

Consideration should be given to enhancing productivity through the introduction of incentives for merit and rewards on promotion payable on a one-time basis, coupled with less financial reward for longevity, which should be linked to a more rigorous performance appraisal system. Consideration should also be given to the introduction of administrative arrangements and of other non-monetary awards for meritorious service. The Commission should review and report on the current practice of automatic advancement to the next step without rigorous performance appraisal as well as on existing and new possible non-monetary awards for meritorious performance;

(4) Mobility and hardship

The Commission should analyse how best adequate incentives can be provided for mobility and for service in hardship duty stations. It should take into account the particular needs of those organizations whose programmes require that staff be reassigned to and from headquarters and field locations. In reviewing the scope and purpose of all the current allowances payable in cases of mobility and hardship, the entitlements provided by the comparator for non-diplomatic expatriates may serve as a general point of reference. In this respect, the Commission should, bearing in mind the different types of contractual arrangements existing in the system, review whether incentives should be provided by way of lump sums on transfers in lieu of or as well as ongoing payments in the form of allowances to compensate for hardships;

5. Requests the Commission to analyse the feasibility of utilizing existing data sources; in this regard, consideration should be given to both public and private sources which publish up-to-date and accurate data on relevant subjects;

II

Functioning of the International Civil Service Commission

Recalling paragraph 1 of its resolution 3042(XXVII) of 19 December 1972, whereby it decided to establish in principle an international civil service commission consisting of independent experts having the requisite qualifications and experience who would be appointed in their individual capacities by the General Assembly,

Recalling also the subsequent establishment of the International Civil Service Commission by General Assembly resolution 3357(XXIX) of 18 December 1974,

Reaffirming the importance of the role of the Commission as an independent technical body answerable to the General Assembly,

Recalling further its request made in section VIII of resolution 42/221 that the Commission should undertake a study of its functioning with a view to enhancing its work,

Expressing concern over the position taken by the staff representatives to suspend their participation in the work of the Commission,

Noting that the Commission has not found it possible to undertake a more in-depth review of its functioning,

Noting also the need to undertake, as soon as possible, a full review of the functioning of the Commission, including the definition of the role of the Commission in relation to the determination of the conditions of service of the staff, and the Commission's relation to the General Assembly,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to expand the review of its functioning in consultation with the organizations of the United Nations common system and staff representatives and to present proposals thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

2. Invites the Commission to review its rules of procedure at the earliest opportunity to allow for the fullest possible consultations with organizations and staff representatives and, to the greatest extent possible, their presence in its deliberations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of article 4 of the statute of the Commission, to propose to the General Assembly an appropriate deadline for the submission of candidatures for appointment to the Commission so as to allow for full and timely consultations with the three parties concerned;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the General Assembly, to reflect the views resulting from the consultations referred to in paragraph 3 above;

5. Urges the two staff representative bodies to resume participation in the work of the Commission at the earliest possible opportunity;

III

Decisions and recommendations contained in the report of the International Civil Service Commission

A. Functioning of the post adjustment within the margin range

Recalling that in its resolution 40/244 of 18 December 1985 it approved the range of 110 to 120, with a desirable mid-point of 115, for the net remuneration margin, on the understanding that the margin would be maintained at a level around the desirable mid-point of 115 over a period of time,

Recalling also that in section I, paragraph 1, of its resolution 42/221 it decided to maintain the methodology described in annex I to the report of the International Civil Service Commission to the General Assembly at its fortieth session for the calculation of the margin between the net remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories of the United Nations and that of the comparator civil service, which should continue to be applied for the time being,

Confirming that the decisions of the Commission contained in paragraph 17 of its report are in conformity with the decision of the General Assembly contained in section I, paragraph 1, of resolution 42/221,

Noting that the determination of parameters for the operation of the post adjustment system within the margin range should be considered as a principle under article 10 (a) of the statute of the Commission,

Noting also that, under the four-month rule currently in operation, when a post adjustment index increases by 5 per cent above the level corresponding to the class of post adjustment currently being paid, a new class of post adjustment at Headquarters becomes effective only after a waiting period of four months, during which the post adjustment index must not have fallen below the level corresponding to the new class,

1. Takes note of the guidelines to be followed for the maintenance of the net remuneration margin around the desirable mid-point of 115 over a period of time, contained in paragraph 23 of the report of the International Civil Service Commission, and decides that the resulting margin referred to in paragraphs 23 (b) and (c) relates to the average of the successive margins reported to the General Assembly beginning with the margin period 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986 and continuing until the submission of the report on the margin methodology requested in resolution 42/221 for presentation to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

2. Decides, as an interim measure and until the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly, that the application of the above guidelines should not result in the granting of successive classes of post adjustment in New York at less than four-month intervals;

B. Allowances

Having reviewed chapters V and XIII of the report of the International Civil Service Commission,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to include, as an integral part of the comprehensive review, a study of:

(a) The purpose and conditions of an education grant;

(b) The purpose and methodology for dependency allowances for staff in the Professional and higher categories;

2. Approves, as an interim measure and until a revised system based on the above study is adopted:

(a) The recommendations of the Commission concerning the education grant as contained in paragraph 75 of its report;

(b) The recommendations of the Commission concerning the children's allowance for the Professional and higher categories as contained in paragraph 79 (a) of its report;

3. Approves consequently the relevant amendments to staff regulations 3.2 and 3.4 (a) (i);

C. Others

Recalling its resolutions 40/244 of 18 December 1985 and 41/207 of 11 December 1986, and concerned about the uneven progress achieved by the organizations of the United Nations common system regarding implementation of the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission approved by the General Assembly in 1985,

Recalling also section II of its resolution 37/126 of 17 December 1982 and section VII of its resolution 42/221,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission contained in paragraph 91 of its report concerning special measures to be undertaken by the organizations for the recruitment of women, and requests the Commission to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress made in this regard, with supporting data for each organization of the United Nations common system;

2. Requests the Commission to continue its review of the practices of supplementary payments and deductions, to pursue its collection of information on these practices and to include such information in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/977) without vote, 18 December (meeting 501; draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/43/L.14) following informal consultations; agenda item 122.

Privileges and immunities

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee, on behalf of and with the approval of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), a November 1988 report⁽²¹⁾ on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations system. He noted that during the period from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, a total of 168 cases of arrest and detention or disappearance of officials were reported. There was a significant increase in cases affecting officials of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), which reported 151 cases. He stated that United Nations officials continued to experience difficulty in receiving timely information on pending cases.

The Secretary-General also reported on restrictions on official and private travel by host countries, which affected staff members of UNRWA travelling to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Restrictions were also imposed by the United States on staff members from Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and Romania. He also reported on unauthorized taxation of officials by some Member States and the introduction of regulations and directives which affected his authority to establish the terms and conditions of local recruitment by United Nations organizations. The Secretary-General stated that he would continue to explore through his security co-ordinator further measures to strengthen the response of the system to violations of the privileges and immunities of staff members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/225 without vote.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling that, under Article 100 of the Charter of the United Nations, each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter, all officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization,

Recalling the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Development Programme Standard Basic Assistance Agreements,

Recalling also its resolution 76(I) of 7 December 1946, in which it approved the granting of the privileges and immunities referred to in articles V and VII of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations to all members of the staff of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988 containing, inter alia, a body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment, including the principle that all persons under arrest or detention be provided whenever necessary with medical care and treatment,

Reiterating the obligation of all officials of the Organization in the conduct of their duties to observe fully the laws and regulations of Member States,

Mindful of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General to safeguard the functional immunity of all United Nations officials,

Mindful also of the importance in this respect of the provision by Member States of adequate and timely information concerning the arrest and detention of staff members and, more particularly, their granting of access to them,

Bearing in mind the wider considerations of the Secretary-General to guarantee minimum standards of justice and due process to United Nations officials,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 42/219 of 21 December 1987,

1. Takes note with concern of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and of the developments indicated therein, in particular the significant number of new cases of arrest and detention and those regarding previously reported cases under this category;

2. Also takes note with concern of the restrictions on duty travel of officials as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Further takes note with concern of the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General related to taxation and the status, privileges and immunities of officials;

4. Deplores the increase in the number of cases where the functioning, safety and well-being of officials have been adversely affected;

5. Also deplores the increasing number of cases in which the lives and well-being of officials have been placed in jeopardy during the exercise of their official functions;

6. Calls upon all Member States scrupulously to respect the privileges and immunities of all officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations and to refrain from any acts that would impede such officials in the performance of their functions, thereby seriously affecting the proper functioning of the Organization;

7. Calls upon those Member States holding under arrest or detention officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to enable the Secretary-General or the executive head of the organization concerned to exercise fully the right of functional protection inherent in the relevant multilateral conventions and bilateral agreements, particularly with respect to immediate access to detained staff members;

8. Calls upon all Member States otherwise impeding officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations in the proper discharge of their duties to review the cases and to co-ordinate efforts with the Secretary-General or the executive head of the organization concerned to resolve each case with all due speed;

9. Calls upon the staff of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to comply with the obligations resulting from the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, in particular regulation 1.8, and from the equivalent provisions governing the staff of the other agencies;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to use all such means as are available to him to bring about an expeditious solution of the cases still pending, which were referred to in the report;

11. Also calls upon the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer of the United Nations, to continue personally to act as the focal point in promoting and ensuring the observance of the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations by using all such means as are available to him;

12. Urges the Secretary-General to give priority, through the United Nations Security Co-ordinator and his other special representatives, to the reporting and prompt follow-up of cases of arrest, detention and other possible matters relating to the security and proper functioning of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to review and appraise the measures already taken to enhance the proper functioning, safety and protection of international civil servants and to modify them where necessary.

Staff costs

Salaries and allowances

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request that ICSC conduct a comprehensive review of the conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories, in order to provide a sound and stable methodology for determining remuneration⁽¹⁾ and to propose one or more possible alternatives, ICSC in 1988 submitted a preliminary report,⁽²⁾ in which it noted that the current remuneration system had operated reasonably well for many years, but had been impaired by such factors as extreme currency fluctuations, volatile inflation rates, budgetary and other domestic considerations of the comparator country on the overall level of remuneration in the common system and increasing problems affecting working conditions at many duty stations. As a result, it had become difficult to respond in a predictable and timely manner to the needs of organizations in the common system.

The Commission identified four priority areas for review: the basis for determining the level of remuneration—the definition of the comparator; the remuneration system, including post adjustment; motivation and productivity; and mobility and hardship incentives. In reviewing each of the areas, the Commission outlined a number of options for further study and expressed the hope that the Assembly would provide directives and guidelines for it to follow during the substantive work involved in a comprehensive review.

Post adjustment

Under its standing mandate, ICSC reviewed the relationship between the levels of net remuneration of the United Nations and the United States federal civil service during 1988.⁽²⁾ Specifically, it conducted a detailed review of the lifting of the post adjustment freeze in New York and, in that connection, considered the impact of the revised methodology introduced by the Commission in 1987⁽³⁾ for calculating the out-of-area price progression factor in post adjustment.

The Commission stated that it had not been foreseen that the revised methodology would also impact on the cost-of-living differential between New York and Washington, D.C., and thus affect the margin calculation. The change had also directly affected the date of implementation of class 8 of post adjustment in New York. Under the new methodology, it would have become due on 1 February 1988, as compared to 1 June 1988 under the previous methodology.

Bearing in mind that in 1987(1) the Assembly had requested that ICSC maintain the methodology for calculation of the net remuneration margin it described in its 1985 annual report,(4) the Commission decided that the previous methodology for calculation of the out-of-area price progression factor should continue to apply for New York and Washington, D.C.

ICSC also decided that the post adjustment index (PAI) for both New York and Washington, D.C., should be updated from October 1982, the date of the last comprehensive survey, using the consumer price index (CPI) of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics to adjust the in-area expenditures and the old out-of-area price progression factored in the calculation methodology in effect until 31 August 1987 to adjust out-of-area expenditures.

Those PAIs should be used to determine the post adjustment classifications for New York and Washington, D.C., and thus used in the calculation of the net remuneration margin. Also, the revised out-of-area price progression factor introduced by the Commission as from 1 September 1987 should continue to be used for calculating PAIs for all other duty stations until 31 August 1988.

The Commission decided that post adjustment increases in New York should take effect either on or after the date of the increase in the United States federal civil service salaries, or on the date when the revised post adjustment class became due in New York. In either case, the resulting margin should remain between 114 and 116. However, if it did not lie inside those parameters, an alternative implementation date for a post adjustment increase in New York would be selected to ensure that the resulting margin remained around 115.

Education grant and children's allowance

Increases in the education grant for staff members were recommended by ICSC in 1988,(2) based on a proposal submitted by the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) of ACC and the views of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). CCAQ's proposal had been made in the light of increased expenditures for education reported in 1987 and of further increases in the fees charged by schools attended by children of international staff of the common system stationed at Headquarters.

The Commission recommended that $9,000 per annum be the maximum amount admissible as educational expenses, up from $6,000 previously. Thus, the maximum grant would rise from $4,500 to $6,750. Within the maximum grant, the ceiling for boarding costs should be increased from $1,500 to $2,000. The maximum additional reimbursement of boarding costs over and above the full grant for staff members at designated duty stations should be maintained at $1,500 per year.

Also, for disabled children, the grant should be set at 100 per cent of admissible expenses, up to a maximum of $9,000. The total costs of those decisions were estimated by ICSC at $4.6 million, using exchange rates in effect on 1 April 1988.

For countries where it had decided that the remuneration correction factor was applicable, ICSC made similar adjustments, with the increased amounts to be payable in local currency.

The Commission also examined the current status of children's, spouses' and secondary dependants' allowances. It recommended, for the Professional and higher categories, effective 1 January 1989, that the children's allowance be increased to $1,050 and the secondary dependants' allowance to $450. For countries where the remuneration correction factor was applicable, the Commission recommended an increase of 50 per cent to the amount payable in local currency as of 1 April 1988. The Commission also decided that these allowances should be considered in the context of the comprehensive review of the conditions of staff in the Professional and higher categories. For the General Service and related categories, it recommended no change in the current level of the allowance.

The total cost of these decisions was estimated at $8.17 million for the children's allowance and $120,000 for the secondary dependants' allowance.

Separation payments

The scale for separation payments-including commutation of accrued annual leave, repatriation grant, death grant and termination indemnity-for the Professional and higher categories had been established by the Assembly in 1981.(3) However, ACABQ noted in a December 1988 report(6) that a proposal for establishing such a scale for the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and for the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had never been submitted to the Assembly. The Advisory Committee therefore recommended that the payments be established with effect from 1 April 1988 at a gross amount of $150,000, with a corresponding net dependant rate of $87,800 and net without dependant rate of $76,530. Those payments were approved by the Assembly on 21 December 1988 by decision 43/450.

Supplementary payments and deductions by Governments

At its March 1988 session,(2) ICSC continued to study the issue of supplementary payments to and deductions from the remuneration of common system staff by certain Member States. In 1987,(1) the General Assembly had requested those States and common system organizations to provide ICSC with information on the subject. As at 1 July 1988, 73 Member States and Switzerland had responded to that request.

The Commission expressed regret over the insufficient response, drew the Assembly's attention to the fact that supplementary payments were on the rise and decided to include the issue in its comprehensive review of conditions of service of the Professional and higher categories (see above).

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 43/226, requested ICSC to continue its review of supplementary payments and deductions and to report further on the subject in 1989.

Emoluments of ICJ members

In a November 1988 report⁽⁷⁾ on emoluments of the members of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), ACABQ noted that, in April, ICSC had introduced the concept of a local currency floor (and ceiling) at a certain number of duty stations, including The Hague, Netherlands, to protect the cost-of-living supplement from currency exchange variations. This meant that the salaries of all ICJ members, including the Registrar, were protected in local currency terms in the event of a weakening of the US dollar below a certain exchange rate.

Although no direct link existed between the emoluments of the Judges and those of senior Secretariat officials, the Advisory Committee believed that extending the application of such a guideline to the emoluments of the Judges warranted consideration. The financial implications of introducing the floor/ceiling concept, with the floor calculation based on the 1986 emoluments and an exchange rate 4 per cent below the average 1986 exchange rate, would depend on the most current exchange rate. The ceiling rate would be calculated using the 1986 emoluments as a base and an exchange rate of 2.8 guilders per dollar.

ACABQ had been informed that the current exchange rate was 2 guilders per dollar, i.e., below the floor rates. Therefore, should the rate remain at that level, the additional 1989 payments for all Judges would total $73,800, and the emolument for each Judge would total $100,720.

On 21 December, by resolution 43/217, section VI, the General Assembly approved ACABQ's recommendations.

Pensions

During 1988, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund increased from 53,968 to 54,006. As at 31 December, there were 28,362 periodic benefits in award: 9,528 retirement benefits, 4,753 early retirement benefits, 5,067 deferred retirement benefits, 3,489 widows' and widowers' benefits, 4,910 children's benefits, 570 disability benefits and 45 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 3,662 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid. The principal of the Fund increased from $6,113,333,746 to $6,810,774,123. Investment income totalled $697,367,860, comprising $395,536,601 in interest and dividends and $301,831,259 in net profit on sales of investments. After deduction of investment management costs of $6,600,111, net investment income was $690,767,749.

Over the previous 38 years, the total book value of the portfolio had risen from $13 million to $6,199 million, a compound increase of 17.6 per cent a year. During the 1987 calendar year, investment income from interest and dividends amounted to $354.5 million, an increase of 7.7 per cent over 1986. The total of new funds which became available for investment amounted to $360 million (contributions plus investment income, minus benefit payments and less investment expenses). Realized capital gains amounted to $698 million, an increase of 19.4 per cent.

As the 21-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board held no session during 1988, its Standing Committee met at Geneva (20-24 June). The major items it dealt with were: continued study of measures to restore over the long term the actuarial balance of the Fund; methodology and assumptions to be used in the actuarial balance of the Fund as at 31 December 1988; impact of currency fluctuations on pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories; and membership of the World Tourism Organization in the Fund. The focus on those particular items had been requested by the Assembly in 1987.⁽⁸⁾

The Standing Committee also considered the management of the Fund's investments, the financial statements and schedules for the year ended 31 December 1987, the administrative expenses of the Fund and amendments to the Fund's rules of procedure governing attendance and participation at sessions of the Board.

ACABQ submitted its comments⁽⁹⁾ on the 1988 report of the Board and the report of the Secretary-General on the Fund's investments (see below). It noted that responsibility for studies of pensionable remuneration, as called for by the Standing Committee in 1988, lay primarily with ICSC; however, such studies should be done in full collaboration with the Board.

Pension Fund investments

The annual report for the year ended 31 March 1988 on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund was submitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in September.⁽¹⁰⁾

The market value of the Fund's assets increased to $7,229 million from $7,016 million a year earlier, an increase of $213 million or 3 per cent, and $919 million above the book value.

Total investment return for the year ending 31 March 1988 was 3.1 per cent which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a "real" rate of return of -0.8 per cent.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world. Investments were held in 27 currencies and 44 countries; 51 per cent of the assets were invested in currencies other than the United States dollar, the Fund's unit of account. The decline in the relative value of the dollar during the year influenced the market value of investments outside the United States when expressed in dollars, and also enhanced the positive rates of return in local currencies after translation into dollars.

Equities constituted 43 per cent of the assets as at 31 March, down 51 per cent from the previous year. Bonds accounted for 34 per cent compared with 27 per cent the previous year, while real estate-related securities amounted to 11 per cent.

The Secretary-General stated that the investment return to the Fund, which was considerably lower than in recent years, needed to be viewed against the background of the economic and financial conditions existing during the period under review. With the sharp decline of stock market prices in October 1987 plus the volatility of global financial markets thereafter, the return could be considered satisfactory, comparing well with similar pension funds.

Actuarial balance

In 1988,⁽⁷⁾ the Fund's Standing Committee continued studying measures to restore the Fund's actuarial balance in response to the 1987 request of the General Assembly.⁽⁸⁾ The Standing Committee took into account the view of the Committee of Actuaries, which noted that there had been actuarial savings resulting from measures already adopted by the Assembly, including two increases in contribution rates. However, increased actuarial costs had arisen from changes in certain demographic assumptions and from accumulated interest on the past imbalance. Among the factors that had contributed to increased costs over the years were: economic developments, including inflation and currency fluctuations and the combined effect of maintaining the mandatory age of separation at 60, and increased life expectancy which had lengthened the period of payments. There had also been a significant rise in the number of early retirements in recent years.

To curb the deterioration of the Fund's actuarial balance, the Committee of Actuaries again recommended—as it had since 1983—raising the rate of contributions to meet the increased costs of the system. The Standing Committee agreed with the Committee of Actuaries that there should be a study on the possible extension of participation in the Fund to employees excluded by the terms of their appointment. Differing views had emerged on the merits of pursuing modifications of the mandatory age of separation, of the normal retirement age and of the early retirement provisions, and it was recommended that more extensive studies be performed on those items in 1989.

Regarding restoration of the Fund's actuarial balance, ACABQ, in October 1988,⁽⁹⁾ expressed the hope that the Board would not limit itself only to the Standing Committee's recommendations.

Administrative expenses

A total of $22,877,400 net had been approved by the Assembly in 1987⁽⁸⁾ for the administrative expenses of the Pension Fund during the 1988-1989 biennium. ACABQ noted in an October 1988 report⁽⁹⁾ that no supplementary expenses had been requested for the current year. However, adjustments in the post levels in the Board's staffing table were required in respect of three posts in the Fund's secretariat. Those adjustments would cost $22,800 to implement, but the Secretary-General had stated that they could be met from within resources already approved for the current biennium. Based on that arrangement, ACABQ approved the changes.

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/227 without vote.

Administration of justice

As requested by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1988⁽²⁾ submitted a report on improving the administration of justice in the Secretariat. The report outlined the principles underlying the programme and progress made in reforming procedures to resolve staff disputes and appeals made within the United Nations system. In 1986,⁽³⁾ the Group of 18 had also recommended that procedures to administer justice be simplified to render the system more efficient and less costly.

The Secretary-General said that in order to have a fair and successful redress system, it was desirable, as far as possible, to separate the offices taking decisions which led to appeals from those with responsibility for evaluating such appeals, and to strengthen the authority of the system through effective staff participation. In 1988, steps were taken to strengthen staff participation, especially through the Joint Appeals Board (JAB) and the Joint Disciplinary Committee, and to give those bodies greater authority. On 1 February, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management was placed in direct charge of the system, since that office was normally distanced from the day-to-day administrative decisions from which most appeals originated.

The first step taken to reform the system was to eliminate the backlog of cases before JAB, which had in recent years seriously undermined the system's effectiveness. The initial focus was on the Board in New York where, with the aid of recurrent "task force" resources, the number of cases, including "old" ones, was reduced to their lowest level since 1972. All cases lodged prior to 1988 either had been dealt with or were being examined and, by the end of the year, the Board estimated it would have only current cases on its books. The Board had also set a target of six months for processing cases.

The success in New York was attributed to the nomination of a new 52-member JAB representing the Secretariat on a geographical, gender and grading basis; the appointment of a temporary full-time presiding officer; and the provision of additional alternate secretaries. "Interim guidelines" for JAB procedures were issued to new Board members and the strict enforcement of time-limits for dealing with cases had a critical impact on the Board's productivity.

Revisions were also made to JAB membership at Geneva and Nairobi, with the aim of disposing of case backlogs at those duty stations by the end of 1988.

Decisions of the Board currently went directly to the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management for consideration and advice to the Secretary-General, who had a target of seven working days for notification of his decision. New administrative instructions on the role of counsel in the Organization were issued and membership of the Panel of Counsel increased significantly.

The next stage of the reform process would entail the establishment, by 1989, of a fully revised system to deal with staff grievances and disciplinary cases with enhanced objectivity, fairness and speed.

Commenting on the report, ACABQ⁽⁴⁾ expressed satisfaction over the reduction in cases pending, but cautioned that speed in resolving them should not compromise the quality of consideration afforded each case. Also, the Secretary-General should define what would constitute a "frivolous" application to the Board so as to avoid a subjective rejection. ACABQ noted that problems remained in the appellate process in Nairobi, and called on the Secretary-General to ensure that the backlog was dealt with promptly. The Secretary-General was also requested to submit at the earliest stage any proposal to revise the Staff Regulations and/or Rules, and to make proposals for the adequate staffing of JAB in the 1990-1991 budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/224 B without vote.

Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal

In October 1988, the Secretary-General, in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ submitted a report⁽⁶⁾ on consultations held during 1988 on the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal for the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the United Nations. He had been requested in 1978⁽⁷⁾ to study this question, when the Assembly became concerned that the jurisprudence of the ILO Administrative Tribunal and that of the United Nations were diverging. The Secretary-General convened 14 consultative meetings between 8 March and 7 July 1988, at which proposed amendments to the statutes of the two tribunals were examined. He outlined the substantive conclusions relating to proposed changes in the statutes, as set out in two annexes to his report. Also annexed was a proposed draft resolution on harmonization and further development of the statutes, rules and practices of the two tribunals.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 43/452, invited Member States to comment on the Secretary-General's proposals by 31 May 1989 and requested the Secretary-General to report those comments in 1989.

Administrative Tribunal Judgement on remuneration correction factor

In 1986,⁽⁸⁾ ICSC had decided to introduce, on an interim basis with effect from 1 September 1986, a remuneration correction factor (RCF) to the post adjustment. Its objective was to minimize upwards or downwards variations of take-home pay in local currency resulting from exchange rate fluctuations. However, due to the Organization's serious financial crisis, the Secretary-General had decided to defer implementing the RCF at Geneva and Vienna, while indicating that he would lift the deferment as soon as practicable. Subsequently, he decided to implement the RCF at those duty stations from 1 January 1987.

Four staff members appealed the validity of the deferment and, in May 1988, the Administrative Tribunal delivered its Judgement (No. 421), by which it ordered that the four claimants and similarly situated staff in the Professional and higher categories be paid for the period 1 September to 31 December 1986.

The Secretary-General therefore reported⁽⁹⁾ that the financial implications of the Judgement amounted to a total of $597,200, including $439,400 under the regular budget and $157,800 from other sources. He therefore proposed to charge $439,400 in additional expenditures against the overall balance of appropriations for the 1986-1987 biennium. ACABQ concurred with those recommendations.⁽⁴⁾

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 43/217, section IV.

Judgement No. 421 of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal related to the application of the remuneration correction factor to post adjustment at Geneva and Vienna as at 1 September 1986

[The General Assembly . . .]

Approves the proposal of the Secretary-General to charge the additional expenditures resulting from Judgement No. 421 of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal against the overall balance of appropriations for the biennium 1986-1987 to be retained as a result of the suspension of regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

Travel

Official travel

In 1988, the Secretary-General continued to keep under review the travel and related entitlements of representatives of Member States attending United Nations meetings, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987. (1) Over the years, the Assembly had taken several actions to modify those travel entitlements and in 1986 endorsed the recommendation(2) of the Group of 18 to limit travel reimbursement costs to representatives of the least developed countries (LDCs) attending the Assembly.⁽³⁾

In an August 1988 report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that travel expenses were currently being paid for no more than five representatives from each LDC attending regular Assembly sessions. Travel and subsistence expenses were paid for members of bodies and subsidiary bodies of the United Nations who served in an individual personal capacity and not as representatives of Governments. Travel but not subsistence expenses were paid for one representative of each Member State participating in a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council, or in a sub-commission or sub-committee of a functional commission. In the case of governmental experts appointed directly by their Governments, travel and subsistence were paid only on the express authorization of the General Assembly.

ACABQ(5) suggested, as a further refinement of the current provisions, the discontinuation of the daily $8 allowance granted to eligible members while travelling by a direct route, by ship, aeroplane or train, as of 1 January 1988.

On 21 December, by resolution 43/217, section IX, the General Assembly endorsed ACABQ's recommendation and deferred action on the other issues in the Secretary-General's report.

Standard of accommodation for air travel

The Secretary-General submitted in November 1988(6) a report on expenditures by the United Nations for first-class travel, as called for by the General Assembly in 1987.(7) The expenditures related to travel of one member of each delegation attending sessions of the Assembly (LDCs only); other travel by non-Secretariat officials; and travel of Secretariat officials other than the Secretary-General.

Total additional costs incurred by the Organization as a result of exceptions to the standard rules of travel, as authorized by the Secretary-General from 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, were $68,911, compared with the corresponding additional cost of $35,650 in the previous reporting period.⁽⁸⁾

Observing that the provisions of the Assembly's 1987 resolution(7) had been applied only during the second six-month period of the 12-month reporting period (July 1987-June 1988), ACABQ⁽⁵⁾ cautioned against attempting to draw any conclusions from the preliminary data provided by the Secretary-General, as the full effects of the Assembly's 1987 provisions were not currently known.

On 21 December, by resolution 43/217, section X, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

Contractual agreements

In September 1988, the Secretary-General reported on the organization of official travel,(9) as requested by the General Assembly in 1987.(10) Noting that information on the subject had already been provided in his report on implementing recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU),(11) the Secretary-General said that the only significant development relating to travel since issuance of that report related to travel agency arrangements in the United Nations Office at Geneva.

He stated that the lowest bidder for the travel agency contract to be awarded by that office had not pursued contract negotiations with the Organization. At the same time, it was learned that Midland Bank PLC, parent company of Thomas Cook S.A., had disposed of its interests in South Africa and submitted documented proof to the United Nations. As the bank would be removed from the list of transnational corporations with interests in South Africa, and Thomas Cook S.A. had been the second lowest bidder for the travel agency contract, it was expected that a three-year contract would soon be awarded to it. In 1987, JIU had recommended terminating the contract with Thomas Cook S. A. (12)

On 21 December 1988, by resolution 43/217, section XI, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Other UN officials

Experts and consultants

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly decision,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1988 on the use of consultants and participants in ad hoc expert groups during 1986-1987.⁽²⁾ The report also gave data on former staff over 55 years of age who were re-engaged in 1987 and were receiving a United Nations pension. In 1986, the Group of 18 had recommended a 30 per cent reduction in consultancies and that the hiring of former staff be abolished.⁽³⁾

Expenditures for the 1986-1987 biennium for consultants totalled $8,300,600-$5,137,800 under the regular budget and $3,162,800 under extrabudgetary resources-representing a 46.7 per cent reduction in regular budget expenditure from 1984-1985, and an increase in extrabudgetary spending of 45.1 per cent. Overall, there was a reduction of 36.9 per cent, or $4,868,400, in overall spending for consultants.

Expenditures for ad hoc expert groups during 1986-1987 were $1,256,700 from the regular budget and $959,000 in extrabudgetary funds. There was an overall decrease of $1,523,800, or 40.7 per cent, compared with the previous biennium.

There were 415 former staff over 55 years old re-engaged during 1987 at all duty stations throughout the Secretariat. In 89 cases, an annual payment of over $12,000 was made, which was the limit determined as an interim measure by the Assembly in 1982.⁽⁴⁾

In its comments on the report,⁽⁵⁾ ACABQ noted that while reductions had been made in the use of regular budget funds, they had been partially offset by increased expenditure under extrabudgetary resources. It had also learned that requests for payments to consultants and ad hoc experts had to be accompanied by a certification of satisfactory completion of service, which was done by or on behalf of the head of the department to which the service was provided. According to the Secretary-General, payment had been withheld in nine cases during the biennium. Regarding the practice of re-engaging former staff, ACABQ said that its 1987 comments remained valid.⁽⁶⁾

On 21 December 1988, by resolution 43/217, section I, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and the related report of ACABQ.

Chapter III

Other administrative and management questions

In 1988, the Committee on Conferences continued to examine ways in which conference resources within the United Nations system could be used more effectively. In December, the General Assembly decided to retain the Committee as a permanent subsidiary organ (resolution 43/222 B). The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure respect for equal treatment of the official languages of the United Nations (43/222 E) and appealed to Member States to keep the length of communications to a minimum (43/222 C). The Assembly approved the implementation of phase I of an integrated management information system and the 1989 budget estimate of the International Computing Centre at Geneva (43/217, sections XII and II).

Conferences and meetings

In 1988, the Committee on Conferences approved the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of United Nations organs for 1989.⁽¹⁾ Other matters dealt with by the Committee were its own status, the control and limitation of documentation, the possibility of central planning and co-ordination of all organizational aspects of conference servicing, a review of proposals relating to the schedule of conferences made at sessions of the General Assembly and an evaluation of the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking.

At its organizational session on 10 February, the Committee agreed to meet as required to take up matters related to the calendar of conferences. Its substantive session was held in New York from 17 to 26 August. In its report, the Committee submitted three draft resolutions, which served as the bases for Assembly resolutions 43/222 A-C.

Report of the Secretary-General. In April,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General issued his second progress report on the implementation of a 1986 Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ calling for greater efficiency in the Organization's administrative and financial functioning. Referring to the call for a strengthened Committee on Conferences with broadened responsibilities (recommendation 1),⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Committee had achieved consensus on many important points. Some success had been achieved in staggering conferences and meetings throughout the year in order to make better use of facilities and resources (recommendation 1 (e)). With regard to the call for a reduction in the number and duration of meetings and conferences (recommendation 2),⁽⁵⁾ it was noted that the calendar of conferences for the biennium 1988-1989 did not reflect a diminished level of meeting activity. The report stated that, as mandated by the Assembly in 1987,⁽⁶⁾ conference services must be provided with adequate personnel, with due respect for the equal treatment of all official languages of the United Nations.

Mandate of the Committee on Conferences

The Committee on Conferences resumed consideration of the question of changing its status to that of a permanent intergovernmental body, as requested by the Assembly in 1986.⁽⁷⁾

The Committee recommended that it become a permanent subsidiary body of the Assembly, whose members would be appointed for a term of office of three years, with one third retiring each year; that members should be eligible for reappointment; and that the Assembly, on the basis of existing practice, would decide on how to stagger the membership. The Committee agreed that the mode of selecting its members should remain unchanged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted resolution 43/222 B by recorded vote.

Status of the Committee on Conferences

The General Assembly

1. Decides to retain the Committee on Conferences as a permanent subsidiary organ;

(b) To plan and co-ordinate conferences and meetings in close consultation with the Secretariat and all relevant bodies in the preparation of the draft calendar, in particular by staggering conferences and meetings throughout the year, and to avoid to the maximum extent possible the overlapping of meetings related to the same sector of activity in the same conference location;

(c) In this connection, to examine the proposals of the Secretary-General on the draft calendar prepared on the basis of his budgetary proposals and to recommend to the General Assembly a draft calendar of conferences and meetings designed to meet the needs of the United Nations and to ensure the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources. With respect to the proposed departures from the approved calendar of conferences and meetings that have administrative and financial implications, to act on behalf of the Assembly, in conformity with the budgetary process in force and with full respect for the mandates of other bodies;

(d) To determine the ways and means that might ensure the optimum utilization of conference facilities and services, including documentation, and to present appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly;

The proposal was adopted by a recorded vote of 78 to 14, with 15 abstentions.

Calendar of meetings

In response to a 1986 request of the Assembly,⁽⁸⁾ the Committee on Conferences in 1988⁽¹⁾ discussed the pattern of future meetings of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies. The Board had repeatedly sought authorization from the Assembly to meet at United Nations Headquarters during Assembly sessions, as mandated by a 1985 resolution.⁽⁹⁾

The Secretariat explained that efforts made by the Board to adjust its meeting pattern had been hampered by the fact that a number of the Board members were also representatives to the Conference on Disarmament at Geneva, which was not scheduled to end until mid-September 1988. Consequently, Board meetings could not be held before that time. The Committee recommended that the Assembly authorize the Board to meet during the forty-third session of the Assembly, but it also urged the Board to make greater efforts to avoid meeting during Assembly sessions in the future.

Calendar for 1988-1989

In February 1988, the Secretariat circulated a note⁽¹⁰⁾ containing the calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations and of the principal organs of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency for 1988 and 1989. In 1988, the Committee on Conferences approved a draft revised calendar for 1989 and submitted it to the Assembly for approval.⁽¹⁾ A draft calendar of conferences and meetings for 1988 and 1989 had been adopted by the Assembly in 1987.⁽¹¹⁾

Calendar for 1990-1991

By decision 1988/103 of 5 February, pursuant to a 1987 request by the Assembly,⁽¹¹⁾ the Economic and Social Council invited the Committee on Conferences to review the Council's draft biennial calendar beginning with the calendar for 1990-1991 and to submit its recommendations.

In August, the Committee on Conferences was informed that a detailed draft biennial calendar of conferences for 1990-1991 could not be submitted to it until the Economic and Social Council had finalized its calendar of meetings in July 1989.⁽¹⁾ The Committee, invited to decide whether it required an earlier draft with fewer details of the proposed dates and venues of meetings, indicated that it would prefer to have the most detailed and up-to-date draft possible, even if it meant receiving the draft later than in previous years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 43/222 D without vote.

Programme of work of the Committee on Conferences The General Assembly

Requests the Secretary-General to submit information to the Committee on Conferences at its organizational session in 1989 to assist the Committee in establishing its work programme on a biennial basis in line with the programme budget and the medium-term plan of the United Nations, taking into account the views expressed by delegations during the forty-third session of the General Assembly.

Conference and meeting services

The Committee on Conferences considered a report issued in March by the Secretary-General⁽¹²⁾ on the utilization of conference-servicing resources by certain United Nations bodies meeting in New York, Geneva and Vienna in 1987. The report indicated that the bodies listed had collectively improved their utilization of conference resources compared to previous years. The utilization factor was 74 per cent for bodies meeting in New York, 84 per cent for those meeting at Geneva and 85 per cent for Vienna.

The Committee requested the Chairman to ask the chairmen of bodies that had not adequately utilized the resources provided to them to bring the matter to the attention of their members so that they could consider a review of their meeting patterns. The Committee recommended that the Assembly urge United Nations organs that had failed to make adequate use of the conference-servicing resources provided to them to consider reducing the number of meetings they requested in their future programmes of work. It further requested the Chairman and the Secretary-General to assist those organs to make better use of their services.

The Assembly had also requested⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of having all organizational aspects of conference servicing in the United Nations centrally planned and co-ordinated, with a view to optimizing efficiency and cost-effectiveness. The Secretary-General was to take into account the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council's Special Commission on the in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields and submit his findings to the Assembly through the Committee on Conferences. The Special Commission issued its report in June,⁽¹³⁾ but the Secretariat informed the Committee in August that, pending a decision by the Assembly or the Council on the outcome of the Commission's deliberations, it was unable to comply with the Assembly's request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 43/222 A without vote.

Report of the Committee on Conferences The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Conferences;
2. Approves the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1989 as submitted by the Committee on Conferences;
3. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make adjustments in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1989 that may become necessary as a result of action and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its forty-third session;
4. Notes with appreciation that there has been a considerable improvement in the utilization of conference resources by a number of United Nations organs;

Language and interpretation services

The Secretary-General in September 1988⁽¹⁴⁾ issued a report on the implementation of a 1987 Assembly resolution⁽⁶⁾ requesting the Secretary-General to provide adequate conference-servicing personnel to ensure equal treatment of all the official languages of the United Nations (Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, Spanish). The Secretary-General noted that severe cuts had already been made in the translation and interpretation services and that, in order to ensure the provision of interpretation and other services despite those cuts, sufficient temporary assistance funds would have to be made available so that free-lancers could be recruited as necessary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 43/222 E without vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 42/207 C

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 42/207 C of 11 December 1987,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 42/207 C,

Conference reports

In accordance with 1982 Assembly guidelines for preparing United Nations special conferences,⁽¹⁵⁾ a Conference Management Committee was established to guide and co-ordinate Secretariat activities for the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking.⁽¹⁶⁾ At its August session, the Committee on Conferences endorsed the Conference Management Committee's recommendation⁽¹⁷⁾ that a standard format be established for final reports of major conferences and that guidelines be provided for preparing and editing reports.

Representation at conferences

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the representation of United Nations organizations at conferences and meetings.⁽¹⁸⁾ The report was a result of a JIU study to examine the effectiveness of the participation by Secretariat staff members in meetings and to recommend ways of increasing efficiency and reducing the costs involved.

JIU recommended the restructuring of the Representation Unit of the Executive Office of the Secretary-General, which was responsible for the direction and control of official travel, in order to increase its ability to implement the current co-ordinating and approval procedures. It also recommended that the practice of non-participatory attendance be considerably reduced, that attendance of United Nations departments at conferences and meetings be limited to one person, and that wherever liaison or field offices existed in the venue of a meeting, travel from Headquarters not be allowed unless the meeting were highly specialized. JIU further recommended that the length of attendance at meetings held away from Headquarters be kept to a minimum, that rules and practices in the financial area be made uniform and that United Nations departments and offices constantly review and evaluate overall representational activity in a comprehensive and critical manner. It was recommended that the Secretary-General further request departments and offices to observe strictly procedures regarding representation at conferences and meetings, with particular emphasis on the time-limits for the issuance of invitations and the submission of authorization requests.

Documents and publications

Documents limitation

In May, the Secretary-General published an updated version of a note⁽¹⁾ setting forth the policies laid down by the General Assembly regarding the control and limitation of documentation, as requested by the Assembly in 1969.⁽²⁾ The note, which took into account policy decisions adopted by the Assembly up to the end of 1987, was distributed to all Member States.

Those policies applied for the most part to the documentation of the Assembly and its subsidiary bodies, although other United Nations organs, in particular the Economic and Social Council and bodies such as the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, had been invited to apply the same policies.

The document included specific recommendations for the control of meeting records, statements, reports and studies, annexes and supplements to official records, documentation for treaty bodies and special conferences, and statements of programme budget implications. Annexes to the note contained a list of meeting record entitlements and revised guidelines for the format and contents of the reports of subsidiary organs of the Assembly, as well as guidelines for the control and limitation of documentation for special conferences of the United Nations.

Pursuant to a 1986 request of the Assembly⁽³⁾ that the Committee on Conferences examine the number of communications from Member States circulated as United Nations documents, the Committee requested the Secretariat to report on the matter. In May 1988, the Secretariat issued a report,⁽⁴⁾ listing all such documents circulated between February 1987 and March 1988 and noting the country of origin and the number of pages of each document.

The Committee resumed consideration of the question in August.⁽⁵⁾ The Secretariat, in introducing the report, stated that the vast majority of communications issued as United Nations documents were less than three pages long, and that of the 1,126 documents listed, only 15 exceeded 24 pages.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly renew its appeal to Member States to exercise restraint in requesting the circulation of communications as United Nations documents, and that they endeavour to keep the length of communications to a minimum. The Committee agreed to keep the matter under review and to discuss it again in 1990 on the basis of an updated report from the Secretariat.

Also in May, the Secretary-General issued a report⁽⁶⁾ on the compliance of subsidiary organs of the Assembly with the 32-page limit for reports set in 1982.⁽⁷⁾ The report noted that the total volume of supplements to the Official Records of the General Assembly issued by subsidiary organs in 1987 amounted to 2,936 pages, some 600 more than in 1986. This was a reversal from the period 1978 to 1986, when the number of pages had fallen from 4,209 to 2,323.

On the basis of that report, the Committee on Conferences took up the matter in August.⁽⁵⁾ It was aware that some bodies, owing to the nature of their work, faced difficulties in complying with the 32-page limit. It recognized that it was too early to tell whether the 1987 increase represented a reversal of the earlier trend towards a reduction in the volume of supplements. The Committee therefore decided to request its Chairman to maintain his contacts with the chairmen of those bodies whose reports had exceeded 32 pages, stressing the need for brevity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 43/222 C without vote.

Control and limitation of documentation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2292(XXII) of 8 December 1967, 2538(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 3415(XXX) of 8 December 1975, 34/50 of 23 November 1979, 35/10 B of 3 November 1980, 36/117 of 10 December 1981, 37/14 C of 16 November 1982, 40/243, section III, of 18 December 1985, 41/177 D of 5 December 1986 and 42/207 of 11 December 1987,

1. Renews its appeal to Member States to exercise restraint in their requests for the circulation of communications as United Nations documents;
2. Appeals to Member States making such requests to endeavour to keep the length of the communications to a minimum;
3. Requests the Committee on Conferences to keep this matter under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a standard format for final reports of special conferences of the United Nations and to provide guidelines for the preparation and editing of those reports;
5. Again requests that subsidiary organs should strive to keep their reports to the General Assembly within the desirable limit of thirty-two pages;
6. Invites the Committee on Conferences to remain seized of this matter on the basis of further reports from the Secretary-General.

Conference facilities at Addis Ababa and Bangkok

A report of the Secretary-General on the construction of conference facilities at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and Bangkok, Thailand, was submitted to the Fifth Committee in October 1988.⁽¹⁾ It outlined the status and development of the two projects and contained updated timetables for their construction, approved by the General Assembly in 1984.⁽²⁾ The report noted that no new appropriation would be required for the projects during the biennium 1988-1989.

Activities related to the expansion of conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa at Addis Ababa through September 1988 included the negotiation of contracts with the quantity surveyor and the architect/engineer, and the preparation of up-to-date project cost estimates by the quantity surveyor. The cost of construction, excluding contingency and administrative costs, was estimated at $71,534,700. As the provision for contingency and administrative costs was usually 5 to 10 per cent, it was unclear whether the original estimated total project cost of $73,501,000 as approved by the Assembly could be maintained.

Regarding the conference facilities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok, the activities undertaken during the first nine months of 1988 included remobilization of the quantity surveyor and architectural/engineering consultants engaged for the project, a ground-breaking ceremony presided over by the Prime Minister of Thailand, and the preparation of up-to-date project cost estimates. The estimated construction cost was $40,327,800, so it was estimated that the total project cost of $44,177,700 already approved by the Assembly would be sufficient to cover the contingency and administrative costs.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by resolution 43/217, section VIII, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Information systems and computers

Technological innovations

In November, in accordance with a recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), the Secretary-General issued a report⁽¹⁾ containing revised estimates for the establishment of an integrated management information system (IMIS). It described the existing situation, explained the objectives, stages, scope and benefits of IMIS and outlined the proposed method of financing the project.

The report stated that there was widespread dissatisfaction with the current data-processing systems supporting the administrative functions of the Organization, particularly in the financial and personnel areas. Where they existed at all, they rarely shared common data and were old and unresponsive. IMIS would be a highly integrated computer system covering all functional areas in administration and management, entailing a substantial cost for the Organization. Its major benefit would be an improvement in the overall quality of management of the United Nations. It would eventually result in substantial productivity gains, after the system had undergone a shakedown period.

In its December report on the establishment of IMIS,⁽²⁾ ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the implementation of phase I of the project within a three-and-one-half-year period at a total cost not exceeding $28 million at 1988 rates. That represented a reduction of $3,593,500 from the Secretary-General's projected cost of $31,593,500. ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General's request for additional appropriations for the project in the amount of $6,204,200 for the biennium 1988-1989 be reduced to $3,425,700.

ACABQ was not fully convinced by some of the explanations submitted by the Secretariat concerning the projected cost of phase I of the IMIS project. It stated that certain costs should be lower after competitive bidding and that the Secretary-General's rationale in concluding that 2,000 terminals would be required for the IMIS system was not readily apparent.

In its appraisal of the Secretary-General's proposal, ACABQ cautioned that, while it accepted the need for improved information systems in the Secretariat, the mere advent of new technology would not achieve the intended objectives if there was no accompanying clear management direction that would make optimum use of such technological innovations. Cost estimates for phases II and

III of the IMIS project were $9,301,000, bringing the cost of the entire project to $40,894,500.

The Fifth Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the implementation of phase I of the project at the revised level of $28 million.⁽³⁾ The Committee took its decision on the understanding that the Secretary-General, in implementing the project, would endeavour to contain costs, take measures to bring about effective co-ordination among the centres concerned and ensure that the experience of other United Nations organizations was taken into account.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 43/217, section XII, without vote.

Establishment of an integrated management information system

[The General Assembly ...]

21 December 1988 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/980) by recorded vote (83-4-21), 12 December (meeting 45); oral proposal by Chairman: agenda item 114. Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 5th Committee 42, 44, 45; plenary 84.

Co-ordination of information systems

In April,⁽⁴⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) approved the revised work programme and budget of the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems (ACCIS) for the biennium 1988-1989.⁽⁵⁾ The budget remained within the limit directed by ACC and the Economic and Social Council, and was structured on a base of $1,939,500.

The work programme of ACCIS for the biennium had three subprogrammes: information resources of the United Nations system, tools for improving the information infrastructure within the United Nations system and basic co-ordination services.

The main objective of the first subprogramme was to develop and make available a number of data bases and printed products that provided information on existing information resources and activities of United Nations organizations. The Secretariat proceeded with plans to make a system-wide Register of Development Activities operational, as requested by the Assembly in 1982.⁽⁶⁾ The Directory of United Nations Data Bases and Information Systems continued to be the basic information resource for other ACCIS activities. ACCIS guides to United Nations information sources on the environment, trade and health were to be produced during 1988-1989. In addition, ACCIS decided to prepare a data base of non-governmental data collections held by the United Nations.

The second subprogramme was concerned with tools for making more efficient use of existing resources. The use of computer networking along with or as a substitute for telegraph, telex, post or even travel was likely to be the area of greatest impact in improving information infrastructure at the United Nations. It was decided not to pursue a study of the feasibility of developing a common communication network facility, as proposed in the 1986-1987 work programme. Instead, that programme element would be reoriented towards enhancing the use of readily available communication links and solving hardware and software problems.

Under the third subprogramme, advisory services on information systems would continue to be provided by ACCIS. The ACCIS Newsletter, which had 2,000 subscribers, was to continue to report on the progress of the ACCIS work programme, new developments in information technology and other relevant information.

Archives

In October,⁽⁷⁾ the Organizational Committee of ACC considered a report by the Section of Archivists of International Organizations of the International Council of Archives, which called for promoting the preservation of the archives of the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

Also in October,⁽⁸⁾ ACC recommended that all organizations of the United Nations system establish, with appropriate formal authorization, an archives and records management service in order to ensure the preservation of their archives. It also decided to draw to the attention of the organizations of the system three further studies prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the work and recommendations of the Technical Panel on Records Management of ACCIS.

International Computing Centre

In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee the 1989 budget estimates of the International Computing Centre at Geneva.⁽⁹⁾ The estimates amounted to $11,775,000, as compared to $9,025,600 for 1988. The five organizations/programmes that were projected to use the Centre most in 1989 were, in order of money to be spent: the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme and the World Intellectual Property Organization. Together, those organizations accounted for over three quarters of the funding for the Centre's operations.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by resolution 43/217, section II, approved the 1989 budget estimates of ICC.

UN Postal Administration

In 1988, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $12.6 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations. Under the terms of an agreement between the United Nations and the United States, revenue from the sale of United States dollar-denominated stamps used for postage from Headquarters was reimbursed to the United States Postal Service. Similarly, postal agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Switzerland and Austria required that revenue derived from the sale of Swiss franc- and Austrian schilling-denominated stamps for postage use be reimbursed to the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively.

Six commemorative stamp issues, two definitive stamps and two souvenir cards were released by UNPA during the year.

The first commemorative issue, released on 29 January in denominations of 22 and 33 United States cents, 0.35 and 1.40 Swiss francs (SwF) and 4 and 6 Austrian schillings (S), was on the theme "IFAD—For a World Without Hunger". Two definitive stamps with denominations of 3 cents and SwF 0.50 were issued on the same day.

On 18 March, commemorative stamps were released in a mini-sheet format of 12 stamps to commemorate "Survival of the Forests". The stamps, which were in a vertical se-tenant pair format, carried denominations of 25 and 44 cents, SwF 0.50 and 1.10 and S 4 and 5.

The third commemorative issue, carrying the slogan "International Volunteer Day", was released on 6 May. The stamps were in denominations of 25 and 50 cents, SwF 0.80 and 0.90 and S 6 and 7.50. A souvenir card accompanied the issue.

"Health in Sports" was the theme of the fourth commemorative issue for the year. Issued on 17 June, the six stamps carried denominations of 25 and 38 cents, SwF 0.50 and 1.40 and S 6 and 8. A souvenir card accompanied the issue.

The ninth set of 16 stamps in the "Flag Series" was released on 15 September. Each stamp carried a denomination of 25 cents.

On 9 December, a set of three stamps and three souvenir sheets were released to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.⁽¹⁾ The stamps carried denominations of 25 cents, SwF 0.90 and S 5. The souvenir sheets, in denominations of $1, SwF 2 and S 11, carried the complete text of the preamble to the Declaration in English, French and German, respectively.

A total of 67,747,324 stamps were printed in 1988, and 2,993,035 envelopes received cancellation on the first day of issue.

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1988, the activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in nuclear safety and radiation protection increased due to growing interest by its member States. The thirty-second session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 19-23 September) called for measures to strengthen international co-operation in nuclear safety and radiological protection and for sharing safety-related information.

The Conference condemned all nuclear waste dumping practices that would infringe on the sovereignty of States and/or would endanger the environment or public health of other countries, and called on all member States to ensure that no such practices occurred. It requested the IAEA Director General to establish a technical working group of experts to elaborate an internationally agreed code of practice for international transactions involving nuclear wastes based on, among other things, a review of current national and international laws and regulations on waste disposal.

On 21 September 1988, the Joint Protocol relating to the Application of the 1963 Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage^a and the 1960 Paris Convention on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy was adopted and opened for signature.

IAEA's efforts to strengthen the infrastructure for nuclear power projects in its developing member States continued through interregional and national training courses, seminars, workshops, technical co-operation projects, advisory missions, guidebooks, manuals and technical committee meetings.

During the year, IAEA continued to foster research and development in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and the exchange of scientific and technical information, to establish and administer safeguards, to provide technical assistance to its member States and to establish health and safety standards.

The IAEA Board of Governors met six times in 1988, once in each of February, May, June and December and twice in September.

IAEA membership remained at 113 throughout 1988 (see Annex I).

Nuclear safety and radiation protection

In 1988, IAEA strengthened its safety evaluation and information exchange services for nuclear power plants and research reactors.

Six operational safety review team (OSART) missions carried out in-depth reviews of management programmes, plant operation, maintenance, personnel training, technical support, plant chemistry, radiological protection and emergency capability at nuclear plants in six countries (France, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Sweden, USSR). OSART guidelines were published and a report was prepared on OSART findings based on the results of missions between June 1987 and June 1988. Under the operational safety indicators programme, a set of plant-specific indicators, which helped identify key areas for in-depth investigation, were used in conjunction with OSART missions. The number of reports to IAEA's incident reporting system on unusual operating, surveillance and maintenance events at nuclear plants increased from 421 to 613.

Experts of the integrated safety assessment of research reactors programme visited reactor facilities in five countries (Colombia, Iraq, Norway, Republic of Korea, Venezuela). IAEA initiated in 1988 a three-year publication programme, which would include a safety standard report, several safety guides and safety practices. The 326 research reactors operating in 55 countries in 1988 had a cumulative operating experience of 9,814 reactor years.

The International Nuclear Safety Advisory Group completed its work on basic safety principles for nuclear power plants. In the area of probabilistic safety assessment, a personal computer software package developed for fault-tree and event-tree analysis was distributed to more than 50 users in member States. The package was being adapted for use as a tool for the safety management of nuclear power plants, in co-operation with member States.

Progress was made on implementing an inter-agency (IAEA/United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)/United Nations Environment Programme/World Health Organization (WHO)) project for assessing and managing the health and environmental risks of energy and other complex industrial systems. Case-studies were initiated in eight member States.

In the area of radiation protection, through an IAEA/Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development meeting (Vienna), an international consensus was achieved on the exemption of radiation sources and practices from regulatory control. Following the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukrainian SSR, member States supplied IAEA with measurements of radioactivity in environmental materials; the task of entering the information into the Agency's data base was completed in 1988.

As a result of requests, radiation protection advisory teams reviewed infrastructures in 12 countries (Bangladesh, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Greece, Guatemala, Indonesia, Jamaica, Madagascar, Nigeria, Senegal, Viet Nam) and recommended long-term strategies for co-operation and assistance. Three other countries (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Qatar, Zambia) received missions to advise on measures for ensuring the existence and implementation of effective radiation protection legislation. Two missions to Jordan assessed the radiation protection services at medical installations. Support for the establishment of national radiation protection services was provided by 37 technical co-operation projects.

Nuclear power

The total installed nuclear power-generating capacity in the world increased by about 4.3 per cent during 1988, reaching 311 gigawatts (electrical) by the end of the year. At that time, there were 429 nuclear power plants in operation, accounting for some 17 per cent of the world's electricity generation and representing an accumulated operating experience of about 5,000 reactor years.

Fourteen nuclear power plants came on line during the year, in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Republic of Korea, Spain, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, and construction started on six plants, in China, France, Japan, the USSR and the United Kingdom. Two reactors with a total capacity of 335 megawatts (electrical) were permanently shut down in the USSR and the United Kingdom.

IAEA provided technical support for energy, electricity and nuclear power planning studies in Egypt, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia. Co-operation between IAEA and the World Bank in planning energy and electric power systems in developing countries continued, with joint World Bank/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) activities undertaken in Egypt, Morocco, Turkey and Yugoslavia. IAEA provided technical support for feasibility studies and infrastructure development planning projects in China, Malaysia, Morocco and Tunisia. Various training courses were held in China, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Malaysia, Morocco, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Romania and the United States.

At the end of 1988, the IAEA power reactor information system (PRIS) contained data for about 3,800 years of power reactor operation and on some 27,700 outages. During the year, data sets were supplied on request to contributing member States and detailed background information was provided for OSART missions. Using PRIS data, IAEA published editions of Nuclear Power Reactors in the World and Operating Experience with Power Reactors in Member States (1987).

Nuclear fuel cycle

Sixty-five IAEA members were involved in fuel cycle technology activities. New projects included an international study on water reactor extended burn-up, a project on post-accident management of severely damaged nuclear fuel and radioactive waste arising; and a study on safety aspects of production, handling, transport and storage of uranium hexafluoride. An analysis was completed on the status and trends in the world nuclear fuel cycle and on the methodology of work performed by IAEA, emphasizing expected changes and corresponding probable directions for international co-operation. Technical assistance was provided to 33 members.

With reactor-related uranium requirements of some 38,600 tons in 1988, uranium production remained below requirements. Large inventories, estimated at three to four years of forward requirements, filled the gap and were expected to do so for a number of years. Thirty-three technical co-operation projects on uranium exploration and resource development in 31 countries were supported. The first World Atlas of Uranium Occurrences and Deposits, containing over 6,000 records of uranium occurrences in 96 countries, was published.

Fourteen technical co-operation projects were supported in nine countries in research reactor modernization, nuclear fuel fabrication, nuclear fuel and materials study, nuclear fuel cycle technology, nuclear fuel developments and simulation of radiation damage. Projects jointly supported with the IAEA Division of Nuclear Power included reactor physics, nuclear power stations and research reactors.

Radioactive waste management

IAEA increased its involvement in the waste management problems of developing countries. The national radioactive waste management policies, plans and activities of 12 developing countries were reviewed under the waste management advisory programme. IAEA provided support for 26 technical co-operation projects in 19 member States in waste management, the majority of which related to handling, treatment, conditioning and storage, reflecting the main current concerns of developing countries.

The Technical Review Committee on Underground Disposal, which had guided the programme on underground waste disposal for the preceding 10 years, was disbanded to make way for the International Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, which was to have wider terms of reference and provide advice to IAEA on the whole of its radioactive waste management programme.

IAEA co-operated with the Commission of the European Communities in organizing an international symposium on the management of low- and intermediate-level radioactive wastes (Stockholm, Sweden, May), which was attended by more than 300 experts from 32 countries and 6 international organizations.

Other activities focused on handling, treatment, conditioning and storage of radioactive wastes, decontamination and decommissioning of nuclear facilities, and environmental aspects of radioactive waste management.

Food and agriculture

In the area of food and agriculture, IAEA, through the joint Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/IAEA Division, continued to assist developing member States to improve their agriculture and food production through the application of isotopes, ionizing radiation and related techniques, especially biotechnology.

Assistance was provided by IAEA in soil fertility, irrigation and crop production through 49 research contracts and agreements and 69 technical co-operation projects. In the field of plant breeding and genetics, assistance to 35 member States was provided through 36 national and 2 regional projects. Training in technologies needed for the application of nuclear techniques in plant improvement was arranged for 62 scientists from 36 member States through fellowships or courses. In agrochemicals and residues, assistance to member States continued through 62 research contracts and agreements and 13 technical co-operation projects. In food preservation, member States received assistance through 52 research contracts and agreements and 23 technical co-operation projects.

Research and training continued at IAEA's Agricultural Laboratory at Siebersdorf, Austria, in animal reproduction, disease diagnostics and nutrition. The Laboratory also supported insect and pest control, particularly Mediterranean fruit fly (medfly) reduction and tsetse fly eradication.

An International Conference on the Acceptance, Control of and Trade in Irradiated Foods (Geneva, December), jointly sponsored with FAO, WHO and the International Trade Centre, aimed at achieving a consensus on the acceptance and control of irradiated foods among member States. The Conference was attended by more than 250 experts designated by some 60 member States and 14 intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. An international document on food irradiation, adopted by consensus, indicated that some 60 Governments had recognized food irradiation as a method of processing food to reduce food losses and illness caused by certain food-borne pathogens and to facilitate wider trade of food items.

Life sciences

In the life sciences, assistance continued to be provided to member States on the application of nuclear techniques in medicine, applied radiation biology and radiotherapy, radiation dosimetry, and nutritional and health-related environmental studies. Many of these activities were carried out in co-operation with WHO.

Training courses in nuclear medicine included an interregional training course (Moscow); a regional training course on medical scintigraphy (Havana, Cuba); a regional seminar on nuclear techniques in parasitic and communicable diseases for Asia and the Pacific (Bombay, India); and a seminar on training in nuclear medicine in developing countries (Vienna). Technical advice and assistance in nuclear medicine were provided through 67 research contracts and agreements and for 116 technical co-operation projects.

In applied radiation biology and radiotherapy, 14 participants from 11 developing member States were trained during a course for the Asia and Pacific region on radiation sterilization of tissue grafts for safe clinical use (Taiyuan, China). Sixteen participants attended an interregional seminar on new approaches in practices for radiation sterilization of medical supplies (Canada). Technical advice was provided for 65 research contracts and agreements and 15 technical co-operation projects.

A video film on IAEA dosimetry activity was completed in Chinese, English and Spanish. The performance test of the transportable reference-class ionization chamber dosimeter system for use in radiation therapy was completed and another system for the comparison of radiation protection level secondary standard dosimeters was developed. Assistance to member States in radiation dosimetry continued through 28 research contracts and agreements and 41 technical co-operation projects.

Research co-ordination meetings reviewed progress on nuclear techniques for toxic elements in foodstuffs and nuclear and nuclear-related techniques in the study of environmental pollution associated with solid wastes. An advisory group meeting was held on nuclear techniques in background air pollution monitoring. Assistance continued in nutritional and health-related environmental studies through 72 research contracts and agreements in 42 member States.

Physical and earth sciences

IAEA continued to promote the exchange of information in the physical and earth sciences and to assist countries with the application of nuclear techniques in experimental physics, analytical and radiation chemistry, non-destructive testing, radiation processing, industrial process control, geology, mining and hydrology.

In 1988, there were 325 research reactors operating in 54 member States, including 71 in 34 developing countries. The International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor (ITER) was inaugurated during the year and its secretariat established at Vienna.

IAEA supported 193 technical co-operation projects for 48 countries to promote the transfer of nuclear technologies employed in industry.

In isotope hydrology, IAEA supported 57 technical co-operation projects in 50 member States, providing assistance in nuclear techniques in water resources assessment, geothermal resource exploration, strengthening analytical capabilities and the establishment of isotope laboratories, and the application of nuclear techniques to specific hydrological projects such as those related to sediment transport, leakage from dams and reservoirs, lake dynamics and water pollution.

Technical assistance

During 1988, 1,009 projects were operational and 88 training courses were held, involving 2,023 expert assignments and training for 1,947 IAEA fellows, visiting scientists and other participants.

Of the assistance delivered, the largest portion (20 per cent) related to the application of isotopes and radiation in agriculture. Other important fields were nuclear safety and radiation protection (19 per cent), applications of isotopes and radiation in industry and hydrology (16 per cent), nuclear engineering and technology (15 per cent), nuclear physics (8 per cent) and nuclear medicine (8 per cent).

Total new resources available for technical co-operation increased by 10 per cent over 1987 to $45.6 million. The IAEA Technical Assistance and Co-operation Fund accounted for 75.7 per cent of the total available resources, extrabudgetary funds for 12.5 per cent, UNDP for 6.7 per cent and assistance in kind for 5.1 per cent. Disbursements were highest in equipment procurement, accounting for just under 50 per cent of total delivery; the remaining provisions were nearly evenly split between training and expert services.

Scientific research and support

The IAEA Laboratories at Seibersdorf provided the experimental back-up services to programmes in food and agriculture, and physical, chemical and life sciences. They offered in-service training for individual fellows, organized training courses and supplied officers for technical co-operation projects.

Training, research and service activities were performed in areas such as soil fertility, irrigation, crop mutation, insect and pest control, pesticide analysis and formulation, animal nutrition, health and reproduction, and analytical chemistry, radiation dosimetry, electronics, instrumentation and isotope hydrology. In addition, the Laboratories provided analytical services for safeguards. The Safeguards Analytical Laboratory received 1,180 samples of nuclear material, reducing the total time needed to conclude verifications by destructive analysis by 17 per cent.

The International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity (Monaco) conducted two world-wide intercalibration exercises for concentrations of man-made and natural radio-nuclides in natural samples. More than 40 laboratories participated in the analysis of a fish-flesh reference standard and a marine sediment sample. Comprehensive technical support was given for regional and global marine pollution assessments in co-operation with other United Nations agencies.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy) carried out research and training-for-research in fundamental physics, condensed matter, atomic and molecular physics, mathematics, physics and energy, physics and the environment, physics of the living state, applied physics and high technology, and physics and development. Some 4,100 scientists took part in the activities of the Centre and in the programme for training at laboratories in Italy.

Agency safeguards and responsibilities

As in previous years, the secretariat, in carrying out the IAEA safeguards obligations, did not detect any event which would indicate the diversion of a significant amount of safeguarded nuclear material or the misuse of facilities, equipment or non-nuclear material subject to safeguards under certain agreements for the manufacture of any nuclear weapon or explosive device, or for any other military purpose, or for purposes unknown. It was considered reasonable to conclude that the nuclear material under IAEA safeguards remained in peaceful nuclear activities or was otherwise adequately accounted for. During the year, 2,128 inspections were performed.

As at 31 December 1988, there were 168 safeguards agreements in force with 99 States, a safeguards agreement with Nigeria pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons^b (NPT) having entered into force in February and unilateral submission agreements with Albania and India having entered into force in March and September, respectively. Also agreements were concluded with Panama pursuant to NPT and the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Tlatelolco Treaty), and with Saint Lucia pursuant to NPT. Bahrain and Saudi Arabia acceded to NPT, bringing the total number of States parties to it at the end of 1988 to 139.

IAEA and China concluded an agreement relating to the latter's voluntary offer to place some of its peaceful nuclear installations under Agency safeguards.

Safeguards were applied in 41 States under agreements pursuant to NPT or to NPT and the Tlatelolco Treaty, and in one State pursuant to the Tlatelolco Treaty. NPT safeguards agreements had been concluded with 10 of the 11 States signatories of the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty;^c safeguards were applied in one of them pursuant to an NPT agreement. At the end of 1988, there were 511 nuclear facilities under safeguards or containing safeguarded nuclear material, 8 of which were in nuclear-weapon States. There were also 407 locations outside facilities containing small amounts of safeguarded material and two safeguarded non-nuclear installations.

Nuclear information

Costa Rica, Jordan, Morocco and UNIDO joined the International Nuclear Information System, bringing its membership to 78 IAEA member States and 15 international organizations. By the end of the year, the bibliographic data base of nuclear literature contained 1,266,075 records.

The data base of the Agricultural Information System, covering 130 national and 17 international organizations, totalled 1.5 million references in November.

Secretariat

At the end of 1988, the number of staff members of the secretariat was 2,079—797 in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 77 countries), 1,150 in the General Service category and 132 in the Maintenance and Operatives Service category. (For senior secretariat officers, see Annex II.)

Budget

The regular budget for 1988 was $156,182,000, of which $146,838,000 was financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1988 scale of assessment, $5,366,000 from income from work for others and $3,978,000 from other miscellaneous income.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

The International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued in 1988 to promote policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; develop human resources; improve working conditions; and promote social security. It sought to strengthen industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) co-operation and to advance human rights and international labour standards. The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical co-operation activities, research and publishing. ILO membership remained at 150 (see Annex I).

Meetings

The seventy-fifth session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 1-22 June) was attended by some 1,900 delegates and advisers from 141 countries. The Conference adopted new conventions and recommendations on safety and health in the construction industry, employment promotion and protection against unemployment, and discussed a revision of the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, scheduled for its 1989 session.

A tripartite committee examined the application of ILO conventions and recommendations by member States and reviewed the application of ILO standards concerning equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation. The Conference also reviewed promotion of rural employment, highlighting the key role of rural economies in both developed and developing countries in the search for a solution to unemployment.

Forty-one countries were represented at ILO's Seventh African Regional Conference (Harare, Zimbabwe, 29 November-7 December), which adopted two main sets of conclusions regarding rural and urban training and the role of co-operatives. Resolutions were adopted on promotion of the co-operative movement in Africa; southern Africa and apartheid, economic development and social progress in Africa; promotion of women workers' activities within the ILO Plan of Action on Equality and Opportunity and Treatment of Men and Women in Employment; protection of the working and general environment in Africa; and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Coal Mines Committee, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 13-21 April), adopted conclusions on manpower planning, training and retraining in the light of technological change and occupational health services and social facilities in the industry. Resolutions were adopted on social security, wages and legislation in the mining industry, as well as on the role of coal in an energy policy.

The Committee on Conditions of Work in the Fishing Industry (Geneva, 4-13 May) adopted conclusions on systems of remuneration and earnings, occupational adaptation to technical changes and the social and economic needs of small-scale fishermen and rural fishing communities, as well as resolutions on protecting the livelihood of fishermen, working and living conditions in the fishing industry and hours of work and staffing.

Conclusions of the tenth session of the Chemical Industries Committee (Geneva, 5-13 October) concerned shiftwork and the impact of new technology on safety and health protection. The Committee also adopted resolutions on control and avoidance of toxic waste, chemical hazards and industrial accidents in the chemical industry.

The Joint Committee on the Public Service (Geneva, 23 November-1 December) adopted two sets of conclusions on joint consultation, negotiating and collective bargaining rights with regard to determining pay and conditions of employment in public service, and on social security, including social protection of employees in respect of invalidity, retirement and survivors' benefits. It also adopted a resolution on trade union rights.

The Metal Trades Committee, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 7-15 December), adopted conclusions on productivity and on the special problems of young workers in the metal trades. Resolutions adopted concerned the industrial environment, safety and health, further education and training of metal workers (emphasizing equality between men and women), labour policies for conversion and diversification, multinational enterprises and ratification and application of ILO basic human rights standards.

Working environment

The ILO International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment provided technical co-operation to member States for the promotion of occupational safety and health (India, Morocco, Pakistan, Poland, Thailand and Zimbabwe), mine safety (China, India, Indonesia, Turkey and Viet Nam), major hazard control (India, Indonesia and Thailand) and training in occupational safety and health (Malaysia). Short-term consultancies were carried out in Argentina, Costa Rica, India, Pakistan, Republic of Korea, Senegal, Singapore and Tunisia, and fellowships and study tours were granted to government officials from China and the Comoros and to members of the Employers' Federation of Pakistan.

Regional activities in Asia included projects on construction safety and information services and a workshop on occupational safety and health administration. Sectoral activities were emphasized, as evidenced by regional seminars on safety and health in agriculture (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, April) and chemical safety (Amman, Jordan, September) and a symposium on chemical accidents and occupational health (Mombasa, Kenya, December). The Seventh International Conference on Pneumoconiosis was also held (Pittsburgh, United States, August).

Technical co-operation activities in the areas of working conditions and welfare facilities included a seminar on work-related facilities for trade unionists from French-speaking countries in Africa, organized in co-operation with the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions of the USSR (Tashkent, USSR, September), and an Asian subregional tripartite seminar on the protection of homeworkers (Manila, Philippines, December). National training courses for small entrepreneurs on the improvement of working conditions and productivity were organized in India, Mexico, Peru and Thailand. Technical advisory services were provided to India on the design of child labour action programmes and to the National Workers' Confederation in Zaire on welfare facilities and services for women workers. A pilot project on welfare facilities for women workers, financed by the Netherlands, was implemented in Indonesia.

Services provided by the International Occupational Safety and Health Information Centre (CIS) were expanded, and included the provision of records on compact disc, the first of its kind to be used in the United Nations system. The ILO/CIS bulletin Safety and Health at Work emphasized legislative and training materials, chemical safety and practical information for developing countries.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme (WEP) assisted ILO member States in implementing policies to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment and to reduce poverty. Through its action-oriented research, technical advisory services, national projects and regional teams in Africa, Asia and Latin America, WEP focused on longer-term rural development problems and the rapidly growing urban informal sector. In response to the economic crisis and the growth in unemployment during the 1980s, WEP was devoting a major part of its work to achieving greater equity in structural adjustment programmes. Among the areas covered were employment and poverty monitoring, direct employment creation and income generation for vulnerable groups; linkages between macro- and micro-economic interventions; technological change; and labour market problems.

Field activities

In 1988, total ILO operational expenditures stood at $125.1 million (an increase of 11.4 per cent over 1987). Assistance was provided for activities promoting employment, developing human resources and social institutions and improving living and working conditions. The United Nations Development Programme remained the largest source of funding for ILO programmes, providing nearly $60 million. The ILO regular budget provided $11.6 million, while expenditures funded from trust funds, including the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, accounted for $53.5 million.

The employment and development programme spent some $44.4 million on projects in support of infrastructure/rural works and employment planning/population. ILO training programmes expended $40.4 million to promote vocational training and management development programmes. The third largest ILO technical co-operation programme ($17.2 million) concerned sectoral activities, within which operational activities in support of co-operatives alone provided over two thirds of the total for sectoral activities.

Educational activities

The ILO training programme assisted its member States in formulating training strategies and programmes to prepare people for productive employment and to help workers to update and improve their skills. Special emphasis was given to improving the cost-effectiveness of national training systems and improving training and employment opportunities for youth, women, older workers and disabled persons. The largest component of the programme continued to be technical co-operation activities in member States. Some 40 per cent of the projects for vocational training, management development and vocational rehabilitation were executed in least developed countries. Other important components of the programme included analytical and research activities, technical advisory services on policy and operational issues, information dissemination and collaboration with the ILO regional vocational training centres and other international agencies and institutions.

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, the ILO centre for education and research, held its twenty-third international internship course on active labour policy development (Geneva, 6 May–3 June). The Institute, together with the ILO Bureau for Employers' Activities, organized an international course on the active role of managers in industrial relations (Geneva, 6 April–4 May). Under its new industrial organization programme, the Institute identified major patterns of industrial reorganization and analysed their implications for labour and ILO. Activities included setting up networks of practitioners and researchers. Under the labour markets programme, activities included promotion of research networks, synthesis of existing research through reviews and seminars, pilot methodological and conceptual studies aimed at improving analytical techniques and educational activities to upgrade national capacity for labour market analysis.

Four issues of the Institute's journal Labour and Society (in English and French) were published in 1988; two were special issues dealing with the future of trade unionism in industrialized market economies and labour markets.

During 1988, the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, organized 79 courses and seminars attended by 1,448 participants and administered 676 fellowships. The Centre conducted advanced programmes on the management of training institutions and focused on improving management for co-operatives, small enterprises, human resources and technical co-operation.

Training in the social aspects of labour, covering a comparative analysis of labour relations and the training of trainers of trade union instructors were undertaken for Africa, the Arab States and Latin America. A new course on the management of social and economic services of trade unions was conducted.

Increased efforts were made to promote the participation of women in the development process; three courses were held specifically for women in the field of co-operatives, training technology and small enterprise development in addition to an evaluation seminar for trade union women instructors from Central America.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 3,047. Of these, 1,399 were in the Professional and higher categories, and 1,648 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 668 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Budget

The International Labour Conference in June 1987 adopted a budget of $324.9 million for the 1988-1989 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The 49-member Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) the organization's governing body between biennial meetings of the FAO Conference, held its ninety-fourth session in 1988 (Rome, Italy, 15-26 November). The Council drew attention to the critical economic situation of developing countries and urged that they be assisted through significant concessions on debt. It supported the Director-General's proposal that FAO assist in formulating new guidelines for food and agriculture. The Council urged a timely conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, recognizing the objectives and principles of the 1986 Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round.^a

The Council also called for increased international support to countries that had suffered natural disasters and appealed for the replenishment of the International Emergency Food Reserve—the one multilateral food scheme for use in time of disasters—which had been exhausted.

The importance of sustainability in agriculture and rural development was stressed repeatedly during the Council session. It recommended that economic remedies be found that would allow developing countries to implement appropriate environmental protection programmes. The Council considered of equal urgency the introduction of measures to protect biodiversity, halt land degradation and involve people at the grass-roots level in conservation and development.

The Council gave unanimous support to the Plan of Action for the Integration of Women in Development, submitted by the Director-General. It urged immediate attention to identify the type of activities and timetable required to implement the Plan, and requested the training of FAO staff to heighten awareness of issues related to women. The Council also expressed support for activities geared towards increasing the access of rural women to training, credit, market and extension services.

The nineteenth FAO Conference for the Near East (Muscat, Oman, March) called on member Governments to incorporate rural energy planning as an integral part of their rural and agricultural plans. It requested FAO assistance in carrying out a detailed assessment of energy resources in the light of shrinking fuelwood supplies. Issues related to immigration and immigrant labour were also discussed, and participants were encouraged to formulate national immigration policies with a regional perspective. The Conference also called for an increase in the region's aquaculture production, which accounted for only 1 per cent of world output.

FAO's fifteenth Conference for Africa (Port Louis, Mauritius, April), representing 48 African countries, called for an increase in human, material and financial resources for anti-locust operations and recommended early warning, prevention and monitoring activities. The Conference highlighted the need for increased investment in fisheries and requested FAO assistance to African coastal States in monitoring, control and surveillance of their exclusive economic zones. The need for credit in farm mechanization and the further development of indigenous food crops were also discussed.

Despite an impressive increase in the region's food production, malnutrition continued to plague certain parts of Asia and the Pacific, which was underscored during the region's nineteenth Conference (Bangkok, Thailand, July). The Conference urged FAO to continue helping the poor and called on Governments in the region to curb deforestation and soil erosion. Participants also voiced concern about a fall in cereals production and a 20-million-ton drop in cereal stocks during 1987/88.

The sixteenth FAO Conference for Europe (Krakow, Poland, August) recommended that Governments reorient policies to reflect environmental concerns. The European countries called for further strengthening of FAO activities in the region and recommended that it maintain its role as a catalyst for agricultural co-operation.

Ministers of Agriculture gathered for the twentieth FAO Conference for Latin America and the Caribbean (Recife, Brazil, October). The 33-member Conference unanimously adopted the Recife Declaration, calling for action to eliminate trade protectionism and to suppress the use of food as an instrument of political pressure.

During 1988, FAO general membership and that of its Council remained unchanged at 158 and 49 countries respectively (see Annexes I and II).

Funding

The regular programme budget, which provided for services and technical assistance, was financed by FAO member countries (see below, under "Budget").

Advice and assistance in the field were provided through the field programme, funded largely from extrabudgetary sources such as the United Nations Development Programme (45 per cent) and the various trust funds made available by donor Governments and international financing institutions (47 per cent). FAO administered a technical co-operation programme financed from its regular budget to provide short-term projects; in 1988, the programme amounted to $26.9 million, or 8 per cent of total field expenditure.

FAO's 1988-1989 work programme was affected by a sharp decline in the value of the United States dollar, on which the organization's budget was based, and a delay in payment of assessed contributions by member countries. At the beginning of the year FAO faced a deficit of $47 million, forcing cuts in services and the adoption of austerity measures totalling some $20 million.

Activities in 1988

Food emergencies and rehabilitation

In the worst plague recorded since the 1950s, desert locusts swept across northern Africa in 1988 and penetrated as far as Iran, southern Europe and the Caribbean. The most serious outbreaks occurred in north-west Africa, the Sahel, Saudi Arabia and the Sudan. FAO responded with a call for intensified ground and aerial spraying. Meetings of donors helped generate some $200 million in funding for anti-locust operations. Massive spraying operations to bring the plague under control treated a total of 14.5 million hectares of land, including almost 5 million hectares in Morocco alone.

While civil strife caused famine in southern Sudan and serious food shortages in Mozambique, many African countries needed emergency assistance to manage crop surpluses. Abundant and well-distributed rains produced above-average harvests throughout the region. In the drought-prone Sahel, cereal output reached a record 9 million metric tons, 20 per cent higher than the previous record harvest of 1986.

FAO sent teams of experts to Ethiopia, the Sudan and nine Sahelian countries to estimate crop production. It also drew donor attention to opportunities to redistribute surpluses through local purchases and swaps and to fund inter-country transactions. Food shortages, however, continued in many areas. In November, Angola, Ethiopia, Malawi, Mozambique and the Sudan needed exceptional food aid totalling 3 million tons.

FAO and the World Health Organization trained veterinary staff from six West African countries to meet the threat of Rift Valley fever, a serious disease of people and cattle previously found in eastern and southern Africa. West African outbreaks were first reported in Mauritania in 1987. FAO also helped set up national diagnostic and surveillance systems to prepare the subregion for recurrences of the disease.

Four million Indonesian farmers financed a series of FAO projects for urgent agricultural rehabilitation in Africa. Through donations from Indonesia's National Key Farmers organization more than $6 million was raised for 41 projects.

Field programmes

The majority of FAO's field projects continued to be directed at increasing crop production. Other activities focused on rural development, natural resources, forestry, livestock, agricultural policy analysis, fisheries, research and technology development, and nutrition.

FAO carried out 2,493 field projects at an annual cost of $341.5 million. During the year, FAO's Investment Centre, which assisted developing countries to attract investment for agricultural development, prepared 44 projects, which received international financing worth $1,668.8 million, of which $1,025.2 million was in external loans.

The regional distribution of field projects in 1988 was Africa, 1,073; Asia and the Pacific, 602; the Near East, 305; Latin America and the Caribbean, 300; Europe, 68; and 145 in inter-regional or global initiatives.

Environment

An FAO draft strategy for the rehabilitation and conservation of African lands, aimed at halting widespread land degradation, proposed ways to implement conservation-based resource development. It was decided to broaden the strategy into an international scheme to include concrete proposals for action.

In the light of the accelerating erosion of plant genetic resources and the extinction of some species, FAO supported pilot projects aimed at conserving endangered species in their original habitats. One such project, under way in Cameroon, Malaysia and Peru, sought to map the distribution of several species, determine their presence in protected areas and in managed forest reserves, and formulate practical measures for their conservation.

As part of its efforts to preserve endangered livestock breeds, FAO supported the establishment of regional animal gene banks to conserve the semen and embryos of cattle, sheep, pigs and goats. Following a survey of the facilities in developing countries, FAO launched a series of projects to train gene-bank staff and provide equipment and expert advice.

A 1988 FAO report on improved tree fallows reviewed environment-friendly farming systems in the sub-tropics. Case-studies were conducted in Africa, Colombia, Mexico and the Peruvian Andes on systems that rotated crops with trees.

Crops

Weak cereals output in the main producing countries renewed concern over world food security. Global cereal stocks fell in 1988 to 399.5 million tons, from well over 400 million tons the previous year. World stocks, however, represented 24 per cent of consumption by year's end, well above the 18 per cent considered adequate by FAO for world food security.

FAO launched a project to assist the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to boost its rice production, under which 12 Korean rice scientists undertook overseas study tours on a wide variety of topics. During 1988, FAO implemented 30 field projects to improve rice cultivation in developing countries. In Sierra Leone, for example, a project that introduced semi-dwarf varieties facilitated the cultivation, for the first time, of two rice crops a year.

FAO expanded seed-production projects in Nepal to increase vegetable output in 15 areas. The project included formulation of proposals to improve the marketing network and to develop an information system for farmers based on baseline surveys of production costs and the market capacity for fresh vegetables.

A project in El Salvador distributed 2,500 low-cost galvanized iron granaries to farmers. Each granary held 1 ton of maize and kidney beans, while offering protection from pests and fungal diseases.

A project in Latin America and the Caribbean distributed lines and cultivars of the legume pigeon pea for trials in 14 countries. The trials were part of a series of FAO-supported activities to foster basic food production in the region; similar trials were conducted using tomato, garlic, yams and cassava.

A meeting convened by several United Nations bodies, including FAO and the International Atomic Energy Agency, adopted an international document on food irradiation. The participants agreed that irradiation could reduce post-harvest food losses and pathogen contamination and help international trade when used as a quarantine treatment. (See also PART SEVEN, Chapter I.)

Fisheries

To help boost aquaculture production in Latin America and the Caribbean, an FAO project funded by Italy helped to strengthen aquaculture management capacities by training planners, technicians and administrators. The project, named AQUILA, conducted a three-month course on planning and management in Mexico, attended by 22 people from 13 countries. AQUILA sponsored studies on aquaculture in 19 countries and courses in Bolivia and Peru on molluscs, in Venezuela on the exploitation of coastal lagoons, and in Panama on the prevention of crustacean diseases.

FAO's European Inland Fisheries Advisory Commission published codes of practice and procedures for introducing or transferring marine and freshwater organisms. Its inland fisheries committees in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Asia and the Pacific considered adopting the recommendations as they applied to each region.

FAO developed microcomputer software to help developing countries assess the state of their fish stocks. It distributed the first copies of LFSA and ANACO, programs that analysed catch data by length and age group, respectively. Other software packages compiled and analysed biological and socio-economic data to improve fisheries management.

Forestry

FAO completed an in-depth study of development potential in Latin America and the Caribbean and a plan for management of the region's tropical forests. The study found that despite the region's ample natural resources, development was hampered by external debt, low commodity prices, trade barriers and urban bias in economic and social policies. A plan of action based on the report was adopted by the twentieth FAO Conference for Latin America and the Caribbean (see above).

FAO's proposals for forestry development were based on the 1986 Tropical Forestry Action Plan.^b

Land use

Work began on a major programme for land-use planning in the Brazilian Amazon. Following a request from Brazil, FAO began assessing the agricultural potential of agro-ecological zones in the 5 million square kilometre area of the Amazon basin. An FAO mission outlined a long-term perspective on economically and ecologically sustainable land use. It also examined the adequacy of existing land resources and proposed a methodology for land-use planning.

Trade reform

FAO's Committee on World Food Security, composed of 85 countries, met in April to assess the global food situation and to recommend measures to improve the poor's access to food supplies. It noted that per capita staple food consumption had declined in 32 of 64 low-income, food-deficit countries, and that their food-aid needs had increased substantially during 1987/88. The Committee urged action to balance the long-term interests of cereal-producing and -consuming countries and to improve access to export markets to boost the foreign exchange earnings of developing countries.

Rural youth

World Food Day, celebrated on 16 October 1988, focused on the contributions, needs and aspirations of the developing world's rural youth. The Day, established by the FAO Conference and observed since 1981, aimed at bringing key issues in food and agriculture to the attention of Governments, institutions and the general public.

Rural youth were celebrated at a special ceremony at FAO headquarters and through activities sponsored by Governments, non-governmental organizations and educational institutions throughout the world. In Mexico, a national meeting of rural youth was jointly organized by the Ministry of Agriculture and the National Peasants' Association. Youth clubs in Swaziland displayed agricultural products and handicrafts, Thailand inaugurated a tree-planting campaign and the Philippines approved a five-year programme to benefit youth.

Information

FAO developed a communications strategy and supplied media materials to 34 African countries as part of a region-wide effort to eradicate the cattle disease rinderpest. Regional workshops and training for African radio producers took place and communications activities were designed in five countries. FAO produced a communication kit, which included television spots, radio programmes, posters, flip-charts, postage stamps and photographs.

FAO's statistical information system, AGROSTAT, became available to a limited number of external users in seven government and international agencies through a network dubbed AGROTEL. The computer contained the world's most comprehensive bank of agricultural information and statistics.

FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System on Food and Agriculture (GIEWS) was strengthened with the installation at FAO headquarters of one of the world's most advanced environmental monitoring systems. The system, ARTEMIS (Africa Real-Time Environmental Monitoring using Imaging Satellites), processed data from orbiting and stationary satellites to provide continuous monitoring of rainfall and vegetation conditions across Africa, the Near East and South-West Asia. The addition of ARTEMIS along with agrometeorological data from FAO's Agriculture Department had improved the capacity of GIEWS to monitor crop conditions and evaluate food supplies. GIEWS supervised 21 projects to set up subregional or national early warning systems.

A computer-based Geographic Information System (GIS) played an increasingly important role in land and water development. The system allowed the combination of geographical information (for example, on soils, climate, geology and population) and "attribute data", such as statistics. The results, in graphic, map and table form, helped planners to assess resources and trends. FAO included vegetation maps of Africa, as well as South and South-East Asia, into the system's data base and began digitizing a new 1:1 million scale soil base map for East Africa's Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development. GIS also helped to plan irrigation systems in Cyprus and five Latin American countries and to analyse land-use potential in the Philippines.

FAO's Food and Nutrition Division completed a manual for planners and nutritionists on calculating human energy requirements. Publication of the manual and an accompanying microcomputer program was planned for 1989. Each of FAO's technical divisions produced dozens of position papers, training manuals and studies. The Information Division produced a wide variety of media materials, among them film strips, booklets and video and computer programs.

Secretariat

At the end of 1988, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 3,411, of whom 1,255 were in the Professional and higher categories. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 2,892: 1,256 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,636 in the General Service category. In addition, 379 associate experts worked for FAO, of whom 67 were at headquarters and 312 in the field or regional and country offices. (For officers of FAO, see Annex III.)

The regular programme budget was financed by FAO's 158 member countries according to a scale of contributions set by the FAO Conference. For 1988-1989, funding for the FAO programme of work and budget was set at $492 million.

NOTE: For details of FAO activities, see FAO in 1988, issued by FAO.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational,
Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in 1988 continued to promote co-operation among nations through education, natural and social sciences, culture and communication.

During the year, UNESCO membership remained unchanged at 158, plus three associate members (see Annex I).

Education

In 1988, UNESCO's major educational programmes focused on education for all, the formulation and application of education policies, and education, training and society.

Under education for all, the fight against illiteracy and the renewal and expansion of primary education received high priority. In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution^a proclaiming 1990 as International Literacy Year (ILY), UNESCO acted as lead organization for the Year, establishing a special ILY secretariat and an intersectoral task force. Each principal UNESCO regional office—Amman, Jordan; Bangkok, Thailand; Dakar, Senegal; Santiago, Chile—had created a task force for ILY and for activities related to the implementation of a 10-year plan of action to be launched in 1990 for the eradication of illiteracy by the year 2000. In response to an appeal of the UNESCO Director-General, more than 40 States established national committees or other structures to plan and carry out programmes for the Year.

UNESCO co-operated with other United Nations agencies in the area of education. It participated in the preparation of the World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 1990), organized jointly with the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), and made efforts to improve concerted planning and co-ordination with those and other agencies implementing projects in member States.

In 1988, the regional programme of publications in African languages was launched. The programme aimed at translating creative works from the original language into other languages of the same subregion.

Action to promote the democratization of education focused on a study in Asia and the Pacific, which analysed the obstacles to completing primary education.

Adult education focused on training adult educators and the use of new information technologies in literacy training and adult education. A regional expert meeting on the role of adult education in agriculture for imparting new scientific knowledge to farmers was organized (Morocco, December). Two pilot experimental projects were established, one in the German Democratic Republic and the other in Nepal, to promote occupationally oriented non-formal adult education programmes. The quarterly publication, Adult Education—Information Notes, was issued in six languages. UNESCO also promoted measures to intensify existing education and training activities for disabled persons, refugees, national liberation movements and migrant workers and their families.

Activities to promote equality of educational opportunity for girls and women focused on identifying obstacles to educational equality between men and women, promoting general access to education for girls and women, and enhancing their equal access to scientific studies and to all levels of technical and vocational training.

Development of education in rural areas included studies, workshops, seminars and pilot projects. Under the programme on the formulation and application of education policies, the fourth Conference of Ministers of Education of Member States of the Europe Region (Paris, 21-27 September) addressed the prospects and tasks of educational development in Europe, specifically in relation to the humanistic, cultural and international dimension of education and the impact of new information and communication technologies in education.

The programme on education, training and society aimed at improving the teaching of science and technology, enhancing interaction between secondary systems and productive work, promoting physical education and sport, and integrating training and research activities.

Natural sciences

UNESCO promoted international co-operation in science and technology for development. It organized training and research courses and workshops and seminars for specialists, many from developing countries, on various mathematical topics, physics, chemistry, biology, biotechnology and informatics. In the engineering sciences, UNESCO developed training materials and held training seminars and post-graduate training courses. Steps were taken to create the first UNESCO masters degree course in energy engineering. Studies in engineering education included "Structures of technological education and contributing social factors" and "Women in engineering education".

Short-term training courses were organized with research institutions to strengthen theoretical and practical teaching of informatics in higher education and raise the skills of about 200 specialists from developing countries through grants, fellowships and study tours.

The International Geological Correlation Programme (IGCP), with 87 established national committees, continued to stimulate international collaboration in the earth sciences. It had undertaken 120 scientific research projects, 52 of them ongoing. Twelve new projects were started, among them coastal evolution in the Quaternary, the most recent geological period. During the year, IGCP initiated regional projects such as geology for development in Africa and Quaternary geology and human survival in South-East Asia. Activities concerning natural hazards included development of scientific and technical knowledge to assess better and predict such events. UNESCO participated in the preparatory work for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-1999).

Under the Man and the Biosphere programme (MAB), pilot projects focused on arid zone ecology in Kenya, Lesotho and Tunisia, pastoral management training in the Sahel and a new mountain development project in the Sierra del Rosario (Cuba). Efforts continued to expand the international network of biosphere reserves set up to promote integrated conservation, experimentation, research on and comparison of the structure, functioning and dynamics of ecosystems, and training; in 1988, there were 273 sites for biosphere reserves in 70 countries. During the year, the MAB book series was launched.

The International Hydrological Programme continued its third phase (1984-1989). Post-graduate courses in hydrology and water resources were sponsored, mainly for participants from developing countries, and several seminars, training courses and workshops took place. UNESCO co-operated with the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and Italy to organize a course on the application of remote sensing to water resources development. Several symposia and workshops were held dealing with urban hydrological problems and the question of sensitizing politicians, decision makers and planners. Regional activities included the preparation of the hydrogeological and water-balance maps of South and Central America, Mexico and the Caribbean.

The Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) continued efforts to encourage international co-operation in oceanic research; develop, recommend and co-ordinate international programmes for scientific investigation; and strengthen education, training and assistance in marine science and technology. To help understand and forecast climatic changes, including those of a potentially catastrophic nature, IOC co-operated with the International Council of Scientific Unions and the World Meteorological Organization in implementing the world climate research programme, stepping up its ship-of-opportunity programme and the deployment of drifting buoys for oceanographic and meteorological purposes. About 20 new stations were added to the IOC global sea-level observing system. An international conference (Paris, November) laid the grounds for the new world ocean circulation experiment. The Commission continued its study of environmental factors affecting fish-stock abundance, red tides and associated mass mortality of marine organisms, as well as sedimentary environments, sea-level changes, tectonics and resources.

UNESCO supported research programmes, the development of marine scientific manpower and local research infrastructures, particularly in the developing countries. The major coastal marine project, research and training leading to the integrated management of coastal marine systems, was further developed; in Africa, a new research network of scientists was set up. Training in the marine sciences included fellowships, travel grants, workshops and short training courses. A workshop on training and education in marine science for the year 2000 (Paris, 6-10 June) offered an international forum for those responsible for marine science teaching.

One of the ongoing projects under UNESCO's programme on human settlements concerned the rehabilitation of the Barrio Rio Salado in La Romana, Dominican Republic. Operational from the summer of 1988, the project associated local populations in decision-making concerning their communities. Among the expected results were the establishment of a school and a clinic, bringing the inhabitants primary education and medical care.

In the area of environmental education and information, UNESCO organized and supported meetings for educational decision makers, planners, administrators, curriculum developers and teacher educators on issues such as: teacher education in environmental education; developing national strategies and action plans in environmental education; integrating environmental education into university general education; the use of findings of environmental research in environmental education; networking of environmental education institutions; environment ethics; and the interrelationships between education, the environment and development. Training courses were held, studies and pilot projects were conducted and educational materials were produced.

Social sciences

An international meeting of experts on trends in an evaluation of peace and conflict research in the social and human sciences (Lima, Peru, 21-25 November) concluded that peace research should further examine the causes and consequences of North-South disparities and the issues relating to the emergence of regional conflicts and new trouble spots.

UNESCO co-operated with the Austrian National Commission to hold a conference (Burg Schlaiwing, Austria) on establishing a European university centre for peace studies. It also co-operated with the University of Burundi in organizing a regional post-graduate training seminar in international law (Bujumbura). The seminar was attended by some 60 teachers, civil servants, ministerial and legal advisers and doctoral students.

UNESCO trained teachers and members of all those professions necessitating a particular sensitivity to human rights and prepared relevant teaching materials. An international training seminar on the handling of documentation in the field of human rights (Tokyo, 21-24 November) was held, as was a meeting of experts on action in the field of education and information concerning children in situations of armed conflict (San José, Costa Rica, 3-7 May). The biannual bulletin, Human Rights Teaching, was published in English and French. The 1988 UNESCO Prize for Peace Education was awarded to Brother Roger, who founded the ecumenical community of Taizé, France, where thousands of young people are sensitized to human rights, peace and the sharing of cultures.

The UNESCO associated schools project promoted education on international co-operation at the national, regional and international levels. In 1988, the project included some 2,246 institutions in 97 countries.

Studies and research were conducted on prejudice, intolerance and racism. Emphasis was placed on strengthening action against prejudice, intolerance, racism and discrimination through teacher training, guidelines for teachers and supporting studies on discriminatory stereotypes in school textbooks and children's books. A meeting of experts was held (Manila, Philippines, 21-25 November) to assess the effects of cultural exchange and exchange of teachers on prejudice and attitude towards race, religion and ethnicity. Activities concerning the struggle against apartheid included a study on the impact of the state of emergency in South Africa on news-gathering and dissemination and the awarding of post-graduate scholarships for study on women's education in a post-apartheid South Africa.

UNESCO also addressed the concerns and aspirations of young people. It organized a consultation of youth non-governmental organizations (NGOs) (Paris, October) on the participation of young people in the World Decade for Cultural Development (see below).

The status of women programme included a regional seminar (Rabat, Morocco) for women journalists specializing in international relations and case-studies on a wide variety of subjects relating to women. A book entitled Pacific Women: Role and Status of Women in Pacific Societies was published. Under a programme of co-operation between UNESCO and UNICEF, a study on women's education in Africa was issued.

Culture

On 21 January, the United Nations Secretary-General and the UNESCO Director-General launched the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997). The United Nations had entrusted UNESCO to be the lead agency to implement the Plan of Action for the Decade, to follow it up and co-ordinate activities. A meeting of experts concerning the strategy for the implementation of the Decade (Paris, 23 and 24 March) was held. In the context of the Decade, some 25 youth NGOs participated in a meeting organized by UNESCO to prepare projects to encourage active participation by young people in cultural life. A newsletter for the Decade, Culture + was published.

The implementation of international campaigns for safeguarding cultural heritage continued in the context of the Decade. Two new campaigns were launched to safeguard the principal monuments and sites of Ethiopia and the Jesuit Missions of the Guaranis in Argentina, Brazil and Paraguay. Activities were carried out in regard to the other 21 campaigns.

The World Heritage Committee, established under the 1972 Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, held its twelfth session (Paris, 14-17 June). It inscribed 27 additional sites on the World Heritage List, bringing to 315 the number of cultural and natural properties protected by the Convention, to which 108 States were parties in 1988.

UNESCO contributed to preserving cultural identities and making known the world's diverse culture through the publication of the second volume of the General History of Africa in Italian, the third volume in English and the fourth volume in Portuguese. Translations of literary works written in less widely spoken languages were published in the “UNESCO Collection of Representative Works”, which in 1988 comprised more than 900 titles. During the year, two new series were launched, the UNESCO Library of World Poetry and Art Albums. The Index Translationum, a bibliography on the translations of works published each year in UNESCO member States, had 36 volumes. A programme was launched to improve the mutual knowledge of peoples through the collection and dissemination of oral traditions, dances, music and rites around the central theme “The stages of life”. The journal Museum was published in Arabic, English, French, Russian and Spanish.

UNESCO launched a five-year project to study the significance of the three Silk Roads—those of the steppes and the oases and the sea routes—linking Chang'an, the capital of China under the T'ang dynasty, with Rome and later Venice. The Roads made possible the exchange of many commodities, cultural values and philosophical and religious ideas.

Activities to promote the arts continued, with the organization of an international symposium on the dynamic role of Latin American and Caribbean literatures in world literature (Brasília, Brazil, 18-21 April), a symposium on dance in Africa (Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, 9-15 October) and a symposium on the status of the artist (Madrid, Spain, 7-10 November).

Communications

UNESCO focused on the socio-cultural impact of new communication technologies, the free flow and wider and better balanced dissemination of information and the development of communications.

Collaborative studies were produced by a network of institutions on socio-cultural, economic and legal aspects of new communication technologies.

Concerning the free flow of information, UNESCO published The Watchdog Role of the Press, a collection of case-studies drawn from all parts of the world. UNESCO assisted professional media organizations to enable journalists and producers to discuss common concerns and encouraged the creation of data banks and programme exchange mechanisms.

As to women in the media, UNESCO organized a seminar (Beijing, China, May) which brought together 20 senior media women from Asia to consider the role and problems of women in that profession.

The 35-member Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) (ninth session, Paris, 2-8 February) met to evaluate a range of projects from governmental and non-governmental sources. Since its creation in 1980, IPDC had funded 370 projects in 85 countries and had secured funds of nearly $16 million for its Special Account, and just over $16 million had gone to projects under the funds-in-trust programme. The total budget allocated for 1988 was $2.5 million, with $1.95 million allocated to projects. In 1988, there were 50 communication projects (13 in Africa, 6 in Arab States, 14 in Asia and the Pacific, 17 in Latin America and the Caribbean).

General Information Programme

Activities under the General Information Programme were aimed at helping UNESCO member States build scientific information systems, documentation centres, libraries and archives, and promote the flow of specialized information. The Programme assisted member States, particularly developing countries, in the use of the most modern information-handling techniques. China, India and Morocco were helped to set up on-line information services providing access to international data bases in science and technology through special long-distance telecommunication facilities. Similarly, many developing countries received advice and assistance to build their own data bases.

The Programme was involved in the revival of the Alexandria Library of the Ptolemies (Egypt) and responded to the need for aid to the collections of the Library of the Academy of Sciences (Leningrad, USSR) damaged by fire in February.

Action for development

Activities under the programme on principles, methods and strategies of action for development focused on the study and planning of development, identifying priority projects for development and implementing action for development.

UNESCO supported two seminars (Conakry, Guinea; Quito, Ecuador), which provided 42 development leaders and workers with training in ways to boost public participation in the execution of development projects.

The mobilization of youth for development was highlighted through a number of meetings. Some 27 representatives of governmental and non-governmental organizations (Taomasina, Madagascar, August) met to promote the exchange of information on youth activities. UNESCO lent technical support for training 35 youth officials in the design and execution of educational and social schemes (Madagascar, April). An information day for young people on the problems of drug abuse was organized (Reims, France) in co-operation with a youth NGO and was attended by over 300 participants.

In 1988, UNESCO published Goals of Development.

Technical assistance

Participation Programme

Allocations approved by the Director-General for 1988-1989 under the UNESCO Participation Programme, through which member States and organizations participate in technical assistance activities, amounted to $10,037,400.

Extrabudgetary programmes

Amounts obligated in 1988 in respect of projects for which UNESCO served as executing agency, financed by UNDP, the United Nations Population Fund and other extrabudgetary sources totalled $63.4 million.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments was 2,936, of whom 1,131 were in the Professional or higher categories drawn from 128 nationalities and 1,805 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The 1987 session of the UNESCO General Conference approved a budget of $350,386,000 for 1988-1989. The level of the Working Capital Fund was fixed at $15,000,000 and the total assessment of member States (after deducting miscellaneous income) at $335,875,360.

NOTE: For details of UNESCO activities in 1988, see Report of the Director-General, 1988-1989.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The World Health Assembly, the governing body of the World Health Organization (WHO), at its forty-first annual session (Geneva, 2-13 May 1988), approved a revised budget of $609 million for the 1988-1989 biennium. The Assembly endorsed the Director-General's proposals concerning the main approaches of WHO's work with its member States, namely, strengthening the basic infrastructure of health systems based on primary health care; improving management, information support and research capabilities; ensuring the development and transfer of appropriate technology to countries; developing and reorienting human resources in line with new strategies; and mobilizing and making the best use of all possible financial and material resources for sustainable development. The Assembly endorsed the London Declaration on AIDS (acquired immunodeficiency syndrome) Prevention, adopted by the World Summit of Ministers of Health on Programmes for AIDS Prevention (London, 26-28 January 1988) (see below and PART THREE, Chapter XI), and adopted a resolution on avoidance of discrimination in relation to people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and people with AIDS.

The Assembly called for the eradication of poliomyelitis by the year 2000 and stressed the importance of greater involvement of all people, as well as mobilizing all potential resources, if the goal of health for all by the year 2000 was to be achieved.

The Assembly appointed a new WHO Director-General, Dr. Hiroshi Nakajima (Japan), who assumed office in July.

WHO celebrated its fortieth anniversary, as well as the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Alma-Ata (USSR, 1978)^{*} and of the global eradication of smallpox.

In 1988, the membership of WHO remained at 166, with one associate member (see Annex I).

Strategy for health for all

The 1988 World Health Assembly adopted a five-point "declaration of personal commitment" to health for all.

In November, a new Office of International Cooperation was created with the aim of achieving better integration and co-ordination of WHO's programmes in countries and at all levels of WHO.

In the African region, several countries requested reviews of their national health plans to strengthen the positions of the national authorities vis-à-vis donors interested in supporting health measures. In the Americas, technical support was given to Guatemala for health systems management, outreach activities and health care financing. In South-East Asia and the western Pacific, major studies of country health resources were undertaken. In the eastern Mediterranean region, several country missions were planned.

Health system infrastructure

Health system development and research

The Health Systems Research Advisory Group (Gaborone, Botswana, June) reviewed research activities and discussed the establishment of focal points in ministries of health, research consultancies and training, and institution-strengthening. Members of the Group and WHO consultants cooperated in situation analyses and in formulating national plans for action, with support given to Botswana, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritius and Senegal.

Workshops for health systems research training were organized in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico. A meeting on health systems research in local health systems (Washington, D.C., September) developed a plan of action, including research information networks. In Europe, a health systems research workshop was organized for French-speaking participants (France, June). In order to strengthen health systems research in Africa, consultative meetings for policy makers and research workers were organized in Mauritius, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. With support from the Danish International Development Agency, a long-term interregional health systems research training programme was developed and an inter-regional workshop was held (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, August), bringing together senior managers responsible for health research from 17 countries.

Primary health care systems

Twenty-two senior international health experts gathered (Riga, USSR, March) to review developments since the International Conference on Primary Health Care (Alma-Ata, 1978) and to assess the prospects of achieving the goal of health for all by the year 2000. The experts found that the least developed countries had made very limited progress and had been more seriously affected by the economic crisis of the 1980s than other countries; health problems were increasingly acute in very poor urban areas; and major weaknesses in the organization and management of health services persisted—particularly at the district level—resulting in waste or misuse of meagre resources.

The second African regional meeting on health development (Brazzaville, Congo, February) served as an important step towards clarifying the regional strategy for accelerating the achievement of health for all, setting priorities and defining roles. In South-East Asia, a regional conference on health and development was preceded and followed by country consultations.

Health manpower

A joint meeting with the King's Fund Centre for Health Services Development (London, December) discussed the preparation of nurse practitioners as a cost-effective way to improve the quantity and quality of health services for communities. A European Conference on Nursing (Vienna, June) addressed the need to make the 3.5 million nurses in Europe aware of the concept of health for all and the primary health care approach. It recommended action to reorient nursing training and service to the changing health needs of the region.

A World Conference on Medical Education (Edinburgh, United Kingdom, August), jointly organized by WHO and the World Federation for Medical Education, was attended by 150 experts and culminated in the Edinburgh Declaration calling for changes in medical education to make it more socially relevant.

A WHO consultation (Geneva, March) agreed to resume the collection of data on numbers and categories of health personnel. Priority was to be given to co-operation with countries to develop such statistics, aimed at improving the relevance of health personnel policy and management decisions.

Public information and education for health

In addition to the observance of World Health Day on 7 April 1988, which was celebrated under the theme "Health for all—all for health", the World Health Assembly decided to extend the impact of health information by marking annually a world-wide No-Tobacco Day on 31 May and a World AIDS Day on 1 December. A new WHO Division of Health Education and Health Promotion was established to reflect a stronger commitment to the development policy in the area. Among other activities, the Division collaborated with the health promotion unit of the Global Programme on AIDS, supporting national information and education activities. A second international conference on health promotion took place (Adelaide, Australia, April), focusing on the theme "healthy public policy".

The role of young people in health promotion continued to be emphasized. Intercountry workshops on involvement of young people in promotional aspects of health development were organized (Mali, October), where recommendations were elaborated for the attention of ministries and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), especially youth organizations.

In all WHO regions, school health education was emphasized and training programmes in health education were strengthened.

Environmental health

Five external experts (Geneva, April) concerned with development and environment reviewed the major environmental health challenges and provided WHO with guidance for reappraising its activities and adjusting them to changing needs. Representatives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Bank and WHO met with Congolese authorities (March) to set priorities for action in water supply and sanitation, define needs for joint activities, review the strategy in that area and provide advice to the Government. A meeting on the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), organized by Portugal with the support of WHO, UNDP and the Agency for Technical Co-operation (Federal Republic of Germany), was held (Lisbon, Portugal, April) for Portuguese-speaking African countries, to discuss their progress and needs.

Since the mid-1970s, WHO, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), had been operating global networks for monitoring air and water quality and food contamination and collecting information on environmental conditions and human exposure levels in different parts of the world. In 1988, that information, supplemented with other data, was compiled and analysed and an assessment made of global and regional levels and trends. The results showed that, while general pollution was decreasing or unchanged in most industrialized countries, it was increasing in most of the developing world.

In April, UNEP, the International Labour Organisation and WHO renewed for six years their Memorandum of Understanding relating to co-operation in the International Programme on Chemical Safety. A meeting of directors of 32 institutions participating in the Programme (North Carolina, United States, September) reviewed the contributions of the participating institutions to the achievements of the Programme over the previous five years and defined the activities that would be carried out during the next few years.

A WHO consultation (Geneva, April) on health surveillance and management procedures for food-handling personnel concluded that contamination of food by human "carriers" might have been greatly exaggerated and recommended that current procedures be discontinued and replaced by such measures as education and training of food personnel in personal hygiene, safe food-handling practices and food-borne disease surveillance. As regards pesticide residues in food, WHO, in collaboration with UNEP and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), issued guidelines for predicting dietary intake.

Also in collaboration with FAO, WHO published Food Irradiation: A Technique for Preserving and Improving the Safety of Food. With FAO, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, WHO convened an international conference on the acceptance of trade in and control of irradiated food (Geneva, December). The conference reached an agreement in principle on the acceptance of irradiated food in trade under strict control provisions by competent national authorities.

Health promotion and care

Malnutrition in South-East Asia was tackled by a combination of strategies, including development of national nutritional policies, nutrition improvement through primary health care, improved capability for nutrition surveillance, national control programmes, information exchange and nutrition research. Vitamin-A and iodine deficiency were vigorously tackled in all WHO member countries of the region.

The partnership between WHO and the International Dental Federation became effective and their collaborative activities intensified. Many countries were involved in the international collaborative oral health development programme; joint working groups continued to deal with a variety of technical areas, such as alternative systems of delivery of periodontal care, economic factors in oral health, oral health in adolescents and oral manifestations of HIV infection.

The WHO regional office for the eastern Mediterranean held a consultation on accident prevention at which representatives of health departments and other departments established the basis for promoting consistent policies and programmes.

The WHO regional office for the western Pacific collaborated with member States to improve emergency services. In China, where road traffic injuries were a heavy burden on medical care services, a detailed study of such accidents and of emergency services was undertaken and a national workshop was convened in Shenyang. The first WHO Collaborating Centre for Prevention and Control of Road Traffic Accidents in the region was designated at the Road Accident Research Unit of the University of Adelaide.

Health of specific population groups

WHO increased its technical and managerial support to national maternal and child health, including family planning (MCH/FP), programmes in more than 90 developing countries, in close collaboration with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). At the global level, support focused on the development of technology; training and research related to maternal health, newborn and child health, family planning; adolescent health; and management, evaluation and information for such programmes. In view of the need to improve the quality of MCH/FP care, specific activities were undertaken to devise locally appropriate methods for its rapid evaluation.

A WHO consultation on maternal infections and infections of the newborn (Geneva, November/December) reviewed data on perinatal infections, including tetanus, hepatitis B, group B beta-streptococcal infections, syphilis, gonorrhoea and chlamydial infections, and developed approaches for identifying, preventing and managing them in primary health care at the first referral level. The World Health Assembly approved the co-sponsorship of the Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction by UNDP, UNFPA and the World Bank.

An international conference on ethics and human values in family planning was held in collaboration with the Council for International Organizations of Medical Sciences (Bangkok, Thailand, June); over 100 participants from different professions discussed the rights and responsibilities of individuals, social entities and Governments in decisions affecting human reproduction.

A scientific committee of the International Commission on Occupational Health held an international workshop (Stockholm, Sweden, October) on occupational exposure of agricultural workers to organic dusts.

As to the health of the elderly, a meeting (Brazzaville, Congo, January) for co-ordinated action by WHO and NGOs concluded that policies relating to social security generally covered only a small proportion of population in Africa and excluded most of the elderly; the meeting called for promotion of care and related studies.

Protection and promotion of mental health

A series of instruments for assessing mental disorders was produced and tested in centres worldwide. The first was intended for use in epidemiological surveys of the general population, the second for the assessment of mental states by clinicians and research workers and the third for cross-culturally comparable assessment of personality disorders. The instruments were being tested in 54 centres in 33 countries, using 16 different languages. In addition, WHO continued its work on the enhancement of training of health professionals in mental health. A curriculum guide for nursing schools was developed and tested. A set of teaching materials for medical undergraduates concerning psychiatric problems found in general medical care was also developed. WHO prepared an annotated listing of mental health manuals to assist those developing training materials, especially for general health workers. Three posters on epilepsy, alcohol policies and sensory deficit—were widely distributed.

Support for the needs of the chronically mentally ill continued. Two meetings convened by WHO were attended by participants from 24 countries in five WHO regions. While the first meeting was concerned with a broad range of issues, the second focused on mechanisms to ensure greater involvement of users in the planning and management of services.

A working group of experts from all WHO regions produced a consensus statement on health policies to combat drug and alcohol abuse (Canberra, Australia, March). With the financial support of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC), training material was prepared to assist community health workers dealing with drug and alcohol abuse.

Diagnostic, therapeutic and rehabilitative technology

In pursuance of the Global Blood Safety Initiative, launched in 1988 by WHO in co-operation with other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, WHO compiled a data base on blood transfusion services, prepared proposals for the development of integrated transfusion services and organized workshops on safe blood and blood products in the African, South-East Asian, eastern Mediterranean and western Pacific regions.

An international consultation on the conservation of medicinal plants (Chiang-Mai, Thailand, March), convened in association with the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources and the World Wildlife Fund, adopted the Chiang-Mai Declaration calling for the establishment of programmes to conserve medicinal plants, which provided traditional and modern drugs.

Concerning essential drugs and vaccines, WHO provided technical co-operation to some 40 countries with operational national programmes. A small number of the more populous countries (Indonesia, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Viet Nam and several Andean States) took decisive steps to reformulate their national drug policies, including strategies for increased self-reliance in domestic production. Guidelines for Developing National Drug Policies and Ethical Criteria for Medicinal Drug Promotion were published during the year, as were The Use of Essential Drugs and The International Pharmacopoeia (vol. 3 of the third edition).

As to rehabilitation, WHO began implementing a new programme for services related to the delivery of orthopaedic appliances in developing countries. The basic idea was the creation of an "orthopaedic workshop without machines".

A new programme on deafness set up collaborating centres to mobilize the resources needed to develop its activities, among which were studies of community ear health, courses for district doctors in essential ear care, and the development of a low-cost hearing aid for children with moderate to severe impairment.

Disease prevention and control

AIDS

The World Summit of Ministers of Health on Programmes for AIDS Prevention (London, 26-28 January), organized jointly by WHO and the United Kingdom and attended by 114 ministers of health and delegates from 148 countries, adopted the London Declaration on AIDS Prevention, which emphasized the importance of information and education in national AIDS programmes and the need for urgent action to implement WHO's global AIDS strategy. The annual International Conference on AIDS, the major forum of information exchange, was held (Stockholm, June).

The Second African Regional Conference on AIDS was held (Kinshasa, Zaire, October), and provincial AIDS committees were being developed to help decentralize prevention and control. WHO and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) worked on including HIV and AIDS prevention in school curricula in East, West and Central Africa. Three centres for AIDS information collection and exchange were established in Cameroon, Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania. The Second Pan American Teleconference on AIDS (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, December) was broadcast to over 41,000 health care workers throughout the Americas.

Cancer

In 1988, the mortality rate of cancer in the developing world reached 8 per cent, the same as that of the industrialized world.

National programmes to combat tobacco consumption were put into effect in several member States, since the effectiveness of anti-smoking campaigns was evidenced by experience in Finland and the United Kingdom, where lung cancer mortality rates among males had fallen by 17 per cent over the preceding 10 years.

WHO collaborated in a field intervention trial with hepatitis B vaccine for the prevention of hepatitis B and liver cancer in China, where both diseases were prevalent. More than 23,000 newborns in the Qidong area were vaccinated as part of the joint study of WHO with the Chinese Academy of Medical Sciences and the British Imperial Cancer Research Fund.

Guidelines were established for early detection of cervical cancer and WHO emphasized the importance of appropriate coverage of high-risk groups.

WHO collaborating centres were designated for palliative cancer care (Oxford, United Kingdom), for comprehensive cancer control (Reykjavik, Iceland), for cancer control and lymphoma research (Kuwait) and for quality of life in cancer care (Winnipeg, Canada).

Cardiovascular diseases

The WHO cardiovascular diseases programme emphasized prevention. A report of the Expert Committee on Prevention in Childhood and Youth of Adult Cardiovascular Diseases, presented at Geneva in October, called for each member State to make cardiovascular disease prevention part of their national health programmes and to include it in school education. A meeting on development of methodology for prevention and control of hypertension in developing countries (Geneva, June) drew attention to the high prevalence of hypertension and stroke in those countries and emphasized that action was urgently needed to prevent an epidemic of coronary heart disease by the end of the century. A campaign was launched at the time of the meeting to draw attention to that growing problem, under the theme "Heart attacks are developing in developing countries-prevent them now".

Several countries adopted national plans to prevent coronary heart disease which was increasing in the developing world, while mortality from it was declining in the industrialized world. The WHO collaborating centre in Prague, Czechoslovakia, began publishing a newsletter to exchange information on progress and disseminate recommendations on prevention.

In October, the fifth meeting of principal investigators of the WHO/MONICA (multinational monitoring of trends and determinants in cardiovascular diseases) project was held (Augsburg, Federal Republic of Germany, October) to review progress and plan future activities.

Diarrhoeal diseases

In 1988, it was considered that 99 per cent of the developing world population lived in countries having a well-planned diarrhoeal diseases control programme carried out as a major component of primary health care. The number of packets of oral rehydration salts produced world-wide stayed relatively stable at 350 million litre equivalents, some 75 per cent of which were produced by developing countries.

A set of teaching materials on diarrhoeal diseases control to be used at training units was completed and distributed, and a package of materials designed to strengthen the teaching of diarrhoeal diseases control in medical and paramedical schools was successfully field-tested. The Third International Conference on Oral Rehydration Therapy (Washington, DC., December), stressing the theme of sustainability of national programmes, was attended by over 300 participants from 51 developing countries. Two scientific meetings were held to review knowledge and propose priorities for research, one on improved infant-feeding practices to prevent diarrhoea and the other on the development of vaccines for cholera and enterotoxigenic Escherichia coli diarrhoea. Progress was made in developing a rotavirus vaccine containing rhesus-human reassortant viruses for each of the four main human serotypes.

Immunization

Immunization services were reaching some 60 per cent of children in the developing world with a third dose of poliovirus and/or combined diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus vaccines. Immunization in developing countries each year prevented paralysis from poliomyelitis in almost 250,000 children, and nearly 2 million deaths from measles, neonatal tetanus and pertussis.

In May, the World Health Assembly called for the eradication of poliomyelitis by the year 2000. The Plan of Action for the Global Eradication of Poliomyelitis by the Year 2000 emphasized poliovirus vaccine and all other antigens in national immunization programmes to cover at least 80 per cent of infants by their first birthday and through the age group of 1-4 years, the necessary services being provided in each district; improving disease surveillance; strengthening laboratory capabilities; creating and maintaining public awareness; providing information and education, especially for parents; improving poliomyelitis rehabilitation services; and promoting research for better eradication strategies, including the development of improved poliovirus vaccines or vaccine combinations.

The WHO Regional Committee for Africa called for the elimination of neonatal tetanus from the region by 1995. The goal of eliminating poliomyelitis from the Americas was expected to be completed by the end of 1990. In the western Pacific, overall progress was achieved and China achieved a target of 85 per cent immunization coverage at the provincial level.

Leprosy

Leprosy control strategy continued to be based on secondary prevention through treatment of patients with multidrug therapy. The WHO-recommended regimens were reported to be feasible in a variety of countries and in different control programmes. According to government data, 32.7 per cent of the total number of registered cases were undergoing multidrug therapy. The result was that, for the first time, the number of registered leprosy cases decreased by over 7 per cent. The Thirteenth International Leprosy Congress (the Hague, Netherlands, September), co-sponsored by WHO, stressed the need for continued co-ordination and initiated plans for accelerated coverage by multidrug therapy. A revised edition of A Guide to Leprosy Control was published.

In South-East Asia, WHO extended technical support and guidance to nine member countries, having an estimated 5.3 million cases, or more than 45 per cent of the world total.

In September, the WHO Regional Committee for Africa requested its member States to review their leprosy control programmes and to replace sulfone monotherapy with WHO-recommended multidrug regimens.

At a consultation on leprosy control within urban primary health care (Alexandria, Egypt, November), leprosy control experts discussed methods and strategies which were expected to facilitate the organization of leprosy control in urban areas.

Malaria

According to the latest data, there were about 100 million clinical malaria cases in the world each year, and the prevalence of infection was estimated to be some 260 million parasite carriers, of whom 85 per cent were accounted for by Africa alone.

WHO provided technical co-operation to Governments, especially in those countries reporting major epidemics during the year, to control and possibly prevent future outbreaks.

WHO continued to expand its support to training programmes aimed at establishing and strengthening national "core" expertise for malaria control. A new international malaria course was organized in the United Republic of Tanzania and the USSR to meet the needs of English-speaking African countries. Inter-country and national workshops were also organized in all regions where malaria posed a major threat. In the Americas, more than 3,000 persons received training in malariology and malaria control. In the western Pacific, a new Malaria Training Research Centre was opened in Solomon Islands with funding from Japan. An informal consultation on malaria parasite resistance (Manila, Philippines), held for countries of the western Pacific and South-East Asia, reviewed different systems for monitoring and managing the problem and explored ways of integrating them into health services.

Epidemiological research related to malaria control was initiated in selected African countries in collaboration with the WHO collaborating centre on the epidemiology and control of malaria at the University of Rome, Italy.

Tuberculosis

In developing countries, about half the adult population was infected with Mycobacterium tuberculosis. In order to evaluate current and alternative measures and strategies for tuberculosis control, a comprehensive intervention study was started in Thailand. It included the assessment of a variety of case-holding and case-finding activities applicable within primary health care activities, of short-course therapeutic and prophylactic regimens, and of new diagnostic techniques.

In the chemotherapy research programme co-ordinated by WHO, some 30 new compounds were tested in vitro for their activity against Mycobacterium tuberculosis and strains of the Mycobacterium avium intercellulare complex.

The transfer of clinical research technology to developing countries was started by strengthening bacteriological laboratories in China and Thailand.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,441 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,446 staff members, drawn from 128 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,995 were in the General Service category. Of the total number of staff, 76 were in posts financed by UNDP, UNEP, UNFPA and UNFPA. (For senior officers of the secretariat, see Annex II.)

Budget

The fortieth (1987) World Health Assembly had approved an effective working budget of $634 million for the biennium 1988-1989, divided into allocations for the WHO work programme as follows: health system infrastructure, 32 per cent; health promotion and care, 18 per cent; disease prevention and control, 14 per cent; programme support, 24 per cent; and direction, co-ordination and management, 12 per cent. In May, in anticipation of potential financial difficulties, the Director-General recommended a reduction in the effective working budget for 1988-1989 of $25 million. The World Health Assembly approved that request, reducing the working budget to $609 million. In addition, the Director-General stated his intention to maintain provisional programme budget implementation reductions of $25 million, but without a corresponding reduction in the level of the effective working budget.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

During the fiscal year 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued to help developing countries to raise their standard of living by channelling financial resources to them from developed countries.

The World Bank furthered the pledges made by its President to reinvigorate its role in assisting the heavily indebted, middle-income countries to grow out of debt and recession; in containing and managing the economic crisis in sub-Saharan Africa and in instituting sustained adjustment programmes to foster the entrepreneurial and productive potential of Africa's economies and peoples; and in supporting governmental strategies to eliminate by the year 2000 the worst aspects of absolute poverty in the populous, poor countries of Asia. The Bank did so by setting record levels of lending totalling $14,762 million ($574 million more than in 1987), both for project investments and for adjustment. Of the total, 43 per cent was committed to the highly indebted, middle-income countries. IDA credits rose by almost $1 billion, to $4,458.7 million, about half of which went to countries of sub-Saharan Africa. Together, the Bank and IDA approved loans and credits amounting to $19,220.7 million, while a second affiliate, the International Finance Corporation, approved gross investments totalling $1,270 million.

The Bank strengthened its catalytic role in addressing the concerns of the heavily indebted countries, significantly increased its lending to adjusting African countries and secured pledges of increased co-financing funds to them, and focused, in highly operational terms, on the formulation of an expanded programme of action to help alleviate poverty in the low-income countries of Asia and elsewhere.

The Bank began to develop country strategies and new instruments, including separate operations, in direct support of private-sector development. It launched a series of private-sector assessments to pinpoint the obstacles to its growth and the barriers that limited its contribution to overall economic development.

The Bank also expanded the scope of its work concerning the environment, focusing on the environmental impact of development projects and identifying projects aimed at environmental problems.

As at 31 December 1988, membership of the World Bank remained unchanged at 151 (see Annex I).

Lending operations

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1988, the World Bank made 118 loans amounting to $14,762 million to 37 countries, bringing the cumulative total of loan commitments since the Bank's inception in 1946 to $155,048.8 million.

Agriculture and rural development

The Bank made 27 loans for agriculture and rural development to 18 countries, amounting to $2,932.1 million. Of the $975.5 million provided to Brazil, $300 million was to implement a strategy to replace most subsidized farm credit with commercial lending at market rates. India received $350 million, of which $200 million was to expand the number of village dairy co-operatives, as well as dairy processing and marketing infrastructure. Mexico was granted a loan of $300 million to support reforms in the areas of consumer food subsidies and their targeting, improvement of producer-pricing policies, privatization of parastatals, and agricultural and agro-industry trade liberalization. Indonesia received $234 million to support government policies in irrigation, calling for increased efforts at efficient operation and maintenance, the introduction of direct cost-recovery mechanisms and rationalization of existing and programmed investments.

Development finance companies

Six countries received $1,490 million to assist development finance companies. Two loans were made to Mexico amounting to $800 million, of which $500 million was to support the Government's strategy of trade liberalization. Turkey received $400 million to support its continuing financial-sector reform during 1988-1989, focusing on improved financial policies, strengthening the commercial banking system and further development of money and capital markets. A loan of $120 million went to Yugoslavia for an export industries project designed to expedite growth of efficient exporting.

Education

The Bank made 10 loans totalling $654.9 million for education projects in nine countries. Of two loans made to Indonesia totalling $253.3 million, $140.3 million was to support selected activities in the Government's higher education programme. Turkey received $115.8 million to strengthen its capacity to plan and co-ordinate technician and technical/vocational teacher-training programmes; the Turkish Ministry of Culture and Tourism was also to be assisted in developing and implementing a national plan for tourism occupations. Mexico received a loan of $80 million to strengthen employment services, assist enterprises to provide in-service training and upgrade training institutions.

Energy

Fifteen energy projects—in oil, gas, coal and power—were assisted in 13 countries at a cost of $2,233.1 million. Of three loans totalling $905 million to India, $350 million went to improve the operational performance of the state electricity board in Uttar Pradesh. The remaining $555 million was to develop an offshore gas field at South Bassein and to support state and national efforts to alleviate power shortages in the southern region. A $300 million loan was extended to Colombia to continue its reform programme in the power sector, designed to improve the efficiency of power generation, transmission and distribution. A loan of $165 million was extended to China to alleviate a power shortage in eastern China, and to make more effective use of coal reserves through the development of large coal-fired thermal power-generating units.

Industry

Nine countries received 12 loans totalling $2,062.7 million for the industrial sector. Mexico received $665 million, of which $400 million financed imports of input materials and steel products to carry out needed restructuring actions. Argentina was granted $400 million to support reforms to the banking sector. India was extended a loan of $360 million to provide technical and financial support to two development finance institutions to help them meet their requirements for long-term resources, strengthen their capacity to appraise projects in a less-regulated environment and cope with portfolio-management problems stemming from the adjustment process.

Non-project

Six non-project loans totalling $1,020 million were extended to six countries. Indonesia received a $300 million adjustment loan to support trade policy reforms, Chile was granted $250 million to support the Government's medium-term adjustment programme and the Philippines received $200 million to support an ongoing reform programme for government corporations.

Population, health and nutrition

One loan of $109 million was made to Brazil to help arrest an increasing prevalence of three major endemic diseases and to develop a programme for the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), including AIDS testing in blood banks and AIDS education.

Small-scale enterprises

The Bank made three loans totalling $493 million to assist small-scale enterprises in three countries. Turkey received $300 million to finance private export-oriented investments and to provide credit to participating commercial banks. Funds amounting to $165 million given to Indonesia were to finance projects that would export at least 40 per cent of production resulting from the investments. Tunisia was granted $28 million to finance eligible small- and medium-sized investment projects through a credit line to three commercial banks and two development banks.

Technical assistance

One loan of $15.2 million was made to the Congo to acquire the technical and administrative capacity to implement public enterprise reforms and to improve public enterprise management.

Most of the Bank's direct funding of technical assistance was for components in support of investment projects. During 1988, technical assistance components of loans and credits for other purposes totalled $1,095.1 million in 175 operations, compared with $1,022.3 million in 186 operations during 1987.

The Bank continued to serve as executing agency for projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). At the end of 1988, the number of projects in progress stood at 154, for a total allocation of $234.8 million, compared with 149, for an allocation of $223.9 million, on 31 December 1987.

Telecommunications

The Bank made one loan to Jordan of $36 million to assist the Government to improve the policy and institutional framework for the efficient long-term development of telecommunications.

Transportation

Twenty-three loans totalling $2,117.2 million were made to 16 countries to develop transport-tation systems. Of live loans totalling $459 million received by China, $200 million supported the Government's objective of increasing railway capacity and improving its operations and efficiency. Nigeria received $250 million to support the Federal Highway Department to define and execute an appropriate and sustainable programme of rehabilitation, upgrading and maintenance. India was lent $390 million to renew and upgrade railway tracks on heavy-density freight routes.

Urban development

In fiscal 1988, 10 loans totalling $1,108.5 million were made to 10 countries for urban development projects. India received $250 million for its only private housing-finance company to support some 30 per cent of the company's programme over three and a half years. Brazil received $175 million for urgent reconstruction and rehabilitation necessitated by floods and landslides in Rio de Janeiro. A loan of $160 million to the Philippines provided support for immediate imports of construction material to initiate subdivision development.

Water supply and sewerage

The Bank made five loans totalling $490.3 million to five countries for water supply and sewerage projects. Turkey received $218 million to acquire sewerage and sewage-treatment facilities to continue a pollution-abatement programme started under a loan made in 1982 for $88.1 million. A $150 million loan was granted to Colombia to implement its water-supply and sewerage-sector reform programme, which included the provision of water-supply services to some 1.9 million people and sewerage services to about 1.3 million people.

Economic Development Institute

New approaches in the training and institution-building activities of the Economic Development Institute (EDI) were introduced. For the first time, EDI organized senior policy seminars on the financial sector and on the social impact of adjustment. With support from Japan, it organized a seminar (Washington, D.C.) for senior officials of developing countries' core ministries and of bilateral aid agencies to explore collaborative approaches in the design and implementation of structural adjustment programmes. EDI launched a new series of annual seminars, including public-sector management seminars for the South Pacific and courses on project analysis and implementation for South-East Asia. It embarked on a major three-year programme, with substantial core funding from UNDP, to strengthen higher-level management-training institutes in sub-Saharan Africa. Responding to the Bank's increased emphasis on women in development, EDI launched a programme of activities to enhance trainers' and policy makers' understanding and awareness of the issue and of the differential effect of alternative policy options on men and women.

Of the 88 courses and seminars held, 20 were senior policy seminars for development policy makers and advisers. EDI organized 41 economic and sector-management seminars for senior officials in economic and sectoral ministries.

Collaboration with other external sources of support for high-level training in developing countries further expanded, and the total volume of co-financing reached about $5 million for the year. The largest increase came from bilateral sources, notably Australia, France, Italy and Japan.

Co-financing

In fiscal 1988, the volume of co-financing continued to increase, reaching $6.6 billion, nearly $1.4 billion over 1987. As in previous years, almost half of all Bank-assisted projects attracted some form of co-financing. The Bank contributed $3,516.3 million for 96 projects, a decline of almost $1,500 million. The largest source of co-financing continued to be official bilateral aid agencies and multilateral development institutions, which together accounted for $3,233 million during the year, some $500 million more than in fiscal 1987.

The third and final year of implementation of the Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa yielded 87 million special drawing rights (SDR) in special facility credits and SDR 182 million in special joint financing. Under a newly established special programme of assistance (SPA) for the debt-distressed, low-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa, about $6.4 billion had been pledged, of which more than half was to be made available by the donor community through co-financing Bank projects during 1988-1990. Approximately $200 million was committed for such co-financing under SPA.

Financing activities

Total borrowings by the Bank in fiscal 1988 amounted to the equivalent of $10,832 million, consisting of $10,537 million of new medium- and long-term borrowings plus $295 million of incremental short-term central bank facility borrowings. The total was made up of $3,545 million in United States dollars, $2,364 million in Japanese yen, $1,167 million in deutsche mark, $1,117 million in Swiss francs, $590 million in pounds sterling, $215 million in Netherlands guilders and $1,833 million in Australian dollars, Austrian schillings, Belgian francs, Canadian dollars, Danish kroner, European currency units, Finnish markkaa, French francs, Italian lire, Kuwaiti dinars, Luxembourg francs and Spanish pesetas. This excluded $4,400 million of refinancings of prepaid borrowings.

Twenty-four currency-swap transactions were completed, aggregating $1,795 million. Of the swaps completed, 52 per cent were into Swiss francs, 20 per cent into deutsche mark, 14 per cent into Japanese yen and 14 per cent into Netherlands guilders.

Capitalization

On 27 April 1988, the Bank's Board of Governors authorized a general capital increase of $74.8 billion, bringing the Bank's total authorized capital to $171.4 billion. As at 30 June 1988, 142 World Bank members, representing 79.1 per cent of shareholder power, had voted to approve the increase.

The Bank's capital stock was expressed in SDR as it was valued in terms of United States dollars immediately before the introduction of the basket method (the value based on a basket of 16 major currencies) of valuing the SDR on 1 July 1974 (SDR 1 = $US 1.20635).

The subscribed capital of the Bank on 30 June 1988 was $91,436 million, an increase of $6,205 million from fiscal 1987.

Income and expenditures

The Bank's gross revenues, generated primarily from loans and investments, increased by $860 million, or 11 per cent, to a total of $8,549 million in fiscal 1988. Net income was $1,004 million, despite a $421.5 million provision for potential losses on loans to eight Bank members that were in arrears on debt service.

Expenses totalled $7,492 million, an increase of 15 per cent over the previous fiscal year. Administrative costs were $476 million, an increase of $41 million over fiscal 1987.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1988, the staff of the World Bank numbered 5,654, of whom 3,596 were in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 116 nationalities. (For principal officers, see Annex II.)

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), established in 1956, furthers economic growth in developing member countries by promoting private sector investment. It is a member of the World Bank Group, which also includes the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Development Association and the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency. However, IFC operates independently, with its own Articles of Agreement, shareholders, management, staff and financial structure. Its share capital is provided by its member countries, which collectively also determine its policies and activities. In addition, it raises most of the funds for its lending activities through bond issues in the international financial markets and from returns on profitable investments.

IFC shares full project risks with its partners, enabling it to play an important role in mobilizing additional project funding from other investors and lenders, either through co-financing or loan syndications, underwritings and guarantees. In addition to project finance and resource mobilization, it provides advisory services and technical assistance to private businesses and Governments in order to create an environment hospitable to private investment.

During the fiscal year ending 30 June 1988, the IFC Board of Directors approved 95 investments totalling $1.3 billion, an increase of 38 per cent over 1987. In connection with those approvals, it was expected that $1.04 billion would be invested for IFC's own account and that $231.3 million would be arranged and underwritten for other investors. Of that total, $1.05 billion was for loans and $221.8 million for equity investments. IFC estimated that the total capital cost of projects it would help to finance was more than $5 billion, meaning that, for every $1 invested by IFC, others would invest more than $4.

Disbursements during fiscal 1988 were $2,288 million in loans and equity and quasi-equity investments. The disbursed loan portfolio grew by 21 per cent to $1,900 million as at 30 June 1988. IFC's net income for the year reached $100.6 million, representing a return on its net worth of 8.6 per cent.

During fiscal 1988, Poland joined IFC, bringing its membership to 133 countries (see Annex I).

Regional projects

IFC approved 95 investments; 93 were located in 40 countries, one was regional and one was worldwide in scope.

Africa

IFC continued to support reform efforts in Africa and to develop new initiatives to stimulate economic growth. It approved investments totalling $134.95 million for 23 business ventures in Africa, including capital markets projects. At the end of fiscal 1988, it had committed investments of $604.4 million in 127 ventures in 34 countries in the region.

The Africa Project Development Facility (APDF), established by IFC, the United Nations Development Programme and the African Development Bank, provided technical assistance to entrepreneurs. By the end of fiscal 1988, APDF had secured financing for 25 projects.

IFC's capital markets projects included the establishment of Côte d'Ivoire's first venture capital company and an additional loan to udc Limited, Zimbabwe's largest hire-purchase and factoring company. As a co-investor, IFC was to help establish udc-Botswana Finance Company, which would specialize in lease financing.

In the mining sector, IFC approved four investments in Western and Central Africa. The largest was a $32 million loan to Compagnie Minière de l'Ogooué in Gabon for an $80.4 million project to improve its infrastructure and to acquire transport equipment for its manganese ore.

For food and agribusiness, Cameroon received $2.3 million to rehabilitate and privatize a banana plantation. Zambia received $8 million for a commercial farming project using modern centre-pivot irrigation techniques.

During the year, IFC worked on the financial restructuring of companies in Nigeria, Senegal and Zambia.

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS) strengthened its programme of assistance to developing countries. It advised and assisted Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, Madagascar, Senegal and Togo on strategies to promote foreign investment, stimulate domestic investment and develop export industries. FIAS began preparing regional reports on issues such as developing techniques to promote foreign investment in priority sectors, overcoming the problem of small markets that limited foreign investment and reconciling the desires of countries for local ownership and management to attract foreign investment.

Asia

IFC approved investments totalling $305.94 million for 29 projects in Asia. At the end of the fiscal year, it had committed investments of $647.9 million in 102 business ventures in 12 countries in the region.

IFC approved an equity investment of $15.55 million in a producer of semi-conductors in the Republic of Korea to support the company's medium-term expansion and diversification plans. It also approved an investment of $24 million in the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company to assist in the installation of a modern digital switching system and expansion into the international financial markets. In India, IFC focused on equity and approved three investments in start-up projects involving the transfer of technology.

In the petrochemical sector, IFC approved a loan of $15 million to the Thai National Petrochemical Company to help finance the construction of an import/export jetty and storage facility.

During the year, FIAS provided additional assistance to Bangladesh, China, Indonesia, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines and Thailand, following the completion of initial projects. At the regional level, FIAS co-operated with the Committee on Industry, Minerals and Energy of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) to harmonize investment incentives among ASEAN member States. In collaboration with the Asian Development Bank, it organized a major conference at Manila, Philippines, on trends and prospects for foreign direct investment in the region.

Europe and the Middle East

IFC approved investments totalling $205.67 million for 16 business ventures in Europe and the Middle East, including capital markets. At the end of the fiscal year, it had committed investments of $682 million in 68 ventures in 11 countries.

IFC identified areas where it believed it could effectively support the economy of Poland. It supported a $66.6 million joint venture in Turkey to manufacture nylon and approved four investments in tourism projects there, totalling $27.49 million, to develop coastal hotels. In Egypt, it participated in the financial restructuring of the Luxor Hotel.

IFC approved the financing of its fourth major joint venture in Hungary, in the amount of $30.87 million. The foreign investor, Montedison of Italy, was to assist in establishing a $78.7 million project to produce 65,000 tons of polystyrene per year.

Latin America and the Caribbean

IFC approved investments of $618.51 million for 26 projects in Latin America and the Caribbean.

At the end of the fiscal year, it had investments of $1.4 billion in 150 ventures in 21 countries.

In Mexico, IFC launched a major initiative to support the private sector through corporate restructuring. It provided a loan of $46 million to one of Mexico's leading cement producers to enable it to repurchase more than $200 million of debt and reduce its total debt to about $70 million. IFC purchased a food and food processing company's entire debt of $69 million in exchange for an IFC loan of $20 million and equity in the company.

IFC syndicated a loan package of $74.76 million to assist a private sector venture in Venezuela to lease a closed-down direct-reduction plant from the Government, re-equip the plant and operate it to convert local iron ore to hot briquettes for export.

In Colombia, it assisted a synthetic-fibre producer to expand its existing facilities with a loan of $40 million, of which $30 million was for its own account, and restructured, with an investment of $1.65 million, the external debts of a coal-mining venture that had experienced difficulties.

IFC approved six investments in Brazil with an aggregate of $193.6 million for its own account. These included an $80 million credit line to three private commercial or investment banks for onlending to companies in need of foreign exchange for the purchase of equipment to expand or modernize their operations. IFC also provided a $40 million loan and $5 million in equity to Brazil's only producer of float glass to help finance construction of a second plant. It approved three investments in the chemical petrochemical sector, making two loans to producers of polypropylene and PVC (polyvinyl chloride) and exercising its equity subscription rights in a producer of fine chemicals. It also approved both loan and equity investments in the expansion of a major producer of textiles.

Financial operations

IFC's net income in fiscal 1988 reached a record high of $100.6 million, nearly double the income of 1987. Its total operating income was $345.6 million, compared with $285.4 million in fiscal 1987.

Capital and retained earnings

During fiscal 1988, member countries paid in capital of $128 million. As at 30 June 1988, total paid-in capital reached $850.2 million and retained earnings came to $438.2 million, bringing IFC's net worth to $1.3 billion.

Secretariat

IFC had 523 staff members drawn from 67 countries, including 50 developing countries (for principal officers, see Annex III).

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA) was established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to provide assistance for the same purposes as the Bank, but primarily to low-income countries. Though legally and financially distinct from the Bank, IDA shares the same staff.

The funds used by IDA, called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans, come mostly from subscriptions in convertible currencies from members, general replenishments from its more industrialized and developed members, and transfers from the Bank's net earnings.

During fiscal year 1988 (1 July 1987-30 June 1988), IDA concentrated on the very poor countries, those with an annual per capita gross national product of less than $835 (in 1986 United States dollars). IDA's 99 approved credits were distributed among 36 countries in fiscal 1988. Credits were made only to Governments and were interest-free, with a service charge to cover administrative costs of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and 0.5 per cent on undisbursed balances. After an initial grace period of 10 years, the credits were repayable in 35 to 40 years.

The bulk of IDA funds for lending is provided by its Part I (industrial) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements. The eighth replenishment of resources, which provided IDA with funds for commitment in fiscal years 1988-1990,^a became effective on 4 March 1988, when IDA received notifications of participation from donors whose aggregate contributions amounted to 80 per cent of the replenishment.

Membership of IDA rose to 137 in 1988 with the admission of Poland (see Annex I).

Lending operations (credits)

At the end of fiscal 1988, IDA cumulative commitments totalled $47,766.4 million. Commitments during the fiscal year amounted to $4,458.7 million, of which $2,203.6 million went to 25 countries in Africa and $1,918 million to eight countries in Asia. India was the largest borrower, with four credits amounting to $717.2 million, followed by China with nine credits ($639.9 million) and Ghana with six ($261.1 million).

Agriculture and rural development

As in previous years, in fiscal 1988 the number of credits for agriculture and rural development accounted for the largest portion of IDA lending; 34 credits totalling $1,561.8 million were committed in 26 countries.

Of live credits totalling $489.9 million to China, $170 million was for a rural credit project to stimulate the growth and diversification of agriculture and increase the operational efficiency of the Agricultural Bank. India received two credits amounting to $360 million, of which $200 million supported the costs and reconstruction/rehabilitation requirements resulting from drought. Pakistan received $79.5 million to increase farm income and agricultural production by improving the reliability and equitability of irrigation-water supplies and reducing crop losses from rain flooding.

The Sudan was granted two credits totalling $104.7 million, of which $85 million was to provide financial and technical support to the Government's economic recovery programme and address efforts in irrigation. A credit of $81.5 million to Bangladesh was expected to increase food production by protecting agricultural land against floods, preventing salt-water intrusion, improving drainage and providing water for irrigation.

Development finance companies

IDA extended five credits amounting to $222.5 million to assist development finance companies. A $100 million credit was extended to Ghana to support a programme to develop a well-functioning and broadly based financial sector through the implementation of in-depth policy and institutional reforms. A credit of $70 million was granted to Bolivia to support reforms aimed at increasing confidence in the banking system and resource mobilization, strengthening the financial condition of banks and reducing the high cost of credit. Senegal received $33 million to support an industrial restructuring programme, by making credit available for fixed investments and working capital in existing and new enterprises.

million to improve the quality and volume of manpower training, continue educational quality and equity and strengthen institutional development in the education sector. A credit of $50 million went to China to address urgent needs for an expanded and improved national lower secondary teacher-training system to meet the mandate for a nine-year universal basic education programme by the year 2000. Burundi received $31.5 million to increase access to basic education and improve the quality of primary and general secondary education.

Energy

In fiscal 1988, five countries received credits amounting to $161.9 million for energy-related projects. A $63 million credit was granted to Burma to help alleviate the growing shortage of petroleum by supporting further development of the Payagon gas field. Sri Lanka received $40.5 million to finance a five-year time-slice of the Ceylon Electricity Board's expenditures to rehabilitate, develop and expand distribution systems. The Niger was extended a $31.5 million credit to assist in promoting fuelwood conservation, substitution of sources for household energy and more effective management of natural forest cover.

Industry

Four countries received credits totalling $161.9 million for industrial projects. A credit of $102 million went to Kenya to provide support to the first phase (1988-1990) of the Government's medium-term adjustment programme for the industrial sector. Ghana received $40 million for a mining-sector rehabilitation project.

Non-project

IDA granted 11 non-project credits amounting to $667 million in fiscal 1988. Madagascar received $125 million to support the country's adjustment programme, designed to promote an early transition to per capita growth with increased social equity. A credit of $90 million was granted to Burundi to assist in its structural adjustment programme, aimed at accelerating economic growth and increasing per capita income and consumption levels. Mozambique received $70 million to support its economic rehabilitation programme.

Population, health and nutrition

Seven credits for population, health and nutrition totalling $195.9 million were granted during fiscal 1988. India received $57 million to support its family welfare strategy to improve coverage and accessibility of services among urban slum populations. A credit of $42.5 million was extended to Uganda to re-establish the provision of health services by rehabilitating a number of strategically located hospitals and health centres. Ethiopia was granted a credit of $33 million to increase the quality, coverage and cost-effectiveness of maternal and child health services.

Small-scale enterprises

Sri Lanka received $20 million to provide credit through the banking system to small- and medium-scale private manufacturers and to contribute to policy reform and institutional strengthening in the areas of tariff administration, export promotion and financial sector operations.

IDA granted eight technical assistance credits amounting to $80.5 million in fiscal 1988. Senegal received $17 million to carry out administrative reforms to strengthen its economic and financial management capacity. A credit of $12.8 million was granted to Chad to enhance its capacity to define and implement its development programme, carry out effective economic and financial management, monitor economic performance and improve revenue collection. Ghana received $10.5 million to formulate and implement sector-wide State-owned enterprise reforms and to initiate managerial and operational improvements in key public enterprises.

Transportation

Fifteen credits to 12 countries totalling $525.3 million were granted for the transportation sector. Of three credits totalling $100 million made to China, $50 million assisted in expanding the road capacity between Chengdu, the capital of Sichuan province, and Chongqing, the major industrial centre and river port of the province, as well as improving two rural roads. Bangladesh received $87.3 million, of which $62.3 million was to develop rural infrastructure in eight north-western districts. A $60 million credit was extended to Ghana to rehabilitate roads and railways, including infrastructure rehabilitation, support for sector institutions and reforms, and pilot programmes in support of small-scale private road transport and low-cost rural transport.

Urban development

Eight urban projects were assisted in fiscal 1988 at a cost of $607.8 million. India received $300.2 million to assist the 10 largest cities in Tamil Nadu State, by strengthening institutions involved with the programming and delivery of urban services and the implementation of urban investments. Pakistan received $90 million to improve the living standards, environmental quality and productivity of people living in Lahore. A credit of $78 million was granted to Sri Lanka to reconstruct or rehabilitate affected infrastructure, revive economic activities and restore essential services.

Water supply and sewerage

Zaire received $45 million to develop new water-supply systems in 18 semi-rural centres, reinforce the water-supply system in Likasi, and provide

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

The International Monetary Fund (IMF), a forum in which its member States discuss global monetary issues and related economic matters, aims to assist them to develop sound policies and so engender a stable international economic and financial environment. The Fund provides members with advice on economic and financial policies, lends money to members that are undertaking economic reforms to overcome balance-of-payments difficulties and makes available to them information and technical assistance.

Each member contributes to IMF's pool of financial resources an amount of money, called a quota subscription, roughly proportional to its standing in the world economy. As at December 1988, aggregate quotas, measured in special drawing rights (SDRs)-the Fund's unit of account-amounted to SDR 90 billion ($130 billion). The amount a member has contributed determines its voting power and how much it can borrow from the Fund.

The IMF Board of Governors-the minister of finance or the head of the central bank of each member country-is the highest decision-making body in the Fund. The 22 Executive Directors, representing all IMF members, see to it that the decisions of the Board are carried out by the IMF staff.

During fiscal year 1988 (1 May 1987 to 30 April 1988), IMF continued to fulfil its surveillance mandate of the international monetary system, particularly the exchange rate policies of its members, by examining each member's policies and performance and through regular discussions of the world economic outlook.

IMF holds regular consultations with each member country, which allows it to appraise the country's overall economic situation and policies, discuss policy options and make recommendations. Consultations continued in response to modifications to the guidelines on the frequency of consultations introduced in 1987.^a The number of consultations concluded in 1988 fell to 110 (74 per cent of membership) from 115 (75 per cent) in 1987.

At the end of 1988, the membership of IMF remained unchanged at 151 (see Annex I).

IMF facilities and policies

IMF provided member States with financial resources in support of programmes of economic adjustment. The facilities and policies through which it provided such support differed, depending on the nature of the macro-economic and structural problems to be addressed and the terms and degree of conditionality attached to them.

Stand-by arrangements, typically covering periods of one or two years, focus on specific macro-economic policies, such as exchange rate and interest policies, aimed at overcoming balance-of-payments difficulties. Extended arrangements, which support medium-term programmes generally running for three years, are available to overcome more intractable balance-of-payment difficulties, attributable to structural as well as macro-economic problems.

In September, the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors on the International Monetary System, a 22-member advisory body representing the same constituencies as in the Fund's Executive Board (see Annex II), recommended the continuation of the enlarged access policy, financed by borrowed resources, and the maintenance of the limits on the use of Fund resources in effect. Under the enlarged access policy, the limit on annual access under a stand-by or an extended arrangement continued to be 90 per cent or 110 per cent of quota; the cumulative access limit remained at 400 or 440 per cent of quota, depending on the size and nature of the member's balance-of-payments need and the strength of its adjustment efforts.

The structural adjustment facility (SAF), launched in 1986,^b continued to provide loans on concessional terms to low-income countries facing protracted balance-of-payments problems.

In April 1988, the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF), established in 1987^c to provide additional assistance to low-income countries undertaking structural adjustments, became operational. Access under ESAF was expected to average 150 per cent of quota over a three-year programme period, with provision for up to 350 per cent in exceptional circumstances.

The compensatory financing facility, designed to help stabilize the earnings of countries exporting primary commodities, was superseded in August by the compensatory and contingency financing facility, which added a mechanism for contingency financing of member States that had entered into adjustment programmes supported by the Fund. Under the compensatory features of the facility, the Fund compensated members for levels of export earnings or cereal import costs that deviated from medium-term trends. Under the contingency features, the Fund provided additional financing to countries whose programmes might be threatened by external disruptions that might cause economic variables to deviate from those originally forecasted under the adjustment programme.

Under the buffer stock financing facility, IMF provided resources to help finance members' contributions to approved buffer stocks of commodities.

Financial assistance

During 1988, there were sharp increases in the use of Fund resources by members under the compensatory financing facility. Drawings by seven members totalled SDR 1.5 billion (compared to purchases by eight members of SDR 593 million in fiscal year 1987). Amounts agreed under stand-by and extended arrangements and SAF totalled SDR 4.54 billion.

The number of IMF financial arrangements in effect increased to 45 at the end of fiscal 1988, compared to 34 at the end of 1987. As at 30 April 1988, there were 18 stand-by arrangements (Argentina, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Egypt, Gabon, Guinea, Jamaica, Kenya, Malawi, Mauritania, Philippines, Senegal, Somalia, Togo, Tunisia, Zaire); 2 extended arrangements (Chile, Ghana); and 25 SAF arrangements (Bangladesh, Bolivia, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Dominica, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire).

At the end of fiscal year 1988, credit outstanding in the General Resources Account was SDR 27.83 billion, a decline of SDR 3.8 billion compared to 1987.

Purchases, or drawings, on IMF's resources included SDR 1.7 billion under stand-by arrangements, SDR 260 million under extended arrangements and SDR 1.54 billion under the compensatory financing facility. Two countries had purchases outstanding totalling SDR 3 million in the buffer stock financing facility. As at 30 April 1988, loan disbursements under SAF totalled SDR 1.36 billion, with undisbursed commitments totalling SDR 0.77 billion.

Liquidity

As at 30 April 1988, the Fund's usable ordinary resources totalled SDR 41 billion, compared with SDR 39.3 billion at the end of the preceding fiscal year.

The Fund borrowed from official lenders to supplement its resources and to finance members' purchases under the enlarged access policy. The total amount of borrowed resources available at the end of fiscal 1988 declined to SDR 5.3 billion from SDR 7.1 billion at the end of fiscal 1987.

The Fund borrowed SDR 1.3 billion and repaid SDR 4.9 billion, resulting in a net decrease in total outstanding borrowing of SDR 3.6 billion, from SDR 12.7 billion at the end of fiscal 1987 to SDR 9.1 billion at the end of fiscal 1988.

SDR activity

Total transfers of SDRs increased in 1988 to SDR 19.9 billion from SDR 15.6 in 1987. While transactions with designation continued to decline, voluntary transfers among participants and prescribed holders increased sharply by 87 per cent, resulting in a 50 per cent rise in total transfers among them to SDR 9.5 billion. The volume of SDR transfers involving prescribed holders nearly tripled, to SDR 1.9 billion from SDR 0.68 billion during fiscal 1987.

The amount of SDRs transferred between participants and IMF increased by 12 per cent over the previous fiscal year. Transfers from participants to the General Resources Account increased by 8 per cent to SDR 4.61 billion. Transfers from that Account to participants in purchases, remuneration payments, sales to members needing SDRs for payments of charges, and interest payments on and repayments of Fund borrowings increased by 15 per cent to SDR 5.8 billion.

Policy on arrears

The continued delay by some members in discharging financial obligations to the Fund was of increasing concern during the fiscal year. Total overdue obligations rose from SDR 1.19 billion at the end of fiscal 1987 to SDR 1.94 billion at the end of fiscal 1988. The number of members in arrears by six months or more rose by one, to nine. During 1988, three members were declared ineligible to use the general resources of the Fund in view of their overdue obligations to the General Department. Earlier declarations of ineligibility with respect to five members remained in effect.

Concerned by the continued increase of overdue obligations, the Interim Committee in April 1988 requested the Executive Board to prepare a report on measures to reduce, and eventually eliminate, arrears to the Fund.

Technical assistance and training

Technical assistance continued to be an important part of IMF services to its members, focusing on general economic policy, balance-of-payments adjustment programmes, legal matters, debt management, problems arising from inflation, exchange and trade systems, public finance issues, financial sector issues, accounting, statistics and data processing.

Training of officials from member countries was provided by the IMF Institute through courses and seminars in economic analysis and policy. During fiscal 1988, the Institute conducted 14 courses and one seminar at IMF headquarters (Washington, D.C.) on financial analysis and policy, financial programming and policy, public finance, techniques of economic analysis, balance-of-payments methodology, money and banking statistics, government finance statistics and the role of IMF in the international monetary system. The Institute's training abroad included three seminars on financial analysis and policy (Lao People's Democratic Republic), financial programming and policy (Sierra Leone) and financial analysis (Algeria). It also provided lecturing assistance to international, regional and national organizations.

IMF-World Bank collaboration

Collaboration between IMF and the World Bank intensified during fiscal 1988. Co-operation consisted of joint participation in missions, attendance at each other's Executive Board meetings, the regular exchange of documents and information, and attendance at and participation in conferences and seminars.

The two institutions also co-operated in support of low-income countries in terms of SAF and ESAF.

The Fund and Bank staff collaborated closely in efforts to encourage the flow of resources from donor Governments to member States.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the total full-time staff of IMF-including permanent, fixed-term and temporary employees-was 1,713, drawn from over 100 nationalities. (For senior officers, see Annex III.)

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) facilitates the safety and efficiency of civil air transport. As an intergovernmental regulatory organization, its objectives are set down in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944), which prescribe standards, recommended practices and procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations.

In 1988, ICAO estimated total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be some 212 billion tonne-kilometres, an increase of 7.6 per cent over 1987. The airlines carried in excess of 1 billion passengers, 4.6 per cent more than in 1987. The number of seats offered increased at a lower rate than passengers carried, raising the estimated passenger load factor to 68 per cent, 1 per cent higher than in 1987. Air freight increased by some 11 per cent to more than 53 billion tonne-kilometres. Airmail traffic increased by 2.4 per cent.

During the year, the ICAO Council held three regular sessions and one extraordinary session. On 25 March, it condemned the destruction by an act of sabotage of a Korean Air Lines civil aircraft during a scheduled international flight in November 1987, resulting in the loss of all 115 persons on board. The Council's extraordinary session (13 and 14 July) was convened at the request of Iran, following the shooting down on 3 July of an Iran Air Airbus, which resulted in the loss of 290 lives.

In 1988, membership of ICAO rose to 160 with the admission of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and San Marino (see Annex I).

Activities in 1988

Air navigation

ICAO's efforts in air navigation continued to be directed towards updating and implementing ICAO specifications, guidance material and regional plans. ICAO specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical annexes to the Chicago Convention, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services in three documents. Guidance material was contained in some 100 technical manuals, circulars and other documents, the purpose of which was to assist States in establishing and maintaining an up-to-date and effective aeronautical infrastructure. ICAO regional plans set forth air navigation facilities and services required in the nine ICAO regions.

Six air navigation meetings covering a wide range of subjects recommended changes to ICAO specifications. ICAO regional offices assisted States in implementing the regional plans. Their efforts were supplemented by the work of experts sent to advise States on the installation of new facilities and services and the operation of existing ones.

During the year, special attention was given to accident investigation and prevention, aerodromes, aeronautical information services, audio-visual training aids, aviation medicine, flight safety and human factors, illicit transport of drugs, meteorology, operation of aircraft, personnel licensing and training, rules of the air and air traffic services, search and rescue, future air navigation systems, telecommunications and transport of dangerous goods. Safeguarding of international civil aviation against acts of unlawful interference was accorded particular emphasis.

Air transport

ICAO continued its programmes of economic studies, collecting and publishing air transport statistics and promoting greater facilitation in international air transport.

The tenth session of the Facilitation Division (Montreal, Canada, 7-23 September) made a comprehensive review of new subjects, such as facilities for elderly and disabled passengers, the prevention of narcotics trafficking, procedures for inadequately documented passengers and courier and express shipments. The eleventh meeting of the Panel on Fares and Rates (Montreal, 5-15 April) reviewed current developments in the fares and rates field. Workshops were held on airport and route facility management (Montevideo, Uruguay, 24-28 October), on international fares and rates (Budapest, Hungary, 11-15 April; Nairobi, Kenya, 4-8 July) and on statistics (Mexico City, 30 May-3 June; Nuku'alofa, Tonga, 24-28 October).

ICAO publications included a digest of bilateral air transport agreements, guidance material on the regulation of computer reservation systems, the 1988 edition of the manual of airport and air navigation facility tariffs, the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on world civil aviation statistics, a study of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport in 1986 and a survey of international air transport fares and rates in 1987.

Following a 1982 conference to amend the 1956 Danish and Icelandic joint financing agreements for air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands and in Iceland, the two agreements, as amended, were provisionally applied from 1 January 1983. By the end of 1988, the protocols of amendment had been accepted by 17 of the 22 Governments that were parties to the agreements.

Legal matters

An International Conference on Air Law (Montreal, 9-24 February) adopted the Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports Serving International Civil Aviation, Supplementary to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, done at Montreal on 23 September 1971. The Protocol was opened for signature at Montreal on 24 February 1988 and by year's end had been signed by 61 States. The Protocol added to the 1971 Convention's definition of "offence" unlawful and intentional acts of violence against persons at an airport serving international civil aviation which caused or were likely to cause serious injury or death; similarly, destruction or serious damage to the facilities of such an airport, to an aircraft not in service located thereon or disruption of the services of the airport would constitute offences punishable by severe penalties; the qualifying element of such offences was the fact that such an act endangered or was likely to endanger safety at that airport.

The Final Act of the Conference, signed on behalf of 77 States, included the text of a resolution which addressed preventive measures and urged States to take all possible measures for the suppression of acts of violence at airports serving international civil aviation, including such preventive measures as were required or recommended under annex 17 to the Chicago Convention.

On 29 June, the general work programme of the Legal Committee was approved by the ICAO Council and contained the following items in priority order: the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea^a and its implications, if any, for the application of the Chicago Convention, its annexes and other international air law instruments; liability of air traffic control agencies; institutional and legal aspects of future air navigation systems; legal aspects of global air-ground communications; and preparation of a draft instrument on the interception of civil aircraft.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. It promotes the organization and improvement of postal services and international collaboration. At the request of its members it participates in various forms of postal technical assistance.

In 1988, UPU membership increased to 169 with the admission of Saint Kitts and Nevis (see Annex I).

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU and normally meets every five years. The most recent Congress (the nineteenth) took place at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, in 1984 and the twentieth was scheduled to meet in Washington, D.C., in 1989.

The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union based on proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies (CCPS), and of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities. The Acts in force since 1 January 1986 were those of the 1984 Congress.

Executive Council

At its 1988 session (Berne, 19 April-4 May), the Executive Council-which carries out the work of UPU between sessions of the Congress by maintaining close contact with postal administrations, exercising control over the International Bureau (see below), promoting technical assistance and working with the United Nations and other organizations-considered administrative matters and examined studies concerning international mail referred to it by the 1984 Congress.

The Council considered proposals to be submitted to the 1989 Congress in the areas of rate-fixing, terminal dues and rates. It also examined changes which UPU would have to make to adapt its operations to current commercial and technical demands.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

In 1988, CCPS continued its studies of various technical, economic and operational problems affecting postal administrations of UPU member States, including matters of particular interest to new and developing countries.

At its final session of the five-year period 1984-1989 (Berne, 17-28 October 1988), CCPS considered the results of studies and proposals stemming from them for submission to the 1989 Congress. It also considered two comprehensive reports for submission to that Congress-the CCPS report covering the period from 1984 to 1989 and the joint Executive Council, CCPS and International Bureau report on implementation of the Declaration of Hamburg. It concentrated on the 1989-1994 CCPS work programme as well as proposals for improving the organization and operation of CCPS after the 1989 Congress.

International Bureau

Under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, the International Bureau-the UPU secretariat-continued to serve the postal administrations of member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation. The Bureau co-ordinated, published and disseminated international postal service information. At the request of postal administrations, it also conducted inquiries and acted as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them.

As at 31 December 1988, the number of permanent and temporary staff members employed by the UPU secretariat was 143, of whom 60 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 47 countries) and 83 in the General Service category. Also, as French remained the sole official UPU language, 14 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services. (For officers of the Bureau, see Annex II.)

Technical co-operation

In 1988, technical co-operation provided by UPU was financed for the most part by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); UNDP/UPU project expenditures amounted to some $2.2 million. Assistance was also provided through the UPU Special Fund (voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States) and the regular budget. Total expenditures from these two sources amounted to approximately $1.5 million. In addition, postal administrations provided assistance on a bilateral and multi-lateral basis.

The Special Fund and the regular budget funded missions by consultants, scholarships for training, instruction materials and equipment. During 1988, 49 consultants carried out technical missions in 44 postal administrations and 247 fellowships were granted for training courses and technical meetings. Fellowships and training courses were also offered by several countries.

Budget

Under UPU's self-financing system, contributions are payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. At its 1988 session, the Executive Council approved the 1989 budget at a total of 27,319,500 Swiss francs.

NOTE: For details of UPU activities, see Report on the Work of the Union, 1988, published by UPU.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1988, the Administrative Council of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) held its forty-third session (Geneva, 20 June-1 July), during which it reviewed administrative and financial matters, considered reports on ITU activities and examined and discussed a new basic instrument for the Union (draft constitution and draft convention). It also examined the report of a group of experts on the long-term future of the International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB).

The Council took note of the results of consultations conducted within the entire ITU membership concerning: the agenda for the second session of the Regional Administrative Conference for the planning of VHF/UHF (very high frequency/ultra-high frequency) television broadcasting in the African broadcasting area and neighbouring countries (AFBC-2) (Geneva, November 1989); and the agenda of a two-day Regional Administrative Conference during the third week of AFBC-2 for the purpose of abrogating the parts relating to the VHF/UHF television broadcasting plan of 1963,^a which could still be in force at that time.

During 1988, membership of ITU rose to 166 with the admission of Bhutan, Samoa and Vanuatu (see Annex I).

Administrative radio conferences

The second session of the World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC) on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit and the planning of space services utilizing it (Geneva, 29 August-6 October) established an allotment plan for certain bands of the fixed-satellite service; drew up associate procedures to enable the implementation of the plan; adopted procedures to improve the co-ordination process in certain bands between countries that would be affected by the installation of new satellites; and simplified, for the unplanned bands, the procedures that had been followed to access the geostationary-satellite orbit.

The World Administrative Telegraph and Telephone Conference (Melbourne, Australia, 28 November-9 December) focused on how international economic progress and the interests of telecommunication service providers could best be fostered to their satisfaction and that of an ever-increasing group of users. The Conference endorsed the role of special arrangements that would include the agreed financial, technical and operational conditions to be observed by the parties to such arrangements. It considered the recognition given to the importance of interconnection/interconnectivity and the reciprocal exchange of information through the ITU General Secretariat. Measures were adopted to ensure the continued availability of traditional international services to those areas and countries that might not be in a position to adopt new and advanced services in the near future.

At its second session (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 23 May-8 June), the Regional Administrative Radio Conference to establish a plan for the broadcasting service in the frequency band 1,605-1,705 kHz (kilohertz) in Region 2 (the Americas) adopted a frequency allotment plan making available 10 channels. Region 2 was divided into allotment areas to each of which a minimum number of channels would be attributed. Each country would be entitled to use one or more of the channels. The Conference also adopted a schedule for introducing the newly planned broadcasting service and the provisions that could be included in the Radio Regulations by a future WARC to govern the use of the frequency band 1,605-1,705 kHz.

International consultative committees

The second series of interim study group meetings (Geneva, 11 April-10 May) for the 1986-1990 International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) study period considered spectrum utilization and monitoring; propagation in non-ionized media; propagation in ionized media; standard frequencies and time-signals; and mobile, radio-determination and amateur radio. A new recommendation and report were developed on future public land mobile telecommunication systems. At the first meeting of the interim working party on mobile satellite studies, progress was made towards recommendations on satellite news gathering and on digital television transmission in networks. New editions of CCIR handbooks on computer utilization in frequency management and on satellite communication were published, as were new software and a handbook on VHF/UHF antenna design for broadcasting. Under technical co-operation, CCIR provided assistance regarding radio problems put forward by administrations of developing countries. It also participated in the selection panel for experts, participated in seminars and training courses and reviewed several project documents and reports involving radio-communication issues.

Since 1988 was the last year of the 1985-1988 International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) study period, CCITT activities centred mainly around the final meetings, during which reports and recommendations were prepared for the ninth CCITT Plenary Assembly (Melbourne, 14-25 November). The Plenary Assembly, following consideration by 15 study groups, approved 368 new draft recommendations and 388 amended recommendations and made changes in the structure of CCITT study groups. It set up an ad hoc group to develop scientific proposals designed to ensure that CCITT continued to maintain its leading world position in telecommunications standardization. In view of the rapid changes in telecommunication technology and services, the Plenary Assembly adopted an accelerated procedure for approving new and revised recommendations in the interval between plenary assemblies. In the area of technical assistance, CCITT continued to participate in selecting experts for technical co-operation development projects. At the end of 1988, 226 private companies and 37 international organizations were registered as participants in the work of CCITT in addition to ITU member administrations.

International Frequency Registration Board

The major activities of IFRB during 1988 included follow-up action on decisions of: WARC-79 relating to the review of assignments in the Master International Frequency Register; the 1981 Regional Administrative MF (medium frequency) Broadcasting Conference (Region 2); the 1984 Regional Administrative Radio Conference for FM (frequency modulation) sound broadcasting in the frequency band 87.5-108 MHz (megahertz) (Region 1-Africa and Europe and certain countries in Region 3-Asia and Australasia); the 1985 Regional Administrative Conference for the planning of the MF maritime mobile and aeronautical radionavigation services (Region 1); the 1986 Regional Administrative Radio Conference to establish a plan for the broadcasting service in the band 1,605-1,705 kHz in Region 2; and the 1987 session of WARC on high frequency broadcasting.

Other activities related to the implementation of further modules for the IFRB frequency management system and continuing development of the system with a view to improving and rationalizing services to administrations; continuation of intersessional work and participation in the work of the second (1988) session of WARC on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit and the planning of space services utilizing it; participation in the second (1988) session of the Regional Administrative Radio Conference to establish a plan for the broadcasting service in the band 1,605-1,705 kHz; continuation of intersessional work of the 1986 Regional Administrative Radio Conference for the planning of VHF/UHF television broadcasting in the African broadcasting area and neighbouring countries; application of the decisions of the 1987 WARC for the mobile services; and participation in the interim meetings of study groups and working parties of CCIR.

Technical co-operation

In 1988, under various ITU technical co-operation programmes in developing countries, 591 expert missions were carried out, 876 fellows were undergoing training abroad and equipment valued at $12.2 million was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. Nineteen projects were being implemented, either partially or entirely under contract. Total assistance amounted to $31.4 million for 188 projects.

The following countries and territories were aided:

Africa: Algeria, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Gambia, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Malawi, Morocco, Mauritania, Mozambique, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Swaziland, Togo, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Americas: Brazil, Belize, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Netherlands Antilles, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Saint Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela.

Asia and the Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Nepal, Republic of Korea, Samoa, Sri Lanka, Tokelau.

Europe and the Middle East: Albania, Bulgaria, Democratic Yemen, Hungary, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malta, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Yemen.

The three main objectives of ITU technical co-operation activities continued to be: promoting the development of regional telecommunications networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia, the Pacific, the Middle East and the Mediterranean basin; strengthening the telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and developing human resources required for telecommunications.

ITU continued to promote the development of telecommunication networks and their integration into the world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with the objectives established by its World Plan Committee and regional plan committees.

The Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTTEL), with its basic structure designed to interconnect the countries in Africa without transit beyond the continent, required attention; apart from the subregion of Central Africa, for which much remained to be done, the main PANAFTTEL network structures had been installed. In addition to the land and submarine cable network, 41 of the 45 countries south of the Sahara had satellite earth stations. Financing was needed for the four missing earth stations. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) approved an extension for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) of the two PANAFTTEL projects: operation and extension of the network, and network maintenance and rehabilitation. Regarding maintenance and rehabilitation, 15 national plans to improve maintenance (NPIMs), two rehabilitation projects and three overall maintenance improvement schemes were completed by the end of 1988; six NPIMs were under preparation, three at the final stage.

The feasibility study for the regional African satellite communication system, with an estimated budget of $7.5 million and co-financed by contributions from UNDP, the Organization of African Unity, ITU, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany and a technical assistance grant from the African Development Bank, commenced in 1988. The study was to include terrestrial and satellite aspects and use, to a certain degree, inputs from country-study reports. Consultancy services were to be used to undertake part of the regional activity, particularly its space component.

In the area of strengthening national telecommunications technical and administrative services, Guinea received assistance to set up automatic telephone calls with a large number of countries; Cameroon, to analyse bids for the modernization and extension of switching exchanges; Togo, to draft technical specifications for the purchase and installation of digital switching equipment; and Burkina Faso, to prepare technical specifications for a new international transit centre and an earth station. To meet the needs of expanding, operating and maintaining their telecommunication networks, most administrations in Africa made efforts to develop their own national training facilities, often with the assistance of UNDP-financed projects. ITU continued its participation in projects to develop and/or strengthen training centres and activities in Algeria, Angola, Burkina Faso, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Djibouti, Malawi, Somalia, Togo, Zaire and Zimbabwe.

At the subregional level, a UNDP/ITU project supported the establishment of the African Advanced Level Telecommunications Institute (AFRALTI), which started its training activities in May. AFRALTI acted as a focal point to promote and organize various forms of co-operation with and between telecommunication training centres at the higher training levels. Subregional projects, especially in the context of the PANAFTTEL implementation and maintenance projects, continued to contribute to the overall learning process.

In the Americas, ITU continued to promote development of a telecommunication network by assisting national and regional organizations responsible for such activity. A project document to improve the telecommunication network of the Caribbean subregion was prepared and discussed with the Caribbean Community and national authorities. Two projects for the Central American region, one for the Central American Bank/Regional Technical Committee for Telecommunications in Central America and another for a regional centre for the development of telecommunications software, were also discussed. In addition, a project document to improve the radio and television broadcasting network for 18 countries of the Latin American and Caribbean Broadcasting Union was prepared and discussed with Governments and Union authorities. Most of the projects in the region were devoted to the development and strengthening of administrative and planning services. Many administrations made efforts to introduce the computer-aided telecommunication network planning software. Several projects valued at $1.5 million were introducing modern methods and technologies in producing training aids by the use of computers.

Technical co-operation activities in Asia and the Pacific focused on the adoption of improved maintenance practices and computer-aided management techniques. The activities were undertaken mostly through six regional projects: networking of test and development centres (Seoul, Republic of Korea); telecommunications computer software training (Beijing); regional telecommunications planning (Bangkok, Thailand); telecommunications development and planning in the South Pacific; development of maritime radiocommunications (Asia); and cellular radio telephone systems application (countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations).

Support to strengthen national telecommunication services in Asia and the Pacific was provided through a number of UNDP-financed projects, covering such areas as networking of test and development centres, network planning, maintenance and operations, rural and coastal communications, computer-aided billing, introduction of new services and management of telecommunication services.

As to the development of human resources, at the intercountry level a number of meetings and workshops were organized through training-oriented projects within the framework of UNDP. At the country level, ITU continued to be involved in UNDP-funded training projects in Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia and Sri Lanka.

The second Steering Committee meeting of the European telecommunications development project (Geneva, January) identified six areas of collaboration, each to be the responsibility of a lead country assisted by other members. The work plan for each area was approved and the following meetings took place: feasibility study on computer-aided network planning (Bulgaria, two meetings); preparation of draft agreements on the use or joint development of special devices developed and used individually by each member country (Portugal); strategy for the transition from analogue to digital techniques (Yugoslavia); and the use or joint design of software programmes in six identified fields (Greece, two meetings). For the remaining two areas of collaboration-economic and financial aspects of telecommunications and joint working activities for research and development-Malta and Hungary, respectively, were designated as lead countries.

In addition, the following national projects were geared towards the strengthening of technical and managerial capabilities: in Albania, the planning and installation of two pilot microwave projects with Italy and Greece, as well as the creation of a measurement centre for telecommunication research; in Bulgaria, expansion of the activities of the research centre in new services; in Democratic Yemen, building up of a modern telecommunication infrastructure and the creation of a nucleus of a training centre and transition to digital technique in the Aden network; in Kuwait, planning of telecommunication facilities for the Ministry of the Interior and planning of transmission systems, new services and computerization of data base; in Malta, preparation of a master plan; in Qatar, promotion of radio and television services and their efficient operation; in Romania, microwave design techniques for parts of a satellite earth station for meteorology reception; in Saudi Arabia, planning of telecommunication facilities for radio broadcasting and national satellite communication for the Ministry of Information, as well as assistance in frequency management (terminated in early 1988); in Turkey, management and organization with emphasis on introducing computers in the training process; and in Yemen, assistance in implementing the second five-year development plan for telecommunications and frequency planning for MF, FM and television coverage.

A new regional project on co-ordination of telecommunication development in the least developed countries in the Arab region and Ethiopia, in which Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia, the Sudan and Yemen participated, with Egypt and Saudi Arabia as sponsors, terminated one year of its activities at the end of 1988, having achieved all objectives for that year. During the first project meeting (Djibouti, March), the detailed work plan of the project was reviewed and approved; joint transit tariff rates for all project members were agreed in June (Sanaa, Yemen). A maintenance co-ordination meeting was held (Aden, Democratic Yemen, July) to improve maintenance activities of the subregional microwave network and to agree on end-to-end measurements of each link, as was a training course on maintenance of the regional microwave links (Sanaa, August-October).

National projects in the Middle East involving training included assistance to the Jordanian Telecommunication Corporation in establishing a Telecommunication College; to Lebanon to organize fellowship programmes outside the country in various telecommunication fields; to the Qatar Telecommunication Training Centre in implementing an expansion programme, initiating the training of instructors, upgrading training standards and institutionalizing a management system and procedures; to Saudi Arabia in running telecommunication training institutes in Riyadh and Jeddah; to the Syrian Training Centre for Telecommunications; and to the Yemen Telecommunication Corporation in establishing and organizing a modern telecommunication training institute.

Training activities

By the end of 1988, 492 training courses were available through the ITU sharing system and 591 were being developed.

The third regional meeting for the co-ordination of training activities of French-speaking African countries was held with ITU assistance (Dakar, Senegal, 24-28 October) and a regional seminar on computer-based training took place (Brasilia, Brazil, 31 October-5 November). In addition, the Training Committee of the African Regional Telecommunications Conference of Eastern and Southern Africa met (Kampala, Uganda, 12-14 September). ITU's training division held workshops in which 578 individuals participated. Missions to assist in formulating training projects were carried out in Bhutan, Ghana, Guatemala, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria and Uruguay. Numerous other missions were undertaken to provide advice on training.

The computerized data base of training opportunities was updated, reaching a total of 503 courses open to foreign trainees.

Centre for Telecommunications Development

The activities of the Centre for Telecommunications Development (CTD), which became operational in April 1987, were financed entirely by voluntary contributions in cash and kind from the public and private sectors.

In response to 56 requests for assistance received from developing countries, 29 missions were organized to study the telecommunication sector and to identify requirements. Small-scale projects were completed in Malta, Rwanda, Uruguay and Zanzibar. Other projects were prepared for implementation in Malta and Mozambique.

Progress continued on the CTD InfoBase, which, in addition to information on the telecommunication sector, including planned, ongoing and completed projects, would also contain socioeconomic and development indicators. Over 50 per cent of the required data had been entered.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, 759 officials (excluding staff on short-term contracts and project staff) were employed by ITU either at its headquarters or in the field. Of those, 9 were elected officials, 586 had permanent contracts and 164 had fixed-term contracts; 74 nationalities were represented in those posts subject to geographical distribution. (For principal officers, see Annex II.)

Budget

The 1987 ITU Administrative Council had adopted a budget of 127,430,621.28 Swiss francs (based on an exchange rate of $US 1.00 = SwF 1.29) for 1988. Regular budget expenditure for the year amounted to SwF 107,853,171.52. In addition, SwF 11,953,420.88 was programmed for technical co-operation and SwF 6,173,925.88 for the publication budget. Another SwF 1,450,163 was allocated for regional administrative conferences.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

In 1988, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) carried out its activities in accordance with the programme and budget adopted in 1987 for the period 1988-1991 by its highest body, the World Meteorological Congress, which meets at least once every four years. The 36-member Executive Council meets annually to supervise the implementation of programmes and regulations.

As at 31 December 1988, the membership of WMO remained at 160—155 States and 5 Territories (see Annex I).

World Weather Watch

In 1988, the World Weather Watch (WWW), the basic programme of WMO, continued to provide support to other WMO programmes in the areas of applications and research. Its essential elements were the Global Observing System (GOS), whereby observational data were obtained; the Global-Data Processing System (GDPS), which provided for the processing, storage and retrieval of observational data and made available processed information; and the Global Telecommunications System (GTS), consisting of 280 point-to-point circuits providing telecommunication facilities for the rapid collection, exchange and distribution of observational data and processed information.

The activities of GOS continued under its two sub-systems, one surface-based and the other space-based. The surface-based sub-system was composed of the regional basic synoptic networks, other observational networks on land and at sea (at the national level), meteorological observations from aircraft, climatological stations, agricultural meteorological stations and special stations, such as those monitoring ozone and radiation. The space-based sub-system included near-polar-orbiting and geostationary meteorological satellites. In order to meet national needs, the surface-based sub-system included supplementary observing stations. In 1988, there were some 5,500 observing stations of that kind, of which more than 570 also made pilot-balloon observations; also in operation were 331 automatic weather stations. In the space-based sub-system, both polar-orbiting and geostationary meteorological satellites took direct observations. GOS continued to provide members with quantitative information derived from instrument measurements, such as atmospheric pressure, humidity, air temperature and wind velocity, and qualitative information aimed at describing phenomena by providing information on the state of the sky, forms of clouds and types of precipitation. The satellite systems operated by WMO members continued to provide valuable information for use by meteorological and hydrological services. Progress was made in developing new technology for improving the global coverage of observational data, such as the aircraft-to-satellite data relay system and the Automated Shipboard Aerological Programme for upper-air observations from merchant ships and drifting-buoy systems.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

The Tropical Cyclone Programme (TCP) continued to establish national and regionally co-ordinated systems to prevent loss of life and mitigate damage caused by tropical cyclones. During the year, TCP focused on upgrading observational and telecommunication networks, applying advances in satellite technology and improving forecasting and warning systems.

Several members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP)/WMO Typhoon Committee took steps to improve the networks of weather radars and upper-air stations as well as telecommunications for national data collection and for exchange of data and processed products. Activities under the hydrological component continued to concentrate on monitoring designated flood-forecasting systems, flood loss prevention and management and flood risk analysis and mapping.

In March, the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones reviewed the progress made under its programme, including the installation of cyclone-detection radars and an automatic warning by satellite system. It endorsed several recommendations made by a consultancy mission on storm-surges to assess national and regional capabilities, requirements and activities related to storm surge prediction and by the second (1987) Regional Workshop on Cyclone Storm Surge. Based on the information and advice of a consultancy mission to its members in early 1988, the Panel decided to implement the first phase of its regional computer network project, with installation during 1988-1989 of turnkey microcomputer-based systems in three of its member countries.

Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme

In 1988, the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme (IMOP) organized and conducted regional and global intercomparisons of instruments such as hygrometers, solid precipitation measurement instruments and digital barometers. Efforts were made to implement the programme on a global level by the Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observation (CIMO) and on a regional level through WMO regional associations. Other activities included updating regulatory and guidance materials and developing algorithms for automated surface and upper-air measurements.

At the WMO Technical Conference on Meteorological Instruments and Methods of Observation (TECO-88) (Leipzig, German Democratic Republic, 16-20 May), 50 papers were presented on sensor developments, improvements in automation, remote sensing, instrument intercomparison, data quality, training, maintenance and network aspects.

The first session of the CIMO Advisory Working Group (Potsdam, German Democratic Republic, 24-27 May) reviewed IMOP and evaluated the results of TECO-88.

World Climate Programme

The Tenth World Meteorological Congress (1987) had decided that the World Climate Programme (WCP), instituted in 1979 to aid nations in applying climate information to human activities and to warn of changes in climate that might significantly affect economic and social activities, should continue to receive high priority. The four components of WCP were the World Climate Data programme (WCDP), the World Climate Applications Programme (WCAP), the World Climate Impact Studies Programme (WCIP), and the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP).

During the year, activities of the Programme focused on establishing a WMO/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) Intergovernmental panel on Climate Change (IPCC), which would aim at developing a realistic and effective strategy for addressing climate change. The first session of IPCC (Geneva, 9-11 November) adopted an 18-month schedule for its consideration of the climate change issue, including broad aspects of science, impacts and policy.

A major project under WCDP was the implementation of the data rescue project (DARE), which was procuring micrographic systems for members in Africa. The International DARE Co-ordination Centre was established at Brussels, with the support of Belgium. The Commission on Climatology Working Group on Climate Data Management began preparing manuals on how to perform a particular sequence of climate data management tasks. The publication Statistics on Regional Networks of Climatological Stations was issued and the CSM Monthly Bulletin continued to be published.

Within WCAP, activities related to food, water and energy continued to receive priority. Attention was also given to areas such as urban and building climatology, transportation and human health. WMO continued to provide support to the Solar Power Committee of the World Energy Conference (WEC) in preparing a report to the next WEC Congress, to be held at Toronto, Canada, in September 1989. WMO also co-operated with the Economic Commission for Europe Committee on Gas in preparing for a study on the importance and significance of meteorology, including climatological information and weather forecasts in gas operations. WMO participated in a Conference on Healthy Buildings (Stockholm, Sweden, 5-8 September), which discussed meteorological and climatological aspects of buildings and constructions. At planning meetings for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990s), WMO contributed to discussions on how to mitigate loss of life and property caused by natural disasters.

Within WCIP, greenhouse gases continued to receive major attention. Preparations continued for the Second World Climate Conference (1990), focusing on the global issues associated with possible climate changes and the benefits of climate applications. A major activity of the Programme was the joint WMO/UNEP invitation to Governments to serve on IPCC and the establishment of a joint secretariat for the Panel at WMO headquarters. A WMO/UNEP International Council of Scientific Unions Advisory Group on Greenhouse Gases (June) developed the basis for a new UNEP project in co-operation with the Beijer Institute involving the establishment of three working groups to consider various aspects of policy response to climate change.

An ad hoc working group on world climate impact studies (Bangkok, Thailand, 11-15 January) met to carry out a comparative study between the global climate anomalies connected with the 1986/87 El Niño event and those of the one occurring during 1982/83.

WCRP focused on determining the extent of climate predictability and man's influence on climate. In 1988, the Executive Council endorsed the recommendations of the joint scientific committee to prepare a global energy and water cycle experiment, which would result in the establishment of a firmer physical basis for medium- and long-term weather forecasting. During the year, the main WCRP projects involved global climate analysis, studies of atmospheric general circulation models, research on individual climate processes, study of the tropical ocean and global atmosphere, a world ocean circulation experiment and studies of climate forcings and of changes in the ecosystems.

Research and development

The WMO Research and Development Programme covered weather prediction research, tropical meteorology research, environmental pollution monitoring and research and cloud physics and weather modification research. The responsibility for promoting and co-ordinating such activities lay with the Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (CAS).

Priority continued to be assigned to weather prediction research on all time-scales, with particular attention being given to the development of various numerical weather prediction models in the tropics. The monitoring of atmospheric composition parameters continued to be strengthened through the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network (BAPMON) and Global Ozone Observing Stations, and further action was taken to advance knowledge of cloud physics and prospects to modify it. The WMO Technical Conference on Regional Weather Prediction with Emphasis on the Use of Global Products, held at the European Centre for Medium-range Weather Forecasts (Reading, United Kingdom, 18-22 April), discussed global and regional forecasting, including the use of direct model output and statistical enhancement methods.

The third session of the CAS working group on tropical meteorology, held at WMO headquarters (28-31 March), reviewed the implementation of the Tropical Meteorological Research Programme and its six major components: tropical cyclone monsoons, semi-arid-zone meteorology, tropical droughts, tropical rain-producing systems (other than cyclones), tropical limited-area modelling and the interaction between tropical and mid-latitude systems. The group updated and revised the overall programme. The second WMO Regional Workshop on Asian Winter Monsoon (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 27 June-1 July), co-sponsored by the Malaysian Ministry of Science, Technology and Environment and the Association of Scientific Co-operation in Asia, stressed the continued importance of further research in monsoon meteorology and the availability and dissemination of data for monsoon-affected countries.

The 1988 WMO Research Award for Young Scientists was conferred upon Silas C. Michaelides (Cyprus) for his work on limited-area energetics of Genoa cyclogenesis.

The Executive Council Panel of Experts/CAS working group on environmental pollution and atmospheric chemistry (Hilo, Hawaii, 27-31 March) focused on possible changes in atmospheric ozone and other constituents of the atmosphere and on measurements, modelling and further studies of the long-range transport of pollutants. A re-evaluation of BAPMON was being carried out by leading authorities in atmospheric chemistry to ensure its ability to provide information on possible changes in the composition of the atmosphere in the coming decades.

The main objectives of the WMO Cloud Physics and Weather Modification Research Programme were to promote sound scientific foundations for weather modification and to provide the rationale for all aspects of weather modification. The second International Cloud Modelling Workshop (Toulouse, France, 8-12 August) attracted 81 participants from 18 countries.

Applications of meteorology

The WMO Applications of Meteorology Programme comprised agricultural, marine and aeronautical meteorology.

Agricultural meteorology

The Agricultural Meteorology Programme assisted WMO members in organizing and strengthening their agrometeorological services, enabling them to make optimum use of meteorological and hydrological information and knowledge in agricultural production and protection. The Commission for Agricultural Meteorology (CAgM) provided advice on different aspects of the programme and close collaboration was maintained with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

During 1988, the major activity was the response of WMO to the invasion of many parts of western and northern Africa by huge swarms of desert locusts, which threatened the food resources of the region. In co-operation with FAO and other international organizations and with support from bilateral donors, WMO took various urgent actions to combat the locust plague. Activities included a joint expert mission to the areas concerned to define the meteorological data requirements for locust control and to assist in further developing the subregional meteorological activities in the fight against the locusts. A joint FAO/WMO workshop on the provision of agrometeorological information for locust control was held at Tunis, Tunisia, from 26 to 29 July.

A meeting of the Regional Association II (Asia) working group on agricultural meteorology (New Delhi, India, 11-15 January) considered draft reports on agroclimatology of the banana and ground-nut crops, agroclimatological zoning, and drought and desertification. A meeting of the Regional Association VI (Europe) working group on agricultural meteorology (Geneva, 10-14 October) finalized reports on operational agrometeorological services for the potato crop, weather and climate and the quality of production, agrometeorological data banks and the development of agrometeorological services in areas under stressful conditions. A workshop on agrometeorological information for planning and operation in agriculture with special reference to plant protection (Calcutta, India, 22-26 August) discussed the influence of meteorological factors on plant epidemic development, modelling of crop growth and development, crop monitoring and forecasting, modelling of pest outbreaks, modelling of weed development, meteorological factors influencing pesticide behaviour, economic benefits of forecasting models and remote-sensing applications in plant-protection activities.

WMO participated in a joint meeting of the Co-ordination and Advisory Committee and the Executive Committee of the regional training centre for agrometeorology and operational hydrology and their applications (programme for the Sahelian countries) (AGRHYMET) (8-17 January). The meeting proposed the use of operational forecasts by the National Services of the Gambia and Mali. WMO contributed to those efforts, on an experimental basis to adapt such forecasts to agriculture, in the context of the AGRHYMET programme.

At a meeting of the CAgM working group on monitoring, assessment and combat of drought and desertification (Florence, Italy, 5-9 April), the final report of the working group was adopted, which included methods and practical techniques for operational use in the fight against drought and desertification. Roving seminars on potential primary production of natural pastures and the resulting carrying capacity were organized (Zambia 20 June-1 July; Ethiopia, 12-13 December).

Marine meteorology

The Marine Meteorology Programme promoted marine meteorological services for the high seas and coastal areas and the application of marine climatological information to planning marine activities.

The International Maritime Satellite Organization (INMARSAT) system for the collection of ships' weather reports by satellite continued to expand, with some 7,200 ships, including 1,161 voluntary observing ships, equipped with INMARSAT ship earth stations by mid-year.

A course on ocean waves and tides, co-sponsored by WMO at the International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy, September/October), discussed wave and tide theory, air-sea interactions, wave measurements, wave modelling and wave and tidal data analysis.

The Integrated Global Ocean Services System (IGOSS) was planned, developed and co-ordinated jointly by WMO and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the global collection and exchange of oceanic data and the timely preparation and dissemination of oceanic products and services for both operational and research activities. Its three main elements were the IGOSS Observing System, the IGOSS Data Processing and Services System, and the IGOSS Telecommunication Arrangements. The fifth session of the IOC/WMO Working Committee for IGOSS (Paris, 14-23 November) considered and adopted the new IGOSS plan and implementation programme for 1989-1995.

During the year, expert consultancy missions to advise on further development of national meteorological services took place in Chile, Iran and Morocco.

Aeronautical meteorology

The Aeronautical Meteorology Programme—aimed at assisting members to plan, establish and operate the aeronautical meteorological services required to ensure the safety, efficiency and economy of air navigation—was carried out in close collaboration with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and other international organizations.

In 1988, activities included the development of regulatory material for updating volume II of the WMO Technical Regulations—Meteorological Service for International Air Navigation; preparation of other guidance material; further co-ordination of action, at the regional and national levels, for the implementation of standardized global and regional practices; and co-operation with other international organizations, particularly ICAO, in the application of meteorology to aviation.

The second session of the Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology (CAeM) working group on meteorological observations and information distribution arrangements for local aeronautical users (Geneva, 25-27 May) focused on reviewing the draft version of the Guide on Meteorological Observation and Information Distribution Systems at Airports. The fifth session of the CAeM working group on the provision of meteorological information required before and during flight (10-14 October) discussed the current state of implementation of the World Area Forecast System (WAFS), the depiction of wind speeds in kilometres per hour on WAFS upper-air charts, proposed changes to aeronautical meteorological codes, change groups in aerodrome forecasts, the concept of area meteorological watch, aeronautical requirements for observational data and products and a proposed guide to aeronautical meteorological office practices. The CAeM working group on advanced techniques applied to aeronautical meteorology issued its first newsletter in June 1988, reporting on research and development activities relevant to aeronautical meteorology.

Hydrology and water resources

The Hydrology and Water Resources Programme promoted world-wide co-operation in evaluating water resources and assisted in their development through the co-ordination of hydrological services, including data collection and processing, forecasting and warnings, and supply of meteorological and hydrological data for design purposes. Its three components were the Operational Hydrology programme (OHP) applications and services to water resources and co-operation with water-related programmes of other international organizations.

The Operational Hydrology Programme (OHP) was executed mainly by the Commission for Hydrology, which reviewed its work from 1984 to 1988 (Geneva, 24 October-4 November). Working groups were established for data acquisition and processing systems; hydrological forecasting and applications for water management; and operational hydrology, climate and the environment.

A major activity within OHP was the Hydrological Operational Multipurpose Subprogramme (HOMS), which aimed to provide an efficient means of transferring operational hydrological technology and an international framework for the integration of techniques for collecting and processing hydrological data.

Two United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)-funded projects in support of the final UNDP-funded HOMS/Asia workshop of the integrated systems in hydrology were held at the Asian Institute of Technology (Bangkok, Thailand, December), while the HOMS/Europe project continued its series of training seminars to support the transfer of components among the participating countries.

In 1988, the number of HOMS National Reference Centres and focal points increased to 105. The HOMS Reference Manual contained 391 components, 16 sequences and 4 users' requirements. The programme on applications and services to water resources provided technical support for the water-related activities of TCP and WCP.

The Fourth Planning Meeting on the water component of WCP, organized jointly by UNESCO and WMO (Paris, 12-16 September), reviewed the progress of existing programmes and suggested future activities for the Programme.

Education and training

Educational and training activities in meteorology and operational hydrology included promoting high standards in the technical and scientific training of all WMO personnel; awarding fellowships; organizing training courses, seminars and workshops; and preparing training publications.

The thirteenth session of the Executive Council Panel of Experts on Education and Training, scheduled for 1988, was postponed for financial reasons; it was expected to be held in 1989.

The regional meteorological training centres continued to provide education and training to personnel from developing countries. Activities included having visiting scientists assist some centres with specific aspects of training programmes and providing textbooks and other publications. Some of the training centres organized or hosted special training events.

A course on the management of meteorological training centres (Turin, Italy, 4-22 July) provided participants with updated information on management techniques, such as planning, organizing, staffing and controlling institutional performances, management of training courses and operations, curriculum design and development and modern trends in training methods.

Under fellowship funds from various sources administered by WMO, 308 fellows were trained. Financial assistance was also provided to 55 participants in various WMO-supported training events under the fellowship programme.

Technical co-operation

Under the WMO Technical Co-operation Programme, assistance was provided to 133 member countries through UNDP, the WMO Voluntary Co-operation Programme (VCP), trust funds and the WMO regular budget.

UNDP assistance was provided to 124 countries at an estimated value of $125 million. In addition to ongoing projects, 20 new country projects were approved during the year. UNDP sectoral adviser missions in meteorology and operational hydrology were undertaken to 38 countries at the request of UNDP resident representatives and government authorities to assist in planning and formulating new projects.

The project for assistance to drought-stricken countries in eastern and southern Africa and the project for strengthening the agrometeorological and hydrological services of the Sahelian countries continued. Other large-scale projects focused on the evaluation of water resources, flood forecasting, meteorological services for agriculture, meteorological training, research and improvement of facilities for the detection and warning of tropical cyclones.

VCP was maintained by voluntary contributions of members, in the form of equipment and services or cash. In 1988, 98 countries received an estimated $6.9 million in aid under VCP. A total of 57 VCP projects, mostly in support of WWW activities, were completed during the year.

Under the regular WMO budget, 90 countries were assisted and 30 fellowships were awarded in 1988. Financial support was also given for participation in group training, technical conferences and study tours.

Under a trust fund project with Italy, assistance to the AGRHYMET project continued with several activities, including assistance to a pilot project in agrometeorology in the Niger and a workshop in telecommunication and hydrological equipment maintenance for specialists from the Sahelian countries. Other trust fund arrangements, with Belgium, Finland, Honduras, Italy, Netherlands, Switzerland- and the United States continued to be implemented. Under the Technical Co-operation Programme, 567 fellows received training—247 under UNDP programmes, 206 under VCP, 64 under the regular budget and 50 under trust funds.

Secretariat

On 31 December 1988, WMO employed 275 full-time staff members. Of those, 123 were in the Professional and higher categories, 143 were in the General Service and related categories and 9 were supernumerary staff, made up of both categories.

Budget

Nineteen eighty-eight was the beginning of the tenth financial period (1988-1991). The Tenth WMO Congress (1987) had approved significant changes in the financial regulations of the Organization, including budgeting in Swiss francs (SwF) and changing from annual to biennial budgets. It had established a maximum expenditure of SwF 170 million for the four-year financial period. The WMO Executive Council, in June 1987, had approved a budget of SwF 82,128,300 for the 1988-1989 biennium.

In June, the Executive Council approved supplementary estimates of SwF 506,100 to cover the anticipated deficit in support costs for technical co-operation activities.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 1988, several legal instruments were adopted under the auspices of the International Maritime Organization (IMO)—the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation and a Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf. Protocols also were adopted to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974 (SOLAS Convention) and the 1978 SOLAS Protocol and the International Convention on Load Lines, 1966.

IMO membership rose to 132 during 1988 following the admission of the Solomon Islands on 27 June; the organization also had one associate member (see Annex I).

Activities in 1988

The IMO Council, the organization's governing body between sessions of its biennial Assembly, chose James Cowley (United Kingdom) as the winner of the International Maritime Prize for 1987. The Prize is awarded annually to the individual or organization judged to have made the most significant contribution to IMO's work and objectives.

The theme for World Maritime Day, which was celebrated at IMO headquarters on 22 September, was "Shipboard management for maritime safety and pollution prevention".

Training facilities

The World Maritime University at Malmö, Sweden, had a total enrolment of 102 students, the maximum number that the University could accommodate. Eight new countries were represented in the class—Burma, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Kiribati, Malta, Namibia, the Niger, Oman and Sao Tome and Principe. Some 97 countries had sent students to the University since its opening in 1983. The University was established under IMO auspices to provide advanced training for senior personnel, mainly from developing countries, involved in maritime administration, technical management of shipping companies and maritime education.

During the year, two more institutions were established as the result of co-operation between IMO and its member States. The first, the IMO International Maritime Academy (Trieste, Italy), was to provide short-term training courses in various aspects of shipping and act as the apex for the implementation of IMO's model courses programme (see below). The IMO International Maritime Law Institute (Valetta, Malta), established to provide post-graduate training in maritime law to suitably qualified law graduates, particularly those from developing countries, was inaugurated on 6 October.

The first titles in a series of model courses, designed to assist maritime institutes—especially in developing countries—to organize and introduce new training courses and improve existing material, were published by IMO. The model courses were intended to assist the implementation of IMO conventions, codes and other standards and to help ensure that a common agreed minimum standard was achieved by all maritime States.

Prevention of pollution

Annex V of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the 1978 Protocol (MARPOL 73/78), entered into force on 31 December 1988. It contained measures to prevent pollution at sea by dumping garbage, including the ban on the dumping of all plastics, such as synthetic ropes, synthetic fishing nets and plastic garbage bags. Other forms of garbage could be dumped under strictly controlled conditions. IMO's Marine Environment Protection Committee (London, 5-9 September) agreed that the North Sea should be made a Special Area under annex V. Certain seas were designated as Special Areas under the annex because of their unique environmental problems. In those areas the dumping of plastics and garbage was completely banned and the disposal of food wastes was strictly controlled.

Meeting at IMO headquarters (3-7 October), contracting parties to the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Dumping Convention) agreed to end incineration at sea by the end of 1994. They further agreed not to export wastes intended for incineration at sea to any State which was not a party to the Convention, nor to allow their disposal in other ways which were harmful to the environment. Measures were also adopted to prevent the unrestricted use of tributyltin compounds, which were often used as anti-fouling paint on ships.

Ship security and safety of life at sea

A conference convened by IMO (Rome, Italy, 1-10 March 1988) adopted two international treaties designed to combat unlawful acts against shipping and other maritime activities: the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation and a Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf. The Convention dealt with offences against the safety of ships and persons on board and the supplementary Protocol with offences against fixed platforms.

The 1974 SOLAS Convention was amended by the Maritime Safety Committee (London, 11-22 April). The amendments were designed to improve the safety of roll-on/roll-off passenger ships and were expected to enter into force on 22 October 1989 under the Convention's "tacit acceptance" procedures. On 28 October, further amendments, also concerning the safety of roll-on/roll-off ships, were adopted at a special session of the Committee. They were expected to enter into force on 29 April 1990.

IMO model courses, available from the IMO Publications Section, dealt with oil tanker familiarization, radar observation and plotting, the operational use of automatic radar-plotting aids, radar simulator, basic stability, personnel survival, maritime search and rescue, mission co-ordinator, maritime search and rescue administrator, maritime search and rescue co-ordinator, port state control, basic fire fighting, planned fleet maintenance and hull protection, and marine accident and incident investigation.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the IMO secretariat employed 256 full-time staff members (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 99 were in the Professional and higher categories and 157 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 12 Professional and 23 General Service staff employed on technical assistance projects. (For principal officers of the secretariat, see Annex II.)

Budget

In 1987, the IMO Assembly had resolved that the budget appropriations and assessments be denominated in pounds sterling. The Assembly adopted a budget of 21,627,200 pounds for the 1988-1989 biennium, with an appropriation of 10,574,100 pounds for 1988 and 11,053,100 pounds for 1989. The 1989 budget was recalculated in November 1988 to 10,564,700 pounds, giving a revised total appropriation for the biennium of 21,138,800 pounds. The assessments of member States for 1988 totalled 9,353,300 pounds.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

During 1988, the membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) increased to 121 with the accessions to the 1967 Convention establishing WIPO of Ecuador, Guinea-Bissau, Swaziland and Trinidad and Tobago (see Annex I). The number of States party to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property rose to 98 with the accession of Guinea-Bissau. The number of States party to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works rose to 79 with the accession of Colombia, Peru and Trinidad and Tobago. The Republic of Korea became party to the Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure, bringing the number of contracting States to 22. Burkina Faso became party to the Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations, bringing the number of contracting States to 32. Burkina Faso and Trinidad and Tobago became party to the Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms, bringing the total number to 42. At the end of the year, the total membership of WIPO, including that of the various Unions administered by it, was 132.

Seventeen treaties in the two main fields of intellectual property were administered by WIPO in 1988. They are listed below in order of adoption:

Industrial property: Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive Indications of Source on Goods; Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Marks; The Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs; Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purpose of the Registration of Marks; Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and Their International Registration; Locarno Agreement establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs; Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT); Strasbourg Agreement concerning the International Patent Classification (IPC); Trademark Registration Treaty; Vienna Agreement establishing an International Classification of the Figurative Elements of Marks; Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purpose of Patent Procedure; Nairobi Treaty on the Protection of the Olympic Symbol.

Copyright and neighbouring rights: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms; Brussels Convention relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite.

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it held their nineteenth series of meetings (Geneva, 26 September-3 October 1988).

Activities in 1988

Development co-operation

WIPO co-operated with developing countries and with intergovernmental organizations in their development projects relating to intellectual property, by providing assistance in the preparation of legislation, or establishment or modernization of national or regional institutions, including patent documentation and information services.

Three WIPO permanent programmes, supervised by intergovernmental permanent committees, provided the framework for development co-operation relating to industrial property, patent information and copyright and neighbouring rights.

Regarding industrial property, WIPO organized national, regional, subregional and interregional meetings, in co-operation with Governments and/or organizations, at its headquarters in Geneva and at Luanda (Angola), Canberra (Australia), Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), Varna (Bulgaria), Ouagadougou (Burkina Faso), Beijing (China), Abidjan (Côte d'Ivoire), Cairo (Egypt), San Salvador (El Salvador), Bordeaux, Paris and Strasbourg (France), Munich (Federal Republic of Germany), Accra (Ghana), Hong Kong, New Delhi (India), Tokyo (Japan), Amman (Jordan), Vientiane (Lao People's Democratic Republic), Monrovia (Liberia), Tripoli (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), Rabat (Morocco), The Hague (Netherlands), Seoul (Republic of Korea), Singapore, Stockholm (Sweden), Lomé (Togo), Washington, D.C. (United States), Caracas (Venezuela), Ho Chi Minh City (Viet Nam), Belgrade and Dubrovnik (Yugoslavia) and Harare (Zimbabwe).

Medals and prizes for inventors and promoters of innovation were awarded by WIPO at national and international exhibitions or contests for inventors and special ceremonies held in Belgium, Benin, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Czechoslovakia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia, Iraq, Japan, Mongolia, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe.

Continuing a programme started in 1975, 447 state-of-the-art search reports on technology disclosed in patent documents and related literature were provided to developing countries free of charge under agreements concluded between WIPO and contributing industrial property offices in developed countries. The reports were prepared by the patent offices of Australia, Austria, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, Switzerland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the International Bureau—the WIPO secretariat.

Regarding copyright and related fields, WIPO organized national, regional, subregional and inter-regional meetings at WIPO headquarters and at Buenos Aires (Argentina), Bogota (Colombia), Blantyre (Malawi), Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia), Lagos (Nigeria), Lima (Peru) and Zurich (Switzerland).

Under training, 291 fellowships were granted to nationals of 92 countries and seven organizations in industrial property and 50 fellowships to nationals of 36 developing countries and one organization in copyright. In the industrial property sector, 32 countries, four intergovernmental organizations and two other institutions provided individual and group training; 16 countries and one institution provided such training in copyright.

Industrial property

A world-wide forum on the impact of emerging technologies on the law of intellectual property (Geneva, September) examined the interrelationship of advanced or new technologies and the law of intellectual property, and dealt with biotechnology, computer technology, and new techniques of reproduction and communication.

The International Bureau of WIPO prepared two documents, one on model provisions for national laws and another on provisions in the Paris, Berne and Neighbouring Rights Conventions for a meeting of the Committee of Experts on Measures against Counterfeiting and Piracy (Geneva, April). Wide support was expressed for WIPO's initiative to combat counterfeiting and piracy and to establish model provisions, which could serve as a basis for preparing national laws in that area.

The Committee of Experts on Biotechnological Inventions and Industrial Property (Geneva, October) based its discussions on material prepared by the International Bureau. It was recommended that a meeting of WIPO and the International Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants be convened to discuss the interface between patent protection and plant variety rights.

A symposium organized jointly by WIPO and the French National Institute of Industrial Property (Bordeaux, November) dealt with the protection of appellations of origin and indications of source and their relevance to internal and external trade. The symposium considered, in particular, questions relating to natural products such as wine, cheese, coffee, tea and tobacco.

Other expert committees dealt with the harmonization of certain provisions in laws for the protection of inventions and intellectual property in respect of integrated circuits. In addition, work continued on updating IPC and other classifications concerning industrial designs or registration of trade and service marks.

During 1988, 11,996 international applications under PCT were received by the International Bureau from 28 receiving offices. The PCT Gazette was published fortnightly and special issues were published in January and July to consolidate general information. The total number of registrations of marks under the Madrid Agreement was 13,016. To that figure should be added 4,538 renewals. The total number of registrations and renewals effected was therefore 17,554.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

Activities in copyright and neighbouring rights included the convening, jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, of committees of governmental experts on photographic works (Paris, April) and on the evaluation and synthesis of principles on various categories of works (Geneva, June/July). In addition, committees of experts met on the establishment of an international register of audio-visual works (Geneva, March) and to prepare for a diplomatic conference for the conclusion of a treaty on the international registration of audio-visual works (Geneva, November/December).

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, WIPO employed 319 full-time staff members. Of these, 107 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 40 member States) and 212 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The principal sources of the WIPO budget—107,082,000 Swiss francs for the 1988-1989 biennium—are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services (primarily under PCT and the Madrid Agreement). Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, IPC, Nice, Locarno and Vienna Unions and by WIPO member States not belonging to any of the Unions.

NOTE: For details of WIPO activities, see Governing Bodies of WIPO and the Unions Administered by WIPO: Report of the Director General.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

In 1988, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued to provide concessional assistance to finance agricultural projects in low-income, food-deficit countries. The Fund, aimed at increasing food production, reducing malnutrition and alleviating rural poverty, concentrated on the poorest farmers, providing them with the necessary production means and institutional support. Particular attention was given to restoring agricultural development capacity to sub-Saharan countries. IFAD also focused on women in development, co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the environment.

Two newly funded programmes were introduced during the year—the Extended Co-operation Programme (ECP) with NGOs, which for the first time afforded a direct functional link between IFAD and NGOs, with government consent, and the Special Programme for Women in Development, designed to enhance the Fund's technical capacity to address the problems of poor rural women.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1988 (April, September and November), approving 24 loans for 23 projects, including five loans under the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification (SPA) and 31 technical assistance grants.

The Board authorized the IFAD President to negotiate and sign a co-operation agreement with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The agreement was finalized during the year, as was a co-operation agreement with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, for which the Board had given its authorization in 1987.

The Board approved the submission of two reports to the United Nations Economic and Social Council, on operational activities for development and on IFAD's contribution to the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990."

Membership of IFAD rose to 143 in 1988, with the admission of Trinidad and Tobago on 24 March. Of the current members, 20 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 111 in Category III (other developing countries) (see Annex I).

Resources

Initial resources and contributions to the first replenishment provided IFAD with about $2.1 billion to cover operations for two 3-year periods from 1978 to 1983. Because of delay in concluding negotiations on the second replenishment of resources, the first had to be stretched over four years (1981-1984) instead of three years. The second replenishment, to which IFAD members had pledged $488 million, came into effect on 27 November 1986.

Contributions and firm pledges to SPA, which became effective in May 1986, exceeded the three-year target of $300 million as at 31 January 1988. However, subsequent appreciation of the United States dollar reduced the value to $253 million.

Activities in 1988

The new loans approved for 23 projects, denominated in special drawing rights (SDRs), totalled SDR 176.5 million ($229.8 million), including five loans amounting to SDR 40.5 million ($52.4 million) under SPA. The 31 technical assistance grants came to SDR 9.8 million ($12.8 million), including 11 grants of SDR 2.5 million ($3.2 million) from SPA resources and one of SDR 29,230 ($38,000) under ECP. The total financial assistance provided in 1988 amounted to SDR 186.3 million ($242.5 million), as compared to SDR 175.2 million ($226.6 million) in 1987.

Of the 23 projects approved, 22 were IFAD-initiated, of which 14, or 63.6 per cent, attracted co-financing from other donors amounting to $46.7 million.

During the year, 10 projects were approved for the Africa region, for a lending total of SDR 81.5 million ($105.6 million) under SPA and the Regular Programme combined. The projects dealt with agricultural and rural development, rehabilitation of drought-affected areas (including assistance to nomadic pastoralists), livestock development and artisanal fisheries.

The seven projects approved for Asia, involving SDR 41.2 million ($53.8 million), emphasized credit for smallholder farmers and the landless (especially women) and livestock and small-scale fisheries development.

The three projects for Latin America and the Caribbean, obtaining loans of SDR 19.5 million ($25.9 million), aimed to meet the credit needs of small farmers in poor regions.

In the Near East and North Africa, three projects were approved under SPA and the Regular Programme, involving loans of SDR 35.1 million ($46 million). They dealt with dry-land farming and irrigation improvement, co-operative credit, and protection and development of a degraded watershed crossing the border between Algeria and Tunisia.

Under the Regular Programme, a total of $9.5 million was approved in grants for all technical assistance activities: $7.3 million for agricultural research, $1.4 million for project preparation and $0.8 million for training. Under SPA, technical assistance grants totalling $3.2 million were approved: $0.4 million for project preparation, $1.6 million for technical experts and training in IFAD-financed projects and $1.2 million from the Special Operations Facility designed to speed and facilitate project start-up; In addition, for the first time, a technical assistance grant of $38,000 was approved under ECP. Total grants amounted to $12.8 million.

IFAD continued its special programming missions, which focused on creating a policy dialogue with Governments on the general framework for smallholder development, developing country strategies as a guide to the Fund's investment allocation and identifying specific projects and programmes. Three missions were carried out in Brazil, Ethiopia and Rwanda. In addition, a rural development review mission went to Oman to take a first look at entrenched rural poverty problems and to evolve a possible role for IFAD.

Secretariat

At the end of 1988, the IFAD secretariat totalled 189 staff members, of whom 76 were in the Professional category and above—drawn from 37 nationalities—and 113 in the General Service category (For senior secretariat officers, see Annex II.)

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme in 1988 was $91.8 million, consisting of $65.6 million in investment income, including gains of $1.9 million resulting from active portfolio management, and $26.2 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total operational and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $27.9 million (including an exchange rate gain on operations of $0.87 million), compared with a budget, before contingency, of $35 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $63.9 million.

Total revenue under SPA was $8.8 million, consisting of $8.7 million in investment income and $0.1 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total expenses for the year amounted to $2.2 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $3.7 million.

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

In 1988, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued its activities in industrial operations, strategies and promotion. Special programmes included the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980s), assistance to the least developed countries (LDCs), industrial co-operation among developing countries, the integration of women in industrial development and co-operation with industrial enterprises and non-governmental organizations.

The Industrial Development Board, at its fourth regular session (Vienna, Austria, 10-18 October), considered, among other things, IDDA, UNIDO's contribution to the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,^a restructuring of world industrial production and redeployment, industrialization of LDCs, technical assistance to the Namibian and Palestinian peoples and to South African national liberation movements and UNIDO's contributions to environment and industrial development.

At its second special session (Vienna, 21 June), the Board elected a new Vice-President and appointed a deputy Director-General of Administration (see Annex II).

At the end of December, 151 States were members of UNIDO, including Australia, which withdrew from the Organization effective 31 December 1988. New members in 1988 were Albania and the Maldives (see Annex I).

Industrial strategies and operations

A total of 1,784 projects, valued at $119.8 million, were implemented or being implemented in 1988. Activities were funded from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (64.3 per cent), the regular UNIDO budget (2.1 per cent), UNDP-administered trust funds (0.8 per cent) and other funds (32.8 per cent).

Africa, including the African Arab States, accounted for 32.1 per cent of technical assistance delivered by UNIDO during the year; the Americas, 9 per cent; non-African Arab States, 15 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 36.7 per cent; Europe, 3.6 per cent; and global and interregional projects, 14.3 per cent.

Chemical industries accounted for $31.4 million of technical co-operation expenditures; institutional infrastructure, $15.8 million; engineering industries, $13.7 million; agro-industries, $11.6 million; metallurgical industries, $8 million; training, $6.7 million; industrial management and rehabilitation, $6 million; industrial planning, $5.8 million; feasibility studies, $4.9 million; and other activities, $15.9 million.

By project component, personnel accounted for $49.2 million (41.1 per cent); equipment, $35.8 million (29.9 per cent); fellowships and training, $17.9 million (15 per cent); sub-contracts, $13.4 million (11.2 per cent); and miscellaneous, $3.4 million (2.8 per cent).

Implementation of industrial operations

Agro-industries. Technical co-operation expenditures for agro-industries amounted to $11.6 million, with some 62 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 23.2 per cent of the total; the Americas, 7 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 7.7 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 57.9 per cent; Europe, 1.5 per cent; and interregional/global, 9.7 per cent. A total of 136 projects were completed or being implemented.

Activities focused on textile and garment production; improvement of existing industrial structures; replacement of imported raw materials with local products; food development, processing and packaging; and improvements in leather production and marketing.

Chemical industries. Technical co-operation expenditures for chemical industries amounted to $31.4 million, with about 67 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 37.8 per cent; the Americas, 4.3 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 27.7 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 48.1 per cent; Europe, 3.7 per cent; and interregional/global, 5 per cent. A total of 349 projects were completed or being implemented.

Activities focused on cement, lime and related industries; production of building materials using locally available materials; ceramics and glass; petrochemicals and petroleum refining; fertilizer; pharmaceuticals; biotechnology; pulp and paper; energy, fuel technology and pollution control; and the environment.

Engineering industries. In the engineering industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $13.7 million, with about 92 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 29.1 per cent; the Americas, 10.2 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 3.1 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 51.9 per cent; Europe, 6.4 per cent; and interregional/global, 0.4 per cent. A total of 198 projects were completed or being implemented, covering agricultural machinery and equipment; metalworking and machine tools; industrial design and production automation; and land- and water-transport equipment.

Feasibility studies. Technical co-operation expenditures for feasibility studies amounted to $4.9 million, with some 68 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 54.5 per cent; the Americas, 1.4 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 24.5 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 21.3 per cent; and interregional/global, 8.2 per cent. During the year, 106 projects were completed or being implemented.

Some 80 opportunity, pre-feasibility and feasibility studies were implemented, leading to new investment projects and the rehabilitation or expansion of existing enterprises. The UNIDO methodology for industrial investment project preparation, evaluation and financing and the application of a computer model for feasibility analysis and reporting were the subjects of 30 seminars at which more than 800 professionals from development banks, consulting firms and ministries were trained.

Industrial management and rehabilitation. Technical co-operation expenditures on industrial management and rehabilitation amounted to $6 million, with some 88 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 36.5 per cent; the Americas, 15.1 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 19.1 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 36.0 per cent; Europe, 4.3 per cent; and interregional/global, 0.7 per cent. A total of 115 projects were completed or being completed.

Efforts to modernize management structures and to apply computers to management continued. In addition, energy conservation and management activities were undertaken, and rehabilitation and restructuring in the wood sector were emphasized.

Industrial planning. Technical co-operation expenditures for industrial planning amounted to $5.8 million, with about 72 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 54.9 per cent; the Americas, 21.1 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 4.1 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 15 per cent; Europe, 2.2 per cent; and interregional/global, 2.8 per cent. A total of 89 projects were completed or being implemented.

Several major projects aimed at industrial restructuring, while others dealt with improving the decision support structure, upgrading industrial statistical systems and introducing management information systems. In addition, several industrial master plans, sectoral surveys and sectoral plans were carried out.

Institutional infrastructure. In the area of institutional infrastructure, technical co-operation expenditures totalled $15.8 million, with some 84 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 37.7 per cent; the Americas, 15.2 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 22.9 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 21.8 per cent; Europe, 3.1 per cent; and interregional/global, 4.9 per cent. During the year, 191 projects were completed or being implemented.

Technical co-operation in this field was characterized by demand for a comprehensive package of technical services. The promotion and development of small- and medium-scale industries continued to be the predominant programme element. Special activities and projects in support of such industries were strengthened, including enterprise-to-enterprise co-operation, national and international sub-contracting assistance to chambers of commerce and adaptation of products for export.

Metallurgical industries. Technical co-operation expenditures for metallurgical industries amounted to $8 million, with some 90 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 20.4 per cent; the Americas, 9.7 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 6.8 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 63.2 per cent; Europe, 3.6 per cent; and interregional/global, 2.3 per cent. A total of 135 projects were completed or being implemented.

Emphasis was placed on developing the bauxite-processing sector for aluminium and alumina production; developing the foundry industry; various aspects of copper production; strengthening and developing centres for metallurgical technology; and developing environmentally sound projects.

Training. Expenditures for fellowships and training components in all technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO amounted to $17.9 million, with some 17.8 per cent financed by UNDP. Of that total, $12.2 million was spent on fellowships and study tours and $5.7 million on group training and meetings. Africa accounted for 28.3 per cent; the Americas, 9.8 per cent; the non-African Arab States, 4.3 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 5.2 per cent; Europe, 2.7 per cent; and interregional/global, 53.9 per cent. A total of 176 projects were implemented or being implemented.

Industrial promotion

Industrial promotion continued to focus on reinforcing links between activities related to industrial investment, consultations and development, and the transfer of technology.

System of Consultations. The UNIDO System of Consultations, a mechanism for achieving the goals of restructuring world industry and increasing the share of developing countries in world production, as set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,^b held two consultations: the First Interregional Consultation on the Food-Processing Industry with Emphasis on Sugar-cane Processing (Havana, Cuba, 26-30 September) and the Regional Consultation on the Phosphatic Fertilizers and Pesticides Industries in Africa (Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, 12-16 December). Preparatory meetings were held for consultations in 1989 on fruit and vegetable processing, small- and medium-scale enterprises and the electronics industry.

Development and transfer of technology. Preparation began, in co-operation with the Eastern and Southern African Management Institute, to establish an informatics development centre for that subregion. In June, under a project funded by Italy, preparations began to establish an international centre for science and high technology at Trieste, Italy.

Two national workshops were prepared in the area of technology policies (Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania), and UNIDO contributed to a national workshop on science and technology organized by Ethiopia.

A workshop on protein engineering and a forum of scientists from 21 member countries of the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology (ICGEB) were held (Trieste, March). In May, the New Delhi component of ICGEB began functioning. ICGEB provided advisory services and assistance in biotechnology to Argentina, Egypt, Kuwait and Viet Nam. A programme for a meeting on biotechnology in the Arab region was developed in co-operation with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia.

Steps were taken to establish a network of materials-related centres for developing countries, emphasizing new materials and materials testing and control. In response to a request by Brazil, discussions were initiated on establishing an international material assessment and applications centre.

Activities related to new and renewable sources of energy concentrated on expanding the system of networks for research and development training and for information exchange among institutions in developing countries. Technical manuals for the design, standardization and fabrication of equipment for small hydropower stations were completed in co-operation with the Latin American Energy Organization. A new technology for small-scale alcohol production from sugar was introduced in Kenya with assistance from Brazil, and a demonstration project for the gasification of agricultural waste was started in Zimbabwe.

In the area of technology acquisition and negotiation, technical advisory services were expanded, and a number of workshops and seminars were held. Country profiles on regulations and practices regarding technology acquisition in developing countries were finalized. Within the Technological Information Exchange System, the Computerized Registry Information System, designed to handle technology-transfer information intended as a tool for effective policy-making, strategic planning, evaluation and monitoring of contract implementation, was installed in Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Thailand and Tunisia. In addition, a promotional programme for strengthening basic technological infrastructure was initiated, with special attention directed to Africa and Central America.

At the end of 1988, the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) networking system had more than 50 participating national and four regional focal points. Guidelines were being prepared to clarify their role, modus operandi and internal organization. Screenmail, an electronic mail system, was being used to facilitate communication between INTIB and its focal points. A workshop on information networking and co-operation was held in Moscow. Training in the use of INTIB and other UNIDO information systems and data bases was organized, and projects to strengthen national information organizations and their link with INTIB were being implemented in Algeria, Cameroon, Mongolia, Nigeria, Poland, Senegal and Viet Nam.

The Industrial Inquiry Service supplied assessed information in response to more than 1,500 inquiries. Directories on research and technological institutions dealing with sugar and sugar by-products and with fruits and vegetables were published. At year's end, the Technology Supply Data Base had more than 2,000 entries.

Investment promotion. UNIDO continued to assist developing countries in identifying sound investment projects with local sponsors and in finding foreign partners to provide a share of the financial and other resources required in their implementation. A total of 476 new investment projects were identified and formulated; 121 industrial investment projects were successfully promoted, representing a total investment of $413.8⁷ million.

UNIDO launched a project development facility at the UNIDO Investment Promotion Service (Cologne, Federal Republic of Germany), financed by the Federal Republic of Germany, to facilitate the development of small- and medium-scale industries in developing countries.

In Africa, UNIDO prepared, together with the Centre for Industrial Development of the European Economic Community, and participated in the Eighth Industrial Forum for West Africa (Dakar, Senegal), which was attended by some 650 project sponsors and potential foreign partners. Assistance was provided to the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Zambia to strengthen the role of private industry. Preparations began for two investment project promotion forums—one for the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone, and the other for the member States of the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern Africa.

In the Arab region, an industrial investment programme was approved for implementation for the electronics industry, covering Algeria, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and United Arab Emirates. Assistance was provided to the Sudan in promoting a large cotton-spinning project for which the pre-investment study was prepared by the Arab Industrial Development Organization.

In Asia and the Pacific, follow-up activities focused on China, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand. The Investors' Forum for Indonesia resulted in some 20 projects that were under negotiation. At an investment projects promotion forum for the Philippines held at Manila, 140 projects were identified and promoted by UNIDO and were discussed among Philippine project sponsors and potential foreign partners. The forum led to the signing of 72 letters of intent for investment projects with a total investment value of some $220 million.

In the Latin American and Caribbean region, industrial investment activities were based on a strategy aimed at addressing the range of issues relevant to foreign investment. Attention was given in particular to evaluating investment projects in the context of their particular subsectors; investment legislation and incentives; the competence of local sponsors; improving the quality of project formulation and screening; effective marketing and promotion strategies; and establishing a computerized investment project management system. At the regional level, a programme was designed for the Andean group under which the support of a leading development finance institution and UNDP was enlisted.

Assistance to LDCs

As food production and food security continued to be the dominant problems in the LDCs, the bulk of UNDP-financed technical assistance was channelled to agriculture. Projects approved under all sources of funds totalled $20.5 million, of which $16.8 million accounted for new projects. The total resources allocated to the industrial sector in LDCs almost doubled in 1988.

The main thrust of UNIDO's assistance continued to be the development and promotion of small- and medium-scale industries using locally available raw materials, industrial planning and programming and the preparation of pre-feasibility and feasibility studies for investment projects. Projects dealing with food processing, food preservation, and research and development on food production technology received high priority.

Industrial co-operation among developing countries

More than 40 co-operation agreements were reached in such areas as food processing, industrial training, feasibility studies, small-scale production enterprises, leather processing, aquaculture, quality control and technical infrastructural development at the Solidarity Ministerial Meeting for Co-operation in the Industrial Development of Cape Verde (Praia, Cape Verde, 6-10 June). Other activities included the promotion of various bilateral industrial co-operation projects, including co-operation between China and Egypt in phosphate mining and processing as well as in rare-earth extraction; co-operation between Burundi and Romania in the construction of two small industrial units in Burundi; a programme of co-operation between Cuba and China in micro- and mini-hydroelectric plants and the production of newsprint from bagasse; establishment of carpentry and exercise book workshops in the United Republic of Tanzania in co-operation with Turkey; a programme of co-operation between Senegal and Brazil in the field of fruit conservation and processing; co-operation between Ethiopia and India in the small-scale industry sector; and co-operation between Rwanda and Yugoslavia in the establishment of an industrial estate in Rwanda.

At a working group meeting on co-operative arrangements among selected developing countries (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 31 May-4 June), nearly 50 participants from 19 countries identified 43 technical and other co-operation projects. The meeting was organized in co-operation with the Argentine Association of Machine Tools, Accessories and Ancillaries and the Argentine National Institute of Industrial Technology.

Two technical workshops were held in Yugoslavia: one at Ljubljana, where experts from eight developing countries met with Yugoslav experts and agreed on measures to ensure a permanent flow of information among them in the area of small- and medium-scale industries, and the other at Novi Sad, where the focus was on agricultural machinery and agro-industries and where participants from 21 countries identified 35 industrial projects for follow-up action and implementation. At an expert group meeting on the processing of raw materials (Vienna, 22-26 August), 16 experts from developing countries and representatives of international organizations prepared conclusions and recommendations on food processing, non-metallic minerals and textile fibres in preparation for the Action Committee on Raw Materials, scheduled to meet in Nigeria in April 1989.

Other promotional activities included negotiations with the Korean Institute for Economics and Technology to prepare the way for an industrial forum on enterprise-to-enterprise co-operation in Asia; preparations for a meeting on establishing multinational production enterprises among developing countries; initial work on a programme of inventories to help match the industrial requirements of developing countries by drawing on the industrial and service capacities of other developing countries; and preparatory work on a data base to be operated within INTIB and made available to regional information centres.

Industrial Development

Decade for Africa (1980s)

Under the IDDA programme, technical co-operation activities concentrated on establishing pilot and demonstration plants, the accelerated development of human resources and institutional infrastructure for industrial development. Technical co-operation programmes amounting to about $22 million, covering such areas as leather products, food and agro-industries, telecommunications, industrial rehabilitation and training, were formulated and promoted among potential donors.

Intra-African industrial co-operation continued to be prominent in IDDA activities. Meetings on the promotion of intra-African industrial co-operation for the Northern and Eastern/Southern African subregions were organized by UNIDO in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and relevant intergovernmental organizations. Both meetings adopted a revised subregional programme consisting of investment and support projects, along with a strategy to accelerate its implementation.

UNIDO hosted the eighth meeting of the Joint Committee on IDDA of the secretariats of ECA and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in February. It also contributed, at the request of OAU, to the Fifth All-Africa Trade Fair (Kinshasa, Zaire, July) in the form of a seminar on IDDA focusing on the link between agriculture and industry, demonstrations of African-developed food-processing technologies and general information about UNIDO.

Integration of women in industrial development

The number of technical co-operation projects targeting women increased in 1988, with 21 projects valued at over $3.1 million being implemented and 13 projects valued at $8.5 million in the pipeline.

Attention was given to the problems involved in the development and dissemination of appropriate food-processing technologies for rural women, and research was carried out on how UNIDO should deal with those problems in co-operation with the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM).

Following recognition of the need for a more methodological approach to statistics and data collection on women's participation in specific industrial subsectors, UNIDO entered into consultations with the United Nations Statistical Office, the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna, UNDP, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and UNIFEM, as well as with relevant intergovernmental, national, non-governmental and research organizations producing statistics on women. An exchange of statistical and other information on women in industrial activities was agreed upon.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the UNIDO secretariat totalled 1,257 staff members: 423 in the Professional and higher categories and 834 in the General Service and related categories. (See Annex II for UNIDO officers.)

SIDFAs

Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) continued to assist in programming and implementing technical co-operation projects.

In 1988, among the main activities of the Field Representative Advisory Committee were laying the groundwork for a set of guidelines for establishing work targets and introducing periodic work programmes for SIDFAs and Junior Professional Officers (JPOs).

UNIDO was represented by 36 SIDFAs, working with UNDP resident representatives; 24 were financed by UNDP: 9 from the regular budget and 3 from voluntary contributions.

The JPOs provided valuable support to the technical co-operation and other programmes of UNIDO. A total of 74 JPOs, including 8 nationals of developing countries, were employed by the end of 1988. The programme was supported by Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

Budget

For 1988, total expenditures were $191.5 million, comprising $119.8 million for technical co-operation programmes and $71.7 million for headquarters expenditures. The latter was financed largely from the regular budget ($56.9 million) and supplemented by $14.8 million derived from a 13 per cent reimbursement for technical assistance delivery.

For the 1988-1989 biennium, the UNIDO General Conference approved net appropriations of $154.3 million.

Chapter XVIII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana, Cuba, November 1947-March 1948) drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). Since the charter itself was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, while drawing up the charter, the members of the Conference's Preparatory Committee negotiated on tariffs among themselves, and also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)-a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations, which is the only multilateral instrument that lays down agreed rules for international trade. It entered into force on 1 January 1948 with 23 contracting parties. Since then, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

As at 31 December 1988, the number of contracting parties to GATT had risen to 96 with the addition of Lesotho (8 January) (see Annex I). One other country, Tunisia, had acceded provisionally. The contracting parties conducted about 90 per cent of all international trade; 28 other countries, to whose territories GATT had been applied before their independence, maintained a de facto application of GATT pending final decisions as to their future commercial policy.

Multilateral trade negotiations

Uruguay Round

Trade Negotiations Committee

In February 1988, the Trade Negotiations Committee, the body responsible for overseeing the Uruguay Round (GATT's eighth "round" of multilateral trade negotiations, launched in 1986^a), decided to hold a mid-term review of the Round at a ministerial level meeting (Montreal, Canada, 5-9 December). More than 90 Ministers attended the meeting along with 1,000 delegates.

Among the decisions reached at the mid-term review were an agreed package of trade concessions on tropical products; an agreement on institutional changes negotiated in the groups on dispute settlement procedure and the functioning of the GATT system; and agreement on a far-reaching text on trade in services. An impasse on agriculture could not be broken and therefore the Ministers decided that the nine subjects on which agreement had been secured should be put on hold and that the Committee should reconvene at senior-officials level in April 1989.

The Surveillance Body reported to the Committee and monitored two commitments contained in the 1986 Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round:^b a standstill (a freeze on any further restrictive trade inconsistent with GATT) and a rollback (the phasing out of measures inconsistent with GATT, or bringing them into conformity with GATT). By the end of 1988, the Surveillance Body had reported 24 notifications of alleged breaches of standstill from 11 participants against eight participants. Eighteen of the notifications came from developed countries and six from developing countries and covered quantitative restrictions, tariffs, import controls and prohibitions, export restrictions, internal taxes, production and export subsidies, and government procurement.

Group of Negotiations on Goods

The Group of Negotiations on Goods oversaw the work of the 14 negotiating groups which were established in 1987 to conduct the work outlined in part I of the 1986 Ministerial Declaration. The activities of the negotiating groups at the half-way mark of the Uruguay Round are listed below.

Tariffs. As in the past, the group was faced with the problem of finding a common method for cutting tariffs. In 1988, there was widespread support for a Tokyo Round (1973-1979—the seventh "round" of multilateral trade negotiations) formula for its ease of use and potential for achieving the widest and deepest cuts. At the mid-term review, the Ministers decided that: substantive tariff negotiations should begin not later than 1 July 1989, with the overall target amount of, at the minimum, the tariff reduction achieved by the formula participants in the Tokyo Round; the scope of tariff bindings should be substantially widened to provide greater security and predictability in international trade, with credit given for bindings and appropriate recognition accorded to liberalization measures adopted since 1 June 1986; and participation of developing countries would follow the general principles governing the negotiations, including those giving them special treatment.

Non-tariff measures. To move the negotiations forward, participants were invited to submit, by mid-year, proposals on what non-tariff measures should be included in the negotiations, classifying the measures under three negotiating approaches: through drafting of multilateral rules; use of a systematic formula method; and the traditional request-and-offer procedure.

In June, 15 industrial and developing countries put forth a proposal addressing the main issues facing the group. The sponsors, stressing the need for a clear negotiating framework in time for the mid-term review, favoured the general use of a systematic approach. The proposal suggested using a formula to reduce the effects of measures with a volume or price-restricting character. Still, some countries continued to prefer the request-and-offer procedure as the main negotiating tool. In December, the Ministers agreed that, to pave the way for substantive negotiations, the group must establish the necessary framework, including procedures, by June 1989. They listed a set of principles and guidelines to underpin that framework.

Natural resource-based products. It was generally recognized that the main trade barriers on resource products were also being negotiated in other groups. The group might have to wait for decisions on negotiating techniques and modalities by other groups, in particular those on tariffs and non-tariff measures, before it could formulate its own. That was also agreed by Ministers at the mid-term review.

Textiles and clothing. The group's main task was to negotiate the return of the textile and clothing sector to GATT rather than the members of the Multifibre Arrangement-the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles-which had been regulating such trade since 1974.^c During 1988, the group examined a number of proposals aimed at achieving that objective. At the mid-term review, Ministers were unable to agree on a text setting out points for action.

Agriculture. In 1988, participants examined 1987 proposals for the reform of agricultural trade and new submissions. Concerns were raised relating to other non-economic issues besides food security, including protection of the environment, maintenance of rural populations and rural development. The group made progress on the technical aspects of its work, establishing a technical group to facilitate further work on an aggregate measurement of government support for agriculture and related matters and a working group on sanitary and phytosanitary regulations and barriers.

Tropical products. The first concrete result of the Uruguay Round was a trade liberalization package for early implementation negotiated at the mid-term review. The "Montreal" package covered seven product groups: tropical beverages; spices, flowers and plants; certain oilseeds, vegetable oils and oilcakes; tobacco, rice and tropical roots; tropical fruits and nuts; tropical wood and rubber; and jute and hard fibres. The trade covered by the concessions amounted to some $20 billion.

Review of GATT articles. Suggestions were tabled on several articles of the General Agreement. In Montreal, the Ministers agreed that the group should define issues for negotiation with precision and clarity and that specific proposals should be brought forward as soon as possible, preferably not later than 31 December 1989.

Multinational trade negotiation agreements and arrangements. Discussion touched on six Tokyo Round codes dealing with anti-dumping, customs valuation, subsidies and countervailing measures, government procurement, technical barriers to trade, and import licensing procedures. The Ministers at the mid-term review agreed that the group should pursue its negotiations and encouraged participants to submit specific texts at an early date.

Safeguards. The group continued to discuss the following elements which could form the basis of a safeguards agreement: transparency, temporary nature of safeguard actions, degressivity and structural adjustment, compensation and retaliation, product and geographic coverage, "grey-area" measures, multilateral surveillance and dispute settlement, special and differential treatment for developing countries, and legal framework. The major difference to overcome had been the longstanding argument about "selectivity"-between those who favoured the idea of taking action against single suppliers (essentially large importing countries that had found export restraints so attractive) and those who sought an agreement on non-discriminatory application of safeguard measures (principally small and developing countries that felt most at risk from such measures). In 1988, the negotiating group received a variety of proposals; some continued to emphasize the importance of non-discrimination with respect to safeguard action taken at the border, some stressed the need to deal specifically with industries in "structural" difficulty, and some envisaged less stringent rules with respect to selectivity. An agreed text eluded Ministers in Montreal.

Subsidies and countervailing measures. Much of the work of the group in 1988 was devoted to developing a common negotiating basis which could help strike a balance between those countries that were mostly concerned with the use of subsidies and those that were concerned with the use of countervailing measures, or the countermeasures Governments were entitled to take against subsidized exports.

Trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights. The group continued to express different views on the extent to which new rules, within GATT, covering intellectual property protection should be negotiated. It considered the extent to which new rules could promote the protection of intellectual property and the relationship between its negotiations and activities in other organizations, such as the World Intellectual Property Organization. Specific proposals were tabled in the group. In Montreal, participants encountered serious difficulties in bridging their differences.

Trade-related investment measures. Discussions in the negotiating group focused on the contention made by several industrialized countries that the trade effects of many investment measures conflicted in some way with GATT articles. They envisaged confirming the applicability of certain articles and establishing GATT rules that could more clearly and effectively deal with the adverse trade effects of government investment requirements, such as local content, export performance, trade balancing, product mandating and domestic sales. In some countries those measures were not designed to distort trade, but were aimed at legitimate objectives including industrialization and development. They considered the adverse trade effects minimal, and suggested that the group examine problems on a case-by-case basis. The group examined submissions by some participants which sought to facilitate the examination of the effects of trade-related investment measures by classifying them into those which were clearly inconsistent with GATT and those which were not but which were relevant to its provisions. In Montreal, the Ministers asked that the group continue identifying trade-restrictive and distorting effects.

Dispute settlement. The dispute settlement system of GATT serves to resolve disputes once they occur and as a pressure on Governments to live up to their obligations as GATT members. Twenty-five formal proposals on behalf of 38 participants were approved by the Ministers in Montreal. Among the main features of the proposals were: specific time-limits on procedures for consultations; arbitration as an alternative to panel proceedings; dispute panels to be established at the first GATT Council meeting following the one at which the initial request for a panel was made; strict time-limits for determining terms of reference and composition of panels and a time-schedule for their work; avoidance of delays to the adoption of panel reports by the Council; and legal advice for developing contracting parties involved in a dispute.

Functioning of the GATT system. As called for in its negotiating plan, the group in 1988 established common working texts which became the basis of subsequent negotiations. In Montreal, the Ministers approved a new system of national trade policy surveillance in GATT. Under the new system, the GATT Council would conduct regular reviews of the totality of such policies for each GATT member, permitting a collective evaluation of their effects and impact on the multilateral trade system. The Ministers also agreed to be more active in the activities of the institution by holding meetings of the Contracting Parties at ministerial level once every two years.

Group of Negotiations on Services

During 1988, the Group of Negotiations on Services continued to discuss fundamental concepts which might underpin an agreement on services. It examined questions such as whether an agreement should be restricted to cross-border trade where the services crossed the border (for example, telephone services), or whether services provided through a physical commercial presence in a second country (for example, branch banking) should be covered. The promotion of development was central to the discussion. The Group discussed the principles which might form the basis of an agreement. In particular, it considered non-discrimination in the treatment of foreign services providers, national treatment under which foreign-owned services suppliers should be treated on the same basis as domestic suppliers and the concept of transparency, which opened up for public scrutiny the nature of regulations and laws affecting the services sector. At the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round, the Ministers established guidelines for the Group's future work.

Implementation of the Tokyo Round agreements

The agreements of the Tokyo Round provided an improved framework for the conduct of world trade and were adopted as an integral part of GATT. The Tokyo Round established a number of agreements or codes covering non-tariff measures and certain sectoral matters as well as securing major tariff cuts. Each of the agreements had an overseeing committee or council. Those bodies dealt with tariffs, anti-dumping practices, subsidies and countervailing measures, government procurement, technical barriers to trade, customs valuation, import licensing, bovine meat, dairy products and civil aircraft.

Other GATT activities

Contracting Parties regular session

The Contracting Parties held their forty-fourth regular session on 7 and 8 November 1988, focusing on the Uruguay Round and the importance of its success.

Council of Representatives

The Council of Representatives, GATT's highest body between sessions of the Contracting Parties, held two special meetings in 1988 to review developments in the trading system, as described in two reports, which gave an extensive compilation and analysis of measures taken by Governments. In June, the Council considered the first report, covering developments between October 1987 and March 1988, which noted that trade policy formulation had continued to be dominated by concerns over trade imbalances, exchange rate uncertainties, unemployment problems and slow growth in many industrialized countries, resistance to adjustment and the continuing debt-servicing difficulties of many developing countries. The Council also discussed measures, both liberalizing and restrictive, taken by GATT members, including trade-liberalization programmes of developing countries and their efforts towards structural adjustment.

For the Council's second special meeting, the report on developments between April and August 1988 noted that attention in the trade policy field focused on the passage of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act in the United States, which had aroused concern in many countries, and the veto by the President of the United States of the Textile and Apparel Act; the move towards the unification of the European market; and the progress of the Uruguay Round negotiations. Other developments included the application by the United States of measures aimed at strengthening protection of intellectual property rights and new European Community (EC) anti-dumping measures.

At the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round, tentative agreement was reached on a new comprehensive review mechanism which would replace the Council's reviews.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development continued to review, discuss and negotiate trade issues of interest to developing countries. It reviewed implementation of part IV of the General Agreement, dealing with special treatment for developing countries, and of the "enabling clause", an agreement resulting from the Tokyo Round providing for differential and more favourable treatment of developing countries in various areas of trade policy. The Committee kept track of GATT technical co-operation activities with developing countries, particularly in the context of the multilateral negotiations. It invited Governments and international organizations providing similar forms of assistance to report on their activities as well as on facilities that might be available.

The Sub-Committee on Trade of Least-Developed Countries, reactivated by the Committee in 1987, met in February and October 1988 to review developments in the Uruguay Round. At the October meeting, a number of issues were raised in connection with the mid-term review, including the need for predictability in the concession to be offered to the least developed countries as well as a guarantee of their long-term maintenance; to remedy any possible loss of preferential margins given to least developed countries; and a time-bound action in the implementation of measures.

Conciliation and settlement of disputes

The Ministers at the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round reached provisional agreement on a detailed plan to streamline the process of conciliation and settlement of disputes and the Council established 13 dispute-settlement panels, almost double the 1987 total-itself a record. All but one related to agricultural products. Three major disputes were settled through the adoption of panel reports: an EC complaint on the treatment of imported alcoholic drinks by Canadian provincial boards; a United States complaint on Canadian restrictions on exports of fresh salmon and herring; and an EC panel case against the Japan-United States semi-conductor agreement. Activation of the procedures in the Council helped bring about the resolution of four other disputes through amicable bilateral agreements. In May the Council agreed that, unless a party to a dispute opposed it, panel reports would be derestricted when adopted.

In November, the Contracting Parties extended by another year the permanent roster of non-governmental panelists established by them in 1984. The roster, composed of 35 prospective panelists agreed by the Council in 1985, and extended in 1986 and 1987, could be drawn upon by the Director-General should the disputing parties fail to agree to a panel's membership through the traditional consultative procedure.

Technical assistance

In 1988, the GATT secretariat's Technical Cooperation Division organized or participated in regional or subregional trade policy seminars held in Côte d'Ivoire, Indonesia, Kenya, Thailand and Zambia.

Training programme

From 1955 to the end of 1988, a total of 1,098 officials from 114 countries and 10 regional organizations had attended GATT trade policy courses. Twenty-four fellowships are granted for each course, following a decision by the 1982 ministerial meeting. Two such courses, one conducted in English and the other in Spanish were given in 1988.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre, established by GATT in 1964 and jointly operated with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development since 1968, continued providing trade information and trade promotion advisory services to developing countries. The Centre's technical co-operation activities amounted to $26.3 million in 1988. Some 127 national, 44 regional and 96 interregional projects were under implementation throughout the year, covering one or more of the Centre's eight programme areas: institutional infrastructure for national trade promotion, specialized national trade promotion services, export market development, commodity promotion, training, import operations and techniques, trade promotion for least developed countries and activities with national chambers of commerce.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1988, the GATT secretariat employed 402 staff members-175 in the Professional and higher categories and 227 in the General Service category. (For senior officers of the secretariat, see Annex II.)

Financial arrangements

Member countries of GATT contribute to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of the contracting parties and associated Governments. The budget for 1988 was 61,439,000 Swiss francs.

(1) Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together—following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

(2) On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

(3) On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

(4) Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

Appendix II

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

Appendix IV

Agenda of United Nations principal organs in 1988

This appendix lists the items on the agenda of the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council during 1988. For the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, the column headed "Allocation" indicates the assignment of each item to plenary meetings or committees.

Agenda item titles have been shortened by omitting mention of reports following the subject of the item. Thus, "Question of Cyprus: report of the Secretary-General" has been shortened to "Question of Cyprus". Where the subject-matter of the item is not apparent from its title, the subject is identified in square brackets; this is not part of the title.
